(omitting certain items or details in modifications of model yāgas; (11) tantra (one item being useful and enough for several acts or persons); (12) prasaṅga (extension of application). In the four pādas of the first adhyāya four matters are respectively dealt with viz. vidhi (hortatory texts), arthavāda (laudatory or explanatory passages including mantras), smṛtis (including customs and usages) and names (of rites, such as udbhid, citrā). Śabara himself gives a summary [1934] of the first chapter of PMS as follows; viz. the pramāṇas; principles of the conclusions about vidhi, arthavāda, mantra and smrtis, examination of guṇavidhi (texts laying down some subsidiary or accessory matter as in 'dadhnā juhoti', where curds are prescribed as offering) and nāmadheya; the determination of doubtful matters by the help of the remainder of a passage or by the sāmarthya (the suitability of things for the actions prescribed). It is unnecessary for the purpose of this section to furnish here a summary of the contents of the other chapters of the PMS. For a tolerably full summary of the contents of the twelve chapters of the PMS the reader is referred to the author's paper 'a brief sketch of the Pūrvamīmāṁsā system' in ABORI, vol. VI. pp. 6-12. At the beginning of each chapter Śabara summarizes what he dealt with in the preceding chapter and sets out the principal topics of that chapter.

The P. M. S. itself is of enormous extent and it has been overlaid with commentaries and with numerous commentaries on commentaries. Even before Śabara there was a commentator described as Vṛttikāra, [1935] who is mentioned in several places 1934. प्रथमेऽध्याये प्रमाणलक्षणं वृत्तम्। तत्र विध्यर्थवादमन्त्रस्मृतयस्तत्त्वतो निर्णीताः। गुणविधिर्नामधेयं परीक्षितम्। सन्दिग्धानामर्थानां वाक्यशेषादर्थाच्चाध्यवसानमुक्तम्। शबर at the beginning of II. 1. 1. The तन्त्रवार्तिक explains तत्त्वतः in the above as follows 'विध्यादितत्त्वनिर्णीतिः प्रमाणेनैव स्थिता। समस्तो हि प्रथमः पादश्चोदनासूत्रपरिकरः। ... श्रुतिमूलत्वं विज्ञानस्य स्मृतिप्रामाण्ये तत्त्वम्। नामधेयस्य चोदनान्तर्गतत्वात्प्रमाणत्वम्। सन्दिग्धनिर्णये वाक्यशेषसामर्थ्ययोः प्रामाण्यमित्येवं समस्तमध्यायं प्रमाणलक्षणमाचक्षते।'. As the P. M. S. is divided into twelve chapters it is called द्वादशलक्षणी.

---

1935. Śabara expressly mentions (Bhagavān) Upavarṣa (on I. 1. 5) as to what is 'śabda', while Rāmānuja says (note 1886 above) that Bodhāyana composed a bhāṣya on both P. M. S and V. S. There are controversies about Vṛttikāra, Upavarṣa and Bodhāyana. Vide M. M. Prof. Kuppuswami in Pro. of 3rd All India O. Con. pp. 465-468 and Pandit V. A. Ramaswami in I. H. Q, vol. X. pp. 431-433 for identity of Vṛttikāra and Upavarṣa, while Dr. S. K. Iyengar in 'Maṇimekalai in its historic setting' p. 189 and by Śabara (sometimes with great respect) viz. on II. 1. 32 and 33, II. 2. 26, II. 3. 16, III. 1. 6 ('atra bhagavān Vṛttikāraḥ'), VIII. 1. 1. ('vṛttikāraiḥ' in the plural), X. 4. 23. On P. M. S. I. 1. 3–5, II. 1, 33, VII. 2. 6 Śabara differs from Vṛttikāra. The earliest extant commentary on the P. M. S. is the bhāṣya of Śabara. Śabara quotes many verses concerning PMS matters and a few also on other topics. Verses quoted on PMS matters are found on II. 1. 32 (one on p. 434 and another on p. 435), II. 1. 33 (p. 436, two verses),[1936] II. 2 1 (p. 462, two verses on adṛṣṭārtha), on IV. 3. 3 (one verse on p. 1247), IV. 4. 21 (p. 1279 a verse on piṇḍapitṛyajña), IV. 4. 24 (p. 1280 an Āryā verse on the girdle of sacrificial post), IV. 4. 28 (p. 1281 about 'svaru'), V. 2. 23 (p. 1319, same verse on XII. 2. 30 p. 2251), VII. 1. 12 (p. 1534 definition of atideśa), X. 4. 20 (p. 1924 one verse), XI. 1. 1 (p. 2096 on tantra and prasaṅga), XII. 3. 20 (p. 2262 on bhāsika-svara). All these verses are apparently quoted by Śabara from some work or commentary on the PMS or on Pūrvamīmāṁsā, one or two probably from some Śrautasūtra and one or two may be his own composition.

(Continued on next page)

Many glosses on PMS composed by writers of the 10th and following centuries are extant, of which 22 are referred to on p. 166 of vol. VI. of the Sarasvatībhavana Studies (Benares) by M. M. Gopinath Kaviraja in his paper on the 'Mīmāṁsā Mss. in the Government Sanskrit Library at Benares' (pp. 165–196). On Śabara's bhāṣya there were numerous commentaries as is the present author in JBBRAS for 1921 pp. 83–98 at p. 84, hold that Vṛttikāra and Upavarṣa are different. M. M. Kuppuswami Sastry (in Pro. of 3rd O. Conference pp. 465–468) holds Bodhāyana and Upavarṣa identical. Śaṅkarācārya twice names Upavarṣa with great respect (as bhagavān) on VS I. 3. 28 and III. 3. 53, but he nowhere mentions Bodhāyana to whose extensive commentary Rāmānuja refers at the beginning of his bhāṣya on VS. Vide J. I. H. Madras, vol. VII. pp. 107–115 on Bodhāyana and Upavarṣa and V. A. Ramaswami Sastry's Intro. to the Tattvabindu pp. 14–18 (1936). Vide I. H. Q. vol. X. pp. 431–452 on 'Vṛttikāras of Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtra.'

---

(Continued on next page)

1936. It is remarkable that the two verses about the ten topics dealt with by Brāhmaṇas (on P. M. S. II. 1. 33) occur also in the Brahmāṇḍa purāṇa II. 33. 47–48. In शबर they are: हेतुर्निर्वचनं निन्दा प्रशंसा संशयो विधिः। परक्रिया पुराकल्पो व्यवधारणकल्पना॥ उपमानं दर्शनं तु विधयो ब्राह्मणस्य तु॥ एतत्स्यात् सर्ववेदेषु नियतं विधिलक्षणम्॥. There are a few variants in the ब्रह्माण्ड. The verse about विधिलक्षण on IV. 3. 3 is introduced with the words एवं हि पदवाक्यार्थन्यायविदः श्लोकमामनन्ति-कुर्यात्क्रियेत॰.

clearly indicated by the Ślokavārtika that says that the very first sentence[1937] of Śabara's bhāsya was interpreted in six different ways before it by commentators and by the Tantravārtika that the bhāsyakāra did not notice six sūtras after the 'nivītādhikaraṇa' (III. 4. 1-9) and that commentators differed in their reasons for the omission, but all commentators other than Śabara did explain those six sūtras.[1938] None of the commentaries composed before Kumārila is now available.

.Kumārila wrote the Ślokavārtika on Śabara's bhāsya on P. M. S. I. 1 (in about 4000 verses) and the voluminous Tantravārtika on I. 2 to the end of chap. III of PMS and the Ṭup-ṭīkā on P. M. S. IV–XII (stray notes, not a regular commentary). Kumārila is credited with having composed two more commentaries, 'Madhyama-ṭīkā' and 'Bṛhat ṭīkā' on P. M S.[1939] The latter has been referred to by the Nyāyaratnākara[1940] and the Nyāyasudhā on Tantravārtika quotes several verses from it (on pp. 201, 329–30, 393) and the Jaiminīya-sūtrārthasangraha of Ṛsiputra Parameśvara quotes Bṛhat-ṭīkā several times. On the Ślokavārtika two commentaries have so far been published viz. the Nyāyaratnākara of Pārthasārathi and the Kāśikā of Sucaritamiśra (in T. S. S.). In the Introduction to his English translation of the Tantravārtika, M. M. Dr. Ganganath Jha notices eight commentaries on the Tantravārtika of which the Nyāyasudhā or Rāṇaka of Someśvara (published in Chowkhamba Series) is a very exhaustive one, the others being in Ms. The 1938. अतः परं यद् सूत्राणि भाष्यकारेण न लिखितानि तत्र व्याख्यातारो विवदन्ते। केचिदाहुर्विस्मृतानि। लिखितो ग्रन्थः प्रलीन इत्यपरे। फलश्रुत्वाद्युपेक्षितानीत्यन्ये। अनार्षेयत्वादित्यपरे। ... वृत्त्यन्तरकारैस्तु सर्वैर्व्याख्यातानि। सन्ति च जैमिनेरयंप्रकाराण्यप्यनल्पानल्पसारभूतानि सूत्राणि। तन्त्रवा. after III. 4. 9 p. 895.

---

1937. लोक इत्यादि भाष्यस्य षडर्थान्संप्रचक्षते। भाष्यकारानुसारेण प्रयुक्तस्यादितः पृथक्॥ श्लोकवा. (प्रतिज्ञासूत्र, verse 26)

1939. Vide 'Kumārila and the Bṛhaṭ-ṭīkā' by K. S. Ramasvami Sastri and A. Sankaran in Pro. of 3rd All India O. Conf. pp. 523–529 where on p. 526 the Sarvadarśanakaumudī of Mādhava-bhāratī is quoted as cataloguing all the five works of Kumārila and ibid. p. 475 where Prof. Kuppuswami cites the same Sarvadarśanakaumudī.

1940. तामभावोत्थितामन्यामर्थापत्तिमुदाहरेत्। पक्षदोषेषु चान्यासासुदाहरणविस्तरः॥ श्लोकवा. (अर्थापत्तिपरिच्छेद v. 9), on which न्यायर. remarks "अर्थापत्यन्तराणामप्युदाहरणप्रपञ्चः पक्षदोषावसरे 'श्रोत्रादिनास्तितायामित्यादिना बृहट्टीकायां दर्शित इत्याह पक्षदोषेष्विति".

Ṭuptīkā [1941] has some regular commentaries but none is published. The Tantraratna of Pārthasārathimiśra deals at some length with the same chapters of P. M. S. (published partly in Prince of Wales, Sarasvatibhavana S.). On Śabara's bhāṣya Prabhākara wrote a commentary called Bṛhatī, a portion of which on the Tarkapāda (PMS I. 1) with the commentary Ṛjuvimalāpañcikā of Śālikanāthamiśra has been edited by Pandit S. K. Ramanatha Sastri and published by the Madras University (1934). The Śāstra-dīpikā of Pārthasārathi is not a regular commentary on the P. M. S. but it is a classic work on the P. M. S. and follows the views of Kumārila. Another very useful work is the Jaiminīya-nyāya-mālā-vistāra [1942] of Mādhavācārya (published by Anan. Press, Poona) that gives summaries in verse of the adhikaraṇas of the PMS with brief prose comments and also points out some of the differences of Prabhākara (called 'guru' by Śālikanātha and others) from Kumārila (in all about 15 points of difference being noted between the two as regards the first chapter of the PMS and three in the 2nd chapter). Śālikanātha wrote an independent work called Prakaraṇapañcikā (published in the Chowkhamba S. S.). There is another work of Prabhākara's school called Nayaviveka of Bhavanātha or Bhavadeva (ed. by Pandit S. K. Ramanath Sastri and published by the Madras University in 1937). This Bhavanātha is eulogised in the Madanaratnapradīpa on Vyavahāra (pp. 324–325, published by the Anup S. Library, Bikaner, 1948) as the sun to the lotus of Prabhākara's doctrine. The Tantrarahasya of Rāmānujācārya (2nd ed. published in G. O. S, 1956) composed about 1750 A. D. is the last noted work of the Prābhākara School and this work furnishes some useful information about the works of Prabhākara and the commentaries thereon by Śālikanātha. A verse in the Prabodhacandrodaya (Act II) after referring to Guru, Kumārila

---

1941. It is difficult to explain the name टुप्टीका. It is explained as an abridged form of अनुष्टुप्टीका or टुप् is an indeclinable in the sense of 'small' 'टुप् इत्यल्पार्थेऽव्ययम्.'

1942. The जै. न्या. मा. वि. verse 9 says: सर्वथापि सहस्रे द्वे नातिक्रामति संग्रहः, and it is remarked सर्वथापि सहस्रन्यायसंग्रहरूपो ग्रन्थः श्लोकसहस्रद्वयपूर्तेरवगिव समाप्यते न तु सहस्रद्वयमतिक्रामति'. This works puts down the number of अधिकरणs in पू. मी. सू. at 1000, while some other works say there are only 915 adhikaraṇas. The मीमांसासारसंग्रह of शङ्करभट्ट (pub. by Haridas Gupta at Benares in 1904) gives the summary of 1000 adhikaraṇas in 250 verses, the concluding verse being आचार्यैरधिकरणान्युक्तानि सहस्रसंख्यानि। तस्सिद्धान्तान्यादै-स्तत्संख्यैर्भट्टशङ्करोऽवच्मात्॥'.

(or Tautātita), Śālikanātha and Vācaspati refers to Mahodadhi and Māhāvratī (work of Mahāvrata), the last two being mentioned in the Nayaviveka (pp 271, 273 respectively).

Prabhākara differed from Kumārila on numerous points.[1943] The divergence starts from the very first sūtra of the P. M. S. (as the note below will show[1944]). Prabhākara is called guru' by Śālikanātha in many places in the Prakaraṇapañcikā (vide first Intro. verse and pp. 17, 32 &c.). There is a very great divergence of views about the relative chronological position of Kumārila and Prabhākara. Vide 'the Prābhākara School' (1911) by M. M. Ganganath Jha, A. B. Keith's 'Karmamīmāṁsā' (1921) pp 9–11, Pro. of 2nd All India O. Conf. pp. 408–412 and Pro. of 3rd All I. O. Conference pp. 474–481 (both by Prof. Kuppuswami Sastri), J. O. R. Madras, vol. I pp. 131–144 and 203–210. The fundamental question is whether Śālikanātha was a direct pupil of Prabhākara or only a later follower. From several considerations the present writer holds that Śālikanātha was a direct pupil of Prabhākara. Śālikanātha not only speaks of Prabhākaraguru, 1943. Vide Journal of the Benares Hindu University, vol. II. pp. 309–335 for collection in Sanskrit of the points of difference between Prabhākara and Kumārila (called Bhaṭṭa), particularly pp. 331–335 for a table of the points of difference. Vide also Intro. to Tattvabindu by Pandit V. A. Ramaswami Sastri, 1936, pp. 37–40 for a few important points on which the two differ.

---

1944. According to the Bhāṭṭa school, the 'viṣayavākya' of PMS I. 1. 1 is स्वाध्यायोऽध्येतव्यः in शतपथ XI. 5. 6 3 and तै. आ. II. 15. 1 (एतस्मात्स्वाध्यायोऽध्येतव्यो यं यं क्रतुमधीते तेन तेनास्येष्टं भवतीति). According to the प्राभाकर school the viṣayavākya is अष्टवर्षं ब्राह्मणमुपनयीत तमध्यापयीत, the idea in this latter case being that study of Veda (Vedādhyayana) is only an aṅga (a subsidiary matter) of the vidhi to teach a student the Veda after his upanayana. The objections of the Prābhākara school against the viṣayavākya 'svādhyāyoऽdhyetavyaḥ' are that it has a seen fruit or reward and that when a seen fruit can be found it is improper to suppose that there is an unseen reward. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p, 837 n. 1628 where several passages from Śabara and others are cited about this maxim. The एकादशीतत्त्व (pp. 88-89 on मन्त्र) after quoting P. M. S. III. 2. 1 winds up 'इति दृष्टार्थसम्पत्तौ नादृष्टमिह कल्प्यते इति'. I have not been able to find from what Vedic work the sentence 'अष्टवर्षं...पयीत' is taken. It seems that the view that this passage contains a vidhi about teaching the Veda is only an inference from passages like Manu II. 140, III. 2, and Gautama I. 10–11. The प्रकरणपञ्चिका (on p. 6) admits this: कः पुनराचार्यकरणविधिः, 'उपनीय ... प्रचक्षते' (मनु 2. 140) इति स्मरणानुमितः. According to this उपनयन is only an aṅga of the अध्यापनविधि. On p. 225 of the पञ्चपादिका of पद्मपाद (published with two commentaries in the Govt. Oriental Series, Madras, 1958) there is a scathing criticism of this विधिवाक्य (अष्टवर्षं ... पयीत).

but in one place states 'our teacher does not tolerate this'.[1945] Śālikanātha in his Prakaraṇapañcikā quotes several verses of the Ślokavārtika (e. g. on p. 5 he quotes and criticizes verse 11 of Ślokavārtika quoted in n. 1916 above, on p. 122 quotes Ślokavārtika v. 28 of abhāva-pariccheda and on p. 114 verse 21 of arthāpatti-pariccheda). Maṇḍanamiśra wrote several works on PM viz. Vidhi-viveka (published at Benares with Nyāyakaṇikā of Vācaspati), Bhāvanāviveka (with com. of Umbeka, edited in S. B. series), Vibhramaviveka and Mīmāṁsānukramaṇī (Chow. S. S.). The Śāstradīpikā (on PMS II. 1. 1) cites Maṇḍana's explanation of Kumārila's verse [1916]. Therefore, Maṇḍana is later than Kumārila or was a younger contemporary of Kumārila and flourished about 690 to 710 A. D. Śālikanātha quotes Vidhiviveka of Maṇḍana (pp. 243, 302) in Prakaraṇapañcikā p. 178 and Brahmasiddhi in Ṛjuvimalā (p. 20). Moreover, Śāntarakṣita in his Tattvasaṅgraha (GOS) frequently criticizes the kārikās of Kumārila (without naming him) and his pupil Kamalaśīla names Kumārila many times. Śāntarakṣita does not name or quote Prabhākara. He flourished between 705–762 A. D. (vide Foreword to Tattvasaṅgraha p XVI, GOS). Therefore, Kumārila must be placed about 650–700 A. D. As Śālikanātha quotes the Ślokavārtika and Maṇḍana's works he would have to be placed between 750–800 A. D. If Śālikanātha was a direct pupil of Prabhākara it follows that the latter (who appears to be unknown to Śāntarakṣita, should have been a contemporary (i. e. should be held to have flourished nearly between 700–760 A. D. or a little later) and was later than Kumārila. There is a tradition that Prabhākara was a pupil of Kumārila. Traditions (such as of the nine gems at the court of Vikramāditya) often arise without much evidence to support them; they should not, however, be summarily rejected but should be tested by other available evidence.

---

1945. यच्च बह्वीषु ज्वालास्वेकवर्तिवर्तिनीषु ज्वालात्वं सामान्यं प्रत्यभिज्ञागोचरः कैश्चिदिष्यते तदपि गुरुरस्माकं न सृष्यति। प्रकरण॰ p. 31. He would have said simply 'गुरुर्न सृष्यति' if he were a later follower and not a pupil.

1946. शास्त्रदीपिका on पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 2 (p. 101) says: उक्तं ह्येतदाचार्यैः। धात्वर्थव्यतिरेकेण ... गम्यते॥'. This is तन्त्रवार्तिक p. 382; then शास्त्रदीपिका proceeds: विचुतं चैतन्मण्डनेन 'कथ्यमानाद्रूप ... भावना किं प्रदुष्यति॥'. This is भावनाविवेक p. 80 (with slight variations). The भावनाविवेक on p. 61 quotes तथा क्रमव्रतोर्नित्यं ...प्रतीयते'. This occurs in तन्त्रवा. p. 381. The author regrets that M. M. Dr. Jha (in Intro. to 'Pūrvamīmāṁsā in its sources' p. 21) asserts, on the very slender basis of the above quoted words of the Śāstradīpikā, that Maṇḍana wrote a commentary on the Tantravārtika. M. M. Jha himself felt uneasy about his own sweeping assertion (p. 22 bottom), but he was not able to discover the verse of the Bhāvanāviveka referred to above.

At one time Prabhākara appears to have occupied a very prominent position. The Gadag inscription of Vikramāditya VI (in 1098 A. D.) refers to the founding of a school for teaching Prabhākaras' system at Lakkigundi (vide E. I. vol. XV p. 348). This and the reference in the Mitākṣarā (on Yāj. II. 114) to the views of Guru on[1947] the Lipsāsūtra (PMS. IV. 1. 2.) in the third alternative interpretation put on that sūtra, holding that the rules about the acquisition of wealth (in Gautama and other smṛtis) are puruṣārtha (addressed to the conscience of the performer of sacrifices) and not kratvartha, show the outstanding position that the Prābhākara school occupied in the 11th century A. D. in the Carnatic and Maratha countries. The Madanapārijāta, a north Indian work (1360–1390 A. D.), quotes a half verse of Guru[1948] (on p. 89). The Smṛticandrikā (on Vyavahāra p. 257), the Vīramitrodaya (on vyavahāra p. 523) and the V. M. (p. 89) refer to the Nayaviveka of Bhavanātha, almost the last outstanding work of the Prābhākara school. Gradually, the Prābhākara School lost ground and the Bhāṭṭa school of Kumārila has been most predominant for several centuries. The present writer holds that Prabhākara is later then Kumārila but he is not in a position to say from whom he borrowed his peculiar views or whether they were started by him for the first time (though this appears more plausible). Pandit K. S. Ramaswami Sastri (in Intro. to Tantrarahasya, G. O. S., 2nd edition of 1956) holds that Prabhākara took his views from Bādari (p. XXV). The learned Pandit offers hardly any tangible evidence for his remark (on p. XIX of the Intro.) that Bīdari held views similar to those of Bhartṛmitra who so interpreted the PMS as to make it atheistic. Bādari's views on Mīmāṁsā matters are quoted only four times in PMS viz. in III. 1. 3 (on what matters are śeṣa), VI. 1. 27 (that vedic sacrifices can be performed even by śūdras), VIII. 3. 6. (purely sacrificial matter about application of Ṣaḍaha procedure), IX. 3. 33. (about method of singing sāman, Bādari's view being accepted by Jaimini). In none of these does one find the slightest touch of Bhartṛmitra's atheistic tendencies or of Prabhākara's special propositions.

---

1947. नियतोपायकं स्वत्वं लोकसिद्धमेवेति न्यायविदो मन्यन्ते। तथा हि लिप्सासूत्रे तृतीये वर्णके द्रव्यार्जननियमानां क्रत्वर्थत्वे स्वत्वमेव न स्यात् स्वत्वस्यालौकिकत्वादिति पूर्वपक्षासम्भवमाशङ्क्य द्रव्यार्जनस्य प्रतिग्रहादिना स्वत्वसाधनत्वं लोकसिद्धमिति पूर्वपक्षः समर्थितो गुरुणा। ननु च द्रव्यार्जनस्य क्रत्वर्थत्वे स्वत्वमेव न भवतीति याग एव न संवर्तेत। मलपितमिदं केनापि अर्जनं स्वत्वं नापादयतीति विप्रतिषिद्धमिति वदता। तथा सिद्धान्तेपि स्वत्वस्य लौकिकत्वमङ्गीकृत्यैव विचारप्रयोजनमुक्तम् — 'अतो नियमातिक्रमः पुरुषस्य न क्रतोः' इति। मिता. on या. II. 114.

1948. न च निरपेक्षयोर्गुणयोर्मिथः सम्बन्धः। गुणानां च परार्थत्वादसम्बन्धः समत्वात्त्वात् — इति सूत्रकारवचनात्। कर्तुश्च शेषत्वमुपदिष्टं गुरुणा। अधिकारो हि यज्ञेषु कर्तुः शेषस्य चिन्त्यते। इति। मदनपारिजात p. 89. 'गुणानां...स्यात्' is पू. मी. सू. III. 1, 22.

From Kumārila onwards there are numerous commentaries, commentaries on commentaries and manuals on some aspects of mīmāṁsā doctrines or of the contents of the PMS. Several difficult questions of identity and relationship among some of the early writers whose works are wholly or partially extant have also arisen during the last fifty years and many papers have been written. The present writer has read most of them, but if the whole evidence is to be set out and discussed a bulky volume of several hundred pages would have to be written. That cannot be done here. The several questions of identity and relationship are set out below and the present author's replies to all of them will be given with a little discussion on a few out of them:

(1) Whether Prabhākara was a pupil of Kumārila; the reply is that there is no substantial or compelling evidence for this except tradition, but Prabhākara is certainly later than Kumārila;

(2) Whether Śālikanātha is a direct disciple of Prabhākara — yes;

(3) Whether Maṇḍana was a disciple of Kumārila; there is no substantial evidence for an affirmative reply, but Maṇḍana certainly explains in his Bhāvanāviveka a verse of Kumārila and quotes another verse from Tantravārtika. Vide note 1946 above. In the Vidhiviveka also (Benares ed. 1907), which Maṇḍana wrote after Bhāvanāviveka he quotes (on p. 15 'abhidhābhāvanā...liṅādayaḥ) from Tantravārtika (p. 378) and on p. 315 of the Vidhiviveka quotes (yathoktam-śreyaḥsādhanatā... ...pratīyate') from Ślokavārtika (codanāsūtra, verse 14). Maṇḍana also quotes a passage from the Bṛhatī (p. 38) of Prabhākara in Vidhiviveka [1949] (p. 109). So Maṇḍana, if not a disciple, was certainly later than or a younger contemporary of Kumārila.

1949. उक्तं च - कर्तव्यताविधयो नियोगो न नियोगः कर्तव्यतामाह। विधिविवेक p. 109, on which the न्यायकणिका of वाचस्पति remarks 'अत्रैव जरत्प्राभाकरोक्तीतार्थं गुरोर्वचः सङ्गच्छते'. This sentence occurs in बृहती p. 38 (तर्कपाद. pub. by Madras Un., 1934).

(4) Are Maṇḍana and Umbeka identical—no; Umbeka wrote a commentary on the Bhāvanāviveka of Maṇḍana in which on pp. 17 and 76 he discusses various readings in it; it is not possible to hold that a writer would discuss variant readings in his own work (as would follow if the two were identical).

(5) Are Maṇḍana and Viśvarūpa identical—No;

(6) Are Viśvarūpa and Sureśvara identical—yes; the latter name being assumed after Viśvarūpa became a saṃnyāsin.

(7) Is Umbeka identical with Bhavabhūti—the evidence is not enough to give a definite affirmative reply; but it is likely that they may be identical.

(8) Is Umbeka a disciple of Kumārila—yes; as shown in note below.[1950]

1950. That Umbeka was a pupil of Kumārila follows from the following considerations. In his com. on the Bhāvanāviveka (p 43) Umbeka quotes a half verse from Bhaṭṭapāda (यथोक्तं भट्टपादैः। अन्यदेव हि धात्वर्थसामान्यं कृत्यात्मकम्) and on the same page he quotes another half verse 'यथोक्तं गुरुणा-अन्यच्च भावना नाम साध्यत्वेन व्यवस्थितम्'. These two halves make one verse on p. 383 of the Tantravārtika, the latter half of which is again ascribed by Umbeka (on p. 92 of his com. on the same work) to Bhaṭṭapāda. It follows that Bhaṭṭapāda was his guru. Prof. Kunhan Raja tries to wriggle out by advancing the theory (on pp. XXXVII-XXXVIII of his Intro.) that some later scribe inserted the word 'guruṇā' and argues that there is no proof of Bhaṭṭapāda being Umbeka's guru. Unless another reliable ms. of Umbeka's commentary is found which omits the word 'guruṇā' or substitutes in its place some other word it is not open to us to hold that the reading is not trustworthy and then build positive or negative propositions on our own speculations alone. The Uveyaka whose view is quoted by Kamalaśīla in Tattvasaṅgraha (G. O. S p 812 'उवेयकस्त्वाह न बोधात्मकं नाम ज्ञानानां प्रामाण्यं, किं तर्हि, अर्थाविसंवादित्वम्') is probably उम्बेक, whose name is written in several different ways in works and mss. (vide M. M. Jha's Intro. to Bhāvanāviveka p. 2). If this identity is correct उम्बेक must have flourished before 750 A. D and chronology would not be against Umbeka being a pupil of Kumārila. The Yukti-snehaprapūraṇī on Śāstradīpikā quotes Umbekabhaṭṭa in several places. But one long quotation from Umbeka on p. 30 is very striking. In this both Śabara and Vārtikakāra (i e Kumārila) are severely criticized and after quoting the famous verse frequently cited in the Mahābhārata गुरोरप्यवलिप्तस्य ... परित्यागो विधीयते he discards the views of the Vārtikakāra. Śabara is separated from Umbeka by several centuries and was not Umbeka's guru. Therefore, this passage (that occurs on pp. 105–108 of the तात्पर्यटीका of Umbeka on Ślokavārtika, pub. by Madras Un. in 1940) leads to the inference that the Vārtikakāra was

(Continued on next page)

(9) Is Sureśvara, a pupil of Śaṅkarācārya ?—Yes.

The result of the above replies is that the following is the most probable chronological order of Pūrvamīmāṁsā writers mentioned in questions 1 to 9 viz. Kumārila, Prabhākara, Maṇḍana, Umbeka, Śālikanātha. They flourished between 650 A. D. to 750 A. D., Kumārila being the earliest of the five, Prabhākara (who quotes Kirātārjunīya II. 30 twice on pp. 242, 343) and Maṇḍana being contemporaries or Maṇḍana being younger than Prabhākara.

The opening and ending verses in Sureśvara's Vārtika on the bhāṣya of Śaṅkara on the Bṛ. Up. and the Tai. Up. leave no room for doubt that he was a disciple of Śaṅkara.

From the present author's paper in JBBRAS for 1928, pp. 289–293 and Prof. Kuppuswami's paper on 'Maṇḍana, Sureśvara equation in the History of Vedānta' in ABORI vol. 18 pp. 121–157 it follows that Maṇḍana and Sureśvara are not identical.

Some remarks in the learned Introduction of Prof. Kunhan Raja to the edition of Umbeka's Com. on the Ślokavārtika invite criticism. Prof. Raja (on p. XLIX) states that his attempt has been only to raise doubts and to attempt at weighing the evidence for and against various theories. The present writer has no serious objection to this. But he thinks that Prof. Raja has gone wrong in his interpretation of words like 'anupāsitaguravaś-codayanti' (p. 33) and 'anupāsitaguruprajñā-vilasitam-iti'[1951] grantha-jñāna-mānino manyante' (p. 30). He starts (XLII) by saying "whether it meant (i. e. 'anupāsitaguru' meant) one by Umbeka's guru. The युक्तिस्नेहप्रपूरणी writes 'अत्रोम्बेकभट्टैरिदं तु वार्तिककारीयं दूषणं समर्थनं सर्वमेवालूनविशीर्णमित्यादिना श्येनादौ न कस्यचिदनर्थत्वम्... तस्यानर्थमतिपादनपरं श्येनो वऋ इत्यादि भाष्यमुपेक्षणीयम्। गुरोरप्य ... विधीयते इत्यनेन ग्रन्थेन वार्तिकं भाष्यं च दूषितम्। It is quite clear that at least the युक्तिस्नेहप्रपूरणी holds that the वार्तिक view is discarded by उम्बेक. The words इदं वार्तिककारीयं दूषणं... विशीर्णम् occur on p. 105 (at end) of the तात्पर्यटीका; the words श्येनो वऋ इत्यु॰ occur in Śābarabhāṣya on p. 18 (Ānan. ed.). The verse गुरोरप्यवलिप्तस्य occurs on p. 108 of तात्पर्यटीका.

---

(Continued from last page)

1951. The words are to be dissolved as अनुपासितः गुरुः येन (or यैः if अनुपासितगुरवः occurs) तस्य (or तेषां) प्रज्ञा तस्याः विकसितम्, उपासितः गुरुर्येन (कुमारिलेन) तस्य भावः उपा...गुरुता (in the Introductory remarks in Tātparyaṭīkā to Ślokavārtika verse 2). In this last the word 'guru' is meant for Kumārila's guru (or gurus) to whom he makes obeisance in the 2nd verse, while with regard to the objector, who is ridiculed, guru is meant to refer to Kumārila.

whom the teacher was not respected or a teacher who was not respected (by his disciples)' and then proceeds 'but the expression 'upāsitagurutām' (appearing in the commentary on the 2nd verse of the Ślokavārtika) settles the point. It must mean 'one by whom the teacher was not respected'. 'Upāsita-guru' literally means 'one who waited on the guru i. e. listened to the explanations of his teacher and made them his own'. 'Honoured' is at most a secondary meaning of 'upāsita'. Upa-ās literally means 'sit near, wait upon'. I fail to see how it settles the point. The word 'upāsita-gurutām' (when introducing the 2nd intro. verse of the Ślokavārtika) is applied by Umbeka to Kumārila himself in relation to the Ślokavārtika verse 'abhivandya gurūnādau'. It means 'the characteristic or quality of one who has served his teacher i. e. who has carefully listened to what the guru expounded and understood it.' The expression 'anupāsitaguru' (which, according to Prof. Raja, always refers to Prabhākara) frequently (vide also pp. 14, 52, 75, 291, 441) used by Umbeka means 'he or those who have not waited upon the guru and listened to his words carefully and therefore have failed to grasp the correct meaning of the passages'. The inference suggested by these words of derision is that the objector (either Prabhākara or some one else) has not understood the doctrine taught by Kumārila to him and the present author is disposed to hold that the frequent emphasis on the word 'guru' in 'anupāsitaguru' is a veiled reference to Prabhākara-guru (as Śālikanātha puts his name in his Prakaraṇa-pañcikā 'Prabhākara-guror-dṛṣṭyā), who was Kumārila's pupil but deviated from his guru's doctrines and wrote against them and Umbeka attacks and derides him for this. Supposing that Prabhākara had once been a pupil of Kumārila and later on propounded views that very much diverged from Kumārila's, it is natural if Umbeka took up the cudgels on behalf of Kumārila and attacked Prabhākara as one who had forsaken his Guru's views, had not digested them properly and had written a work (not now available but well-known to Umbeka) severely attacking Kumārila. Prof. Raja (Intro. pp. XLIII and XLIV) throws out the suggestion that on p. 14 and p. 291 Umbeka possibly suggests that Prabhākara preceded Kumārila. There is nothing of the kind. Umbeka holds that Prabhākara had not grasped his master's doctrines and tries to show what the real doctrine misunderstood by Prabhākara was.

It appears desirable to set out a tentative chronological table of the outstanding works and writers of the Pūrvamīmāṁsā, with a few remarks here and there. Most of the dates are approximate and tentative.

Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtra of Jaimini—400 B. C. to 200 B. C.

Vṛttikāra—There is great conflict of views about the person who the Vṛttikāra quoted several times by Śabara was. Pārthasārathi in Śāstradīpikā p. 48 (first line) holds that he is Upavarṣa. Vṛttikāra is cited with great respect by Śabara, but he also differs from him frequently. The Prapañcahṛdaya (p. 39) attributes to Bodhāyana an extensive commentary called Kṛtakoṭī on both mīmāṁsās. It is remarkable that Bodhāyana is not mentioned by name by any early work on P. M. S. nor does Śaṅkara mention him though he twice mentions Upavarṣa. Rāmānujācārya in the opening words of his bhāṣya on Brahmasūtra refers to the extensive commentary of Bodhāyana on the Brahmasūtra. But he does not say that Bodhāyana commented on P. M. S. The present author is not even now prepared to hold that Vṛttikāra mentioned by Śabara so often is identical with Upavarṣa. Śabara cites at some length the different interpretation of PMS I. 1. 3–5 by Vṛttikāra and in the midst of it mentions (on p. 45) by name the view of Upavarṣa on 'what is śabda'. He appears to regard the two as different. The fact that the Tantravārtika (pp. 602–3 on II. 3. 16) appears to identify Upavarṣa with Vṛttikāra is not conclusive. From Kumārila himself we know that several Vṛttis were written on PMS before as well as after Śabara. So even Upavarṣa may have been deemed to be Vṛttikāra by Kumārila (on II. 3. 16) and his views quoted, though the Vṛttikāra in other places in Śabara's bhāṣya may be different.

Upavarṣa—between 100 B. C. to 100 A. D.

Bhavadāsa—The Ślokavārtika (Pratijñāsūtra, v. 63) mentions him by name and verse 33 of the same as explained by the Nyāyaratnākara shows that Bhavadāsa was deemed to be earlier than Śabara by the Ślokavārtika; between 100–200 A. D.

Śabara—between 200–400 A. D. (nearer the former date). From the Tantravārtika on II. 3. 23 p. 612, on II. 3. 27 p. 620 and III. 4. 31 p. 967 it appears that there was another person called Bhāṣyakārāntara, who was earlier than Śabara From Tantravārtika on III. 4. 12 (p. 909) and Ṭup-ṭīkā on VI. 5. 10 (p. 1462) it seems that Kumārila sometimes applies the word vṛttikāra to Śabara also.

Bhartṛmitra—On verse 10 of the Ślokavārtika, the N. R says that the former refers to Bhartṛmitra who so interpreted the Mīmāṁsā as to make it atheistic. According to Umbeka (in Tātparyaṭīkā p. 3) his work was called Tattvaśuddhi; between 400–600 A. D.

Kumārilabhaṭṭa—About 650–700 A. D.[1952]

Prabhākara—author of Bṛhatī on Śabara's bhāṣya—between 675–725 A. D.

Maṇḍana—Disciple of Kumārila or a younger contemporary, wrote on both P. M. and Vedānta; in Vidhiviveka p. 109 he quotes the Bṛhatī (vide Pro. of 3rd O. Conf. p 479); his other works are Bhāvanāviveka, Vibhramaviveka and Mīmāṁsānukramaṇikā; between 680–720 A. D. Vide ABORI vol. 18 pp. 121–157 (by Prof. Kuppuswami Sastri), J. I. H. vol. XV pp. 320–329.

Umbeka—pupil of Kumārila and commentator of Ślokavārtika and of Maṇḍana's Bhāvanāviveka; generally identified with dramatist Bhavabhūti between 700–750 A. D.

Śālikanātha—pupil of Prabhākara and author of the commentary Ṛjuvimalā on Prabhākara's Bṛhatī and of an independent work 'Prakaraṇa-pañcikā'. It is noteworthy that in Ṛjuvimalā on Bṛhatī (p. 91) he quotes a verse from Ślokavārtika (Vākyādhikaraṇa verses 43–44) and refers to Kumārila with great respect as 'Yadāhur-Vārtikakāra-miśrāḥ'; 710–770 A. D.

Sureśvara—(called Viśvarūpa before he became a sannyāsin) disciple of Śaṅkarācārya. Between 800–840 A. D.

1952. One circumstance which fixes the earliest limit of Kumārila's time is furnished by the Kāśikā (com. on Aṣṭādhyāyī). In the lengthy pūrvapakṣa against Grammar contained in the Tantravārtika on P. M. S. I. 3. 24 (from p. 254 onwards), on p. 260 an objection is raised that Pāṇini himself violates his own rules laid down in 'tṛjakābhyām kartari' (Pāṇ. II. 2. 15) in the sūtras 'Janikartuḥ prakṛtiḥ' (Pāṇ. I. 4. 30) and 'tatprayojako hetuśca' (Pāṇ. I. 4. 55). The Kāśikā of Jayāditya and Vāmana defends the sūtra 'tatprayojako hetuśca' in the words 'तस्य प्रयोजकः तत्प्रयोजकः, निपातनात्समासः' (p. 91 of Benares ed.). The पूर्वपक्षी in तन्त्रवार्तिक on p. 260 does not accept this explanation of the Kāśikā in the words: न चैषां निपातनैः साधुत्वसिद्धिः। कुतः। येषामनुगमो नास्ति ते सिध्येयुर्निपातनैः। अन्यथानुगतानां तु प्रयोगं बाधते स्मृतिः। स्मृत्याचारविरोधे हि स्मृतिरेव बलीयसी। प्रत्यक्षप्रतिषेधाच्च जनिकर्माद्यसाधुता।'. From I-tsing's remarks it appears that Jayāditya died in or about 661 A. D. Therefore the Tantravārtika in which fault is found with Kāśikā's explanation must be later than about 650 A. D.

Vācaspati-miśra — wrote famous works on all śāstras; author of Nyāyakaṇikā on Maṇḍana's Vidhiviveka and Bhāmatī on Śaṅkarabhāṣya; between 820–900 A. D.

Pārthasārathimiśra — author of Śāstradīpikā (pub. by Nirn. Press 1915), Nyāyaratnākara (com. on Ślokavārtika), Tantraratna (com. on Ṭupṭikā) and Nyāyaratnamālā (pub. in G. O. S. with com. Nāyakaratna of Rāmānujācārya); between 900–1100 A. D.

Authors later than Pārthasārathi are placed below in one paragraph.

Sucaritamiśra — author of com. called Kāśikā on the Ślokavārtika (a part published in the T. S. S.); Bhavanātha (or Bhavadeva), author of the Nayaviveka, pub. in Madras Uni. Sanskrit series, with the com. Vivekatattva of Ravideva (on Tarkapāda, 1937), between 1050–1150 A. D; Someśvara — son of Mādhava, author of the Nyāyasudhā or Rāṇaka (a voluminous commentary on the Tantravārtika), pub. in Chowkhamba S. S. at Benares, 1909, about 1200 A. D; Murārimiśra — who is supposed to have founded a third school of Mīmāṁsā (Murāreस्तṛtīyaḥ panthāḥ), author of Tripādīnītinayana (part pub. in J. O. R. Madras, vol. II pp. 270–273 and vol. V. pp. 1–5) and Aṅgatvanirukti, Ānan. ed. pp. 1141–1190), between 1150–1220 (acc. to Intro. to Tattavabindu); Mādhavācārya, author of Jaiminīya-nyāyamālāvistāra (pub. by Ānan. Press); vide H. of Dh. Vol. I. pp. 374–381), between 1297–1386; Appayya-dīkṣita, author of Vidhirasāyana (pub. at Benares), is deemed to have written 100 or 108 works on different śāstras, said to have flourished between 1520–1593 A.D., another view being that he flourished between 1554–1626 A. D.; Laugākṣibhāskara, author of Arthasaṅgraha (text with translation, pub. by Dr. Thibaut in 1882 and by several others); Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa, author of Mīmāṁsā-bālaprakāśa (Benares), between 1550–1620 A. D.; Āpadeva, son of Anantadeva, author of Mīmāṁsā-nyāyaprakāśa (pub. by B. O. R. I. Poona, with a lucid commentary by M. M. Vasudevasastri Abhyaṅkar, 1937); there are several other editions of this work, one of which edited by Prof. Edgerton with transliterated text, translation and notes in Harvard O. Series is very useful; between 1610–1680 A. D.

Khaṇḍadeva, author of Bhāṭṭakaustubha with Bhāṭṭadīpikā (published in Mysore Govt. Oriental series), and Bhāṭṭarahasya. About 1600–1665 A. D.

Gāgābhaṭṭa or Viśvesvarabhaṭṭa, son of Dinakarabhaṭṭa, author of Bhāṭṭacintāmaṇi (part published at Benares); between 1620–1690 A. D.

Rāmānujācārya, author of Tantrarahasya (G. O. S.), belonging to the Prābhākara school and of Nāyakaratna (com. on Nyāyaratnamālā of Pārthasārathi, G. O. S., 1956); about 1500–1575 A. D.

Mīmāṁsākośa (in Sanskrit)—An encyclopaedic and most learned work on Pūrvamīmāṁsā—prepared by Swami Kevalānanda Sarasvatī, published by the Prājñapāṭhaśālāmaṇḍala at Wai in the Satara District, Bombay State; four parts have been published so far, covering over 2400 pages and four more are to be published. The press copy of the whole is, it is understood, ready. Unfortunately the great Swami entered Brāhmī state five years ago.

Some of the works written in English on the P. M. S., apart from short papers and the translation of the Śābarabhāṣya (3 vol. in G. O. S.), the Tantravārtika and the Ślokavārtika of Kumārila (Bibliotheca Indica, Calcutta, 1900) by M. M. Dr. Ganganath Jha, may be noted here for those who desire to make further studies in P. M. S. The following works and papers are also useful.

Max Müller's 'Six systems of Indian Philosophy' in collected works (ed. of 1899), pp. 197–214; The Prābhākara school of Pūrvamīmāṁsā by M. M. Ganganath Jha (1911); Karmamīmāṁsā by A. B. Keith (1921); 'Indian Philosophy' by Prof. Das-Gupta, vol. I. pp 367–405 (Cambridge, 1922); 'A Brief Sketch of the Pūrvamīmāṁsā system' by the present author in A. B. O. R. I. vol. VI pp. 1–40 (1925); 'Outlines of Indian Philosophy' by Prof. M. Hiriyanna, pp. 298–325 (Allen and Unwin, London, 1932); Introduction on 'a short History of the Pūrva-mīmāṁsā-śāstra' to the edition of the Tattvabindu of Vācaspatimiśra by Pandit V. A. Ramaṣwami Sastri (Annamalai University S. Series, 1936); 'Indian Philosophy' by Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, vol. II. pp 374–429 (1941); Introduction (pp. III–LI) to the edition of the Tātparyaṭīkā of Umbeka on Ślokavārtika by Prof. C. Kunhan Raja (Madras Un. 1940); 'Pūrvamīmāṁsā in its sources' by M. M. Ganganath Jha (Benares Hindu University, 1949) with a critical Bibliography (pp. 5–81) by Dr. Umesha Mishra; 'Citations in Śabarabhāṣya' by Dr. D. V. Garge (Poona, 1952), a painstaking work in which the learned writer has been able to identify many of the quotations in Śabara's bhāṣya that had eluded such a deep scholar as M. M. Ganganath Jha, though even Dr. Garge has not been able to identify a large number; Introduction to the Tantrarahasya of Rāmānujācārya by Pandit K. S. Rāmaswami Sastri (G. O. S. 1956); Mīmāṇsā — the Vākyaśāstra of Ancient India, by Prof. G. V. Devasthali (Book-sellers' Publishing Company, Girgaon Back Road, 1959); Mīmāṁsā Jurisprudence by Shrī Nataraja Aiyyar, Allahabad (Jha Research Institute).

CHAPTER XXIX

Some Fundamental Doctrines of Pūrvamīmāṁsā

Some of the characteristic fundamental doctrines of the Pūrvamīmāṁsā will now be set out with some references and a few remarks as to some of them, the views of Prabhākara and his followers being also rarely referred to.

(1) Veda is eternal, self-existent, not composed by any author, human or divine, and is infallible. This is the core of the P. M. system. Vide P. M. S. I. 1. 27–32 and Śabara on I. 1. 5 (p. 53) and Ślokavārtika (Vākyādhikaraṇa, verses[1953] 366–368). The argument briefly is; Veda is learnt at present and was studied in the past also by students from teachers, that there is no evidence about the person who first composed it or who first studied it. If it be argued that such a reasoning may be put forward as regards the Mahābhārata, the reply is that people know that Vyāsa is the author of it. Similarly, the passages in Smṛtis and Purāṇas that Prajāpati created the Veda are merely arthavādas (laudatory) not based on any evidence or perception and are meant only to convey the absolute authoritativeness of the Veda. If the connection between word and sense is eternal and not brought about by any person, the same reasoning holds good as to the Veda. This view is opposed to the view of the Naiyāyikas who hold that God is the author of the Veda or the interpretation of V. S. I. 1. 3 (Śāstrayonitvāt) by Śaṅkarācārya based on Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 10. Manu I. 21 (stating that Brahmā created from the words of the Veda the names and appropriate duties of all) seems to suggest that (according to

---

1953. On P. M. S. I. 1. 5 Śabara comments (pp. 52–53) 'तस्मान्मन्यामहे केनापि पुरुषेण शब्दानामर्थैः सह सम्बन्धं कृत्वा संव्यवहर्तुं वेदाः प्रणीता इति। तदिदानीमुच्यते। अपौरुषेयत्वात्सम्बन्धस्य सिद्धमिति। कथं पुनरिदमवगम्यतेऽपौरुषेय एव सम्बन्ध इति। पुरुषस्य सम्बन्धुरभावात्। कथं सम्बन्धो नास्ति। प्रत्यक्षस्य प्रमाणस्याभावात् तत्पूर्वकत्वाच्चेतरेषाम्।'; वेदस्याध्ययनं सर्वं गुर्वध्ययनपूर्वकम्। वेदाध्ययनवाच्यत्वादधुनाध्ययनं यथा॥ भारतेपि भवेदेवं कर्तृस्मृत्या तु बाध्यते। वेदेपि तत्स्मृतिर्यां तु सार्थवादनिबन्धना॥ पारम्पर्येण कर्तारं नाध्येतारं स्मरन्ति हि। श्लोकवार्तिकवाक्याधिकरण verses 366–368; the प्रकरणपञ्चिका (p. 140), remarks 'कथं पुनरपौरुषेयत्वं वेदानाम्। पुरुषस्य कर्तुरस्मरणात्। ... काठकादिसमाख्यापि न कर्तृसद्भावमुपकल्पयितुमलम्। प्रवचनेनापि तदुपपत्तेः।. The argument when put in a syllogistic form would run like this: 'वेदाः अपौरुषेयाः, अस्मर्यमाणकर्तृकत्वात्। यत्तथैवं तत्तथैवं यथा महाभारतरघुवंशादि।'. शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. I.3.29 (अत एव च नित्यत्वम्) begins his भाष्य with the words 'स्वतन्त्रस्य कर्तुरस्मरणादिभिः स्थिते वेदस्य नित्यत्वे.'

Manu) the Veda was self-existent. Similarly, the Mahābhāṣya on Vārtika 3 on Pāṇini IV. 3. 101 ('tena proktam') remarks [1954] that the Vedas were not composed by anyone, that they are eternal, that the meaning of the Veda is eternal, but the arrangement of the letters is not eternal and therefore we have different vedic texts like Kāṭhaka, Kālāpaka, Paippalādaka &c. The Smṛtis also sometimes state that there is no author of the Veda, that Brahmā remembers it and that Manu also has remembrance of Dharma in different Kalpas (Parāśarasmṛti I. 21).

In P. M. S. I. 1. 28 ('Anityadarśanāc-ca') the opponent of the eternality of the Veda puts forward such passages as 'Babara Prāvāhaṇi (son of Pravāhaṇa) desired' (Tai. S. VII. 1. 10. 2) and 'Kusuruvinda Auddālaki desired' (Tai. S. VII. 2. 2. 1), which mention men named Prāvāhaṇi and Auddālaki (son of Uddālaka) that are mortals and argues that Veda did not exist before those mortals and is, therefore, not eternal. To this the Siddhānta replies in P. M. S. I. 1. 31 ('param tu śrutisāmānyam') that such examples are to be explained differently viz, 'Babara' is a onomatopoetic word meaning 'rustling' and Prāvāhaṇi (from 'pra' and 'vāhay' causal of vah) means the wind.

It may be noted that centuries before Jaimini and Yāska there was a school of Vedic interpreters called 'Aitihāsikas'. For example, Ṛg. X. 98. 5 and 7 refer to Devāpi, son of Ṛṣṭiṣeṇa, and to Śantanu. Yāska (in Nirukta II. 10), starting with the words 'tatra-itihāsamācakṣate' states that Devāpi and Śantanu were brothers of the Kuru family and the younger brother Śantanu was crowned king ignoring the rights of the elder and that these verses refer to them. In Ṛg. X. 10 there is a dialogue between Yama and Yamī and Nir. V. 2 refers to the 8th verse of it. Those who hold that Veda is eternal would explain Yama as Āditya and Yamī as 'Night'. Ṛg. III. 33 is a dialogue between the sage Viśvāmitra and the rivers. The Nir. (II. 25–27) explains verses 5–6 and 10 of that hymn from the Aitihāsika point of view and states that Viśvāmitra was son of king Kuśika and does not mention the Nairukta interpretation of these verses.

1954. ननु चोक्तं न हि छन्दांसि क्रियन्ते नित्यानि छन्दांसीति। यद्यप्यर्थो नित्यो या त्वसौ वर्णानुपूर्वी सा नित्या। तद्भेदाच्चैतदुपपद्यते काठकं कालापकं मौदकं पैप्पलादकमिति। महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 3 on 'अधिकृत्य कृते ग्रन्थे' पा. IV. 3. 87. पाणिनि emphasizes this distinction between being the author of a work and being only the expounder or transmitter in the two sūtras 'तेन प्रोक्तम्' (IV. 3. 101) and 'कृते ग्रन्थे' (IV. 3. 116). The पूर्वमीमांसासूत्र I. 3. 30 'आख्या प्रवचनात्' also emphasizes the difference between कृत and प्रोक्त.

About the Aśvins the Nirukta (XII. 1) states several views viz. they are Heaven and Earth, or Day and Night, or the Sun and the Moon and remarks that according to the Aitihāsikas they were kings who had accumulated great merit. Probably the Nairuktas were divided among themselves and explained that the Aśvins represented different natural phenomena. About Vṛtra (occurring in such verses as Rg. I. 32. 11) the Nairuktas (Etymologists) said in Nirukta II. 16 that the word means 'cloud', while the Aitihāsikas say that he (Vṛtra) was an Asura, son of Tvaṣṭṛ. As to the hymn Rg. I. 105 of 19 verses (in the first 18 of which the refrain is 'vittam me asya rodasī') the Nirukta IV. 6 states that the hymn was seen by Trita who was thrown into a well. In Rg. VII. 33. 11 there is mention of Urvaśī and Vasiṣṭha (Maitrā-Varuṇa) as born of Urvaśī and Nirukta (V. 13–14) explains that verse and remarks that Urvaśī was an apsaras and Rg. X. 95 is a dialogue between Aila Purūravas and Urvaśī. But the interpretation of the Nairuktas and Aitihāsikas on this story are not expressly set out. Probably the Nairuktas would explain Urvaśī as lightning and Purūravas as the roaring wind. The hymn Rg. X. 108 is a dialogue between Saramā (Indra's bitch) and the Paṇis and the Nirukta XI. 25 explains the first verse and remarks that there is a story (Ākhyāna) therein viz. that there was a dialogue between Saramā sent by Indra and the Paṇis who were Asuras. In all such legends the Nairuktas would insist that they are to be taken allegorically as referring to natural phenomena, while the Aitihāsikas would insist that there is historical basis in all these. Though it is not stated by the Nirukta expressly that the Aitihāsikas do not hold the doctrine of the eternality of the Veda it implicitly follows from their explanations that they did not subscribe to that doctrine.

2. The connection between word and sense is eternal.[1955] This is explained by the words of Śabara (in n. 1953) that there is no person who could be put forward as having brought about 1955. The sūtra (P. M. S. I. 1, 5) contains several conclusions. The first is औत्पत्तिकः (नित्यः) शब्दस्य अर्थेन सम्बन्धः, the 2nd is तस्य ज्ञानमुपदेशः (exhortation is the means of knowing it i. e. dharma); here ज्ञान means ज्ञायते येन (श्लोकवा. औत्पत्तिकसूत्र verse 9); the next part is अव्यतिरेकश्चार्थेऽनुपलब्धे (it is unfailing or infallible as to all that is not perceptible); तत्प्रमाणमनपेक्षत्वात् i e Vedic injunction is a valid means of knowledge since it is independent; बादरायणस्य (this is the view of Bādarāyaṇa also). The question 'what is a

---

(Continued on next page)

the connection of word and sense. Vide P. M. S. I. 1. 6–23, Śabara's bhāṣya thereon, the elaborate treatment in 444 verses in Ślokavārtika (pp. 728–8'5) and Prakaraṇa-pañcikā pp. 133–140 (seventh Prakaraṇa). On the question "what does a word like 'Gauḥ' denote," the P. M. S. replies that a word denotes 'ākṛti' (or jāti) i. e. the universal, the class. Briefly, the Mīmāṁsakas hold that the word, the denotation and the relation of these two are eternal. Vide P. M. S. I. 3. 30–35.

3. The individual soul. The P. M. S. does not expressly affirm the existence of the soul in any sūtra. Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. III. 3. 53 refers to this fact, states that Śabara, the Bhāṣya-kāra, propounded the existence of the soul and that the venerable Upavarṣa refrained from going into that question in his exposition of the Pūrvamīmāṁsā with the remark that he would expound it when dealing with Śārīraka (i. e. the Vedānta-sūtra). It was probably due to this fact of the absence of a statement about the soul that the Pūrvamīmāṁsā was interpreted by some as favouring atheism. Kumārila complains that the Mīmāṁsā, though not really atheistic, was put forward as Lokāyata (atheistic) [1956] by some and that therefore he endeavours (in the word' is answered differently by different writers. The revered Upavarṣa said that in a word like 'gauḥ' it is the letters that constitute the word (vide Śabara quoting Upavarṣa p. 45 on I. 1.5 and Śaṅkara on V. S. I. 3. 28). The other view is that the letters manifest the sphoṭa and it is the sphoṭa that conveys the sense. This subject cannot be dealt with in this work.

---

(Continued from last page)

1956. मायेनैव हि मीमांसा लोके लोकायतीकृता। तामास्तिकपथे कर्तुमयं यत्नः कृतो मया॥ श्लोकवा. verse 10. The न्या. र. notes that भर्तृमित्र put forward several wrong doctrines about the Mīmāṁsā such as the one that the performance of obligatory acts or of prohibited acts leads to no desirable or undesirable results. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 46–47 note 57 and vol. II. pp. 358–359 on लौकायतिक and नास्तिक. The meaning of लोकायत had changed from time to time. कौटिल्य (I. 2) included लोकायत under आन्वीक्षिकी along with सांख्ययोग. पाणिनि appears to have known the word लोकायत, his sūtra (IV. 2. 60) is 'ऋतूक्थादिसूत्रान्ताड्ढक्' and लोकायत is the 2nd word in the ऋक्थादिगण; the Kāśikā on this sūtra mentions लौकायतिकः; at least before the 6th century A. D. लौकायतिक had come to be identified with one who did not believe in the existence of a soul independent of the body. The कादम्बरी (paragraph 153) has 'लौकायतिकविद्यायेवाधर्मरुचेः'. शङ्कराचार्य on वेदान्तसूत्र III. 3.54 says that the Lokāyatikas do not admit any principle other than the four elements (earth, water, heat and wind) and do not believe in the existence of a soul apart from the body. Vide Prof. Das-gupta's 'Indian Philosophy' vol. III, p. 512–533 and 'Lokāyata' by Dr. W. Ruben (Berlin 1954). From the Chān. Up. VIII. 8 it appears that Asura Virocana held that there was no soul

(Continued on next page)

Ślokavārtika) to show that it treads the path of belief (in soul and another world). The souls are many, eternal, all-pervading (omnipresent) and different from the body, the senses and the mind. The soul resides in the body, is the agent (kartṛ) as well as bhoktṛ (enjoyer), is of the nature of pure consciousness, and is cognised by itself (svasaṁvedya). Though the P. M. S. does not expressly deal with the existence of the soul, there are indications that the P. M. S. itself must have impliedly accepted the existence of the soul. The reward of many religious rites is Svarga and the P. M. S. refers to numerous Vedic passages where svarga is the reward of rites and assumes that the reward goes to the performer (e. g. in the adhikaraṇa III. 7. 18–20 beginning with 'Śāstraphalam prayoktari' that expounds the meaning of such vedic passages as 'agnihotram juhuyāt svargakāmaḥ'). Śabara on I. 1. 5 expounds at great length the existence of the soul as different from the body, senses &c. (vide particularly pp. 60–72 of Ānan. ed.). The Ślokavārtika devotes 148 verses to this subject and the Tantravārtika also briefly deals with it on P. M. S. II. 1. 5 (pp. 402–403). The Ślokavāritka (Ātmavāda, verse 148) has this interesting verse [1957] 'the Bhāṣyakāra (Śabara) desirous of refuting atheism has established here (i. e. in bhāṣya passages) by reasoning the existence of the soul; the apart from the body and that the body alone was the soul. There is a recent book published (while these pages were being sent to the press) viz. 'Lokāyata' (study of ancient Indian materialism) written by Shri. Devaprasad Chattopadhyaya (New Delhi, 1959), which deals with the subject of Indian materialism in detail.

---

(Continued from last page)

1957. इत्याह नास्तिक्यनिराकरिष्णुरात्मास्तितां भाष्यकृदत्र युक्त्या। इदत्वमेतद्विषयस्य बोधः प्रयाति वेदान्तनिषेवणेन॥ श्लोकवा. (आत्मवाद) 148. About the soul being स्वसंवेद्य, शबर says स्वसंवेद्यः स भवति, नासावन्येन शक्यते ब्रण्डुं कथमसौ निर्विदृश्येतेति। यथा च कश्चिज्जन्मान्धः स्वयं रूपं पश्यति न च शक्नोत्यन्यस्मै जात्यन्धाय तद्विदर्शयितुम्। न च तत्र शक्यते निदर्शयितुमित्येतावता नास्तीत्यवगम्यते' and relies upon certain passages of the Br. Up. such as III. 9.26, IV. 5 15 (अगृह्यो न हि गृह्यते), IV. 3.6 (आत्मैवास्य ज्योतिर्भवति). As the words आत्मास्तिता and नास्तिक्य are put in juxtaposition in श्लोकवार्तिक it follows that, acc. to कुमारिल, a नास्तिक is primarily one who does not believe in the existence of the soul. पाणिनि has the sūtra 'अस्ति नास्ति दिष्टं मतिः' IV. 4. 60 on which the महाभाष्य explains 'अस्तीत्यस्य मतिरास्तिकः। नास्तीत्यस्य मतिर्नास्तिकः'; the काशिका explains 'परलोकोऽस्तीति यस्य मतिरस्ति स आस्तिकः तद्विपरीतो नास्तिकः'; so नास्तिक primarily means 'one who does not believe in the existence of the soul (and as a consequence in a world other than the physical). The तन्त्रवा. (pp. 402–404 on II. 1, 5) establishes the following propositions about the soul: तत्र नित्यः सञ्जात्मा शरीराभ्यन्तरवर्ती (नाणुमात्रः, न शरीरपरिमितः), सर्वगतः, आत्मनानात्वे स्वदोषः, सर्वगतत्वात्सिद्धमात्मनो निश्चलत्वम्।.

knowledge on this subject (viz. existence of the soul) becomes sound and enduring by the study of Vedānta passages'. The Padma-purāṇa states that Jaimini composed a vast, but useless Śāstra by expounding the view of there being no god.[1957a]

4. God and the devatās in sacrifices. Śabara's position is that the Vedas were not created by God, nor was the connection between word and sense created by Him, The Prakaraṇapañcikā also (pp. 137 ff) denies a creator for the whole universe. Kumārila's position [1958] also is peculiar and startling. He says in the Ślokavārtika that it is difficult to prove that God first created the world together with Dharma and Adharma and the means of attaining these, words, senses, and their relations and the Veda. Thus it appears that he does not expressly deny the existence of a supreme power or God but simpily ignores such power or God. In spite of this he begins his Ślokavārtika with an obeisance to Śiva.[1959] The Nyāyaratnākara says that the verse can also be an apotheosis of Yajña. But in that case Kumārila would have to be charged with duplicity. It is better to say that the tradition of beginning a work with a maṅgala verse could not be discarded even by Kumārila.

The consideration of the question of what is meant by the devatā with reference to which an offering is cast into the sacred fire leads to startling results. Jaimini (in VIII. 1. 32–34) takes the position that in a sacrifice the havis (offering) is the principal matter while the devatā is a subordinate one (guṇa) and that if there be a conflict between the havis and the devatā, the final conclusion is to be arrived at by relying on the havis. The reasoning is that the Veda connects the deity with the sacrificial act, as in 'one desirous of progeny should offer an havis for Indra and Agni cooked on eleven potsherds and then Indra confers on him progeny' (Tai. S. II. 2. 1. 1.). Even though 1957a. वेदार्थवन्महाशास्त्रं मायया यद्वैदिकम्। मयैव दृश्यते देवि जगतां नाशकारणात्। द्विजन्मना जैमिनिना पूर्वं वेद (चेद?)मपार्थकम्। निरीश्वरेण वादेन कृतं शास्त्रं महत्तरम्॥ पद्मपुराण VI, 263. 74–76.

---

1958. यदि त्वादौ जगत्सृष्ट्वा धर्माधर्मौ ससाधनौ। यथा शब्दार्थसम्बन्धान् वेदान् कश्चित्प्रवर्तयेत् ॥ जगद्धिताय वेदस्य तथा किंचिन्न दुष्यति। सर्वज्ञवत्तु दुःसाधमित्यत्रैतन्न संश्रितम्॥ यदा सर्वमिदं नासीत् कावस्था तत्र गम्यताम्। प्रजापतेः क्व वा स्थानं किं रूपं च प्रतीयताम्॥ श्लोकवा. (सम्बन्धाक्षेप० verses 43–45.

1959. विशुद्धज्ञानदेहाय त्रिवेदीदिव्यचक्षुषे। श्रेयःप्राप्तिनिमित्ताय नमः सोमार्धधारिणे॥ first verse. The न्या. र. remarks 'सोमस्य अर्धं स्थानं ग्रहत्वमसादि तद्धारिणे इति यज्ञपक्षेपि सङ्गच्छते।'. मनु says: मङ्गलाचारयुक्तानां ... विनिपातो न विद्यते ॥ IV. 146.

it is so, the phala (the reward) is conferred by the sacrifice and not by the deities (Indra and Agni in this case) and the words 'Indra[1960] and Agni confer progeny on the sacrificer' are purely laudatory. P. M. S. IX. 1. 6–10 are very important in this connection. Śabara quotes Vedic passages like Rg. X. 47. 1, III. 30. 5, VIII. 17. 8 (where Indra's right hand, fist, neck, stomach and arms are mentioned), Rg. I. 95 10, VIII. 77. 4 (where Indra is said to have put in his stomach all foods and to have drunk thirty vessels full of soma), Rg. VIII. 32. 22 and X. 89. 10 where Indra is said to be lord of the world, of heaven and earth, waters and mountains and then remarks that these are all arthavādas, though at first sight they appear to postulate that Vedic deities have bodies, eat and drink. The Śāstradīpikā advances the argument that if the devatā had a body, ate, drank and was pleased, devatā will be anitya (ephemeral) and could not in that case be treated of in the Veda that is eternal. He further asserts that men of limited intelligence not knowing the real import of the Vedic passages may hold wrong opinions. Śabara notes (on X. 4. 23) that there are various opinions as to who the Devatās are to whom either a hymn (sūkta) is addressed (as Rg. I. 94) or to whom 'havis' is directed by the Veda to be offered as in 'one should offer to Agni an offering cooked on eight potsherds'; that the devatā becomes connected with the sacrifice not in its own nature but by the word used with reference to an offering and that where the Veda directs an offering to be made to Agni, one cannot use a synonym for Agni such as 'Śuci, Pāvaka, Dhūmaketu, Kṛśānu, Vaiśvānara or Śāṇḍilya. Thus Devatā is a matter of words, as admitted by[1961]

1960. Note the following sūtras: विप्रतिपत्तौ हविषा नियम्येत कर्मणस्तदुपाख्यत्वात्। VIII. 1. 32; अपि वा शब्दपूर्वत्वात् यज्ञकर्म प्रधानं स्याद्गुणत्वे देवताश्रुतिः। IX. 1. 9. शबर's words on VIII. 1.34 are quite frank and clear: स्यादेतद्देवं यदि देवतातः फलं स्यात्। यागात्तु फलं स्वर्गकामो यजेतेति श्रूयते। यत्तु 'तृप्त एवैनमिन्द्र' इति तत्रेदमुच्यते गुणत्वेन देवताश्रुतिः। यागे गुणभूता देवता। तस्या दातृत्वं स्तुत्या उच्यते। यथा अमात्येन मे ग्रामो दत्तः, यथा सेनापतिना मे ग्रामो दत्त इति। न चामात्यः सेनापतिर्वा ग्रामस्य प्रभवति। राजैव प्रभवति। इतरस्मिन् गुणभूते स्तुत्या दातृत्ववादः।।. गुणभूत means 'that has become a subordinate factor' as opposed to प्रधान.

1961. तस्मान्मन्त्रत्वे विधिशब्द उपादातव्य इति। उच्यते। नन्वेवं शब्द एव देवता प्राप्नोति। अत्रोच्यते। नैतदस्माभिः परिहर्तव्यम्। न हीदमुच्यमानमस्मत्पक्षं बाधते। शबर on X. 4. 23; यागादीनां देवताराधनहेतुत्वे प्रमाणाभावात्। ... अतो देवतोद्देशेन द्रव्यत्यागो याग इति गौणं देवतापूजात्मकत्वमवगमयितव्यम्। प्रकरणपञ्चिका pp. 185–186; यद्यपि देवता विग्रहवती परिगृह्य भुक्त्वा तृप्यति प्रसीदति च तथापि यागादेव फलं विग्रहवती चानित्या स्यात्। शास्त्रदीपिका p. 580 on PMS IX. 1. 6–10.

Śabara. The Prakaraṇapañcikā also states that there is no proof that a sacrifice (yāga) is a means of pleasing the deity and that to say that there is worship of a deity in a yāga is really metaphorical. From this and the preceding doctrine (No. 1) it follows that P. M. S., Śabara, and Kumārila discard the idea that the Veda is the word of God or that rewards of religious acts are due to the favour or grace of God. It is therefore that the Padmapurāṇa quoted (in note 1957a) above dubs Jaimini's doctrine 'nirīśvaravāda' (Godless).

When the Veda says 'one desirous of heaven should perform a sacrifice', three ākāṅkṣās (expectancies) arise. The first is 'what is to be brought about'; this is satisfied by the word svarga, stating the reward or the purpose. The 2nd is 'by what means' is the first to be brought about. That is satisfied by the meaning of the root 'yaj' (i. e. by yāga); the third is 'what is the procedure or in what manner'; that is satisfied by the establishment of the sacred fires and other rites that are described in the context of the passage 'svargakāmo yajeta'. It is learnt from this passage that the reward or purpose (svarga) springs from (is brought about by) yāga and not by the devatā. [1962]

Later writers could not digest all these ideas about the deities in sacrifices. Veṅkaṭanātha (or Veṅkaṭadeśika, 1269–1369 A. D.) composed a work called 'Seśvaramīmāṁsā', in which he criticizes both Bhāṭṭa and Prābhākara schools and being an ardent Vaiṣṇava of the Rāmānuja school attempts a synthesis of the two mīmāṁsās and brings in the idea of God as the dispenser of the reward of sacrifices against the combined testimony of Śabara, Kumārila, Śālikanātha and others. Vide Dr. Radhakrisnan in 'Indian Philosophy,' vol. II pp. 424–429 for 'God and world according to Pūrvamīmāṁsā'.

5. There is no real creation nor dissolution of the whole universe. The constituent parts may come and go but the universe as a whole has no beginning and no end. The descriptions of creation and dissolution are only meant to illustrate the power of daiva (fate, destiny) and the vanity of human effort and urge men to perform duties enjoined by the Veda. Without any human effort the world may come into being and in spite of

---

1962. यजेतेत्येवमादयः साकाङ्क्षा यजेत किं केन कथमिति, स्वर्गकाम इत्यनेन प्रयोजनेन क्ष निराकाङ्क्षाः। शबर on II.1.1. Vide सुपूटीका on IX 1. 9 अपि वा...वेदसाक्षुतिः quoted क्ष in note 1960.

all effort it may come to an end. The world is real and has always been there and will go on for all time.[1963] Vide Ślokavārtika (V. 112–117), Prakaraṇapañcikā pp. 137–140 and Nyāyaratnākara on the former. The Ślokavāratika goes so far as to say 'it must be admitted that all these (worlds &c.) existed before the creator, and again such a creator may be proved (by anumāna) to have been preceded by the Veda on account of his being an intelligent being, just as ourselves are preceded by the Veda.'

It would be noticed that the Mīmāṃsa idea of creation and dissolution is opposed to the Mahābhārata and Gītā (X. 8 'ahaṁ sarvasya prabhavo mattaḥ sarvam pravartate).

6. The doctrine of apūrva (invisible mysterious or subtle potency). The Veda lays down that one desirous of heaven should perform a sacrifice. But the reward heaven comes off only after a long time, while the sacrifice lasts only for a short time. There would thus be no direct connection between the sacrifice (the cause) and heaven (the reward) or purpose. It must be presumed from the Vedic injunction that there is some connecting link between the activity of man to perform a yāga and the reward. Before the principal and subordinate acts in a sacrifice are performed men have no capacity for svarga and sacrifices (described in the texts) are also incapable of producing the effect 'svarga'. The principal and subsidiary acts in a sacrifice when carried out remove the incapacity and produce a certain capacity or potency for svarga. This must be admitted by all. Unless such a capacity exists there would be the unacceptable conclusion that not doing the acts and doing them are on the same level. This capacity or potency either residing in the man (agent) or arising from the sacrifice that is performed is called apūrva in this śāstra. It is true that this capacity cannot be proved by direct perception or other means of knowledge except by śrutārthāpatti. When we are told that a man who is fat does not eat by day we presume, in order to account for this, that he must be eating food at night. Similarly, the Veda brings sacrifice and svarga together; we have to presume that sacrifice gives rise to a subtle potency, though the sacrifice itself comes to an end in a short time, and that this potency is the cause of bringing about the reward svarga and that we may look upon it as abiding in the soul of the sacrificer or as an invisible effect (a reaching forth of the yāga itself that has vanished).[1964] Mīmāṁsakas do not admit that the results of religious acts are given by God. The V. S. III. 2. 40 states that this is the view of Jaimini (dharmam Jaiminir-ata eva) and is opposed to the view of Bādarāyaṇa, Śaṅkara and the Bhāmatī that it is God who confers the reward. According to the Prakaraṇapañcikā (p. 186) the invisible force or potency is not in the agent but arises as a subtle form from the action itself. Four kinds of Apūrva[1965] (with further sub-divisions) as regards Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice are stated by Mādhavācārya.

---

1963. तस्मादध्रुवदेवात्र सर्गप्रलयकल्पना। समस्तक्षयजन्मभ्यां न विध्वस्तमणिका॥ सर्वज्ञवाक्षिपेद्या च ध्रुवः सद्भावकल्पना॥ ... तस्मात् प्रागपि सर्वेऽमी ध्रुवदासन् पदादयः। स्यात्तत्पूर्वकता चास्य चैतन्यादस्मदादिवत्॥ एवं ये युक्तिभिः प्राहुस्तेषां दुर्लभमुत्तरम्। अन्वेद्यो व्यवहारोयमनादिर्वेदवादिभिः॥ श्लोकवा. (सम्बन्धाक्षेप० verses 113–117). बुद्ध was called सर्वज्ञ, as the अमरकोश states 'सर्वज्ञः सुगतो बुद्धो' &c The न्या. र. remarks on verses 113–114 'यथा च बुद्धादेः सर्वज्ञत्वं पुरुषत्वादस्मदादिवन्निषिद्धम्, एवं प्रजापतेरपि स्रष्टृत्वं निषेध्यमित्याह सर्वज्ञवदिति। तेन दैवप्रभावकथनार्थोयं सृष्टिप्रलयवादः। समस्तपुरुषकाराभावेऽपि सृष्टिकाले दैवबलेनैव सर्वं प्रवर्तते, प्रलयकाले च सत्यपि पुरुषकारे दैवोपरमादैवोपरमति तस्माद्धर्मानुष्ठान एव यतितव्यमित्येतत्परं सृष्टिप्रलयवचनमिति। न्या. र. on श्लोकवा. (सम्बन्धाक्षेपपरि० verse 112).

The idea is that every rite as a whole produces an apūrva, and that each subordinate part (aṅga) of the rite has also an (apūrva) which is subordinate to the apūrva of the whole rite.

The Tantravārtika explains why it is called apūrva. The invisible potency was not in existence before the performance of 1964. चोदना पुनरारम्भः। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 5; चोदनेत्यपूर्वं भ्रमः। अपूर्वं पुनरस्ति यत आरम्भः शिष्यते स्वर्गकामो यजेतेति। इतरथा हि विधानमनर्थकं स्याद्भङ्गित्वाद्यागस्य। यद्यन्यदुत्पाद्य यागो विनश्येत् फलमसति निमित्ते न स्यात्। तस्मादुत्पादयतीति। शबर, फलाय विहितं कर्म क्षणिकं चिरभाविने। तत्सिद्धिर्नान्यथेत्येवमपूर्वं प्रति गम्यते॥ वेदवाक्योपात्तस्वर्गयागादिसम्बन्धानुपपत्त्या चोदनयैवापूर्वमपि चोदितं भविष्यतीति प्रमाणवत्। तस्मादस्त्यपूर्वमिति। तन्त्रवार्तिक p. 390; प्रधानकर्मणामङ्गकर्मणां वा प्राक्क्षरणात्स्वर्गादिप्राप्त्ययोग्याः पुरुषाः क्रतवश्च स्वर्गकार्ययोग्याः। तासुभयीमप्ययोग्यतां ध्रुवस्य प्रधानैरङ्गैश्च योग्यतोपजन्यत इत्यवश्यं सर्वेणाभ्युपगन्तव्यम्। असत्यां तस्यामकृतसमत्वप्रसङ्गात्। सैव च पुरुषगता क्रतुगता वा योग्यता शास्त्रेऽस्मिन्नपूर्वमित्युपदिश्यते। यत्तु प्रत्यक्षादिगम्यरूपमस्य नास्तीति सत्यं, श्रुतार्थापत्तिव्यतिरिक्तैर्न गम्यते स त्वदोषः। तन्त्रवा॰ p. 394; In the श्लोकवा. (अर्थापत्ति॰) Kumārila says 'पीनो दिवा न भुङ्क्ते चेत्येवमादिवच्चःश्रुतौ। रात्रिभोजनविज्ञानं श्रुतार्थापत्तिरिष्यते॥ v. 51. तन्त्रवा॰ further proceeds 'एवं स्वर्गादयोप्यङ्कुरादिस्थानीयां तावत्पूर्वावस्थां प्रतिपद्यन्ते तया चोत्पद्यमानया त एवोत्पन्ना भवन्तीति'. तस्मादस्त्यपूर्वम्। सूत्रस्यापि च न प्रकृतोपयिकमन्यमर्थं पश्यामः। तेनारम्भचोदनैवापूर्वस्यापि चोदनेत्ययमेवार्थः। तन्त्रवा. p. 400. शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. III. 2. 40 puts briefly and clearly Jaimini's view 'श्रुतिश्चेत् प्रमाणं यथार्थः कर्मफलसम्बन्धः श्रुत उपपद्यते तथा कल्पयितव्यः। न चानुत्पाद्य किमप्यपूर्वं कर्म विनश्यत्कालान्तरितं फलं दातुं शक्नोति। अतः कर्मणो वा सूक्ष्मा काचिदुत्तरावस्था फलस्य वा पूर्वावस्थाऽपूर्वं नामास्तीति तर्क्यते।; vide भामती on वे. सू. III. 2. 41.

---

1965. तच्चापूर्वं दर्शपूर्णमासयोरनेकविधम्। फलापूर्वं, संस्कारापूर्वं, उत्पत्त्यपूर्वं, अङ्गापूर्वं चेति। येन स्वर्गं आरभ्यते तत्फलापूर्वम्। This is जै. न्या. मा. वि. This फलापूर्व is also called परमापूर्व.

the sacrifice and arises as something new after its performance and hence apūrva has a purely etymological sense.[1966]

If one holds the view that apūrva is some potency coming to reside in the performer of a sacrifice one's views would be like those of some modern writers who hold that real prayer is not mere repetition of certain words deemed to be sacred, but it is an upward movement or a real increase in the intensity of spiritual power in the man who prays, it being immaterial to ask to whom he prays (vide W. James' 'Varieties of religious experience' p. 467).

7. Svataḥ-prāmāṇya (self-validity of cognition). It has already been stated that the pramāṇas are six (five according to Prabhākara). The P. M. system postulates that all cognitions as cognitions are intrinsically valid in themselves, do not require any extraneous help to establish their validity but invalidity of cognitions is (parataḥ) established extraneously by showing that there was defect in the organ that produced the cognition or it is established later on that a particular cognition was wrong.[1967] Prabhākara goes much further and holds that every experience as such is valid and no experience can be said to be wrong or illusory.

8. Svarga. The ideas about heaven entertained by Jaimini, Śabara and Kumārila are different from the description of heaven in the Veda and Purāṇas. Vide H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp.

1966. यागादिजनितं च पुंसां फलप्राप्तिसामर्थ्यमपूर्वशब्दवाच्यं यागानुष्ठानात्पूर्वमभूतमनुष्ठानोत्तरकालं चापूर्वं जायत इति यौगिकत्वाद्देवापूर्वशब्दाभिधानं सर्वत्र लभ्यते। तन्त्रवा. p 299 on I. 3. 30; on पू. मी. सू. VII. 4. 1 शबर says 'इदमपि चोद्यं यज्जिरपूर्वं साधयति ततश्चापूर्वात्कालान्तरे फलं भवतीति चोदना पुनरारम्भ इत्यत्र।'.

1967. सर्वं विज्ञानविषयमिदं तावत्प्रतीक्ष्यताम्। प्रमाणत्वाप्रमाणत्वे स्वतः किं परतोऽथवा॥ स्वतः सर्वप्रमाणानां प्रामाण्यमिति गम्यताम्। न हि स्वतोऽसती शक्तिः कर्तुमन्येन शक्यते॥ ..... तस्माद्बोधात्मकत्वेन प्राप्ता बुद्धेः प्रमाणता। अर्थान्यथात्वहेतूत्थदोषज्ञानादपोह्यते॥ श्लोकवा० (चोदनासूत्र) verses 33, 47, 53; the last two verses are respectively quoted by शान्तरक्षित and कमलशील in तत्त्वसंग्रह pp. 745 and 788. On verse 33 the न्या. र. comments 'तदिहैव चिन्ता। किं ज्ञानस्य प्रामाण्यमप्रामाण्यं च स्वत एव निर्णीयते। किं वोभयमपि कारणगुणदोषाद्विना निरूपयितव्यम्, उताप्रामाण्यं स्वतः प्रामाण्यं परतो विपरीतं वेति।.' Here four possible views are put forward about प्रामाण्य and अप्रामाण्य. The मीमांसक view is that cognition is स्वतःप्रमाण, while its invalidity has to be established by other means (अप्रामाण्यं परतः). शबर on I. 1. 5 says 'तस्माद्यस्य च दुष्टं करणं यत्र च मिथ्येति प्रत्ययः स एवासमीचीनः प्रत्ययो नाम्य इति।'; 'यत्र प्रयत्नेनान्विष्यमाणोऽपि कारणदोषो बाधकज्ञानं वा नोपलभ्यते तत् प्रमाणम्, इतरज्ञानमप्रमाणम्' शास्त्रदीपिका on I. 1. 5 p. 50 (of Nirṇ. ed. of 1915).

165–167 and 168–171 for descriptions of the joys of heaven in the Vedic literature, the Epic and the Purāṇas. From considerations of space the remarks will have to be brief. In Ṛg. IX. 113. 7–11 the sage prays to Soma to place him in that immortal world where there is continuous light, where all desires are fulfilled, where there are joys of various grades. Heaven was deemed to be the place where the souls of valiant men that fought battles and sacrificed their lives went (Ṛg. VI. 46. 12) and in Ṛg. X. 154. 2–4 the soul of the dead is asked to join those departed men that had become invincible by great tapas, that had died in battle, that had made gifts of a thousand cows, that had led a life of right and virtue and that were wise sages.

The Atharvaveda IV. 34. 2 and 5–6 say that in heaven there are many women, they get edible plants and flowers of various kinds, there are streams of ghee, honey and wine (surā), milk, curds and there are lotus ponds all round. The Śatapatha Br. (XIV. 7. 1. 32–33) states that the joys of heaven are 100 times greater than those on earth. Vide Macdonnell's 'Vedic Mythology' pp. 167–168 and A. B. Keith's 'Religion and philosophy of the Veda' etc. pp. 403–406 (1924). Even the Upaniṣads refer to the joys of heaven e. g. Chān. VIII. 5. 3. speaks of two lakes in the world of Brahmā, aśvattha tree showering down Soma and the city of Bṛahmā calld Aparājitā; the Kauṣītaki Up. (I. 3 and 4) elaborates this and adds that five hundred Apsarases go out to meet him (who reaches heaven), one hundred with garlands in their hands, one hundred with ointments, one hundred with perfumes, one hundred with garments and one hundred with fruits. Poets like Kālidāsa love to dwell upon the instantaneous arrival of the soul of the warrior whose head was cut off in battle and who was at once joined by an apsaras in heaven (vide Raghuvaṁśa VII. 51 'Vāmāṅgasaṁsaktasurāṅganaḥ svam nṛtyat-kabandham samare dadarśa'). The Purāṇas furnish graphic descriptions of the joys of heaven. Vide Brahmapurāṇa 225. 6, Padma II. 95. 2–5, Mārkaṇḍeya 10. 93–95, which enumerate Nandana garden, aerial cars with bevies of Apsarases, golden beds and seats, absence of sorrows, all pleasure &c. Śabara on P. M. S. VI. 1. 1 refers to two popular views about svarga; one is, whatever gives pleasure to a person such as silken garments of fine texture, sandalwood, damsels sixteen years old is designated svarga. Another popular view is that svarga is a certain place where there is no heat nor cold, no hunger nor thirst, no dissatisfaction, no tiredness.

Śabara and Kumārila say that popular[1968] ideas about svarga are invalid, that the Mahābhārata and Purānas, being composed by men, need not be considered and that the Vedic descriptions of svarga are mere arthavādas for praise.

P. M. S. IV. 3. 15. provides that svarga[1969] is the reward of all religious acts (such as Viśvajit) for which no express reward is provided by the texts. Śabara states 'happiness is svarga and all seek that'; an old verse says 'that state of happiness in which there is no mixing of pain, which is not immediately overwhelmed by pain, that comes to one when one desires it, is called by the word svar (svarga)'.

Medhātithi remarks that smṛtis sometimes state[1970] that the gift of a single cow yields all rewards and relieves from sins with the result that fruits of great religious acts and of slight ones would be deemed to be the same but it should be understood that the rewards differ in their duration; otherwise, no one would engage in great or difficult rites.

Some Vedic rites expressly declare fruits of sacrifices that are other than svarga. For example, the Tai. S. provides 'one desirous of (plenty of) cattle should offer the citrā sacrifice' (II. 4. 6. 1.) or 'one desirous of (leadership or control over) a village should offer the Iṣṭi called Sāṅgrahaṇī' (Tai. S. II. 3. 9. 2.).

1968. नन्नु च लोकादाख्यानेभ्यो वेदाच्चावगम्यते देश एवंजातीयकः स्वर्ग इति। तच्च। पुरुषाणामेवंविधेन देशेनासम्बन्धादप्रमाणं वचः। आख्यानमपि पुरुषप्रणीतत्वादनादरणीयम्। वैदिकमपि स्वर्गाख्यानं विधिपरं नास्त्येव भवति तु विध्यन्तरेणैकवाक्यभूतं स्तुतिपरम्। शबर on VI. 1. 1 p. 1348.

1969. स स्वर्गः स्यात्सर्वाम्प्रत्यविशिष्टत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 15; शबर says 'सर्वे हि पुरुषाः स्वर्गकामाः कुत एतत्। प्रीतिर्हि स्वर्गः सर्वश्च प्रीतिं प्रार्थयते।'. स्वर्ग is the साध्य and याग is साधन acc. to दुपटीका on P.M.S. VI. 2.4; यच्च दुःखेन सम्भिन्नं न च ग्रस्तमनन्तरम्। अभिलाषोपनीतं च तत्सुखं स्वःपदास्पदम्॥ q. by सांख्यतत्त्वकौमुदी of वाचस्पति p. 45 (Chow. edition) and by नीलकण्ठ on उद्योगपर्व 33. 72. Some quote this verse as from the विष्णुपुराण, The प्रकरणपञ्चिका (pp. 102–3) appears to echo the words of the verse 'उर्वेतिष्टोमेन स्वर्गकामो यजेतेत्येवमादि समाम्नायं सकलदुःखसम्भेदरहिताभिलाषोपनीतदीर्घतरसुखसाधनत्वेनार्थवादैः स्तूयमानं कर्म दृश्यते।...तथा च यावत्तावत्सुखसाधने स्वर्गशब्दं न प्रयुञ्जते किन्तु सातिशयमीतिजनके।; मेधा० on मनु IV. 87 where narakas are said to be 21 remarks 'नरकशब्दो निरतिशयदुःखवचनः। एकविंशतिसंख्या अर्थवादः।. The printed विष्णुपुराण II. 6. 46 is: मनःप्रीतिकरः स्वर्गो नरकस्तद्विपर्ययः। नरकस्वर्गसंज्ञे वै पुण्यपापे द्विजोत्तम॥.

1970. स्मृत्यन्तरे सर्वफलता पापप्रमोचनार्थतापि गोदानस्य श्रुता यावतामल्पोपकाराणां महोपकारैः फलसाम्यमुच्यते तेषां लोकवत्परिमाणतः फलविशेषोऽवगन्तव्यः। प्राप्यते तदेव फलं न तु चिरकालम्। आवाप्यो ह्ययं न्यायः। पणलभ्यं हि तत्माज्ञः क्रीणाति दशभिः पलैः—इति समानफलत्वे महाप्रयासानर्थक्यं प्राप्नोति। मेधा० on मनु III. 95.

Śabara says the Veda does not say that the result of such sacrifices cannot be had in this very life. This the Ṭuptikā[1971] expands in an interesting note. The remedy declared by the Veda for securing desired objects (son's birth and the like) is bound to yield the result in this life or in the next. If a man has committed evil deeds in a previous life he has to undergo the effects of those sins and while he is undergoing the effects of sins the fruits of sacrifices are postponed. But if the effects of sins have been extremely reduced he secures the fruits of kāmya rites in this very life. The words of the Veda laying down an injunction state only so much that the fruit of the rite performed does come about but they do not say that the fruit follows immediately (after the rite is performed). Therefore, there is no definiteness (about the time when the fruit will follow). But svarga is to be enjoyed only in another life (as a fruit of rites performed in this life). It (svarga) means unequalled happiness and is achieved in a degree proportionate to the actions; but it cannot be enjoyed in this life, since men experience in this world every moment both happiness and misery. Every happiness is not the fruit of Jyotiṣṭoma and every being does not perform Jyotiṣṭoma. But some happiness does come to a man. Therefore, it (happiness) is natural. The existence, however, of another body has to be imagined for the experience of unequalled happiness, there being no other reasonable explanation. That unequalled happiness does not come to a man unless he dies; therefore svarga is to be enjoyed in another life.

9. Mokṣa (liberation): Neither the P. M. S. nor Śabara nor Prabhākara deals with the topic of Mokṣa. Kumārila and

---

1971. पुत्रादीनि कामयमानस्योपायो विधीयते। उपाये च कृते नियतमुपेयेन भवितव्यम्। तदा पूर्वजन्मन्यशुभं कृतम्। तच्चानुभाव्यं तस्मात्पूर्वजन्मकृतमनुभूयते। तत्र यदि जन्मान्तरकृतोऽधर्मः प्रक्षीणस्तत इहैव जन्मनि फलम्। अथाक्षीणस्ततस्तेन बद्धसाधकं फलमुत्कृष्यते। फलं भवतीत्येतावति विधिशब्दोऽस्ति न त्वनन्तरत्वे तस्मादनियमः। स्वर्गस्तु जन्मान्तर एव। स हि निरतिशया प्रीतिः कर्मानुरूपा चेति न शक्येह जन्मन्यनुभवितुम्। यतोऽस्मिँल्लोके क्षणे क्षणे सुखदुःखे अनुभवन्ति। न च प्रीतिमात्रं ज्योतिष्टोमफलम्। प्राणिमात्रस्य च सा विद्यते न च प्राणिमात्रं ज्योतिष्टोमं करोति। तस्मात्तदभाविक्यसौ। देहान्तरं तु निरतिशयप्रीत्यनुभवनायान्यथानुपपत्त्या कल्प्यते। तच्चासुतस्य न भवतीत्यतो जन्मान्तरे स्वर्गः। तुप्टीका on IV. 3.28. It should be noticed that a distintion is drawn here between prīti (a moment of happiness) and niratiśaya-prīti. The तुप्टीका on VI. 1. 1 says that the siddhānta view is that svarga means 'prīti' (happiness), while the pūrvapakṣa holds that svarga signifies the means for things that cause happiness, but both do not hold that svarga is some place 'एकस्य प्रीतिः स्वर्गशब्दवाच्या, अपरस्य प्रीतिमद् द्रव्यम्। विशिष्टो देश उभयोरप्यवाच्यः' तुप्टीका on पू. मी. सू. VI. 1. 1 p. 1348.

Prakaraṇapañcikā deal with it. They both say that liberation consists in not having to assume a body again.[1972] The Ślokavārtika states 'one desiring Mokṣa should not do any act that is forbidden or is Kāmya (prescribed for those who desire an object like riches, son &c); he should perform obligatory rites (such as agnihotra) and naimittika (like bath, japa and gifts on eclipse &c.) in order to avoid the sin that would accrue owing to non-performance of those two; if he does not desire the rewards of doing nitya and naimittika acts they will not come to him, as such a reward comes to him who seeks it. The results of acts in a former life would be eliminated by undergoing them in the life in which he seeks liberation. This differs from Śaṅkarācārya's position who holds on V. S. IV. 3. 14 that, as declared in the Śvet. Up. III. 8, there is no other way to Mokṣa except knowledge and realization of the Ātman. In his bhāṣya on the same sūtra he seems to attack[1973] Kumārila's position. According to Kumārila Upaniṣad passages about the knowledge of the Ātman are only arthavādas as they convey to the performer the knowledge that he has a soul and that the soul has certain characteristics, while Śaṅkara maintains (on V. S. I. 1. 1) that the phala, the subject of investigation and the Vedic exhortation (codanā) are different in Pūrvamīmāṁsā and in Brahamamlmāṁsā. There exist smṛtis that ridiculed the idea that the mere 1972. तत्र ज्ञानात्मतत्त्वानां भोगात् पूर्वक्रियाक्षये । उत्तरप्रचयासत्त्वाद्देहो नोत्पद्यते पुनः ॥ ... मोक्षार्थी न प्रवर्तेत तत्र काम्यनिषिद्धयोः । नित्यनैमित्तिके कुर्यात्प्रत्यवायजिहासया । प्राप्यमाणं फलं ज्ञातं न चानिच्छोर्भविष्यति । आत्मज्ञे चैतदस्तीति तज्ज्ञानमुपयुज्यते । श्लोकवा. (सम्बन्धाक्षेप० vv. 108, 110-111). On v. 111 त्या. र. quotes गीता VI. 1 अनाश्रितः कर्मफलं कार्यं कर्म करोति यः ।; the दुपटीका on VI. 3. 2 propounds the same views. 'उपात्तदुरितक्षयार्थानि नित्यानीति भट्टादिभिरभ्युपगमात्' चंद्रिका on नैष्कर्म्यसिद्धि I. 83; प्रकरणपञ्चिका p. 156 says, 'न अविद्यास्तमयो मोक्षः । आत्यन्तिकस्तु देहोच्छेदो निःशेषधर्माधर्मपरिक्षयनिबन्धनो मोक्ष इति सिद्धम् ।'.

---

1973. Vide the passage (in शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. IV. 3.14) यत्तु कैश्चिज्जल्प्यते नित्यानि नैमित्तिकानि कर्माण्यनुष्ठीयन्ते प्रत्यवायानुत्पत्तये काम्यानि प्रतिषिद्धानि च परिह्रियन्ते स्वर्गनरकानवाप्तये सांप्रतदेहोपभोग्यानि च कर्माण्युपभोगेनैव क्षप्यन्त इत्यतो वर्तमानदेहपातादूर्ध्वं देहान्तरप्रतिसन्धानकारणाभावात्स्वरूपावस्थानलक्षणं कैवल्यं विनापि ब्रह्मात्मतयैवंवृत्तस्य सेत्स्यतीति । तदसत् । प्रमाणाभावात् । The तन्त्रवार्तिक on पू. मी. सू. I. 2. 7 remarks 'एतेन क्रत्वर्थकर्तृप्रतिपादनद्वारेणोपनिषदां नैराकांक्ष्यं व्याख्यातम् ।' p. 114 and श्लोकवा. (सम्बन्धाक्षेप०) verses 103-104 'आत्मा ज्ञातव्य इत्येतन्मोक्षार्थं न च चोदितम् । कर्मप्रवृत्तिहेतुत्वमात्मज्ञानस्य लक्ष्यते । विज्ञाते चास्य पारार्थ्ये यापि नाम फलश्रुतिः । सार्थवादो भवेदेव न स्वर्गादेः फलान्तरम् ' ॥ ; सुरेश्वर's वार्तिक on तैत्तिरीयोपनिषद्भाष्य (शिक्षाध्याय I. 9-10) quotes the verses मोक्षार्थी न प्रवर्तेत &c. cited in note 1972 and remarks इति मीमांसकंमन्यैः कर्मोक्तं मोक्षसाधनम् । knowledge of the Self would lead to Mokṣa. For example,[1974] the Bṛ. Y. Y. affirms that both knowledge and actions lead to Liberation, that to say that knowledge alone leads to liberation is a sign of indolence, that out of the fear of bodily labour ignorant men do not want to engage in actions.

The doctrines of the early and principal writers on Pūrvamīmāṁsā are rather quaint and startling. Their arguments about the eternality and self-existence of the Veda are fallacious and were not accepted even by other ancient Indian systems. Both Prabhākara and Kumārila have in their scheme no place for God as the dispenser of rewards or as the ruler of man's destiny, as being pleased with men's prayers. They do not expressly deny the existence of God, but they assign to God or the deities mentioned in the Vedic texts a secondary role or rather practically no role at all. They raise yajña to the position of God and their dogmas about yajña seem to be based upon a sort of commercial or business-like system,[1975] viz. one should do so many acts, dispense gifts to priests, offer certain offerings, observe certain ethical rules and other rules of conduct (such as not eating flesh, subsisting on milk)[1976] and then the reward would follow without the intervention of God. There is hardly any appeal to religious emotions, there is no omniscient Being, no Creator and no creation of the world. The PūrvamImāṁsā no doubt lays emphasis on (the rights and) duties of man in life. The other darśanas are far more concerned with the question of escaping permanently from the world and with man's destiny after death. The P. M. S, Śabara and Kumārila, however, make substantial contributions to the exegesis of Vedic 1974. ज्ञानं प्रधानं न तु कर्महीनं कर्म प्रधानं न तु बुद्धिहीनम्। तस्माद् द्वयोरेव भवेत सिद्धिर्न ह्येकपक्षो विहगः प्रयाति॥ परिज्ञानाद्धवेन्मुक्तिरेतदालस्यलक्षणम्। कायक्लेशभयाज्ज्ञैव कर्म नेच्छन्त्यपण्डिताः॥ बृहद्योगिया. IX. 29,.34 q. by कृत्यकल्प० (on मोक्ष) p. 146.

---

1975. For a striking example of the spirit of bargaining with God, vide the mantra देहि मे ददामि ते नि मे धेहि नि ते दधे। निहारमिहि मे हरा निहारं नि हरामि ते॥ तै. सं. I. 8. 4. 1-2, वा. सं. III. 50 (with slight variations); compare अथर्ववेद III. 15. 6.

1976. Vide Tai. S. II. 5. 5. 6. about one engaged in Darśapūrṇamāsa; तस्यैतद्व्रतं नाश्नतं वदेच्च मांसमश्नीयाच्च स्त्रियमुपेयाज्जास्य पल्पूलनेन वासः पल्पूलयेयुः' and तै. सं. VI. 2.5. 2-3 where पयः, यवागूः and आमिक्षा are prescribed as the proper food for a ब्राह्मण, क्षत्रिय and वैश्य sacrificer respectively. Jaimini (IV. 3. 8-9) declares that this is kratvartha (obligatory). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1139-1140 for the observances of the person who has undergone dīkṣā (consecration) for an Agniṣṭoma sacrifice.

texts. There are about three thousand quotations in Śabara's bhāṣya, out of which several hundred have not been yet identified. At least one thousand of these are taken from the Tai. S. and Br. About twelve adhikaraṇas are concerned with the Adhrigupraiṣa (a long formula) which is quoted in H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1121 note 2504. Some adhikaraṇas are devoted to the explanation of certain words in that praiṣa e. g. PMS IX. 4. 22 explains urūka as 'vapā', IX. 4. 23-24 explain 'praśasā', IX. 4. 25-27 explain five words (śyena, śalā, kaśyapa, kavaṣa, srekaparṇa). Similarly, X. 1. 32 explains the word bṛsaya as meaning 'bṛhat.' Śabara's and Kumārila's stands on the individual soul and mokṣa confer on the P. M. system some status as a philosophical one. For a systematic and exhaustive study of Śabara's contribution to Vedic and post-vedic exegesis, vide Dr. S. V. Garge's citations in Śābara-bhāṣya' pp. 140–213 (Poona, 1952).

The doctrine that the Veda is eternal and of absolute and unquestioned authority has led to certain undesirable tendencies. Propounders of new doctrines make great efforts to show that there is Vedic authority for what they hold. For example, the sūtras in V. S. I. 1. 5–18 are concerned to show that the Upaniṣads do not postulate Pradhāna as the cause of the world, as the Sāṅkhyas imagine. Śaṅkarācārya expressly states that the Sāṅkhyas explain Vedānta passages as favourable to their theories and therefore a refutation of their arguments was[1977] provided in V. S. I. 1. 5–18. It has been shown above how followers of Śākta worship try to interpret a verse like Ṛgveda V. 47. 4 (catvāra Im bibhrati &c) as referring to the Śākta doctrines and how treatises dignified with the title of Upaniṣads were produced by Śākta writers such as the Bhāvanopaniṣad. Śabara in his bhāṣya on PMS. I. 1. 5 states that the Vijñānavādi Bauddhas put forward Bṛ. Up. IV. 5. 13 (Vijñānaghana evaitebhyo bhūtebhyaḥ samutthāya tānyevānuvinaśyati na pretya sañjñāsti) as supporting their position. One of the most glaring examples of this tendency is the explanation of Ṛg. I. 141. 1–3 by Ānandatīrtha, also called Madhvācārya, who in 'Mahābhārata-tātparya-nirṇaya' claims to be the third incarnation of Vāyu, the other two being Hanūmat and Bhīmasena, one of the Pāṇḍavas, and who endeavours to interpret Ṛg. I. 141: 1-3 as referring to these three avatāras.[1978] The words 'Madhvaḥ' and 'Mātariśvā' (meaning 'wind-god') occur in Ṛg. I. 141. 3. This was deemed sufficient to claim that Madhva, the propounder of the Dvaita system, was mentioned in the Ṛgveda. I do not know how Madhvācārya would have met the charge of Veda not being eternal if it referred to Bhīmasena (who even according to the traditional account in the Mahābhārata lived at the end of Dvāpara age i. e. about 5000 years ago) and to Madhva himself who lived barely seven centuries ago. The Veda would be later than these dates. The argument that this refers to a previous Kalpa would not be available to rebut the charge, as the Kalpa, Manvantara and Mahāyuga when Bhīma and Madhvācārya flourished and in the present day are the same. There was no pralaya (dissolution of the world) at the end of Dvāpara and Kaliyuga immediately set in. The Bhārata war was fought between Dvāpara and Kali (Ādiparva 2. 13) and Kaliyuga was about to start at the time of that war (vide Vanaparva 'etat kaliyugam nāmācirād-yad pravartate' and Śalya 60. 25 '(prāptam Kaliyugam viddhi)'. It is on account of this pretention that he was very roughly handled by eminent writers like Appayya-dīkṣita who charges Madhva with citing fabricated Vedic and other texts in support of his doctrines. Vide I. A. vol. 62 at p. 189 where the writer, Shri Venkatasubbiah, sets out over thirty works mentioned by Madhva which he states occur nowhere else. M. M. Chinnaswami, who has edited (Benares, 1941) Appayya's work in 60 verses with the commentary of Appayya called Madhvamatavidhvaṁsana and notes of his own, sets out on p. 4 thirty-six unknown works and the sūtras where they are cited by Appayya.

---

1977. सांख्यादयस्तु परिनिष्ठितं वस्तु प्रमाणान्तरमप्यमेवेति मन्यमानाः प्रधानादीनि कारणान्तराण्यनुमिमानास्तत्परतयैव वेदान्तवाक्यानि योजयन्ति। शङ्कर on वे. सू. I. 1. 5; सांख्यादयः स्वपक्षस्थापनाय वेदान्तवाक्यान्यप्युदाहृत्य स्वपक्षानुगुण्येनैव योजयन्तो व्याचक्षते। शङ्कर on वे. सू. II. 2. I.

1978. तद्वस्तृतीया पवनस्य सेयं सद्भारतार्थमतिपादनाय। ग्रन्थं चकारेमहदूर्णविद्या यस्मिन् रमन्ते हरिपादभक्ताः॥ तृतीयमस्य वृषभस्य दोहसे दशप्रमतिं जनयन्त योषणः। निर्यदीं बुध्नान्महिषस्य वर्पस ईशानासः शवसा क्रन्त सूरयः। यदीमनु प्रदिवो मध्व आधवे गुहा सन्तं मातरिश्वा मथायति॥; यस्य त्रीण्युदितानि वेदवचने रूपाणि दिव्यान्यलं यद् तद्दर्शतमित्थमेव निहितं वेदस्य भर्गो महत्। वायो रामवचोनयं प्रथमकं पृक्षो द्वितीयं वपुर्मध्वो यत्तु तृतीयमेतदधुना ग्रन्थः कृतः केशवे॥ महाभारततात्पर्यनिर्णय chap. 32 verses 176-181 (Nirn. ed. of 1911; तृतीय ...योषणः form latter half of Ṛg. I. 141. 2 and निर्यदीं....मथायति is Ṛg. I. 141. 3. Ṛg. I. 141. 1 begins with चकित्था. In the भाष्य on ब्रह्मसूत्र the verse यस्य etc. quoted here reads the last line as 'मध्वो यत्तु तृतीयकं कृतमिदं भाष्यं हरौ तेन हि'. The celebrated Appayyadīkṣita delivered a heavy onslaught on Madhvācārya in his मध्वतन्त्रमुखमर्दन (Ānan.) for this claim of avatāraship.

It is remarkable that great ācāryas like Śaṅkara and Rāmānuja never claimed in their own works that they were the avatāras of some deity. It was left to their disciples to say so, if at all.

Having established that Veda is eternal and self existent the Mimāmsakas give free rein to their ingenuity, powers of reasoning and logic. They have a logic of their own which governed not only the interpretation of Vedic passages but also of the Smrtis and the medieval works on Dharmaśāstra (including law and procedure). As Colebrooke, one of the most accurate and level-headed of Western scholars of Sanskrit, said more than 130 years ago 'the disquisitions on the mīmāmsā bear therefore a certain resemblance to juridical questions; and in fact, the Hindu law being blended with the religion of the people, the same modes of reasoning are applicable and are applied to the one as to the other. The logic of the Mimansa is the logic of the law; the rule of interpretation of civil and religious ordinances. Each case is examined and determined upon and from the cases decided the principles may be collected. A well-ordered arrangement of them would constitute the philosophy of law and this is in truth what has been attempted in the Mimansa' (Miscellaneous Essays, Vol. I. pp. 316–317, Madras ed. of 1837).

The first division of Vedic material is into Mantra and Brāhmaṇa. It has been already stated above (p. 1096 note 1776) that those are mantras that are recognized as such by the learned. P. M. S. (II. 1. 31–32) provides[1979] that mantra is that which simply asserts (and is not hortatory) or (to say the same thing in another way) 'those are mantras that are so called on account of their asserting something'. On P. M. S. I. 4. 1 Śabara describes mantra as one that at the time when the procedure of a sacrifice is being followed, recalls or reminds or makes clear to the performer the matter that is prescribed e. g. 'I cut (the blades of) kuśa grass that is an abode for the deity'. This is only a general description of mantra and not an accurate definition. Mantras are not supposed to be useful in sacrifices by their mere utterance (uccāraṇa) but are really 'abhidhāyaka' (reminders of what is to be done or is being done). Śabara remarks that lakṣaṇa is the only way for the recognition of mantras and not an enumeration of some characteristics of mantras as done by the Vṛttikāra such as these viz.[1980] some end in 'asi' (thou art) or 'tvā' as in Tai. S. I. 1. 1 'iṣe tvā', prayer or wish (as in 'āyurdhā asi' in Tai. S. I. 6. 6. 1), praise ('agnir mūrdhā divaḥ' in Tai. S. IV. 4. 4). Śabara points out that 'asi' and 'tvā' occur even in the middle of mantras, the other characteristics such as blessing and praise are found in Brāhmaṇas also. The M. B. P. remarks that there are (p. 66) one hundred kinds of mantras and that if we take into account the fourteen Vedic metres and their sub-varieties there would be 273 different varieties of ṛk mantras alone (p. 67). There are certain texts regarded as mantras (e. g. 'Vasantāya kapiñjalānālabhate' Vāj. S. 24. 20) which are not merely assertive but rather relate to the procedure of a yāga (in the case of Vāj. S. 24. 20, of Aśvamedha).

---

1979 अपि वा प्रयोगसामर्थ्यान्मन्त्रोऽभिधानवाची स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 31; शाबरभाष्य 'प्रयोगे क्रियमाणेऽस्य सामर्थ्यं विद्यते गोदानं गोयागं च प्रत्याययितुं न विधातुम्"; तच्चोदकेषु मन्त्राख्या। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 32; शाबरभाष्य 'अभिधानस्य चोदकेष्वेवंजातीयकेष्वभियुक्ता उपदिशन्ति मन्त्रानधीमहे, मन्त्रानध्यापयामः, मन्त्रा वर्तन्त इति'।; the तन्त्रवार्तिक dissolves 'तच्चोदकेषु' as तत् अभिधानं चोदकं प्रयोजकं येषामिति बहुव्रीहिः। काश्चिन्मन्त्रो यो विहितमर्थं प्रयोगकाले प्रकाशयति। यथा बर्हिर्देवसदनं दामि इत्येवमादि। शबर on पू. मी. सू. I. 4. 1. बर्हिर्देव० occurs in मै. सं. I. 1, 2.

Mantras are classified under three heads viz. Ṛk, Sāman and Yajus. These are defined in P. M. S. II. 1, 35–37; the name ṛk is applied to those[1981] mantras that are divided into feet, metrical pādas (often) based on the meaning. Sāman is the name applied to Vedic mantras that are sung. It has been established in P. M. S. VII. 2. 1–21 and IX. 2. 1–2 that the mantra[1982] texts are not called Sāman but only the music, that 1980. ऋषयोऽपि पदार्थानां नान्तं यान्ति पृथक्त्वशः। लक्षणेन तु सिद्धानामन्तं यान्ति विपश्चितः। q. by शबर on II. 1. 32; तन्त्रवार्तिक proposes to read this very श्लोक as 'ऋषयोऽपि हि लक्ष्याणां'.

---

1981. तेषामृग्यत्रार्थवशेन पादव्यवस्था। गीतिषु सामाख्या। शेषे यजुःशब्दः। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 35–37. In अग्निमीळे पुरोहितं (Ṛg. I. 1. 1) the first pāda has a complete sense, but in अग्निः पूर्वेभिर्ऋषिभिरीड्यो नूतनैरुत (Ṛg. I. 1. 2) the meaning is not complete in the first pāda. Therefore, the only definition is 'पादव्यवस्था' and अर्थवशेन is only illustrative as शबर says 'यतो नार्थवशेनेति वृत्तादिवशाच्चरितार्थं, किं तर्हि अनुवाद एव प्रदर्शनार्थः। ... तस्माच्चत्र पादकृता व्यवस्था सा ऋगिति'

1982. तस्माद्गीतयः सामानि न गीतानि मन्त्रवाक्यानि। शबर on IX. 2. 2; सामवेदे सहस्रं गीत्युपायाः। ... गीतिर्नाम क्रिया। सा आभ्यन्तरप्रयत्नजनितस्वरविशेषाणामभिव्यञ्जिका। सा सामशब्दाभिलप्या। सा मितपरिमाणा। ऋचि च गीयते। शबर on पू. मी. सू. IX. 2. 29. In the महाभाष्य on the Vārtika सर्वे देशान्तरे in the first आह्निक we read चत्वारो वेदाः साङ्गाः सरहस्या बहुधा विभिन्ना एकशतमध्वर्युशाखाः सहस्रवर्त्मा सामवेद एकविंशतिधा बाहुवृच्यं नवधाथर्वणो वेदः &c. Here the word शाखा is not used in relation to सामवेद but the word वर्त्मन् (way). As शबर expressly gīti is an action which manifests various tunes owing to the internal effort made by the singer and in order to bring about the musical effect the singer has to resort to modifications of the letters of the ṛk, to disjunction (of parts of it), to omission (of a letter), to repetition, to pauses, to [1983] stobha. In VII.2. 1–21 the PMS establishes that the words 'Rathantara-sāman', 'Bṛhat-sāman' refer only to the music and not to the ṛk or basic text set to music. Yajus means those Vedic mantras that are neither ṛk nor sāman. There is another word 'nigada' applied to certain mantras that are addressed to others as directions to do certain acts and are uttered loudly such as 'agnīdagnīn vihara', 'prokṣaṇīrāsādaya, 'idhmābarhirupasādaya'. They are Yajus (i. e. in prose), the only difference being that they are loudly uttered (in order that the persons to whom they are addressed may hear them), while ordinary Yajus is uttered inaudibly. Vide P. M. S. II. 1. 38–45 for discussion on Nigadas and Mai. S. III. 6. 5 for 'uccair-ṛcā kriyata uccaiḥ sāmopāṁśu yajuṣā'.

(Continued on next page)

Mantra and Brāhmaṇa constitute the Veda. The P. M. S. [1984] states that all those parts of the Veda that are not or cannot be called Mantra constitute Brāhmaṇa. Śabara notes that the Vṛttikāra, in order to enable students to decide what texts are Brāhmaṇa texts, pointed out certain characteristics found in Brāhmaṇa texts such as abounding in the word 'iti' or 'ityāha' (so it is said), anecdote, stating the reason for an injunction, etymology, condemnation, praise, doubt, injunction, instance where another did something of the same kind, what happened in says that in सामवेद there are a thousand गीत्युपाय, सहस्रवर्त्मा means 'सहस्रगीत्युपायवान्' and it is not correct to render सहस्रवर्त्मा as सहस्रशाखः, as many scholars do. The विष्णुपुराण III. 6 gives a confused account of the recensions of the सामवेद, verses 3 and 6 speaking of 1000 संहिताs propagated by सुकर्मा and 24 संहिताs propagated by a pupil of हिरण्यनाभ respectively.

---

(Continued from last page)

1983. Stobhas are musical interjections and flourishes added or introduced in the chants such as 'hāū, haī, ī, ū, hum'. Vide Chān. Up. (I. 13. 1–3) where hum is said to be the 13th stobha and undefinable (identified with highest Brahma) and the other 12 stobhas are specified among which are हाउ, हाइ, ई, ऊ &c. Vide Jai. IX. 2. 39 (adhikam ca vivarṇam ca Jaimineḥ stobhaśabdatvāt).

1984. शेषे ब्राह्मणशब्दः। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 33; 'मन्त्राश्च ब्राह्मणं च वेदः। तत्र मन्त्रलक्षण उक्ते परिशेषसिद्धत्वात् ब्राह्मणलक्षणमवचनीयं मन्त्रलक्षणवचनेनैव सिद्धम्। शबर.

past ages, changing the meaning after considering the context.[1985] Śabara also quotes two verses summarising under ten heads the characteristics of Brāhmaṇa texts, points out that all this is only illustrative and that the characteristics mentioned by the Vṛttikāra sometimes occur in mantras also, such as 'iti' in Ṛg. X. 119. 1, 'ityāha' in Ṛg. VII. 41. 2, 'ākhyāyikā' as in Ṛg. I. 116. 3, reason (hetu) in Ṛg. I. 2. 4. The Ṛgveda alone contains over ten thousand mantras. Hardly one-third of them are employed in all the Vedic rites. The rest are employed in japa. Besides, the other Vedas also have thousands of mantras. Therefore, no formal definition of mantra is attempted and all that is stated is that mantras are those which have been recognised as such by the [1986] learned.

Brāhmaṇas are attached to each Veda, such as the Aitareya and Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇas to the Ṛgveda, the Taittirīya to the Kṛṣṇa Yajurveda, the Śatapatha to the Śukla Yajurveda, the Tāṇḍya to the Sāmaveda and Gopatha to the Yajurveda. The Brāhmaṇas contain the oldest known specimens of prose in Indo-European languages, though prose formulas (probably earlier in date than those in the Brāhmaṇas) are found in the Kṛṣṇa and Śukla Yajurveda Saṁhitās. They are the primary source of information about sacrifices, ritual and priests. They contain numerous myths and legends put forward for illustrating ritual and sacrifices. They often mention contests between gods and asuras (titans) and abound in etymologies. Their contents can be divided into two broad classes, viz. injunctive (hortatory) passages (vidhis) and explanatory (or laudatory) passages (arthavādas). The scope and purpose of arthavādas will be explained later on. But one important point to be noted is that the Mīmāṁsakas are strongly opposed to holding that any part of the Veda, even the smallest, is useless or meaningless.

It is now time to see how the Mīmāṁsakas deal with the contents of the Veda. The extant Vedic literature is of enormous extent and of greatly varied content. Once it is admitted that the Veda is self-existent and not the work of any author, human or divine, every sentence in it apparently becomes of infallible authority. The Veda being the only means of knowing Dharma, the Mīmāṁsakas had to accept that whatever the Veda says was authoritative and binding on them, as Śabara [1987] admits. But many Vedic texts are apparently in conflict with each other and often are in conflict with ordinary experience. A few striking instances may be given to show how difficulties arose. The Tai. S. V. 2. 7 and Mai. S. state 'one should not pile the fire altar on (bare) earth, nor in the sky, nor in heaven'. [1988] No one can build a fire altar in the sky, nor in heaven. The Veda apparently prohibits something which is quite impossible and therefore this prohibition seems at first sight senseless. The Tai. Br. (III. 8. 10. 5) states that by offering the Pūrṇāhuti the performer secures all desired objects. If Pūrṇāhuti yields all objects, then one need not perform any further rites of Agnihotra &c. Does the Veda mean this? The Veda contains stories and legends about individuals e. g. Tai. S. mentions Babara Prāvāhaṇi who desired to be an eloquent speaker and therefore performed a sacrifice called Pañcarātra and secured his object. The Veda would then be later in time than this Babara and this would forfeit the claim of being eternal &c. Therefore, Śabara states that a story that never happened is described for the sake of praise. This may be an escape from a tight corner but the explanation does not redound 1987. शब्दप्रमाणका वयं यच्छब्द आह तदस्माकं प्रमाणम्। शबर on पू. मी. सू. III. 2. 36. These very words occur in the महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 9 in the first आह्निक.

---

1985. हेतुर्निर्वचनं निन्दा प्रशंसा संशयो विधिः। परक्रिया पुराकल्पो व्यवधारणकल्पना। उपमानं दशैते तु विधयो ब्राह्मणस्य तु। एवत् स्यात् सर्ववेदेषु निपतं विधिलक्षणम्॥ q. by शबर on II. 1. 33. The तन्त्रवा. explains that the word विधि in विधिलक्षण here means ब्राह्मण. About व्यवधारणकल्पना it says 'यत्राप्यर्थाः प्रतिभातः पौर्वापर्यालोचनेन व्यवधार्य अन्यथा कल्प्यते सा व्यवधारणकल्पना तद्यथा प्रतिगृह्णीयादिति श्रुतं प्रतिग्राहयेदिति कल्पयिष्यते।' and परकृति and पुराकल्प as 'एकपुरुषकर्तृकमनुपाख्यपार्थं परकृतिः बहुकर्तृकं पुराकल्पः।' The ब्रह्माण्डपुराण II. 34.63-64 explains 'अन्यदाख्यस्य चोक्तिर्या बुधैः सोक्ता पुराकृतिः। यो ह्यत्यन्तपरोक्षार्थः स पुराकल्प उच्यते॥'

1986. स्वाध्याये पठ्यमानेषु येषु मन्त्रपदं स्मृतम्। ते मन्त्रा नाभिधानं हि मन्त्राणां लक्षणं स्थितम्॥ तन्त्रवार्तिक on पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 34.

---

1988. न पृथिव्यामग्निश्चेतव्यो नान्तरिक्षे न दिवि – इत्याहुः। अधृतं वै हिरण्यमधृते वा एतदग्निश्चीयते। मै. सं. III. 2. 6. Vide P. M. S. I. 2. 5 and 18 on this and व्यवहारमयूख p. 202 (which says it is निषेधानुवादमात्रम्). All that is meant is that, just as agnicayana in the air or sky is not at all known, so doing it on bare earth also is unknown and it should be done after placing a piece of gold on the ground. This is a stuti (laudation) of gold. पूर्णाहुति is explained as पूर्णया स्रुचा आहुतिः by the com. on कात्यायनश्रौ. सू. IV. 10. 5. बबरः प्रावाहणिरकामयत वाचः प्रवदिता स्यामिति स एतं पञ्चरात्रमाहरत् तेनायजत ततो वै स वाचः प्रवदिताऽभवत्। य एवं विद्वान् पञ्चरात्रेण यजते प्रवदितैव वाचो भवत्यथो एनं वाचस्पतिरित्याहुः। तै. सं. VII. 1. 10. 2-3. प्रावाहणि would mean 'son of प्रवाहण'. Vide P. M. S., I. 2. 6 and 18 for this. शबर remarks 'असद्वृत्तान्तान्याख्यानं स्तुत्यर्थेन प्रशंसाया गम्यमानत्वात्' on I. 2. 10, on which तन्त्रवा. remarks 'एवं वेदेपि विधिना तावत्कल्पनागमितमर्थवादास्त्वसत्येन नाम प्रशंसयन्तु न तद्वते सत्यासत्यत्वे किंचित् दूषयतः प्रवर्तनमात्रोपकारित्वात्। तस्माद्बुपाख्यानासत्यत्वमतन्त्रम्।' तन्त्रवा. on I. 2. 10.

to the credit of the Veda which is here admitted to have manufactured a non-existent story for pushing up one of its injunctions; besides, if people come to know from what Śabara says that the story is false, people would not be induced to go in for performing that rite. A true story might encourage persons to follow the prescription of the Veda in this case. The Tantravārtika (p. 125) on this explanation of Śabara tries to meet the objection raised here. Sometimes Veda is divided into three portions viz. Vidhi, Arthavāda and Mantra, names of yāgas like udbhid and viśvajit being placed under vidhi. The Ślokavārtika refers to this threefold division in its last verse.[1989] Though the whole Veda is the only means of right knowledge about what Dharma is i. e. what should be done and what should not be done, the different parts of the Veda are not all directly related to right knowledge about Dharma. Large portions of the Veda are related only mediately to the principal part.[1990] In one place Śabara very succintly but clearly defines the three classes of Vedic texts and illustrates them. The Veda is also divided into five parts viz. vidhi, arthavāda, mantra, nāmadheya and pratiṣedha. These five have already been mentioned above. Here some details will have to be added on each of these. Vidhi is an injunction (or exhortation) that is meaningful on account of enjoining a matter that has a (useful) purpose and it prescribes something that does not follow (or is not established by) from any other authority. Śabara himself describes in many places what vidhi means. For example, the injunction 'one desirous of (attaining) Heaven should offer Agnihotra' prescribes (the performance of) homa that does not follow from any other authority and that has a beneficial purpose, its meaning being 'by the Agnihotra offering one should effect (the attainment of) svarga'. Where, however, a rite is otherwise established, all that can be done is only to enjoin an accessory with regard to it. Thus in the sentence 'one should offer an oblation with curds' the homa being already established by the words 'one should offer Agnihotra (if one desires heaven)' all that is enjoined is the offering of curds with regard to it, the meaning being 'by curds one should effect the oblation'. Vide Ṭup-ṭīkā on P. M. S. VI, 3, 17 and M. N. P. p. 17 (B. O. R. I ed.).[1991]

---

1989. इति प्रमाणत्वमिदं प्रसिद्धं युक्त्येह धर्मं प्रति चोदनायाः। अतःपरं तु प्रविभज्य वेदं त्रेधा ततो वक्ष्यति यस्य योर्थः॥ q. in मी. वा. प. p. 7; on this न्या. र. remarks 'तेन सिद्धेपि चोदनाप्रामाण्ये ततःपरं विध्यर्थवादमन्त्रात्मना वेदं त्रेधा विभज्य तत्स्तुत्यादिप्रयोजनप्रतिपादनेन कृत्स्नस्य वेदस्य तन्मूलयोश्च स्मृत्याचारयोर्धर्मं प्रति प्रामाण्यमुपपादितमेषु पादत्रयेषु प्रतिपादयिष्यत इति समस्तोऽध्यायः प्रमाणलक्षणं, नैवेह समाप्तमिति।'. On the पूर्वपक्षसूत्र 'उक्तं समाम्नायैदमर्थं तस्मात् सर्वं तदर्थं स्यात्' (पू. मी. सू. I. 4. 1.) शबर states 'कश्चिदस्य (वेदस्य) भागो विधिर्योऽविदितमर्थं वेदयति यथा सोमेन यजेतेति। कश्चिदर्थवादो यः प्ररोचयन् विधिं स्तौति यथा वायुर्वै क्षेपिष्ठा देवता इति। कश्चिन्मन्त्रो यो विहितमर्थं प्रयोगकाले प्रकाशयति यथा बर्हिर्देवसदनं दामि-इत्येवमादिः। अर्थ अर्थः यस्य सः इदमर्थः तस्य भावः ऐदमर्थ्यम्। समाम्नाय means वेद. उक्तं refers to पू. मी. सू. I. 2. 1 (आम्नायस्य क्रियार्थत्वात् &c).

1990. The ज्ञानदीपिका on I. 4. 1 states 'तत्र चोदनैव साक्षात्प्रमाणम्। अर्थवादमन्त्रस्मृतिनामधेयानि तच्छेषत्वेन तन्मूलत्वेन च प्रमाणं भवन्तीति धर्ममितेरितिकर्तव्यतास्थाने नियतं निपतन्ति।' (p. 54). That विधि means something not known before or from another source follows from the पूर्वपक्षसूत्र I. 2. 19 विधिर्वा स्यादपूर्वत्वात् &c. On I. 4. 4 (p. 333) शबर says 'अविदितवेदनं च विधिरित्युच्यते।'; अज्ञातस्य हि ज्ञापनं विधिः। शबर on X. 3. 20; on I. 4. 8 p. 339 'यद्यज्ञातस्ततो विधिः, यदि ज्ञातस्ततोनुवादः। ... न ह्याख्यातमन्तरेण कृत्यं वा नामशब्दार्थव्यापारो विधीयते।; this last states that ordinarily a vidhi is laid down by a verbal form or by a potential passive participle (ending in य, तव्य, or अनीय).

The collection of vidhis in the Vedic texts forms the core of the Veda and refers to many specific rites. The central element in a vidhi is the verb or verbal form, which will be analysed later on. The question is: how is one to recognize a vidhi. Śabara quotes a verse which those who know the propositions about the meanings of words and sentences declare traditionally, viz. in all the Vedas the fixed (or definite) sign of a vidhi is the words 'one shall do', 'it should be done', 'it ought to be done', 'it should be so', it ought to be so'.[1992] From this it follows that a vidhi is ordinarily couched in the optative form (called vidhiliṅ in Sanskrit), and that a verb in the present tense cannot ordinarily be taken as laying down a vidhi.[1993] But sometimes a vidhi may be inferred even from a text in which the verb is in the present tense. For example, there is a vedic text occurring in the Mahāpitṛyajña which states 'he should follow holding the 1991. यत्र तु कर्म प्रकारान्तरेण प्राप्तं तत्र तदुद्देशेन गुणमात्रविधानम्। यथा 'दध्ना जुहुयात्' इत्यत्र होमस्य 'अग्निहोत्रं जुहुयात्' इत्यनेन प्राप्तत्वात् होमोद्देशेन दधिमात्रविधानम्, दध्ना होमं भावयेत् इति। मी. न्या. प्र. p. 17.

---

1992. एवं हि पदवाक्यार्थन्यायविदः श्लोकमामनन्ति। कुर्यात् क्रियेत कर्तव्यं भवेत्स्यादिति पञ्चमम्। एतत्स्यात्सर्ववेदेषु नियतं विधिलक्षणम्॥ शबर on पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 3.

1993. शबर himself says on पू. मी. सू. I. 3. 13 'ऋत्विजो वृणीते ... देवयजनमध्वर्यवस्यन्तीति। नात्र विधिर्गम्यते वर्तमानकालप्रत्ययनिर्देशात् न चात्र वाक्यशेषः स्तावकोस्ति।' and on III. 4. 15 (while discussing तै. सं. II. 5. 2. 4 तस्माज्जाय्यमानोऽनुब्रूयान्मायि यज्ञकतू इति प्राणापानावेवात्मन्धत्ते) 'नात्र विधायकं शब्दमुपलभामहे य एष प्राणापानावेवात्मन्धत्ते इति। वर्तमानापदेश एष न विधायकः स्तावकस्तु भवति मन्त्रवच्चनस्य'; similarly, on IV. 1. 32 (p. 1215) 'नात्र विधिविभक्तिः, वर्तमानापदेशो ह्ययमिति।'. मेधातिथि on मनु V. 40 employs very similar words.

fuelstick below the handle of the ladle in the pitṛyajña, since the performer of rites for the gods holds the fuel-stick above the handle.[1994] This has been construed as a vidhi (exhortation) and not as a mere arthavāda. Another example is that of Rātrisattras (Soma sacrifices occupying more than twelve days). A passage in the context of Rātrisattras states 'those who perform rātrisattra attain stability (or fame), are endowed with brahma lustre and eat or possess food'. This looks like a mere praise (arthavāda) of the performance of rātrisattras, but really it is a vidhi about the reward of rātrisattra mentioned in the above passage and states an exception to the rule that svarga is the reward of a rite in which no reward is specified by the Vedic texts. This is employed in the Mit. on Yāj. III. 226 which states that the sin committed through ignorance is removed by the performance of penances. Ordinarily, a sinful act is deemed to be destroyed by undergoing the penalty that God may inflict, but Yāj. states a special rule. Medhātithi on Manu V. 40 (stating that animals, birds and herbs dying by being offered in yajñas reach higher levels) says that this is merely an arthavāda and no vidhi can be imagined from this by the maxim of Rātrisattra.[1995] Vide Par. M. (I. 1. p. 149) which holds that an

---

1994. विष्टगताग्निहोत्रे महापितृयज्ञे वा श्रूयते। अधस्तात्समिधं धारयन्नुत्तरवेदुपरि हि देवेभ्यो धारयति। quoted by तन्त्रवा. on III. 4. 6 (Śabara has dropped this sūtra along with five preceding ones); it then proceeds 'पित्र्ये होमेऽधस्तात् स्रुग्दण्डस्य समिद्धारयितव्या।' दैवे च पुनरुपरिष्टादिति। विधित्वे चैवमादीनामुक्तः कल्पनामकारः। तस्माद्विधिरिति॥' p. 899. It may be noted that the स्मृतिच. (I. pp. 72–73) mentions this Vedic passage and the conclusion in its discussion about the validity of marriage with one's maternal uncle's daughter or one's paternal aunt's daughter, after quoting a Śatapatha text I. 8. 3. 6 'तस्मात्समानादेव पुरुषादत्ता चाधश्च जायेते इदं हि चतुर्थे पुरुषे तृतीये संगच्छामहे इति विदेवं दीव्यमाना जात्या आसते' (where the verbs are in the present tense and not in the optative mood and yet the Sm. C. holds that it is not a mere anuvāda, but it leads to the formulation of a vidhi). Vide also परा. मा. I. 2. pp. 66–67 for a similar treatment. It was held that the use of words like 'hi' indicating a reason or 'vai' (indicating what is well-known) is not generally allowed in a vidhi. Vide शबर on पू. मी. सू. IX. 1. 41 (p. 1690) 'न च विधीयमाने वैशब्दो भवति प्रसिद्धवचनो ह्येष इदः, न वै ऋणानि सरूपाणि सन्ति— इति यथा।'. न वै &c. occurs in Ṛg. X. 95. 15.

1995. रात्रीः प्रकृत्य श्रूयते। प्रतितिष्ठन्ति ह वा य एता रात्रीरुपयन्ति। ब्रह्मवर्चस्विनोऽन्नादा भवन्ति य एता उपयन्ति। The words प्रति...यन्ति occur in ताण्ड्यमहाब्राह्मण 23. 2. 4. This is considered in पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 17–19. The सुबोधिका holds that there is a विधि here. The मिता० on Yāj III. 226 says 'न चेदमर्थवादमात्रम्। अधिकारिविशेषणाकांक्षायां रात्रिसत्रन्यायेनार्थवादैकफलत्वेन कल्पनाया न्याय्यत्वात्। अतो युक्तं प्रायश्चित्तैरपैत्येन इति।'. This अधिकरण contains an exception to the adhikāravidhi about one desirous of stability has been assumed from the passage about rātrisattra. Raghunandana in Ekādaśītattva (p. 28) explains the sūtras (P. M. S. IV. 3. 17-19) and illustrates this nyāya.

(Continued on next page)

Following the Vedas, the Smṛtis also lay down numerous vidhis by means of verbal optative forms or participles ending in 'ya, tavya &c.'. For example, vide Manu IV. 25 'agnihotram ca juhuyāt' and XI. 53 ('caritavyam-ato &c.') as instances of the two ways. From different points of view vidhi is classified in various ways. One classification is into four, Utpattividhi (originative injunction), Viniyogavidhi (applicatory), prayoga vidhi (performance), adhikāra-vidhi (eligibility). Utpattividhi is one which shows in a general way the nature of the rite, as in 'agnihotram juhoti' (he offers the agnihotra oblation); an applicatory injunction is one which conveys the connexion of a subsidiary matter with the main rite as in 'dadhnā juhoti' (he offers oblation with curds) and this is dealt with in the 3rd chapter of the P. M. S.; a prayogavidhi is an injunction that governs the order of parts in a rite and suggests non-delay or promptness in the performance, though often times it is implied rather than expressly stated. This is considered in the chapters IV and V of the P. M. S. An Adhikāravidhi (injunction of qualification or eligibility) is one that points to the ownership of the fruit of an action as in 'svargakāmo yajeta' (he who desires to secure heaven should perform a yāga).[1996] This is the subject of the 6th chapter of P. M. S.

(Continued from last page)

general rule in पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 15 'स स्वर्गः स्यात्सर्वान्प्रत्यविशिष्टत्वात्'. About such special passages Śabara remarks 'ननु वर्तमानापदेशोऽयम्। सत्यमेवमेतत्। आनर्थक्यपरिहाराय फलचोदनया सम्बन्ध एवितव्यो भवति।' on पू. मी. सू. III. 4. 24 (p. 955) and the तन्त्रवार्तिक on the same states 'सत्यपि चार्थवादसरूपत्वे पाशार्थ्यानवधारणादेवंजातीयकेषु फलविधित्वं वक्ष्यति 'फलमात्रेयो निर्देशात्' इति।'. फलमा० is the सिद्धान्त in पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 18 (about रात्रिसत्र).

1996. The मी. न्या. प्र. gives the following definitions 'तत्सिद्धं विधिः प्रयोजनवन्तमप्राप्तार्थं विधत्ते। तत्र कर्मस्वरूपमात्रबोधको विधिरुत्पत्तिविधिः, यथा अग्निहोत्रं जुहोतीति। अङ्गप्रधानसम्बन्धबोधको विधिर्विनियोगविधिः, यथा दध्ना जुहोतीति। ... प्रयोगग्रांशुभावबोधको विधिः प्रयोगविधिः। स चाङ्गवाक्यैकतामापन्नः प्रधानविधिरेव। ... फलस्वाम्यबोधको विधिरधिकारविधिः। फलस्वाम्यं च कर्मजन्यफलभोक्तृत्वम्। स च यजेत स्वर्गकाम इत्येवंरूपः।' pp. 66, 72, 171, 193 (BORI ed. of 1937). The आश्व. गृ. (I. 2.1) prescribes 'सायं प्रातः सिद्धस्य हविष्यस्य जुहुयात्.' Here जुहुयात् is उत्पत्तिविधि, सिद्धस्य हविष्यस्य would be विनियोगविधि. The अर्थसंग्रह gives another definition of प्रयोगविधि as 'अङ्गानां क्रमबोधको विधिः प्रयोगविधिरित्यपि लक्षणम्' (p 11 text) i. e. prayogavidhi is one that conveys the order of the subsidiaries in a principal rite,

Another and an important classification is apūrva-vidhi (injunction of something quite new and not otherwise established as in 'svargakāmo yajeta'), niyamavidhi (a restrictive injunction) as in 'he pounds the rice' and parisaṅkhyāvidhi (an injunction in form where two alternatives being simultaneously possible one is precluded). The Tantravārtika defines these three in a well-known verse.[1997] For a sacrifice a plot of land is required which may be quite flat or may have ups and downs. Here there are two alternatives only and both cannot be availed of at the same time (i. e. a man cannot perform a sacrifice at the same time on even as well as on uneven ground). Therefore, 'same deśe yajeta' (one should offer a sacrifice on an even spot) is a niyama (it restricts the performance to flat land only) and excludes the use of uneven land for a sacrifice. 'Five five-nailed animals are to be eaten'. This is a parisaṅkhyā. This sentence is not a vidhi, as eating flesh is already established by men's appetites. Nor is it a niyama, since one can eat the flesh of five-nailed animals as well as of other animals at the same time. It is a parisaṅkhyā. i. e. it prohibits the eating of the flesh of animals other than of five five-nailed animals. In form the sentence is a vidhi (as it employs the word 'bhakṣyāḥ' (which is optative or potential passive participle), but in substance it is a prohibition of eating the flesh of animals other than the five five-nailed ones. The 1997. विधिरत्यन्तमप्राप्ते नियमः पाक्षिके सति। तत्र चान्यत्र च प्राप्ते परिसंख्येति कीर्त्यते॥ विधिरेव हि केनचिद्विशेषेणैवं भिद्यते। तत्र योऽत्यन्तमप्राप्तो न च प्राप्स्यति प्राग्वचनादित्यवगम्यते तत्र नियोगः शुद्ध एव विधिर्यथा व्रीहीन्प्रोक्षतीति। यत्र तु प्राग्वचनात् पाक्षिकी प्राप्तिः सम्भाव्यते तत्राप्राप्तिपक्षं पूरयन्यो विधिः प्रवर्तते स नियन्तुत्वान्नियम इत्युच्यते यथा व्रीहीनवहन्तीति। तन्त्रवा. on I. 2. 34 p. 152. On P. M. S. VI. 3. 16 the दुपटीका says 'यत्र कदाचिदपि प्राप्नोति स विधिः। यथा, अग्निहोत्रं जुहुयात्—इति। पूतीकाः प्राप्नुवन्ति तस्माद्युक्तमुक्तं नियमार्थः क्वचिद्विधिः।'. 'मेधा॰ on मनु. III. 45 (ऋतुकालाभिगामी॰) reads प्राप्तौ in both halves and परिसंख्या नक्षिप्विव'. नक्षिप्विव refers to the sentence पञ्च पञ्चनखा भक्ष्याः. If these words are taken as परिसंख्या the three faults are; 'पञ्च भक्ष्या इति यदान्वयतः पञ्चनखविषयं भक्षणं प्रतीयते तदा तत्यक्तं भवति, तद्व्यतिरिक्तनिषेधपरत्वाद्वाक्यस्य। अश्रुतश्च निषेधः, अतः परार्थकल्पना। अर्थित्वाच्च सर्वविषयभक्षणं यत्प्राप्तं तस्य बाधः' मेधा on मनु. III. 45. The sprinkling of water on rice in a rite is not established by any other means and is therefore a vidhi. Rice can be unhusked with the nails or by being pounded by the use of a mortar and pestle. Therefore 'vrīhīn avahanti' is a niyama, since it does not allow the use of nails and puts the restriction of pounding.

---

word parisaṅkhyā occurs in P. M. S X. 7. 4 and 7 and Śabara notes that it is liable to three faults.[1998]

Dharmaśāstra writers make frequent use of the doctrine of niyama and parisaṅkhyā. Medhātithi on Manu III. 45 (ṛtukālābhigāmī syāt) has a long note on niyama and parisaṅkhyā, quotes the verse of Tantravārtika and explains the passage about five five-nailed animals. The Mit. also on Yāj. on I. 79 (tasmin yugmāsu saṁviśet 'the husband should approach the wife on every even night next to the 4th night up to the 16th after her monthly illness starts) and on I. 81 holds a lengthy discussion whether there is a vidhi or niyama or parisaṅkhyā. The Mit. defines the three in prose, cites examples and tells us that some thought that there was only a parisaṅkhyā, while Bhāruci, Viśvarūpa, and others (including the Mit.) hold that there is a niyamavidhi only in I. 79 and 81. Āp. Dh. S. II. 1. 17 deals with the same subject as Yāj. I. 79 and 81 and Haradatta says it is a niyama, while others thought it was a parisaṅkhyā and that in any case it is not a pure vidhi. On Gautama V. 2 Haradatta comments that the ācārya (i. e. Gautama) holds that there is a parisaṅkhyā only (the sūtra is 'sarvatra vā pratisiddhavarjam'). Compare Yāj. I. 81 (yathākāmī bhaved-vāpi &c.), on which the Mit. emphatically says that in both Gautama and Yāj. there is a restrictive rule (niyama). Gautama prescribes that a brāhmaṇa should eat at the houses of persons of the three higher classes that are commended for the performance of their duties and should receive gifts also from such persons. Haradatta treats these two rules as[1999] parisaṅkhyāvidhis. Āp. Dh. S. II. provides the rules of conduct for husband and wife after their marriage, the first being 'taking food two times (morning and evening)'. Haradatta takes it as a parisaṅkhyā, meaning that eating a third time is prohibited (but they may or may not eat twice in the day), while others take it as a niyama meaning 'they must eat twice in the day'.

1998. On पू. मी. सू. X. 7. 5. शबर says 'न चैतदस्ति परिसंख्येति। तत्र हि त्रयो दोषाः। स्वार्थप्रहाणं परार्थकल्पना प्राप्तबाधश्चेति.' Vide शबर on III. 7. 33 for the same words. As said in the भाट्टदीपिका 'शब्दतः फलतो वा यस्य शास्त्रस्यान्यनिवृत्ति-विषयः स परिसंख्याविधिः। तत्र चान्यत्र च प्राप्तिर्न तु सापि लक्षणयटिकेति ध्येयम्।' (p. 9. B. I. ed.)

1999. क्षुदुपघातार्था भोजने प्रवृत्तिः। शक्या च यस्य कस्यचिद्गृहे सुखानेन क्षुदुपहन्तुम्। तत्र परिसञ्चष्टे एषामेव गृहे ब्राह्मणो भुञ्जीत नान्येषामिति। हरदत्त on गौतम 17. 1; पाणिग्रहणादधि गृहमेधिनोर्व्रतम्। कालयोर्भोजनम्। आप. ध. सू. II. 1. 1. 1-2; कालयोरुभयोरपि भोजनं कर्तव्यं सायं प्रातश्च। हरदत्त (this is a नियम and not परिसंख्या).

Niyamavidhis are of three classes, viz. those concerned with pratinidhis (substitutes), those about pratipatti (concluding act or final disposal of certain materials employed in a sacrifice), and those that are concerned with matters other than the preceding two. The Tāṇḍya-brāhmaṇa says[2000] 'if one is not able to obtain the soma plant, one may extract juice from pūtīkas'. Jai. III. 6. 40 and VI. 3. 13–17 deal with this matter and Jai. and Śabara prescribe that if no soma plant is available in a soma sacrifice, the sacrificer should substitute pūtīkas for Soma and no other substance, even if the latter be more similar to Soma, can be used.[2001] The word pratipatti is used in several sūtras by Jai; vide IV. 2. 11, 15, 19, 22). The casting into water of all utensils and things smeared with some (such as the dregs left after Soma is extracted, the stones, two wooden boards and the post of udumbara in the midst of the sadas) at the time of the final purificatory bath (avabhṛtha) in Jyotiṣṭoma is said to be pratipattikarma (P. M S. IV. 2. 22). This terminology is employed in Dharmaśāstra works. Manu (III. 262–263) provides that out of the three piṇḍas (balls of boiled rice) that are offered to the three male ancestors of the performer of śrāddha the wife desirous of a son should eat the middle piṇḍa (meant for the paternal grandfather) and Devala provides that the piṇḍas may be given to a brāhmaṇa or may be eaten by a goat or a cow or cast into fire or water.[2002] This is the pratipatti of the piṇḍas according to Aparārka (on Yāj. I. 256) and the Sm. C. II p. 486. Vide H. of Dh. vol. IV pp. 480–481. The word pratipatti is opposed to arthakarma. For example, in Tai. S. we read 'after the soma plant is bought, he gives the staff to the Maitrāvaruṇa priest'. Here the staff had been first given to the performer (Yajamāna) at the time of Dīkṣā and then transferred to the Maitrāvaruṇa who has several uses for it, viz. he can walk with its help in darkness, may enter water, can prevent cows and snakes from coming near him and he can 2000. यदि सोमं न विन्देयुः पूतीकानभिषुण्युर्यदि न पूतीकानर्जुनानि च। ताण्ड्य IX. 5. 3.

---

2001. नियमार्था गुणश्रुतिः। पू. मी. सू. III. 6.40; नियमार्थः क्वचिद्विधिः। पू.मी.सू. VI. 3. 16; on which Śabara comments 'सोमाभावे बहुषु सहस्रेषु मासेषु नियमः क्रियते। पूतिका अभिषोतव्या इति। तस्मात्प्रतिनिधिमुपादाय प्रयोगः कर्तव्य इति।'.

2002. तेन पत्नीप्राशिते मध्यमपिण्डे पिण्डद्वयस्यापि प्रतिपत्तिः कार्या। अपरार्क p. 550. (quotes मत्स्य 16. 52–53 which are similar to याज्ञ. I. 256).

support himself on it. So this is different from pratipatti, where the substance is finally disposed of and no further use is made of it. This is dealt with in P. M. S. IV. 2. 16–18. This (giving of the staff) is arthakarma as opposed to pratipatti-karma. This is mentioned in Tai. S. VI. I. 4. 2 (krīte some maitrāvaruṇāya daṇḍam prayacchati &c.). Another example of pratipatti is the casting of the horn of the black antelope on the cātvāla (Tai. S. VI. I. 3. 8 and PMS IV. 2. 19). PMS XI. 2. 66–68 deal with an example of arthakarma. Cremating a sacrificer when dead with his implements of sacrifice (mentioned in Tai. S. I. 6. 8. 2–3) is pratipattikarma of the implements (P. M. S. XI. 3. 34). Manu V. 167 provides that if the wife of an āhitāgni dies before him she is to be cremated with the sacred fires set up by him and with the sacrificial implements. An example of the third kind of niyama (which is not concerned with pratinidhi or pratipatti) is 'one should take his meal,[2003] facing the east'. A man can take food facing any direction but this restricts him to the east alone. Here no question of a pratinidhi or of pratipatti arisess.

Vidhis are also divided into Kratvartha (for the rite) and Puruṣārtha (for the man) They are concerned with 'Prayukti'. (motivating force) which is the subject of chapter IV of the P.M. S. P. M. S. IV. 1. 2 defines[2004] puruṣārtha and Śabara advances three interpretations of that sūtra, one of which is '(Puruṣārtha) is that matter on doing which follows the happiness of man, as its understanding is due to man's desire for obtaining it (happiness) and puruṣārtha (man's purpose) is not different (from happiness)'. From this rather obscure and clumsy definition it appears to follow that puruṣārtha is what a man ordinarily undertakes for securing the reward of happiness, while kratvartha is that which helps in the accomplishment of purūṣārtha and does not itself directly yield any reward to the performer. All principal sacrifices like Darśa-pūrṇamāsa are included under puruṣārtha, while under kratvartha are put all those auxiliary acts that have the 2003. प्राङ्मुखोऽश्नानि भुञ्जीत — occurs in आप. ध. सू. I. 11. 31. 1.

---

2004. 'यस्मिन्प्रीतिः पुरुषस्य तस्य लिप्साऽर्थलक्षणाऽविभक्तत्वात्।' पू. मी. सू. IV. 1. 2. The meaning of the sūtra as given by मयूखमालिका on शाबरदीपिका is 'यस्मिन् पदार्थे कृते पुरुषस्य प्रीतिः स्वर्गादिलक्षणोपजायते स दर्शपूर्णमासादिः पुरुषार्थः यतस्तस्य लिप्सा अनुष्ठानं अर्थलक्षणं पुरुषार्थस्य प्रीत्या अविभक्तत्वात्।'. The words of the sūtra are underlined in this explanation. लिप्सा is a desiderative noun from the root 'labh' (to get) and means लब्धुमिच्छा. The मिता. on या. II. 114, therefore, calls it लिप्सासूत्र.

purpose of accomplishing the principal rite itself e. g. the five [2005] prayājas that are auxiliary to the Darśapūrṇamāsa are Kratvartha, while Darśapūrṇamāsa itself is puruṣārtha. The importance of this distinction lies in this that if what is kratvartha is not followed the rite itself becomes defective, while if what is puruṣārtha is not followed, the result is that the man himself becomes blamable or sinful but the undertaking or rite does not become defective. One set of the three interpretations of P. M. S. IV. 1. 2 given by Śabara is that it refers to the rules about the acquisition of wealth viz. that a brāhmaṇa should earn wealth by receiving gifts, a kṣatriya by conquest and a vaiśya by agriculture and the like (vide Gaut. X. 40–42, Manu X. 76–79). These are in the nature of niyamas. If the acquisition of wealth is kratvartha and, if one acquires wealth by means other than those prescribed by the Śāstra and performs a sacrifice with such wealth, the sacrifice itself would be defective and would not yield the desired reward. But if the acquisition of wealth be puruṣārtha, then, by whatever means wealth with which a yāga is to be performed be obtained, the sacrifice would not be affected. The Mit. on [2006] Yaj. II. 114 quotes a passage from Guru Prabhākara (vide note 1947) which is quoted by the Dāyabhāga also (II. 67) but without name, while the Sm. C. II. pp. 257–58), Madanaratna (on Vyavahāra pp. 324–325) and Vyavahāraprakāśa (p. 420) quote a similar passage from the Nayaviveka. Viśvarūpa also on Yāj. II. 144 holds that rules about acquisition of wealth are 'puruṣārtha'. To acquire wealth is natural to man and acquisition of wealth does not depend upon Śāstra. Besides, every one can directly perceive that wealth when earned confers pleasure on the acquirer. Therefore, wealth is puruṣārtha and sacrifices which are performed with wealth are also puruṣārtha. The general rule is that all aṅgas (auxiliary rites) are kratvartha and all principal rites (like 2005. The Tai. S. III. 6. 1. 1 mentions five prayājas (oblations of clarified butter) introductory to the principal offerings of Darśapūrṇamāsa viz. 'Samidho yajati, tanūnapātam yajati, iḍo yajati, barhir-yajati, svāhākāram yajati.' There is a difference of view as to whether these are names of rites or of devatās. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II p. 1057 note 2361.

---

2006. The मिता० explains 'यदा द्रव्यार्जननियमानां क्रत्वर्थत्वं तदा नियमार्जितेनैव द्रव्येण क्रतुसिद्धिर्न नियमातिक्रमार्जितेन द्रव्येणेति न पुरुषस्य नियमातिक्रमदोषः पूर्वपक्षे। सिद्धान्ते त्वर्जननियमस्य पुरुषार्थत्वात्तदतिक्रमेणार्जितेनापि द्रव्येण क्रतुसिद्धिर्भवति, पुरुषस्यैव नियमातिक्रमदोष इति नियमातिक्रमार्जितस्यापि स्वत्वमङ्गीकृतम्। अन्यथा क्रतुसिद्ध्यभावात्।' Intro. to या. II. 114.

Darśapūrṇamāsa, Somayāga) are puruṣārtha; all texts prescribing the rewards of rites are puruṣārtha. Some individual examples may be given.

In the Śānkhāyana Br. (VI. 6) after saying that certain observances (vrata) must be followed by the sacrificer, it is provided that he should not see the sun rising or setting. These observances are called 'Prajāpativratāni' by Śabara and are declared by him to be puruṣārtha, the meaning being that the sacrificer should make a resolve not to see the rising or setting sun.

This distinction between Kratvartha and Puruṣārtha is often taken over into Dharmaśāstra matters. For example, Yāj. I. 53 provides that one should marry a girl who is free from diseases, has a brother and who does not belong to the same gotra or pravara as that of the bridegroom. The Mit.[2007] explains that the status of being a wife does not at all arise if the girl is a sapiṇḍa or is of the same gotra or pravara as the bridegroom (i. e. marriage itself is null and void), but a girl who has some disease when married becomes a wife, the only result being that there is a visible defect (such as a diseased wife is a constant source of anxiety and unhappiness). Kullūka on Manu III. 7 (providing that one should not marry a girl from a family in which prevail diseases like phthisis, epilepsy, white and black leprosy, refers to this doctrine of Śabara elaborated above. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 280 quotes a verse 'a wise man should not marry a girl who has no brother, nor father, for fear that she may be a putrikā (daughter appointed as a son).' Here the prohibition is like the prohibition of marrying a deformed girl i. e. it is a perceptible purpose. Therefore, the marriage would be valid i. e. the prohibition is puruṣārtha. Manu says (IX. 168) 'that is known to be an adopted son whom the mother or father might give (to another) with water in a time of distress &c.'. The Mit. on Yaj. II. 130 quotes this verse and remarks that, as the word 'distress' is specifically mentioned, a son is not to be given in adoption to another when there is no distress and that this prohibition would affect only the giver (but not the act of adoption) i. e. this prohibition would be puruṣārtha and not kratvartha.[2008] It may be noted that the Vyavahāramayūkha disagrees and holds that the prohibition is kratvartha. It may be said in a general way that those prescriptions that have an invisible, spiritual or other-worldly result or reward are kratvartha, while those that have a visible result are puruṣārtha.

---

2007. सपिण्डा-समानगोत्रा-समानप्रवराश्च भार्यात्वमेव नोत्पद्यते रोगिण्यादिषु तु भार्यात्वे उत्पन्नेऽपि दृष्टविरोध एव। मिता. on या. I. 53; this means that the provision against marrying a sapiṇḍa, sagotra or sapravara girl is शास्त्रार्थ, while that about not marrying a diseased girl is only पुरुषार्थ.

Before proceeding further it is necessary to analyse the notions underlying the word 'yajeta' used in such Vedic sentences as 'one desiring heaven should offer a sacrifice' (svargakāmo yajeta). In the word 'yajeta'[2009] there are two parts viz. the root 'yaj' (to sacrifice) and the termination (of injunctive third person singular). In the termination also there are two parts (elements) viz. general verbal nature and injunctiveness (or injunctive force). General verbal nature is found in the ten lakāras (verbal forms in ten moods and tenses), but injunctiveness is found only in the injunctive form. Both general verbal nature and injunctiveness express only bhāvanā (force that brings into being something, efficient force). Bhāvanā (lit.) means a particular operation or activity of an agent which conduces to the coming into being of the result (lit. which is to come into being). And this bhāvanā is of two kinds, śābdī (word force) and ārthī (result-producing force).

It has been already stated that vidhis are the very core of the Veda. The doctrine of bhāvanā is the very heart of vidhis and is therefore one of the most important doctrines of the mīmāṁsā.

In ordinary life when a person says to another 'this should be done by you', the prompting to do something comes from a person. But Veda has according to the Mīmāṁsā no author, human or divine. Therefore, in a Vedic vidhi the prompting arises from the injunctive or the optative form of the word; there is no person, human of divine, behind the injunction; hence the bhāvanā is said to be śābdī (i. e. based on the word itself and not on the will or direction of a person). Therefore, śābdī-bhāvanā is defined as a particular operation (or activity) of an agent (here the word of the Veda) that conduces to the activity of a man; and it is expressed by that part or element which is optative. It is called 'śābdī' because it is 'śabdaniṣṭha (centred in the word of the Veda) and not puruṣaniṣṭha (centred in a person). In a śābdībhāvanā there are three elements viz. (1) there is prompting of the agent to activity, (2) the injunction is the instrument and (3) the manner is furnished by the desirableness proclaimed by arthavāda passages. The śābdī-bhāvanā gives rise to ārthī-bhāvanā. In an ārthī-bhāvanā (that aims at or seeks the artha, the phala) also there are three elements viz. (1) svarga is the phala that is to be brought about, (2) the means or instrument is yāga, (3) there is also the procedure or method (itikartavyatā) of the yāga. All this is based on the P. M. S. sūtra II. 1. 1, on Śabara's bhāṣya and certain important verses of the Tantravārtika quoted below. This whole discussion leads on to the idea of apūrva. Yāga lasts for a short time, while svarga comes to a man after death, which may be years after the performance of the sacrifice. What is the connecting link between yāga and svarga (the cause and the result)? It is the force or potency generated by yāga that brings about svarga.

---

2008. आपद्ग्रहणादनापदि न ज्ञेयः। दातुरयं प्रतिषेधः। मिता. on या. II. 130; the व्य. म. p. 107 disagrees: अयं निषेधो दातुरेव पुरुषार्थो, न कृत्यर्थ इति विज्ञानेश्वरः। तन्न। अस्य वाक्यादृष्टार्थतया कृत्यर्थाविगमात्।'.

2009. यथाहि यजेतेत्यत्रास्त्यंशद्वयम्, यजिर्धातुः प्रत्ययश्च। तत्र प्रत्ययेऽप्यस्त्यंशद्वयम्, आख्यातत्वं लिङ्त्वं च। आख्यातत्वं च दशसु लकारेषु विद्यते। लिङ्त्वं च पुनः केवलं लिङ्येव। तत्राख्यातत्वलिङ्त्वाभ्यां भावनैवोच्यते। भावना नाम भवितुर्भवनानुकूलो भावकव्यापारविशेषः। सा च द्विविधा शाब्दी भावना, आर्थी भावना चेति। मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 4-6 (BORI ed.).

Briefly, the idea is; both the root and the affix together express the sense of the affix and as the bhāvanā is the principal element in this, it is held to be the sense of the affix. There are numerous [2010] 'bhāvaśabdas' such as yajati, juhoti, dadāti, 2010. भावार्थाः कर्मशब्दास्तेभ्यः क्रिया प्रतीयेतैव ह्यर्थो विधीयते। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 1; in the मयूखमालिका on शास्त्रदीपिका this is explained as follows: भावार्थाः भावनाप्रयोजनकाः ये कर्मशब्दाः धातवस्तेभ्योऽपूर्वं प्रतीयेत एव हि धात्वर्थः पदश्रुत्या भावनाकरणत्वेन विधीयते. कर्मशब्दाः means कर्मप्रतिपादकाः. कः पुनर्भावः के ते पुनर्भावशब्दा इति। यजति ददाति जुहोत्येवमादयः।...यजेतेत्येवमादयः साकाङ्क्षा यजेत किं केन कथमिति स्वर्गकाम इत्येतेन प्रयोजनेन निराकाङ्क्षाः। शबर (q. above in note 1962); अभिधाभावनामाहुरन्यामेव लिङादयः। अर्थात्मभावना त्वन्या सर्वाख्यातेषु गम्यते। तन्त्रवा. p. 378; शास्त्रे तु सर्वत्र प्रत्ययार्थो भावनेति व्यवहारः। तत्रायमभिप्रायः। प्रत्ययार्थं सह धातुः प्रकृतिप्रत्ययौ सदा। प्राधान्याद्भावना तेन प्रत्ययार्थोऽवधार्यते॥ तन्त्रवा. p. 380. The महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 2 on पा. III. 1, 67 has the maxim प्रकृतिप्रत्ययौ प्रत्ययार्थं सह ब्रूतः and शबर refers to it as आचार्योपदेश on III. 4. 13 p. 922. Pāṇini coins special technical names for tenses and moods and does not employ words expressive of meaning, present, past or future. They begin with ल and therefore are called लकाराः. They are: लट् (वर्तमान, present); लेट् (Vedic subjunctive), लिट् (परोक्षे लिट्, perfect), लुट् (Aorist), लङ् (अनद्यतनभूत Imperfect), लिङ् (optative, पा. III. 3. 161, 173), लोट् (blessing or prayer, पा. III. 1. 173), लृट् (distant future in dogdhi, pinaṣṭi. These are of two sorts, viz. pradhāna (principal) and guṇabhūta.[2012] Those by which a substance is not intended to be produced or embellished (or made fit) for a religious rite, are expressive of principal karma (such as prayājas), while those which are meant to produce a substance or to make a substance fit are guṇabhūta (such as pounding rice grains or chiselling a piece of wood for making a sacrificial post, wiping sruc ladle). Therefore the latter kind of actions are called guṇakarma. There are two kinds of verbal forms (1) those in which the form only conveys that the kartā (doer of the action) exists such as the forms 'asti, bhavati, vidyate'; (2) there are others where not only there is the existence of the kartā but there is also the understanding of some activity that produces a result such as 'yajati' (meaning 'yāgam karoti'), 'dadāti' (i. e. dānam karoti), 'pacati' (pākam karoti), 'gacchati' i. e. gamanam karoti). That is, in such cases the sense of karoti is also understood. Jaimini (in P. M. S. II. 1. 4) divides words into two classes viz. Nāmāni (nouns) and Karmaśabdāḥ (verbs). Under the first Śabara would include pronouns and adjectives. The 2nd is called 'ākhyāta'. Śabara (on II. 1. 3.) paraphrases (nāmāni as 'dravya-guṇaśabdāḥ' and remarks that in the sūtra (II. 1. 3) the word 'nāmāni' is employed in the sense of dravyaguṇaśabdāḥ'[2013]. Śabara remarks that dhātvartha (the ता), लृट् (future in स्य), लृङ् (conditional). The words भावार्थाः कर्मशब्दाः echo the निरुक्त I. 1 भावप्रधानमाख्यातम्.

---

(Continued on next page)

---

(Continued from last page)

2011 ननु केयं शाब्दी भावना। उच्यते पुरुषप्रवृत्त्यनुकूलो व्यापारविशेषः। स एव विध्यर्थः (i. e. विधिशब्दार्थः)। लिङादिश्रवणेऽयं मां प्रवर्तयतीति नियमेन प्रतीतेः। मी. न्या. प्र. p. 267 (BORI ed.) and अतश्च शब्दनिष्ठ एव प्रेरणापरपर्यायो व्यापारः शाब्दी भावना। मी. न्या. प्र. p. 269; स्वर्गेच्छाजनितो यागविषयो यः प्रयत्नः स भावना (आर्थी) स एव चाख्यातांशेनोच्यते। यजेतेत्याख्यातश्रवणे यागेन यजेतेति प्रतीतेर्जायमानत्वात्। मी. न्या. प्र p. 274. Vide तन्त्रवार्तिक pp. 376–377.

2012. तानि द्वैधं गुणप्रधानभूतानि। यैर्द्रव्यं न चिकीर्ष्यते तानि प्रधानभूतानि द्रव्यस्य गुणभूतत्वात्। यैस्तु द्रव्यं चिकीर्ष्यते गुणस्तत्र प्रतीयेत तस्य द्रव्यप्रधानत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 6–8 and शबर thereon; विहिते कर्मणि तदङ्गतया द्रव्यदेवतादिविधायकं वाक्यं गुणवाक्यं दध्ना जुहुयादिति। मी. परिभाषा p. 2.

2013. येषां शब्दानामुच्चारणोत्पत्तौ स्वेऽर्थे प्रयुज्यमानानां रूपमुपलभ्यते। यत् सकृदुत्पन्नं कालान्तरं तिष्ठति न क्रियेवोत्पन्नमात्रं विनश्यतीत्यर्थः। तानि नामानि। ते द्रव्यगुणशब्दाः। ईदृशो द्रव्यगुणशब्दानामर्थः। ते द्रव्यगुणशब्दा इति वक्तव्ये तानि नामानीति सूत्रितम्। अतो नामानीत्येषां पर्यायशब्दः। शबर on पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 3. When we say पाकः it is a nāman and denotes an accomplished fact, while when one says 'pacati' it is not one accomplished fact but includes from beginning to end several acts, such as preparing fire, placing on it a pot containing water, putting rice meaning of a verbal root) can have no ākāṅkṣā (expectancy) for Dharmas but it is the pratyayārtha that has ākāṅkṣā for the procedure (itikartavyatā).

(Continued on next page)

We must now turn to the 2nd great division of Vedic texts, viz. Arthavādas. They are dealt with in P. M. S. first adhyāya, 2nd pāda. There are numerous Vedic passages such as 'he roared; because he roared he came to be called Rudra' (Tai. S. I. 5. 1. 1.), 'Prajāpati cut out his own fat' (Tai. S. II. 1. 1. 4), 'the gods, having reached the sacrificial ground, did not know the directions' (Tai. S. VI. 1. 5. 1.); 'who knows whether one lives in the other world or not' (Tai. S. VI. I. 1. 1.); 'there should be no piling of fire altar on the earth nor in the sky nor in heaven' (Tai. S. V. 2.7.1). The objector says 'you have yourself declared that enjoining religious rites is the purpose of the Veda' (P. M. S. I. 1. 2). The above and similar passages do not serve any purpose in the matter of religious acts, they are therefore useless and are non-eternal (or do not refer to any permanent matter). The reply is that these passages form one syntactical or connected whole with hortatory passages of the Veda and they serve the purpose of commending (or glorifying) the hortatory passages. Śabara cites on I. 2. 7 the passage 'one desiring prosperity should sacrifice a white animal in honour of Vāyu; Vāyu indeed is the swiftest deity; he runs near Vāyu with the share proper (to Vāyu); he (Vāyu) leads the sacrificer to prosperity'.[2011] These words form one whole passage; the first grains therein when the water is boiling, stirring it and taking it down from the fire. The निरुक्त says 'भावप्रधानमाख्यातम् सत्त्वप्रधानानि नामानि ... पूर्वापरीभूतं भावमाख्यातेनाचष्टे व्रजति पचतीति उपक्रमप्रभृत्यपवर्गपर्यन्तम्॥' (I, 1.). शबर also follows this 'एवं तस्याख्यातस्यार्थमुपदिशन्ति, उपक्रमप्रभृत्यपवर्गपर्यन्तमाहेति। उपक्रमादारभ्य यावत्परिसमाप्तिरित्येतावान् व्यापारविशेषस्तस्यार्थो न यथा पाकः, त्यागः इति। तत्र हि पाकसत्तामात्रं निर्दिश्यते नास्य परिसमाप्तयितव्यमिति।' on पू. मी. सू. VI. 2. 13; न हि धात्वर्थस्य च धर्माणां च परस्परेणाकांक्षा विद्यते, प्रत्ययार्थेन हीतिकर्तव्यताकांक्ष्यते कर्तव्यं कथमिति न यजिः कीदृश इति। तस्माद्यत्कर्तव्यं तस्यैवेतिकर्तव्यतया सम्बन्धः। अपूर्वं च तत्। तस्मादपूर्वमुक्ता इति। शबर on पू. मी. सू. IX. 1. 1 p. 1639.

---

(Continued from last page)

2014. आम्नायस्य क्रियार्थत्वादानर्थक्यमतदर्थानां तस्मादनित्यमुच्यते (पूर्वपक्ष)। विधिना त्वेकवाक्यत्वात्स्तुत्यर्थेन विधीनां स्युः। पू. मी. सू. I. 2. 1 and 7. The passage quoted on I. 2. 7 is 'वायव्यं श्वेतमालभेत भूतिकामः। वायुर्वै क्षेपिष्ठा देवता वायुमेव स्वेन भागधेयेनोपधावति। स एवैनं भूतिं गमयति।' This अर्थवाद (वायुर्वै क्षेपिष्ठा देवता) is an auxiliary (शेष) to the विधि 'वायव्य... लभेत' etc.; this occurs in तै. सं. II. 1.1.1. The भाष्य on I. 2. 10 (गुणवादस्तु) points out the passages of which the three passages cited under I. 2. 1 are अर्थवाद्स. For example, the passage 'सोऽरोदीद्यदरोदीत्- part 'vāyavyam...bhūtikāmaḥ' is clearly a vidhi, as the word 'ālabheta (in the optative form) shows. The latter portion is an arthavāda for the purpose of commendation. People are familiar with the fact that Vāyu is swift. Therefore, the latter portion (Vāyurvai &c.) merely repeats what is already well known (that is, it is an anuvāda). In sūtras 19–25 of I. 2 the P. M. S. considers certain passages that look like vidhis but are declared to be arthavādas. For example, (Tai. S. II. 1. 1. 6) 'the sacrificial post is to be of udumbara wood; the udumbara wood is indeed vigour (or food or sap); cattle are vigour; by this strong (or juicy) post, he (sacrificer) secures cattle, for 'the securing of strength'. The objector says that this is a phalavidhi (an injunctive text about a result) as the words 'ūrjoऽvaruddhyai' contain the purpose and there is no word of commendation. The reply is that there is only commendation.

(Continued on next page)

There are some passages in the Veda in which occur words like 'hi' (because) such as in 'one should offer into fire the oblation with the winnowing basket, because food is prepared by means of it' (Tai. Br. I. 6. 5). [2015] The question that arises is द्रुवस्य नित्यत्वम्' is an अर्थवाद of 'बर्हिषि रजतं न देयं।' तै. सं. I. 5. 1. 1–2. This arthavāda (सोऽरोदीत् etc.) is an auxiliary (शेष) to the प्रतिषेध 'बर्हिषि रजतं न देयम्. The word अनित्य in the sūtra is purposely used. Veda is nitya and therefore pramāṇa. Hence the passages not referring to any religious rite are different from the portion dealing with rites and anitya i. e. apramāṇa (not authoritative). Vide p. 927 note 1482 about calling पुराण as merely arthavādas.

---

(Continued from last page)

2015. हेतुर्वा स्यादर्थवत्त्वोपपत्तिभ्याम्। स्तुतिस्तु शब्दपूर्वत्वाद्चोदना च तस्य। पू. मी. सू. I. 2. 26–27; अथ ये हेतुवल्लिगदाः शूर्पेण जुहोति तेन ह्यन्नं क्रियत इत्येवमादयः। तेषु सन्देहः। किं स्तुतिस्तेषां कार्यमुत हेतुरिति।; अस्मत्पक्षे पुनः शूर्पं स्तूयते। तेन ह्यन्नं क्रियत इति वृत्तान्तान्वाख्यानं न च वृत्तान्तज्ञापनाय किं तर्हि प्रशोचनायैव। तस्माद्धेतुवल्लिगदस्यापि स्तुतिरेव कार्यमिति। शबर on I. 2. 30. शूर्प was used like a juhu ladle to make a homa of Karambhapātras (pots full of husked grains of yava slightly fried, ground and mixed with curds) in the Varuṇapraghāsa, one of the cāturmāsyas. The position of the P. M. S. is that what Veda declares is authoritative; there is no need to cite reasons for the statements of the Veda. It may cite a reason for its declaration, even though no necessity exists. As stated by the Bhāṭṭacintāmaṇi "अनेन वेदविहितेऽर्थे हेत्वपेक्षा नास्तीति पार्थसारथिप्रतिपादितानपेक्षत्वं हेतुवादस्येति सूचितम्। उक्तं च 'न हि वेदेनोच्यमानं हेतुमपेक्षते' इति॥". Vide for a detailed discussion of this हेतुवल्लिगदाधिकरण in connection with the rule of Vasiṣṭha 15. 3–4 (na tvekam putram dadyāt pratigṛhṇīyādvā, sa hi santānāya pūrveṣām) in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 676–77 n, 1277. Here the first is a vidhi, 'dadyāt' and 'pratigṛhṇīyāt' being in the optative mood, whether this and other passages containing words denoting reason should be construed as arthavādas commending what is enjoined in the preceding sentence or whether as stating a reason for the injunction. The established conclusion is that they are commendatory. If the other view were adopted (viz. that śruti gives a reason for the vidhi) then it may be argued that the ladle, pan and other utensils also may be used for making an offering (not merely the śūrpa), as they also are required in preparing food. Raghunandana in Malamāsatattva p. 760 relies upon and explains this maxim with reference to Laghu-Hārīta's words 'cakravat parivarteta sūryaḥ kālavaśād yatah'. It should not be supposed that commendation (stuti) is the purpose of all arthavādas. In 'he lays down anointed pebbles, ghee is indeed brilliance' (Tai. Br. III. 2. 5. 12) a doubt arises about the material with which pebbles are to be anointed. That doubt is removed by the remainder of the passage that it is ghee with which they are to be anointed (P. M. S. I. 4. 24)

(Continued on next page)

Arthavādas are of three kinds viz. guṇavāda, anuvāda and bhūtārthavāda; 'when an arthavāda text is in conflict with ordinary experience it is metaphorical; when something is definitely ascertained by other means of knowledge and becomes the subject of a text it is called anuvāda and when a text is not opposed to other pramāṇas or is not definitely ascertained otherwise, it is called 'bhūtārthavāda' (statement of an accomplished fact, or of a past event); in this way arthavāda is of three kinds'.[2016] An example of the first kind is 'during day-time while the latter part containing a reason (in 'sa hi &c.') is on arthavāda, lauding the importance of a son). This topic of Hetuvan-nigadādhikaraṇa figured very much in the case of Beni Prasad vs. Hardai Bibi I. L. R. 14 All 67 (F. B.). The court was misled on two points, by counsel as to the first and by Mandlik's wrong statement (in 'Hindu law' p. 499) as to the 2nd. viz. that Jaimini flourished in the 13th century A. D. and secondly (p. 73, 125) 'it is a rule of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā that all texts supported by the assigniing of a reason are to be deemed not as vidhis but simply as arthavādas (recommendatory)'. This case went up to the Privy Council as Radha Mohan vs. Hardai Bibi L.R. 26 I. A. p. 153, where the Privy Council was more cautious and did not accept in its entirety the wrong statement of Mandlik.

---

(Continued from last page)

2016. निरुक्त 1. 16 speaks of उदितानुवादः स भवति. विरोधे गुणवादः स्याद्ग्रहणवादोऽवधारिते। भूतार्थवादस्तद्ज्ञानादर्थवादस्त्रिधा मतः॥ q. by मी. वा. प्र. p. 48; अग्रहणवादोऽवधारित इत्यत्रोदाहरणं तु चुर्सिहाभ्यामैरक्तम्। अग्निर्हिमस्य भेषजम्-इति। तत्स्वाध्याया-

(Continued on next page)

only the smoke of fire is seen and not its flame' (this is Tai. Br. II. 1. 2. 10). One sees both smoke and fire during the day and night. What this text desires to emphasize is that by day the light of fire is not so well seen as at night (or not well seen from a distance by day as at night).

'Fire is the medicine (antidote) for cold' (Vāj. S. 23. 10 and Tai. S. VII. 4. 18. 2) is cited by some as an example of anuvāda. The M. B. P. finds fault with this on the ground that it is well-known as a mantra and does not form part of a vidhi by syntactical relation, and that it is cited by Nṛsiṁhāśrama as an example owing to neglect of the study of the Veda or absent-mindedness. A proper example would be 'Vāyu indeed is the swiftest deity' cited above. 'Prajāpati cut off his own fat' is cited by some as an example of bhūtārthavāda, but the M. B. P. does not approve of it and cites the verse 'yan-na duḥkhena sambhinnam' (cited above in note 1969) as an example.

The Mīmāṁsāparibhāṣā of Kṛṣṇayajvan classifies Arthavādas into four kinds, viz. nindā (censure), stuti (praise),' parakṛti (performance by another great person) and purākalpa (what happened in bygone ages). [2016] Devala states that sages have laid down expiation for the first wrong, for committing a second double of that, for committing a third time thrice as much but there is no expiation for committing it a fourth time. The Prāyaścitta-prakaraṇa of Bhavadeva says that this is not to be taken literally, but it is only nindārthavāda. The P. M. S. itself (VI. 7. 26 and 30) states that parakṛti and purākalpa are arthavādas.

---

(Continued from last page)

ध्ययनवैधुर्याद् वैचित्र्याद्वा। मी. वा. प्र. p. 48. It may be noted that मधुसूदन-सरस्वती in प्रस्थानभेद, अर्थसंग्रह (p. 26, Thibaut) and M. M. Jha cited this very text as an anuvāda (in 'Pūrva-Mīmāṁsā in its sources' p 201). A strict definition of अनुवाद is 'स नामानुवादो भवति योऽत्यन्तसमानार्थत्वेनावधार्यते।' (तन्त्रवा० p. 911 on II. 4. 13). Medhātithi on Manu II. 227 (=Matsya 211. 22) saying that a man cannot requite even in a hundred years the parents for the troubles they undergo in the birth and upbringing of the child holds that it is a भूतार्थानुवाद. मधुसूदनसरस्वती in प्रस्थानभेद and अर्थसंग्रह (p. 26) cites इन्द्रो वृत्राय वज्रमुदयच्छत् as an example of भूतार्थवाद, and अर्थसंग्रह defines it as 'प्रमाणान्तर-विरोध-तत्पतिरहितार्थबोधको वादो भूतार्थवादः'. When the Tai. S. I. 7. 4. 4. or II. 6. 5. 3 says 'yajamānaḥ prastaraḥ' or 'yajamānaḥ yūpaḥ' the literal meaning is opposed to our perception (there is pratyakṣavirodha), therefore the sentence has to be understood in a metaphorical sense' (as when a boy is called 'fire') and is therefore a गुणवाद, that is, the meaning in 'yajamānaḥ yūpaḥ' is that he stands up (or erect) like a sacrificial post and looks brilliant. Where a statement (not being a vidhi) is neither an anuvāda nor a guṇavāda it is called vidyamānavāda or bhūtārthavāda. This is lucidly explained by Śabara in P. M. S. I. 4. 23 and by Śaṅkarācārya on Vedāntasūtra I. 3. 33. The first handful of darbha grass cut is called 'prastara'. These passages have to be interpreted in such a way as to avoid conflict with perception and other pramāṇas but also as intended to convey praise (of some vidhi already expressed). Vide भामती 'न च आदित्यो वै यूप इति वाक्यमादित्यस्य यूपत्वमतिपादनपरम्, अपि तु यूपस्तुतिपरम्'. The गुण stressed is तेजस्विता (brilliance) since the post is smeared with घृत.

The Vyavahāra-mayūkha quotes a verse of Devala [2017] 'on the father's death the sons should divide the paternal wealth, for they have no ownership as long as the father who suffers from no blemish (that deprive him of ownership) is alive'. Here the first half lays down a time for partition (it is a vidhi), the latter half is only an arthavāda praising the vidhi and means that, as long as the father is alive, the sons are not independent and not that they have no ownership in ancestral property.

Smṛtis also abound in arthavādas. For example, Medhātithi on Manu V. 56 (na māṁsabhakṣaṇe doṣaḥ) says that from V. 28 up to V. 56 all verses except two or three are arthavādas. Medhātithi points out in several other places in the Manusmṛti a few vidhis and numerous arthavādas. For example, Manu II. 117 contains a vidhi about abhivādana, while verses II.

2016. स (अर्थवादः) च चतुर्विधः निन्दा-प्रशंसा-परकृति-पुराकल्पभेदात्। ... परेण महता पुरुषेणेदं कर्म कृतमिति प्रतिपादकोर्थवादः परकृतिः—यथा अग्निर्वा अकामयत—इत्यादिः। परप्रवृत्तकार्थादिप्रतिपादकः पुराकल्पः—यथा तमशपद्धिया धिया त्वा वध्यासुः—इत्यादिः। मी० परि. pp 27-28. On मनु II. 151 where an Āṅgirasa taught his pitṛs and is said to have called them 'putrakāḥ' मेधातिथि remarks 'पूर्वस्य पितृवद्वृत्तिविधेरर्थवादोयं परकृतिनामा.' The वायुपुराण (59.134-137) defines विधि, स्तुति, निन्दा, परकृति and पुराकल्प. The same four are said to be the constituents of अर्थवाद in न्यायसूत्र II 1. 65. परकृतिपुराकल्पे च मनुष्यधर्मः स्यादर्थाय ह्यनुकीर्तनम्। ... अर्थवादो वा विधिशेषत्वात्तस्माच्छित्यानुवादः स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. VI. 7. 26 and 30. The story of Śunaḥśepa whom his father sold to Hariścandra's son and was willing even to kill him as offering to Varuṇa (narrated in the Ait. Br.) is really an अर्थवाद of the परकृति type. Vide मनु X. 105 where this legend is mentioned and मेधा० thereon.

2017. यत्तु देवलः—पितर्युपरते पुत्रा विभजेयुर्धनं पितुः। अस्वाम्यं हि भवेत्तेषां निर्दोषे पितरि स्थिते—तत्र पूर्वार्धे तावद्विभागकालविधायकं विधिप्रत्ययश्रवणात्, उत्तरार्धे तु तस्यैव स्तुत्यर्थतयाऽस्वातन्त्र्यपरं न तु स्वत्वाभावपरम्। व्य. म. p. 90. The व्य. म. extends this to a sūtra of Śaṅkha which forbids partition by sons during the father's life-time even of property earned by them after they are born and states that they have no independence as regards wealth and religious ceremonies during the father's life and that the words about absence of independence are only an arthavāda eulogising the prohibition about non-division.

118–121 are arthavādas in relation to it. In Manu II. 165 a vidhi is laid down for the study of the whole Veda by persons of the three upper classes; when Manu (X. 1) again lays down that the three classes should study the Veda, this is merely an anuvāda. Medhātithi on Manu. IX. 135 remarks that many verses in Manu contain arthavādas.

The Vasiṣṭha-dharmasūtra and Viṣṇudharmottara[2018] provide that cow's urine, excreta, milk, curds, clarified butter, water in which kuśas have been dipped and a fast for a day and night will purify even a śvapāka. A Śvapāka was the lowest amongst untouchables and followed the same avocations as a cāṇḍāla and was governed by the same rules (vide Manu X. 51-56). This verse is not to be taken literally, as nothing could make a cāṇḍāla touchable. Therefore, this is a mere arthavāda meant to praise the purifying effects of pañcagavya and a fast.

It would have been noticed that every Vedic passage is not of the nature of a vidhi (of an injunctive or exhortatory character). There are numerous Vedic passages that are commendatory of a vidhi, condemn an act that is prohibited, give an illustration of some one having performed the vidhi in the past or put forward an easily understood reason for the specific act which is enjoined. These commendatory, condemnatory and illustrative passages are not to be treated as unnecessary or purposeless, but are to be taken along with the vidhi passages to complete their full import. This doctrine of arthavādas saves a huge portion of Vedic texts from being neglected or treated as unnecessary.

The Garuḍapurāṇa states 'Gāndhārī, who observed a fast on Ekādaśī mixed with daśamī, lost her hundred sons; therefore Ekādaśī mixed with daśamī should be given up'. Here the first part is only a nindānuvāda (i. e. it indirectly supports the positive rule 'tām parivarjayet'), as the maxim is that 'nindā in a text is not meant for the mere sake of condemnation but for prescribing the opposite of what is condemned.' Vide Kṛtyaratnākara p. 635 for this interpretation. The M. B. P. (pp. 50-58) gives another classification of arthavādas into 38 varieties. They are passed over here from considerations of space.

The arthavādas constitute the largest part of the Veda, particulary in the Brāhmaṇa texts. About arthavāda the 2018. गोमूत्रं गोमयं क्षीरं दधि सर्पिः कुशोदकम्। एकरात्रोपवासश्च श्वपाकमपि शोधयेत्॥ वसिष्ठ 27. 3, विष्णुधर्मोत्तर II. 42. 31-32.

Tantravārtika makes[2019] a general statement that arthavāda passages coming after vidhi passages are weak, while those that come before vidhis are stronger.

The 3rd class of Vedic texts are mantras. They have already been treated above (vide p. 1220, notes 1979 ff.). Some mantras also lay down an injunction as in Rg. X. 117. 5 'pṛṇīyād-in-nādhamānāya-tavyān' (the strong must bestow wealth on one who begs), also the mantra 'vasantāya kapiñjalānālabhate' (Vāj. S. 24. 20) cited above on p. 1221. But generally mantras are only expressive or assertive and call to mind things that are connected with the acts enjoined by vidhi-vākyas (injunctive passages). The Tantravārtika[2020] notes that it is definitely understood that religious acts that are performed with mantras that recall to the mind the things enjoined lead to prosperity (or to svarga). The reader would notice how the Pūrvamīmāṁsā system came to relegate mantras to a secondary place and made them play a passive role in the sacrificial system. The Ṛgveda contained sublime prayers, but in the mīmāṁsā system the most prominent place was given to Brāhmaṇa texts, that contained almost all the vidhis. It has been seen above pp. 950–952 how Ṛgveda mantras are full of faith (bhakti) in God and fervent appeals to God after confession of sin and repentance; vide Rg. VII. 86. 4-6 (kim-āga āsa varuṇa jyeṣṭham &c.); Rg. III. 39 is a hymn full of beatitude, verse 2 of which says 'this prayer (dhīḥ) born of yore in heaven, sung in the holy assembly with earnestness, dressed in pure (lit-white) and auspicious garb is ours, ancient and inherited from our forefathers'

The 4th part of Vedic texts bearing on Dharma is 'Nāmadheya' (proper names of sacrifices). There are such texts as 'one should sacrifice with the udbhid' (Tāṇḍya Br. 19. 7. 2-3), 'one desirous of possessing cattle should sacrifice with citrā'[2021] (Tai. S. II. 4. 6. 1). The question is whether in these passages what is laid down is some substance to be offered in some rite (as in 2019. ये हि विध्युद्देशात्परस्तादर्थवादाः श्रूयन्ते तेषामस्ति दौर्बल्यम्। ये पुरस्ताच्छ्रूयन्ते ते सुकरत्वाद् बलीयांसो भवन्ति। तन्त्रवा. on III. 3.2.

---

2020. शबर on पू. मी. सू. I. 2. 32 says अर्थपरत्वायनार्थमेव यज्ञे मन्त्रोच्चारणम्। यज्ञाङ्गप्रकाशनमेव प्रयोजनम्।; मन्त्रैरेव स्मृत्वा कृतं कर्मोद्दिश्यकारि भवतीत्यवधार्यते। तन्त्रवा. on II. 1. 31 p. 433.

2021. पशुकामो यजेत। यदुद्भिदा यजते बलमेवास्मै विच्यावयति यद्बलभिदा बलमेवास्मै भिनत्ति। ताण्ड्य. 19. 7. 2–3. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 269 n. 618 for the application of the Udbhidadhikaraṇa (P. M. S. I. 4. 1–2) by संस्कारप्रकाश and above p. 137 by the समयमयूख.

'dadhnā juhoti) or whether they are names of sacrifices. No substance is well-known as 'udbhid' (as dadhi is a well-known substance). Citrā means a female animal of variegated colour. If it is guṇavidhi (in the case of 'citrayā yajeta'), there would be the fault of Vākyabheda (one sentence broken up as laying down two vidhis) i. e. the injunction would be that a female paśu was to be sacrificed (not a male) and further injunction that its colour should be variegated. Therefore, Udbhid, Citrā, Balabhid, Abhijit, Viśvajit (Kauṣītaki Br. 25. 14) and Agnihotra (P. M. S. 1. 4. 4), Vājapeya (P. M. S. I. 4. 6-8), Vaiśvadeva (P. M. S. I. 4. 13-16) are names of rites and are not substances. Similarly, in 'Śyenenābhicaran yajeta' (one practising black magic for bringing about the death of an enemy may perform a yāga called śyena). Here 'śyena' is the name of a yāga, because the yāga swoops down upon the enemy and seizes him just as a falcon swoops down upon its victim and catches it (Ṣaḍviṁśa Br. III. 8. 1. 3). The point to be noted is that these names serve the purpose of[2022] particularising the meaning of what is enjoined. The Vedic text 'svādhyāyoऽdhyetavyaḥ' enjoins the study of the Veda consisting of all parts including nāmadheyas of sacrifices and we directly see that in such Vedic vidhis as 'Citrayā yajeta paśukāmaḥ' the name citrā is a part of the vidhi. Therefore, nāmadheya also is a puruṣārtha and is authoritative like other parts of the Veda (vide Śāstradīpikā on Jai. I. 4. 1). In the sentences mentioned above yāga is enjoined with the fruit as the object, since it is not otherwise established. Since it is not intended to lay down a general injunction to sacrifice, a specific variety of sacrifice has to be enjoined. When one wants to know the specific variety enjoined, from the word 'udbhid' it is known that it is the sacrifice called udbhid. Dharmaśāstra writers apply this maxim called 'Udbhid-nyāya' to 'Upanayana' which literally means 'taking (a boy) near an ācārya' (teacher of the Veda)'. The Saṁskāraprakāśa says so.[2023]

2022. नामधेयानां विधेयार्थपरिच्छेदकतयाऽर्थवत्त्वम्। तथाहि-उद्भिदा यजेत पशुकाम इत्यत्र उद्भिच्छब्दो यागनामधेयम्। तेन हि विधेयार्थपरिच्छेदः क्रियते। अनेन हि वाक्येनाप्राप्तत्वात्फलोद्देशेन यागो विधीयते। यागसामान्यस्य चाविधेयत्वाद्यागविशेष एव विधीयते। तत्र कोऽसौ विशेष इत्यपेक्षायां उद्भिच्छब्दाद्भिदिरूपो यो याग इति ज्ञायते। मी. न्या. प्र. p. 206 (ABORI).

2023. तत्रोपनयनशब्दः कर्मनामधेयम्। तत्र यौगिकमुद्भिदन्यायात्। योगश्च भावव्युत्पत्त्या करणव्युत्पत्त्या वेत्याह भाट्टचिः। स यथा। उप समीपे आचार्यादीनां बटोर्नयनं प्रापणमुपनयनम्। समीपे आचार्यादीनां नीयते बटुर्येन तदुपनयनमिति वा। संस्कारप्रकाश p. 334.

The fifth (and last) part of Vedic texts consists of 'pratiṣedha' (niṣedha, prohibition). Prohibitions[2024] serve the ends of man by causing men to desist from actions which would produce undesirable results. To explain, just as vidhis, which express an urge or prompting (to do something), suggest, in order to effectuate their prompting quality, that the matter to be enjoined such as a sacrifice is the means to attain a desirable result and so urge a man to do it, so also prohibitions such as 'one should not eat Kalañja (red garlic)' or 'one should not utter what is false' (Tai. S. II. 5. 5. 6) denote a turning away and in order to effectuate their own deterring quality, suggest that the thing to be prohibited viz. eating kalañja or speaking untruth will be the cause of bringing about an undesirable result and so make a man desist from it. The particle 'na' may come before a verbal form, a noun or an adjective and 'na' becomes in certain cases 'a' (as in 'abrāhmaṇa,' 'adharma') and 'an' in certain others when it is prefixed to a word beginning with a vowel (as in 'anaśva', 'anuṣṇa'). Pāṇini devotes several sūtras to 'na' and expressly refers to 'pratiṣedha' as one of the meanings conveyed by 'na' (vide Pāṇ. II. 2. 6, VI. 2. 155 &c.)[2025]; 'na' is said to convey six senses as noted in the verse quoted below.[2026]

The first meaning of 'na' is 'abhāva' (non-existence). But that meaning would not suit all cases. When one says 'bring abrāhmaṇa' the meaning conveyed is not 'non-existence' since, if that were the meaning, one could not bring non-existing brāhmaṇa and so might not bring any one at all, or might

---

2024. अनर्थहेतुकर्मणः सकाशात्पुरुषस्य निवृत्तिकरत्वेन निषेधानां पुरुषार्थानुबन्धित्वम्। तथा हि। यथा विधयः प्रवर्तनाभिदधतः स्वप्रवर्तकत्वनिर्वाहार्थं विधेयस्य यागादेः श्रेयःसाधनत्वमाक्षिपन्तः पुरुषं तत्र प्रवर्तयन्ति, एवं न कलञ्जं भक्षयेदित्यादयो निषेधा अपि निवर्तनाभिदधतः स्वनिवर्तकत्वनिर्वाहार्थं निषेध्यस्य कलञ्जभक्षणादेरनर्थहेतुत्वमाक्षिपन्तः पुरुषं ततो निवर्तयन्ति। मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 248–249. Some read प्रेरणां for प्रवर्तनाम्. The meaning of both is the same. आप. ध. सू. I. 5. 17. 26 forbids the eating of कलञ्ज, पलाण्डु and परारीक and हरदत्त explains 'कलञ्जं रक्तलशुनम्' and कल्पतरु on नियतकाल p. 280 explains it as लशुनविशेष.

2025. नञो गुणप्रतिषेधे सम्पाद्यर्हितालमर्थास्तद्धिताः। पा. VI. 2. 155.

2026. तत्सादृश्यमभावश्च तदन्यत्वं तदल्पता। अप्राशस्त्यं विरोधश्च नञर्थाः षट् प्रकीर्तिताः॥ q. on p. 430 of the com. भाट्टालंकार on मी. न्या. प्र. (Chowkhamba S.S.). अब्राह्मण means ब्राह्मणादन्य (i. e. नञ् suggests here तदन्यत्व) and अधर्म means धर्मविरोधि, as stated by श्लोकवा. (अपोहवाद verse 33) 'नामधात्वर्थयोगी च नैव नञ् प्रतिषेधकः। वदतोऽब्राह्मणाधर्मावन्यमात्रविरोधिनौ॥'. The महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 4 on पा. III. 1. 12 says 'नञिवयुक्तमन्यसदृशाधिकरणे तथा ह्यर्थगतिः' and explains 'अब्राह्मणमानयेत्युक्तो (के?) ब्राह्मणसदृश आनीयते नासौ लोष्टमानीय कृती भवति'.

bring a clod of earth which would not fulfil any purpose of the person addressing these words and therefore, on hearing this, a person not a brāhmaṇa but resembling a brāhmaṇa (such as a kṣatriya) is brought. So in this case 'abrāhmaṇa' means a person other than a brāhmaṇa; 'na' also conveys the opposite (virodha) of that to which it is prefixed. It has been seen above that the verb is the main part in a sentence and in the verbal form it is the termination that is the principal part. So, in 'one must not eat kalañja' the negative particle 'na' must be held to be connected with the optative termination in 'bhakṣayet'. In a vidhi[2027] (or on hearing a vidhi) one perceives that the sentence urges the listener to be active. When 'na' is prefixed to an optative from it conveys the opposite of urging viz. 'nivartana' (desisting from something). The phala that one understands from a vidhi is as in 'yajeta svargakāmaḥ' svarga, while in a prohibition the phala is cessation of harm (anartha-nivṛtti). The adhikārī in a vidhi is one who desires svarga; in a niṣedha the adhikārī is one who is afraid of harm and desires to avoid what is undesirable. Therefore, these considerations establish that exhortation and prohibition are entirely different in their import.

But when there is an obstacle or difficulty in construing 'na' with the verbal termination, then it is construed with the meaning of the root. These obstacles are of two sorts; one is where the whole passage is introduced by the words 'his vows are' or where an option will emerge if the meaning of prohibition is stuck to. In the case of these two obstacles in sentences where

---

2027. अतो लिङन्तार्थेन नञ् सम्बध्यते। तस्य सर्वापेक्षया प्राधान्यात्। नञश्चैष स्वभावो यत्स्वसम्बन्धिप्रतिपक्षबोधकत्वम्। ... तद्दिह लिङर्थस्तावत्प्रवर्तना। अतस्तेन सम्बध्यमानो नञ् प्रवर्तनाप्रतिपक्षं निवर्तनां गमयति। अतश्च सर्वत्र निषेधेषु निवर्तनैव वाक्यार्थः। एवं च विधिनिषेधयोर्भिन्नार्थत्वं सिद्धं भवति। यथाहुः। अन्तरं यादृशं लोके ब्रह्महत्याश्वमेधयोः। दृश्यते तादृगेवेदं विधानप्रतिषेधयोः॥ इति। तथा। ...सर्वथापि तु नञः प्राधान्यात्यत्ययेनान्वयः। पदा तु तदन्वये किञ्चिद्बाधकं तदागत्या धात्वर्थेनान्वयः। तच्च बाधकं द्विविधम्। तस्य व्रतमित्युपक्रमो विकल्पप्रसक्तिश्च। तेन च बाधकद्वयेन नञ्युक्तेषु वाक्येषु पर्युदासाश्रयणं भवति। तदभावे निषेध एव। पर्युदासः स विज्ञेयो यत्रोत्तरपदेन नञ्। प्रतिषेधः स विज्ञेयः क्रियया सह यत्र नञ्॥ इति च तयोर्लक्षणम्। तत्र-नेक्षतोद्यन्तमादित्यम्-इत्यादौ पर्युदासाश्रयणम्, तस्य व्रतमित्युपक्रमात्। तथाहि व्रतशब्देन कर्तव्योर्थ उच्यते। मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 250–253. The न्यायसुधा (or राणक) p. 201 on तन्त्रवा. quotes the verse अन्तरं ... भेदयोः as from the बृहट्टीका (of कुमारिल) and cites verses explaining the five points (फल &c.) in which विधि and निषेध differ. The word उत्तरपद is a technical मीमांसा word and means the termination in the verbal form and पूर्वपद means the pada minus the termination. विधिः प्रवर्तमानो हि श्रेयःसिद्धये प्रवर्तते। प्रतिषेधः पुनः पापाक्निवर्तयति भेदतः। तन्त्रवा. on पू. मी. सू. III. 4. 13 p. 911.

'na' occurs, we would have to resort to paryudāsa (exclusion or exception). In the case of the Prajāpativratas[2028] (which are puruṣārtha as decided in P. M. S. IV. 1. 3) the passage starts with the words 'his vows are' and then comes the sentence 'he must not see the sun rising or setting' (Kauṣītaki Br. VI. 6). Vrata means a mental act, a resolve not to do a certain thing, the meaning being 'he should make a resolve to act in such a way as not to see the rising or setting sun and stick to it'. This really is niyama (restriction). This passage does not mean that he should never look at the sun (there is no prohibition of seeing the sun) but it only excludes the sight of the rising or setting sun; therefore, this is only exclusion and he who observes this niyama (restriction) secures the reward while in the case of eating kalañja there is a total prohibition. 'Paryudāsa (exclusion) is to be understood where the negative particle is taken with another word (i. e. with the verbal root or a different word such as a noun); prohibition is to be understood where the negative particle is taken with the verbal form'.

In Dharmaśāstra works, 'na' is frequently explained as laying down a paryudāsa (proviso or exception). In the section on the duties of a snātaka in Yāj. I. 129-166 'na' occurs very often. The Mit. explains (on Yaj. I. 129) that in this section wherever 'na' occurs it is meant to denote a paryudāsa (sarvatrāpi asmin snātakaprakaraṇe nañ-śabdaḥ pratyekam paryudāsārtha eva), To take only one example, Yāj. in I. 132 provides that one should not speak (to a man or woman) what would be painful without any necessity or cause. This does not altogether prohibit speaking what is painful; what it means is that a snātaka may say to another what is painful except when there is no proper reason nor proper occasion to do so. One may have to speak what is painful to an erring son or friend or near relative. Aparārka (pp. 206-207) quotes two well-known verses on the distinction between paryudāsa and pratiṣedha (the two halves of which are quoted and underlined in note 2027) on the interpretation of a verse requiring a man having a son not to observe a fast on certain days &c. The first halves of those verses are; 'Pradhānatvam vidhauyatra pratiṣedhespradhānatā (paryudāsaḥ...nañ) ॥ aprādhānyam vidhau yatra pratiṣedhe pradhānatā । prasajyaprati...nañ'.॥

2028. युक्तं यत्प्रजापतिव्रतेषु शास्त्राणामर्थवत्त्वेन पुरुषार्थो विधीयते। तत्र नियमः कर्तव्यतयोपदिश्यते। ... तस्य व्रतमिति प्रकृत्य प्रजापतिव्रतानि समाम्नातानि। व्रतमिति च मानसं कर्मोच्यते। इदं न करिष्यामीति यः सङ्कल्पः। कतमत्तद् व्रतम्। नोद्यन्तमादित्यमीक्षेतेति। यथा तदीक्षणं न भवति तथा मानसो व्यापारः कर्तव्यः। तस्य च पालनम्। तत्र तस्मात्पुरुषार्थोऽस्तीत्यवगन्तव्यम्। ... न हि कलञ्जं भक्षयन् प्रतिषेधविधिं नातिक्रामति। इह पुनरादित्यं पश्यञ्जातिक्रामति विधिम्। न हि तस्य दर्शनं प्रतिविद्धम्। नियमस्तत्रोपदिष्टः। यस्तं नियमं करोति स फलेन सम्बध्यते। इह तु प्रतिविध्यते कलञ्जादि। शबर on पू. मी. सू. VI. 2. 20. In the कौषी. ब्रा. VI. 6 (or ज्ञा. ब्रा.) we read तस्य व्रतमुद्यन्तमेवैनं नेक्षेतास्तं यन्तं चेति। मनु IV. 37 has a similar provision 'नेक्षतोद्यन्तमादित्यं नास्तं यान्तं कदाचन'. Vide अनुशासनपर्व 104. 18, वसिष्ठ XII. 10 (among स्नातकव्रतs), विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 71. 17-18 for almost the same words.

When the particle 'na' is employed in a sentence, it is either a prohibition or a paryudāsa or an arthavāda. These three have to be clearly distinguished. In Darśapūrṇamāsa the two ājyabhāgas are an aṅga (P. M. S. IV. 4. 30) and a passage states that the two ājyabhāgas are the eyes of the Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice.[2029] In connection with this the Veda says 'these two are not performed in an animal sacrifice nor in a Soma sacrifice'. The question is; is this a prohibition or a paryudāsa or an arthavāda. A pratiṣedha occurs only when there is the possibility of what is prohibited following as a matter of course. As the ājyabhāgas are prescribed in Darśapūrṇamāsa there is no possibility of these two being required in a Somayāga and there is no real prohibition. Nor is there paryudāsa, for if it be a paryudāsa there would be no proper connection, since in paryudāsa one would have to say 'there are ājyabhāgas in darśapūrṇamāsa except in somayāgs', which would be absurd. Therefore, these words 'na tau paśau karoti na some' contain an arthavāda. A true[2030] prohibition would occur only when something is first prescribed and then prohibited. The stock example is of the Ṣoḍaśin cup; there are two Vedic sentences of equal authority 'he takes the ṣoḍaśin cup in Atirātra' and 'he does not take the Ṣoḍaśin cup in atirātra'; owing to this conflict an option is allowed. Similarly, there is a Vedic passage 'Vrīhibhir yajeta yavairvā' (one shall offer a sacrifice with grains of rice or with yavas). Therefore, in the above two cases where the two texts are irreconcilable, there is no way except that of allowing an option (vikalpa). But 'vikalpa' is liable to eight faults.[2031] Therefore, an effort has to be made to avoid option and accept as far as possible a paryudāsa or arthavāda, since by accepting an option, the authoritative statement in one case or the other has to be regarded as unauthoritative and not binding. Śabara and Tantravārtika provide that vikalpa should be resorted to only in case there is no other way. The P. M. S. lays down that vikalpa may be accepted when several things having the same object (or sense) are stated by several authoritative texts.

---

2029. चक्षुषी वा एते यज्ञस्य यदाज्यभागौ यजति चक्षुषी एव तद्यज्ञस्य प्रतिदधाति। तै. सं. II. 6. 2. 1.

2030. शिष्ट्वा तु प्रतिषेधः स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. X. 8. 6. शबर explains 'यथा नातिरात्रे गृह्णाति षोडशिनमिति। न तत्र शक्यं वक्तुं पर्युदास इति। सम्बन्ध एव हि न स्यात्। अतिरात्रवर्जितातिरात्रे गृह्णाति षोडशिनमिति। नापि कस्यचिदर्थवादत्वेन सम्भवति। ... यत्र पुनरन्या वचनव्यक्तिरस्ति वाक्यस्य तत्र न विकल्पो भवति।; एवमेषोऽदोषोऽपि यद् व्रीहियवावयोः। विकल्प आश्रितस्तत्र गतिरन्या न विद्यते। व्रीहिशास्त्रप्रवृत्तौ हि यवशास्त्रेण कुप्यते। श्रोता तत्र प्रवृत्तोपि व्रीहिशास्त्रेण कुप्यते। तन्त्रवा. on I. 3. 3 p. 175. Vide also प्राप्तिपूर्वो हि प्रतिषेधो भवति। शबर on पू. मी. सू. VII. 3. 20 and VII. 3. 23.

There is one more word that must be explained, viz. nityānuvāda.[2032] This word occurs in Āpastambadharmasūtra II. 6. 14. 13 (vide n. 1877 above). It occurs frequently in Jaimini (vide II. 4. 26, IV. I. 5, VI. 7. 30, VII. 4. 5, VIII. 1. 6, IX. 4. 36, X. 2. 38) and Śabara uses it oftener still. He explains that where the Vedic text apparently prohibits something when there is no possibility of what is prohibited as happening, there is nityānuvāda (as in 'the fire altar should not be piled on bare earth nor in the sky nor in heaven'). The Ṭupṭīkā states the same thing in a different form when it says that where a prohibition amounts to an arthavāda, that is nityānuvāda.

Vikalpas (options) are grouped under three heads viz. those indicated by logic or reasoning, (2) those due to express words and (3) those dependent on the will of the performer. An example of the first kind is the option about rice grains and barley grains (yavair vrīhibhir-vā yajeta). The 2nd may be exemplified from Manu III. 267, which says that the Manes derive satisfaction for a month when offerings are made of sesame or of rice or of barley or of māṣa pulse or of water or of fruits and roots.

2031. एकार्थास्तु विकल्पेरन् समुच्चये ह्यावृत्तिः स्यात्प्रधानस्य। पू. मी. सू. XII. 3, 10. The eight faults of allowing an option between two provisions are set out in मी. न्या प्र. p. 151 and Prof. Edgerton's translation of मी. न्या. प्र. paragraph 318 pp. 163–164, n. 212. The एकादशीतत्त्व (p. 42) discusses the व्रीहियववाक्य, quotes the verse एवमेषोऽष्टदोषोपि० and points out the eight doṣas. The three words पर्युदास, प्रतिषेध and विकल्प occur in one sūtra viz पू. मी. सू X. 8. 15 'अपि तु वाक्यशेषत्वादितरपर्युदासः स्यात्प्रतिषेधे विकल्पः स्यात्' which is quoted in the शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 3. 26). The भामती remarks (on this sūtra) that these words are only a summary of the original sūtra which is 'अपि वा वाक्यशेषः स्यादन्याय्यत्वाद्विकल्परय विधीनामेकदेशः स्यात्।'

2032. असति प्रसङ्गे प्रतिषेधो नित्यानुवादः। शबर on I. 2. 18; यथार्थवादत्वेन प्रतिषेधस्तत्र नित्यानुवादो भवति। टुप्टीका on VII, 3. 21; on IX. 4. 36 (परो नित्यानुवादः स्यात्) शबर explains: नित्यमेतमर्थं सन्तमनुवदति.

' An option depending on the will of a person occurs in the Jābālopaniṣad[2033] (4) 'after finishing the period of studenthood one should become a householder, after becoming a householder, one should become a forest hermit and after becoming a forest hermit one may become a wandering ascetic (sannyāsin or parivrāḍ); or following another method one may become a wandering ascetic after finishing studenthood or after becoming an householder or after becoming a forest hermit.' The latter part of this passage gives an option as to āśramas.' This option is referred to by Gautama in the words 'some sages allow an option as to āśramas to him (to brahmacārin).' When Yāj. I. 14 provides that the Upanayana of a brāhmaṇa boy may be performed in the eighth year from conception or from birth there is an option depending on the will of the father.

Manu IV. 7 provides that a dvija should amass as much corn as would fill a granary (i. e. as would last for a year) or a Kumbhī (for six months) or as much as would suffice for three days or may not care to amass even for to-morrow. These are four options and then Manu IV. 8 provides that a dvija who is an householder may choose one of these four, but each succeeding one is superior in point of merit and otherworldly rewards.

A vikalpa may also be vyavasthita (restricted or limited to a certain set of circumstances) or avyavasthita (not restricted). The Āp. Dh. S. provides[2034] that one should offer bali with his hand in the aupāsana fire or in the kitchen fire with the first six mantras. Haradatta remarks that 'This is a limited option' viz. in the aupāsana fire bali should be cast every day by those who have kept up that fire and in the ordinary kitchen fire by 2033. ब्रह्मचर्यं परिसमाप्य गृही भवेत्। गृही भूत्वा वनी भवेत्। वनी भूत्वा प्रव्रजेत्। यदि वेतरथा ब्रह्मचर्यादेव प्रव्रजेद्गृहाद्वा वनाद्वा। जाबालोप. 4, q. by शङ्कराचार्य in his भाष्य on ब्रह्मसूत्र III. 4. 20 with the remark 'अनपेक्ष्यैव जाबालश्रुतिमाश्रमान्तरविधायिनीमयमाचार्येण विचारः प्रवर्तितः'. The विषयवाक्य of ब्रह्मसूत्र III. 4. 18-20 is छान्दोग्य II. 23. 1 'त्रयो धर्मस्कन्धाः ... ब्रह्मसंस्थोऽमृतत्वमेति।' and the ब्रह्मसूत्र mentions the views of जैमिनि and बादरायण on this छान्दोग्य passage and the established conclusion is 'विधिर्वा धारणवत्' III. 4. 20. गौतमधर्मसूत्र says 'तस्याश्रमविकल्पमेके ब्रुवते' III. 1, तस्य referring to ब्रह्मचारिन्. The जाबालोपनिषद् does not appear to have been known to the author of the Brahmasūtra while views similar to those propounded by it were known to Gautama. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 56 refers to the Jābālopaniṣad as allowing an option 'तथा च विकल्पो जाबालश्रुतौ श्रूयते ब्रह्मचर्यं ... वनाद्वा। इति। ... एतेषां समुच्चयविकल्पबाधपक्षाणां सर्वेषां श्रुतिमूलत्वादिच्छया विकल्पः।'.

---

2034. औपासने पचने वा षड्भिराद्यैः प्रतिमन्त्रं हस्तेन जुहुयात्। आप. ध. सू. II. 2.3. 16; 'औपासनवतामौपासने विधुरादेः पचने इति व्यवस्थितो विकल्पः। हरदत्त.

him whose wife is dead. Manu III. 82 prescribes that one should offer Śrāddha everyday with food, water, milk etc. Here there is vyavasthita-vikalpa i. e. first food, then in its absence milk, fruits and roots, and in the absence of these water. When Manu IV. 95 prescribes "Having performed the Upākarma rite according to proper procedure on the Full Moon of Śrāvaṇa or of Bhādrapada a brāhmaṇa should diligently study the Vedas for four months and a half." Medhātithi says that this is a 'vyavasthita-vikalpa' viz. the Sāmavedins should perform upākarma on Bhādrapada Full Moon, while Ṛgvedins and Yajurvedins on Śrāvaṇa Full Moon. Vide the Mit. on Yāj. I. 254 about the sapiṇḍana of a mother, where the Mit. introduces order among conflicting texts. When Gaut. prescribes (III. 21) that a sannyāsin should completely shave the head or keep only a top-knot, there is an option depending on the will of the person. Gaut. II. 51-53, Āp. Dh. S. I. 2. 11, Manu III. 1 prescribe brahmacarya for Veda study for 48, 36, 24, 12, 3 years. Here there is an option depending on the capacity and wish of the student. It should be noted that the eight faults about accepting an option do not occur in a vyavasthita[2035] vikalpa nor do they apply where the option is dependent on the volition of the performer nor where option is given by express texts. Those eight faults apply only to an option indicated by reasoning.

The Mīmāṁsābālāprakāśa (pp. 153-165) provides a long list of the divisions and subdivisions of Vikalpa.

Śāstra is meant to give definite rules as stated by Patañjali[2036] and therefore all Śāstrik works try to reduce options to the minimum and assign to apparently conflicting passages separate and definite provinces of application (Viṣayavyavasthā). Sometimes, the options are so many that commentators give up the task of assigning them different scopes e. g. the Mit. on Yāj. III. 22, after quoting the conflicting passages on impurity on birth and death, for kṣatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras from Parāśara, Śātātapa, Vasiṣṭha and Atri gives up the effort to bring order because it would be of no use as people do not accept the dicta of these in practice.

---

2035. सर्वस्मिंश्च व्यवस्थितविकल्पे पूर्वोक्ता अष्टौ दोषा न सन्ति। ...एवमैच्छिकविकल्पेऽप्यष्टौ दोषा न सन्ति कस्यापि शास्त्रस्य प्रतीतप्रामाण्यत्यागाद्यभावात्। ... एवमेव वाचनिकेऽपि विकल्पेऽष्टौ दोषा न सन्ति। ... तस्माद्व्यायगम्ये विकल्प एवाष्टदोषत्वमिति सिद्धम्। मी. वा. प्र. pp. 161-162.

2036. न ह्याप्यवस्थाकारिणा शास्त्रेण भवितव्यम्। शास्त्रतो हि नाम व्यवस्था। महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 4 (तथा चानवस्था) on पा. VI. 1. 135; एवमनेकोऽन्यायश्चाशौचकल्पा दर्शिताः। तेषां लोके समाचारभावाच्छास्त्रतोऽपि व्यवस्थाप्रदर्शनमनुपयोगीति नात्र व्यवस्था प्रदर्श्यते॥ मिता. on पा. III. 22.

Two other words require some explanation. They are 'ārādupakāraka' and 'sannipatyopakāraka'. In the 3rd chapter of the PMS the author deals[2037] with śeṣa, its definition and explains how to determine what things are called śeṣa and what are śeṣin. Kumārila sets out five definitions of the word śeṣa, discards four and accepts one, viz. 'śeṣa' is that which serves the purpose of another. Śabara comments that what serves to help another is called śeṣa and the other is called śeṣin. Śabara adds a qualification viz. that is śeṣa which is of very much help to another. Bādari holds that there are three groups of śeṣa viz. dravya (materials for sacrifice such as rice-grains), guṇa (such as the reddish colour of the cow that is the price of the soma to be purchased), saṁskāras (purificatory acts such as the pounding of the grains in mortar and pestle which make the grains fit for turning them into puroḍāśa). Jaimini adds that rites (karmāṇi) like yāga, fruit or result (of yāga) are śeṣa as regards the performer and the performer is śeṣa with reference to the yāga. According to Bādari, dravya, guṇa, saṁskāra are always śeṣa, while according to the established conclusion, yāga, reward and performer (yāga, phala and puruṣa) may be according to circumstances either śeṣa or śeṣin. After a long discussion the Tantravārtika sums up the discussion that dravya, guṇa, and saṁskāra are with reference to yāga invariably śeṣa, though they may be śeṣin with reference to their own constituent elements, while as regards phala, yāga and the performer they can be both śeṣa and śeṣin with reference to each other. For example, in the Darśa-Pūrṇamāsa sacrifice there are various items, such as taking out handfuls of rice grains (for sacrifice), sprinkling water on them, pounding them; then certain acts are to be performed with reference to ājya (clarified butter) viz. purifying it with two blades of kuśa grass, melting it, also bringing a branch, starting the cows towards the meadows &c. These auxiliaries are of two kinds, viz. (i) that are already accomplished, (ii) that are of the nature of actions. The first comprehend substances, number &c.; those that are of the nature of acts are two-fold viz. sannipatyopakāraka and ārād-upakāraka. In the Paurṇamāsī rite there are such auxiliaries as Prayājas, the Āghāras, the Ājyabhāgas. These are ārādupakāraka. Sannipatyopakārakas are also called sāmavāyika, or āśrayikarmāṇi; they are such as the pounding of grains, prokṣaṇa etc. The Ārādupakāraka are [2038] rites prescribed without being meant to do something about substances and are directly the aṅgas of the principal rite. These do not give rise to any saṁskāra (embellishment or making fit) in the substance meant to be offered in sacrifice, are helpful in producing the paramāpūrva that yields the fruit of the whole rite. They produce a subordinate apūrva of their own. They are directly aṅgas of the principal rite and are distinguished from sannipatyopakārakas, which are saṁskāraka (bring about some embellishment or fitness). The Sannipatyopakārakas are more powerful than Ārādupakārakas and therefore the Tantravārtika states the proposition that where it is possible to hold an act [2039] in a rite to be sannipatyopakāraka or sāmavāyika, it is not proper to regard it as ārādupakāraka. It is somewhat remarkable that Prof. Keith in his 'Karmamīmāṁsā' (p. 88) inverts the meaning of these two words. The explanation of sannipatyopakāraka in 'Prābhākara School' (by M. M. Jha) p. 181 also is rather obscure. The Ekādaśītattva (p. 97), while discussing the substitutes (pratinidhis) to be employed on Ekādaśī for ghee, for milk and honey (being milk-powder, curds and jaggery) quotes P. M. S. VI. 3. 18 'na devatāgniśabdakriyam-anyārthasaṁyogāt', explains that in place of a prescribed kriyā like prayājas (that have an unseen or spiritual reward) there is to be no substitute, since what has an invisible result is āradupakāraka, but in place of rice grains (that are the means of preparing puroḍāśa) a substitute may be employed, since the rice grains are sannipatyopakārakas and have a seen purpose viz. preparing purodāśa. Śaṅkarācārya in his bhāṣya on

---

2037. शेषः परार्थत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. III. 1. 2; का: शेषः केन हेतुना शेषः कर्म च विनियुज्यते। इति। कुत्वादीनि च विनियोगे कारणानीति वक्ष्यते च। तेषां च सहकारित्वम्। उच्यते; शेषत्वं शेषिविच्छित्ति अविनाभावलक्षणम्। पशोरुपलक्षणं तन्त्रे सहकारित्वेन चापरे। अन्ये अन्यतरता तस्य विवक्षालक्षणपरिग्रहात्। उपकारेण शेषत्वं बहुभिस्तेन तत्त्विकम्। तन्त्रवा. on III. 1. 2 p. 654.

---

2038. अपि च द्विविधान्यङ्गानि। आरादुपकारकाणि सामवायिकानि च। आरादुपकारकेभ्यः सामवायिकानि गरीयांसि। तत्र हि साक्षाद्वाक्यम्। आरादुपकारेषु प्रकृतेन परोक्षेणैकवाक्यता स्यात्। तस्मात्संस्कारकर्मेति। शबर on X. 4. 38. आरात् means दूरात् acc. to शबर on X. 8. 16. तत्र कर्माङ्गद्रव्यायुद्देशेन विधीयमानं कर्म संनिपत्योपकारकम्, यथावघातप्रोक्षणादि। इदमेव चाग्नये कर्मोच्यते। मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 163–164; द्रव्यायनुद्दिश्य केवलं विधीयमानं कर्म आरादुपकारकम्। यथा प्रयाजादि। ibid p. 168; vide मीमांसापरिभाषा p. 13.

2039. न च सामवायिकत्वे सम्भवत्यारादुपकारककल्पना युक्ता। तन्त्रवा. on III. 4. 12 p. 902.

V. S. IV. I. 16 states that the performance of obligatory vedic rites (like Agnihotra) by a man who has to acquire knowledge of brahma is helpful for attaining it as an ārādupakāraka.[2040]

Apart from the Veda and smṛtis the Pūrvamīmāṁsā relies upon or refers to loka or lokavat (usage of the ordinary people) for elucidation. For example, I. 2. 20, I. 2. 29, II. 1. 12 (Lokavat), IV. 1.6 'tathā ca lokabhūteṣu' meaning 'lokepi'), VI, 2. 16 (loke karmāṇi vedavat-tatoऽdhipuruṣajñānam), VI. 5. 34 (na bhaktitvād-eṣā hi loke), VI. 8. 26 (yāñcā-krayaṇam-avidyamāne lokavat), VII. 4. 11 (Liṅgahetutvād-aliṅge laukikam syāt), VIII 2. 22 (payo vā tat-pradhānatvāl-lokavad-dadhnas-tadarthatvāt) gives the illustration that in order to solidify milk a little of curds is enough; VIII. 4. 6, (na laukikānām &c. where 'laukikānām' means 'lokānām'); X. 3.44 (śabdārthaścāpi lokavat), X. 3. 51, X. 6. 8, X. 7. 66 (Lokavat, Śabara saying 'Yathā matsyān na payasā samaśnīyāt), XI. 1. 23, 26, 62. Śabara himself uses the word 'Laukikanyāya' in bhāṣya on PMS III. 4. 13 (evam varṇyamāne laukikayāyānugataḥ sūtrārtho varṇito bhaviṣyati' p. 926).[2041] Jaimini dealt with the eternal, self-existent and absolutely authoritative character of the Veda as regards Dharma in the first pāda of the first chapter and also dealt with the means of knowledge, the eternal character of the relation of words and senses. In the second pāda of the first adhyāya he pronounced that arthavādas which form a very large portion of the Veda were meant to laud the Vidhis with which they were connected and were not to be treated as useless. He also provided that mantras (that formed part of the veda) had a purpose to serve viz. that of recalling to the mind the meaning of the rites performed, that some mantras like 'catvāri śṛṅgā'[2041a] (Rg. IV.

2040. तदुत्कर्मणोऽपि ज्ञानसंयुक्तस्य मोक्षकार्योपपत्तेः। मन्त्वारभ्यो मोक्षः कथमस्य कर्मकार्यत्वमुच्यते। नैष दोषः। आरादुपकारकत्वात्कर्मणः। ज्ञानस्यैव हि साक्षात् कर्म ज्ञानजन्मनो मोक्षकारणमित्युपचर्यते। वेदान्तसूत्रभाष्य IV. 1. 16.

2041. शबर on VII. 4. 12 explains the nyāya स्थालीपुलाक: यथा स्थाल्यां तुल्यपाकानां पुलाकानामेकतुषभूयस्त्वेऽपि सिद्धता ज्ञायते।; शबर on VIII.1.11 employs it 'अस्थिकरणेऽपि स्थालीपुलाकवत्सिद्धिः'; the तन्त्रवार्तिक employs it on III. 5. 19 (p. 991) 'एकैकशस्तत्रापि सिद्धं स्थालीपुलाकन्यायेन समस्तयोगेन भविष्यति'।.

2041a. The objections about 'catvāri śṛṅgā' and the quotations are raised in P. M. S. I. 2. 31, which is a very long sūtra, and are answered in I. 2. 32–45. P. M. S. I. 2. 38 deals with the verse चत्वारि शृङ्गा. This verse is explained in Nirukta XIII. 7, in तन्त्रवार्तिक महाभाष्य, by Śabara, by Kumārila

(Continued on next page)

58. 3) are laudatory of yāga, by means of a metaphor, that the sense of some words in the mantras like 'Jarbharī turpharītū (Rg. X. 106. 6) or 'Indraḥ somasya kāṇukā' (Rg. VIII. 77. 4) about which it is argued that no sense can be made out of them are really explicable with the help of Nirukta (etymology) and grammar, that some words like 'Kīkaṭa', 'Naicāśākha', and 'Pramaganda', that are claimed to refer to a country, a city, a king and therefore are claimed to make the mantra (Rg. III. 53. 14) non-eternal, can be explained in a different way. In this way, no part of the Veda is anarthaka (without sense or useless) or non eternal. The Mīmāṁsakas are very keen on avoiding ānarthakya of any Vedic words or sentences.

In the third pāda of the first chapter Jaimini deals with the authoritativeness of smṛtis, the usages of respectable and learned people (sadācāra), the Vedāṅgas &c.

It appears that before Jaimini composed his sūtra, smṛtis had come into prominence and the usages of the śiṣṭas had been recognised as one of the sources of Dharma. The Dharmasūtras of Gautama, Āpastamba, and[2042] others had declared that the Vedas, the Smṛtis and the usages of those who know the Vedas are the sources of Dharma. Therefore, the Śāntiparva (137.

(Continued from last page)

(in Tantravārtika p. 155–156), by Durga and Sāyaṇa. These differ a good deal (even Kumārila widely differs from Śabara). जर्भरी तुर्फरीतू are epithets of the Aśvins and explained in Nirukta (XIII. 5), Kāṇukā (in Nirukta V. 10), Kīkaṭa and other words in Nirukta VI. 32. Yāska says 'Kīkaṭa is a country in which non-Āryans resided, while Tantravārtika (p. 158) first explained it as meaning a country and affirmed that a country is eternal. Then Kumārila proposes that Kīkaṭa means 'close-fisted', Pramaganda 'usurious man', 'naicā-śākham' means wealth of an impotent person. Śabara on P. M. S. I. 2. 41 (pp. 156–157) विद्यमानोऽप्यर्थः प्रमादालस्यादिभिर्नोपलभ्यते। निगमनिरुक्तव्याकरणवशेन धातुवोर्थः कल्पयितव्यः। यथा सुष्येव जर्भरी तुर्फरीतू इत्येवमादीन्यश्विनोरभिधानानि द्विवचनान्तानि लक्ष्यन्ते॥. सुष्येव जर्भरी तुर्फरीतू occur in Rg. X. 106.6; the words निगम ... कल्पयितव्यः again occur in शाबरभाष्य on P. M. S. I. 3.10. In तन्त्रवार्तिक p. 259 (on I. 3. 24) we find 'कात्स्न्र्येऽपि व्याकरणस्य निरुक्ते हीनलक्षणाः प्रयोगा बहवो यद्वद् ब्राह्मणो ववणादिति.' The निरुक्त I. 15 has the words तदिदं विद्यास्थानं व्याकरणस्य कार्त्स्न्यम्. Vide तन्त्रवार्तिक pp. 268–269 for other references to निरुक्त. On P. M. S. XI. 1. 24 Śabara quotes भावप्रधानमाख्यातं (निरुक्त I. 1).

2042. वेदो धर्ममूलं तद्विदां च स्मृतिशीले। गौ. I. 2; धर्मज्ञसमयः प्रमाणं वेदाश्च। आप. ध. सू. I. 1. 1. 2–3. तस्य च व्यवहारो वेदो धर्मशास्त्राण्यङ्गान्युपवेदाः पुराणम्। गौ. XI. 19, where हरदत्त explains तस्य राज्ञः व्यवहारो लोकमर्यादास्थापनम्. Vide मनु II. 6 and या. I. 7.

23, 135. 22 in Citrao ed.) mentions Dharmaśāstras and Anuśāsanaparva (45. 17) quotes gāthās from Yama's Dharmaśāstra. Therefore, Jaimini had to consider whether smṛtis and usages were authoritative in the matter of Dharma and, if so, to what extent. Even if smṛtis were held to be unauthoritative, the authoritativeness of the Veda would not be affected; but the very first sūtra (of P. M. S.) postulated that the work would consider the question about the characteristics of Dharma and, therefore, smṛtis that were called Dharmaśāstra (Manu II. 10) were connected with the discussion about Dharma. Besides, from VI. 7. 6 it follows that[2043] Jaimini knew Dharmaśāstras as he provides that in a Viśvajit the performer cannot make a śūdra a subject of gift simply because he serves a man of higher caste on account of the ordinances of Dharmaśāstra. Even in the Upaniṣads (as in Tai. Up. I.11) the teacher after the pupil had completed Veda study impresses upon the latter that whenever he would have a doubt about the rites enjoined or about proper conduct he should follow the conduct of brāhmaṇas in his country that act after proper consideration, that are devoted to their duties and are not driven to do anything by another, are not harsh of character, that are intent on doing their duties. This amounts to following 'sadācāra' as a source of dharma. Jaimini employs the word 'smṛti' in the sense of works in several sūtras as in VI. 8. 23 (which contains the very words that the Āp. Gṛ. sūtra employs), IX. 2. 1, XII. 4. 43. Śabara mentions 'smṛti' and the word 'smarati' and 'smaranti' more than a dozen times.

The following passages may be noted. On[2044] P. M. S. I. 3. 2. Śabara says "pramāṇam smṛtiḥ"; on P. M. S. I, 3. 3 he 2044. अष्टाचत्वारिंशद्वर्षाणि वेदब्रह्मचर्यचरणं जातपुत्रः कृष्णकेशोऽग्निमादधीत इत्यनेन विरुद्धम्। क्रीतराजकोऽभोज्यान्न इति 'तस्मादग्नीषोमीये संस्थिते यजमानस्य गृहेऽशितव्यमित्यनेन विरुद्धम्। शबर on I. 3. 2; गौ. ध. सू. I. 2. 1 is अष्टाचत्वारिंशद्वर्षाणि वेदब्रह्मचर्यम्'; आप. ध. सू. I. 6. 18. 16 and 23 are सङ्कल्पमभोज्यम्। दीक्षितोऽक्रीतराजकः; Manu X. 89 forbids the sale of horses and other animals that are ekaśapha, while Tai. S. II. 3. 12. 1 stating that Varuṇa seizes him who accepts the gift of a horse practically forbids it. The Ṛgveda highly praises donors of horses e. g. in X. 107. 2 उच्चा दिवि दक्षिणावन्तो अस्थुर्ये अश्वदाः सह ते सूर्येण. On p. 226 of 'Pūrvamīmāṃsā in its sources' Sir. G. Jha translates 'giving and accepting in gift and buying and selling of lions, horses &c.' केसरिन् means 'lion' and also as an adjective 'having a mane' qualifying 'horses'; vide H. of Dh, vol, III. p. 850 n. 1647 criticizing this translation.

---

2043. शूद्रश्च धर्मशास्त्रत्वात्। यू. मी. सू. VI. 7. 6: विश्वजित्येव सन्दिह्यते। किं परिचारकः शूद्रो देयो नेति। ... एवं प्राप्ते ब्रूमः। शूद्रश्च न देय इत्यस्यादेशः। कुतः। धर्मशास्त्रत्वात् धर्मशासनोपनतत्वात्तस्य. Vide मनु X. 123 for śūdra's duty to serve higher varṇas and गौतम (XI. 57-59).

mentions three smṛti rules, two of which can be said to correspond with extant smṛtis; on PMS VI. I. 5, while dealing with the question whether lower animals (dogs &c.) have adhikāra for Vedic rites, Śabara denies their adhikāra, since they do not study the Veda nor the smṛtiśāstras (as men do); on PMS VI. 2. 21-22 (when the question is whether the smārta rules that a teacher should be followed or obeyed and obeisance be made to him and whether one should get up and honour an old man apply to even children whose upanayana is not performed) Śabara states that smṛti is equal to Veda (Vedatulyā hi smṛtiḥ, vaidikā eva padārthā smaryanta ityuktam). On VI. 8. 23 he quotes one quarter of a śloka as smṛti (smaranti-teṣu kāleṣu daivāni-iti). On VI. 7. 31 he says that smṛti speaks of gandharvas living for a thousand years. On VI. I. 20 Śabara says a woman owns no wealth, if one follows smṛti, but is owner of property if śruti be followed. On IX. 2. 2 Śabara says 'naiṣā smṛtiḥ pramāṇam, dṛṣṭamūlā hyeṣā'; on X. 1.36 Śabara says that from the usage of respectable people smṛti is inferred and from smṛti Śruti text is inferred; on X. I. 42 Śabara says 'Smṛti is stronger than usage'. On X. 3. 47 Śabara says 'there is a smṛti that one should not sell a horse'. In one place Śabara employs the words 'pramāṇāyām smṛtau' instead of 'pramāṇe smṛtau' as one would expect and the Tantravārtika is at great pains to show that this lapse on the part of Śabara may be somehow justified (pp. 183-184) on I. 3. 3. The Baudhāyana Dh. S. (1. 1. 19-26) sets out five practices peculiar to the countries of the South (Southern India) and five others peculiar to the North and says that if one belonging to the South follows any of the usages peculiar to the North and vice versa he would be guilty of sin. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. p. 858 and note 1663 for the passage from Baud. Dh. S. The objector says[2045] that smṛtis should be

---

2045. धर्मस्य शब्दमूलत्वाद्शब्दमनपेक्षं स्यात्। अपि वा कर्तृसामान्यात् प्रमाणमनुमानं स्यात्। I. 3. 1-2. The words कर्तृसामान्यात् are explained by the भाष्यकार as कर्तृसामान्यात्स्मृति-वैदिकपदार्थयोः i. e. the people who perform Vedic rites and also observe the Smṛti prescriptions are the same; they would not do so unless they firmly believe that smṛti prescriptions are based on Vedic authority though it may not be possible in every case to point out Vedic passages expressly or impliedly referring to them. मेधातिथि on मनु II. 6 clearly puts it, quoting from his own work called स्मृतिविवेक, the following verse: प्रामाण्यकारणं स्मृत्यं वेदविद्भिः परिग्रहः। तदुक्तं कर्तृसामान्याद्वनुमानं स्मृतेः प्रति॥, the words underlined are taken from पू. मी. सू. I. 3. 2. मनुस्मृति (II.7) has 'यः कश्चित्कस्यचिद्धर्मो discarded, since smṛtis were composed by men (i. e. they are pauruṣeya and not apauruṣeya, as the Veda is) and men are often deluded and forgetful. This is the main basis of the objector. To this the reply is that for prescriptions of the smṛtis, there are passages in the Veda that suggest some of the smṛti rules e. g. that the Aṣṭakā srāddha was prevalent long before the smṛtis is indicated by the Vedic mantra 'yām janāḥ pratinandanti'.[2046] The usages about obeying the teacher, about providing cisterns for travellers have a seen purpose, viz. the benefit of others. Even the Veda mentions 'prapā (Rg. IX. 4. 1 'dhanvanniva prapā asi 'meaning' O Agni! thou art like a prapā in a desert'. The Tantravārtika is most exhaustive on this and the following sūtras, differs from the Bhāṣyakāra in many places, finds fault with him and gives alternative matters as the subjects for discussion. He puts forward two theories about smṛti provisions for which it is impossible to suggest Vedic indications. He says (firstly) that Smṛti[2047] prescriptions may be based on lost Vedic śākhās, or (2) they may be based on texts contained in the very parts of the Veda that are available at present. If any one asks 'how is it that they are not found', Kumārila gives the reply: the several branches of the Veda are scattered about (in many distant territories), men are negligent, and the texts are contained in different sections of the Veda; on account of these one cannot point out the texts that are the basis of the smṛtis.

(Continued on next page)

That many Vedic texts were lost or are unavailable now was the view even before the days of the Āp. Dh. S. (I. 4. 12. 10), which states 'rites were promulgated in the Brāhmaṇa texts, but the exact words (of the Brāhmaṇa texts) are lost and have to be inferred from the performance of the rites (or from procedure prescribed in Smṛtis)'.[2048] There was danger in relying on the मनुना परिकीर्तितः। स सर्वाभिहितो वेदे सर्वज्ञानमयो हि सः॥'. मेधातिथि, गोविंदराज and some other commentators take सः as referring to Veda, while Kullūka refers it to मनु. Vide H. of Dh. III. p. 828 n. 1612 for another meaning of these words.

---

(Continued from last page)

2046. The verse यां जनाः प्रतिनन्दन्ति रात्रिं occurs in अथर्ववेद III. 10. 2, आप. म. पा. II. 10. 27. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 828 note 1612.

2047. तेन वरं प्रत्यक्षश्रुत्यनुमानमेव .....। यद्वा विद्यमानशाखागतश्रुतिमूलत्वमेवास्तु। कथमनुपलब्धिरिति चेदुच्यते-शाखानां विप्रकीर्णत्वात्पुरुषाणां प्रमादतः। नानाप्रकरणस्थत्वात् स्मृतेर्मूलं न दृश्यते॥ तन्त्रवा. on I. 3. 1 p. 164, quoted by विश्वरूप in his com. on याज्ञ. I. 7 p. 14 (without name).

2048. ब्राह्मणोक्ता विधयस्तेषाहुत्तशाः पाठाः प्रयोगादवगन्तव्याः। यत्र क्रीत्युपलब्धितः प्रवृत्तिर्न तत्र शास्त्रमस्ति। आप. ध. सू. I. 4. 12. 10–11.

theory that Smṛtis were based on Vedic texts that are lost (or disappeared), because that very argument might be urged by heterodox sects like the Bauddhas.[2049] Therefore, Kumārila put forward the other theory viz. the basis of smṛtis are texts that are not found in the existing vedic texts because the Vedic śākhās are scattered about (as said in the verse quoted above).

This whole subject about Smṛtis according to the views of the Mīmāṁsakas has been dealt with at great length by the author in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 827–841. Therefore, only a few examples and conclusions may be mentioned here. Śabara himself proposes that PMS I. 3. 4[2050] should form a separate Adhikaraṇa by itself and puts forward an important maxim viz. where one can find out or ascribe a visible motive for an act one should not postulate an unseen Vedic text or a transcendental motive.[2051] The result of Śabara's dealing with PMS I. 3. 3–4 is neatly put by the Śāstradīpikā as follow; Smṛti rules that are opposed to Śruti rules and such smṛti provisions as can be shown to have a clear worldly motive are not authoritative or binding, while the rest of smṛti texts are authoritative. This doctrine is older than the Āp. Dh S. (I. 4. 10. 12) which provides 'where men act because they find pleasure in doing that act there Śāstra has no scope'. Kumārila does not agree with Śabara. He says that visible and invisible or spiritual motives are often inextricably mixed up. 'Unhusking rice grains' has a visible purpose in order that they may be well boiled and the boiled rice may be offered in a sacrifice. In this act then there is a visible purpose and yet this act is prescribed by the Veda. In a trenchant, finely worded and very accommodating passage redolent of a cosmopolitan outlook and the desire to give even the devil his due, Kumārila examines (in pp. 166–168) all the known classes of Sanskrit works with regard to their usefulness

---

2049. यदि तु प्रलीनशाखामूलता कल्प्येत ततस्तासां ब्रह्मादिस्मृतीनामपि तद्द्वारा प्रामाण्यं प्रसज्यते। तन्त्रवा. on I. 3. 1 p. 163.

2050. विरोधे त्वनपेक्षं स्यादसति ह्यनुमानम्। हेत्वदर्शनाच्च। पू. मी. सू. I. 3. 3–4. There is another reading in I. 3. 3 viz. अनपेक्षम्. Vide तन्त्रवा. p. 193 quoted on p. 833 n. 1622 of vol. III. of H. of Dh.

2051. On I. 3. 2 Śabara says 'ये दृष्टार्थास्ते तत एव प्रमाणं ये त्वदृष्टार्थास्तेषु वैदिकशब्दोऽनुमानम्।'. The तन्त्रवा. on this says 'उपपत्तरं चैतद् वेदवाक्यानुमानतः। दृष्टे हि सत्यदृष्टस्य कल्पना निष्प्रमाणिका।' (p. 186). Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 837 n. 1628. It appears that कुमारिल thought that Śabara stated his case as merely a counter blast and his own opinion is that a smṛti text which has a visible purpose may still be Vedamūla.

and relation to Veda and ordinary worldly experience. Only a few sentences will be set out here and in the notes. Therefore, he provides that all Smṛtis are authoritative according to the purpose they serve. Those parts of Smṛtis that are concerned with Dharma and Mokṣa have the Veda as their source, while whatever parts of Smṛtis are concerned with wealth (artha) and worldly pleasures (kāma) are based on worldly practices. The same rule applies to the hortatory passages of Itihāsa (the Mahābhārata) and Purāṇas, both of which are often spoken of as Smṛti. The episodes and tales in these two should be taken as arthavādas. Then he refers to the descriptions of the divisions of the earth and the vaṁśas (dynastic lists) (both of which are among the subjects treated of in the Purāṇas) and sets out the purposes they might serve. The six Vedāṅgas (grammar, metrics, etymology, astronomy &c.) are useful as kratvartha and puruṣārtha, and Mīmāṁsā and Nyāya (logic) have been established (worked up) from worldly experience by means of pratyakṣa (direct perception) and inference based upon the technique evolved by a continuous and unbroken line of learned men; that no single person would have been able to put together for the first time such a large collection of arguments[2052] (as in the Mīmāṁsāśāstra). For the necessity of Nyāya (in the interpretation of the Veda) he relies upon Manu XII. 105–106. Kumārila is prepared to concede that philosophical systems in which are postulated pradhāna and puruṣa (Sānkhya) or the śupreme Lord or atoms (Vaiśeṣika) should be deemed to explain the creation and dissolution of the world, should be looked upon as exhibiting perceived, minute and gross substances divided into causes and effects due to the knowledge derived from mantras and arthavādas. The purpose of these is to make known the distinction of swarga and yāga as result and cause. The purpose of the description of creation and dissolution is to show the distinction between the power of luck and human effort. He goes even a step further and is prepared to admit that even heterodox hypotheses of Bauddhas such as the theory that only Vijñāna (cognition) exists, that everything is in an eternal flux and that there is no (permanent) soul, which (theories) sprang from the arthavāda passages in the Upaniṣads, serve the purpose of inducing people to give up extreme attachment to sensual pleasures and are useful and authoritative in their own ways.

---

2052. सर्वत्र च यथा कथंचिल्लोकपङ्क्ति (पंक्ति?) सहायोपादानात्मरक्षणमीत्युत्पादादिका इष्टार्थता भाष्यकारोक्ता शक्या वक्तुम्। न चावघातादीनां वृष्टिकामयागादीनां च इष्टार्थानामवैदिकत्वम्। तस्मात्सत्यपि इष्टार्थत्वे सम्भाव्यते वेदमूलत्वं नियमाहृष्टसिद्धेरनन्यप्रमाणकत्वात्। तन्त्रवा. p. 166 (on पू. मी. सू. I. 3.2); मीमांसा तु लोकादेव प्रत्यक्षानुमानादिभिरविच्छिन्नसंप्रदायपण्डितव्यवहारैः प्रवृत्ता। न हि कश्चिदपि प्रथममेतावन्तं युक्तिकलापमुपसंहर्तुं क्षमः। एतेन न्यायविस्तरं व्याचक्षीत। तन्त्रवा. p. 167 on I. 3. 2. M. M. Jha in his translation of Tantravārtika (p. 121) translates 'mimāṁsā is based on the Veda, upon ordinary experience &c. But in the Ānan. edition there are no Sanskrit words corresponding to the words underlined. This passage indicates that Kumārila firmly held that many authors had tried their hands at composing sūtra works on Mīmāṁsā before the present P.M.S. emerged.

He sums up the distinction by stating that as regards those smṛtis (or portions of them) in which the fruit or result promised cannot possibly be experienced in this life, but where the result is promised as fructifying in the remote future (i. e. after death), an inference as to their being based on Veda may be drawn, but, as in the case of scorpion lore[2053] (i. e. incantations for curing the sting of a scorpion), works dealing with matters that can be seen are authoritative only because the result can be perceived in other men similarly stung.

The medieval Dharmaśāstra works take up this discussion about the distinction between smṛtis based upon the Veda and those on perceptible motives or purposes. For example, the Kalpataru (Brahma-cāri-kāṇḍa p. 30) and Aparārka (pp. 626–627) quote verses from Bhaviṣyapurāṇa (Brāhmaparva chap. 181, 22–31) that divide the contents of smṛtis in five categories and exemplify that division. The Sm. C. II. p. 24 quotes two of these and the Paribhāṣāprakāśa of Mitramiśra (p. 19) quotes all of them. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. p. 840 note 1634 for all the verses.

Kumārila (pp. 194–196 of Tantravārtika) holds that the passages quoted by Śabara on I. 3. 3 are not really opposed to Veda at all and that the proper subject for discussion under I. 3. 3–4 is the authoritativeness in matters of Dharma of the schools[2054] of Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Pāśupata, Pāñcarātra and Śākyas and he holds that all these are outside the pale of the three Vedas and are to be discarded as unauthoritative, although they contain a few matters such as ahiṁsā, truthfulness, self-control, charity and compassion, that agree with Śruti and smṛti. It will have been seen from the above that Kumārila was aware of the emphasis placed by Buddhists on some moral values but he differed from them in many other matters, that he was ready to admit that Buddhist works had some value and he did not preach that they should be burnt or destroyed. Therefore, it appears that his attitude was far from being one of total hatred and persecution of the Buddhists, as alleged by Taranatha cited above on p. 1010 n. 1645.

2053. विज्ञानमात्र-क्षणभङ्ग-नैरात्म्यादिवादानामप्युपनिषदर्थवादप्रभवत्वं विषयेष्वात्यन्तिकं रागं निवर्तयितुमिच्छुपपन्नं सर्वेषां प्रामाण्यम्। सर्वत्र च यत्र कालान्तरफलार्थत्वादिदानीमनुभवासम्भवस्तत्र श्रुतिमूलता। सान्दृष्टिकफले तु वृश्चिकविद्यादौ पुरुषान्तरे व्यवहारदर्शनादेव प्रामाण्यमिति विवेकसिद्धिः। तन्त्रवा० p. 168 on I, 3. 2.

2054. यान्येतानि त्रयीविद्भिर्न परीगृहीतानि ... सांख्ययोग-पाञ्चरात्र-पाशुपत-शाक्यग्रन्थगृहीतधर्माधर्मनिबन्धनानि ... अदिक्षासत्यवचनदमदानदयादिश्रुतिस्मृतिसंवादिस्तोकार्थगन्धवासितजीविकाप्रायार्थान्तरोपदेशीनि यानि च बाह्यतराणि म्लेच्छाचारमिश्रकभोजनाचरणनिबन्धनानि तेषामेवैतच्छ्रुतिविरोधहेतुदर्शनाम्यामनपेक्षणीयत्वं प्रतिपाद्यते। तन्त्रवा. p. 194. Here the reading in the sūtra would have to be अनपेक्ष्यं.

Śabara explains that sūtras 5–7 of P. M. S. I. 3 are[2055] concerned with certain religious acts such as ācamana (sipping water) when one sneezes in the midst of a rite, the wearing of Yajñopavīta (the sacred thread), the use of the right hand alone in all acts. These interfere with the sequence and quick performance of the subordinate items in a religious rite, says the objector. Śabara establishes that there is no substance in the objection. Kumārila feels that Śabara is not right as regards the three instances cited by him. He splits the three sūtras into two adhikaraṇas (topics for consideration); sūtras 5 and 6 deal (acc. to Kumārila) with the contention that those precepts of Buddha and other founders of unorthodox sects, such as the construction of monasteries and parks, the insistence on desirelessness (vairāgya), the continuous practice of meditation, ahiṁsā, truthfulness, restraint of senses, charity and kindness are such as are laid down also by the Veda, are not opposed to the ideas of śiṣṭas and cannot rouse the antipathy of those who know the Vedas and that therefore those parts of the unorthodox systems should be deemed to be authoritative. This contention is repelled by Kumārila with the remark that only 14 (four Vedas, 6 Vedāṅgas, Purāṇas, Nyāya, Mīmāṁsā and Dharmaśāstra) or 18 (adding four Upavedas) have been accepted by the Vedic śiṣṭas as authoritative in matters of Dharma and the works of Bauddhas and other sects are not included therein.[2056] Kumārila gives a telling example viz. milk, though by itself pure and useful, becomes useless and unacceptable, when poured into a bag of dog-skin.

2055. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 841–844 for details of Śabara's views on P.M.S. I. 3. 5–7 and Kumārila's criticism thereof.

2056. Vide Yāj. I. 3 for the 14 vidyās and H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 10 note 17 for the four Upavedas viz. Āyurveda, Dhanurveda, Gāndharvaveda and Arthaśāstra.

Kumārila holds that sūtra 7 of PMS I. 3 is an adhikaraṇa by itself and is concerned with the authoritativeness of sadācāra (the customs and usages of śiṣṭas). His position as elaborated in the Tantravārtika is that those usages alone are authoritative that are not opposed to express Vedic texts, that are practised by śiṣṭas under the belief that they are right conduct (dharma) and for which no visible motive (such as pleasure or the satisfaction of desires or the acquisition of wealth) can be predicated. Śiṣṭas are only those that perform the religious rites and duties expressly enjoined by the Veda. The practices traditionally handed down from generation to generation that are observed by śiṣṭas (as defined above) with the conviction that they form part of Dharma must be regarded as Dharma and as leading to heaven. The Tantravārtika remarks that practices do not become authoritative merely by the fact that no visible motive or purpose can be postulated for them; but they become so only when they are observed by śiṣṭas as part of Dharma.[2057] Many activities such as agriculture, service or trade, that are the means of securing wealth and pleasures and such actions as eating sumptuous food, drinking, sleeping on soft beds, possessing a charming house or garden, all of which are common to Āryas and Mlecchas are not deemed by any one to be part of Dharma and it does not follow that because a few actions of śiṣṭas are accepted as Dharma, all their actions are to be looked upon as Dharma. Kumārila quotes the advice that a man should follow the path by which his father, grand-father and other ancestors went, provided it is the path of the good, following which he will not come to harm.[2058]

Very intricate questions arise with regard to the relative force of śruti (Veda), smṛti and sadācāra (usages observed by śiṣṭas as defined above and in Manu XII. 109). The Mit. on Yāj. I. 7 (laying down five sources of Dharma viz. śruti, smṛti, sadācāra, and two more) states the general rule that in case of conflict each preceding one is more powerful than each succeeding one. Manu (I. 12) states that, for those who desire to know Dharma, Śruti (Veda) is the highest authority. Therefore, in case of conflict between śruti and smṛti the former prevails. There are a few exceptions even to this clear rule which may be illustrated later on. But where two smṛtis are in conflict, the ordinary rule, following the Ṣoḍaśi-nyāya and the words of Gautama I. 5 (Tulyabalavirodhe vikalpaḥ), should be an option. Many works on Dharmaśāstra must have been composed long before 500 B. C., since Gautama mentions Manu (in 21. 7) and 'ācāryāḥ' (in 3. 35, 4. 18) and Āp. Dh. S. (I. 6. 19. 2-12) mentions no less than nine individual authors' opinions on the single question as to whose food may be eaten. Manu (in III. 16) mentions three views held by four sages on the position of a brāhmaṇa who marries a śūdra wife or has a son or child from her. A striking example of a conflict between smṛtis is the rule of Manu (III. 13), Baud. Dh. S. I. 8. 2, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 24. 1-4, Vas. I. 25, Pār. Gṛ. I. 4 allowing anuloma marriages and permitting a brāhmaṇa to have a śūdra woman as a wife and the emphatic statement of Yāj. I. 56-57 that it does not agree with those that declare that persons of the three higher classes can take a śūdra woman as wife. Later writers of smṛtis and nibandhas should have said that on account of this conflict there is an option. But they do not say so. They struck upon various devices to wriggle out of such apparent contradictions. The first device was declared by Bṛhaspati (about 500 A. D.) that the Manusmṛti occupies a pre-eminent position as it correctly represents the sense (the real view) of the Vedas and that a smṛti which is opposed to the teaching of Manu is not held in esteem.[2059] But this was not satisfactory and some other devices were resorted to. One was to insert passages in Manusmṛti itself and in other works opposing what had already been declared as the law. Two examples may be cited. As against Manu III. 13 (referred to immediately above) we find in the extant text (III. 14-19) verses very strongly condemning persons of the three higher varṇas taking a śūdra woman as wife. Manu allowed the practice of niyoga (in IX. 59–62), but the extant Manusmṛti (IX. 64–68) condemns it in no measured terms. These contradictory statements were known to Bṛhaspati who expressly says that Manu permits niyoga and himself forbids [2060] it and assigns a reason viz. that in former ages (Kṛta and Tretā) people practised tapas and were endowed with knowledge while in the Dvāpara and Kali ages men have lost the powers possessed by men of the past ages and therefore niyoga is forbidden. Yājñavalkya himself proposes (II. 21) that when two smṛtis are in conflict 'reasoning based on the practices of elders was of greater force'. Nārada has a similar rule.[2061] Another device was to declare that the nature of Dharma differed in each of the four yugas and that in the kṛta, tretā, dvāpara and kali ages the Dharmas respectively promulgated by Manu, Gautama, Śaṅkha-Likhita and Parāśara were to prevail.[2062] This also could not solve all difficulties, since medieval commentators and digests found that even what was allowed by Parāśara (such as permitting a brāhmaṇa to eat food at the [2063] house of such śūdras as his dāsa, cowherd, barber, family friend and a cultivator of his land for a half share of the crops, permission for a married woman to re-marry in certain circumstances), came to be disapproved of or condemned by people. Another expedient in cases of conflict among smṛtis was provided by Gobhila viz. where there is a conflict of (smṛti) passages, the opinion of the majority should prevail.[2064]

---

2057. दृष्टकारणहीनानि यानि कर्माणि साधुभिः। प्रयुक्तानि प्रतीयेरन् धर्मत्वेनेह तान्यपि॥ प्रत्यक्षवेदविहितधर्मक्रियया हि लब्धशिष्टत्वव्यपदेशा यत्परम्परायातमन्यदपि धर्मबुद्ध्या कुर्वन्ति तदपि स्वर्ग्यत्वाद्धर्मरूपमेव। तन्त्रवा. pp. 205–206; vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 843 note 1639 for the whole passage.

2058. येनास्य पितरो याता येन याताः पितामहाः। तेन यायात्सतां मार्गं तेन गच्छन्न रिष्यते॥ मनु IV. 178 q. by तन्त्रवा. p. 211, where Kumārila adds येषां तु पित्रादिभिरेवार्थो नाचरितः स्मृत्यन्तरमतिविरुद्धश्च ते तं परिहरन्त्येव। अपरिहरन्तो वा स्वजनादिभिः परिहीयन्ते। Vide मेधा. and मिता० on this in H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 857 n. 1661.

2059. वेदार्थोपनिबन्धृत्वात् प्रामाण्यं तु मनुस्मृतौ। मन्वर्थविपरीता या स्मृतिः सा न प्रशस्यते॥ बृहस्पति q. by अपरार्क p. 628 on या. II. 21 and by कुल्लूक on मनु I.1. मनुस्मृति II. 7 (quoted above in note 2045) claims that whatever it says on dharma has all been declared in the Veda. The मनुस्मृति frequently echoes the very words of the Veda; e. g. Manu I. 31 and Ṛg. X. 90. 12, Manu II. 2 and वाज. सं. 40. 2, Manu IX. 8 (about Jāyā) and Ait. Br. 33. 1 (7th gāthā), Manu IX. 32 and Ait. Br. 33. 3 (4th gāthā).

2060. उक्तो नियोगो मनुना निषिद्धः स्वयमेव तु । युगक्रमादशक्तयोर्यं कर्तुमन्यैर्विधानतः ॥ बृहस्पति q. by कुल्लूक on मनु IX. 68; two more verses of Bṛhaspati cited by Kullūka are not quoted here.

2061. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 866–867 notes 1682–83 for several renderings and explanations of Yāj. II. 21. Compare 'धर्मशास्त्रविरोधे तु युक्तियुक्तो विधिः स्मृतः।' नारदस्मृति I. 40.

2062. अन्ये कृतयुगे धर्मास्त्रेतायां द्वापरेऽपरे। अन्ये कलियुगे नृणां युगह्रासानुरूपतः ॥ मनु I. 85. The same verse occurs in शान्तिपर्व 232. 27 (=cr. ed. 224. 26) and in पराशरस्मृति (I. 22) (which reads युगरूपानुसारतः); कृते तु मानवो धर्मस्त्रेतायां गौतमः स्मृतः। द्वापरे शाङ्खलिखितः कलौ पाराशरः स्मृतः ॥ पराशर I. 24 q. by स्मृतिच. I. p. 11.

2063. दास-नापित-गोपाल-कुलमित्रार्धसीरिणः । एते शूद्रेषु भोज्यान्ना यश्चात्मानं निवेदयेत् ॥ पराशरस्मृति XI. 21. Compare याज्ञ I. 166 for about the same words and स्वदासो नापितो गोपः कुम्भकारः कुवीवलः । ब्राह्मणैरपि भोज्यान्नाः पञ्चैते शूद्रयोनयः ॥ केवल q. by अपरार्क on p. 245 on या. I. 168. नष्टे मृते प्रव्रजिते क्लीबे च पतिते पतौ । पञ्चस्वापत्सु नारीणां पतिरन्यो विधीयते ॥ पराशरस्मृति IV. 30, on which परा. मा. II. 1. p. 53 remarks 'अयं च पुनरुद्वाहो युगान्तरविषयः'.

2064. विरोधो यत्र वाक्यानां सामान्यं तत्र भूयसाम्। गोभिलस्मृति q. by मलमासतत्त्व p. 767.

As shown above smṛtis had been composed before 500 B. C. and they continued to be compiled till about 900 or 1000 A. D. i. e. for over 1500 years. Yāj. (I. 4–5) mentions 19 smṛtis including his own. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. I. pp. 132–135 for the enumeration of different numbers of smṛtis in different works. At least a hundred smṛtis if not more can be named. During the long period of over 1500 years vast changes in the religious and social ideas of the Indian people, in their customs and usages had occurred. Buddhism arose, flourished and disappeared from India, the caste system became rigid in the matter of food, marriage and social behaviour; Vedic rites, divinities worshipped and language underwent great transformations, animal sacrifices, though occasionally performed, had ceased to be looked upon as meritorious. The religious literature had therefore to be recast to suit new ideals, new worship and new patrons (viz. the common people who had ceased to follow ancient ritual and worship). Smṛtis reflected the changes in ideas, beliefs, worship and usages that occurred from time to time and naturally gave rise to great conflicts among themselves. At last it appears that the learned men of the 10th and following centuries of the Christian era hit upon the plan of providing that certain customs and practices, though formerly allowed and practised, were harmful in the Kali age. A theory was put forward that great sages came together at the beginning of the Kali age and declared that certain rites, customs and usages, though allowed in past ages, should be prohibited in the Kali age.[2065] The actions prohibited or to be avoided in the Kali age (about 55 in number and therefore called Kalivarjya) have been set out and discussed at length in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 926–967. It is clear from Medhātithi's bhāṣya on Manu (IX. 112) that long before his time (9th century A. D.) there were writers who had condemned govadha (in Madhuparka &c.), niyoga and the giving of a larger share to the eldest son and expressed the view that those practices were only allowed in bygone ages.

This subject of Kalivarjya requires some serious consideration. Three of the Kalivarjyas are the prohibition of niyoga, of the offering of the anubandhyā cow (after avabhṛtha) in Jyotiṣṭoma and of the allotment of the largest share (of ancestral wealth) to the eldest son. All these three were either enjoined or permitted by the Veda. From Ṛg. X. 40. 2 it follows that a sonless widow raised a son for the sake of the spiritual benefit of her husband's soul by sexual intercourse with the husband's brother.[2066] The Tai. S. (III. 1. 9. 4) has two contradictory passages viz. 'Manu divided his wealth among his sons' (without making any distinction among them) and 'therefore they endow the eldest son with (the paternal) wealth' (Tai. S. II. 5. 2. 7). In this last case it may be argued that as two Vedic passages are in conflict there is an option. But from very early times there is a prohibition against allowing the whole ancestral wealth or a major portion of it to the eldest son. Āpastamba quotes both[2067] Vedic passages, holds that equal division among sons is the proper rule and remarks that allowing the eldest son to take the whole or a major portion of ancestral estate is prohibited by the Śāstras. Among actions forbidden in the Kali age but practised in Vedic times some striking ones (apart from the three already cited above) may be mentioned here: (1) being initiated for Sattras (which were sacrifices extending from 12 days to 12 years or even more and which could be performed by brāhmaṇas alone); Jaimini[2068] deals with them at some length in VI. 6. 16–32 and other places. It is remarkable that neither Śabara nor Kumārila says anything against Sattradīkṣā as prohibited in Kali. So it was not among generally recognized Kalivarjyas till at least the 8th century A. D. (2) killing of a cow or bull. There were several occasions on which this was 2066. को वां शयुत्रा विधवेव देवरं मर्यं न योषा कृणुते सधस्थ आ॥ ऋ. X. 40. 2. For the treatment of niyoga from ancient times, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 599-607. Some regard this verse as indicating re-marriage and not niyoga. But that does not appear to be correct. Manu (IX. 65) states that niyoga is nowhere mentioned among the mantras relating to marriage nor is the remarriage of a widow referred to in the procedure of marriage. But Gautama and some other sūtrakāras and even Yāj. (I. 68–69) prescribe in detail the procedure and conditions governing niyoga; all writers are entirely silent about the procedure of the re-marriage of widows. Therefore, it has to be said that Ṛg. X. 40. 2 was rightly held by ancient smṛtis as referring to the practice of niyoga.

---

2065. एतानि लोकगुप्त्यर्थं कलेरादौ महात्मभिः। निवर्तितानि कर्माणि व्यवस्थापूर्वकं बुधैः॥ lines 39–40 from the appendix (pp. 1014–1015) to vol. III. (of H. of Dh.); 'तस्मादुद्वार-नियोग-गोवधस्तुतय उपविद्धा नाद्रियेरन्।' मेधा. on मनु IX. 112; यथा नियोगधर्मो नो नानुबन्ध्याश्वधोऽपि च। तथोद्वारविभागोऽपि नैव संप्रति वर्तते॥ q. by मिताक्षरा on या II. 117.

---

2067. ज्येष्ठो दायाद इत्येके। ... तच्छास्त्रैर्विप्रतिषिद्धम्। ... मनुः पुत्रेभ्यो दायं व्यभजदित्यविशेषेण श्रूयते। अथापि तस्माज्ज्येष्ठं पुत्रं धनेन निरवसाययन्तीत्येकवच्छ्रूयते। ... सर्वे हि धर्मयुक्ता भागिनः। आप. ध. सू. II. 6. 14. 10-12, 14.

2068. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp, 1239–1246 for details about Sattras.

done in the Vedic age. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. pp. 939–940. As flesh-eating came to be looked down upon, cow-sacrifices became most abhorrent and medieval Kalivarjya texts only register a prohibition which had been acted upon for centuries before them. (3) The employment of cups of wine in the Sautrāmaṇī sacrifice.[2069] Jaimini, Śabara and the Ṭup-ṭīkā of Kumārila describe it and both Śabara and Kumārila refer to the offering of cups of wine in it. Therefore this rite must have become Kalivarjya after Kumārila's day. (4) Offering an animal with the recital of Vedic mantras to the bridegroom, to a guest and in honour of pitṛs. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II, pp. 542–546 for Madhuparka in which a bull or a cow was offered according to the Ait. Br. and Vol. III. pp. 945–46 for this Kalivarjya. Manu (V. 41–44) allows the killing of animals in Madhuparka, in sacrifices and in rites for the pitṛs (Manes) and gods and emphasizes that sacrificing an animal as laid down by the Veda is no hiṁsā but is ahiṁsā. Yāj. (I. 258–260) prescribes the periods of time for which pitṛs are gratified by the offering of sacrificial food (such as rice or sesame), various kinds of fish and the flesh of several animals. The Mit. was[2070] constrained to observe that, although Yāj. shows that sacrificial food (rice &c), flesh and honey are offerings in Śrāddha for all varṇas, yet (in its day) the rule established by Pulastya should be followed viz. food fit for muni (i. e. rice) should be offered by brāhmaṇas, flesh by kṣatriyas and vaiśyas and honey by śūdras.

According to the Pūrvamīmāṁsā Veda is eternal, self-existent and of absolute authority; one fails to understand how sages could have authority at the beginning of the Kali-yuga to prohibit what the Veda enjoined or permitted. This seems to be a fiction invented to accommodate as Dharma the changes in people's ideas and practices that had occurred. It would have been honest and straightforward if the writers on Dharmaśāstra had said that changed circumstances required that the words of the Veda or of the old smṛtis should not be followed. And there is nothing novel or revolutionary in saying this. Both Manu [2071] and Yājñavalkya prescribe that one should not observe but give up, what was (once) deemed to be dharma, if it had become hateful to the people and if it would end in unhappiness and not lead to the attainment of heaven. Even the Mitākṣarā follows this precept of the two smṛtis and expressly says that unequal distribution (at partition) of ancestral wealth, though found in the Śāstras, should not be followed because people had come to hate it. It may be noted that the word used by Yāj. and others is 'lokavidviṣṭa' or 'lokavikruṣṭa' (hated or reviled by the people) and not 'śiṣṭa-vidviṣṭa', the idea being that even if orthodox learned pandits insist that people must follow what the Veda and smṛtis declare to be Dharma, common people may give up practices condemned by them or hateful to them. This attitude recognizes the historical facts that practices change in the course of centuries and common people are entitled to ignore the dicta even of the Veda (much more of the smṛtis). To the question why should one not be allowed to marry one's mother's sister or mother's sister's daughter if a maternal uncle's daughter can be married, the Smṛticandrikā replies 'we do not say that she could not be married according to Śāstra, but she should not be married as people abhor such a marriage' and it quotes Yāj. I. 156 (by oversight it ascribes the verse to Manu). In modern times when any change or reform in religious or social practices is suggested, Pandits calling themselves Sanātanis put forward the pleas that the proposed change or reform is opposed to the śāstras, that the controversy should be carried on according to the Mīmāṁsā rules, that all Smṛti and other dicta should be so construed as to lead to samanvaya (consistent arrangement of apparently discordant texts), that the historical approach leads nowhere and should not be resorted to. All these objections are here briefly dealt with. It has been shown how from Vedic times to the present day great changes have taken place in religious ideas, worship and practices, how smṛtis from Gautama, Āpastamba, Manu downwards espouse conflicting views so much so that as early as the Mahābhārata Vyāsa [2072] had to protest that 'rationalisation is unstable, Vedas are in conflict with each other, there is no single sage whose opinion is held to be authoritative (by all), the truth about Dharma is enveloped in a cave (i. e. it cannot be clearly discerned) and that therefore the path (to be followed) is the one followed by the great mass of people.' The Mīmāṁsā does not often lead to certain conclusions and it has already been seen how great Mīmāṁsā writers like Śabara, Kumārila, Prabhākara differ among themselves on numerous topics and it would be further illustrated later on how even great Mīmāṁsakas evolve highly conflicting conclusions in the interpretation of simple smṛti passages. Change is the one absolute in the long history of our religious and social ideas and what those who appeal to the historical approach mean is that the smṛtis were composed by human authors during a period of 1500 or 2000 years and were greatly influenced by the then prevailing religious and social atmosphere, that many of their dicta cannot be fully reconciled so as to form a consistent code of conduct, that they cannot be regarded as forever binding on all Hindus, that in the 20th century our people are free to introduce or recognize such changes as are required or have already taken place among the people in the changed circumstances and that this course is sanctioned even by Manu and Yājñavalkya and medieval eminent authors and works on the Dharmaśāstra such as the Mitākṣarā and the Kalpataru. It is of course clear that changes in practices and principles should not be made merely for the sake of change or for the whims of some leader, but the governing principle of conscious change should be the feelings and needs of common people, while retaining the foundations on which society has been based for thousands of years.

---

2069. For reference to Sautrāmaṇī, vide above p. 1079 note 1750. Jai. III. 5. 14–15 and IV. 3. 29–31 deal with it. The Tai. S. V. 6. 3–4, states 'Agnim citvā sautrāmaṇyā yajeta'. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II, pp. 1224–1228 for a description of this sacrifice, which is a combination of an iṣṭi with animal sacrifice. The peculiarity of this rite is that, along with cups of milk, cups of wine are offered to Aśvins, Sarasvatī and Indra.

2070. अत्र यद्यपि सुरापानमांसमध्वादीनि सर्ववर्णानां सामान्येन श्राद्धे भोग्यानि दर्शितानि तथापि पुलस्त्योक्ता व्यवस्थादरणीया। सुरापं ब्राह्मणस्योक्तं मांसं क्षत्रियवैश्ययोः। मधुमद्दानं शूद्रस्य सर्वेषां चाविरोधि यत्॥ इति। मिता. on याज्ञ. I. 260–261.

---

2071. परित्यजेदर्थकामौ यौ स्यातां धर्मवर्जितौ। धर्मं चाप्यसुखोदर्कं लोकविक्रुष्टमेव च॥ मनु. IV. 176; विष्णुपुराण III. 11. 7 reads धर्मपीडाकरौ नृप and विद्विष्ट°; कर्मणा मनसा वाचा यत्नाद् धर्मं समाचरेत्। अस्वर्ग्यं लोकविद्विष्टं धर्म्यमप्याचरेन्न तु॥ याज्ञ. I. 156. Vide विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 71. 17–21 (परिहरेत्) धर्मविरुद्धौ चार्थकामौ लोकविद्विष्टं च धार्म्यमपि।; बृहन्नारदीयपु. I. 24. 12 has the verse कर्मणा मनसा ... चरेन्न तु; सर्वलोकविरुद्धं च धर्ममप्याचरेन्न तु। कूर्म° I. 2. 54. 'विषमो विभागः शास्त्रदृष्टस्तथापि लोकविद्विष्टत्वान्नानुष्ठेयः' मिता. on या. II. 117; on याज्ञ. I. 156 the मिता. says 'धर्म्यं विहितमपि लोकविद्विष्टं लोकाभिशस्तिजननं मधुपर्कगोवधादिकं नाचरेत् यस्मादस्वर्ग्यमग्नीषोमीयवत्स्वर्गसाधनं न भवति।'. Vide also मिता. on या. III. 8, which says about the different days of impurity for sapiṇḍas of the 4th, 5th, 6th or 7th degree prescribed by a Smṛti that it should be discarded 'तद्विगीतत्वान्नादरणीयम्। यद्यप्यविगीतं तथापि मधुपर्काङ्गपशुालम्भनवल्लोकविद्विष्टत्वान्नानुष्ठेयम्।'; the स्मृतिच. (I. p. 71) says 'न त्वमः शास्त्रतो न पारिणेयेति किंतु लोकविरुद्धत्वात्। यच्च धर्म्यमपि लोकविरुद्धं तन्नानुष्ठेयम्। यदुक्तं मनुना–अस्वर्ग्य°;। वराहमिहिरेणापि लोकाचारस्तावदादौ विचिन्त्यो देशे देशे या स्थितिः सैव कार्या'॥. Vide above p. 555 note 825 b for this verse which is there quoted from राजमार्तण्ड. The शतपथब्राह्मण (III. 4. 1–2) has 'तस्मै (सोमाय) एतथथा राज्ञे वा ब्राह्मणाय वा महोक्षं महाजं वा पचेत्तदह मानुषं हविर्देवानामेवमस्मा एतदातिथ्यं करोति.' वसिष्ठधर्मसूत्र (4. 8) and याज्ञ I. 109 have the same provision as in Śatapatha. Medieval writers could not subscribe to this practice. Viśvarūpa says that an ox or goat is killed only if the guest desires it. कल्पतरु (नियतकाल section p. 190) quotes both वसिष्ठ and याज्ञ° and remarks अत्र गृहागतश्रोत्रियतृप्त्यर्थं गोवधः कर्तव्य इति प्रतीयते तथापि कलियुगे नायं धर्मः किं तु युगान्तरे, while the मिता. explains "उपकल्पयेत्, भवदर्थमयमस्माभिः परिकल्पित इति तत्प्रीत्यर्थं न तु दानाय व्यापादनाय वा, 'अस्वर्ग्यं ... न तु' इति निषेधाच्च."

2072. तर्कोऽप्रतिष्ठः श्रुतयो विभिन्ना नैको मुनिर्यस्य मतं प्रमाणम्। धर्मस्य तत्त्वं निहितं गुहायां महाजनो येन गतः स पन्थाः॥ वनपर्व chap. 313. 117 (in यक्षप्रश्न). But this verse does not occur in the Cri. ed. of वनपर्व chap 297, though several other questions and answers do occur. The words 'महा... पन्थाः' may also mean the path to be followed is the one that some great man (or men) takes; महाजन in the sense of 'mass of people' is employed by शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. IV. 2.7 in the words 'एवमिदमप्युक्तान्तिर्महाजनगतैवानुकीर्त्यते'.

It has further to be noted that the Mīmāṁsā rules were concerned only with the interpretation of the Vedic passages on sacrificial rites and matters relating thereto and had very little to do with the practices of people unconnected with sacrifices or religious rites.[2073] The Mīmāṁsāsūtra nowhere says that the same rules should be applied to the interpretation of smṛtis. On the contrary, the P. M. S. is very critical about smṛtis and usages (vide P. M. S. I. 3. 3-4 and 7). There are fundamental differences between the Veda and the smṛtis. The Veda was deemed to be self-existent, eternal and of absolute authority, while smṛtis are pauruṣeya (works of human authors), have only a derived authority (as being presumed to be based on Vedic passages most of which are not now available), their number is 2073. For an example, where Dharmaśāstra refused to allow the application of Mīmāṁsā rules to vratas and utsavas vide above p. 133 n. 337. For examples of medieval digests and commentaries saying that certain inconvenient smṛti texts referred to previous Kalpas and Yugas, vide Sm. C. I. 24 and Par. M. I 2 p. 83 about Hārīta speaking of Upanayana for women (H. of Dh, Vol. II, p. 295); Par. M. I. part 2 p. 97 refers to Manu III, 13 allowing the marriage of a brāhmaṇa with a śūdra woman and III. 14 forbidding it and to Yāj. quoted above in note 2071 and remarks that this conflict is to be resolved by saying that there is difference of opinion among smṛtis on that point or that they refer to different yugas. Vide also above p 89 n. 222 on the divergence about Yugādi Tithis. The V. M. (P. 99 of my edition, Poona, 1926) states that the verse of Nārada which says 'as to those sons who are separated by their father himself by giving to each of them less or more, it is their duty to abide by it since the father has power over all' is declared as referring to another Yuga. Vide also V. M. pp. 242–243 about killing an ātatāyin brāhmaṇa अतः कलौ स्वधीयतोऽप्याततायी द्विजो न वध्यः। युगान्तरे तु वध्य एव। This conclusion is due to the verse in कलिवर्ज्य section 'आततायिद्विजाग्र्याणां धर्मयुद्धेन घ्नतम्। ... क्षमान् धर्मान् कलियुगे वर्ज्यानाहुर्मनीषिणः॥.'

---

very large, they often differ so much from each other that even eminent authors and works like the Mitākṣarā had sometimes to give up in despair the idea of bringing order out of the welter of smṛti passages and in their efforts at samanvaya had to say that certain smṛtis refer to a former Kalpa or Yuga (i. e. to a society of several thousands or millions of years ago). One of the well-known maxims of the P. M. S. is the one called 'Sarvaśākhāpratyayanyāya'[2074] or 'Śākhāntarādhikaraṇanyāya' (II. 4. 8–33). In the several recensions of the Veda and the Brāhmaṇas attached to the Vedic recensions the same rite is mentioned and is dilated upon with details some of which occur in one or more recensions but are absent from others. Jaimini and Śabara establish that all the Śākhās of the Veda and the Brāhmaṇas form one corpus, that such rites as Agnihotra and Jyotiṣṭoma are one and the same in all recensions of the Veda, though the details may vary here and there, and this is the proper conclusion because the name (Jyotiṣṭoma and the like) is the same in all recensions, the promised reward of the rite is the same, the materials of the sacrifice and the devatā are the same and the codanās (the exhortatory sentences) are the same. This very maxim was extended to smṛtis from very early times. Viśvarūpa, Medhātithi, the Mitākṣarā,[2075] Aparārka and other commentators extend this to smṛtis and provide that where smṛtis are in conflict there is to be an option but that in other cases all the details are to be added up. But as an option was liable to eight faults the tendency developed that all smṛti passages on a topic were to be so interpreted as to give no rise to conflict or to allow no option by means of various devices such as 'Viṣaya-vyavasthā', reference to another Kalpa or Yuga and so on. For example, even as regards the stock example of vikalpa (viz. taking or not taking the Ṣoḍaśin cup in Atirātra) the Mit. says that it is proper to assume that it should be taken if it is possible to do so, or it may be assumed that by taking the Ṣoḍaśin cup in Atirātra the attainment of svarga is hastened &c.[2076] The result of regarding all smṛtis as constituting one Śāstra was that many simple rites became in course of time overloaded with details, complicated and taxing to the performer. But sometimes it is necessary to apply this doctrine. For example, Yāj. I. 135 requires the snātaka not to look at the sun (nekṣetārkam); this would mean that to look at the sun is prohibited at all times, but the dictum of Yāj. should be read along with Manu IV. 37 which forbids a person to look at the rising or setting sun or at the sun when eclipsed or as reflected in water or when it is at the meridian. So the rule will be as stated by Manu.

---

2074. एकं वा संयोगरूपचोदनाख्यविशेषात्। पू. मी. सू. II. 4. 9; शबर says 'सर्वशाखाप्रत्ययं सर्वब्राह्मणप्रत्ययं चैकं कर्म' on जै. II. 4. 9 pp. 635-636; the तन्त्रवा. p. 635 remarks 'एकस्यामपि शाखायां ब्राह्मणानेकत्वेपि तदेव कर्मेत्यभिप्रायः। तथयोद्गातृणां पञ्चविंश-षड्विंश-ब्राह्मणयोर्ज्योतिष्टोमद्वादशाहौ॥.' Compare सर्ववेदान्तप्रत्ययं चोदनाद्यविशेषात्। वे. सू. III. 3 1.

2075. Vide विश्वरूप on या. I. 4-5 'न तावदाम्नायो धर्मशास्त्रभेदप्रतिपादकः, न चैतत्प्रभवो न्यायः। अपि तु श्रौतानां कृत्स्नोपसंहारात् तत्पूर्वकत्वाच्च तथैवात्रापि प्राप्नोति।'; vide मेधा० on मनु II. 29; 'एवमन्येष्वपि विकल्प आश्रयणीयः, अविरोधिषु समुच्चयः। शास्त्रान्तराधिकरणन्यायेन सर्वस्मृतिप्रत्ययत्वात्कर्मणः।' मिता. on याज्ञ. III. 325; vide अपरार्क pp. 1053 q. on p. 89 n 211 of vol. IV. and also p. 1102, स्मृतिच. I. p 5, मद. पा. pp. 11, 91, शुद्धितत्त्व pp. 378-380, जलाशयोत्सर्गतत्त्व p. 523. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 72 and H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 89-90 and 453-455 for explanations and illustrations of this maxim. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 4-5 provides 'एतेषां (धर्मशास्त्राणां) प्रत्येकं प्रामाण्येपि साकांक्षाणामाकांक्षापरिपूरणमन्यतः क्रियते विरोधे विकल्पः' q. in I.L.R. 39 Bom. 373 at p. 379.

While on this subject of the authoritativeness of Smṛtis it would be useful to glance at what Jaimini and particularly Kumārila say about the Vedāṅgas. As regards Śikṣā (Phonetics) Kumārila says that the account given in that work about the organs employed in pronunciation and the rules about Vedic accents have their use in the correct recitation of mantras. On the Kalpa-sūtras Jaimini[2077] has a separate adhikaraṇa (I. 3. 11–14). Śabara mentions by name the Māśaka, Hāstika and Kauṇḍinyaka Kalpasūtras and the Tantravārtika draws a distinction between kalpa (ritual of Śrauta sacrifices) and Kalpasūtras, and refers by name to eight.

These sūtras (PMS I. 3. 11–14) have been interpreted by Kumārila in several different ways, firstly as referring to the authoritativeness of Kalpasūtras (as done by Śabara), secondly 2076. न च षोडशिग्रहणाग्रहणवद्विषमयोरपि विकल्पोपपत्तिरिति वाच्यं, यतस्तत्रापि सति सम्भवे ग्रहणमेवेति युक्तं कल्पयितुम्। यद्वा षोडशिग्रहणाद्गृहीतेनातिरात्रेण क्षिप्रं स्वर्गादिसिद्धिरतिशयितस्य वा स्वर्गस्येति कल्पनीयम्। मिता० on याज्ञ. III. 243.

---

2077. के पुनः कल्पाः कानि सूत्राणीति उच्यते। सिद्धरूपः प्रयोगो यः कर्मणामनुगम्यते। ते कल्पा लक्षणार्थानि सूत्राणीति प्रचक्षते। कल्पनाद्धि प्रयोगाणां कल्पोऽनुष्ठानसाधनम्। सूत्रं तु सूचनात्तेषां स्वयं कल्प्यप्रयोगकम्। कल्पाः पठितसिद्धा हि प्रयोगाणां प्रतिकृतौ। तन्त्रवा. on I. 3.11 (प्रयोगशास्त्रमिति चेत्) p. 229. The principal distinction is that Kalpas about each vedic sacrifice lay down simply the procedure that is ready made as handed down by oral tradition, while Kalpasūtras like those of Āśvalāyana, Baijavāpi, Drāhyāyaṇa, Lāṭyāyana and Kātyāyana contain saṁjñās, paribhāṣās, general rules, exceptions and definitions etc.

as referring to all the six Vedāṅgas and thirdly as referring to the so-called smṛtis of Buddha and others. That the Buddhist works claimed to be smṛtis is clear from the Manusmṛti [2078] 'the smṛtis that are beyond the pale of the Veda and whatever other false systems may exist, they are all fruitless as to the (soul's) Hereafter (destiny after bodily death), since they are all based on tamas (ignorance).' Here some words will be said about the Vedāṅgas according to Kumārila. According to both Śabara and Kumārila, vyākaraṇa is dealt with in Jaimini I. 3. 24–29. In the Tantravārtika Kumārila launches an elaborate and telling (pūrvapakṣa) onslaught against Pāṇini himself, aganist Kātyāyana (the author of the Vārtikas) and Patañjali (author of the Mahābhāṣya) in which some very interesting points are made but they have to be passed over for reasons of space. Kumārila says that the proper subject of grammar is to determine what words are correct or incorrect. It is intersting to note that in the prima facie attack against grammar two Pūrvamīmāṁsā sūtras are said to offend against grammar. [2079]

The Nirukta of Yāska, which is one of the six aṅgas of the Veda, is an extensive work and deals with the derivation of words, semantics, explanations of several hundred Vedic verses in whole or in part. Jaimini agrees with several conclusions of the Nirukta, which claims that without its help one cannot understand the meaning of the Veda, that it has a purpose of its own and is a complement of grammar, and it controverts at great length the view of Kautsa[2080] that Vedic mantras have no meaning

---

2078. या वेदबाह्याः स्मृतयो याश्च काश्च कुदृष्टयः। सर्वास्ता निष्फलाः प्रेत्य तमोनिष्ठा हि ताः स्मृताः॥ मनुस्मृति XII. 95.

2079. गव्यश्च च तदादिषु। पू. मी. सू. VIII. 1. 18; here गव्य is employed in the sense of गवामयन sacrifice; द्यावोस्तथेति चेत्। पू. मी. सू. IX. 3. 18. Here द्यावोः stands for द्यावापृथिव्योः. On these the तन्त्रवा. (p. 259) remarks 'तथा मीमांसायामपि–गव्यस्य च तदादिषु इति गोर्विकारावयवविषयसाधुप्रयोगयोग्यः शब्दोऽन्यत्रैव गवामयने प्रयुक्तः। तथा द्यावोस्तथेति चेत्– इति द्यावापृथिव्योरिति वक्तव्ये लक्षणहीनमेव बहु प्रयुक्तम्।'. Śabara quotes the Mahābhāṣya several times and refers to Pātañjali as ācārya and abhiyukta. Vide the present author's paper on the 'Mahābhāṣya and the bhāṣya of Śabara in the Journal, Bhāratīya Vidyā, vol. VI. pp. 43–45 (1945) and 'citations from Śabara' by Prof. D. V. Garge in the Deccan College Dissertation series No. 8 (1952), pp. 239–242 for Śabara's quotations from the Mahābhāṣya.

2080. अथापीदमन्तरेण मन्त्रेष्वर्थप्रत्ययो न विद्यते तद्विदं विद्यास्थानं व्याकरणस्य कात्स्न्यं स्वार्थसाधकं च। यदि मन्त्रार्थप्रत्ययायानर्थकं भवतीति कौत्सोऽनर्थका हि मन्त्राः।... अर्थवन्तः शब्दसामान्यादेतद्वै यज्ञस्य समृद्धं यद्रूपसमृद्धं यत्कर्म क्रियमाणमृग्यजुर्वाभिवदतीति

(Continued on next page)

(or purpose) and emphatically asserts that Vedic mantras have a meaning (and a purpose) because the words they contain are the same as those employed in popular speech and that a Brāhmaṇa passage states that sacrifice has a perfect form when a ṛk verse or yajus formula refers to the rite that is being performed. Jaimini (in I. 2. 4. ff and I. 3. 30) holds that Mantras are meaningful and that Vedic words and words in popular Sanskrit are the same and the things denoted by them both are the same (except that some difference may be caused by accentuation in the Veda).[2081] The very first sentence of Śabara's bhāsya says the same thing. Jaimini further[2082] agrees with the Nirukta about the denotation of verbs and nouns. Śabara frequently quotes either the very words of the Nirukta or pointedly refers to them.[2083] Jaimini agrees with the Nirukta in the matter of the nature and functions of the Devatās in sacrifices.[2084]

(Continued from last page)

ब्राह्मणम्। निरुक्त I. 15. The word विद्यास्थानं which is employed by Yāj. also (I. 3) may be noted. Vide notes 1780–81 for the passage एतद्वै ... वदति. The Ait. Br. (chap. III. 5) states that 13 verses are repeated at the time of producing fire by attrition and examines them to show how they are रूपसमृद्ध. All that it says on these 13 verses is not quite convincing, but in the case of several of them such as Rg VI. 16.13–15 it is convincing; vide 'Our Heritage' (Calcutta Sanskrit College) vol. V. part 2 (for July–December 1957) for a lengthy paper 'on the justification of rūpasamṛddha verses in the Ait. Br.' by Vimana Chandra Bhattacharya (pp. 119–146).

2081. लोके येष्वर्थेषु प्रसिद्धानि पदानि सति सम्भवे तदर्थान्येव सूत्रेष्वित्यवगन्तव्यम्। ... एवं वेदवाक्यान्येवैभिर्व्याख्याय न्ते। शबरभाष्य, first sentence.

2082. Compare भावप्रधानमाख्यातं सत्त्वप्रधानानि नामानि। निरुक्त I. 1 with जै. II. 1. 1 'भावार्थाः कर्मशब्दास्तेभ्यः क्रिया प्रतीयेतैव ह्यर्थो विधीयते।'

2083. Vide for example, शबर on जै. IV. 3. 38 p. 1267 (the verse अङ्गवद्वचनात् occurring in निरुक्त III. 4 which cites it as a ṛk; शबर on जै. VI. 2.13, p. 1396 (एवं तर्ह्याख्यातस्यार्थमुपदिशन्ति—उपक्रममभूत्यपवर्गपर्यन्तमाहेति उपक्रमाद्वारभ्य यावत्परिसमाप्तिरियेतावान् व्यापारविशेषस्तस्यार्थो न यथा पाकस्यागच्छेति, which quotes the words in निरुक्त I. 1); शबर on जै. X. 4. 23 p. 1927 (the words अतिथिदेवत्यं पितृदेवत्यमिति that occur in निरुक्त VII. 5), शबर on जै. X. 4. 34 p. 1935 (न ह्यत्र 'स्वरसंस्कारौ ... गुणेनान्वितौ' भवतः, which occur in निरुक्त II. 1 in the first sentence); शबर on जै. X. 8. 35. quotes the verse यमेव विद्याः occurring in निरुक्त II. 4 and remarks that एव should be placed after शुचिम् 'यं शुचिमेव विद्या इति पठितव्ये यमेव विद्याः शुचिमिति.

2084. Compare निरुक्त VII. 6–7 with जैमिनि IX. 1. 9 अपि वा शब्दपूर्वत्वाद्यज्ञकर्म प्रधानं स्याद्गुणत्वे देवताश्रुतिः; शबर on this has several phrases like पौरुषविधिकैरङ्गैः (शबर p. 1654, निरुक्त VII. 7), which appear to be taken from the निरुक्त.

Kumārila makes a general remark that all the six aṅgas and the Dharmaśāstras are comprehended under Smṛti.[2085]

It appears that Jaimini did not attach much importance to Smṛtis, since out of 915 (or 1000) Adhikaraṇas barely about a dozen are concerned in any way with smṛtis alone, viz. I. 3. 1–2, I. 3. 3–4, I. 3. 11–14, I. 3. 24–29, VI. 2. 21–22, VI. 2. 30, VI. 8. 23–24, VII. 1. 10, IX. 2. 1–2, XII. 4. 43. Śabara, however, refers to smṛtis in many more places such as on VI. I. 5 and 13, IX. 1. 6–9.

We are here concerned with the attitude of Jaimini and his early commentators like Śabara and Kumārila towards Smṛtis. The established conclusion arrived at by Jaimini (in I. 3. 2) is that in case of conflict with the Veda Smṛti is to be discarded, but if there be no conflict (of Smṛti with Veda), it may be inferred (that Smṛti is based on some Vedic text).

This amounts to saying that there is always a presumption that smṛtis are based on Veda, if their prescriptions are not directly in conflict with the Veda. Smṛtis prescribe the observance of Aṣṭakā śrāddhas, the digging of tanks, following and obeying a teacher. These are authoritative because they do not conflict with any Vedic text of opposite import. The Smṛtis do claim that they are based on the Veda. Gautama says so (in XI. 19 in note 2042) and Manu states (II. 7) 'whatever Dharma is proclaimed by Manu for anybody has all been (already) declared in the Veda, since Veda possesses all knowledge'.

In connection with smṛtis and usages an important question arises viz. if there is conflict between smṛtis and usages of śiṣṭas, which is to be regarded as more authoritative. Kumārila holds that if the practice of good men is not opposed to what is taught in the Veda and Smṛti, such practices can be understood to be authoritative but if there is contradiction between what is taught by Veda and by Smṛti and by usages, then their authoritativeness would be opposed (i. e. would be lost) and further that[2086] smṛti is more authoritative because it is based directly on the Veda, while in the case of usages, one has to infer that śiṣṭas must have based their conduct on some smṛti, which in its turn has to be deemed to be based on some Vedic text i. e. usage is removed from the Veda by one step further than Smṛtis and besides it is well-known that smṛtis are compositions by persons who were deeply versed in the Veda, while the origins of usages are vague and unascertainable.

---

2085. स्मृतित्वं त्वङ्गानां धर्मसूत्राणां चाविशिष्टम्। तन्त्रवा. p. 285 on I. 3. 27.

2086. शिष्टं यावच्छ्रुतिस्मृत्योस्तेन यत्र विरुध्यते। तच्छिष्टाचरणं धर्मे प्रमाणत्वेन गम्यते। यदि शिष्टस्य कोपः स्याद्विरुध्येत प्रमाणता। तदकोपात्तु नाचारप्रमाणत्वं विरुध्यते॥ तन्त्रवा. on I. 3. 8 p. 216 and again on p. 220 'उभयोः श्रुतिमूलत्वं न स्मृत्याचारयोः समम्। सप्रत्ययप्रणीता हि स्मृतिः सोपनिबन्धना। तथा श्रुत्यनुमानं हि निर्विघ्नमुपजायते। आचारात्तु स्मृतिं ज्ञात्वा श्रुतिर्विज्ञायते ततः। तेन दृष्यन्तरितं तस्य प्रामाण्यं विप्रकृष्यते॥' प्रत्यय means ज्ञानं विश्वासो वा (as Manu and others were sages).

Though this is the theoretical rule, supported by Dharmaśāstra works such as Vas. I. 5, Mit. on Yāj. I. 7 and II. 117, Kullūka on Manu II. 10, one finds that usages opposed to smṛtis have been in vogue from ancient times (such as the usage of marrying one's maternal uncle's daughter that is condemned by Manu and authoritative smṛtis). The Vyavahāramayūkha (p. 98 of the text in B. G. S.) was constrained to observe that in the Purāṇas one often finds usages opposed to smṛtis. The courts have held that 'immemorial usage is transcendental law' and that this is the translation by Sir William Jones of 'ācāraḥ paramo dharmaḥ' in Manu I. 108. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. pp 874-876 for two interpretations of this verse of Manu I. 108 in modern times. Manu in (II. 10) asserts that Veda and smṛti are in all matters not to be subjected to (hostile) reasoning, since Dharma shone forth from these two. Manu further provided that as regards matters not specifically provided for, whatever brāhmaṇas that have studied the Veda together with the supporting lores (viz. the six aṅgas, mīmāṁsā, Purāṇas &c.) and that make others realize what Śruti says are śiṣṭas and whatever they declare to be the Dharma in such unprovided cases is undoubtedly the Dharma.

It was declared by the Privy Council that 'under the Hindu system of law clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law.'[2087] From very ancient times customs and usages have been held to be authoritative. For example, Gautama XI. 20 says 'the usages of countries, castes and families are authoritative, provided they are not (directly) opposed to Vedic texts.' Manu I. 118 states that he has embodied in his Śāstra the long-standing customs and usages of countries, castes, families, heretical sects and guilds. In some matters modern legislation in India allows to customs and usages over-riding[2088] authority.

---

2087. In Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramlinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 at p. 436 the Privy Council say so.

In the examination of certain Kalivarjyas mentioned above, (p. 1268–1270) it has been shown how several actions prohibited in the Kalivarjya texts were practised in Vedic times or were enjoined by Vedic texts.

Kumārila points out that even brāhmaṇa women of Ahicchatrā and Mathurā drank[2089] liquor in his day, that northern brāhmaṇas engage in such transactions as the gift and sale of horses that have a mane, of mules, camels and animals that have two rows of teeth and eat from the same plate with their wives, children and friends, that brāhmaṇas of the South enter into matrimony with the maternal uncle's daughter and take their meals while seated on a couch of wickerwork, that both (brāhmaṇas of the North and South) take cooked food (kept in pots) that remains after their friends or relatives have partaken of it or that has been touched by them (at the time of eating), that they chew tāmbūla of betel leaves, betelnut, catechu and lime made into a roll that has been touched (in a betel-seller's shop) and do not sip water at the end of the chewing, wear clothes cleaned by washermen and brought on the back of asses, that they do not avoid the contact of persons guilty of grave sins except of the murder of a brāhmaṇa; there are also an infinite number of obvious violations of the subtle dictates of Dharma laid down for each man, caste or family, that these (transgressions) are contrary to Śruti and Smṛti and have a visible purpose and that it is not possible to regard such adulterated practices as Dharma inculcated by sadācāra. The requisites of valid usages according to the Pūrvamīmāṁsā school are that they must be ancient, not opposed to the express texts of the Veda or of Smṛti, must be such as are deemed by śiṣṭas to be obligatory and must 2088. For example, the Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955) by section 5 provides that the parties to a marriage must not be within the degrees of prohibited relationship and must not be sapiṇḍas of each other and yet adds 'unless the custom or usage governing each of them permits of a marriage between the two'.

---

2089. For the original text of this interesting passage of the Tantravārtika, vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. p. 848 note 1645; for different views on marrying a maternal uncle's daughter vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp 458–463; for eating from the same plate with wife and children, vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 765, and about gift or sale of horses and animals with two rows of teeth, vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 181 and Jai. III. 4. 28–31.

be observed by them with the consciousness that they are so, they must not have a visible purpose and must not be immoral. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. p. 853-855 for discussion on valid customs and usages.

The general rules laid down by Dharmaśāstra works about the binding character of customs and usages are in line with the rules of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. pp. 871-884. But deviation from Vedic texts and smṛtis gradually arose as noted above.

Even all actions done by great men cannot be called sadācāra, according to Kumārila, if they can be attributed to greed or some such base motive and should not be looked upon as Dharma. Gautama,[2090] Āp. Dh. S. and the Bhāgavata-purāṇa remark that even great men were guilty of violations of Dharma and defiant excesses, that those great men incurred no sin (got over the effects of such violations) on account of their being endowed with eminent tapas (spiritual merit due to austerities) but that others of later ages following their examples and treading the same path would sink (into hell). Kumārila cites twelve such instances of lapses, explains them away or says they were due to wrath or other passions and were not intended by the authors (of those acts) as dharma and are not looked upon as śiṣṭācāra by modern men. The twelve instances are: Prajāpati who became enamoured of his own daughter (Uṣas, explains Kumārila), Indra is described as the jāra (paramour) of Ahalyā (night, according to Kumārila's explanation); Vasiṣṭha through grief for the slaughter of his hundred sons by a demon contemplated suicide; Viśvāmitra who became officiating priest to Triśaṅku that had become a cāṇḍāla through a curse; Nahuṣa who, when he occupied the position of Indra, made approaches to Śacī, wife of Indra and was transformed into an ajagara (huge reptile); Purūravas, when separated from Urvaśī, thought of dying (by hanging &c.); Kṛṣṇa-dvaipāyana who was naiṣṭhika (perpetual) brahmacārin raised sons on the widows of his uterine brother, Vicitravīrya; Bhīṣma, though unmarried, performed Aśvamedha sacrifices; Dhṛtarāṣṭra, though congenitally blind, performed sacrifices which blind men are not authorised to do (compare Jai. VI. I. 42); five Pāṇḍavas marrying one Draupadī; Yudhiṣṭhira who prevaricated and thereby caused the death of Droṇa, his brāhmaṇa guru; Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna are described in the Mahābhārata as drunk with wine ('ubhau madhvāsavakṣibau dṛṣṭau me Keśavārjunau' in Udyogaparva 59. 5) and married their maternal uncle's daughters; Rāma performed Aśvamedha by associating a golden image of Sītā with him.

2090. दृष्टो धर्मव्यतिक्रमः साहसं च महताम्। अवरदौर्बल्यात्। गौ I. 3-4; दृष्टो धर्मव्यतिक्रमः साहसं च पूर्वेषाम्। तेषां तेजोविशेषेण प्रत्यवायो न विद्यते। तदवीक्ष्य प्रयुञ्जानः सीदत्यवरः। आप. ध. सू. II. 6. 13. 7-9; vide भागवत X. Pūrvārdha 33. 30 धर्मव्यतिक्रमो दृष्ट ईश्वराणां च साहसम्। तेजीयसां न दोषाय वह्नेः सर्वभुजो यथा. That by prāṇāyāma and other practices the impurities of the senses and mind are cleared away is stated by Manu VI. 71.

Kumārila displays great ingenuity in explaining away most of these transgressions by plausible and specious arguments, by relying on the great tapas in some cases (such as about Viṣvāmitra) and in some cases by downright denial (as in the case of Subhadrā being the sister of Kṛṣṇa).[2091] Those interested may refer for all these instances and their explanations by Kumārila to H. of Dh. Vol. III. pp. 845–848.

One interesting adhikaraṇa is the Holākādhikaraṇa (Jai. I. 3. 15–23). It is said that Holākā should be observed by the easterners, Āhnīnaibuka by Southerners, Udvṛṣabhayajña by northerners. The established conclusion is that such observances are meant for all (and not merely for persons of the East or South &c.), if they are fit to be done by[2092] easterners or southerners (there is no reason why these should not be observances fit for all). The general rule about Vedic vidhis is that they are applicable to all Āryas; no cogent reason exists why a restricted Vedic text should be inferred in the case of the above observances. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. pp. 851–853 for detailed explanation of this maxim and above pp. 237 ff. The Dāyabhāga (II. 40 and VI. 22–23) refers to this maxim in connection with a double share to be allotted to the acquirer and with reference to a person acquiring property without detriment to the ancestral estate and explains the purpose of the Holākādhikaraṇa.

The Holākādhikaraṇanyāya is frequently mentioned by writers on Dharmaśāstra. Viśvarūpa on Yāj. I. 53 quotes the siddhāntasūtra 'api va sarvadharmaḥ syāt tannyāyatvād vidhānasya' (Jai. I. 3. 16) and adds that it must be regarded as 'Sarvadharma' (as applicable to all) if it is recommended as something to be observed by some people. There is a difference of opinion between medieval writers on Dharmaśāstra as to the exact import of this adhikaraṇa. The Dāyabhāga says[2093] that the Śruti to be inferred from the practice of Holākā by easterners is simply the general one (sāmānya-śruti) that Holāka rites should be observed. On the other hand Govindānanda in his Com. on the Prāyaścitta-viveka of Śūlapāṇi says that the Holākādhikaraṇa leads to this only that the Śruti to be inferred from this practice is not in the form 'the easterners should perform Holākā' but it is in a general form viz. 'the usage of a country should be observed by those in the country'.

---

2091. The आदिपर्व expressly says about सुभद्रा 'दुहिता वसुदेवस्य वासुदेवस्य च स्वसा। आदिपर्व 219. 18 (cr. ed. chap. 211. 18). The मीमांसाकौस्तुभ of खण्डदेव states 'एवमर्जुनस्य मातुलकन्यकायाः सुभद्रायाः परिणयेऽपि सुभद्राया वसुदेवकन्यात्वस्य साक्षात् क्वचिदप्यश्रवणात्।' (p. 48, Chowkhamba S. S. 1924). This is a sample of what to expect from some orthodox Sanskrit writers, when hard pressed by facts contrary to their pet theories or views.

2092. न्यायविदश्च याज्ञिकाः—अपि वा ... विधानस्य-इति (जै. I. 3. 16)। अतः कार्यत्वे सति सर्वधर्मत्वम्। विश्वरूप on या. I. 53.

2093. तस्माद्यस्मादेवाचारात् स्मृतिर्वाक्याद्वा या श्रुतिरपहर्यं कल्पनीया तयैव तदुत्पत्याचारांशस्य स्मृतिपदस्य चोपपत्तेर्न तत्राधिकल्पनेति होलाकाधिकरणन्यायः। दायभाग II. 42; माघ्यैर्होलाका कर्तव्येति विशेषश्रुतिर्न कल्प्यते किं तु देशधर्मः कर्तव्य इति सामान्यत एव, अन्यथा देशान्तरे आचारान्तरात् श्रुत्यन्तरकल्पनागौरवं स्यादिति होलाकाधिकरणन्यायः। तत्त्वार्थकौमुदी on प्रायश्चित्तविवेक p. 142 (Jiv. ed.).

CHAPTER XXX

On Mīmāṁsā principles and rules of interpretation in relation to Dharmaśastra

The Pūrvamīmāṁsā evolved a method of its own and a set of principles for the interpretation of Vedic texts. It is now time to set down and explain some of these principles and rules and point out how they have been employed by Dharmaśāstra writers for solving their own difficulties.

The Mīmāṁsā principles and rules of interpretation fall into several groups. There are rules that are concerned only with the details of Vedic sacrifices and their inter-relations. The most important rule in this field is this that only Vidhis properly so called have absolute authority and binding force, while what are called arthavādas have authority in so far only as they form one syntactical whole with the vidhis and as they are meant to praise the vidhis. (P. M. S. I. 2. 7). Vidhis and Arthavādas are not discussed consecutively, but they are scattered over the several chapters of the P. M. S. For example, arthavādas are first dealt with in I. 2. 1–18 (the arthavādādhikaraṇa), but in many other places there is a discussion about arthavādas as in III. 4. 1–9, III. 4. 10, III. 4. 11, IV. 3. 1–3, VI. 7. 26–30, X. 8. 5, X. 8. 7 and 8.

It should not be forgotten that the Mīmāṁsā is not concerned with legislation by the king or a sovereign popular assembly. It promises to convey correct knowledge of Dharma (meaning religious rites and matters connected therewith) and the means of arriving at that knowldge is the Veda itself and the main purpose of the Mīmāṁsā is to regulate the procedure (itikartavyatā), the various auxiliary and principal matters in Vedic sacrifices. [2094]

There is a great deal of difference between the interpretation of statutes and the Mīmāṁsā rules of interpretation. In the first place, statutes are man-made, they express the will of the enacting authority, have mostly secular purposes, may be amended or even repealed and have to be expounded according to the intent of those that made them. But the Mīmāṁsā is concerned with the Veda that is deemed eternal and self-existent (and not man-made), that deals with religious matters, cannot be amended or repealed and is to be expounded according to the intent of the Vedic words. Therefore, though some rules of the interpretation of Vedic texts evolved by the Pūrvamīmāṁsā are identical with or resemble the rules of the interpretation of statutes developed in such works as Maxwell's on 'interpretation of statutes', the author will not enter into any detailed treatment showing the parallelisms between Mīmāṁsā rules and Maxwell's rules. This task was attempted over fifty years ago by Mr. Kishorilal Sarkar in his Tagore Law Lectures published in 1909. It would appear ungracious on the part of the present author to offer criticisms against a predecessor in the same field who wrote more than half a century ago when Mīmāṁsā studies by modern educated Indians were in their infancy. But the author cannot help stating that Mr. Sarkar was obsessed by the notion that he must show somehow or other that Jaimini's rules of interpretation were not inferior to those of Maxwell's and agreed closely with him. For this purpose he relies often on far-fetched analogies and employs obscure explanations. In several cases it appears that he had not been able to grasp correctly what Jaimini and Śabara meant.[2095]

2094. धर्मे प्रमीयमाणे तु वेदेन करणात्मना। इतिकर्तव्यताभागं मीमांसा पूरयिष्यति॥ q. by युक्तिस्नेहप्रपूरणी on ज्ञानदीपिका (p.36), अधिकरणकौमुदी of देवनाथ p.3, तन्त्ररहस्य. The word itikartavyatā occurs in P. M. S. itself (III. 3. 11 असंयुक्तं प्रकरणादितिकर्तव्यतार्थित्वात्). On the preceding sūtra (भूयस्त्वेनोभयश्रुति) शबर remarks 'ये च भूयांसो गुणाः सेतिकर्तव्यता' and on P. M. S. XI. 2. 8 (अङ्गानि तु विधानत्वात्प्रधानेनोपदिश्येरंस्तस्मात्स्थाद्देकदेशत्वम्) शबर explains 'विधानं कल्प इतिकर्तव्यतेत्यर्थः'.

In this work the author is concerned only with the question of the influence on Dharmaśāstra of Pūrvamīmāṁsā doctrines and rules of interpretation. He has already shown how many of the doctrines and technical expressions of the Mīmāṁsā have dominated Dharmaśāstra. He would now turn to the rules of interpretation.

The first rule is that no part of the Veda (not even a word) can be treated as anarthaka (meaningless or purposeless). It is therefore that a very large part of the Veda is treated as arthavādas intended to praise vidhis. This has been stated above (p. 1243). The result of the vital importance attached to vidhis in the PMS and of the assignment of a very subordinate role to arthavādas (as merely intended to praise) and to mantras (as merely 'abhidhāyaka') has resulted in this that a small portion of the Brāhmaṇas has been held to be of supreme authority, while a large part of the Brāhmaṇas and of Saṁhitās containing mantras has become of secondary importance or of little importance.

2095. Vide his explanation of the words 'Vedam kṛtvā vedim karoti' in pp. 241–242 of his work and the remarks of the present author in H. of Dh. Vol. III, pp. 841–42 and his explanation of 'arthakarma' and 'pratipattikarma' as 'essential act' and 'non-essential act' respectively (pp. 186–187) and the explanations of these given above on pp. 1231–32.

The Mīmāṁsā rules of interpretation fall into different classes from different standpoints. Some rules are general and some are special. Some rules have to do with the proper procedure to be followed when several texts laying down matters relating to the same subject are in conflict by means of the application of the technical words śruti, liṅga, vākya, prakaraṇa, sthāna and samākhyā (III. 3. 14) and there are rules about adhikāra, atideśa, ūha, bādha, tantra and prasaṅga.

Some examples of general rules may first be cited. That vidhis alone have special obligatory authority and that arthavādas are authoritative only in so far as they form one syntactical whole with the vidhis is a general rule. The rules distinguishing between vidhis (properly so called), niyama vidhis and parisaṅkhyā are general.

The Mīmāṁsā rule is that where there is a[2096] doubt about the exact meaning of a part of a passage, it may be determined by relying on the remaining parts of the passage. Vide above for the example 'he puts down anointed pebbles' &c. (p. 1240). The Mīmāṁsā is very much against assuming conflict among Vedic texts and therefore allows an option only if there is no other way out. Vide remarks on vikalpa above (p. 1250). Another general rule is that the singular includes the plural. In the Mīmāṁsā it is called 'Grahaikatvanyāya (P. M. S. III. 1. 13-15). In the Jyotiṣṭoma sacrifice a number of cups (grahas) filled with Soma are offered to deities and drunk at the three savanas (pressings of Soma) and Śruti states 'he wipes or cleanses the cup with the strainer made of white wool' (daśāpaviṭreṇa graham sam-mārṣṭi) and in the Darśapūrṇamāsa it is said 'he carries a firebrand round the puroḍāśa (cake)'. The question is whether a single cup ('graham' is the word used) is to be cleansed or a single puroḍāśa is to have a firebrand carried round it or whether all cups called grahas or puroḍāśas are to be treated as stated. The established conclusion is that all grahas are to be cleansed and all puroḍāśas have the firebrand carried round them. The singular number is not intended to be insisted on.[2097] From this a further general rule is derived by Kumārila and others that an attribute of the subject (anuvādya or uddiśyamāna)[2098] about which something is predicated (vidheya) is not intended and should not be insisted upon. This is frequently relied on in Dharmaśāstra works. Yāj. II. 121 states that the father and son have equal ownership in land, a corrody and wealth (gold and silver &c.) acquired by the grand-father. Here the word pitāmaha is not to be insisted upon and the same rule applies to land or wealth acquired by a great-grand-father, as the V. M. says.[2099] Similarly, when Nāradasmṛti says (16. 37) 'of brothers being undivided religious worship (or rites) are one, but if there is a partition then they may have separate religious worship'. Here the proper subject is the word 'undivided persons', and the word 'brothers' is used only as an attribute, which is not intended to be insisted on and the same rule applies to undivided grand-father, father, sons, uncles and nephews. Medhātithi on Manu II. 29 mentions this maxim. The same rule is applied in some cases to gender also i. e. a word importing males includes females also. For example, Yāj. II. 182 and Nārada (8. 40 ff) lay down certain rules about a dāsa (male slave). The V. M. says that the masculine gender in these passages is not intended to be insisted upon, but the rules 2099. The व्य. म. says 'वस्तुतस्तु पितामहपदमविवक्षितम्। अन्यथा प्रपितामहाद्युपात्ते सदृशस्वाम्यस्याभावप्रसक्तेः। अनुवाद्यविशेषणत्वाच्च' p. 90. अनुवाद्य means the same thing as उद्दिश्यमान or उद्देय (the subject, of which something is to be predicated). 'अत्र अविभक्तानामित्येवोद्देश्यसमर्पकम्। भ्रातॄणामिति तु तद्विशेषेणत्वादविवक्षितम्' व्य. म. p. 132. मेधातिथि on मनु II. 29 says 'न च प्रधाने लिङ्गसंख्यादि विशेषणं विवक्ष्यते ग्रहं संमार्ष्टीति सत्यप्येकवचने सर्वे ग्रहाः संमृज्यन्ते।'. श्लोकवा. defines उद्देश्य as 'यद्युक्तयोगः प्राथम्यमित्याद्युद्देश्यलक्षणम्। तद्युक्तमेवकारश्च स्याद्विधेयलक्षणम्॥ यद्यर्थौ स्वशब्दस्य च शब्दो यत्रानपेक्षया॥ अनुमानपरि० verses 109–110).

---

2096. सन्दिग्धेषु वाक्यशेषात्। पू. मी. सू. I. 4. 24. The विषयवाक्य is 'अक्ताः शर्करा उपदधाति तेजो वै घृतम्' (तै. ब्रा. III. 2. 5. 12). Compare Maxwell p. 29 'the words of each clause should be so interpreted as to bring them in harmony with other provisions.'

---

2097. Vide Maxwell (10th ed, of 1953) p. 349 for the propositions that words importing masculine gender include females and that the singular includes the plural and vice versa.

2098. The Ṭupṭīkā on III. 4. 22 remarks 'उद्दिश्यमानस्य विशेषणमविवक्षितमिति स्थितमेव' and on X. 3. 39 'उद्दिश्यमानस्य च संख्या न विवक्ष्यते ग्रहस्येव.'

apply even to female slaves.[2100] There are exceptions to these rules. The rule about grahas does not apply to camasas (P. M. S. III, 1. 16–17).[2101] This rule that the qualification (viśeṣaṇa) of the subject in a vidhi is not meant to be taken literally and emphasized is applied in many other cases. Three verses from the Kālikāpurāṇa are quoted by Kalpataru (on vyavahāra pp. 210-211) and V. M. (pp. 45–46) about the performance of an ordeal in certain grave charges and this maxim is applied by the V. M. there in the words 'paradārarūpam viśeṣaṇam-avivakṣitam-abhiśāpasyānuvādyatvāt'; vide notes to V. M. pp. 83–84. But in 'paśum-ālabheta', where there is a vidhi about 'yāga' it must be held that what is laid down is yāga as qualified by being made with a male animal and therefore only one paśu (and that paśu a male) is to be sacrificed.

Although the Veda employs the masculine gender (in svargakāmo yajeta, 'one desiring heaven should offer a sacrifice'), yet Jaimini establishes (in VI. 1. 6–16) that even women are included and have a right to offer a yāga.[2102] Jaimini further provides that husband and wife should perform a religious right in co-operation (VI. 1. 17–21), but he provides that where the Śruti specifically provides for certain matters to be done by the yajamāna[2103] (the male performer) it is the male alone who can perform them as the wife is not equal to the husband in the knowledge of mantras and is ignorant and therefore she is restricted to the performance of those acts that are expressly enjoined for her such as looking at the clarified butter, observing brahmacarya and the like (VI. 1. 24 'tasyā yāvad-uktam-āsīrbrahmacaryam-atulyatvāt'.) The wife also performs bath and such 2100. अस्मिन् प्रकरणे दासपदगतपुंस्त्वस्याविवक्षितत्वाद् दास्यामप्येष सर्वो विधिर्ज्ञेयः। व्य. म. p. 210. Vide also व्यवहारप्रकाश (part of वीरमित्रोदय) p. 322. As to 'पशुमालभेत' शबर remarks on VI. 1. 9: 'इदं तु पशुत्वं यागस्य विशेषणत्वेन श्रूयते। तत्र पशुत्वस्य यागस्य च सम्बन्धो न द्रव्ययागयोः। यथा पशुत्वं यागसम्बद्धमेवं पुंस्त्वमेकत्वं च। सोयमनेकविशेषणविशिष्टो यागः श्रूयते। स यथाश्रुत्येव कर्तव्यः। उपादेयत्वेन चोदितत्वात्।' p. 1359.

---

2101. These two rules that the singular includes the plural and words importing the masculine gender shall be taken to include females are the same in section 13 of the Indian General Clauses Act X of 1897, subject to this that if there is anything repugnant in the subject or context the rule will not apply.

2102. तस्मात्फलार्थिनी सती स्मृतिमप्रमाणीकृत्य द्रव्यं परिगृह्णीयाद्यजेत चेति। शबर on पू. मी. सू. (VI. 1. 13).

2103. तस्मात्सर्वं यजमानेन कर्तव्यम्। आहरत्व विहितं पत्न्या च। दुपदीका on VI. 1. 24 p. 1376.

acts as applying collyrium, sipping water (ācamana), observes silence till the morning or evening agnihotra is gone through. She has her waist girt up with a yoktra (a triple cord of muñja grass) in Darśapūrṇamāsa and other sacrifices. She has also to look upon the clarified butter in the pot with a mantra (Tai. S.II.). 10. 3 'mahīnām payosyoṣadhīnām rasosi adabdhena tvā cakuṣāṣ vekṣe suprajāstvāya' ('thou art the milk of cows, the fluid of herbs, with an invincible eye I look on thee for securing good progeny'). The wife was to learn the mantras she had to repeat in sacrifices from her father or husband before the husband set up the sacred fires (vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 1041 n). Gradually, the wife lost all importance in Vedic sacrifices and came to be a mere silent spectator[2104] of all the weary details that had to be gone through by the sacrificer and the priest.

In spite of the above restrictions on the wife's powers about Vedic sacrifices many smṛti rules apply to women also, though the text employs the masculine gender. For example, Manu XI. 93 provides that a brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya and vaiśya should not drink surā. This prohibition applies to wives of the members of the three varṇas according to the Mit. on Yāj. III. 256.

The P. M. S. holds that the gender and number of a word in a vidhivākya may in certain cases be intended and insisted on. For example, in PMS IV. I. 11–16 it is established that the Agniṣomīya animal to be sacrificed in Jyotiṣṭoma as prescribed in the words 'yo dīkṣito yad agniṣomīyam paśum-ālabhati' (that the person who has undergone dīkṣā and offers the animal to Agni and Soma) is only one and that the words in the Aśvamedha 'he offers kapiñjalas to the season of[2105] spring', the 2104. The Paddhati in the Com. on कात्या. श्रौ. IV. 13 remarks 'उपवेशनव्यतिरिक्तं पत्नी किमपि न करोतीति संप्रदायः। तत्र साधुतरम्'। विद्वत्तया पुमानेव कुर्यादविदुषीतरा। वेदाध्ययनशून्यत्वात्। प्रतिषिद्धं हि तत्स्त्रियः॥' शास्त्रदीपिका on VI. 1. 24.

---

2105. वसन्ताय कपिञ्जलानालभते ग्रीष्माय कलविङ्कान् &c.; this occurs in वाज. सं. 24. 20 and मैत्रा. सं. III. 14. 1. This is कपिञ्जलन्याय embodied in पू. मी. सू. XI. 1. 31–46. The plural Kapiñjalān is satisfied by offering three as the lowest number. To offer a thousand would not yield more abundant reward, since only a single provision is made and not several alternate numbers. The शास्त्रदीपिका remarks 'यो हि त्रीनालभते यश्च सहस्रं तयोरुभयोरपि बहुत्वसम्पादनमविशिष्टम्।... निवृत्तव्यापारे च विधौ, न हिंस्यादिति निषेधशास्त्रं प्रवर्तत इत्यधिकानालम्भः।'. It is referred to in परा. मा. I. 2. 281 'प्राणायामैरिति बहुवचनस्य कपिञ्जलन्यायेन त्रित्वे पर्यवसानात् त्रिभिः प्राणायामैः शुध्यति इत्यर्थः।'. Compare also P.M.S. IV. 1. 11 ff.; 'तथा च लिङ्गम्' पू. मी. सू. IV. 1. 17. The passage is तै. सं. II. 1. 2. 5 'वसन्ते ब्राह्मणोर्यौं कृष्णग्रीवीमालभेत ग्रीष्मे मध्यन्दिने संहितामैन्द्रीं शरत्यपराह्णे श्वेतां वाईष्यवाय' and then in तै. सं. II. 1. 2.6 'गर्भिणयो भवन्ति, इन्द्रियं वै गर्भ इन्द्रियमेवास्मिन् दधति.'

kapiñjala birds to be offered are only three (and not one nor two nor more than three). Similarly, the gender in the passage 'he sacrifices in the morning in spring an animal with dark coloured neck to Agni, in summer in the noon an animal of different colours, in the autumn in the afternoon a white animal to Bṛhaspati', it is a female animal that is offered because immediately thereafter the words 'they become pregnant' occur. Dharmaśāstra works often say that the masculine gender used in many texts excludes women. For example, the Agnipurāṇa[2105] (175. 59–61), when dealing with the rules to be observed in all vratas in general, provides that the person undergoing vrata should take a bath, should worship the golden images of the deities of the vratas, perform japa and homa and at the end of the vrata make gifts according to his ability and should feed 24, 12, 5 or only three vipras. The N. S. quotes this from Pṛthvīcandra and observes that as the masculine gender 'viprāḥ' is employed only males of the brāhmaṇa class are to be fed and not women.

As against this, when Hemādri[2107] quoting Padma says 'If a woman is pregnant, freshly delivered, or is ill and becomes impure, she should get her vrata performed through another and when she becomes pure she may observe it personally,' the N. S. remarks that this applies to men also when they are impure, since the gender here is not intended to be emphasized.

There are Mīmāṁsā rules about the interpretation of words and also about sentences. First a few of the rules about words may be illustrated. (1) Śabara in the very first sentence of his bhāṣya propounds the principle that as far as possible the words in the sūtras of Jaimini and in the Veda are to be understood in the sense in which they are understood in popular usage and not in a secondary or technical sense. The same rule is propounded by Jaimini in III. 2.1–2 in connection with the meaning of 'barhis' in the mantra 'I cut the barhis as an abode for gods'. Here the conclusion is that barhis is to be taken in the primary sense of 'handful of kuśa grass' and not in a secondary sense such as kāśa or other kind of grass. Śabara winds up with the[2108] words 'between the primary and secondary senses of a word it is proper to hold that the primary sense is to be taken for the business in hand'. Again, on I. 3. 30 Śabara says[2109] that the words are the same as in the Veda and popular use and the meanings are the same.

---

2106. पृथ्वीचन्द्रोदयेऽग्निपुराणे–स्नात्वा व्रतवता सर्वव्रतेषु व्रतमूर्तयः। पूज्याः सुवर्णमय्याद्याः ... व्रतान्ते दानमेव च। चतुर्विंश ... पञ्च वा त्रय एव च। विप्रा भोज्या यथाशक्ति तेभ्यो दद्याच्च दक्षिणाम्॥ अत्र विप्रा इति पुल्लिङ्गनिर्देशात् पुमांस एव भोज्याः, न तु स्त्रियः। एवं सहस्रभोजनादावपि। विरूपशेषस्य प्रमाणान्तरं विनाऽयुक्तत्वात्। नि. सि. p. 24. It also relies on what Śabara says on III. 3. 17 and 19.

2107. तथा हेमाद्रौ पाद्मे। गर्भिणी सूतिकादिष्व कुमारी वाथ रोगिणी। यदाऽशुद्धा तदाऽन्येन कारयेत् प्रयता स्वयम्॥ इति पुंसोऽप्येव विधिः, लिङ्गस्याविवक्षितत्वात्। नि. सि. p. 28.

As regards the setting up of Vedic fires, the Tai. Br. I. 1. 4 and Āp. Śr. V. 3. 18 prescribe different seasons for men of the three varṇas and add that a 'rathakāra should set up Vedic fires in the rainy season'. The question arises whether the word 'rathakāra' in these passages means a person of that caste (i. e. whether it is to be taken in the popular sense) or whether it refers to any one of any varṇa who manufactures chariots (i. e. the etymological sense). The established conclusion is that the popular sense is to be taken and not the etymological (P. M. S. VI. 1. 44–50). In the case of the rathakāra the mantra for ādhāna (setting up of Vedic fires) is 'ṛbhūṇām tvā' (Tai. Br. I. 1. 4. 8). Though not belonging to one of the three higher varṇas, the rathakāra could repeat that mantra because the Śruti expressly authorized him to do so, but he was not entitled to upanayana. The P. M. S. (VI. 1. 50) held that the rathakāra (mentioned in the Tai. Br. and Āp. Śr.) was a caste called Saudhanvana which is neither śūdra nor one of the three higher varṇas but is slightly inferior to them. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 45–46. The S. Kau. argues that[2110] if once the right of a Hindu 2108. तस्मान्मुख्यगौणयोर्मुख्ये कार्यसंप्रत्ययः। शबर on III. 1. 1. The same words occur in the महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 4 on पा. VI. 3. 46 as गौणमुख्ययोर्मुख्ये कार्यसंप्रत्ययः; तस्माल्लोकवेदयोरभिन्नाः शब्दार्था इति। तन्त्रवा. on same सूत्र p. 293, शङ्कराचार्य on V. S. IV. 3. 12 employs the same words as the first quotation from Śabara. Vide शास्त्रदी. on III. 2,1–3. In Umaid Bahadur V Udaichand I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 (F. B.) at p. 126 (where the question was whether the word 'sapiṇḍa' defined by the Mitākṣarā in the ācāra section as a person connected by particles of one body can be taken for purposes of inheritance as persons connected by the offering of funeral oblations) it is stated 'it is a well understood rule of construction among the authors of the Institutes of Hindu Law that the same word must be taken to have been used in one and the same sense throughout a work, unless the contrary is expressly indicated.' Vide Ramchandra V Vinayak L. R. 41. I. A. 290 where the above passage in the Calcutta case is quoted with approval at pp. 303–304.

2109. य एव लौकिकाः शब्दास्त एव वैदिकास्त एवैषामर्था इति। शबर on I. 3. 30.

2110. न च प्रतिग्रहमन्त्राभावेनाधिकाराभावोक्तिरपि घटते। अशूद्रायां सत्यामिवासत्यामपि तस्यामुत्पादनीत्याधिकारनिर्णये रथकारवन्मन्त्राध्ययनकल्पनासम्भवात्। एतेनाशूद्रायां सत्यामेव मन्त्रकः प्रतिग्रह इति निरस्तम्। सं. कौ. p. 168.

widow to adopt is conceded, the mere fact that she is not entitled to repeat Vedic mantras in general cannot deprive her of that right and that it is possible to hold, as in the case of the rathakāra, that she can repeat the specific mantra required in adopting a boy. The Tai. S. IV. 5. 4. 2 separately mentions several craftsmen such as takṣan, rathakāra, kulāla, karmāra &c. From Atharvaveda III. 5. 6 and Vāj. S. 30. 6 (medhāyai rathakāram dhairyāya takṣāṇam) it appears that the rathakāra held a good position in the then society.

A word is to be understood in that shade of its meaning that is appropriate to the act in hand. For example, śruti says 'he cuts off with sruva, he cuts off with a knife, he cuts off with the hand' (the same verb 'avadyati' being used for all the acts). The question is whether one is to cut all offerings, whether liquid or solid, whether of flesh or other substances, with sruva ladle or whether he is to employ the method or implement appropriate for each i. e. clarified butter should be taken from a pot and offered by means of a sruva ladle, flesh should be cut off with a knife and offered, and hard or thick things (like fuel sticks) should be offered with the hand. The conclusion is that one is to offer in the way most appropriate to each kind of offering. This is called 'sāmarthyādhikaraṇa' (PMS.[2111] I. 4. 25). The V. M. relies on this when dealing with the homa prescribed by Pitāmāha for all ordeals in the words 'homa should be offered in the four directions with clarified butter, boiled rice and fuel sticks &c' and declares that the homa of clarified butter should be made with sruva ladle, of havis (i. e. 'boiled rice &c') with sruc and of fuel sticks with the (right) hand, on account of the fitness (sāmarthya) of these for the various offerings and sharply criticizes Raghunandana who in his Dāyatattva provided that the homa should be made of all three together (and not separately). A similar rule is applied to the ten sacrificial implements enumerated in Tai. S. I. 6. 8. 2 viz. sphya (the wooden sword), the potsherds &c. Here the Pūrvapakṣa is that one may employ any one of these for any purpose required in the sacrifice; the established conclusion (PMS III. 1 11. and IV. 1. 7–10) is that the enumeration of ten implements is a mere anuvāda and is not to be understood as the pūrvapakṣa states, but each is to be employed for the purpose for which the Vedic texts prescribe it (such as one cooks the puroḍāśa on potsherds, pounds grains in mortar and pestle). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 985 n. 2233 for ten implements of sacrifice and others that are required and p. 1232 above for their disposal.

---

2111. अर्थाद्वा कल्पनैकदेशत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. I. 4. 25; शबर quotes 'स्रुवेणावद्यति, स्वधितिनावद्यति हस्तेनावद्यति, इति श्रूयते। किं स्रुवेणावदातव्यं सर्वस्य द्रव्यस्य संहतस्य मांसस्य च। तथा स्वधितिना हस्तेन च उत सर्वेषामर्थतो व्यवस्था'. The पूर्वपक्ष is अविशेषाभिधानाद्व्यवस्थेति. The conclusion is अर्थाद्वा कल्पना, सामर्थ्यात्कल्पनेति स्रुवेणावद्येद्यथा शक्नुयात् तथा यस्य शक्नुयात् तस्य चेति। आख्यातशब्दानामर्थं प्रवर्तां शक्तिः सहकारिणी। एवं चेद्यथाशक्ति व्यवस्था भवितुमर्हति। तथा अञ्जलिना सकृत् प्रदाव्ये जुहोति इति। This last is a quotation from Tait. S. III. 3. 8. Vide स्व. म. p. 54 for the text and notes pp. 89–93 for detailed explanations of the passage by the present author. The शास्त्रदीपिका on the above remarks 'तस्माच्छक्तिसहायो विधिरेव पदार्थसामर्थ्यं विधेयं व्यवस्थापयति.'

One and the same word must not be used in two senses in the same sentence, that is, in the primary sense and also in the figurative sense.[2112] This maxim is relied upon by the Dāyabhāga. When brothers (sons of the same mother) come to a partition, smṛti texts (like Yāj. II. 123) prescribe that the mother takes a share equal to that of a son. On this the Dāyabhāga remarks that the word 'mātā' (in Yāj. II. 123 and others) primarily means a real mother (jananī, that gives birth) and this smṛti rule has no application to the step-mother, since it is improper to hold that the same word once used in a sentence has a primary and a secondary sense at the same[2113] time. But it must be pointed out that all Dharmaśāstra works do not observe this rule. Aparārka (p. 730) on Yāj. II. 123 (pitur-ūrdhvam vibhajatām mātāpyaṁśam samam haret) includes the step-mother under the word 'mātā' following a text of Vyāsa. The Mitākṣarā interpreting Yāj. II. 135 about obstructible heritage stating the order of succession as wife, daughters, parents, brothers, their sons, provides that full brothers first succeed, in default of them half brothers, in default of the last, full brothers' sons. The V. M. disagrees[2114] with this and says that the word 'brother' primarily means 'full brother' and only secondarily 'half-brother', that, as it is not allowable to use a word like brother in two senses in the same passage, in default of full brother his son succeeds (and not half-brother as the Mit. provides). The primary sense of a word is got by 'abhidhā', the secondary sense by 'lakṣaṇā'[2115] and sometimes a third sense called suggested sense is said to be due to vyañjanā. These are the three vṛttis (functions) of a word.

2112. अभ्यायम्यानेकार्थत्वम् । शबर on III. 2. 1 and VII. 3. 3; न श्लोकस्थ शब्दस्यानेकार्थता सत्यां गतौ न्याय्या । शबर on VIII. 3. 22. Vide शबर on IX. 4. 18 also. शङ्कराचार्य in his bhāṣya on Brahmasūtra II. 4. 3 puts this rule very clearly 'न श्लोकस्थिमन्प्रकरणे एकस्मिंश्च वाक्ये एकः शब्दः सकृदुच्चरितो बहुभिः सम्बध्यमानः क्वचिन्मुख्यः क्वचिद् गौण इत्यध्यवसातुं शक्यम्। वैरूप्यप्रसङ्गात्।.

2113. पितरि चोपरते सोदरभ्रातृभिर्विभागे क्रियमाणे मात्रेपि पुत्रसमांशो दातव्यः समांशहारिणी मातेति वचनात् । मातृपदस्य जननीपरत्वाच्च सपत्नीमातृपरत्वमपि सङ्गच्छते तस्य मुख्यगौणत्वानुपपत्तेः । दायभाग III. 29–30, p. 67; मातृग्रहणं तत्सपत्न्यादिनिवृत्त्यर्थम् । अपरार्क p. 730. It may be noted that in Vithal V. Prahlad (I. L. R. 39 Bom. 373) a paternal step-grandmother was held entitled to a share when a partition took place between the sons of a deceased son of her co-wife.

One of the rules about the interpretations of words is contained in P.M.S.I. 3. 8–9. Śabara cites three instances of words[2116] viz. caru made from yavas, sandals made of boar skin, a cane mat. The words yava, varāha and vetasa are respectively employed by some people in the sense of 'priyaṅgu' (long pepper), dark bird (crow) and jambu (black berry). The prima facie view insists that one may use those words in any one of the two senses. The Siddhānta is that those words must be used in the sense in which the Veda (or śāstra) or śiṣṭas employ them i. e. the usage of learned Aryan people is to be followed where words

---

2114. मातुरभावे भ्राता सोदरः, तदभावे तत्पुत्रः। यत्तु विज्ञानेश्वरादयः सोदराभावे भिन्नोदरस्तदभावे सोदरसुता इत्याहुस्तन्न, भ्रातृपदस्य सोदरे शक्त्या भिन्नोदरे च गौण्या वृत्तिद्वयविरोधात्। व्य. म. p 142.

2115. According to तन्त्रवा॰ there is a slight difference between लक्षणा and गौणी. Vide अभिधेयाविनाभूते प्रतीतिर्लक्षणेष्यते। लक्ष्यमाणगुणैर्योगाद्वृत्तेरिष्टा तु गौणता॥ वह्नित्वलक्षितादर्थाद्यत्यैक्ष्ण्यादि गम्यते। तेन माणवके वह्निः साद्दश्यादुपजायते॥ p. 354 on I. 4. 12. गङ्गायां घोषः is लक्षणा (गङ्गातीरे घोषः), while अग्निर्माणवकः (the boy is fire) is an example of गौणीवृत्ति (possession of a quality common to both). गौणी is a variety of लक्षणा which latter occurs in a far larger number of cases. The boy has some of the qualities (गुण) of fire such as very brown colour and the like and therefore here the word 'fire' is applied to the boy in a figurative sense.

2116. तेष्वदर्शनाद्विरोधस्य समा विप्रतिपत्तिः स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. I. 3. 8; यवमयवदः, वाराही उपानहौ, वैतसे कटे प्राजापत्यान् सन्निनोति इति यववराहवेतसशब्दान् समाममन्ति। तत्र केचिद्दीर्घशूकेषु यवशब्दं प्रयुञ्जते केचित्प्रियङ्गुषु। वराहशब्दं केचित्सूकरे केचित्कृष्णशकुनौ। वेतसशब्दं केचिद्वञ्जुलके केचिज्जम्बाम्। शबर. The सिद्धान्तसूत्र is शास्त्रस्था वा सन्निधित्वात्। पू. मी. सू. I. 3. 9; शबर explains यः शास्त्रस्थानां स शब्दार्थः। के शास्त्रस्थाः, शिष्टाः तेषामविच्छिन्ना स्मृतिः शब्देषु वेदेषु च। भामती on ब्र. सू. III. 3. 52 relies on this for holding that the meaning assigned to a word among Aryas in India prevails over the meaning of the word among Āndhras (e. g. of the word राजन्). As regards पीलु, Gaut. (I. 22) prescribes that a kṣatriya or vaiśya brahmacārin should carry a staff of the aśvattha or pīlu tree (अश्वत्थपैलवौ क्षेत्रे), while Manu II. 45 prescribes a staff of pīlu or udumbara tree for a vaiśya brahmacārin. The Amarakośa states that pīlu means a tree as well as an elephant.

may have two or more senses. As in several other cases Kumārila does not like Śabara's explanation and proposes two other explanations, viz. one being that the sūtras relate to the word 'pīlu' used in the sense of a tree and mlecchas employ it in the sense of elephant. The meaning of the word in smṛtis is a tree and that should be followed. Here 'Śāstrasthāḥ' means 'the sense given to the word in the Śāstra i. e. smṛti'. Another meaning he sees into those sūtras is the comparative strength of smṛti and ācāra. This adhikaraṇa is relied upon by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. (I. 225) on the question of the primary meaning of the word Śrāddha which he states is 'piṇḍadāna' (offering balls of boiled rice to the manes) and not feeding brāhmaṇas. The Parāśara-mādhavīya refers to Parāśara-smṛti (VI. 70–71) about the food cooked from rice in such quantities as measuring an āḍhaka[2117] or droṇa and rendered unclean by being pecked by crows or touched by dogs and smelt by asses and provides that the measures āḍhaka and droṇa were to be taken as those known from śāstras and not those known among mlecchas.

Another rule (PMS I. 3. 10) about words is that[2118] words, though of foreign origin, that are in vogue in Sanskrit, are to be understood in the sense which they have in the foreign language and one should not think of an attempt to derive them with the help of Nirukta and grammar. Śabara cites four such words viz. pika (cuckoo), nema (half), tāmarasa (lotus), sata (circular wooden vessel).

Another rule about words is that where a single substance connected with several attributes is concerned in an action laid down for being carried out, all of these attributes should be taken to refer to the same one substance (PMS III. 1. 12). The Tai. S. prescribes 'he purchases Soma with a heifer one year old and having brown eyes and reddish in colour'. Here the two words 'piṅgākṣī' and 'ekahāyanī' yield a good etymological meaning, are in the same case and so refer to the same substance

---

2117. For āḍhaka, droṇa and other measures of corn, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 881 n. 2053, vol. III. p. 124 n. 165.

2118. चोदितं तु प्रतीयेताविरोधात्प्रमाणेन। पू. मी. सू. I. 3. 10; न चामीषां (पिकादिपदानां) आर्येष्वर्थः कश्चिदस्ति। ... तस्माम्लेच्छप्रसिद्ध एवार्योऽमीषां निरुक्तव्यवसीयते। शाबरदीपिका on I. 3. 10. The मयूखमालिका gives सूत्रार्थ as म्लेच्छैश्चोदितमपि प्रतीयेत। आर्यं स्यादिति यावत्। प्रमाणेनार्यव्यवहारेणाविरोधात्। The underlined words occur in the sūtra.

(heifer in this [2119] case). But the word 'aruṇayā' (of red colour) causes a doubt viz. whether it should be separated from the other two words in the sentence and taken in the sense of 'any reddish substance such as a piece of cloth' or whether it should be connected with the verb (he purchases), should thus be subordinate to the purchase and should be taken as referring to the one year old heifer. This last is the established conclusion. How Soma is to be purchased does not follow from any other text. Therefore, in such a case several subsidiaries can be laid down in one injunction. If 'aruṇayā' be taken as referring to any red substance such as a piece of red cloth this one sentence would have to be divided into two vidhis 'he should purchase with a red piece of cloth' and 'he should purchase with a brown-eyed (heifer) one year old'. This would be a fault called 'vākyabheda'. This nyāya is explained by the Madanapārijāta pp. 88–89 and Aparārka (p. 1030) makes use of [2120] it in explaining the correct import of the words of the Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 21 'tam-etam vedānuvacanena brāhmaṇā vividiṣanti' by saying that when the highest object in view is one but the subordinate elements are different these latter are to be lumped together.

Another rule about words is evolved by what is called 'niṣādasthapatinyāya' (PMS VI. I. 51–52). [2121] It is stated that the Iṣṭi in which an offering of boiled rice is made to Rudra is 2119. अर्थैकत्वे द्रव्यगुणयोरैककर्म्याक्षिप्तयः स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. III. 1. 12; ज्योतिष्टोमे क्रयं प्रकृत्य श्रूयते। अरुणया पिङ्गाक्ष्यैकहायन्या सोमं क्रीणाति। इति। तत्र सन्देहः। किमरुणिमा कृत्स्ने प्रकरणे निविशेतोत क्रये एवैकहायन्यामिति। शाबर. The sentence अरुणया... क्रीणाति is तै. सं. VI. 1. 1. 6–7. शाबर has a very lengthy discussion on this. The तन्त्रवार्तिक on पू. मी. सू. II. 2. 6 states 'प्राप्ते कर्मणि नानेको विधातुं शक्यते गुणः। अप्राप्ते तु विधीयन्ते बहवोऽप्येकयत्नतः॥' p. 485 quoted in मी. न्या. प्र. p. 39 (Abhyankar's ed.). For example, श्राद्ध is laid down as a विधि but if one wants to lay down some matters about श्राद्ध separate विधिs would be required for each matter, such as गयायां श्राद्धं दद्यात्, कुतपे श्राद्धं दद्यात्. But where there is already no vidhi laying down a guṇa (subsidiary matter) there can be one main vidhi embodying several guṇas, as laid down in P.M.S. I. 4. 9.

---

2120. किं च परमकार्याभेदेऽवान्तरव्यापारभेदे तु कारकं कारकान्तरेण सङ्गृह्यते यथा—अरुणया... क्रीणाति इत्यारुण्यमेकहायन्या। अपरार्क p. 1030 on याज्ञ. III. 205 (न्यायार्जित... गृहस्थोपि विमुच्यते॥).

2121. स्थपतिर्निषादः स्याच्छब्दसामर्थ्यात्। पू. मी. सू. VI. 1. 51. ...निषादानां स्थपतिरिति षष्ठीसमासो भविष्यति। ...एवं प्राप्ते ब्रूमः स्थपतिर्निषादः स्यात्।... कस्मात् शब्द-सामर्थ्यात्। ... समानाधिकरणसमासस्तु बलीयान्। तत्र हि स्वार्थे शब्दौ वृत्तौ भवतः। द्वितीया च विभक्तिस्तन्त्रेणोमार्थां सम्बध्यते। शाबर; compare मैत्रा. सं. II. 2. 4 for the इष्टि and the words तया निषादस्थपतिं याजयेत्। अत्र तावन्निषादस्थपतिन्यायेन षष्ठी-

(Continued on next page)

one that should be performed for niṣāda-sthapati. A niṣāda is a person born of a brāhmaṇa father and śūdra mother (vide Manu X. 8). He does not belong to one of the three higher varṇas. Sthapati means 'chief or leader'. The question whether the compound word means 'a niṣāda who is a chief (that is a karmadhāraya compound) or whether it means 'the ruler of niṣādas' who may not necessarily be a niṣāda himself but may be a kṣatriya (i. e. whether one should take the word as 'ṣaṣṭhī-tatpuruṣa' as 'niṣādānām sthapatiḥ'). The conclusion is that a karmadhāraya is more powerful than a tatpuruṣa, since in the former both the words may be directly connected with the verb (niṣādaścāsau sthapatiśca, tam yājayet). The V. M. makes use of this 'maxim'. The Śaunaka-smṛti authorizes śūdras to adopt a son, yet some writers like Rudradhara, author of Śuddhiviveka, held that adoption required a homa with mantras and as a śūdra could not repeat vedic mantras he could not adopt. To this V. M. replies that his power to adopt a son being established by Śaunaka's smṛti all that is required is that he may get the homa performed through a brāhmaṇa. The Bhāmatī on Śaṅkarā's bhāṣya on V. S. I. 3. 15, where the meaning of the word 'brahmaloka' in Chāndogya-Up. VIII. 3. 2 is in question, says that the niṣādasthapatinyāya applies and so 'brahmaloka' means 'brahma as the goal' and not 'the world of brahma.' Manu XI. 54 enumerates five Mahāpātakas (deadly sins), one of which is 'gurvaṅganāgama' (sexual intercourse with gurvaṅganā). Commentators have differed about the meaning of this word, some like Bhavadeva in Prāyaścittaprakaraṇa stating that, following niṣādasthapatinyāya, the word must be dissolved as a Karmadhāraya compound (guruḥ or gurvī cāsau aṅganā ca), the meaning being one's own mother, while many others dissolve it as a tatpuruṣa compound meaning 'guror or gurūṇām aṅganā' (which would then include a step-mother, an elder brother's wife and teacher's wife &c.). Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 23–25 for a discussion of this.

Prabhākara held that no word was significant in isolation, but that words became significant when joined together in a sentence. Therefore, he and his followers were called 'anvitābhidhānavādinaḥ' as opposed to Kumārila and his followers who held that words have different senses of their own and then they combine in a sentence and yield a further sense of the sentence. These latter were called 'abhihitānvayavādinaḥ'. Vide notes to Sāhityadarpaṇa (I., II., X) pp. 86–88 for explanations of these two terms by the present writer (ed. of 1956).

---

(Continued from last page)

समासात्कर्मधारयो बलीयानिति स्थितमेव। भामती on शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. I. 3. 15; मायश्चित्ते तु यथा स्थपतीष्टौ मन्त्रादिरहितोऽपि साक्षाच्छ्रुत्या निषादः कर्तृतया गृहीतस्तथा शूद्रः मायश्चित्तेषु। अपरार्क on या. III. 262 p. 1090. In the Ait. Br. 37. 7 niṣādas, selagas and evil-doers are spoken of as robbing a rich man and running away with the booty,

Let us now turn to the interpretation of vākya (sentence). The Ṛgveda and the Sāmaveda are metrical and therefore there is generally no difficulty in arriving at what constitutes in them one syntactical unit (vākya). But much of the Kṛṣṇa Yajurveda is in prose. Therefore, PMS (II. 1. 46) defines[2122] what makes one vākya by stating that when a number of words serve a single purpose, but if one or a few of those words are separated from the rest, the latter words are incomplete in effecting a purpose and stand in need of the words separated, then all these words make one vākya. An example is the mantra 'I offer thee, that art dear to Agni, at the command of God Savitṛ with the arms of Aśvins, with the hands of Pūṣan'. This is one sentence, the purpose of which is nirvāpa (offering). For other definitions of vakya, vide the author's notes on Sāhityadarpaṇa (II. 1) p. 34. For constituting words into a sentence with an understandable meaning expectancy[2123] (ākāṅkṣā), compatibility (yogyatā) and proximity (sannidhi) are required, particularly the first. For example, Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 4. 3 says that without ākāṅkṣā there is no cognition that the words form a vākya. The word ekavākyatā occurs in V. S. III. 4. 24 and conveys that there is a twofold ākāṅkṣā viz. grammatical as well as psychological. It is the listener or reader who has, on hearing or reading a word, a desire to know another idea or word to get a complete sense. When several sentences, each conveying its own sense as far as it goes, are brought together having regard to the fact that one of them may be principal and the others auxiliary, they form one syntactical whole. This shows that sentences are of two kinds, vākyas and mahāvākyas, as the Sāhityadarpaṇa puts it.

---

2122. अर्थैकत्वादेकं वाक्यं साकाङ्क्षं चेद्विभागे स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 46; अत्र प्रश्लिष्टपठितेषु यजुःषु कथमवगम्येत, इयदेकं यजुरिति। यावता पदसमूहेनेज्यते तावान्पदसमूह एकं यजुः। कियता चेज्यते। यावता क्रियाया उपकारः प्रकाश्यते तावत्। वक्तव्याद् वाक्यमित्युच्यते। तस्मादेकार्थः पदसमूहो वाक्यं यदि च विभज्यमानं साकाङ्क्षं पदं भवति। किमुदाहरणं देवस्य त्वा सवितुः प्रसव इति। शबर. The मन्त्र is देवस्य त्वा सवितुः प्रसवेऽश्विनोर्बाहुभ्यां पूष्णो हस्ताभ्यामग्नये जुष्टं निर्वपामि (तै. सं. I. 1. 4. 2, काठक I. 4) and is one वाक्य from देवस्य to निर्वपामि. Vide also शबर on I. 1. 25 (तच्छ्रुतानां क्रियार्थेन समाम्नायोऽर्थस्य तन्निमित्तत्वात्). The word अर्थ in both sūtras means प्रयोजन. The न्यायसुधा takes the word 'artha' as meaning 'sense' (अभिधेय) in order to give to the sūtra a wider scope while Śabara appears to limit it to yajus texts and holds that अर्थ means प्रयोजन. Vide also यावन्ति पदान्येकं प्रयोजनमभिनिर्वर्तयन्ति तावन्त्येकं वाक्यम्। शबर on पू. मी. सू. II. 2. 27 p. 560. The कात्या. श्रौ. has a similar sūtra 'तेषां वाक्यं निराकाङ्क्षम्' I.3.2. The com. explains तेषां as यजुषाम्.

2123. आकाङ्क्षा सन्निधानं च योग्यता चेति च त्रयम्। सम्बन्धकारणत्वेन कृत्स्नं नानन्तरश्रुतिः॥ तन्त्रवा. p 455; वाक्यबोधे समाम्नानामङ्गाङ्गित्वाद्यपेक्षया। वाक्यानामेकवाक्यत्वं पुनः संहृत्य जायते॥ तन्त्रवा. p. 366 on I. 4. 24 (सन्निधेषु वाक्यशेषात्). This verse is q. in the साहित्यदर्पण II. 1; न चाकाङ्क्षामन्तरेणैकवाक्यतामतिपत्तिरस्ति। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. I. 4, 3.

It follows from the definition and the bhāṣya thereon that, in order to constitute a vākya, three conditions are necessary viz. (1) there must be a number of words uttered or put down together (padasamūha), (2) the words must have an expectancy for each other (i. e. if a word in the collection is dropped no complete sense can be had), (3) all the words must serve one purpose or convey together one meaning (arthaikatva, acc. to another view). It is not absolutely necessary that the words in order to form a vākya must be in close proximity. Even if some words intervene there may be a sentence, provided there is ākāṅkṣā between the words. Śabara on PMS IV. 3.11 illustrates this well as stated in the note.[2124] In the verse quoted 'paśyasi' is to be connected with 'jaradgavam', though several other words intervene. Though there is proximity (sannidhi) between 'pinakṣi' and 'jaradgavam' they do not form a sentence as there is no capacity as also ākāṅkṣā between the two. The upshot is that sannidhi (proximity) of words is generally required to form a sentence, though not necessarily required in every case.

The different parts of a mantra text, meant to serve different purposes, may be regarded as distinct sentences. For example, the mantra in Tai. Br.[2125] (III. 7.5) 'I make an agreeable seat (or abode) for thee (O cake!), I prepare it as a very happy one with a stream of clarified butter; do sit thereon with pleased mind, be established in ambrosia, O sacrificial essence of rice'. These are two sentences, the first part being concerned with making a seat, the latter part being concerned with depositing the puroḍāśa on the seat. Similarly, in the passage 'I (cut) thee (O palāśa branch) for food, I (wash or rub) thee for vigour' there are two different sentences, that are independent of each other, as the Śat. Br. employs these with the words 'he cuts the palāśa[2126] branch with the words 'for food (I cut) thee', he washes it with the words 'for vigour thee'. The same rule applies to the ten different clauses 'āyuryajñena kalpatām, prāṇo yajñena kalpatām' in Tai. S. I. 7. 9. 2. They are all different sentences.[2127]

---

2124. व्यवहितमपि पराणुद्य व्यवधायकमानन्तर्येण मनसि विपरिवर्तमानमलमेव भवति विशेषमुपजनयितुम्। यथा। इतः पश्यसि धावन्तं दूरे जातं वनस्पतिम्। त्वां भवीमि विशालाक्षि या पिनक्षि जरद्गवम्॥ इति। अत्र इतः पश्यसीति शब्दो बुद्धौ भवति। सः दूरे जातं वनस्पतिमित्येतैः पदैर्व्यवहितेन जरद्गवमित्यनेन शब्देन व्यवधायकान्यपोह्य सम्बध्यमानः सम्बध्यते। यानि पुनरर्थतो ह्यसमर्थानि तान्यानन्तर्येपि सति न परस्परेण सम्बन्धमर्हन्ति यथा, या पिनक्षि जरद्गवमित्येवमादीनि। शबर on पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 11 p. 1254; भामती on वे. सू. III. 4 21 states नहि समभिव्याहृतैरेवैकवाक्यता भवतीति कश्चिन्नियमहेतुरस्ति। अनुपलक्षितवेशलब्धैरपि विध्यसमभिव्याहृतैरर्थवादैरेकवाक्यतास्युपगमात्।'.

2125. श्योनं ते सदनं कृणोमि घृतस्य धारया सुहोतं कल्पयामि। तस्मिन् सीदामृते प्रतितिष्ठ व्रीहीणां मेध सुमनस्यमानः॥ तै. ब्रा. III. 7. 5. शबर says (on पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 46) ह्रे तु प्रयोजने क्रियेते सदनकरणं पुरोडाशप्रतिष्ठापनं च। तस्माद् भिन्ने वाक्ये पूर्वं सदनकरणे विनियुज्यते, उत्तरं पुरोडाशप्रतिष्ठापने।.

The doctrine of Vākyabheda plays a very important part in Mīmāṁsā as well as in Dharmaśāstra. Vākyabheda literally means 'split of sentences'. When the sentences are equally independent and one sentence does not require or expect words from the other sentence to complete it, they should be treated as separate sentences. This is one sense of 'Vākyabheda.' Another and more frequent sense of Vākyabheda is as follows: The underlying principle of vākyabheda is that one and the same text cannot be construed as laying down two separate vidhis (prescriptions) or that when a certain matter has already been prescribed and then several auxiliary matters are to be prescribed, prescribing[2128] all the auxiliaries in one sentence would 2126. समेषु वाक्यभेदः स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 47; समेषु परस्परानाकाङ्क्षेषु वाक्यं भिद्यते। इषे त्वा इत्यनेनैकोऽर्थः क्रियते, ऊर्जे त्वा इत्यनेनापरः।... श्रुत्या तु गम्यते इषे त्वेति छिनत्ति ऊर्जे त्वेत्यनुमार्ष्टि इति। इषे त्वोर्जे त्वा are the very first words of तै. सं. The शतपथ I. 7. 1. 2 has तमाच्छिनत्ति इषे त्वोर्जे त्वेति. The sūtra may be explained as समेषु परस्परनिरपेक्षतया तुल्येषु यज्ञुर्भेदः स्यात्।.

---

2127. तत्रैकामायुःकृप्तिं 'आयुर्यज्ञेन कल्पताम्' इत्येष मन्त्रः शक्नोति वक्तुम्। प्राणो यज्ञेन कल्पताम्—इत्ययमपि प्राणकृप्तिमपराम्। एवं तु सर्वे कृप्तिविशेषवचनाः। शबर on II. I. 47.

2128. प्राप्ते कर्मण्यनेकगुणविधाने वाक्यभेदापत्तेः। यथाहुः। प्राप्ते कर्मणि० (तन्त्रवा. p. 485 on II. 2.6 quoted in n. 2119). अत्र कर्मपदवत् गुणेऽप्युपलक्षणम्। एकोद्देशेनानेकविधाने वाक्यभेदात्। मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 36, 39. All this is based on Śabara's words 'कर्मचोदना वा आग्नेयादयः स्युः। कुतः। गुणानां युगपच्छासनात्। एकेनैव वाक्येनाम्नानेको गुणो विधातुमिष्यते भवता। न च शब्दान्तरेण चोदिते कर्मण्यनेको गुणः परस्परसम्बन्धे चासति शक्यते विधातुम्। (on II. 2. 6. pp. 485–486), Vide also शबर on p. 593 on II. 3. 4. The मदनपारिजात (on p. 88) has an elaborate discussion upon the proper tithi and time for upākarma in which it echoes the very words of the तन्त्रवा. quoted at the beginning of this note, when मद. पा. states 'तथा च दुष्परिहरणीयो वाक्यभेदः प्राप्ते कर्मण्यनेकगुणविधानात्'.

give rise to the fault of vākyabheda (syntactical split of sentence). In Tai. S. there is the following passage 'the sacrificial post is to be of udumbara tree, the udumbara (tree) is vigour, cattle is vigour; he obtains for him (the sacrificer) by means of vigour ūrj (i. e. by udumbara post) vigour (i. e. cattle) for the attainment of vigour'. This is one syntactical whole (vākya). If it be said that there is a vidhi prescribing the use of udumbara post in a sacrifice and that there is also another vidhi about the fruit viz. securing vigour (i. e. cattle); this would give rise to vākyabheda. Therefore there are no two vidhis in the sentence but only a vidhi and an arthavāda (praise).[2129] Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. III. 3. 57 remarks 'ekaṁ hīdam vākyam Vaiśvānaravidyāviṣayam paurvāparyālocanāt pratiyate ... ekavākyatāvagatau satyām vākyabheda-kalpanasyānyāyyatvāt.' This is said with reference to the first aspect of the idea of Vākyabheda.

The basic idea underlying the latter sense of vākyabheda is this. If an act or a substance or a secondary matter has already been the subject of a vidhi and if concerning the act (or substances &c.) a number of other matters (actions, substances &c.) are enjoined in one sentence, there would be vākyabheda (i. e. there would have to be a separate vidhi for each of the other matters relating to what has already been the subject of a vidhi). On the other hand, if an action, substance or a guṇa is enjoined for the first time along with several secondary matters in one sentence, there would be no fault of vākyabheda i. e. in a single vākya however long or containing many matters, if there is a single vidhi there is no fault. If, in the passage quoted on p. 1258 above[2130] 'one desiring prosperity should offer in sacrifice a white animal to Vāyu', one were to hold that first there is to be a vidhi about prosperity as the fruit or reward, there would be two vidhis and so the fault of vākyabheda, but if one holds that the vidhi is only concerned with offering a white animal and what follows 'vāyurvai kṣepiṣṭhā.....bhūtim gamayati' is merely an arthavāda (praise of the preceding vidhi), there is no vākyabheda. The fault of vākya-

2129. विधौ च वाक्यभेदः स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. I. 2. 25; औदुम्बरो यूपो भवतीति विधावेतस्मिन्नाश्रीयमाणे ऊर्जोऽवरुध्यै इत्येतस्मिंश्च वाक्यं भिद्येत। इत्यौदुम्बरो यूपः पशवस्तः स चोर्जोवरुद्ध्या इति। शबर.

2130. भूतिकाम इत्येतदन्तो विध्युद्देशः। तेनैकवाक्यभूतो वायुर्वै क्षेपिष्ठा देवतेत्येवमादि ... वाक्यं हि सम्बन्धस्य विधायकं द्वौ चेत्सम्बन्धौ विदध्यात्, भूतिकाम आलभेत, आलम्भेन चैष गुणो भविष्यतीति। भिद्येत तर्हि एवं सति वाक्यम्। शबर on I. 2. 7 pp. 117 and 119.

bheda arises when more vidhis than one are held to occur in the same vākya.[2131]

A few examples must be cited to illustrate the principle of vākyabheda. A simple example is 'graham sammārṣṭi'. If one were to interpret this as meaning 'he is to clean the cup' and also as meaning that only a single cup is to be cleaned there would be vākyabheda. Therefore, it was decided that the singular number in 'graham' is not to be insisted upon and cleaning of all cups was to be resorted to; otherwise there would be two vidhis viz. 'graham sammṛjyāt' and 'ekam-eva sammṛjyāt'. Śabara quotes (on PMS I. 3. 3) a śruti 'one who has a son and whose hair is dark should consecrate the vedic fires'. Agnyādhāna is laid down by śruti texts such as Tai. Br. I. 1. 2. 6, Śat. II. 1. 2. Therefore, the above text only lays down certain subsidiary matters about it. A man may have dark hair but no son or he may have a son when his hair is turning grey. Therefore, if that sentence is meant to prescribe both attributes (having a son and also having dark hair), there would be two distinct vidhis in the same vākya, that is, there would be the fault of vākya-bheda, which has to be avoided. Therefore, that sentence must be understood as indicating a certain age viz. he must not be a mere boy (at the time of agnyādhāna) but of an age to bear a son, nor very old (when hair turns grey), i. e. he must be neither too young nor too old at the time of agnyādhāna. A lakṣaṇā as regards the words 'jātaputraḥ' and 'kṛṣṇakeśaḥ' is resorted to and lakṣaṇā is only a fault as to a word, while vākyabheda is a fault of a sentence and therefore lakṣaṇā should be preferred to vākyabheda. The V. M. quotes (p. 115) the verse of Manu[2132]

2131. बहवोऽपि ह्यर्था युगपदेकेन सम्बध्यन्ते। न च तावता वाक्यं भिद्यते। अनेक-विधितो हि वाक्यभेद उक्तः। तन्त्रवा. p. 551 on II. 2 26.

2132. This text of Manu has been a subject of several conflicting judicial decisions, which are now of no use since there is now a law governing Hindu Adoptions viz. the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act 78 of 1956, by section 12 proviso b of which the decisions in 40 Bom. 429 and in some later cases have been set aside. Those interested may read the present author's notes in his translation of the V. M. pp. 121–123 and the footnotes and his paper (Brief sketch of the Pūrvamīmāṁsā system' pp. 37-38 (ABORI, vol. VI, pp. 1-40) and also H. of Dh. vol. III, pp. 690–697. In Dattatreya V. Govind I.L.R 40 Bom. 429 (where a person, in whom property had already become vested as the sole surviving male in the family, was given in adoption into another family) it was held, relying on Manu IX. 142, that on adoption that person lost all rights to the property of the

(Continued on next page)

IX. 142 'the son given shall not have (share) the family name (gotra) and the wealth (riktha) of his natural father; the piṇḍa (cake offered to deceased ancestors) follows the family name and the wealth; of him who gives (his son in adoption) the svadhā (obsequies) cease (so far as that son is concerned)'. After citing the above smṛti passage 'one having a son' and another text for the position of the sacrificial post (vide PMS III. 7. 13–14) with reference to the altar, the V. M. holds that one should not merely emphasize the words gotra, riktha, piṇḍa and svadhā used by Manu and take them literally but should hold that the verse contains a lakṣaṇā (indicated meaning); it indicates the cessation of all those consequences that are due to connection with the piṇḍa in the case of the natural father and Manu says nothing about the property taken by a son before he is given in adoption into another family.

Another illustration of vākyabheda can be cited from the law of re-union. The Mit., Dāyabhāga and Sm. C. (on Vyavahāra p. 302) quote a text[2133] of Bṛhaspati 'that man who being once separated from his father, brother, or paternal uncle again dwells natural family that had become vested in him before adoption. That decision holds that Manu laid down two propositions, viz. (1) a man forfeits by adoption into another family the property that once belonged to the family and that became vested in him before adoption, (2) A person given in adoption into another family does not, after the adoption, take any property of the family to which he belonged but whose connection with the family ceased after adoption. These are two distinct propositions and to hold that Manu's text is capable of these two propositions is liable to the fault of Vākyabheda. The V. M. (p. 115) further relies on the construction of another vedic text 'He fixes half of the yūpa inside the vedi and half outside it.' This is interpreted by PMS III. 7. 13–14, Śabara and the Tantravārtika as merely indicating a certain region for the fixing of the yūpa and that the words are not to be taken literally, because in that case there would be Vākyabheda. The दुपटीका brings out the meaning clearly. 'समस्तस्य यूपस्यान्तर्वहिर्वा माने प्राप्ते-अर्धमन्तर्वेदि-इति नियम्यते। द्वितीयस्यार्धस्य पुनरप्य-नियमप्रसक्तौ – अर्धं बहिर्वेदि – इत्यपि विधातव्यम्। ततश्चानेकार्थत्वाद्वाक्यभेदो मिलित्वाक्या-तानुषङ्गक्लेशश्च प्रसज्यते। अतश्चेदृशमवधारणमर्धमन्तरवेद्येव न त्वर्धमेवान्तर्वेदीति। तथा सति चार्धान्तरमनियतत्वात् कदाचिदन्तरपि प्राप्नोतीति न बहिर्भावः सिद्ध्यतीति। ... तस्माद्द्वाभ्यां विशिष्ट एको देशोऽभिधीयत इत्येवमवाक्यभेदः।'.

---

(Continued from last page)

2133. विभक्तं धनं पुनर्मिश्रीकृतं संसृष्टं तदस्यास्तीति संसृष्टी। संसृष्टत्वं च न येन केनापि किन्तु पित्रा भ्रात्रा पितृव्येण वा। यथाह बृहस्पतिः। विभक्तो यः पुनः पित्रा भ्रात्रा वैकत्र संस्थितः। पितृव्येणाथ वा प्रीत्या स तत्संसृष्ट उच्यते॥ मिता. on या. II 138; व्यवहार chap. 12 quotes बृहस्पति and remarks 'परिगणितव्यतिरिक्तेषु संसर्गकृतो विशेषो नादरणीयः परिगणनानर्थक्यात्'.

through affection with them (or any of them) is said to be re-united with them (or him)'. According to the Mit., a reunion is possible only with father, brother and paternal uncle and with no one else, since no one else is mentioned in the text of Bṛhaspati. The V. M. does not approve of this limitation and says that a re-union is possible with all or any of those that participated in the partition and that the three persons, father, brother and uncle are mentioned only by way of illustration (i. e. there is lakṣaṇā). A man may separate not only from the three named persons but also from his paternal grand-father, the grandson of his brother and the son of his paternal uncle and several other persons and therefore the construction of the text of Bṛhaspati by the Mit. is liable to the fault of vākyabheda, since on that interpretation there would be two separate propositions viz. (1) that man is to be called re-united who having become separate again stays together with the one from whom he separated, (2) one can re-unite only with the father, brother, or paternal uncle. Thus there would be two distinct prescriptions in one sentence. Therefore, one should have recourse to lakṣaṇā viz. that the three named persons indicate a class of persons from whom one may have separated but with whom he then stayed together. The Vīramitrodaya (on Vyavahāra), V. R. (pp. 605–67), V. C. p. 533 hold the same view as that of the V. M.[2134]

The Smṛticandrikā provides that after the death of a man when the sons divide, the mother is entitled to a share equal to that of each son if the estate to be divided is not very large, but if the estate be very large she is to get as much only as would be necessary for her maintenance (although Yāj. II. 123 and others employ the words 'samam aṁśam'). The Madanaratna on Vyavahāra criticizes this as a bad provision on the ground that it is vitiated by Vākyabheda, since there would be two different propositions (vidhis) about the meaning to be attached to the words 'samam aṁśam' (equal share) according as the estate to be divided is large or small.[2135]

---

2134. अत्र पितृभ्रातृपितृव्यैरेव सह संसृष्टता नान्येन वचनेनोपादानादिति मिताक्षरादिषु। विभागकर्तृसामान्याधिकरण्येनैव सेति युक्तम्। पित्रादिपदानि तु विभागकर्तुमात्रोपलक्षकाणि। अर्धमन्तर्वेदि मिनोत्यर्धं बहिर्वेदीतिवत्। अन्यथा वाक्यभेदात्। व्य. म. p. 146. This text (अर्धमन्तर्वेदि etc.) is discussed in P.M.S. III. 7. 13–14 (तथा यूपस्य वेदिः। देशमात्रं वाऽशिष्येणैकवाक्यत्वात्) and the conclusion is that this text is not to be taken literally (since in that case there would be two propositions and the fault of Vākyabheda) but as merely indicating the region where the sacrificial post is to be planted. Vide the author's notes in translation of V. M. p. 191.

There is another principle about sentences called 'anuṣaṅga' (elliptical extension) or the extension of a word, phrase or clause from a sentence to another or other sentences, provided all those sentences are of the same type or form. This is one type of anuṣaṅga. Another type is where each of two or more sentences appears to be complete by itself, but there are certain words of a subordinate character in the last sentence of a passage which have to be taken up or understood in the preceding sentences. This latter is also called anukarṣa. In the three upasads of Jyotiṣṭoma, the first[2136] is in honour of Agni in which the mantra is 'yā to Agne ayāśayā tanūr-varṣiṣṭhā gavhareṣṭhogram vaco apāvadhīm tveṣam vaco apāvadhīm svāhā'; the other two Upasads have the two mantras 'yā te Agne rajāśaya' and 'yā te Agne harāśayā' which are incomplete and in need of complementary words to complete the sentences. The conclusion is that the words 'Varṣiṣṭhā ... svāhā' are to be supplied from the first sentence and not other words from the popular language that one may choose. Another passage of the Tai.[2137] S. is 'cit-patistvā punātu, vākpatis-tvā punātu, devas-tvā savitā punatvacchidreṇa pavitreṇa vasoḥ sūryasya raśmibhiḥ'. Here the first two clauses appear to be prima facie complete, but when we look to the last clause where the word 'punātu' is particularised by certain other words, we at once feel that the first two clauses also should be connected with the words 'acchidreṇa... raśmibhiḥ' and that then they would be quite complete.

2135. यत्पुनः स्मृतिचन्द्रिकायां समशब्दस्य सार्थकत्वमुक्तं विभाज्यधनस्य भूयस्त्वे जीवनमात्रोपयोगि-धनग्रहणं स्वल्पत्वे तु समांशहरणमेव, न तु जीवनोपयोगमपेक्षादधिकहरण-मित्येवमर्थः समशब्द इति तदसुन्दरम् । कदाचिज्जीवनमात्रोपयोगिधनग्रहणविधानं कदाचित्-समांशग्रहणविधानमिति वाक्यभेदापादकविधिवैरूप्यप्रसङ्गात् । मदनरत्न on व्यवहार p. 331. Vide स्मृतिच. II. p. 268.

2136. अनुषङ्गे वाक्यसमाप्तिः सर्वेषु तुल्ययोगित्वात् । पू. मी. सू II. 1. 48; या ते अग्ने अयाशया तनूर्वर्षिष्ठा गह्वरेष्ठोग्रं वचोऽपावधीं त्वेषं वचोऽपावधीं स्वाहा, या ते अग्ने रजाशया, या ते अग्ने हराशया इति। अत्र सन्देहः । तनूर्वर्षिष्ठेति किं सर्वेष्वनुषक्तव्यामाहोस्विल्लौकिको वाक्यशेषः कर्तव्य इति । For the mantra, vide तै. सं. I. 2. 11. 2 and वाज. सं. V. 8. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1151 n. 2562. The वाज. सं. and शतपथ III. 4. 4. 23–25 read अयःशया, रजःशया and हरिशया.

2137. चित्पतिस्त्वा ... रश्मिभिः । तै. सं. I. 2. 1. 2; शबर on PMS. II. 1. 48 says अथेह कथं भवितव्यम्, यत्र निराकांक्षाणां संनिधौ परिपूरणसमर्थः श्रूयते। यथा चित्पतिं ... रश्मिभिरिति । ... एकश्चासौ पुनातुशब्दः पुनः पुनरुच्चरितः । तेनावगच्छामो यत्र पुनातु-शब्दः प्रयुक्तस्तत्र तेनैकवाक्यत्वादाच्छिद्रेणेत्ययमपि प्रयोक्तव्यः । ... स च पुनातुशब्दोऽ-च्छिद्रेणेत्यनेन विशिष्टः । तेन पुनातुशब्देन साहचर्येण नियोगतः सर्वे निराकांक्षीकर्तव्याः ।.

The V. M. has a long disquisition on the principle of anuṣaṅga applied by the Mit. and Madanaratna to the succession to the wealth of one who died re-united. Yāj. II. 135–136 lay down the order of succession to the wealth of a person dying sonless. Yāj. II. 137 deals with succession to the property of a forest hermit, an ascetic or a perpetual Vedic student. The Mit. then holds that Yāj. II. 138 'saṁsṛṣṭinastu saṁsṛṣṭī' is to be construed as an exception to Yāj. II. 135–136 and understands that the words 'of one dying without having a son' (grandson or great-grandson) are to be supplied before Yāj. II. 138 from II. 136 (i. e. there is to be anuṣaṅga of the words 'svaryātasyāputrasya'. The V. M. does not approve of this and states that there is no rational ground for applying the principle of anuṣaṅga and therefore the order of succession to the property left by one re-united propounded by V. M. becomes different from that of the Mit. The whole discussion is rather abstruse and lengthy and the present writer feels that the space required for exposition should be saved. Those interested may consult the exhaustive notes (pp. 265–275) in the edition of the Vyavahāramayūkha (Poona, 1926) on the passages of the V. M. beginning with the one in the note below.[2138]

This principle of anuṣaṅga cannot apply where words of a different type intervene between the several sentences. For example, when the animal to be offered is killed a long passage occurs which contains the[2139] words 'sam te prāṇo vāyunā gacchatām, sam yajatrair-aṅgāni, sam yajñapatir-āśiṣā' &c. (may your limbs be joined to the worshipful deities and may the sacrificer be united to blessing &c). Here the first clause is separated from the 3rd clause by a clause in which there are two words in the plural while the first and third clauses have two words in the singular; therefore there is no anuṣaṅga of the words of the first clause into the 2nd and one may employ for completing the sense of the 3rd clause some ordinary word from popular language (and not the words from the 1st clause).

---

2138. संसृष्टिधनहरणाधिकारिणमाह याज्ञवल्क्यः—संसृष्टिनस्तु संसृष्टी सोदरस्य तु सोदरः। पत्नी दुहितरः (या. 2. 135–136) इत्यादेरपवादोऽयम्। ... यत्तु विज्ञानेश्वरमदनादयोऽपवादस्योत्सर्गसमानविषयत्वनियमात् पूर्वोक्त-स्वर्यातस्यापुत्रस्येत्येतत्पदानुषङ्गाच्चैतदपि पुत्रपौत्रप्रपौत्रहीनविषयम्; । अतस्ताद्दशसुतसंसृष्टिधनमसंसृष्टिसंनिहितपत्न्यादिसद्भावेऽन्यः संसृष्ट्येव गृह्णीयादिति। तच्चिन्त्यम्। तेन विनापि गतौ सम्भवस्यामनुषङ्गे मानाभावात्। व्य. म. p. 147; vide मदनरत्न (on व्यवहार) p. 372 'न च संसृष्टिनस्तु संसृष्टीति याज्ञवल्क्यवाक्येऽपुत्रस्येति पदाश्रवणात्संसृष्टिमरणमेव प्रयोजकमिति वाच्यं, स्वर्यातस्य ह्यपुत्रस्येति वाक्योपात्तस्यापुत्रस्येति पदस्य स्वर्यातस्येतिपदवत् संसृष्टिवाक्येऽनुषङ्गात्।'.

2139. व्यवायाच्चानुषज्येत। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 49; शबर says सं ते वायुर्वातेन गच्छतां सं यजत्रैरङ्गानि सं यज्ञपतिराशिषा इति। वायुर्वातेन गच्छताम्—इत्येव सं यजत्रैरङ्गानि—इति बहुवचनान्तेन व्यवहितत्वात् सं यज्ञपतिराशिषा इत्यत्र नानुषज्यते। ... तस्माद्बहुवचनान्तस्य परस्य च तद्वत्त्वेतस्य लौकिको वाक्यशेषः कर्तव्य इति।'. The तै. सं. I. 3.8. 1 reads 'सं ते प्राणो वायुना'. It is probable that Śabara quotes from memory or sets out the mantra from the Mai. Saṁhitā I. 2. 15 which reads सं ते वायुर्वातेन.

Veda enjoins many acts such as performing a yāga, casting an oblation into fire, making a gift, milking a cow, melting clarified butter &c, but all are not on the same level. Some are pradhāna (primary [2140] or principal), while others are guṇa-bhūta (subsidiary). The acts denoted by words such as Prayājas by which some substance is not embellished or not made fit or is not produced are primary, while those which produce a substance or make it fit (such as pounding in the case of grains of paddy) are subsidiary. Acts are further classified into various groups such as nitya, naimittika or kāmya or as kratvartha and puruṣārtha. These have already been explained. There are six means [2141] by which is ascertained the difference or non-difference among acts viz. (1) śabdāntara (different words, such as yajati, juhoti, dadāti, i. e. yāga, homa, dāna are different acts); abhyāsa [2142] (repetition) as in 'samidho yajati, tanūnapātam yajati' &c. (Tai. S. II. 6. 1. 1-2), where the word yajati is repeated five times and therefore there are five different acts prescribed; (3) saṅkhyā (number) as in 'he sacrifices seventeen animals to Prajāpati' (Tai. Br. I. 3. 4. 3), which are seventeen distinct acts; (4) guṇa (an accessory detail such as the deity

---

2140. तानि द्वैधं गुणप्रधानभूतानि। यैर्द्रव्यं न चिकीर्ष्यते तानि प्रधानभूतानि द्रव्यस्य गुणभूतत्वात्। यैस्तु द्रव्यं चिकीर्ष्यते गुणस्तत्र प्रतीयेत तस्य द्रव्यप्रधानत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 6-8.

2141. तदिह षड्विधः कर्मभेदो वक्ष्यते-शब्दान्तरं, अभ्यासः, संख्या, गुणः, प्राक्रिया, नामधेयमिति। ..... तदेतज्ज्ञानाकर्मलक्षणमित्यध्यायमाचक्षते ..... । शबर on पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 1 'भावार्थाः कर्मशब्दास्तेभ्यः क्रिया प्रतीयेतैव ह्यर्थो विधीयते।'. These six are mentioned in P. M. S. II. 2. 1., II. 2. 2 (अभ्यास), II. 2. 21 (संख्या), II. 2. 23 (गुण), II. 2. 22 (नामधेय or संज्ञा), प्रकरण (or प्राक्रिया) in II. 3. 24. Śabara mentions the six in one order, while the P. M. S. deals with them in a slightly different order. Parāśara I. 38 says that a man should be intent on six actions, viz. bath, sandhyā etc. and relies on śabdāntara to establish that they are six distinct acts and not one composite act. Vide परा. मा. I. 1. 2.

2142. For the distinction between yāga, homa and dāna, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 714 n. 1703.

or substance in such a passage as 'when curds[2143] are put into heated milk it turns into curdled solid mass āmikṣā which is offered to Viśvedevas and the liquid called vājina is to be offered to Vājins, these two being two distinct offerings); (5) prakaraṇa, (context). In the sentence 'one should offer agnihotra' (Tai. S. I. 5. 9. 1) there is a vidhi of the daily performance of Agnihotra. In the Kuṇḍapāyinām-ayana[2144] it is said 'he offers agnihotra for a month'. Since this last occurs in a different context altogether (while the former occurs in the context of Darśa-pūrṇamāsa), this sentence (from Kuṇḍapāyinām-ayana) deals with a different act from that of the daily Agnihotra. (6) The name (Sañjñā) also differentiates acts, since they occur in utpattivākya (originative injunction) as in the passage quoted in the note below.[2145] This technique about determining what actions are different on account of the several grounds noted above, was employed by Hemādri, the Kālanirṇaya and the Nirṇayasindhu in deciding whether Janmāṣṭamīvrata and Jayantīvrata are really one vrata or separate vratas. Vide pp. 132–133 above.

It has already been stated above (p. 1228) that there are four kinds of vidhis of which viniyogavidhi is one. This last conveys the relation between a religious act as principal (śeṣin or aṅgin) and[2146] its auxiliaries (aṅgas). This is the concern of the third chapter of the P. M. S., which first defines 'śeṣa', states why it is called 'śeṣa', how it is employed in religious acts, what are the means of determining the relation of śeṣa to śeṣin and the comparative strength of each of the means.

2143. तसे पयसि दध्यानयति सा वैश्वदेव्यामिक्षा वाजिन्यो वाजिनम्।, शबर on IV. 1. 23 cites this and states 'आमिक्षायां दधिपयसी विद्येते न वाजिने। ... वाजिने तिक्तकटुको रसः।'. वैश्वदेवी is a तद्धित meaning विश्वेदेवाः देवता अस्याः, formed acc. to पाणिनि IV. 2. 24 'तस्य देवता'; वाजिनामिक्षारूपगुणभेदाद्वाजिनद्रव्यकं कर्मान्तरम्' आमिक्षाद्रव्यकं च कर्मान्तरमिति चिन्तितम्। वाजिनं नामामिक्षोत्पत्तिशिष्टमुदकम्। आमिक्षा नाम पयोदधिमिश्रणजनितं दृढाकारं द्रव्यम्। सर्वदर्शनकौमुदी p. 100 (T. S. S.). शङ्कराचार्य mentions this text on वे. सू. III. 3. 1. In तै. ब्रा. I. 6. 2. 5 we have 'वैश्वदेव्यामिक्षा भवति। वैश्वदेव्यो वै प्रजाः। ... वाजिनमानयति।'. आमिक्षा is the प्रयोजक (inducing force or motive) of putting curds into boiled milk and vājina is not the prayojaka, since in producing āmikṣā it appears of itself.

2144. शबर on VII. 3. 1 says कुण्डपायिनामयने श्रूयते मासमग्निहोत्रं जुहोतीति। तत्रैतत्समधिगतं नैयमिकादग्निहोत्रात्कर्मान्तरमेतादिति।.

2145. संज्ञा चोत्पत्तिसंयोगात्। पू. मी. सू. II. 2. 22; शबर 'अथैष ज्योतिरथैष विश्वज्योतिरथैष सर्वज्योतिः। एतेन सहस्रदक्षिणेन यजेत इति श्रूयते।. The conclusion is that all the three are names of three different acts.

2146. अङ्गलक्षणमेवेदमिहोक्तं शेषलक्षणम्। तद्धिशेषमपश्यत्वात्तत्राम्यान्तर्गतिरिष्यतेः॥ तन्त्रवा. p. 647 on पू. मी. सू. III. 1. 1.

Some examples of aṅga and aṅgin may have to be given here. In 'vrihīn prokṣati' (he sprinkles rice grains with water) the sprinkling (prokṣaṇa) is an aṅga (stands in a subsidiary relation to) of rice grains as directly shown by the objective case (vrihīn). The prokṣaṇa (is motivated by) has the purpose of contributing to the transcendental result (the apūrva), since what is meant is that if, without the sprinkling of water on the rice grains, a sacrifice (yāga) were performed, apūrva would not be brought about. To take another example,[2147] 'he takes hold of the bridle of the horse with (the mantra beginning with) 'they took hold of the bridle of ṛta (cosmic order)'. Here the direct assertion (śruti) shown by the objective case in 'raśanām' shows that that mantra stands in a subordinate relation to (is an aṅga of) the bridle of the horse, since the utterance of it when taking hold of the bridle of the horse effects a saṁskāra in the bridle and taking hold is also an aṅga of the horse bridle (which is in the objective case), just as prokṣaṇa is an aṅga of rice grains.

It has already been stated that 'śeṣa' means 'what subserves the purpose of another' and it is śeṣa of that other (P. M. S. III. 1. 2 'Śeṣaḥ parārthatvāt') and that, according to Bādari (III. 1. 3) 'to substances, properties (like reddish colour of a cow), saṁskāras[2148] (what makes a person or thing fit for being employed in a yāga or for any other purpose) the word śeṣa is always applied, while, acc. to Jaimini (III. 1. 4-6) religious rites are śeṣa to the result or fruit (expressed or implied), the fruit is śeṣa to the agent of religious acts and an agent is śeṣa to certain acts. The word 'śeṣa' is often employed by Dharmaśāstra works. For example, the Mit. while commenting on Yāj. II. 118-119 states that the first half of verse 118 is śeṣa to all the rest[2149] (i. e. serves the purpose of the remaining verse and a half). The result is (if the Mit. be followed) that if a gift is 2147. 'Imām-agṛbhṇan raśanām-ṛtasya-ityaśvābhidhānīm-ādatte':—this occurs in Tai. S. V. 1. 2. 1. The words 'imām-agṛbhṇan raśanām-ṛtasya' constitute a quarter of the mantra in Tai. S. IV. 1. 2. 1.

---

2148. संस्कारो नाम स भवति यस्मिञ्जाते पदार्थो भवति योग्यः कस्यचिदर्थस्य। तेनापि क्रियायां कर्तव्यायां प्रयोजनमिति सोपि परार्थः। शाबर on PMS III. 1. 3; तथा संस्कारोप्यवहन्त्यादिर्यागसाधनपुरोडाशादिनिर्वृत्तये चोदितानां व्रीह्यादीनां स्वरूपेणायोग्यत्वादवहतानां योग्यत्वमापाद्ययज्ञत्पत्त्यैवाङ्गं भवतीति। तन्त्रवा. on the same p. 660.

2149. अत्र च पितृद्रव्याविरोधेन यत्किंचित्स्वयमर्जितमिति सर्वशेषः। ... तथा पितृद्रव्याविरोधेनेत्यस्य सर्वशेषत्वादेव पितृद्रव्याविरोधेन प्रतिग्रहलब्धमपि विभजनीयम्। मिता. on या. II. 118-119.

acquired (by a coparcener) from a grateful friend who was placed under an obligation by spending family wealth, if a property is acquired by a gift from a member's father-in-law who was paid from the family property for securing the bride for that member or if the property of the family lost to it was recovered by a member with the help of (other paternal estate), or if a member of the family learnt at the expense of the family and made gains from that learning, then those kinds of property were liable to be partitioned among all members. This view of the Mit. was not shared by several other writers and works such as the Dāyabhāga (VI. 1. 8), and Viśvarūpa. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 579–580 for further remarks.

The P. M. S speaks of six means that are helpful in determinig, as regards viniyoga-vidhis, what are principal and what are auxiliary when there is a doubt or when there is a conflict. They are śruti (direct vedic statement or assertion), liṅga (indirect indication), vākya (syntactical connection or relation), prakaraṇa (context), sthāna (place or sequence), samākhyā (sañjñā, name). When several of these come together and refer to the same subject each succeeding one is weaker than each preceding one, since each succeeding one is more remote than each preceding one from the objective (viz. the viniyoga). P. M. S. III. 3. 14 is called 'balābalādhikaraṇa'.[2150]

An example where both śruti and liṅga come in conflict is 'with the Aindrī verse (verse addressed to Indra) he should worship the Gārhapatya fire'. The verse addressed to Indra[2151]

2150. श्रुतिलिङ्गवाक्यप्रकरणस्थानसमाख्यानां समवाये पारदौर्बल्यमर्थविप्रकर्षात्। पू. मी. सू. III. 3. 14; समवाय means एकार्थोपनिपात. The तन्त्रवार्तिक states 'समानविषयत्वं हि समवायोऽभिधीयते' and adds 'न ह्येकत्र सम्भवमात्रं समवायः किं तर्हि विषयैक्यत्वम्' (p. 822) and तस्माद्विरोधविषयमेव समवायग्रहणम् (p. 823); दुर्बलस्य भावः दौर्बल्यम्, परस्य दौर्बल्यं परदौर्बल्यं तदेव पारदौर्बल्यम्।; विप्रकर्ष means विलम्ब; शास्त्रदीपिका on this सूत्र (p. 241) remarks 'इदानीं श्रुत्यादीनामेकविषयसमवायेन विरोधे सति बलाबलं विचार्यते'.

2151. निवेशनः सङ्गमनो वसूनामित्यैन्द्रा गार्हपत्यमुपतिष्ठते। मैत्रा. सं. III. 2. 4. This verse occurs in चयन, According to some (e. g. भामती on वे. सू. III. 3. 25) the Aindrī verse is कदाचनस्तरीरसि नेन्द्र सश्चसि दाशुषे। ऋ. VIII. 51. 7 and वाज. सं. VIII. 2. It is used in अग्निहोत्र (महोपस्थान). The words श्रुति and लिङ्ग have technical senses in PMS III. 3. 14. Śruti ordinarily means Veda or a vedic text. But here श्रुति and लिङ्ग mean respectively निरपेक्षो रवः श्रुतिः, शब्दसामर्थ्यं लिङ्गम् i. e. a vedic word or a passage that is independent (i.e. does not require any intermediate step to be taken) and liṅga means the suggestive power of words. Both the definitions are given by the अर्थसंग्रह; 'यत्तावच्छis 'niveśanaḥ saṅgamano vasūnām...Indro na tasthau samare pathīnām' (Tai. S. IV. 2. 5. 4). Here the doubt arises whether one should worship Indra as the word 'Aindryā' indicates or whether one should worship Gārhapatya (as the passage directly asserts) with a verse addressed to Indra, or whether one should worship both or whether one should worship either Indra or Gārhapatya as one likes. The conclusion is that śruti (direct Vedic assertion) is more powerful than liṅga. On hearing the words 'Gārhapatyam upatiṣṭhate' we are directly told by the Veda about the worship of Gārhapatya. The word 'Aindryā' being in the instrumental (as in 'dadhnā juhoti'–he performs homa with curds) merely supplies a detail (guṇa) viz. that the mantra to be repeated is one addressed to Indra and there is no word that directly asserts that Indra is to be worshipped.[2152] Śabara on PMS III. 2. 4 explains that even Gārhapatya has some of the qualities of Indra and so metaphorically he may be called Indra (as a brave man is called a lion), since Gārhapatya is a means of accomplishing yajña like Indra or Gārhapatya may be called Indra from the root 'ind', and may be taken to mean 'a master or lord'.

(Continued on next page)

The six means may each come in conflict with all the means that follow each of them. Therefore, there will be five cases of conflict of śruti with liṅga (which has already been described) or with vākya, or prakaraṇa or sthāna or samākhyā; there will be four cases of conflict between liṅga and vākya or each of the three ones (of the means) that follow vākya in the sūtra, in the same way vākya may be in conflict with prakaraṇa and the other two (in all three cases), prakaraṇa may be in conflict with sthāna or samākhyā (i. e. two cases) and sthāna may be in conflict with samākhyā. So that there are in all fifteen cases of conflict of the six means among themselves. We need not

---

(Continued from last page)

स्वस्यार्थमभिधातुं सामर्थ्यं तल्लिङ्गम्, यदर्थस्याभिधानं शब्दस्य श्रवणमात्रादेवागम्यते स श्रुत्यावगम्यते। श्रवणं श्रुतिः। शबर on III. 3. 13 p 825; compare पाणिनि 'कर्तुरीप्सिततमं कर्म' (I. 4. 49), 'कर्तृकरणयोस्तृतीया' (II. 3. 18). The word ऐन्द्र्या being in the instrumental conveys the idea of करण, while गार्हपत्यं being in the objective case at once conveys that it is principal in उपस्थान.

2152. गुणाद्वाप्यभिधानं स्यात्सम्बन्धस्याशास्त्रहेतुत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. III. 2. 4; शबर, 'भवति हि गुणादप्यभिधानम्। यथा सिंहो देवदत्तः ... इति। एवमिहाप्यभिन्द्रे गार्हपत्य इन्द्रशब्दो भविष्यति। अस्ति चास्येन्द्रसाद्दश्यम्। यथैवेन्द्रो यज्ञसाधनमेवं गार्हपत्योऽपि। अथवेन्द्रते-रैश्वर्यकर्मण इन्द्रो भवति। भवति च गार्हपत्यस्यापि स्वस्मिन् कार्ये ईश्वरत्वम्।', vide भामती on वे. सू. III. 3. 25.

take into account the conflict of one of the six means with its predecessors, since to say that liṅga may be in conflict with śruti is the same thing as saying that śruti may be in conflict with liṅga. Very large space would have to be devoted if all these fifteen possible conflicts are to be exemplified from Vedic and Dharmaśāstra texts. Therefore, the author does not essay that task.

Dharmaśāstra works often utilize this adhikaraṇa called balābala (PMS III. 3. 14). For example, the Par. M. quotes[2153] a śruti passage that one should perform the daily evening sandhyā adoration of Āditya (the sun) with mantras addressed to Varuṇa and remarks that "Vāruṇībhiḥ" (like Aindryā) is only liṅga while, 'Ādityam-upsthāya' is śruti (direct assertion) and therefore the sun is to be worshipped in the evening with mantras addressed to Varuṇa and refers to the example 'aindryā gārhapatyam upatiṣṭhate' for support.

The fourth adhyāya of the PMS deals mainly with the subject of prayojya and prayojaka and kratvartha and puruṣārtha. The latter two have been explained and illustrated above (pp. 1232–1235). A few illustrations of the first two may be given. The Prayājas have been declared above to be kratvartha (p. 1233). Therefore, kratu (sacrifice) is the prayojaka (motivating force) of Prayājas. The reward (phala, svarga or the like) is the prayojaka of yāga or a puruṣārtha rite. That is a prayojaka for the sake of which a man is led to perform something by a Vedic exhortatory passage. The sentence is 'one should offer the Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice for securing svarga'; therefore the reward (svarga and the like) is the prayojaka of Darśapūrṇamāsa-yāga.[2154] The injunction to mix curds with milk makes a person do so for producing āmikṣā and not vājina, since this latter arises of itself in preparing āmikṣā. Therefore, it is āmikṣā, being the havis in the Vaiśvadevayāga that is the prayojaka of the Vaiśvadevayāga and vājina-yāga is not the prayojaka of putting curds into milk [2155] (P. M. S. IV.1 22–24). The result is that, if by accident āmikṣā is destroyed, in order to secure the havis (āmikṣā) curds will have again to be put in boiled milk, but if vājina, not being prayojaka, is destroyed, curds need not be put into boiled milk again.

---

2153. वारुणीभिस्तथादित्यमुपस्थाय प्रदक्षिणम्। यद्यपि वारुणीभिर्वरुणस्योपस्थानं लिङ्गबलात् प्राप्तं तथापि श्रुतेः प्राबल्यात् तया लिङ्गं बाधित्वा आदित्योपस्थाने एव विनियुज्यते। परा. मा. I. 1 pp. 298–299. पराशर० refers to इमं मे वरुण (ऋ. I. 25. 19–21) as वारुणी verses. In Mahārāṣṭra even in these days the vedic mantras recited in सायंसन्ध्या are यच्चिद्धि ते विशो यथा प्र देव वरुण व्रतम् and the following nine verses (i. e. Ṛg. I. 25 1–10).

2154. Compare Śabara on PMS IV. 1. 1 (athātaḥ kratvarthapuruṣārthayor-jijñāsā) 'यापि प्रयोजकामप्रयोजकफलविध्यर्थवादाङ्गप्रधानचिन्ता सापि क्रत्वर्थपुरुषार्थजिज्ञासैव। कथम्। अङ्गं क्रत्वर्थः प्रधानं पुरुषार्थः। फलविधिः पुरुषार्थः, अर्थवादः क्रत्वर्थः। प्रयोजकः कश्चित्पुरुषार्थोऽप्रयोजकः क्रत्वर्थः। तस्मात्क्रत्वर्थपुरुषार्थयोर्जिज्ञासेति सूचितम्। ... क्रतवे यः स क्रत्वर्थः, पुरुषाय यः स पुरुषार्थः।'

Examples of puruṣārtha acts have been given above (p. 1234) such as the Prājāpativrata. This chapter (in 2nd pāda) deals with several cases of pratipattikarma and arthakarma already explained above (pp. 1231–32). There are certain substances, certain embellishments and subsidiary actions with which some phala is associated. For example, it is said (in Tai. S. III. 7. 5. 2) 'he who has juhū ladle made of parṇa (palāśa) wood never hears an evil word about himself'; 'that he applies collyrium (to his eyes), he injures the eye of his enemy' (Tai. S. VI. I. 1. 5); 'That he performs the Prayājas and Anuyājas, that is indeed the armour of the sacrifice'. PMS declares that these texts about rewards associated with substances, embellishments and subsidiary acts are really not vidhis about rewards but are mere arthavādas, because all these serve the purpose of the principal kratu. [2156]

This fourth chapter (in 3rd pāda) also decides that, although no reward is expressly declared by Śruti (the Veda) for the performance of the Viśvajit sacrifice, still in the Viśvajit sacrifice (and in other sacrifices where no reward is expressly mentioned) svarga is the reward. [2157]

The Viśvajit is a striking sacrifice in which the performer donates all belongings of which he is the owner ('Viśvajiti sarva-

---

2155. तस्मादामिक्षा प्रयोक्त्री वाजिनमप्रयोजकमिति। शबर on III. 1. 23; यद्युभय प्रयोजकं वाजिने नष्टे पुनस्तस्मे पयसि दध्यानेतव्यम्। अथ वाजिनमप्रयोजकं नष्टे वाजिने लोपो दध्यानयनस्य। शबर on IV. 1. 24.

2156. द्रव्यसंस्कारकर्मसु परार्थत्वात्फलश्रुतिरर्थवादः स्यात्। पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 10; शबर quotes among others the following three passages: यस्य पर्णमयी जुहूर्भवति न स पापं श्लोकं शृणोति (द्रव्य), यदाक्रक्ते... चक्षुरेव भ्रातृव्यस्य वृङ्क्ते (संस्कार), यत्प्रयाजानुयाजा इज्यन्ते वर्म वा एतद्यज्ञस्य क्रियते (कर्म).

2157. स स्वर्गः स्यात्सर्वान्प्रत्यविशिष्टत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. IV. 3. 15. सर्वान् means सर्वपुरुषान्. शबर explains 'सर्वे हि पुरुषाः स्वर्गकामाः। कुत एतत्। प्रीतिर्हि स्वर्गः। सर्वश्च प्रीतिं प्रार्थयते।; मेधा. on मनु II. 2. refers to it; vide एरा. मा. I. 1. p. 148. The विष्णुपुराण II. 6. 46 has: मनःप्रीतिकरः स्वर्गो नरकस्तद्विपर्ययः। नरकस्वर्गसंज्ञे वै पुण्यपापे द्विजोत्तम॥

svam dadāti'). Jaimini devotes about fourteen adhikaraṇas[2158] to it, viz. IV. 3. 10–16 (three adhikaraṇas), VI. 7. 1–20 (nine adhikaraṇas), VII. 3. 6–11 (one adhi.), X. 6. 13–14 (one adhi.). Some of the interesting propositions are: the performer cannot donate his own relatives (such as father or mother) but can denote that of which he is real owner or master; that even the emperor cannot make a gift of the whole kingdom, as other people have rights over land and the king protects the people and has only the right to a certain share in the produce of the land; that the performer cannot donate horses as śruti expressly forbids the gift of horses in Viśvajit; that the performer can donate only that which exists as his property at the time of giving dakṣiṇā in the sacrifice and not that which may become his at a future date; that a śūdra[2159] who waits upon the performer because it is his duty to serve (acc. to Manu) cannot be donated; a person of a higher varṇa cannot be donated; only he who has 112 cows or more wealth is entitled to perform Viśvajit.

The 5th adhyāya of P. M. S. deals with krama (the order in which the several component parts or acts that go to make up a sacrifice are to come one after another). Vidhis speak of the performance of many acts in a sacrifice and do not always lay down the order in which those acts (principal and auxiliary) are to be performed. It would not do to perform them in any order that the performer likes. For determining the order of sequence of several acts in a sacrifice one has to depend upon six means[2160] viz. śruti (direct assertion as to order), artha 2158. स्वदाने सर्वमविशेषात् (पूर्वपक्ष)। यस्य वा प्रभुः स्यादितरस्याशक्यत्वात् (सिद्धान्त)। IV. 7. 1–2; vide H. of Dh, vol. II pp. 849–50 which summarise PMS, VI. 7. 1–7, न्य. म. p. 92. विश्वजिति ... ददाति occurs in कौषी. ब्रा. 25. 14. मेधा० remarks "कृत्स्नगोलकाभिप्रायमेव चादेयत्वं भूमेर्विश्वजिति मीमांसकैरुक्तं 'न भूमिः स्यात्'। सर्वान् पुरुषान् प्रति चक्रक्रमणादियोग्यतयाऽविशिष्टा भूमिः स्वामीकर्तुमशक्या कथं दीयते इत्यर्थः॥".

2159. शूद्रश्च धर्मशास्त्रत्वात्। VI. 7. 6; vide न्य. म. p. 93, and notes p. 132 thereon; एकमेव तु शूद्रस्य प्रभुः कर्म समादिशत्। एतेषामेव वर्णानां शुश्रूषामनसूयया॥; मनु I. 91 and X. 123; vide H. of Dh. vol. II, p. 182 n. 424 for शबर's words. विकारः सङ्घभयतोऽविशेषात्। अधिकं वा प्रतिप्रसवात्। अनुग्रहाच्च पादवत्। पू. मी. सू. VI. 7. 18–20; तत्र च द्वादशशतमधिकं वा सर्वस्वम्। इहापि तद्वदेव। तस्माच्च न्यूनधनस्याधिकारः। शबर; the पञ्चविंश (ताण्ड्य) ब्रा. has तस्य द्वादशं शतं दक्षिणाः (16. 1. 10–11).

2160. इदेदानीं क्रमनियमलक्षणमुच्यते। तच्छ्रुत्यर्थ-पाठ-प्रवृत्ति-काण्ड-मुख्यैर्वेद्यते। श्रुत्यादीनां च बलाबलम्। शबर on पू. मी. सू. V. 1. 1. It may be noticed that both अर्थसंग्रह and मी. न्या. प्र. slightly differ from Śabara in the order and names of the six means viz. as तत्र षड् प्रमाणानि श्रुत्यर्थपाठस्थानमुख्यप्रवृत्याख्यानि। तत्र क्रमो नाम वितितिविशेषः पौर्वापर्यरूपो वा। अर्थसंग्रह p. 12 and मी. न्या. प्र. p. 173;

(purpose, suitability); pāṭha (verbal texts), pravṛtti (commencement), kāṇḍa (place in the texts), mukhya (principal).

In the Vedic passage about the dīkṣā in a sattra, the adhvaryu, after performing the dīkṣā (initiation rite) on the gṛhapati (the yajamāna, the performer of the sacrifice) performs dīkṣā on the brahmā priest, then on udgātṛ etc. the Vedic text directly lays down the sequence (by means of the termination 'tvā') that the dīkṣā of brahmā priest comes after the dīkṣā of the yajamāna. In the passage 'samidho yajati tanūnapātam yajati &c'. the very order in which the sentences occur in the text (i. e. pāṭha) determines the order of the performance of the several yāgas (PMS V. 1. 4). The Veda first speaks of the offering of Agnihotra and then of the cooking of gruel. Here the offering of Agnihotra comes first and preparation of gruel comes after that. But, unless the material to be offered is ready, no Agnihotra offering can be made. Therefore, here the pāṭhakrama has to be given up and arthakrama (order as dictated by the purpose and suitability) has to be followed i. e. first gruel must be prepared and then Agnihotra offered.[2161] This is an example showing that arthakrama is more powerful than pāṭhakrama (PMS V. 4. 1). The Parāśarasmṛti lays down that every day one should perform sandhyā (morning adoration), bath, japa (muttering of sacred texts), homa, study of the Veda, worship of gods, Vaiśvadeva and feeding guests. The Par. M. says that[2162] setting aside the pāṭhakrama one must follow the suitability and therefore bath comes first and sandhyā afterwards. The Sm. C. quotes Vṛddhamanu to the effect that a childless chaste widow should offer piṇḍa to her deceased husband and take his wealth. Here it is proper to hold that she should first take his wealth and then perform his śrāddhas. In the Vājapeya the text says that the performer (yajamāna) has to tie to the sacrificial post seventeen paśus to be offered to Prajāpati (Tai. Br. I. 3. 4.

2161. अग्निहोत्रं जुहोतीति पूर्वमाम्नातम्, ओदनं पचतीति पश्चात्। असन्निधात् पूर्वमोदनः पक्तव्यः। शबर on V. 1. 3. Vide also शबर on V. 4. 1.

2162. सन्ध्या स्नानं जपो होमो देवतातिथिपूजनम्। आतिथ्यं वैश्वदेवं च षट्कर्माणि दिने दिने॥ पराशरस्मृति I. 39; vide परा. मा. I. 2. 18 that says "सन्ध्यास्नानमित्यत्र यथाङ्गपाकन्यायेन स्नानस्य प्राधान्यं व्याकरोति। ... 'यवाग्वाग्निहोत्रं जुहोति यवागुं च पचति' इति श्रूयते। ... यवाग्वा इति तृतीयया श्रुत्या होमसाधनत्वावगमादसति च श्रुत्ये होमानिष्पत्तेरर्थाद्यवागूपाकः पूर्वभावीति सिद्धान्तः। एवमत्रापि स्नानस्य शुद्धिहेतुत्वाच्छुद्धत्वेन सन्ध्यायाश्चाधिकारित्वात्स्नानं पूर्वभावीति द्रष्टव्यम्। वृद्धमनुः—अपुत्रा श्वशुरं भर्तुः पालयन्ती व्रते स्थिता। पत्न्येव दद्यात्तत्पिण्डं कृत्स्नमंशं लभेत च॥ and remarks 'उत्तरार्धे स्पष्टमेव पाठक्रमबाधो द्रष्टव्यः। तत्रायमर्थः। उक्तलक्षणा पत्न्येव भर्तुरंशं कृत्स्नं लभेत पश्चात्पिण्डं दद्यात्। न पुनस्तत्सर्वा सत्यां भ्रात्रादिरिति। स्मृतिच. II. p. 291.

2–3). It is also provided that each of the 17 paśus should have several saṁskāras performed on it such as prokṣaṇa (consecration by sprinkling sacred water on it), upākaraṇa (bringing near). One may take any of the 17 animals first and begin to perform the first of the saṁskāras on it; but having once begun with a particular animal he must perform the second and other saṁskāras one after another on the same animal; i. e. the order of the saṁskāras on an animal is determined by the commencement. Kāṇḍa or sthāna is exemplified as follows: The Jyotiṣṭoma is the model sacrifice (prakṛti) of which Sādyaskra is a vikṛti (modification). It is prescribed by the Veda in the case of Sādyaskra that all animals should be sacrificed together at the savanīya stage.[2163] In Jyotiṣṭoma, there are three animals offered viz. 'agnīṣomīya' in the morning, 'savanīya' in the noon and 'anubandhya' in ths evening. Sādyaskra, being a vikṛti, all these have to be performed in it; but the particular text about it provides that all three must be sacrificed together at the savanīya stage. This (offering all three simultaneously) is impossible and therefore all that can be done is to offer (them) one after another (and not at three different times in the day); it would appear at first sight that the Agnīṣomīya paśu comes first; but that is not so, since simultaneous offerings being laid down at the savanīya stage in sādyaskrayāga, the savanīya-paśu is to be first offered (and not Agnīṣomīya) and then the Agnīṣomīya immediately after and then Anubandhya or these two may be offered in any order one likes (but immediately).

An example of sequence being determined by the mukhya (first or principal) is: there is a śruti passage 'two Sārasvata offerings are to be made; this is indeed a divine couple'.[2164]

2163. अतः प्राजापत्येष्वेकं पदार्थं सर्वत्रानुष्ठाय द्वितीयः पदार्थोऽनुष्ठेयः। तत्र प्रथमपदार्थानुष्ठानं कस्माच्चित्पशोरारभ्य कार्यम्। द्वितीयस्तु पदार्थो येन क्रमेण प्रथमोनुष्ठितस्तेनैव क्रमेणानुष्ठेयः प्रयोगविध्यवगतस्य मिथोङ्गसाहित्यस्योपपत्तये। मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 189–190.

2164. सारस्वतौ भवत एतद्वै दैव्यं मिथुनं दैव्यमेवास्मै मिथुनं मध्यतो दधाति पुष्ट्यै प्रजननाय। तै. सं. II. 4. 6. 1–2. This occurs in relation to चित्राग्याग in which seven subsidiary offerings are prescribed of which two are सारस्वत. सारस्वतौ means 'सरस्वतीदेवताकः सरस्वद्देवताकश्चेत्युभौ सारस्वतौ'. The पू. मी. सू. is 'मुख्यक्रमेणानुष्ठानं तदर्थत्वात्' (V. 1. 14 वा.) याज्ञ. II. 135 mentions as heirs to a man dying sonless, his wife, daughter and parents (पितरौ). Suppose a man dies leaving his father and mother as nearest relatives, who should succeed, viz. whether mother should be preferred to father or vice versa or whether both should take the estate equally. The मिताक्षरा prefers the mother to the father, the Sm. C. refers to this instance of सारस्वतौ भवतः and there being

(Continued on next page)

Details are provided as regards the two offerings to Sarasvatī and Sārasvata. The doubt arises: are the details about the offering to be made to the female deity to be performed first or are they to be first performed as the offerings to the male deity? The prima facie view being that as no śāstra exists regulating priority one may do as one likes, the established conclusion is that the order of sequence in the case of the details should be determined by the order of the Yājyānuvākyā verses. These are mentioned first about the female deity in the words 'pra ṇo devī Sarasvatī' (Tai. S. I. 8. 22. 1, Ṛg. VI. 61. 4). Therefore, the conclusion is that in the details also the offering to the female deity should come first.

In PMS V. 1. 16 it is decided that the order expressed in mantras should be followed in preference to the order contained in Brāhmaṇa texts.[2165] The Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice is made up of three component sacrifices, Āgneya, Upāṁśu and the Agnīṣomīya. In Tai S. II. 5. 2. 3, the Agnīṣomīya sacrifice is first described and in Tai. II. 6. 3. 3 the Āgneya is described. But these are held to be Brāhmaṇa texts, though now appearing in the Saṁhitā texts, since they lay down a vidhi; but in the Mantra-pāṭha the Āgneya mantra 'Agnir-mūrdhā' (Tai. B. III. 5. 7. 1) is first set out and then follows the mantra 'Agnīṣomā savedasā' (Tai. Br. III. 5. 7. 2). Therefore, the Āgneya is to be first performed and the Agnīṣomīya afterwards.

If there are several deities or brāhmaṇas to be honoured with several acts or things, or there are several yūpas (sacrificial posts) as in Aikādaśina animal sacrifice on which several saṁskāras are to be performed from añjana to parivyāṇa (sur-no special ground of choice between the two, holds that the father takes first following certain other smṛtis like Bṛhat-Viṣṇu. The Dāyabhāga prefers the father to the mother and several works like the Vyavahāra-prakāśa, (p. 524), the Madanaratna (p. 364) do the same. The words of the स्मृतिच. (II. p 297) are "सारस्वतौ भवतः इत्युत्पत्तिवाक्ये क्रमावगत्यभावेन याज्या-क्रमात् प्रधानयोः क्रमः पञ्चमे दर्शितो न पुनः सारस्वतावित्येकशेषत एव कथंचित् क्रमावगति-रुपपादितेति निबन्धमेव (?) मातुः प्राथम्यसमर्थनम्। अत एव श्रीकरेण पित्रोर्धनग्रहणप्रकरणे तदप्ययुक्तम्। ... दौहित्राभावे पितृगामित्यमवगन्तव्यम्। 'पञ्चमे' in the above passage refers to fifth adhyāya of P. M. S.

---

(Continued from last page)

2165. पदार्थबोधकवाक्यानां यः क्रमः स पाठक्रमः। तस्माच्च पदार्थानां क्रम आश्रीयते। येन हि क्रमेण वाक्यानि पठितानि तेनैव क्रमेणाधीताग्यर्थप्रत्ययं जनयन्ति। यथार्थप्रत्ययं च पदार्थानामनुष्ठानात्। स च पाठक्रमो द्विविधः मन्त्रपाठो ब्राह्मणपाठश्च। तत्राग्नेयाग्नीषोमीयपो-डशिग्राज्यानुवाक्याक्रमाधः क्रम आश्रीयते स मन्त्रपाठात्। स चायं मन्त्रपाठो ब्राह्मणपाठाद् बलवान्। अनुष्ठाने ब्राह्मणवाक्यापेक्षया मन्त्रवाक्यस्यान्तरङ्गत्वात्। मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 176–177.

rounding with a girdle), then one should perform all the saṁskāras from añjana to parivyāṇa on the yūpa first and then all these on the 2nd and so on up to the last yūpa or whether one should perform añjana on all yūpas one after another, the next saṁskāra on all yūpas one after another and so on till the last saṁskāra of parivyāna is done on all yūpas one after another. The former way is called kāṇḍānusamaya and the latter 'padārthānusamaya'.[2166] Jai. V. 2. 7–9 refers to the first method and Jai. V. 2. 1–3 to the 2nd. Vide for the explanation and illustration of these two, H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 739–740, p. 1132 n 2528 and Vol. IV. pp. 441–42 n 987. On Yāj. I. 232 ('apasavyam tataḥ kṛtvā) the Mit. remarks that the performer of Śrāddha follows the kāṇḍānusamaya method for the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas i. e. gives them water for washing the feet, then ācamana, seat, sandalwood paste, flowers &c, then he should wear the sacred thread on the right shoulder and offer the upacāras to the pitrya brāhmanas.

The sixth adhyāya of PMS is a very interesting one. It deals with the various aspects of the question of adhikāra, that is, qualifications of the performer of a sacrifice. It is a very extensive chapter having eight pādas like chap. III and X. A few of the numerous propositions contained therein that have influenced the works on Dharmśāstra have already been set out, such as women's right to participate in Vedic sacrifices, śūdra's ineligibility for them, the rathakāranyāya and niṣādasthapatinyāya and a few more will be dealt with here. As a preliminary Jaimini establishes (in P. M. S. VI. 1. 1–3) that in such texts as 'one desirous of heaven should offer the Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice or one should offer the Jyotiṣṭoma sacrifice' the Veda prescribes yāga for one who desires heaven i. e. heaven is the principal (or predominant) factor while yāga is subsidiary or subordinate; thereby it follows that the Vedic text lays down the characteristics of the performer. The Ṭupṭīkā says that[2167]

2166. On जै. V. 2. 1–3 पार्थसारथि states 'प्रथमं पदार्थं सर्वेषां कृत्वा ततो द्वितीयः कर्तव्यः । एवं दर्शपूर्णमासादिष्वनेकप्रधानसमवाये पदार्थाङ्गसमय एव न्याय्यो न काण्डाङ्गसमय इति स्थितम् ।' शास्त्रदीपिका । p. 421; ... गार्ग्यनारायण on आश्व. गृ. सू. I. 24. 7 explains तत्र पदार्थाङ्गसमयो नाम सर्वेषां वरणक्रमेण विष्टरं दत्त्वा ततः पाद्यं ततोऽर्घमिति । काण्डाङ्गसमयो नाम एकस्यैवं विष्टरादिगोनिवेदनान्तं समाप्य ततोऽन्यस्य सर्वं ततोऽन्यस्येति । The स्व. म. (p. 66) refers to पदार्थाङ्गसमय in the worship of deities in the balance ordeal.

2167. तस्मात्स्वर्गकामस्य यागकर्मोपदेशः स्यात् । अतः स्वर्गः प्रधानतः कर्म गुणतः इति स्वर्गाकाममधिकृत्य यजेतेति वचनमित्यधिकारलक्षणमिदं सिद्धम् । शबर on पू. मी. सू. VI. 1.3;

(Continued on next page)

'adhikārī is the owner (or master) who stands above all actions (yāga).' Another more elaborate definition is given as 'adhikārī is one who desires some reward (such as heaven or happiness), who is possessed of the capacity to perform the act prescribed, who has learning and who is not excluded from performing a sacrifice (by Śruti)'. Even lower animals desire happiness; hence to exclude them the words 'possessed of the capacity' &c. are added. A man may be totally ignorant and so the word 'vidvān' is added; a śūdra may desire happiness, may have capacity and be also learned but he is excluded by the vedic text, 'Therefore the Śūdra is not fit (or ordained) for sacrifice'.

In VI. I. 39–40 it is established[2168] that every man belonging to one of the three higher classes has a right to perform Vedic sacrifices. A man though at one time devoid of wealth may acquire wealth by various means. Similarly, it is said in VI. 1. 41 that one who is defective in a limb is just like one who is devoid of wealth i. e. such a man has a right to offer Vedic sacrifices provided he takes steps to remove the weakness. In VI. 1. 42 it is further provided that if the defect is congential and incurable, the person who suffers from such a defect is not entitled to perform Vedic sacrifices.

(Continued from last page)

अधिकारीति कर्मणामुपरिभावेनावस्थितः स्वामीत्यर्थः। दुपटीका (on same); अर्थी समर्थो विद्वान् शास्त्रेणापपुंदस्तोधिकारी। सर्वदर्शनकौमुदी p. 103. This summarises in one place what Śabara and Kumārila state in different places e. g. न चैतदस्ति तिर्यगादीनामप्यधिकार इति। कस्य तर्हि। यः समर्थः कृत्स्नं कर्माभिनिर्वर्तयितुम्। न देवानां देवतान्तराभावात्। न ह्यात्मानमुद्दिश्य त्यागः सम्भवति। त्याग एवासौ न स्यात्। ... अपि च तिर्यञ्चो न कालान्तरफलेनार्थिनः। आसद्यं हि ते कामयन्ते। ... न चैते (तिर्यञ्चः) वेदमधीयते नापि स्मृतिशास्त्राणि। नाप्यन्येभ्योऽवगच्छन्ति। तस्माच्च विदन्ति धर्मम्। अविद्वांसः कथमनुतिष्ठेयुः। शबर on पू. मी. सू. VI. 1. 5. शूद्रो मनुष्याणामन्धः पशूनां तस्मात्तौ सूतसंक्रामिणावन्धश्च शूद्रश्च। तस्माच्छूद्रो यज्ञेऽनवक्लृप्तः। तै. सं. VII. 1. 1. 6. सायण explains अनवक्लृप्तः as यज्ञे प्रवर्तितुं न योग्यः.

2168. त्रयाणां द्रव्यसंपत्कः कर्मणो द्रव्यसिद्धित्वात् (पूर्वपक्ष)। अनित्यत्वात्तु नैवं स्यादर्थाद्धि द्रव्यसंयोगः। अङ्गहीनश्च तद्धर्मा। उत्पत्तौ नित्यसंयोगात्। पू. मी. सू. VI. 1. 39-42; तद्धर्मा means 'द्रव्यरहितधर्मा तत्तुल्य इति'. The last sūtra may be paraphrased as उत्पत्तौ एव येषामङ्गवैकल्यं जात्यन्धादीनां सर्वेषामप्रतिसमाधेयाङ्गवैकल्यानां ते नाधिक्रियन्ते आज्यावेक्षणादिभिः। क्रतोर्नित्यसंयोगात्। तै. सं. VI. 3. 10.5 states 'जायमानो ह वै ब्राह्मणस्त्रिभिर्ऋणवा जायते ब्रह्मचर्येण ऋषिभ्यो यज्ञेन देवेभ्यः प्रजया पितृभ्य एष वा अनृणो यः पुत्री यज्वा ब्रह्मचारिवासी'. On this, पू. मी. सू. VI. 2. 31 is ब्राह्मणस्य सोमविधानमङ्गगुणवाक्येन संयोगात्', on which शबर explains that the word brāhmaṇa is only illustrative 'ब्राह्मणग्रहणं तु प्रदर्शनार्थम्। जायमानो ब्राह्मणो राजन्यो वैश्यश्चेति। तथा जायमानो जातश्चेति।'.

The ancient and medieval Hindu law of inheritance and succession was modelled on this. Vide Yāj. II. 140, Manu IX. 201 and Nārada (dāyabhāga, verses 21–22). Yāj. II. 140 declares that the impotent, the outcast and his son, a lame man, a lunatic, an idiot, a blind man and a person afflicted with an incurable disease are not entitled to a share, but are entitled to receive maintenance. This subject has been dealt with in H. of Dh. Vol. III. pp. 610–612. The Mit. on Yāj. II. 140 provides that the grounds of disqualification apply to males and females alike. But the recent Hindu Succession Act (No. 32 of 1956) sweeps away all these grounds of disqualification by providing that no person shall be disqualified from succeeding to any property on the ground of any disease, defect or deformity or, save as provided in this act, on any other ground whatever (section 28).

A good many sūtras (in chap. VI. 3. 17–41) deal with what are called 'pratinidhi' (substitute, representative or proxy). These have been described in H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 684' 1110, 1203, Vol. III. pp. 471, 637, 653. 654 (where Satyāṣāḍha Śr' S. III containing similar rules is mentioned). A few of them are briefly mentioned here. The first rule is that if the substance declared by the Veda for preparing an offering perishes or is lost as regards an obligatory rite or as regards kāmya rite that is already begun, one should substitute another substance (like nīvāras, wild rice grains) for vrīhi (rice grains) or yava i. e. barley grains and finish the rite (VI. 3 13–17). In some cases Vedic texts prescribe a substitute for the substance required to be used, as in ' if he (the performer) cannot obtain the Soma plant, he should substitute pūtīka stalks and extract juice therefrom.' It is argued by the objector that, as the Veda expressly substitutes pūtīkas for soma, one should conclude that where Veda does not expressly mention a substitute for a prescribed substance, it means that a substitute is not allowed by the Veda in other cases. The siddhānta is that the prescribing of pūtīkas as substitute is a restrictive rule[2169] viz. that although several plants may resemble soma, there is a restriction that only pūtīkas should be substituted. It is provided (in III. 6. 37, 39) that when a substitute like nīvāras is employed, the subsidiary acts of sprinkling with water, pounding with mortar and pestle that are performed on rice or barley grains should also be performed on them. When rice grains are employed the mantra expressly speaks of the rice offering as the sap or essence of rice grains. There adaptation (ūha) is to be made as 'nīvārāṇām medha' (vide PMS IX. 3. 1-2).[2170] But in certain cases no substitute is allowed viz. the devatā with respect to which an havis (offering) is prescribed cannot have another substituted in a rite e. g. 'Āgneyoṣṭākapālaḥ' cannot be changed into 'aindroṣṭākapālaḥ', since in that case the rite will cease to be what was intended. Similarly, when the text says 'he offers into the Āhavanīya fire,' one cannot substitute the Gārhapatya fire; another mantra cannot be substituted for the one prescribed nor can other rites be substituted for the Prayājas 'samidho yajati' &c.).[2171]

2169. नियमार्थः क्वचिद्विधिः । VI. 3. 16; सोमाभावे बहुषु सत्सदेषु प्रोक्षेषु नियमः क्रियते पूतीका एवानियोक्तव्या इति । शबर. The ताण्ड्यब्राह्मण (IX. 5. 3) provides ' यदि सोमं न विन्देयुः ' which is quoted in n. 2001 above.

The Veda forbids the use of varakas, kodravas and māṣas as unfit for a sacrifice. If a person mistakenly takes māṣa grains or particles believing them to be mudga grains or particles and uses them in a sacrifice in which an oblation of boiled mudga pulse is prescribed, he will not be performing the desired rite as what is forbidden as unfit cannot be a substitute.[2172]

This nyāya is relied upon by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 126 (which simply states that if joint family properties are suppressed or concealed by some members and kept for themselves, they should be distributed in equal shares even after partition (when this is found out), which holds that this verse cannot be interpreted so as to absolve the concealer of such joint property from guilt simply on the ground that he was himself a part owner and explains that just as a sacrificer mistakenly believing māṣa particles as mudga ones loses the fruit of the sacrifice, so the concealer of joint property is guilty of wrong. The Vyavahāraprakāśa (p. 555) and Aparārka p. 732 take the same view, but the Dāyabhāga (XII. 11-13) and V. R. (p. 526) are opposed to this (vide H. of Dh. Vol. III. p. 636). The Prāyaścittatattva p. 482 has an elaborate note on this nyāya.

2170. अस्ति तु प्रकृतौ व्रीहिलिङ्गो मन्त्रः—स्योनं ते सदनं ... प्रतितिष्ठ व्रीहीणां मेध सुमनस्यमान इति। शबर on IX. 3. 1. This is तै. ब्रा. VII. 7. 5. 2-3. मेध means सारभूत.

2171. न देवताग्निशब्दक्रियमन्यार्थसंयोगात्। पू. मी. सू. VI. 3. 18.

2172. प्रतिषिद्धं चाविशेषेण हि तच्छ्रुतिः। VI. 3. 20; प्रतिषिद्धं च न प्रतिनिधातव्यमिति। अविशेषेण ह्येतदुच्यते—न यज्ञार्हा माषा वरका कोद्रवाश्चेति। शबर. The सूत्र may be explained as प्रतिषिद्धं माषादिकं न प्रतिनिधेयं यस्मात् अविशेषेण यज्ञसम्बन्धमात्रे निषेधश्रुतिः। The तै. सं. V. 1. 8. 1 has 'अमेध्या वै माषाः', vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 637 and note 1209 for Jaimini's sūtra and the quotation from the Mit.

Another rule is that there can be no substitute for the performer of the sacrifice (VI. 3. 21), since (in Jai. III. 7. 18–20) it is laid down that the fruit of the rite belongs to the owner, though after beginning the rite he leaves everything to the priests engaged to perform the rite. The only exception is in the case of sattras (Jai. VI. 3. 22) performed by many persons together acting both as performers and as priests.

One important adhikaraṇa is VI. 7. 31–40. There is a Sattra called 'Viśvasṛjām-ayanam' which is said to last for 1000 saṁvatsaras. After referrring to Tai. Br. I. 3. 7. 7 and I. 7. 6. 2 (śatāyuḥ puruṣaḥ) and to the views of Kārṣṇājini and Lāvukāyana, Jaimini boldly establishes the conclusion that saṁvatsara here means day. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II p. 1246 n. 2683 for the Mahābhāṣya stating that the Yājñikas in speaking about such sattras only follow the tradition handed down by ancient sages. Medhātithi on Manu I. 84 ('vedoktam-āyur-martyānām) has a long note wherein he refers to the viw of Jaimini, quotes 'śatāyur vai puruṣaḥ' and also 'śatam-innu śarado anti devā' (Ṛg. I. 89. 9) and cites the views of other interpreters. The Kātyāyana Śr. (I. 6. 17–27) discusses this very subject at great length, refers to the differing interpretations of Bharadvāja, Kārṣṇājini and Laugākṣi but ultimately holds that saṁvatsara means 'day' here.

In the first six chapters of the P. M. S. the procedure of such rites as Darśapūrṇamāsa the details of which are expressly laid down by the Veda has been considered. In the six chapters from the 7th consideration will be given to sacrifices like Aindrāgna, the procedure of which is not expressly laid down by the Veda.[2173] In the 7th chapter what is considered is whether in the vikṛtis (sacrifices that are modifications of the model sacrifices) details have to be added and, if so, which and how many of the details have to be carried out.

The 7th chapter deals with the general question of the extension or transference of details in general (i. e. atideśa in general) to Aindrāgna and other sacrifices. Atideśa is the process or method by which the details prescribed in connection with one rite are taken beyond that rite and transferred to another. Śabara quotes from some ancient author a śloka defining atideśa. The sacrifice from which details are transferred is called prakṛti (model or Archetype) and the sacrifice to which details are transferred or extended is called vikṛti (or Ectype). Atideśa may be provided for by vacana (Vedic text) or by the name. The first is of two kinds viz. by a direct statement or by an inferential process. For example, as regards a magic sacrifice called Isu the text says, after speaking of some details, that the rest are the same as in [2174] Śyena. An instance of an inferential vacana is the extension to the Saurya sacrifice of the details of the Āgneya in Darśapūrṇamāsa, because both are very closely connected and because no details are prescribed by the text about 'Sauryayāga' (PMS VII. 4. 1). The name also is two-fold, viz. name of a rite and name of a saṃskāra. The Māsāgnihotra prescribed (vide PMS II. 3. 24) in Kuṇḍapāyināṃ-ayana is a different rite from the obligatory Agnihotra (as in 'yāvajjīvam-agnihotram juhuyāt') as proved above, but the name 'agnihotra' being common to both, the details of the usual Agnihotra (such as milking the cow, offering curds or milk, using a Khadira fuel stick &c.) are to be extended to Māsāgnihotra (Jai. VII. 3. 1–4). Extension due to saṃskāra name is instanced in Jai. VII. 3. 12–15. In the Varuṇapraghāsa (one of the cāturmāsyas), Avabhṛtha (bath) is prescribed, but no details are added and therefore the requisite details are to be taken from the rules about the Avabhṛtha in Somayāga. [2175]

2173. The न्यायरत्नमाला (in G. O. S.) 4th परिच्छेद p. 257 says: एवं तावदौपदेशिकाङ्गसम्बन्धप्रकारः सप्रमाणकः पूर्वाध्यायषट्कगोचरः प्रदर्शितः। इदानीमातिदेशिकाङ्गसम्बन्धविधानं प्रतिपाद्यते। द्विविधं हि शब्दजातमुपदेशात्मकमतिदेशात्मकं च। इत्थमिदं कर्तव्यमित्युपदेशः, तद्वदिदं कर्तव्यमित्यतिदेशः।'; अतिदेशो नाम ये परत्र विहिता धर्मास्तमतीत्यान्यत्र तेषां देशः। ... यथा देवदत्तवद्यज्ञदत्तो भोजयितव्य इति। श्लोकमप्युदाहरन्ति। प्रकृतात्कर्मणो यस्मात्तत्समानेषु कर्मसु। धर्मप्रदेशो येन स्यात् सोऽतिदेश इति स्थितिः॥ इति। स च.नाम्ना वचनेन वा। वचनं पुनर्द्विविधं प्रत्यक्षश्रुतमानुमानिकं च। शबर on जै. VII, 1. 12.

Atideśa is frequently resorted to by smṛtis and digests. For example, Yāj. I. 236 and 242 extend the procedure of Piṇḍapitṛyajña as regards Agnaukaraṇa and offering of piṇḍas to the Pārvaṇaśrāddha. The Parāśarasmṛti (VII. 18–19) speaks [2176]

2174. अस्तीषुर्नाम एकाहः। अपरः श्येनः। तौ द्वावप्याभिचारिकौ तत्रेषौ कांश्चिद्धर्मान्विधायाह समानमितरच्छ्यैनेनेति। शबर on VII. 1. 13. समा ... नेन is आप. श्रौ. 22. 7. 18.

2175. तथावभृथः सोमात्। जै. VII. 3. 12; वरुणप्रघासेषु श्रूयते। वारुण्या निष्कासेन तुषैश्चावभृथं यन्तीति। यथा षडहात्पृष्ठानामतिदेश एवं सौमिकादवभृथादिह धर्मातिदेशः। कुतः। अभिहितो न्यायः। उक्तं क्रियाभिधानं तच्छ्रुतावन्यत्र विधिमदेशः स्यात्-इति। उक्तं ... स्यात् is जै. VII. 3. 1, of a woman in her monthly illness as a cāṇḍālī on the first day of the illness, as the murderess of a brāhmaṇa on the 2nd day and as a washerwoman on the 3rd day. The Par. M. remarks that the intention of calling such a woman by these names is to convey that intercourse with her will result in the same sin as would be incurred by a person of higher classes if he had intercourse with a cāṇḍālī &c. For an instance of express extension, vide V. M. pp. 56–57 when it quotes a verse of Pitāmaha on the balance ordeal (in which the word 'yūpavat' is used) and remarks that atideśa is prescribed expressly by the word 'yūpavat'.

2176. प्रथमेऽह्नि चण्डाली द्वितीये ब्रह्मघातिनी। तृतीये रजकी प्रोक्ता चतुर्थेऽह्नि शुध्यति॥ पराशर VII. 18–19, on which परा. मा. (vol. II. 1. pp. 168–169) remarks 'चण्डाल्यादिगमने यावान् प्रत्यवायस्तावान्शुद्धकयागमने द्रव्यमिप्रेत्य तैर्नामभिर्व्यवहारः। यथा कुण्डपायिनामयने मासमग्निहोत्रं जुहोति द्रव्यमिहोत्रनामनिर्देशेन नित्याग्निहोत्रधर्मातिदेशस्तद्वत्।'.

The 8th chapter deals with specific cases of extension (atideśa). The Darśapūrṇamāsa is the prakṛti of all[2177] iṣṭis and 'Darśapūrṇamāsābhyām yajeta' is called vidhyādi and vidhyanta is the whole procedure of Darśapūrṇamāsa (except the originative injunction 'darśapūrṇamāsyābhyām yajeta) detailed in the Brāhmaṇas about the offering of puroḍāśa (cake) &c. In the Vikṛtiyāga called Saurya[2178] the sentence 'one who desires to secure the lustre of Vedic learning should offer boiled rice to the Sun' is the vidhyādi, but no details are mentioned there. There is an expectation of some procedure and, though there are numerous vidhyantas in relation to sacrifices, the special word 'nirvapati' is indicative of the procedure of Darśapūrṇamāsa (in which also there is nirvāpa) and one comes to understand that the Saurya caru is offered as in Āgneya (the first rite in 2177. Vedic sacrifices are usually divided for convenience into three varieties, viz. Iṣṭi (in which offerings are of milk, clarified butter, rice, barley and other grains), Paśu and Soma and the latter again into Ekāha (lasting for one day like Agniṣṭoma), Ahīna (lasting for more than one day up to 12 days) and Sattra (lasting from 12 days to a year or more). Śabara on PMS IV. 4. 20 states that there are four Mahāyajñas, viz. Agnihotra, Darśapūrṇamāsa, Jyotiṣṭoma, Piṇḍapitṛyajña. There are seven Soma sacrifices as stated by Gaut. Dh. S. VIII. 18. Besides these Śrauta rites, there are other rites prescribed in the gṛhyasūtras, which are offered in gṛhya fire and seven important ones from which are called pākayajñas. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 193–194.

---

2178. विध्यन्तो वा प्रकृतिवच्चोदनायां प्रवर्तेत तथाहि लिङ्गदर्शनम् । पू. मी. सू. VII. 4. 10; वेदेपि दर्शपूर्णमासाभ्यां यजेतेति विध्यादिः । विध्यन्तोऽपि प्रधानविधिवर्जितं कृत्स्नं पौरोडाशिकं ब्राह्मणम्, तेन समेतोऽयं विध्यादिविशिष्टापूर्वनिर्वृत्तिं प्रति पुरुषं प्रवर्तयति । तस्मात्स्तोऽस्यान्तः । शबर; on पू. मी. सू. VIII. 1. 2 शबर explains: विध्यन्तापेक्षो यो वैकृतो विध्यादिः सोपि वैदिकेन विध्यन्तेनानुमानाद् बुद्धौ संनिहितेनैकवाक्यतां यास्यति । यथा सोपि चरुं निर्वपेद्ब्रह्मवर्चसकाम इति । तत्र कथमिति विध्यन्तापेक्षापामनेकविध्यन्तसंनिपातेऽप्यधारणेन निर्वपतिशब्देन दार्शपौर्णमासिकविध्यन्तसंयोगिना लिङ्गेन तदीयो विध्यन्तः प्रसज्यते ।.

Darśapūrṇamāsa). The details of the prakṛti are to be performed in all other iṣṭis along with the few details that may have been stated expressly as to some.

The Jyotiṣṭoma is the prakṛti of all soma sacrifices of one day and of Dvādaśāhā and its details are performed in all modifications of soma sacrifices such as Atirātra. The Agnīsomīya is the prakṛti of all sacrifices in which a paśu (animal) is to be sacrificed, the details of which are to be performed in all vikṛtis of paśuyāgas. Dvādaśāha is of two kinds, Ahīna and Sattra and is the prakṛti of all Ahīna sacrifices like Dvirātra, Trirātra up to Śatarātra; and Dvādaśāha of the sattra type is the model of all sattras. Gavām-ayana is the prakṛti of all sacrifices like Ādityānām-ayana. Darvihomas are sui juris and are not prakṛtis or vikṛtis of any other sacrifices. All these are considered in the 8th chapter.

The 9th chapter deals with ūha (adaptation). When applying the principle of atideśa certain alterations and adaptations are necessary in the matter of mantras, sāmans and saṁskāras. The word ūha ordinarily means only tarka or vicāraṇā (reasoning), yet in PMS it has a special meaning.[2179]

The Āgneya is the prakṛti in which the nirvāpa (offering) is to be made with the words 'I offer to Agni what is liked by him'; in the Sauryayāga, which is a vikṛti of Āgneya, the offering has to be made with the words 'I offer to Sūrya what is liked by him.' In the Vājapeya we read 'he offers to Bṛhaspati nirvāpa grains cooked on seventeen pans'. The Vājapeya is a modification of Darśapūrṇamāsa in which the grains of rice are sprinkled with water; therefore sprinkling has to be done on nīvāra grains also (PMS IX. 2. 40). On the 2nd and following days of the Jyotiṣṭoma sacrifice there is recitation of the Subrahmaṇyā litany[2180] addressed to Indra by the Subrahmaṇya priest, beginning with the words 'Indra āgaccha, hariva āgaccha, Medhātither-mesa &c'. In the Agniṣṭut sacrifice also there is 2179. यद्यपि चोदशब्दस्तर्कमात्रवचनस्तथाप्यस्मिन् शास्त्रेऽन्यथागतानां पदार्थानामन्यथाभावविषयो यस्तर्कः स ऊहशब्देनोच्यते। न्या. र. मा, 4th परिच्छेद p. 263; vide न्यायसूत्र I. 1. 40 'अविज्ञाततत्त्वेऽर्थे कारणोपपत्तितस्तत्त्वज्ञानार्थमूहस्तर्कः'.

---

2180. तथा मेधातिथेर्मेष इत्येवमादि इतिहासवचनमिव प्रतिभाति इतिहासे च विधौ सति आद्यिमत्ता दोषो वेदस्य प्रसज्येत। ... तस्मादेते गुणा इन्द्रे विद्यन्त इत्यसमेतवचनत्वादविकारेण प्रयोग इति तदेतन्न रोचयन्ते याज्ञिकाः। ऊहं कुर्वन्ति। अग्न आगच्छ रोहिताश्च इहज्ञानो धूमकेतो जातवेदो विचर्षण इति। शबर on जै. मी. सू. IX. 1. 44.

Subrahmaṇyā-nigada[2181] addressed to Agni. In reciting it the word 'Agne' is substituted for 'Indra'; but the following words 'Hariva āgaccha' is are not to be changed and are to be recited, as they are attributes which may be predicated of Agni also (PMS IX. I. 42–44). The principle deduced by the Mīmāṁsakas seems to be that, only if the words in the original mantra cannot at all be extended to the modified yāga as they stand, then ūha may have to be resorted to but not otherwise. Śabara however, notes that the 'yājñikas perform ūha (i. e. adapt them by suitable changes) i. e. they recite 'agne āgaccha rohitāśva bṛhad-bhāno' etc.). It is noteworthy that, according to PMS II. 1.34 and Śabara thereon, a maṇtra as adapted (ūhita) is not called a mantra, since only those are mantras[2182] that are recognized as such by the learned. In the Darśapūrṇamāsa when the priest takes out four handfuls of grains and puts them in a winnowing basket he repeats over three of the handfuls the mantra which literally means 'at the command of God Savitṛ, with the arms of Aśvins and with the hands of Pūṣan I take out for Agni thee that art dear (to him)'.[2183] The PMS holds (in IX. 1. 36–37) that the words Savitṛ, Pūṣan, Aśvin are not to be changed by ūha in the modifications of Darśapūrṇamāsa where the deity to which the offering is to be made is not Agni. Śabara assigns rather far-fetched meanings to the words Savitṛ, Aśvins and Pūṣan (as in the note below) and says that they are meant to eulogize the laying aside of the handfuls of grains for offering. There is another interesting case where there is no

---

2181. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 1144–1146 and note 2550 for the Subrahmaṇyā-nigada and its meaning.

2182. अनाम्नातेष्वमन्त्रत्वमाम्नातेषु हि विभागः। पू. मी. सू. II. 1. 34; ऊहप्रवरनामधेयेषु संशयः—मन्त्रा उत नेति। अभिधायकत्वान्मन्त्रा इति प्राप्ते ब्रूमः। अनाम्नातेषु मन्त्रत्वं न स्यादभिधायकेष्वपि। नाभिधायकत्वं मन्त्रत्वे हेतुः। किं तर्हि। अभियुक्तप्रयोगः। येऽभियुक्तैर्मन्त्रा इति लोचयन्ते न ते मन्त्राः। न चैवमादयो मन्त्रसमाम्नाये सन्ति। तस्मादमन्त्राः। प्रयोजनं मन्त्रे ब्रूते यत्प्रायश्चित्तममन्त्रेषु तत्र। शबर.

2183. स्तो दर्शपूर्णमासौ। तत्र निर्वापमन्त्रः। देवस्य त्वा सवितुः प्रसवेऽश्विनोर्बाहुभ्यां पूष्णो हस्ताभ्यामग्नये जुष्टं निर्वपामीति। शाबर on IX. 1. 36; देवस्य ... निर्वपामि occurs in तै. सं. II. 6. 4. 1. देवस्य सवितुः प्रसवे-देवेन सवित्रा यजमानेन प्रसूते, उदिते वा सवितरि। अश्विनोर्बाहुभ्यां परिक्रयमभिप्रेत्य यजमानयोर्दर्व्यपर्योर्बाहुभ्याम्। अश्विनौ हि तौ अन्नाधानेऽश्वदानेन, अक्षितवन्तौ वा तद्यज्ञफलमश्नुवाते। तद्बाहू इति स्वौ बाहू व्यपदिशति। देवताध्वर्योऽश्विनोरेतौ बाहू इति। पूषणं तु यजमानमेव मन्यते पुष्णातेः। एवं सर्वे निर्वापप्रकाशनार्थाः। शाबर on IX. 1. 37. The words 'परिक्रयमभिप्रेत्य' refer to the fact that the priest adhvaryu is engaged by the yajamāna as agent for a payment of fee and therefore adhvaryu's arms are yajamāna's arms.

ūha. In the Darśapūrṇamāsa there is a praiṣa (direction) 'set down [2184] the water for sprinkling, put down the fuel sticks and the bunch of kuśa grass, clean the sruc and śruva ladles, gird up the wife (of the sacrificer) and come out with clarified butter'. Suppose the sacrificer has two or more wives. Still the singular 'patnīm' was to be used and not the dual or plural either in the model itself (IX. 3. 20) or in any modification thereof (IX. 3. 21). Dharmaśāstra works make use of ūha. The Viṣṇu-dharmasūtra provides that one should perform Srāddha of one's maternal grand-father and the latter's two male ancestors in a similar way by the ūha of the mantra. [2185] The mantra in the case of the śrāddha of male ancestors is 'Śundhantām pitaraḥ' (Āp. Śr. I. 7. 13), which should be changed into 'Śundhantām mātāmahāḥ'; vide Mit. on Yāj. I. 254 and H. of Dh. Vol. IV p. 513 n. 1142a.

When in a sacrifice boiled rice is to be offered the mantra is 'syonam...vrīhīṇām medha sumanasyamānaḥ' (vide pp. 1398-99 n. 2125 above). If boiled rice is destroyed or not available and nīvāra grains are substituted, there is no ūha as 'nīvārāṇām medha' but the words 'vrīhīṇām medha' are to be retained (PMS IX. 3. 23-26), because, as stated in PMS VI. 3. 27 (sāmānyam tac-cikīrṣā hi), nīvāras are substituted on account of the similarity of parts of boiled nīvāras with the parts of rice grains.

In the third and fourth pādas of the 9th chapter there are twelve adhikaraṇas about the adhrigu-praiṣa recited by the Hotṛ in Paśubandha. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 1121, note 2504 for that praiṣa. There is ūha to be made about certain words therein and PMS explains some of the unfamiliar and difficult words in that text.

The tenth chapter is the longest chapter in the PMS, having eight pādas and 577 sūtras (i. e. more than one-fifth of the total number of sūtras) just as the third (with 363 sutras) and the 6th (with 349 sutras) have eight pādas each. This chapter is concerned with bādha (annulment or exclusion) and abhyuccaya or samuccaya which is the exact opposite or antithesis of bādha. The general rule is that the details of the prakṛtiyāga (model sacrifice) should be taken over in the vikṛti (modification). But in some cases the vikṛti-yāga[2186] has a different name, some of the saṁskāras (purificatory and embellishing acts) and some of the substances (dravya) employed in the prakṛti cannot be extended to the vikṛtis, because there are express texts negativing their employment or because they serve no purpose or have become useless or senseless. Śabara states that bādha occurs when an idea or knowledge determined for certain as this type or that has to be understood as wrong owing to some (special) reason while abhyuccaya (addition or combination) occurs when even after we have the knowledge that certain matters are to be extended to the vikṛti there is the further idea that a few others also are to be additional in the vikṛti.

---

2184. अपूर्वे त्वविकारोऽप्रदेशात्प्रतीयेत। पू. मी. सू. IX. 3. 20; दर्शपूर्णमासयोरामनन्ति। प्रोक्षणीरासादयेध्मबर्हिरुपसादय स्रुचं च स्रुवञ्च संमृड्धि पत्नीं संनह्याज्येनोदेहीति। शबर on IX. 3. 20. The words प्रोक्षणी ... देहीति occur in आप. श्रौ. सू. II. 3. 11. This is तै. ब्रा. III. 2. 9. 14. Then शबर proceeds तत्र पत्नीं संनह्येति विभज्यते। अस्ति हि यजमान एकपत्नीको बहुपत्नीकश्च। ... इदं तु सन्दिह्यते। किं द्विपत्नीके बहुपत्नीके च प्रयोग ऊहितव्यः पत्नीशब्द उत नेति। ... एवं प्राप्ते क्रमः। अपूर्वे तु अप्रकृतिपूर्वके कर्मणि अविकारेण प्रयुञ्ज्येत। The next sūtra is विकृतौ चापि तद्वचनात्। IX. 3. 21.

2185. मातामहानामप्येवं श्राद्धं कुर्याद्विचक्षणः। मन्त्रोदेन यथान्यायं शेषाणां मन्त्रवर्जितम्॥ विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 75. 8.

The Mai. S. prescribes that one desirous[2187] of long life should offer a lump of one hundred kṛṣṇalas (golden pieces shaped as grains of rice) heated in clarified butter. But no pounding (avaghāta, threshing) is to be done in this, as the grains being made of gold, there is no chaff which can be separated by pounding (X. I. 1–3). Similarly, no upastaraṇa[2188] (pouring of clarified butter) and abhighāraṇa (the subsequent pouring of clarified butter) are to be done, since in the model sacrifice these two are done for making the oblation to have a sweet flavour (X. 2. 3–11). A caru of rice has to be boiled (i. e. the heat of fire is to be applied to it). In the same way the golden pieces are to be heated in clarified butter by fire (X. 2. 1–2). The golden pieces have to be sucked like sugarcane pieces (X. 2. 13–16), because they cannot be eaten while in the

---

2186. बाधो नाम यदेवेदमिति निश्चितं विज्ञानं कारणान्तरेण मिथ्येति कल्प्यते। तथा, अभ्युच्चयो यदिदमिह भवतीति विज्ञातेऽपरमपि भवतीति विज्ञानम्। शबर on X. 1. 1; अपि वाऽभिधानसंस्कारद्रव्यमर्थे क्रियेत तावदर्थात्। पू. मी. सू. X. 1. 2; नैतदस्ति सर्वं प्राकृतं विकृतौ कर्तव्यमिति। कश्चिदभिधानसंस्कारद्रव्यं निवर्तितुमर्हति यल्लुप्तार्थम्। कुत एतत्। अभिधानसंस्कारद्रव्यं हि प्रयोजने सति क्रियते नाप्रयोजनम्। शबर.

2187. प्राजापत्यं घृते चरुं निर्वपेच्छतकृष्णलमायुष्कामः। मै. सं. II. 2. 2. भाष. वि. p. 37 refers to the absence of threshing in the matter of कृष्णल.

2188. For उपस्तरण and अभिधारण, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 528 n 1233.

model sacrifice iḍā and prāśitra [2189] are actually eaten. In a magic rite like śyena reeds are spread on the ground and not kuśa grass (as in the model sacrifice). This bādha is due to a special text. [2190] The general rule in vedic sacrifices is that priests have to be chosen and dakṣiṇā is to be paid to them at the end but sattras are an exception, since in sattras all are priests as well as performers (yajamānas). Here the exclusion of varaṇa (choosing) is due to the fact that in the other sacrifices the yajamāna and priests are different and the latter are engaged for fee. There is a visible purpose in selecting or engaging priests, [2191] but in a sattra where ex hypothesi all are yajamānas and priests as well, there is no visible purpose in going through the ceremony of choosing priests (ṛtvig-varaṇa).

One example of samuccaya may be given. In the Vājapeya (which is said to be a form of Jyotiṣṭoma according to PMS III, 7. 50–51) seventeen animals are to be sacrificed. In the model sacrifice (i e. Jyotiṣṭoma) also there are certain animals to be offered. The question is whether there is bādha of the paśus prescribed in the prakṛtiyāga or whether there is combination (samuccaya). The conclusion is that there is samuccaya (X. 4. 6), because in the Tai. Br. there occur passages like this—"The Brahmavādins say 'why is it that all sacrificial rites are contained in Vājapeya'? He should reply 'by means of paśus, viz. he sacrifices an animal to Agni, thereby he contains Agniṣṭoma, he contains the Ukthya &c.'" This shows that he has to sacrifice also other animals besides the seventeen. [2192] The Mit.

2189. For iḍā, vide vol. II p. 1065 n 2382 and for prāśitra, vol. II. p. 1039 n 2339. स्याद्वा निर्धान्यदर्शनात्। पू. मी. सू. X. 2. 14; स्याद्वा हिरण्यस्य भक्षः। भक्षणविशेषदर्शनात्। निरवधयन्तो भक्षयन्ति चुच्चुधाकारं भक्षयन्तीति। प्राप्ते भक्षे केवलं भक्षोपायं विधास्यति शब्द इति। शबर; पूर्ववाक्ये कृष्णलानां प्राधान्यादाज्यस्य च तदङ्गत्वात् तेषामेव भक्षणवाक्येऽन्वयः। तेषां चानङ्गभूतानामपि प्रदानवद्भक्षणमपि वचनाद्विधास्यतीति। तेषामेव चुच्चुधाकरणविशिष्टं भक्षणं विधीयते। शास्त्रदीपिका. चुच्चुधा is an onomatopoetic word for making a smacking sound when sucking juice.

2190. सोमारौद्रं चरुं निर्वपेत्कृष्णानां व्रीहीणामभिचरन् शरमयं बर्हिर्भवति वैभीदक इध्मः। शृणादिति शरमयं बर्हिर्भवति। मै. सं. II. 1. 6 and पू. मी. सू. X. 4. 1–2.

2191. वरणसूत्विजामानमनार्थत्वात्सत्रे न स्यात् स्वकर्मत्वात्। पू. मी. सू. X. 2. 34; वरणं ऋत्विजां सत्रेषु न स्यात्। न कर्तव्यमिति। स्वार्थं हि तेषां कर्म। न च कश्चिदात्मानं वृणीते। प्रकृतौ च आनमनार्थं वरणं दृष्टप्रयोजनमिति न शक्यमदृष्टं कल्पयितुम्। तस्मात्सत्रेषु वरणं न स्यात्। शबर. आनमन means 'submission or obedience to another's direction.'

2192. प्राजापत्येषु चाक्षानात्। पू. मी. सू. X. 4. 6; शबर quotes the passage 'ब्रह्मवादिनो वदन्ति ... एतावन्तो वै पशुक्रतवः, तान् पशुभिरेवावरुन्धे' (तै. ब्रा. I. 3. 4) and remarks 'इति सशब्दयं दर्शयति'.

on Yāj. III. 243 furnishes examples of samuccaya in the matter of expiations.

The Tantravārtika (on PMS III. 3. 14 pp. 859–860) collects together about three dozen cases of bādha in general not dependent on either the conflict between śruti, liṅga &c. or not falling under the bādha instanced above. They are 'inference and such appearances as mirage are dispelled by or invalidated by direct perception, deceptive means of knowledge by the six means of knowledge, smṛti by śruti, a contradictory and untrustworthy smṛti by a trustworthy and uncontradicted smṛti, a smṛti with a visible purpose by another with an unseen purpose &c.'.

There is in the 10th chapter an important topic about dakṣiṇā (sacrificial fees). In X. 2. 22–28 it is established that dakṣiṇā is to be given not for an unseen purpose (adṛṣṭa) but for engaging the priests to perform rites required in sacrifices. In III. 8 1–2 it is established that the yajamāna (the svāmin) is to engage priests for sacrifices except where a vedic text expressly directs otherwise (as in Tai. S. V. 2. 8. 2). In X. 3. 39 the items of dakṣiṇā are set out from Tāṇḍya XVI. 1. 10–11; it is held that the words 'dvādaśaśatam dakṣiṇā' mean [2193] that the cows are to be 112 (X. 3. 39, 49) and in X. 3. 50 it is provided that the yajamāna should himself distribute the fees and X. 3. 55 sets out the method of distribution. All priests are not to receive equal shares. The four principal priests are hotṛ, adhvaryu, [2194] udgātṛ and brahmā and each of these four have three assistants arranged in a certain order set out in the note below. Suppose there are one hundred cows to be distributed as fee. Each group of four is assigned 1/4 i. e. 25 for hotā and his assistants, the hotā getting 12 and the other three getting respectively 6, 4, and 3 i. e. they get respectively half, 1/3 and 1/4 of what their principal gets. The same method applies to the other three groups. The prima facie[2195] view is that there should be an equal distribution of the fee (cows) as śruti does not lay down any unequal distribution; this is not accepted and it is proposed that the fee should be distributed in proportion to the work done by each. The established conclusion is that both the views are unacceptable and that the distribution should be in accordance with the meaning of the words 'ardhinaḥ,[2196] tṛtīyinaḥ and pādinaḥ' employed by Śruti.

2193. अस्ति ज्योतिष्टोमः, ज्योतिष्टोमेन स्वर्गकामो यजेतेति। तत्रैवमाम्नायते। गौश्चाश्वश्चाश्वतरश्च गर्दभश्चाजाश्चावयश्च व्रीहयश्च यवाश्च तिलाश्च माषाश्च। तस्य द्वादशशतं दक्षिणा। शबर on X. 3. 39. There is great divergence of views about the dakṣiṇā to be given; vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1188.

2194. होता मैत्रावरुणोऽच्छावाको ग्रावस्तुत्, अध्वर्युः प्रतिप्रस्थाता नेष्टोन्नेता, ब्रह्मा ब्राह्मणाच्छंसी आग्नीध्रः पोता, उद्गाता प्रस्तोता प्रतिहर्ता सुब्रह्मण्यः–इति। The four principal priests are underlined, three assistants come after each principal one. The assistants immediately after all four principals are called ardhinaḥ (they get half of their principal, they being मैत्रावरुण, प्रतिप्रस्थाता, ब्राह्मणाच्छंसिन् and प्रस्तोता); the thirds in each group of four constitute what are called tṛtīyinaḥ (they get ⅓ of what their principals get, they being अच्छावाकः, नेष्टा, आग्नीध्रः, प्रतिहर्ता); the last in each of the four groups are called pādinaḥ (they get one-fourth of what their principals get, they being ग्रावस्तुत्, उन्नेता, पोता and सुब्रह्मण्य). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1188–1189 and vol. III. p. 469 for distribution of fees among sacrificial priests.

Manu (VIII. 210) mentions the method of the distribution of fees in Vedic sacrifices outlined above and extends its principles of division to men working jointly on such undertakings as the construction of houses &c.[2197] Though the sūtra (samaṁ syād-aśrutivāt) is only the pūrvapakṣa view and not accepted as to the distribution of the cows as fees in Vedic sacrifices, it has been frequently followed as an equitable rule by medieval Dharmaśāstra writers. The Sm. C. relies on it about the liability of sureties (II. p. 152), about equal shares between father and sons in partition (II. p. 260) and II. 285 (distribution of yautaka among unmarried daughters), II. 404. Kullūka on Manu III. 1 (where 36 years are laid down as the period of studentship for mastering the three Vedas) states, relying on the sūtra 'samam' &c. that thirty-six years should be equally distributed over the three Vedaśākhās. The Madanaratna (on Vyavahāra) p. 202 quotes both verses of Manu (VIII. 210–11), then quotes Manu VIII. 210 (on p. 213) and explains and then sets out the distribution of the dakṣiṇā if it was 112 cows. The Vyahāraprakāśa pp. 443 and 548 (on division of mother's yautaka stridhana by unmarried daughters) refer to the rule of equal division. Most of these works (as printed) read the sūtra as 'samam syādaśrutatvāt' and not as Jaimini and Śabara read.

2195. समं स्यादश्रुतित्वात्। अपि वा कर्मवैषम्यात्। अतुल्यौः स्युः परिक्रये विषमाख्या विधिश्रुतौ परिक्रयाच्च कर्मण्युपपद्यते दर्शनाद्विशेषस्य तथाम्युदये। पू. मी. सू. X. 3. 53-55.

2196. अध्वर्युः गृहपतिं दीक्षयित्वा ब्रह्माणं दीक्षयति तत उद्गातारं ततो होतारम्। ततस्तं प्रतिप्रस्थाता दीक्षयित्वा अर्धिनो दीक्षयति।... ततस्तं नेष्टा दीक्षयित्वा तृतीयिनो दीक्षयति।... ततस्तमुन्नेता दीक्षयित्वा पादिनो दीक्षयति पोतारं ब्रह्मणः सुब्रह्मण्यमुद्गातुः ग्रावस्तुतं होतुः। शबर on V. 1. 1 and also on X. 3. 55. Vide आप. श्रौ. सू. XXI. 2. 16-20 for a similar passage.

2197. सर्वेषामर्धिनो मुख्यास्तदर्धेनार्धिनोऽपरे।... अनेन विधियोगेन कर्तव्यांशप्रकल्पना॥ मनु. VIII. 210-211; एतच्चतुर्वंशपरिकल्पनविधानं तस्य द्वादशशतं दक्षिणेति क्रतुसम्बन्धमात्रेण विहितायां दक्षिणायां न तु ऋत्विग्विशेषसम्बन्धित्वेन विहितायाम्। अन्यं दृष्टान्तविदो शास्त्रे इति तत्प्रतिपादकश्रुतिविरोधापत्तेः। मदनरत्न (व्यव०) pp. 202-203. मदनरत्न adds (p. 204) पशुबन्धादौ विषमविभागो नोक्त इति तत्र साम्येन दक्षिणाविभागः॥. If there be 112 cows, 28 cows are to be assigned to each of four वर्ग्स (viz. होतृवर्ग, अध्वर्युवर्ग, उद्गातृवर्ग and ब्रह्मवर्ग), then होतृवर्ग share is to be divided into 25 and होतृ is to get 12 out of 25 parts and his assistants 6, 4, 3 respectively i. e. the shares would approximately be 13, 6, 5, 4 (in 28 cows).

The eleventh chapter deals with tantra which embraces cases where one act serves the purpose of several other acts or rites.[2198] For example, there are three yāgas viz. puroḍāśa (cake) baked on eight potsherds for Agni, curds for Indra and milk for Indra; one performance of the Prayājas serves these three (XI. 1. 5–19 and XI. 1. 29–37). Ādhāna (establishment of the sacred fires) is to be done only once and is not to be repeated in each iṣṭi, paśuyāga or somayāga (XI. 3. 2); the utensils required for Śrauta rites are prepared only once and are to be kept till the death of the sacrificer (XI. 3. 34–42).[2199] All these are cases of tantra. The general rule is that the place, time and the performer as regards all principal matters in one composite rite such as Āgneya and others in Darśapūrṇamāsa are one (XI. 2. 1) and also that they are the same for aṅgas (details); but in the case of the aṅgas (details) the place, time and the performer may be different on account of express texts.

If the fruit or result (phala) follows from all the component sacrifices collectively, then the subsidiary details have to be performed only once and not separately in the case of each component; this is tantra. But if the result follows from each of the component sacrifices separately, then the subsidiary details should be performed with each one of those components. That would be a case of āvāpa (decentralisation or scattering). In the Darśapūrṇamāsa there are really two sets [2200] of sacrifices, one called Darśa (on amāvāsyā) and the other Pūrṇamāsa. The subsidiaries prescribed for each are almost the same. Yet they have to be repeated with each of the two sets, the principal reason being that the two are performed on two different days separated by a fortnight, though the two sets together make one single sacrifice leading to a single fruit. Vide PMS XI. 2. 12–18 which is a case of āvāpa.

---

2198. यत्सकृत्कृतं बहूनामुपकरोति तत् तन्त्रमित्युच्यते यथा बहूनां ब्राह्मणानां मध्ये कृतः प्रदीपः। यत्त्वावृत्त्योपकरोति स आवापः। यथा तेषामेव ब्राह्मणानामनुलेपनम्। श्लोकमप्युदाहरन्ति-साधारणं भवेत्तन्त्रं परार्थे त्वमयोजकः। एवमेव प्रसङ्गः स्यादिष्यमाणे स्वके विधौ। शबर on XI. 1. 1; against repeating such acts as prayājas, शबर remarks 'येन सकृत्कृतेन नोपकृतं स पुनः क्रियमाण उपकरिष्यतीति काशा।' on XI. 1. 30; even the Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali mentions this rule; on वार्तिक 4 (तत्रावयवे शास्त्रार्थसंप्रत्ययो यथा लोके) on पा. VI. 1. 84 it remarks 'यथा लोके वसन्ते ब्राह्मणोऽग्नीनावधीतेति सकृदाधाय कृतः शास्त्रार्थ इति कृत्वा पुनः प्रवृत्तिर्न भवति। यथा गर्गाहते ब्राह्मण उपनेय इति सकृदुपनीय कृतः शास्त्रार्थ इति कृत्वा पुनः प्रवृत्तिर्न भवति।'.

2199. यज्ञायुधानि धार्येरन् प्रतिपत्तिविधानाद्यजीयवत्। पू. मी. सू. XI. 3. 34. The Vedic text is आहिताग्निमग्निभिर्वहन्ति यज्ञपात्रैश्च. Ten यज्ञायुधs are enumerated in तै. सं. I. 6. 8. 2–3 (स्रुचश्च कपालानि च etc.). For these and other utensils required in Vedic sacrifices, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 985, n. 2233; vide also पू. मी. सू. XI. 3. 43–45 which establish that the Yajñapātras are to be kept from the day of Agnyādheya and that placing them on the body of the sacrificer after his death is pratipattikarma of the utensils and of the sacred fires. Vide शबर on जै. XI. 3. 45.

The Aveṣṭi is a sacrifice which is performed as part of the composite sacrifice called Rājasūya that could be performed only by Kṣatriyas. It is also an independent sacrifice that could be performed by any one of the three higher varṇas. This is no part of the Rājasūya and is different from it, though the passage about it occurs in the midst of the description of Rājasūya.[2201] This is relied upon by the Nirṇayasindhu in connection with the Navarātra from Āśvina 1st to 9th of the bright half. There were different views, viz. Devīpūjā was to be performed for 9 days or on 8th or 9th tithi (vide above p. 154). The Kālikāpurāṇa quotes [2202] a verse about Devīpūjā on the 8th or 9th alone of Āśvina (śukla) and the N. S. interprets it as a separate worship on 8th or 9th alone distinct from the whole Navarātra.

2200. On XI. 2.15 शबर says 'अपि वा न तन्त्रमङ्गानि स्युः। कुतः कर्मपृथक्त्वात्। तेषां च तन्त्रविधानात्। कर्माणि तावदेतानि भिन्नानि अन्यः पौर्णमासः समुदायोऽन्य आमावास्यः। एवं सर्वत्र। तेषां च देशकालभेदः। पौर्णमास्यां पौर्णमास्या यजेतेत्येवमादिः साङ्गानां च तेषां तत्र तत्र देशकालविधिः। ... तस्मात्पौर्णमास्यङ्गानां पौर्णमासीकालः। अमावास्याङ्गनाममावास्याकालः। तत्र गृह्यते विशेषः। विशेषग्रहणान्नेदः।'.

2201. अवेष्टौ यज्ञसंयोगात्कर्तृप्रधानमुच्यते। पू. मी. सू. II. 3. 3; अस्ति राजसूयः, राजा राजसूयेन यजेतेति। तं प्रकृत्यामनन्ति—अवेष्टिं नामेष्टिम्। आग्नेयोऽष्टाकपालो हिरण्यं दक्षिणा इत्येवमादि। तां प्रकृत्य विधीयते। यदि ब्राह्मणो यजेत बार्हस्पत्यं मध्ये निधायाहुतिमाहुतिं हुत्वाभिधारयेत्। यदि राजन्य ऐन्द्रं यदि वैश्यो वैश्वदेवम्—इति। शबर; for यदि ब्राह्मणो ... वैश्वदेवम् vide आप. श्रौ. 18. 21. 11. The सूत्र 'अवेष्टौ यज्ञसंयोगात्' may be expanded as follows 'अवेष्टौ यदि ब्राह्मण इत्यादिकं ब्राह्मणादिकर्तृकमयोगान्तरप्राप्तं स्यादेकस्यैव क्षत्रियस्य राजसूययज्ञसंयोगात्; then come अवेष्टौ चैकतस्त्यं स्यादिङ्गदर्शनात्। वचनात्कामसंयोगेन। क्रत्वर्थायामिति चेन्न वर्णसंयोगात्। पू. मी. सू. XI. 4. 8–10.

2202. एकाहपक्षोपि कालिकापुराणे-यस्त्वेकस्यामथाष्टम्यां नवम्यामथ साधकः। पूजयेद्धरदां देवीं महाविभवविस्तरैः॥ इति। तत्त्वं तु राजसूयेन्ययागैः सममधानायाः सहिताया अप्यवेष्टेरेतयाज्ञाय्यकालं याजयेदित्येकत्वान्मध्ये विधानाच्च यथा फलार्थो बहिः प्रयोगस्तथा नवरात्रमध्यस्थाया अष्टम्या नवम्या वा फलार्थः पृथक्प्रयोगः। नि. सि. p. 164.

The same adhikaraṇa where the Pūrvapakṣa proposes that Rājā means any one of any varṇa who rules over a kingdom and offers protection to the country and its cities, the siddhānta (PMS and Śabara) holds that 'rājā' is a word expressive of a caste viz. Kṣatriya, and this is referred to by several late Dharmaśāstra works like the Rājadharmakaustubha (p. 5). The V. P. refers to this adhikaraṇa and interprets the verse of Nārada viz. 'one who is an apostate from the order of ascetics would become the slave of the king' as providing that even a kṣatriya apostate would have to be the slave even of a vaiśya ruler, though the word 'rājā' in the primary sense means a kṣatriya yet in a secondary sense (lakṣaṇā) any one who protects subjets could be called rājā. The Par. M. discusses this adhikaraṇa at great length (I. 1. pp. 449–55). It may be noticed that the meaning of 'rājā' as kṣatriya in early texts changed to any ruler of any class who protects the country and people ruled over by him. This change is brought out briefly in Tantravārtika on III. 5. 26.

The 12th chapter deals with the topics of prasaṅga, vikalpa and the like. Prasaṅga occurs when something done in one place is helpful in another place also, just as when a lamp is lighted in a mansion it illumines the public road also.[2203] In connection with the Agnīṣomīya animal sacrifice an offering of paśupuroḍāśa (a cake of the meat of the animal sacrificed) in the words 'having offered the omentum of the animal to Agni and Soma one offers a paśupuroḍāśa cooked on eleven potsherds to Agni and Soma'. The question is whether the details such as prayājas should be performed afresh for this or whether those details performed at the time of offering the omentum will suffice. The established conclusion is that the details already performed at offering paśu (omentum) will serve for the offering of the meat cake also.[2204] In such cases the place or time and performer are to be the same. This conclusion is relied upon in the Prāyaścittaviveka which says that when a man performs the expiation for twelve years in connection with grave sins of different kinds or of the same kind, there is no necessity of a separate expiation for venial sins on the analogy of paśupuroḍāśa.[2205] Vide H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 88–91 for twelve years' expiation for brāhmaṇa-murder.

---

2203. अन्यत्र कृतस्यान्यत्रापि प्रसक्तिः प्रसङ्गः। यथा गृहीपस्य प्रासादे कृतस्य राजमार्गे-प्यालोककरणम्। शबर on पू. मी. XII. 1. 1.

2204. अग्नीषोमीये पशौ पुरोडाशः, अग्नीषोमीयस्य वपया प्रचर्याग्नीषोमीयं पशुपुरोडाशमेकादशकपालं निर्वपेदिति। किं तस्य पृथक्त्वेनाकृतानि कर्तव्यानि उत यानि पशौ कृतानि तान्यप्युपकुर्वन्तीति। शबर on XII. 1. 1; अथवा नैव भेदेन पुरोडाशस्य तन्त्रं कर्तव्यम्। किं तर्हि। मुख्यतन्त्रेण सिद्धिः स्यात्। पाशुकमेव तन्त्रं पुरोडाशस्योपकुर्यात्। किं कारणम्। तन्त्रमध्ये विधानात्। पाशुकस्य तन्त्रस्य मध्ये पुरोडाशो विहितः, अग्नीषोमीयस्य वपया ... कपालं निर्वपतीति। शबर on XII. 1. 3.

Vikalpa has already been dealt with above (pp. 1249–1252).

The preceding pages are enough to exhibit the main doctrines and some of the principal Mīmāṁsā rules of interpretation and the great influence that the Mīmāṁsā exercised for over two thousand years on Dharmaśāstra works from the Āpastambadharmasūtra to late medieval works like the Smṛtitattva, Nirṇayasindhu and Vyavahāramayūkha. An exhaustive treatment of the numerous technical terms, topics and principles of the mīmāṁsā would easily cover a thousand pages, would enormously add to the extent of this work and has to be given up here for reasons of space, if for no other reason.

The Mīmāṁsā rules have been of considerable help to Dharmaśāstra writers. But it should not be supposed that application of the Mīmāṁsā rules is easy or that the rules always enable scholars to arrive at agreed or certain and definite conclusions. Apart from the schism between the Prābhākara and Bhāṭṭa schools already referred to above (on p. 1189) there are many circumstances which militate against the certainty and usefulness of mīmāṁsā conclusions. There are variant readings in the sūtras themselves (e. g. on I. 2. 9 there are three readings according to Tantravārtika p. 123, on I. 2. 14 two readings acc. to Tantrav. pp. 128–129). Śabara omitted the sutra II. 4. 17 (vākyāsamavāyāt) and the Tantravārtika notes (pp. 895–897) that Śabara omits six sūtras after III. 4. 9. Śabara frequently mentions a predecessor called Vṛttikāra with great respect but differs from him in some cases (e. g. on I. 1. 3–5), does not like his way of dealing with sūtras like II. 1. 32, 33 and VIII. 1. 2. Śabara gives alternative explanations of the same sūtra (e. g. of I. 3. 4, VII. 4. 13, VIII. 1. 39). Sometimes he treats two or more sūtras as forming one adhikaraṇa and alternatively treats one of them as forming a separate adhikaraṇa (as in I. 3. 3–4, II. 2. 23–24). He proposes more than two explanations of the same sūtra viz. IV. 1. 2. He puts forward two or more explanations of the same adhikaraṇa (as in IV. 3. 27–28, VIII. 3. 14–15 of two sūtras out of four), IX. 1. 1, IX. 1. 2–3, IX. 1. 34–35, IX. 2. 1–2, IX. 2. 21–24, IX. 2. 25–28 four explanations, X. 2. 30–31 three explanations, X. 1. 1–2 three explanations, X. 4. 1–2 three explanations. On 'Viśaye prāyadarśanāt' II. 3. 16 Śabara himself is at a loss as to what the doubt intended by the sūtrakāra is or what the sūtrakāra wants to establish and relies upon what the vṛttikāra says about the passage to be discussed and about the doubt that arises. Besides, Śabara and Kumārila differ about the subject matters of certain adhikaraṇas as in 1. 3. 3–4 (where Kumārila gives on pp. 194–195 a different interpretation altogether after first accepting Śabara's view), I. 3. 5–7, I. 3. 8–9, I. 3. 11–14. Kumārila shows scant respect for Jaimini by naming him without the honorific title 'bhagavān' or 'ācārya' on pp. 495, 650, 655, 895, charges Jaimini with composing sūtras not containing much substance (p. 895) and remarks that Jaimini's sūtra is improper or wrong (e. g. vide p. 1241 about IV. 2. 27).

2205. एवमतुल्यरूपेषु पापेषु समानजातीयेषु विजातीयेषु वा लघुपापोद्देशेन द्वादशवार्षिकादिरूपप्रायश्चित्ते कृते स्वल्पपापानां पशुपुरोडाशन्यायेन प्रसङ्गादेव कार्यसिद्धेर्लाघवात् न पृथक् प्रायश्चित्तानुष्ठानम्। प्राय. वि. p. 85.

Kumārila is often critical of Śabara's bhāṣya and remarks dozens of times that the bhāṣya is improper (ayukta) or deserves to be discarded, is unmeaning or absurd (asambaddha) as on pp. 165, 302 (upekṣitavya), 313 (asambaddha), 314, 662, 710, 731, 863 (asambaddha), 950, 953, 1090–91, 1615 (bahavo doṣāḥ), 1714, 1980, 2004, 2193, 2204.

Another circumstance that makes one entertain grave doubts about the universal validity and usefulness of the principles evolved by the PMS system must also be adverted to. The greatest students of Mīmāṁsā arrive at entirely different conclusions on many points. Some striking cases may be referred to here. One of the most glaring of such cases is the interpretation of the short sūtra of Vasiṣṭha[2206] (15. 5, na strī putram dadyāt pratigṛhṇīyād vā anyatrānujñādbhartuḥ) 'a woman should not give or take a son in adoption except with the assent of her husband.' This has been interpreted in four different ways by works and authors about a Hindu widow's power of adopting a son. The Dattakamīmāṁsā holds that no widow can adopt a son, because, the husband being already dead, no assent of his can be had at the time of adoption. Vācaspati, a Maithila writer, was of the same opinion on the further ground that, as Vasiṣṭha lays down that one about to take a son in adoption should, after having performed a homa in the middle of his house with the vyāhṛtis, take (in adoption) only him who is closely related and who is a kinsman and not remote (in habitation &c.) and, as women cannot perform a homa with Vedic mantras, all women including widows have no power to adopt. But in Bengal, it was held that the husband's assent need not be given at the time of adoption and that it may be given long before the actual adoption. In Madras it was held that the word husband in 'except with the assent of the husband' is only illustrative and that therefore the assent of the agnates of the father-in-law (husband's father) or of the husband's agnates would be enough to enable a widow to adopt. The Vyavahāramayūkha,[2207] the Nirṇayasindhu and the Saṁskāra-kaustubha hold that the assent of the husband is required for a woman whose husband is living and that a widow can adopt provided she has not been forbidden to adopt by her husband. For a detailed presentation of these four views and the case law, vide H. of Dh. vol. III, pp. 668–674. The Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act (No. 78 of 1956) has made far-reaching and radical changes in the Law of Hindu adoptions and section 4 of that Act overrules all texts, rules or interpretations of Hindu Law or customs and usages as part of that law, except in so far as they may have been expressly saved by that Act.

---

2206. अत एव वसिष्ठः। न स्त्री पुत्रं ... भर्तुः—इति। अनेन विधवाया भर्त्रनुज्ञानासम्भवाद्यनधिकारो गम्यते। ... किं च व्याहृतिभिर्हुत्वा अदूरवान्धवं संनिकृष्टमेव प्रतिगृह्णीयात्—इति समानकर्तृकताबोधक-क्त्वाप्रत्ययश्रवणात् होमकर्तुरेव प्रतिग्रहसिद्धेः क्रीणां होमानधिकारत्वात् परिग्रहानधिकारः – इति वाचस्पतिः। वृत्तकमीमांसा pp. 19 and 22–23 (Ānan).

The Mitākṣarā and the Dāyabhāga, both steeped in Mīmāṁsā lore, differ on numerous points, some of which are:— (1) The Mit. holds that property or ownership arises by birth, the Dāyabhāga denies it and says it is on the death of the previous owner or by partition; (2) superior right to inherit depends on religious efficacy according to the Dāyabhāga, while nearness of blood relation is the determining factor according to the Mit.; (3) Members of a joint family hold family property in quasi-severalty and can dispose of their shares even before partition according to the Dāyabhāga; the Mit. does not say so; (4) acc. to Dāyabhāga even in a joint family a widow succeeds to her husband's share on his death without male issue, while the Mit. does not accept this view.

2207. भर्त्रनुज्ञा तु सधवाया एव दृष्टार्थत्वात्। विधवायास्तु तां विनापि पितृसदृभावे ज्ञातीनामाज्ञया भवति ... अतो यस्यामवस्थायां भर्त्रनुज्ञा प्राप्ता सैवात्रानूद्यते न त्वपूर्वा विधीयते। अतो विधवाया भर्तुराज्ञां विनाप्यधिकारः। व्य. म. p. 113; उक्तविधदत्तकस्वीकारः पुंभिरिव स्त्रीभिरपि सधवाभिर्विधवाभिश्च कार्यः। सं. कौ. p. 160.

One may note the great cleavage of opinion (above p. 1230) on such texts as Yāj. I. 81 (whether there is a vidhi or a niyama or parisaṅkhyā); in note 2111 (p. 1291) between the V. M. and Raghunandana both great Mimāṁsakas; in note 2113 p. 1292 on the interpretation of the word 'mātṛ' by Aparārka and the Dāyabhāga; on pp. 1302-3, notes 2133-34 above on Bṛhaspati's verse on re-united coparceners.

In passing it may be stated that to call the Act 'Hindu Adoptions Act' is a travesty and misnomer. It should have simply been called the Law of Adoptions in India and should have retained the ancient Hindu rules for Hindus as developed by the courts and should have been of a permissive character for all Indians like the English Statute (of 1926) on the adoption of children. The general Hindu law of adoption as developed in the authoritative smṛtis and commentaries and the case law did not contemplate the adoption of a daughter (except when she was made in ancient times a putrikā) and to allow the adoption of a daughter when a son was living throws to the winds the basic priniciple of the Hindu Law that a sonless man should adopt a male as a son for the sake of the presentation of piṇḍas and water (to the Manes) and for continuance of the family name (sections 7 and 11 of the Act). The Act allows a woman (even if not married) to adopt to herself a son or daughter or both and under it a woman, if married, can adopt a daughter even if she has a son but a married woman cannot adopt a daughter if she has already a daughter or a son's daughter living at the time of adoption (sections 8 and 11). The Act does not recognize dvyāmusyāyana adoptions which were recognized by Sanskrit texts and also by judicial decisions. The ministers in the Government and their followers (most of the latter hardly know what Hindu Law was and has been) were carried away by enthusiasm for equality of rights for both men and women. As the Indian Union is now a welfare State and it is professed that laws are to be made keeping in view a socialistic pattern, Govt. should have disallowed adoptions altogether or at least put great curbs on indiscriminate adoptions. Instead, they extended the scope of adoption among Hindus by allowing a man to adopt a daughter even when he had a son or sons and by allowing even unmarried women to adopt a son or daughter or both. This is against a socialistic pattern. If adoptions had been disallowed entirely or allowed within narrow limits cases of escheat to Government for want of heirs would have been many and to that extent a socialistic pattern would have been advanced. There is no evidence to show that women were keen on the right to adopt a son or daughter even when they were unmarried. The first principle of introducing reforms in the existing law is that only strictly necessary changes should be put forward. Reformers and legislators should take to heart the advice of Mr. Aldous Huxley (in 'Ends and Means,' p. 30) that change as such is more or less distressing to most human beings, that man's conservatism is a fact in any historical situation and that social reformers should abstain from making unnecessary changes or changes that are of startling magnitude. Legislators should not forget that when they introduce far-reaching changes to lessen hardships, real or supposed, deemed to be caused by existing social conditions, they very often create new problems for the immediate future. To take a simple example, under the old Hindu Law all girls were to be married before puberty, though Manu (IX. 90) provided that a girl should wait for three years thereafter during which, her parents or relatives might select a bridegroom for her, but that if they failed to do so she may herself choose her partner. This was not a bad provision. People however went in for child marriages for girls and the problem of spinsters never arose. Then over thirty years ago came the Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929) whereby the legally allowed marriageable age for girls was fixed at 14. By subsequent amendments and by the Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955) the lowest marriageable age for girls is now fixed at 15. This Act of 1929 originally went a long way in raising the minimum age for the marriage of girls. Then, after the second world war, owing to economic stringency, and other factors, the tendency of marrying at a late age increased and now the problem of spinsters among Hindus has emerged and great difficulties about the marriages of grown-up women in middle class families are being experienced.

Appendix to Section VII Chap. XXX.

It would be helpful to the students of Pūrvamīmāṁsā and of Dharmaśāstra, if some of the important and frequently cited maxims (nyāyas) of the former, are brought together in one place with references from the P. M. S., Śabara, Kumārila, Pārthasārathi, the Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali, Śaṅkarācārya's bhāṣya on the Vedānta-sūtras, the Bhāmatī on the Śāṅkara-bhāṣya and a few others. Kumārila, particularly, is very fond of employing Nyāyas in the Tantravārtika e. g. on p. 415 (on Jai. II. 1. 8) he employs five different nyāyas. Many of these nyāyas have been explained in the several volumes of the History of Dharmaśāstra to which references will be furnished at the appropriate places. Several of the nyāyas here mentioned occur in the Laukika-nyāyāñjali (in three parts) published by the indefatigable scholar, Col. Jacob. In some cases his explanations are not accurate or satisfactory, but one must not forget that he wrote about half a century ago.

अग्निहोत्रन्याय — जै. VI. 2. 23–26; vide शङ्कर on वे. सू. III. 4. 32.

अङ्गगुणविरोधन्याय — जै. XII. 2. 25; vide शबर thereon and मी. न्या. प्र. p. 166.

अङ्गभूयस्त्वे फलभूयस्त्वम् — शबर on जै. X. 6. 62 and XI. 1. 15.

अङ्गाङ्गिन्याय — जै. II. 2. 3–8. Vide above p. 1308 n 2146.

अङ्गानां प्रधानोपकाररूपैककार्यार्थत्वम् — जै. XI. 1. 5–10.

अणुरपि विशेषोऽध्यवसायकरः — vide व्य. प्र. p. 525 and व्य. म. p. 143.

अधिकारन्याय — जै. VI. 1. 1–3 and 4–5 (śāstra is meant only for human beings), but vide वे. सू. I. 3. 26–33, where शङ्कर on I. 3. 26 holds that Śabara's words have no application to brahmavidyā.

अनन्यलभ्यः शब्दार्थः — मी. न्या. प्र. p. 92 'अत्राहुः। स एव शब्दस्यार्थो यः प्रकारान्तरेण न लभ्यते। अनन्य...र्थ इति न्यायात्।; vide भामती on वे. सू. I. 3. 17 (प्रसिद्धेश्च).

अनुपकृङ्गन्याय — जै. II. 1. 48; vide pp. 1304–1306 above and स्मृतिच. (on आह्निक p. 381), व्य. म. p. 147.

अन्तरङ्गबहिरङ्गयोरन्तरङ्गं बलीयः — vide शबर on जै. XII. 2. 27; महाभाष्य (on पा. I. 1. 4, I. 1. 5) says 'असिद्धं बहिरङ्गमन्तरङ्गे'.

अन्धपरम्परान्याय — तन्त्रवा. on जै. I. 3. 27 p. 282 and on III. 3. 14 p. 858, मेधा. on मनु X. 5, शङ्कर on वे. सू. II. 2. 30.

अन्यायश्चानेकार्थत्वम् — शबर on जै. II. 1. 12 p. 410, on V. 4. 14 p. 1340, on VI. 1. 22 p. 1366, on VII. 3. 3, p. 1550; तन्त्रवा. on II. 4. 10, p. 639, भामती on वे. सू. I. 3. 17; vide मनु. पा. p. 369 and p. 1292, n. 2112 above.

अपच्छेदन्याय — शबर on जै. VI. 5. 49–50 defines अपच्छेद as 'संयुक्तस्य हि पृथग्भावोऽपच्छेदः' and व्यव. प्र. p. 535. The word occurs in जै. VI. 5. 56.

अप्राप्ते शास्त्रमर्थवत् — This is part of जै. VI. 2. 18 and means 'विधिना तावच्चोद्य विधेयं यत्प्रकारान्तरेण्याप्तम्' मी. न्या. प्र. p. 222.

अभिमर्शनन्याय — जै. III. 7. 8–10; व्यव. प्र. p. 535.

अभ्यासाधिकरण — जै. II. 2. 2 (with reference to five Prayājas in तै. सं. II, 6. 1. 1–2). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1057 n 2368 and above p. 1306.

अभ्युदितेष्टिन्याय — जै. VI. 5. 1–9; मिता० on या. III. 253 and व्य. म. pp. 151–152 and notes thereon pp. 277–279 and भामती on वे. सू. III. 3. 7.

अरुणान्याय or अरुणाधिकरण — जै. III. 1. 12 on तै. सं. VI. 1. 6. 7 अरुणया पिङ्गाक्ष्या क्रीणाति; vide अपरार्क p. 1030 on या. III. 205, मद. पा. pp. 88–89, H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1142 n 2547 and above pp. 1294–5.

अर्के चेन्मधु विन्देत किमर्थं पर्वतं व्रजेत्—शबर on जै. I. 2. 4 quotes the latter half also as इष्टस्यार्थस्य संसिद्धौ को विद्वान् यत्नमाचरेत्. He explains अर्क as a plant (Calatropis Gigantea); vide also तन्त्रवा. on same p. 111, विश्वरूप on या. III. 243 (first half); शङ्कर on वे. सू. III. 4. 3 quotes the first half as a न्याय.

अर्धकुक्कुटिपाक — means the same thing as अर्धजरतीय; vide तन्त्रवा० p. 720 on जै. III. 1. 13. It means 'it involves a total contradiction to say that one would cook half a hen for food and keep the other half for laying eggs.'

अर्धजरतीय — Vide महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 5 on पा. IV. 1. 78 (अर्धं जरत्या: कामयतेऽर्धं नेति), शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. 1. 2. 8 (यथाशास्त्रं तर्हि शास्त्रीयोर्धः प्रतिपत्तव्यो न तत्रार्धजरतीयं लभ्यम्), परा. मा. II. 1. p. 702.

अर्धवैशस — Resembles अर्धजरतीयन्याय. Vide तन्त्रवा. pp. 170, 174, 180, 261; शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 3. 18. वैशस means 'destruction, rending into pieces, conflict'. The कुमारसम्भव IV. 31 employs the word in the literal sense.

अर्धमन्तर्वेदि मिनोत्यर्धं बहिर्वेदि — Vide शबर on जै. III. 7. 14 and तन्त्रवा. pp. 1083–84; quoted by व्य. म. pp. 115, 146 and notes (by the present author) pp. 189–191 and H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1114 and vol. III. pp. 694–95.

अवयवप्रसिद्धेः समुदायप्रसिद्धिर्बलीयसी — vide शबर on जै. VI. 7. 22, who gives अश्वकर्ण (name of a tree) with leaves like horse's ears as an instance (which has neither अश्वत्व nor कर्णत्व), तन्त्रवा. on जै. I, 4. 11.

अवेष्ट्यधिकरणन्याय — जै II. 3. 3 and XI. 4. 10. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 38 and above pp. 1332–33 n 2201–2, शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 3. 50.

अश्वाभिधानीन्याय — इमामगृभ्णन्रशनामृतस्येत्यश्वाभिधानीमादत्ते — तै. सं. V. 1. 2. 1 and the mantra occurs in तै. सं. IV. 1. 2. 1, explained in मी. न्या. प्र. p. 80, अर्थसंग्रह p. 5. Vide p. 1308 n 2147.

अश्वकर्णन्याय — vide दुपटीका on जै. IV. 4. 1 p. 1270. This is put forward to assert that in राजसूय the conventional meaning has to be taken and not the literal one.

आकाशमुष्टिहननन्याय — vide तन्त्रवा. on जै. I. 3. 12 p. 236 (यस्तम्नूनमुपादाय तुरीमात्रपरिग्रहात्। पदं कर्तुं समीहेत स हन्याद् व्योम मुष्टिभिः), शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 18.

आख्यातानामर्थं ब्रुवतां शक्तिः सहकारिणी — शबर on जै. I. 4. 25, अर्थसंग्रह (p. 16, calls it a न्याय), श्लोकवा. (on चोदनासूत्र verse 47 p. 59), तन्त्रवा. on जै. II. 1. 1 p. 378 (शक्तयः सर्वभावानां नानुयोज्याः स्वभावतः। तेन नाना वदन्त्यर्थान् प्रकृतिप्रत्ययादयः॥). Vide p. 1291 note 2111 above.

आनन्तूनामन्ते निवेशः — Vide शबर on जै. V. 3. 4 and X. 5. 1, शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. IV. 3. 3, H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 731 notes 1413–14 and तिथितत्त्व p. 63, व्य. म. p. 143.

आनन्तर्यमकारणम् — Vide यस्य येनार्थसम्बन्धः below. Vide the sūtra आनन्तर्यमर्थात् (जै. III. 1. 24) and जै. IV. 3. 11 a part of which is 'अर्थतो ह्यसमर्थानामानन्तर्येऽप्यसम्बन्धः'.

आर्ष्यधिकरणन्याय — जै. VI. 4. 22; तै. ब्रा. III. 7. 1. 7–8 has यस्योभयं हविरार्तिमार्च्छेद् वैश्वं पञ्चशरावमोदनं निर्वपेत्. Here the word उभयं is अविवक्षित and is no part of the विधि.

उद्दिश्यमानस्य (or उद्देश्यगतं) विशेषणमविवक्षितम् — Vide above p. 1286 notes 2098–99 on ग्रहं संमार्ष्टि and दुप्टीका on जै. VI. 4. 22 p. 1438, on VII. 1. 2 p. 1526, on IX. 1. 1 p. 1636, on X. 3, 39 p. 1882 (उद्दिश्यमानस्य च संख्या न विवक्ष्यते ग्रहस्येव) and व्य. म. pp. 45–46, 90, 132, 210 and विश्वरूप on या. III. 250 (न च लक्ष्यमाणस्य विशेषणं विवक्षितमिति न्यायः).

उद्भिदधिकरण — जै. I. 4. 1–2. उद्भिद्, चित्रा, अग्निहोत्र are names of yāgas (and not गुणविधि) and are प्रमाण. Vide pp. 1244–45 n 2021–22 above.

उपक्रमोपसंहारन्याय — If the उपक्रम is doubtful it is the उपसंहार that settles the same and not vice versa. Vide भामती on वे. सू. III. 3. 17.

उपसंहारन्याय — जै. III. 1. 26–27; उपसंहारो नाम सामान्यतः प्राप्तस्य विशेषे सङ्कोचरूपो व्यापारविशेषो विधेः। मी. न्या. प्र. p. 261; vide मिता. on या. I. 256, नि. सि. pp. 37 and 71, व्य. म. p. 111 and the present author's notes to V. M. p. 179.

ऋतुलिङ्गन्याय — This refers to the verse यथर्तावृतुलिङ्गानि नानारूपाणि पर्यये। दृश्यन्ते तानि तान्येव तथा भावा युगादिषु॥ आदिपर्व 1. 39 (= cr. ed. 1. 37), शान्तिपर्व 210. 17 (= cr. ed. 233. 15). This verse is quoted by तन्त्रवा. on जै. I. 3. 7 p. 202, in शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. I. 3. 30. It is also वायुपुराण 9. 65, विष्णुपुराण I. 5. 61, मार्कण्डेय 45. 43–44.

एकवाक्यतान्याय — जै. II. 1. 46. Vide M. M. Jha's 'Pūrvamīmāṁsā in its sources' pp. 192–193 for explanation and examples and H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 443 note 744 and pp. 1297–98 n 2123 above. विश्वरूप on या. III. 248 exemplifies this न्याय. The word एकवाक्यता occurs in वे. सू. III. 4. 24.

एकहायनीन्याय — m. by तन्त्रवा. on II. 1. 12 p. 415. It is the same as अरुणान्याय above.

एकार्थास्तु विकल्पेरन् — This is part of जै. XII. 3. 10. मिता. on या. III. 257 states 'एकार्थानामेव विकल्पो व्रीहियवयोरिव न च दण्डतपसोरेकार्थत्वम्'.

ऐन्द्रीन्याय — Vide pp. 1309–10 notes 1251–52 on ऐन्द्र्या गार्हपत्यमुपतिष्ठते.

औदमेधिन्याय — If a man's name is औदमेधि one at once infers, without being expressly told, that he is the son of one called उदमेध. Vide शबर on जै. III. 5. 26 p. 1003 and on II. 3, 3 at p. 580 and तन्त्रवा. p. 580.

औदुम्बराधिकरण — जै. I. 2. 19–25 concerning तै. सं. II. 1. 1. 6 औदुम्बरो यूपो भवति, ऊर्ग्वा उदुम्बर ऊर्ज पशवः, तन्त्रवा. p. 352, मी. न्या. प्र. p. 134 ff.

कपालन्याय or कपालाधिकरणन्याय — जै. X. 5. 1, explained in मलमासतत्त्व p. 779.

कपिञ्जलन्याय — जै. XI. 1. 38-46 and above pp. 1288–89, n 2105. Vide तन्त्रवा. p. 415 (on जै. II. 1. 12), and p. 1004 (on जै. III. 5. 26) saying कपिञ्जलवच्च त्रिष्वेव बहुत्वश्रुतिरवस्थाप्यते; परा. मा. I. 2. p. 281.

कम्बलनिर्णेजनन्याय — शबर on जै. II. 2. 25 p. 545 (निर्णेजनं क्षुभयं करोति कम्बलक्षुद्धिं पादयोश्च निर्मलताम्).

कर्मभूयस्त्वात्फलभूयस्त्वम् — Vide स्मृतिच. II. p. 264 and परा. मा. I. 1. p. 25 (कर्माधिक्यात्फलाधिक्यमिति न्यायसमाश्रयात्).

कलञ्जन्याय — शबर on जै. VI. 2. 19-20 on 'न कलञ्जं भक्षयितव्यं' says that this is downright prohibition (प्रतिषेध) and not a पर्युदास. Vide मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 248-249 and तिथितत्त्व p. 6.

कांस्यभोजिन्याय — This occurs in the पू. मी. सू. XII. 2. 34 itself (अधिकस्य गुणः साधारणेऽविरोधात्कांस्यभोजित्वदक्षुखयेऽपि); शंबर explains 'शिष्यस्य कांस्यपात्रभोजित्वनियमः, उपाध्यायस्य न नियमः। यदि तयोरेकस्मिन्पात्रे भोजनमापद्यते, अक्षुखयस्यापि शिष्यस्य धर्मो नियम्येत मा भूद्धर्मलोप इति'.

काकदन्तपरीक्षान्याय — Vide तुपटीका p. 1388 on जै. VI. 2. 1. Some actions such as counting the hair on the skin of an ass or the teeth of a crow are useless or profitless.

काकाक्षिगोलकन्याय — Vide तन्त्रवा. p. 198 on जै I. 3. 7, मेधा. on मनु VIII. 1, न्य. प्र. p. 534, न्य. म. p. 95 and notes thereon at p. 135.

काण्डानुसमय — शबर on जै. V. 2. 3 pp. 1310-11. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 739-740, vol. IV. pp. 441-442 note 987 and पदार्थानुसमय below.

कारणगुणपूर्वकत्वात्कार्यगुणानाम्न्याय — तन्त्रवा. p. 245 on जै. I. 3. 16. The qualities of the cause are found in the effect.

कुण्डपायिनामयनन्याय — जै. VII. 3. 1-4. Vide आप. श्रौ. 23. 10. 6 ff and H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 136-137 n 312 for references and p. 1307 above.

कुशकाशावलम्बनन्याय — Vide तन्त्रवा. p. 268 on जै. I. 3. 24. (कुश is दर्भ and काश is a grassy plant with white flowers). These are so frail that no one can support himself by means of these; so metaphorically it means "supporting by frail or hopeless arguments." Vide न्यव. प्र. p. 527.

कृत्वाचिन्ताम्याय — Taking up a purely hypothetical point for discussion; occurs frequently in Śābarabhāṣya, e. g. on जै. VI. 8. 43 p. 1522 (कृत्वा चिन्तायां प्रयोजनं वक्तव्यम्), on XI. 3. 16 p. 2175, XII. 2. 11 p. 2242; vide तन्त्रवा. p. 287 (on जै. I. 3. 27) and p 890 on जै. III. 4. 1 (यस्तु भाष्यकारेणोपन्यासः कृतः स कृत्वाचिन्ताम्यायेन).

कैमुतिकन्याय — The word is derived from किमुत, used in such passages as in कादम्बरी 'गर्भेश्वरत्व... शक्तित्वं चेति महतीयं खल्वनर्थपरम्परा, सर्वाविनयानामेकमप्येषामायतनं किमुत समवायः'। Vide न्य. म. p. 241 and present author's note on p. 419 of the notes to न्य. म.

क्षामेष्टिन्याय — जै. VI. 4. 17-20. If the Puroḍāśa to be offered in दर्शपूर्णमास is partially burnt, still one should perform the rite with the unburnt part of the cake and a prāyaścitta would be necessary only if the whole puroḍāśa is burnt. Vide मिताक्षरा on या. III. 243.

खलेकपोतवत् — Meaning 'like all pigeons, young and old, simultaneously alighting on a threshing floor.' Vide शबर on जै. XI. 1. 16 p 2111, मी. न्या. प्र. p. 65.

गार्हपत्यन्याय — Same as ऐन्द्रीन्याय above. Vide शबर on जै. III. 2. 3 and अर्थसंग्रह p. 6.

गुणकामाधिकरण — जै. II. 2. 25–26 based on इष्नेन्द्रियकामस्य जुहुयात् (तै. ब्रा.II. 1. 5. 6), the meaning being वृधिकरणत्वेनेन्द्रियं भावयेत्. Vide मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 42–43, and 36–39 and p. 1310 above.

गुणमुख्यव्यतिक्रमन्याय — This is part of जै. III. 3. 9 (गुणमुख्यव्यतिक्रमे तदर्थत्वान्मुख्येन वेदसंयोगः). Vide तन्त्रवा. pp. 810 and above p. 1290 n. 2108; शाङ्कर भाष्य on वे. सू. III. 3. 33 quotes this sūtra.

गुणलोपे च मुख्यस्य — This is जै X. 2. 63. The words क्रिया स्यात् (or भवति) are to be understood.

गोबलीवर्दन्याय — In such a sentence as गाव आनीयन्तां बलीवर्दाश्च, the separate mention of balīvardas that are really included under 'gāvaḥ' is due to the fact that bulls are more intractable than cows and require special attention and effort. This is often used in Dharmaśāstra works. Vide मिता० on या. III. 312–313, स्मृतिच. (on व्यवहार) pp. 66, 67, 102, 169, 280, 300, कुल्लूक on मनु VIII. 28, व्य. म. p. 2 and H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 526 note 966.

गौणमुख्ययोर्मुख्ये कार्यसंप्रत्ययः — Vide शबर on ज. III. 2. 1. This न्याय is also cited as मुख्यगौणयोः ... संप्रत्ययः. शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. IV. 13. 12 cites it. मुख्य and गौण respectively mean 'primary sense' and 'secondary sense.' The महाभाष्य has the परिभाषा 'गौण ... संप्रत्ययः' on वार्तिक 1 on पा. I. 1. 15 and on वार्तिक 4 on पा. VI. 3. 46. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 725, note 1399.

ग्रहैकत्वन्याय — जै. III. 1. 13–15 based on वज्रापविद्धेण ग्रहं संमार्ष्टि (तै. सं. III. 2. 2. 3). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 589 note 1380 and above p. 1285–86 and n. 2098.

चतुर्धाकरणन्याय — जै. III. 1. 26–27. Vide मी. न्या. प्र. p. 261, अर्थसंग्रह p. 24. Vide vol. IV, p. 670 n 1517.

छत्रिन्याय — Vide शबर on जै. I. 4. 23 (यथा छत्रिणो गच्छन्तीत्येकेन छत्रिणा सर्वे लक्ष्यन्ते), तन्त्रवा. on I. 4. 13, p. 347, दुप्टीका on जै. IV. 4. 1 p. 1270 and VII. 3. 7, p. 1552 and H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 500–501. शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू III. 3. 34 employs it in explaining छत्रं पिबन्तौ (कठोप. III. 1).

जतिलयधान्या जुहुयात् — This appears like a विधि, but it is only an अर्थवाद for praising पयोहोम. The vedic passage is in तै. सं. V. 4. 3. 2 and जै. X. 8. 7 deals with it. भामती on वे. सू. III 3. 18 relies on it.

जातेष्टिन्याय — जै. IV. 3. 38–39 on तै. सं. II. 2. 5. 3 वैश्वानरं द्वादशकपालं निर्वपेत् पुत्रे जाते. Though the performer of the rite is the father, the fruit accrues to the son that is born. Vide मिता. on या. II. 56 and III. 220, शाय. वि. p. 18, व्यव. प्र. p. 253–54, इष्ट. मी. p. 136 (Ānan. ed.)

जुहून्याय — जै. IV. 3. 1 based on passages like यस्य पर्णमयी जुहूर्भवति न स पापं श्लोकं शृणोति (in तै. सं. III. 5. 7. 2). Such sentences are not फलविधि, but merely अर्थवाद.

तक्रकौण्डिन्यन्याय or ब्राह्मणकौण्डिन्यन्याय — Vide तन्त्रवा. p. 860 (वधि ब्राह्मणेभ्यो दीयतां तक्रं कौण्डिन्याय), श्लोकवा. (वनवाद, verse 15). If only the words वधि ... दीयतां were uttered, कौण्डिन्य being a ब्राह्मण would be included; but if the whole sentence be used he would be excluded from the first part. The महाभाष्य frequently cites this nyāya, e. g. on वार्तिक 4 on पा. VI. 1. 2 and वार्तिक 1 on पा. I. 1. 47 and on वार्तिक 2 on पा. VI. 2. 1; vide मिता. on या. III. 257 for this maxim.

तत्सकृत्कन्याय — जै. I. 4. 4 (तत्सकृत्कं चान्यशास्त्रम्), which means तस्य गुणस्य सकृत्कं सापकं अन्यशास्त्रं यत्र भवति. In तै.सं. I. 5. 9. 1 we read अग्निहोत्रं जुहोति (स्वर्गकामः). Here अग्निहोत्र is the name (नामधेय) of a rite (अग्नये होत्रं हामो यस्मिन्) and not a गुणविधि. Vide मी. न्या. प्र. p. 64, धर्महेतुनिर्णय p. 3, अर्थसंग्रह pp. 4 and 20.

तद्व्यपदेशन्याय — जै. I. 4. 5. The example is श्येनेनाभिचरन् यजेत. Here the word श्येन (meaning 'hawk') is applied to the rite called śyena, because it resembles the bird in its swift action. Vide मी. न्या. प्र. p. 238 (तेन व्यपदेशः उपमानम्। तद्वन्यथानुपपत्त्येति यावत्) and p. 1245 above.

दण्डापूपन्याय or दण्डापूपिकनीति — This is very often employed in धर्मशास्त्र works. Vide विश्वरूप on या. I. 147 and III. 257, मिता. on या. II. 126, स्मृतिच. on व्यवहार pp. 142, 146, 242, 249, 283, 296, 301, 315, 326, दायभाग X. 30, दायतत्त्व p. 170, व्य. म. p. 131 (and my notes on the same at pp. 221–222). For the derivation of दण्डापूपिक, vide अलङ्कारसर्वस्व on अर्थापत्ति p. 196 and जयरथ thereon.

दर्विहोमन्याय — जै. VIII. 4. 1, तन्त्रवा. p 115 on जै. I. 2. 7, मी. न्या. प्र. p. 149. In this compound word होम is the principal word and the word दर्वि is उपसर्जन (or अप्रधान). Therefore दर्विहोम is the name of a rite.

दशहराव्याय — Vide प्रायश्चित्तप्रकरण of भवदेव p. 18, प्राय. विवेक p. 81, मुद्गितत्त्व pp. 240–241. There is a व्रत on the 10th tithi of the bright half of Jyeṣṭha called दशहरा, since it removes ten sins. The maxim means that in certain cases, by a single performance one may be able to secure several objects.

दृष्टं प्रयोजनमुत्सृज्य न शक्यमदृष्टं कल्पयितुम्।

दृष्टे फले अदृष्टफलकल्पना अन्याय्या।

दृष्टे सति अदृष्टकल्पनाऽन्याय्या।

दृष्टे संभवत्यदृष्टस्यान्याय्यत्वम्।

Vide शाबर on जै. IX. 3. 3 p. 1745, on जै. X. 2. 23 p. 1835 and on X. 2. 34 p. 1838, मी. न्या. प्र. p. 201, एकादशीतत्त्व p. 89, भागवती on वे. सू. III. 3. 14 and H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 837 n 1628 and above p. 1260 note 2051.

देहलीदीपन्याय–देहली door-sill. A lamp thereon sheds light inside the room as well as outside. This is the same as प्रासाददीपन्याय below. प्रदीपवत् occurs in जै. XI. 1. 61; vide शाबर thereon, व्य. म. p. 149 explaining या. II. 139 employs it.

द्वयोः प्रणयन्तिन्याय — जै. VII. 3. 19–25; Relied upon and explained in Mit. on Yāj. II. 135, दायभाग XI. 5. 16 p. 194 and व्यव. प्र. pp. 500–502 and 535; vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 704–705 note 1347a for explanation.

धेनुकिशोरन्याय — जै. VII. 4. 7 (in which the words यथा धेनुः किशोरेण occur); शाबर explains it clearly. धेनुः ordinarily means 'cow', but किशोर means 'foal'. Therefore in कृष्णकिशोरा धेनुः, धेनु means 'mare'.

न तौ पशौ करोति न सोमे — जै. X. 8. 5 and XII. 1. 7. तौ refers to आज्यभागौ; vide व्यवहारसार p. 231 (part of वृसिंहप्रसाद), द्र. मी. p 182 and above p 1249.

न विधौ परः शब्दार्थः — means that it is not permissible to hold that in a विधि-वाक्य a word therein has a meaning other than the direct one. The कल्पतरु on भामती (on वे. सू. I. 1. 1 p. 10) explains 'विधायके शब्दे परो लक्ष्यः शब्दार्थो न भवति'; vide शाबर on IV. 4. 19 (which says अनुवादे च लक्षणा न्याय्या न विधौ) and also on IV. 1. 8, where the ten यज्ञायुधs (स्रुच् wooden sword etc.) mentioned in तै. सं. I, 6. 8. 2–3 are held to be an अनुवाद and not a विधि. Vide परा. मा. I. 2. p. 298 and मद. पा. p. 372, वृत्त. मी. p. 180.

नष्टाश्वदग्धरथन्याय — Vide शबर on जै. II. 1. 1 p. 376, तन्त्रवा. on जै. I. 2. 7 and on III. 3. 11 p. 818. This is an old न्याय. वार्तिक 16 on पा. I. 1. 50 is संप्रयोगे वा नष्टाश्वदग्धरथवत् and the महाभाष्य explains 'तवाश्वो नष्टो ममापि रथो दग्धः, उभौ संप्रयुज्यावहै इति'. मेधा. on मनु V. 51 and भामती on I. 1. 4. p. 108 mention it. The idea is इतरेतरोपकारकत्व.

न हि निन्दा निन्द्यं निन्दितुं प्रयुज्यते, अपि तु विधेयं स्तोतुम् — vide H. of Dh. II. p. 581 n 1359 and above p. 96 n 237 for passages from Śabara and Tantravārtika. The मिता. on या. III. 221 paraphrases it.

न श्लोकस्य शब्दस्यानेकार्थता सत्यां गतौ न्यायात्या — Vide शबर on जै. VIII. 3. 22 and IX. 4. 18 and the न्याय 'अन्यायश्चानेकार्थत्वम्' above p. 1339.

नागृहीतविशेषणान्याय — This is often expressed in the form नागृहीतविशेषणा विशेष्ये बुद्धिरुत्पद्यते (as in शबर on जै. VII. 2, 13) or as न ह्यप्रतीते विशेषणे विशिष्टं केचन प्रत्येतुमर्हन्ति (as in शबर on जै. I. 3, 33 p. 304). Vide तन्त्रवा. pp. 304, 326, 916, एका. तत्त्व p. 15, शुद्धितत्त्व p. 313, न्य. म. p. 89 (and the present author's notes thereon pp. 117–118).

नास्ति वचनस्यातिभारः — This न्याय occurs very frequently in शबर and धर्मशास्त्र works in different forms, but the meaning is the same viz. 'there is nothing too heavy (i. e. impossible to prescribe) for a sacred text.' Vide शबर on जै. II, 2. 27 (किमिव हि वचनं न कुर्यात्...नास्ति...भारः), on जै. III. 2. 3, X. 5. 11; on जै VI. 1. 44, the wording is 'न हि वचनस्य किंचिदलभ्यं नाम'. शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. III. 3. 41 and III, 4. 32 employs it. Vide विश्वरूप on या. I. 58 (referred to in H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 525 n 1224), मिता. on याज्ञ. III. 298 (H. of Dh. vol. IV. p. 66 n 161, परा. मा. II. 1 p. 202 and II. 2 p. 64).

निमित्तगतं विशेषणमविवक्षितम् — Similar to आर्त्याधिकरणन्याय. Vide विश्वरूप on या. III. 212.

निमित्तावृत्तौ नैमित्तिकावृत्तिः — जै. VI. 2. 27–28 and 29. Such passages as भिन्ने जुहोति स्कन्ने जुहोति really lay down that whenever such a nimitta as breaking occurs a fresh homa has to be performed. Vide मेधा. on मनु XI. 220 (एतद्ब्रुवस्तथा &c.) and मिता. on या. I. 81.

निषादस्थपतिन्याय — जै. VI. 1. 51–52. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 46, vol. IV. p. 24 n 58 and above pp. 1295–96 and n 2121. It is employed by परा. मा, I. 1. p. 49, प्राय. वि. p. 132, न्य. म. p. 112.

न्यायसाम्य — नि. सि. p. 67 states that rules about śrāddha on a solar eclipse apply by analogy to śrāddha on a lunar eclipse.

पङ्कप्रक्षालनन्याय — This is expressed in the half verse 'प्रक्षालनाद्धि पङ्कस्य दूराद-स्पर्शनं वरम्' introduced by विश्वरूप on या. I. 210 with the words तथा च लौकिकाः. This half verse is वनपर्व 2. 49, which reads श्रेयो न स्पर्शनं दूराद् and the other half is धर्मार्थी यस्य वित्तेहा वरं तस्य निरीहता'. शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 2. 22 quotes it.

पदार्थभावरूपाधिकरण — जै. I. 3. 5–7 on the place of आचमन in view of the words वेदं कृत्वा वेदिं कुर्वीत and explained by शबर on I. 3. 7.

पदार्थानुसमय — जै. V. 2. 1–2 and vide काण्डानुसमय above p. 1342.

परमतमप्रतिषिद्धमनुमतं भवति — This is like 'silence shows consent' — Vide दृष्ट. मी. p. 82 and H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 669 n 1264 and शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. II. 4. 12.

पर्णमयीन्याय — जै. III. 6. 1–8; certain passages like यस्य पर्णमयी जुहूर्भवति न स पापं श्लोकं शृणोति occur in तै. सं. III. 5. 7. 2 without express reference to any topic. They are to be applicable to the modifications. Vide मी. न्या. प्र. p. 117 and भामती on वे. सू. I. 1. 4 pp. 123–124.

पशुन्याय— जै. IV. 1. 11 and तुपूटीका pp. 1203–5 on the Vedic text यो दीक्षितो यदग्नीषोमीयं पशुमालभते. The emphasis is that both एकत्व and पुंस्त्व are to be insisted on.

पशुपुरोडाशन्याय — जै. XII. 1. 1–6; vide प्रायश्चित्तप्रकरण of भवदेव p. 20, प्राय. वि. p. 85 and गोविन्दानन्द's तत्त्वार्थकौमुदी on the latter and n 2205.

पिष्टपेषणन्याय — Occurs in Śabara's Bhāṣya on Jai IX. 2. 3, XII. 2. 16, तन्त्रवा. I. 2. 31 p. 147. पिष्टपेषण — Means grinding what is already well ground and therefore unnecessary repetition (of arguments).

पृष्ठाकोटन्याय — Literally means 'bending the back again and again to observe each of many objects lying on the ground.' Vide शबर on जै. II. 1. 32 and तन्त्रवा. thereon p. 434. The मिता. on या. III. 216 employs it.

प्रकृतिप्रत्ययौ प्रत्ययार्थं सह ब्रूतः — Vide शबर on जै III. 4. 12 p. 922 and on जै. XI. 1. 22 p. 2013, तन्त्रवा. on जै. II. 1. 1 p. 380, III. 1. 12 p. 674, III. 4. 12 p. 902, III. 7. 10 p. 1080. It occurs in the महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 2 on पा. III. 1. 67. Vide above pp. 1235–38 n 2010.

प्रतिनिधिन्याय — जै. VI. 3. 13–17, स्मृतिच. (on श्राद्ध p. 460). It means द्रव्यान्तरोपचारे द्रव्यान्तरं प्रतिनिधाय प्रयोगः कर्तव्यः.

प्रतिनिमित्तं नैमित्तिकशास्त्रमावर्तते — Vide the न्याय 'निमित्तावृत्तौ' etc. above, मिता. on या. III. 263–64 and 288 for this form of the न्याय.

प्रतिपदाधिकरण — मी. न्या. प्र. p. 47. The first part of the interpretation of जै. II. 1. 1 by Śabara is so called and the 2nd part is called भावार्थाधिकरण.

प्रतिप्रधानं गुणावृत्तिः — शबर on जै. III. 3. 14 p. 844; परा. मा. I. 1. p. 391 illustrates it.

प्रथमातिक्रमे कारणाभावात् — जै. X. 5. 1 and 6 (on which शबर says ये क्रमवन्त आरब्धव्यास्ते प्रथमाद्युपक्रमितव्याः), तन्त्रवा. on जै. III. 2.20 p. 772 and on III. 4. 51 p. 988, न्य. म. p. 134.

प्रधानमल्लनिबर्हणन्याय — Lit. 'Crushing the principal wrestler', the idea being that lesser champions would be regarded as vanquished if the principal wrestler is vanquished. Vide शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. I. 4. 28 and II. 1.12.

प्रधानस्य चोद्दिश्यमानस्य विशेषणमविवक्षितम् — Vide तुपूटीका on जै. VII. 1. 2, p. 1526 and the न्याय 'उद्दिश्यमानस्य' etc. above.

प्रयोजनमनुद्दिश्य न मन्दोऽपि प्रवर्तते — Vide श्लोकवा. (सम्बन्धाक्षेप० verse 55 p. 653 quoted above on p. 1179 n 1917.

प्रस्तरप्रहरणन्याय — जै. III. 2. 11–15 referring to the direction in दर्शपूर्णमास 'सूक्तवाकेन प्रस्तरं प्रहरति' (the priest casts the bunch of kuśas called prastara into the fire to the accompaniment of Sūktavāka mantras, which thus becomes an aṅga). For प्रस्तर, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1013 and for सूक्तवाकमन्त्र H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1073 n 2398.

प्रासाददीपन्याय—same as वेहलीदीपन्याय. Vide शबर on जै. XII. 1. 1 and 3.

प्रैषन्नवन्याय—Vide तन्त्रवा. on जै. II. 1. 12, p. 415. It refers to the example cited by शबर on जै. I. 3. 8 'तत्र केचिदीर्घशूकेषु यवशब्दं प्रयुञ्जते केचित्प्रियङ्गुषु'.

फलवत्संनिधावफलं तदङ्गम्—In जै. IV. 4. 34 (which is a lengthy sūtra) we have the words तत्पुनर्मुख्यलक्षणं यत्फलवत्तं तत्संनिधावसंयुक्तं तदङ्गं स्यात्'. Vide शबर on जै. IV. 4. 19; कुल्लूक on मनु II. 101–102 employs it and so does the Śāṅkara-bhāṣya on V.S. II. 1. 14. Vide H. of Dh. vol. IV. p. 481 n. 1082.

बर्हिर्न्याय—जै. III. 2. 1. शबर cites the mantra बर्हिर्देवसदनं दामि (I cut off barhis as an abode for the deity) and remarks that the mukhya sense is to be taken and not gauṇa (secondary sense, based on similarity).

ब्राह्मणकौण्डिन्यन्याय—Vide तक्रकौण्डिन्यन्याय above p. 1343. The मिता. on या. III. 257 refers to it.

ब्राह्मणपरिव्राजकन्याय—शबर on जै. II. 1. 43 has 'इतो ब्राह्मणा भोज्यन्तामितः परिव्राजका इति'. The भामती on वे. सू. III. 1. 11 states that this nyāya means the same thing as गोबलीवर्दन्याय. The शाङ्करभाष्य mentions it on वे. सू. I. 4. 16, II. 3. 15, III. 1. 11. Vide सुबोधिनी on या. II. 96 (ed. by Mr. Gharpure).

ब्राह्मणवसिष्ठन्याय—मेधा. on मनु VII. 35 employs it. वसिष्ठ also was a brāhmaṇa but he may be separately mentioned as he was most eminent in tapas.

भावार्थाधिकरण—जै. II. 1. 1, मी. न्या. प्र. p. 128 and p. 1236 n 2010 above.

भूतभव्यसमुच्चारणन्याय or भूतभव्यसमुच्चारणे भूतं भव्यायोपदिश्यते—शबर frequently mentions it as on जै. II. 1. 4, III. 4. 40, IV. 1. 18, VI. 1. 1, IX. 1. 9. The दुपटीका on जै. IV. 1. 18 explains 'भूतं द्रव्यं भव्यां क्रियां निर्वर्तयतीति क्रियातोऽहष्टम्'. व्य. प्र. p. 111 mentions it; vide the present author's notes thereon pp. 173 ff and H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 695 n 1322.

भूयसान्याय or भूयसां स्यात्सधर्मत्वम्—based on जै. XII. 2. 22 (विप्रतिषिद्धधर्माणां समवाये भूयसां स्यात् सधर्मत्वम्). When there is a composite sacrifice comprising several rites the various details of which present conflicts the procedure to be adopted is such as to secure the performance of the details common to the largest number; this is relied upon in स्मृतिच. (on श्राद्ध p. 498) and व्यव. नि. p. 202.

माषन्यायन्याय—जै. VI. 3 20. The rule is that if a substance prescribed for a sacrifice cannot be had, a similar substance may be used (as पूतीक for सोम mentioned by Śabara on Jai. VI. 3. 14); but where a substance is expressly forbidden it cannot be employed as a substitute, even when it is similar to the one prescribed. If mudga pulse cannot be had māṣa pulse cannot be used, as Tai. S. V. 1. 8. 1 declares māṣa grains to be unfit for sacrifice. Vide मिता. on या. II. 126, द्वैतभाग XIII. 16 (in both this nyāya is mentioned), प्राय. तत्त्व p. 482, व्यव. प्र. p. 555.

मिथःसम्बन्धन्याय—same as वार्त्रघ्नीन्याय (जै. III. 1. 23).

मिथोऽसम्बन्धन्याय—जै. III. 1. 22. and शबर thereon and मद. पा. p. 89. A guṇavākya (clause laying down a subsidiary matter) is not to be taken as subsidiary to another guṇavākya, as both are subsidiary to the main purpose and are of equal status. There are two rites viz. Agnyādheya and Pavamāna offerings and it is stated that one of these is subordinate to the other. Both subserve the same purpose, viz. being employed in Darśapūrṇamāsa and other sacrifices. A Vedic text states that vessels made of Varana and Vaikaṅkata wood are fit for sacrifices, but a vessel of Varaṇa wood is not to be used for homa while one of Vaikaṅkata may be used. Both classes of vessels are subsidiary to sacrifices, but the text about not using Varaṇa vessel in homa is of a general character. Therefore, one of the two clauses is not subordinate to the other. Hence Vaikaṅkata vessels are to be used in yāgas in which homa is requisite, but Varaṇa vessels are not to be used in such yāgas.

मुख्यगौणयोश्च मुख्ये संप्रत्ययः — शबर on जै. III. 2.1. Vide above गौणमुख्ययोश्च etc.

मुख्यापचारे (or मुख्यालाभे) प्रतीनिधिः शास्त्रार्थः - जै. VI. 3. 13–17; vide तिथितत्त्व p. 13, दत्त. मी. p. 206.

यथाशक्तिन्याय — जै. VI. 3. 1–7; vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p 373 and above pp. 1163–64, धर्महेतनिर्णय p. 105, एका. तत्त्व pp. 18, 26.

यववराहाधिकरण — जै. I. 3. 9 and above p. 1293 note 2116.

यश्चोभयोः पक्षयोर्दोषो न तमेकश्चोद्यो भवति or यश्चोभ ... नासावेकं पक्षं निवर्तयति or यश्चो... नासावेकस्य वाच्यः —Vide शबर on जै. VIII. 3, 7 and 14 (pp. 1616, 1619) and X. 1. 25 p. 1816.

यस्य येनार्थसम्बन्ध इति न्यायात्- This is part of the verse यस्य येनाभिसम्बन्धो दूरस्थेनापि तस्य सः। अर्थतो ह्यसमर्थानामानन्तर्यमकारणम्। q by न्यायसुधा (p. 1076) on तन्त्रवा. III. 1. 27 as वृद्धश्लोक; तन्त्रवा. p. 744 has यस्य ... सम्बन्ध इति न्यायात्. Vide above p. 1298 n 2124. This न्याय is employed also in works on Poetics, e. g. the व्यक्तिविवेक-व्याख्या p. 39 (TSS) and by अभिनवभारती on नाट्यशास्त्र (G. O. S. vol. I. p. 210 'तथापि यस्य येनार्थसम्बन्ध इत्यर्थक्रम आदर्तव्यो न शब्द इति').

यावद्वचनं वाचनिकम् — Vide शबर on जै. V. 4, 11 (याव...कं न तत्र न्यायः क्रमते) and on V. 3 12 (याव...कं न सदृशमुपसंक्रामति). The idea is: in the case of an authoritative text that much only is to be accepted as covered by it which is expressed by the words used and that it should not be made applicable to other cases on the ground of similarity or analogy. Vide तन्त्रवा. on जै. III. 5. 19, भामती on वे. सू. IV. 1. 4 and on IV. 3. 4; मेधा० on मनु X. 127 applies this maxim. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 469 n 1101.

युगपद्वृत्तिद्वयविरोधन्याय — One and the same word in a vidhi cannot be taken to have been used at the same time in the primary sense as well as in the secondary sense. Vide जै. III. 2 1 and शबर thereon, व्य. म. p. 92 and notes there on by the present author (pp. 129–131), व्यवहार III. 30 p. 67 and H. of Dh. vol III, p. 725 note 1399 and above pp. 1292–93 notes 2112–14.

योगसिद्ध्यधिकरण — जै. IV. 3. 27–28. The ज्योतिष्टोम does not simultaneously bring out all the rewards but only one after another. The word occurs in sūtra 28 itself and योगसिद्धि means पर्याय according to शबर. Vide मेधा. on मनु XI. 220, शुद्धितत्त्व p. 239 (for explanation), प्राय. वि. p. 78 and प्राय. प्रकरण of भवदेव (p. 18).

रथकाराधिकरणन्याय — Vide जै. VI. 1. 44–50, मी. न्या. प्र. p. 113 and above p. 1290 n 2110 and परा. मा. I. 1. p. 48.

रात्रिसत्रन्याय — जै. IV. 3. 17–19 and H. of Dh. vol. IV. p. 602 note 1367, above p. 1227 n 1995 and वृत्त. मी. p. 207, भामती on शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. I. 1. 4 p. 111 as part of the Pūrvapakṣa.

रूढियौगमपहरति — This means that the conventional meaning of a word is to be preferred to the etymological meaning as in the case of the word 'rathakāra' in Jai. VI. 1. 44 ff.; vide परा. मा. I. 1. p. 300. As against this one must note another nyāya sometimes relied upon viz. योगसम्भवे परिभाषाया अयुक्तत्वात् (used by the मिता. on या. II. 143 about the meaning of the word स्त्रीधन). Vide H. of Dh. vol II. p. 780 n 1508 and the मी. न्या. प्र. pp. 112–113.

रेवत्याधिकरणन्याय — जै. II. 2. 27 and मी. न्या. प्र. pp 40–42.

लक्षणा ह्यदृष्टकल्पनाया ज्यायसी — Vide शबर on जै. I. 1. p. 7 and I. 4. 2 p. 324.

वर्चोन्याय — जै. III. 8. 25–27. In दर्शपूर्णमास the adhvaryu priest recites 'समाग्ने वर्चो विहवेष्वस्ति' (मै. सं. I. 4. 5). The reward, however, goes to the sacrificer and not to the adhvaryu, as the latter works for a fee.

वाजपेयन्याय — जै. I. 4. 6–8. In the sentence वाजपेयेन स्वाराज्यकामो यजेत, वाजपेय is the name of a yāga and does not lay down any detail about a sacrifice, mentioned in Mit. on Yāj. I. 81.

वार्त्रघ्नीन्याय — जै. III. 1. 23. Tai. S. II. 5. 2. 5 lays down that the Vārtraghnī verses are recited on Paurṇamāsī and the Vṛdhanvatī verses on Amāvāsyā These two are prescribed in relation to sacrifices that require the recitation of two anuvākyās. There is only one anuvākyā at the Darśa or Paurṇamāsī rite; therefore these verses cannot be used in Darśapūrṇamāsa. But two anuvākyās are known to be used in the Ājyabhāgas, which are subsidiary offerings in Darśa-Pūrṇamāsa. Therefore, the two anuvākyās 'Vārtraghnī' and 'Vṛdhanvatī' are to be connected with Ājyabhāgas alone and not with the principal rite.

विधिवच्छिगदाधिकरण — Vide above pp. 1239–40 note 2015; दायभाग II. 30 (स्थावरं द्विपदं ... न विक्रयः) remarks 'कर्तव्यपदमवश्यमत्राध्याहार्यम्'). This is a विधि, though there is no word expressing exhortation.

विश्वजिन्न्याय — जै. IV. 3. 15–16. Where no fruit or reward is expressly prescribed for a sacrifice svarga is the reward. This is so with the Viśvajit sacrifice in which the sacrificer had to donate all that he owned at the time of the sacrifice; mentioned by मेधा. on मनु II. 2, परा. मा. I. 1 p. 148, एका. तत्त्व p. 23.

विधौ लक्षणा अन्याय्या — Vide शबर on जै. I. 2. 29, IV. 4. 19 and the न्याय 'न विधौ परः शब्दार्थः' above. मलमासतत्त्व (p. 760) relies on this.

वैश्वदेवन्याय — जै. I. 4. 13–16. वैश्वदेव is the first parvan of the four parvans of Cāturmāsyas. It is a name (nāmadheya) and not a guṇavidhi. It is employed in the वृत्त. मी. p. 239.

वैश्वानराधिकरणन्याय — Vide आतेष्टिन्याय.

शाखान्तरन्याय — जै. II. 4. 8–33. It is the same as सर्वशाखाप्रत्ययन्याय below.

श्रुतिलक्षणाविशये च श्रुतिर्न्याय्या न लक्षणा — Vide शबर on IV. 1. 23, IV. 1. 46, IV. 2-30.

षोडशिन्याय — जै. X. 8. 6; vide above p. 1249 n 2030 on अतिरात्रे षोडशिनं गृह्णाति and नातिरात्रे... गृह्णाति, अर्थसंग्रह p. 24.

संयोगपृथक्त्वन्याय — जै. IV. 3. 5-7. The word संयोगपृथक्त्व occurs in जै. IV. 3. 5 itself; vide above p. 56 note 217; मेधा. on मनु II. 107, परा. मा. I. 1. 60, प्राय. तत्त्व. p. 474, एका. तत्त्व pp. 29-30, तिथितत्त्व p. 44, नि. सि. p. 84.

सकृत्कृते कृतः शास्त्रार्थः — Vide शबर on जै. XI. 1. 28 and XII. 3. 10; employed in एका. तत्त्व p. 32 and उद्वाहतत्त्व p. 133; it is mentioned in the महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 4 on पा. VI. 1. 84. This nyāya has a limited application and often the maxim निमित्तावृत्तौ etc. (i. e. repetition) applies.

सकृच्छ्रुतः शब्दस्तमेवार्थं गमयति—Vide दायभाग III. 29-30 p. 67, मद. पा. p. 369, accepted in 6 Cal. 119. 126 (F. B.) and in L. R. 41 I. A. p. 290 at pp. 303-4.

समं स्यादश्रुतित्वात् — This is the पूर्वपक्षसूत्र in जै. X. 3. 53-55, but it is held generally applicable unless there is a special or express provision for unequal distribution. This is followed in मिता. on याज्ञ. II. 265, दायभाग IV. 8 p. 80 (on स्त्रीधनविभाग), स्मृतिच. (II. pp. 152 and 285), कुल्लूक on मनु III. 1. (समं स्यादश्रुतत्वादिति न्यायेन प्रति ... द्वादशवर्षाणि व्रताचरणम्), परा. मा. I. 2. p. 362, मदनरत्न (on व्यवहार) p. 204.

समदशसामिधेनीन्याय — जै. III. 6. 9. Passages like समदश सामिधेनीरनुब्रूयात् in Ait. Br. 1. 1 that occur without being attached to any particular sacrifice are applicable only to vikṛtis and not to the model (prakṛti) sacrifice; vide मिता. on या. I. 256.

सर्वपरिदानाधिकरण — जै. III. 4. 17 based on Tai. S. II. 6. 10. 1-2 which prohibits threatening or striking a brāhmaṇa. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 515 note 937-938 and प्राय. तत्त्व p. 479, प्राय. वि. p. 6.

सर्वशक्त्यधिकरणन्याय — Vide यथाशक्तिन्याय and एका. तत्त्व pp. 18, 26.

सर्वशाखाप्रत्ययन्याय — जै. II. 4. 8-33. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 870 note 1693, vol. IV. pp 89-90 note 211, pp. 453-55 note 1011 and मिता. on या. III. 325, अपरार्क p. 1053, स्मृतिच. (I. p. 5), मद. पा. pp. 11 and 91, शुद्धितत्त्व pp. 378, 380 and above p. 1273 n 2074.

सामान्यविशेषन्याय—Vide शबर on जै. VII. 3. 16 (बाध्यते च सामान्यं विशेषेण) and तन्त्रवा. p. 1030 on जै. III. 6. 9 'तत्र नाम विशेषेण सामान्यस्य निराक्रिया। अन्यको यत्र सम्बन्धो विशेषेण प्रतीयते। तुल्यप्रमाणको हि विशेषो बाधको भवति न दुर्बलप्रमाणकः' and p. 1120; vide for examples स्मृतिच. (on व्यवहार pp. 142, 299, 381) and परा. मा. I, p. 233.

सामर्थ्याधिकरण — जै. I. 4. 25. Vide above p. 1291 note 2111.

सारस्वतौ भवतः — जै. V. 1. 14; vide above pp. 1315-16 n 2164 and स्मृतिच. (on व्यवहार p. 297), सुबोधिनी (on पितरौ) on p. 72 (text) and p. 183 (tr. by Mr. J. R. Gharpure).

सार्थक्यन्याय — जै. I. 2. 1 and 7; vide p. 1284 and शबर on जै. II. 2. 6 and on III. 1. 18 (on आनर्थक्यात्तदङ्गेषु). अनर्थक means either 'meaningless' or 'purposeless'.

सुवर्णधारणन्याय — जै. III. 4. 20–24. In तै. ब्रा. II, 2. 4. 6 there is a passage not connected with any specific sacrifice viz. सुवर्णं हिरण्यं भार्यम्' (one should wear bright gold). This is a puruṣadharma and not a sarvaprakaraṇa-dharma. Vide मिता. on या. II. 135–136, where this is used as an argument against the view that all wealth is for yajña.

सूक्तवाकन्याय — Vide जै. III. 2. 16–19 and प्रस्तरप्रहरणन्याय (p. 1346) for the meaning of सूक्तवाक and प्रस्तर. In these sūtras it is established that the whole सूक्तवाक is not to be recited in both Paurṇamāsa-iṣṭi and Darśa-iṣṭi, but only those portions of it that refer respectively to the deities of the two iṣṭis.

स्थालीपुलाकन्याय — The word स्थालीपुलाक occurs in Jai. VII. 4. 12 itself; vide शबर on जै. VIII. 1. 11 and तन्त्रवा. on जै. III. 5. 19 p. 998. The महाभाष्य knew it since it says on वार्तिक 15 to पा. I. 4. 23 'पर्याप्तो ह्येकः पुलाकः स्थाल्या निदर्शनाय'.

स्थूणानिखननन्याय — Fixing a post firmly in the earth by frequently pushing it down and about; occurs in शाबरभाष्य on जै. VII. 2. 1 and शाङ्करभाष्य on ब्रे. सू. II. 1. 34 and III. 3. 53.

स्वर्गकामाधिकरण — जै. VI. 1. 1–3, referred to in H. of Dh. vol. IV. p. 169.

हेतुवचिगद्वाधिकरण — जै. I. 2. 26–30. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 676 and notes 1276–77, विश्वरूप on या. III. 263, मलमासतत्त्व p. 760 for application.

होलाकाधिकरण — जै. I. 3. 15–23. Vide above p. 1281 n 2093 for explanation.

SECTION VIII

Relation of Sāṅkhya, Yoga and Tarka to Dharmaśāstra

CHAPTER XXXI

Dharmaśāstra and Sāṅkhya.

Sāṅkhya is one of the well-known six darśanas (philosophical points of view).

Śaṅkarācārya in his bhāṣya [2208] on V. S. II. 2. 17 says that Manu and others who were deeply versed in the Veda took up to some extent in their works the doctrine of pradhāna being the cause of the world with the idea of relying on that part of its doctrine viz. the effect is (already) existent in the cause. Similarly, on V. S. I. 4. 28 he says that great effort was made by the Sūtrakāra and himself for refuting the doctrines of the Sāṅkhya system (and not for the refutation of the theory of atoms being the cause of the world), since the Sāṅkhya system is near to the Vedānta as it accepts the view of the non-difference of cause and effect and as some Dharmasūtra writers like Devala have had resort to it in their works. On V. S. II. 1. 3 Saṅkarācārya remarks that, though there are many smṛtis dealing with metaphysical topics, great effort was made for the refutation of Sāṅkhya and Yoga only, since the two systems are well-known in the world as means of securing the highest goal of man, as they have been accepted by śiṣṭas (respectable and learned people) and are supported by Vedic indications in their favour (as in Śvetāśvatara Up. 'tat-kāraṇam sāṅkhyayogābhipannam' VI. 13). It would be shown later on that Manu and Devala rely on and propound (some) Sāṅkhya doctrines.

2208. प्रधानकारणवादो वेदविद्भिरपि कैश्चिन्मन्वादिभिः सत्कार्यत्वांशोपजीवनाभिप्रायेणोपनिबद्धः। अयं तु परमाणुकारणवादो न कैश्चिदपि शिष्टैः केनचिदप्यंशेन परिगृहीत इत्यत्यन्तमेवानादरणीयो वेदवादिभिः। शाङ्कर on वे. सू. II. 2. 17 (अपरिग्रहाच्चात्यन्तमनपेक्षा); "ईक्षतेर्नाशब्दम्"-इत्यारभ्य प्रधानकारणवादः सूत्रैरेव पुनः पुनराशङ्क्य निराकृतः तस्य हि पक्षस्योपोद्बलकानि कानिचिल्लिङ्गाभासानि वेदान्तेष्वापातेन मन्वमतीव्प्रतिभान्तीति। स च कार्यकारणानन्यत्वाभ्युपगमात्प्रत्यासन्नो वेदान्तवादस्य। देवलप्रभृतिभिश्च कैश्चिद्धर्मसूत्रकारैः स्वग्रन्थेष्वाश्रितस्तेन तत्प्रतिषेधे यत्नोऽतीव कृतो नाण्वादिकारणवादप्रतिषेधे।" शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. I. 4. 28.

It would not be irrelevant to say a few words about the origin and development of the Sāṅkhya system. This (rise of Sāṅkhya) is one of the most difficult problems in Indian philosophy. A good many works and papers have been written on the Sāṅkhya system.[2109] As to what the original Sāṅkhya teaching revised in the Sāṅkhyakārikā of Īśvarakṛṣṇa was, no generally accepted answer can be given. From the 5th century A. D. at least the Sāṅkhyakārikā of Īśvarakṛṣṇa has been regarded as the foremost exponent of the Sāṅkhya. The Sāṅkhyakārikā and a commentary on it were translated into Chinese about 546 A. D. by Paramārtha, originally a brāhmaṇa of Bhāradvāja gotra and a śramaṇa from Ujjayinī (vide BEFEO, 1904, p. 60). Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 4. 11 quotes the whole of the 3rd verse of the Sāṅkhyakārikā and the first quarter of it on V. S. I. 4. 8. But the Sāṅkhya system, it appears, went through several phases. Chinese sources say that there were eighteen Sāṅkhya schools (p. 2 of Johnston's "Early Sāṅkhya," quoting Takakusu in BEFEO, 1904, p. 58).

There is the Sāṅkhyasūtra or Sāṅkhyapravacanasūtra attributed to Kapila (published with two commentaries viz. that of Aniruddha and parts of the Ṭīkā of Vedāntin Mahādeva edited by Garbe in B. I. Series 1881). This is a late work composed about 1400 A. D. as shown by Garbe in his Introduction and by 2209. Those interested in Sāṅkhya may consult the following: Fitz-Edward Hall's 'Introduction to Sāṅkhya-pravacana-bhāṣya' (B. I. Series 1856); 'Sāṅkhya-Kārikā' exposition of the system of Kapila, translation and notes by John Davies (first published in 1881, 2nd ed. in 1957, Calcutta); Richard Garbe's 'Die Sāṅkhya Philosophie', 1894, and Introduction to his edition of the Sāṅkhyapravacana-bhāṣya of Vijñānabhikṣu in the Harvard Oriental Series; 'Six systems of philosophy' by Prof. Max-Muller ed. of (1903) pp. 219–330; 'the Philosophy of the Upanishads' by Paul Deussen translated by A. S. Geden (1906) pp. 239–255; Prof. A B. Keith's Sāṅkhya system (1924); 'Early Sāṅkhya' by E. H. Johnston (Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain, 1937); Das-Gupta's 'Indian Philosophy', Vol. I, pp. 208–273 (1922); Dr. Radhakrishnan's 'Indian Philosophy', Vol. II, pp. 248–335 (1927) and 'Philosophy, Eastern and Western', Vol. I, pp. 242–257; 'Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upaniṣads' by Prof. A. B. Keith, Vol. II, pp. 535–551; 'Beginning of Epic Sāṅkhya' by Dr. W. Ruben in ABORI, Vol. 37 (1956) pp. 174–189; 'Sāṅkhya in the Mokṣaparva' by Shri Jayadev Yogendra in J. of Bom. Uni. (1957), Vol. 26, New Series, Arts number, pp. 123–141; 'Studies in Sāṅkhya, Pañcaśikha and Caraka' in ABORI Vol. 38, pp. 140–147 and 'Studies in Sāṅkhya', the teaching of Pañcaśikha in the Mahābhārata' ABORI, Vol. 38, pp. 233–244, both by Shri V. M. Bedekar.

---

Fitz-Edward Hall in his learned Introduction to the edition of the Sāṅkhyapravacana-bhāṣya (B. I. Series, 1856). There is an edition of 23 sūtras called Tattvasamāsa with a commentary called Kramadīpikā in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit series which has also published several other brief late works that are passed over here. Several commentaries on the Sāṅkhyakārikā have been published. The earliest appears to be the one translated into Chinese by Paramārtha about 546 A. D., which has been reconstructed into Sanskrit from the Chinese by the learned Pandit Aiyaswami Sastri and published (in 1944) in the Sri. Venkatesvara Oriental Series with a valuable Introduction; another commentary styled Māṭharavṛtti was published (in 1922) in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit Series. Dr. Belvalkar (in ABORI vol. V. pp. 133–161) contributed a long and scholarly paper on the Māṭharavṛtti in which he holds that the Māṭharavṛtti is the original of the commentary translated into Chinese by Paramārtha together with some accretions made from time to time, that Gauḍapāda's commentary is a simplified abridgment of the Māṭharavṛtti (p. 148), that the Māṭharavṛtti cannot be placed later than 450 A D. (p. 155) and that Īśvarakṛṣṇa cannot be assigned to a date later than 250 A. D. (p. 168). Prof. A. B. Keith in 'Sāṅkhya system' (p. 51) places Īśvarakṛṣṇa at a date not later than 325 A. D. Another early commentary is the Yuktidīpikā of an unnamed author edited from a single ms. by Shri Pulinabehari Chakravarti in Calcutta Sanskrit Series (1938). This is a very valuable commentary and has been very competently edited even from a single ms, though there are a few gaps here and there. That commentary is replete with quotations and polemical discussions, mentions several Sāṅkhya teachers who differed among themselves and whose opinions are cited on many topics. For example, vide under Vindhyavāsin below. It mentions some ācāryas that are hardly ever mentioned in any Sāṅkhya work. It frequently cites an author called Pañcādhikaraṇa (vide pp. 6, 108, 114, 132, 144, 147, 148 where two Āryās apparently of Pañcādhikaraṇa are quoted). Another hitherto unknown Sāṅkhyācārya mentioned by this com. is Paurika on p. 169 and p. 175, who holds the surprising view[2210] that there is a separate pradhāna for each Puruṣa. Patañjali is frequently mentioned on pp. 32 (who denied the existence of Ahaṅkāra), 108, 132 (there are 12 karaṇas and not 13 as S. Kārikā in verse 32 asserts), 145, 149, 175; Vārṣagaṇāḥ (in the plural) are mentioned on pp. 39, 67, 95, 102, 133, 145, 170; Vārṣagaṇa (pp. 6, 108) and Vārṣagaṇavīra (on pp. 72, 108, 175) styled bhagavān on p. 72 and Vṛṣagaṇavīra (on p. 103 probably meaning 'the son of Vṛṣagaṇa'); all these refer to the views of Vārṣagaṇas. Pañcaśikha (p. 31 in the plural, p. 61, p. 175) is mentioned and one passage which is quoted in the Vyāsa-bhāṣya (on Y. S. I. 4) and ascribed to Pañcaśikha by Vācaspati is quoted by the Yuktidīpikā on p. 41 as Śāstra. From pp. 113 and 129 it appears that the author of the com. was a Vedāntin.[2211] It is probable that he flourished between 500 and 700 A. D., since he quotes (on p. 39) Diṅnāga's definition of 'pratyakṣa' and is not cited by Vācaspati and other commentators on the Sāṅkhya.

2210. प्रतिपुरुषमन्यत् प्रधानं शरीरार्थं करोति। तेषां च महात्म्यशरीरप्रधानं यदा प्रवर्तते तदेतरान्यपि, तन्निवृत्तौ च तेषामपि निवृत्तिरिति पौरिकः सांख्याचार्यो मन्यते। युक्ति० p. 169.

. Gauḍapāda composed a commentary on the S. Kārikā but only on 69 verses published in the Ch. S. Series. The Commentary called Sāṅkhyatattvakaumudī by the famous writer Vācaspatimiśra was published in the Chowkhamba S. S. in 1919. A commentary called Jayamaṅgalā ascribed to Śaṅkarācārya (in the colophon) on the S. Kārikā was published at Calcutta in 1933 by Sri H. Sarma with a brief but interesting Introduction by Principal Gopinatha Kaviraj (vide also I. H. Q. vol. V. pp. 417–431) where Sri H. Sarma tries to prove that the Jayamaṅgalā is earlier than Vācaspatimiśra. Vijñānabhikṣu composed (about 1550 A. D.) a bhāsya on the Sāṅkhyapravacanasūtra. The Sūtrakāra and Vijñānabhikṣu make efforts to establish the impossible thesis that the teachings of the Sāṅkhya system are not in irreconcilable conflict with the doctrine of a personal God or with the Advaita Vedānta. The Mātharavṛtti on S. Kārikā 71 furnishes the names of certain teachers that flourished between Pañcaśikha and Īśvarakṛṣṇa viz. Bhārgava, Ulūka (Kauśika ?), Vālmīki, Hārīta, Devala and others, while the Jayamaṅgalā mentions Garga and Gautama as Sāṅkhya teachers after Pañcaśikha (vide note one in Pandit Aiyaswami's edition on p. 99). The Sanskrit commentary reconstructed from the Chinese version of Paramārtha (p. 98 of Pandit Aiyaswami's edition) states that the line of teachers and pupils from Pañcaśikha is : Pañcaśikha-Gārgya-Ulūka-Vārṣagaṇa-Īśvarakṛṣṇa. It is clear from the above that several teachers, in any case not less than five or six, intervened between Pañcaśikha and Īśvarakṛṣṇa. From a somewhat mutilated passage[2212] of the Yuktidīpikā (p. 175) it appears that at least ten persons intervened between Pañcaśikha and Īśvarakṛṣṇa. If this be accepted and if Īśvarakṛṣṇa be assigned to about 250 A. D., then Pañcaśikha cannot be placed later than the first century B. C. and may be much earlier still. On 'tena ca bahudhā kṛtam tantram' (S. Kārikā 70) the Yuktidīpikā speaks of bhagavat Pāncaśikha as 'daśama-kumāra' (tenth son of Prajāpati ?) and states that he expounded the śāstra to many persons such as Janaka and Vasiṣṭha and thereby identifies Pañcaśikha with the teacher Pañcaśikha mentioned by the Śāntiparva (vide note 2186 below).

2211. सङ्कल्पमूलोच्छित्तविषयसुखतृष्णो हि अयं यतिरिन्द्रियाणामन्तःकरणस्य च प्रवृत्तिनिवृत्त्योरीष्टे। एकाग्र एकारामोऽविद्यापर्वणोऽतिक्रान्तः परस्य ब्रह्मणः प्रत्यनन्तरो भवति। p. 113; सोयं धर्मादिषु प्रवणस्तत्प्रतिपक्षापक्रान्तः सत्त्वारामो विनिवृत्ताभिमानो ज्ञाननिष्ठः सविशुद्धयोनिरचिरेण परं ब्रह्मोपपद्यत इति। p. 129.

Vācaspatimiśra in his commentary on the Yogasūtrabhāṣya (II. 23) sets out eight alternative views among Sāṅkhya writers on the question of 'darśana' and 'adarśana' and remarks that the fourth out of the eight alternatives is the real doctrine of the Sāṅkhyaśāstra.[2213] From about the 5th century A. D. the Sāṅkhyakārikā has been regarded as the standard work on the Sāṅkhya system. The S. Kārikā itself states that the holy śāstra was expounded by Kapilamuni to Āsuri, who expounded[2214] it to Pāñcaśikha and the latter expounded the (Sāṅkhya) system to several disciples and that it came down to Īśvarakṛṣṇa in a succession of teachers and disciples, who summarised it in Āryā verses. Kapila-muni is here said to be the first promulgator of the Sāṅkhya.

2212. अस्य तु शास्त्रस्य भगवतोऽग्रे प्रवृत्तत्वात् न शास्त्रान्तरवत् वंशः शक्यो वर्षसहस्रैरप्याख्यातुम्। संक्षेपेण तु ह्याव ... (gap) हारीत-बाष्कलि-कैरात- पैङ्गिक-अवभेश्वर-पञ्चाधिकरण-पतञ्जलि-वार्षगण्य-कौण्डिण्य-मूकादिकाशिष्यपरम्परयागतं etc. । युक्ति० p. 175.

2213. On 'इत्येते शास्त्रगता विकल्पाः' of व्यासभाष्य on योगसूत्र II. 23 वाचस्पति remarks : 'तदेवं विकल्प्य चतुर्थं विकल्पं स्वीकर्तुमितरेषां विकल्पानां सांख्यशास्त्रगतानां सर्वपुरुषसाधारण्येन भोगवैचित्र्याभावप्रसङ्गेन दूषयति इत्येते शास्त्रगता इति ।.'

2214. एतत्पवित्रमग्र्यं मुनिरासुरयेऽनुकम्पया प्रददौ। आसुरिरपि पञ्चशिखाय तेन च बहुधा कृतं तन्त्रम्॥ शिष्यपरम्परयागतमीश्वरकृष्णेन चैतदार्याभिः। संक्षिप्तमार्यमतिना सम्यग्विज्ञाय सिद्धान्तम्। सां. का. 70-71. It should be noticed that Gauḍapāda comments only on 69 verses and omits these two and a subsequent verse 'सप्तत्यां किल येऽर्थास्तेऽर्थाः कृत्स्नस्य षष्टितन्त्रस्य। आख्यायिकाविरहिताः परवादविवर्जिताश्चापि॥', which means that all the matters contained in the whole Saṣṭitantra (of Pañcaśikha) are contained in the seventy verses (of the Sāṅkhyakārikā), excluding the illustrative stories and the controversies with others. The Sāṅkhyakārikā is known as Sāṅkhyasaptati and in Chinese as 'Suvarṇasaptati.

Before proceeding further the most characteristic and fundamental conceptions of the standard Sāṅkhya must be set out. The most fundamental conception is that there are two entirely distinct essences existing from eternity, viz. prakṛti (i. e. nature or matter) also called pradhāna and avyakta, and puruṣa (soul or spirit, the knowing subject). The 2nd fundamental conception is that puruṣas are many. Another most characteristic feature of the Sāṅkhya system is the doctrine of three [2215] guṇas (factors) called sattva (light, intelligent), rajas (energetic, active, domineering), tamas (coarse, inert, enveloping, dark). Pradhāna or prakṛti or avyakta is said to be constituted by the three guṇas (triguṇātmaka) when they are in equilibrium (Sattvarajastamasām sāmyāvasthā). The Sāṅkhya analysed all physical and mental phenomena. The lowest factor is the heavy impenetrable matter and coarse foolish impulses. They are called tamas (described as guru, heavy and varaṇaka, enveloping). Then there is the factor of constant change in the physical world as well as in the mental. This is called rajas (cala, changing and upaṣṭambhaka, exciting, as the S. Kārikā puts it). The third factor or element in the world is the varied operation of consciousness that leads to knowledge and experience, which is called Sattva (laghu, light as opposed to the coarse, merely material objects and prakāśaka, luminous, as contrasted with tamas). These three factors or elements combine in various proportions and make up the evolving universe. The three are called guṇas from several points of view viz. they are qualities, they also bind as with a rope the Puruṣa to saṁsāra. The basis of the universe is to be found in the guṇas. Pradhāna 2215. सत्त्वं लघु प्रकाशकमिष्टमुपष्टम्भकं चलं च रजः। गुरु वरणकमेव तमः प्रदीपवच्चार्थतो वृत्तिः॥ सां. का. 13. गुणs are so called because they multiply (गुणयतीति) and evolve objects. Compare 'मोहात्मकं तमस्त्वेषां रज एषां प्रवर्तकम्। प्रकाशबहुलत्वाच्च सत्त्वं ज्याय इहोच्यते॥ वनपर्व 212. 4 and गीता 14. 5–18 for a discourse on the three guṇas, particularly the following 'सत्त्वं रजस्तम इति गुणाः प्रकृतिसम्भवाः। V.5; तत्र सत्त्वं निर्मलत्वात् प्रकाशकमनामयम्। सुखसङ्गेन बध्नाति ज्ञानसङ्गेन चानघ। verse 6; रजो रागात्मकं विद्धि तृष्णासङ्गसमुद्भवम्। verse 7. On वे. सू. II. 2.10 शङ्कराचार्य notes that the Sāṅkhya system presented contradictions in the days of the V. S. 'परस्परविरुद्धश्चायं सांख्यानामभ्युपगमः। क्वचित्सप्तेन्द्रियाण्यध्यक्षमाहन्ति क्वचिदेकादश। तथा क्वचिन्महतस्तन्मात्रसर्गमुपदिशन्ति क्वचिदहङ्कारात्। तथा क्वचित्त्रीण्यन्तःकरणानि वर्णयन्ति क्वचिदेकमिति।'. The seven indriyas would be the skin, five karmendriyas and mind; the three antaḥkaraṇas would be buddhi, ahaṅkāra and manas. The one antaḥkaraṇa would be buddhi.

---

is not different from the guṇas, but it is only the name of the primordial matter before evolution starts. Prakṛti being anādi and eternal, the Sāṅkhya system did not postulate God as creator, and held God to be a superfluity. The Sāṅkhya propounds a theory of cosmic evolution which is practically as reasonable as any modern theory of evolution. It is probably the earliest attempt to furnish an answer from reason alone to the questions about the origin of the world, about the nature of man and his relation to the physical world and man's future destiny. In the nineteenth century mind and matter were held to be entirely different and atoms were supposed to be indivisible. Modern physics has reduced matter to energy but the nature of this last also is a mystery. Under the Sāṅkhya system, puruṣa or prakṛti or both serve no religious purpose. There is no definite or convincing answer as to why puruṣa becomes entangled in the web of prakṛti. The Sāṅkhya simply says that as a result of non-discrimination puruṣa somehow becomes entangled. The Vedāntasūtra refers to pradhāna as smārta in I. 2. 19 and as 'ānumānika' in I. 4. 1. From Prakṛti evolves mahān (i. e. buddhi, consciousness) from which arises ahaṅkara, from which evolve on the one hand the five tanmātras (subtle elements, viz. sabda, sparśa, gandha, rasa, rūpa) and on the other hand manas (mind) and the ten indriyas (sense organs). From the five subtle elements are evolved the five great elements, earth, water, tejas, vāyu and ākāśa (ether). These are twentyfour[2216] tattvas (categories) and puruṣa is 25th. Pradhāna is distinct from puruṣa and serves the purpose of puruṣa (who is passive and a sākṣi) who is distinct from the evolutes of prakṛti and is bhoktṛ (and not kartṛ). The Sāṅkhya[2217] does not admit God. Prakṛti and puruṣa come together in order that the latter may see its working; just as a blind man and a cripple (a lame man) may come together (and the blind man may carry the lame man on his shoulder, the latter showing the way and both may reach their destination by this joint effort).[2218] When 2216. In V. S. 1. 4. 11 the pūrvapakṣa is advanced as follows (after quoting Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 17 'yasmin pañca pañcajanāḥ): तथा पञ्चविंशतिसंख्यया यावन्तः संख्येया आकाङ्क्ष्यन्ते तावन्त्येव च तत्त्वानि सांख्यैः संख्यायन्ते 'मूलप्रकृतिरविकृतिर्महदाद्याः प्रकृतिविकृतयः सप्त। षोडशकश्च विकारो न प्रकृतिर्न विकृतिः पुरुषः॥'. This last verse is सां. का. 3.

2217. The Sāṅkhya-pravacana-sūtra (I. 92-93) states 'ईश्वरासिद्धेः, मुक्तबद्धयोरन्यतराभावाच्च तत्सिद्धिः॥'.

2218. पुरुषस्य दर्शनार्थं कैवल्यार्थं तथा प्रधानस्य। पङ्ग्वन्धवदुभयोरपि संयोगस्तत्कृतः सर्गः। सां. का. 21. The sixty topics dealt with in the Saṣṭitantra, according puruṣa realizes the difference between himself[2219] and the guṇas constituting Prakṛti he is liberated. Both Sāṅkhya and Yoga treat the external world as real. They both postulate plurality of souls (puruṣas), that are eternal and unchanging. This latter is one of the most crucial differences between Sāṅkhya and advaita Vedānta. It is not necessary for our purpose in this chapter to go into greater details. One more doctrine of the Sāṅkhya is called satkāryavāda i. e. the theory that the effect already exists in the cause and does not arise from nothing (S. Kārikā, verse 9); compare Chān. Up. VI. 2. 2 (kathamasataḥ sajjāyeta) and Gītā II. 16 (nāsato vidyate bhāvo).

(Continued on next page)

It is difficult to assign a definite date to the Sāṅkhya-kārikā. As Paramārtha translated the Kārikā as well as commentary on it into Chinese in about 546 A. D. the Kārikā cannot in any case be placed later than about 250–300 A. D. It may be earlier by a few centuries. Umbeka in his commentary on the Ślokavārtika of Kumārila mentions an author called Mādhava as 'Sāṅkhyanāyaka' and Yuan Chwang also refers to a Sāṅkhya teacher called Mādhava. Dr. Raghavan in 'Sarūpa-Bhāratī' (pp. 162–164) shows that Mādhava was really a destructive critic of Sāṅkhya, that the proper reading is 'Sāṅkhyanāśaka-Mādhava' and that he was probably earlier than even Diṅnāga and Dharmarkīrti (i. e. earlier than 500 A. D.).

Śaṅkarācārya in the passage quoted in n. 2208 remarks that certain Upaniṣad passages may be relied upon as apparently supporting the Sāṅkhya system. Some of the Upaniṣad passages that either foreshadow Sāṅkhya doctrines or employ words that have technical meanings in the Sāṅkhya system would be to the युक्तिदीपिका p. 2 verses 10–12 and the राजवार्तिक quoted by Vācaspati in his commentary सांख्यतत्त्वकौमुदी, were: प्रधानास्तित्वमेकत्वमर्थवत्त्वमथान्यता। पारार्थ्यं च तथाऽनैकं वियोगो योग एव च। शेषवृत्तिरकर्तृत्वं मौलिकार्थाः स्मृता दश। विपर्ययः पञ्चविधस्तथोक्ता नव तुष्टयः। करणानामशक्तिरष्टाविंशतिधा मतम्। इति षष्टिः पदार्थानामष्टभिः सह सिद्धिभिः॥ सांख्यतत्त्वकौमुदी ed. by Ganganatha Jha, Bombay, 1896). Vide सां. का. 47 for the enumeration of 50 topics (in addition to the ten basic ones in the verse प्रधानास्ति०). The अहिर्बुध्न्यसंहिता in chap. XII. 20–29 sets out the sixty topics of Sāṅkhya-tantra, but they differ from those enumerated in the Rājavārtika quoted by Vācaspati.

---

(Continued from last page)

2219. धर्मेण गमनमूर्ध्वं गमनमधस्ताद्भवत्यधर्मेण। ज्ञानेन चापवर्गो विपर्ययादिष्यते बन्धः। सां. कारिका। 44; compare गीता 14.18 'ऊर्ध्वं गच्छन्ति &c.' शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. I. 4. 4 states 'शेषत्वेन च सांख्यैः प्रधानं स्मर्यते गुणपुरुषान्तरज्ञानान्मोक्षस्येष्यमिति वदद्भिः'.

cited.[2220] But one passage from the Atharvaveda X. 8. 43 deserves notice, viz. 'the knowers of Brahma know that yakṣa endowed with ātman which abides in the lotus with nine gates (the physical body) covered by three guṇas.' With this may be compared Śv. Up. III. 18 and Gītā V. 13 (navadvāre pure dehi). The Muṇḍaka Up. states 'From Him are born prāṇa, mind, all indriyas, the five elements, and sky, wind, jyotis (tejas), waters and the earth.' The Kaṭha Up. refers to indriyas, the objects of senses, mind, buddhi, mahān, avyakta, puruṣa as a rising series, similar to that of the Sāṅkhya with one exception viz. the Up. does not mention ahaṅkāra and holds that buddhi and mahān are different, while the official Sāṅkhya identifies them. It is, therefore, clear that the evolution in these two Upanisads is very similar to the theory of evolution stated by the classical Sāṅkhya, the only difference being that the Upaniṣads postulate a supreme Creator (that produces the cosmos) while Sāṅkhya drops the creator and accepts the evolutionary series only. On V. S. I. 2. 12 Śaṅkarācārya cites the verse 'dvā suparṇā sayujā' (which is Muṇḍaka Up. III. 1. 1, Śv. Up. III. 1 and also Ṛg. I. 164. 20) and explains it, as referring to the individual self (jīva) and the Highest Spirit (paramātman). The ācārya then mentions the argument of a predecessor who relies upon Paiṅgirahasya-brāhmaṇa where the latter half of the verse is explained as mentioning sattva (buddhi) and kṣetrajña (i. e. the individual self). This indicates that some took that verse as putting forward Sāṅkhya ideas. The Kaṭha Up. III. 4 states that the description of the individual soul as the enjoyer (bhoktṛ) results 2220. पुण्डरीकं नवद्वारं त्रिभिर्गुणेभिरावृतम् । तस्मिन्यद्यक्षमात्मन्वत् तद्वै ब्रह्मविदो विदुः ॥ अथर्व० X. 8. 43. It is difficult to say what यक्ष here means. That word also occurs in Ṛg. IV. 3. 13, V. 10. 4, VII. 61. 5, where सायण gives different meanings. एतस्माज्जायते प्राणो मनः सर्वेन्द्रियाणि च । खं वायुर्ज्योतिरापः पृथिवी विश्वस्य धारिणी ॥ मुण्डकोप० II. 1. 3; इन्द्रियेभ्यः परा ह्यर्था अर्थेभ्यश्च परं मनः । मनसस्तु परा बुद्धिर्बुद्धेरात्मा महान्परः॥ महतः परमव्यक्तमव्यक्तात्पुरुषः परः । पुरुषान्न परं किंचित्सा काष्ठा सा परा गतिः । कठोप. III. (valli) 10–11. These occur with slight variations in बृहदारण्यकयाज्ञवल्क्यस्मृति IX. 184–186. On V. S. I. 4. 1 the Sāṅkhya objector relies upon this Kaṭha text as providing evidence of the Sāṅkhya doctrines being based on the Veda; compare भगवद्गीता III. 42–43. Then शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. 1.2 12 cites द्वा सुपर्णा सयुजा सखाया समानं वृक्षं परिषस्वजाते । तयोरेकः पिप्पलं स्वाद्वत्त्यनश्नन्नन्योऽभिचाकशीति ॥ मुण्डक III.1.1, श्वेताश्वतरोप० IV. 6 and ऋ. I. 164.20) and states 'अपर आह । द्वा सुपर्णा – इति ॥ नेयमृगस्याधिकरणस्य सिद्धान्तं भजते पैङ्गिरहस्य-ब्राह्मणेनान्यथा व्याख्यातत्वात् । तयोरेकः पिप्पलं स्वाद्वत्तीति सत्यम्, अनश्नन्नन्यो ... अभिपश्यति ज्ञस्तावेतौ सत्यक्षेत्रज्ञौ ।'. This verse (द्वा सुपर्णा) is the subject of V. S. III. 3. 34 also.

---

from the union of the ātman with organs of sense and the mind. The Śvetāśvataropaniṣad expressly [2121] refers to Sāṅkhya and Yoga (in VI. 13) and says that 'on realizing that cause which can be apprehended by means of the study of Sāṅkhya and Yoga he is released from all bonds'. That Upaniṣad is full of words that are frequently employed in the Sāṅkhya system such as 'avyakta' (I. 8), guṇa (V. 7 'sa viśvarūpas-triguṇaḥ' and VI. 2, 4 and 16), jña (v. 2, VI. 17), prakṛti ('māyām tu prakṛtim vidyāt' IV. 10), puruṣa (I. 2, III. 12, 13, IV. 7), pradhāna (I. 10, VI. 10 and 16), liṅga (I. 13, VI. 9). The Śv. Up. (VI. 11) describes the one God as 'sākṣī cetā kevalo nirguṇaś-ca'. The Sāṅkhya denies God and transfers these epithets to the Puruṣa, who in his true essence is, according to the Sāṅkhya, merely a passive witness, pure intelligence, unaffected by guṇas. The Praśna Up. (IV. 8) speaks of the five elements and their mātrās (pṛthivī ca pṛthivīmātrā ca &c), the ten indriyas and their objects, manas, buddhi, ahaṅkara &c. The Sāṅkhyas rely on the verse 'ajāmekām' (Śv. Up. IV. 5) [2222] for Upaniṣadic support to their theory about prakṛti and its three guṇas (vide bhāṣya of 2221. नित्यो नित्यानां चेतनश्चेतनानामेको बहूनां यो विदधाति कामान्। तत्कारणं सांख्ययोगाधिगम्यं ज्ञात्वा देवं मुच्यते सर्वपाशैः॥ श्वेताश्व० VI. 13. The first half occurs in कठोप. V. 130. शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 3 remarks 'यत्तु दर्शनमुक्तं तत्कारणं सांख्ययोगाभिपन्नम् इति, वैदिकमेव तत्त्वज्ञानं ध्यानं च सांख्ययोगशब्दाभ्यामभिलप्यते प्रत्यासत्तेरित्यवगन्तव्यम्॥'. Compare गीता 13. 19 and 21 प्रकृतिं पुरुषं चैव etc. for the relation of पुरुष, प्रकृति and गुण; साक्षी is explained ay Pāṇini as 'साक्षाद् द्रष्टरि संज्ञायाम्' V 2. 9. The word कैवल्य, the summum bonum of the Sāṅkhya, is derived from केवल (which word occurs in Śv. Up. I. 11 and VI. 11) and means केवलस्य भावः.

---

2222. अजामेकां लोहितशुक्लकृष्णां बह्वीः प्रजाः सृजमानां सरूपाः। अजो ह्येको जुषमाणोऽनुशेते जहात्येनां भुक्तभोगामजोऽन्यः॥ श्वेताश्व० उप. 4. 5. This verse metaphorically speaks of Prakṛti, Puruṣa and Guṇas acc. to the Sāṅkhya objector. अजा and अज ordinarily mean 'she-goat' and 'he-goat'. The words also mean 'unborn'. Therefore, ajā stands for Prakṛti and aja for Puruṣa, both of which are eternal acc. to the Sāṅkhya system. Lohita (red) stands for the guṇa rajas, śukla (white) for sattvaguṇa (which is prakāśaka) and kṛṣṇa (dark) for tamas. From Prakṛti are evolved numerous objects. The latter half refers to a soul that is enveloped in ignorance and therefore lives in bondage, but one who has realised the distinction between guṇas and puruṣa abandons prakṛti i. e. is liberated. The relations of the numerous puruṣas (poetically represented as he-goats) to the one Prakṛti (represented as a she-goat) are mentioned in this verse. These three colours really stand for three elements viz. tejas, waters and food (i. e. earth). Vide Chān. Up. VI. 3. 1 'यदग्ने रोहितं रूपं तेजसस्तद्रूपं यच्छुक्लं तदपां यत्कृष्णं तदन्नस्य.'

Śaṅkara on V. S. I. 4. 8). That verse means : there is one unborn (female), constituted by red, white and black, but producing manifold progeny resembling each other; there is one unborn being (a male) who resorts to her (loves her) and lies by her; there is another, who leaves her after having experienced enjoyment. Similarly, Sāṅkhyas argue that Kapila, the founder of the Sāṅkhya system, is mentioned in the Śv. Up. (V. 2) 'it is he who, in the beginning, bears (nourishes) by thoughts Kapila sage when born and looks on while he is being born.' If one looks to various passages of the Śv. Up. such as III. 4, IV. 12, VI. 18 one must hold that ṛsi Kapila,[2223] the reddish sage, is Hiranyagarbha (the golden child), the first creation (Hiraṇyagarbhaḥ samavartatāgre,' Rg. X. 121. 1). Śaṅkarācārya (on V. S. II. 1. 1) replies that from the mere occurrence of the word 'Kapila' one cannot at once jump to the conclusion that he must be the founder of the Sāṅkhya, since another Kapila, called Vāsudeva, who reduced to ashes the sons of Sagara by his angry look, is well-known.[2224] Śaṅkarācārya concedes on V. S. II. 1. 3 that both Sāṅkhya and Yoga are within the pale of Vedic orthodoxy as regards those portions of them that are not in conflict with the Veda. The five elements (mahābhutāni) are mentioned in the Ait. Up. (III. 3), Praśna VI. 4 and the five special qualities of these five in Kaṭha Up. (III. 15).

In view of the fact that the word 'Sāṅkhya' occurs in the Śv. Up. and that the Kaṭha and Muṇḍaka have some doctrines similar to the Sāṅkhya system and the Śvetāśvatara employs many words that occur frequently in the works on Sāṅkhya, the question arises—what is the relation of the Sāṅkhya to the Upaniṣads. There are three possible views, (1) that Upaniṣad thought and Sāṅkhya made parallel progress, (2) that Sāṅkhya adopted and expanded some of the germinal ideas of the Upaniṣads, (3) that some Upaniṣads borrowed from the Sāṅkhya. It is not possible to discuss these questions here for reasons of space and relevance. The present author holds that it is the Sāṅkhya that based itself on the thoughts of the Upaniṣads, particularly when the older Upaniṣads like the Bṛ. Up. and Chāndogya hardly exhibit any traces of Sāṅkhya doctrines or technique, when Sāṅkhya references are found only in Kaṭha, Muṇḍaka, Śvetāśvatara, Praśna (which are held to be later than Chāṅ. Up. and Bṛ. Up. by modern scholarship) and when there is hardly any work or writer of purely Sāṅkhya doctrines that can be assigned to a period even a few centuries earlier than the Christian era and when no one can place the principal Upaniṣads (about twelve, including the Svetāśvatara) later than 300 B. C., since even the Śv. Up. is referred to as 'Śruti' in V. S. I. 4. 8, II. 3. 22. Garbe (in 'Die Sāṅkhya Philosophie' pp. 3 ff) denies that Sāṅkhya underwent any essential modifications in its long history. Jacobi does not agree, holding that Sāṅkhya originated out of a common cultural and philosophical heritage and Oldenberg sees the origin of Sāṅkhya in the Kaṭha and Śv. Up. and holds that epic Sāṅkhya is an independent development ('Die Lehre der Upanishaden und die Anfänge des Buddhismus', 1915, pp. 206 ff). Sāṅkhya and Yoga were known to Kauṭilya (Sāṅkhyam Yogo Lokāyatam cetyānvīkṣikī' Arthaśāstrā I. 2. p. 6.). Therefore, we may say that Sāṅkhya as a philosophical school started at least before the 4th century B. C.

2223. या तु श्रुतिः कपिलस्य ज्ञानातिशयं प्रदर्शयन्ती प्रदर्शिता न तया श्रुतिविरुद्धमपि कापेलं मतं श्रद्धातुं शक्यं कपिलमिति श्रुतिसामान्यमात्रत्वात्। अन्यस्य च कपिलस्य सगरपुत्राणां प्रतप्तुर्वासुदेवनाम्नः स्मरणात्। भाष्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 1; येन त्वंशेन न विरुध्येते तेनेष्टमेव सांख्ययोगस्मृत्योः साधकाशत्वम्। शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 3.

2224. In the Viṣṇupurāṇa IV. 4. 12 Kapila is said to be a part of bhagavān Puruṣottama, who reduced to ashes the 60 thousand sons of Sagara, that suspected that the Aśvamedha horse grazing near that sage must have been stolen by him (IV. 4. 16–23). For Vāsudeva Kapila, vide Vanaparva 107. 31–33, where we read (in Chitraśālā ed.) 'ततः क्रुद्धो महाराज कपिलो मुनिसत्तमः। वासुदेवेति यं प्राहुः कपिलं मुनिपुङ्गवम्। ... ददाह सुमहातेजा मन्दबुद्धीन् स सागरान्। The story is also mentioned in Vanaparva 47 (7–18).

We should now turn to Sanskrit works other than the Upaniṣads for seeing the origins of the Sāṅkhya system. First comes the Mahābhārata.

In many passages of the Śāntiparva [1225] references to some of the doctrines, technical words and persons connected with the mature Sāṅkhya system occur. The references are so many that the present writer will have to select only a few passages by way of sample. In chap. 203 there is a dialogue between a clever pupil and his guru. It begins by stating (in verse 8) that Vāsudeva is all this (Vāsudevaḥ sarvam-idam), then it proceeds 'just as from one lamp thousands of lamps can proceed, so prakṛti creates endless things, but does not become reduced (in size) thereby; buddhi springs from the activity of avyakta (i.e. prakṛti) and ahaṅkāra is produced (from buddhi) and from ahaṅkāra is evolved ākāśa from which vāyu arises and then tejas, water and the earth arise each from its predecessor; these eight are the mūlaprakṛtis[2226] and the whole world is centred in them (verses 24–26). Then the chap. mentions five organs of knowledge (ear, skin, eye, tongue, sense of smell) and five senses of activity (hands &c) and then there are the five objects of sense (viz. śabda, sparsa &c) and the mind is all-pervading and the 16th (verses 27–31). Then the chapter speaks of puruṣa (the soul) that resides in the city with nine[2227] gates and is undecaying and immortal, which shines in all beings just as a lamp, whether big or small, does. In chapter 204 the same dialogue is pursued and the first verse says all bhūtas spring from avyakta and are merged (die) in avyakta, it refers to kṣetra (the body) and kṣetrajña (in verse 14) and winds up by saying that, just as seeds burnt by fire do not grow, the soul is not again connected with kleśas[2228] when they are burnt by the fire of (correct) knowledge. In chap. 205, verses 22–23 speak of the characteristics of the three guṇas; chap. 206 says that when a person brings under control anger, avarice,[2229] fear, pride and becomes pure he merges into the highest self that is Viṣṇu in avyakta form and chap. 207 deals with the measures for reaching the highest goal and puts forward brahmacarya (sexual purity) as

2225. For the Śāntiparva only the critical edition of the Mahābhārata issued by the BORI is cited in this section on Sāṅkhya from this paragraph onwards. The quotations from other parvans are taken from the Citraśālā Press edition.

---

2226. मूलप्रकृतयोऽष्टौ ता जगदेतास्ववस्थितम्॥ ज्ञानेन्द्रियाण्यतः पञ्च पञ्च कर्मेन्द्रियाण्यपि। विषयाः पञ्च चैकं च विकारे षोडशं मनः॥ verses 26–27. Compare सांख्यकारिका 3 q. above in n 2216 for षोडशकश्च विकारः etc.

2227. नवद्वारं पुरं पुण्यमेतैर्भावैः समन्वितम्। व्याप्य शेते महानात्मा तस्मात्पुरुष उच्यते॥ शान्ति 203. 35. Compare also भगवद्गीता 'नवद्वारे पुरे देही नैव कुर्वन् न कारयन्'. The word पुरुष is generally derived as पुरि शेते इति पुरुषः. Vide निरुक्त I. 13 यथा चापि पतिनार्थानि स्युस्तथैतान्याचक्षीरन् पुरुषं पुरिशय इत्याचक्षीरन्; but in II. 3 it gives three derivations of 'पुरुषः पुरिषादः पुरिशयः पूरयतेर्वा' (the first being पुरि+स from सद् to sit). The derivation of the word from पुरि शेते occurs ever in the बृह. उप. II. 4. 18 'स वा अयं पुरुषः सर्वासु पूर्षु पुरिशयः'. The words नवद्वारे पुरे देही occur in श्वेताश्व० III. 18.

2228. क्लेश is a technical term in the Yogasūtra where it occurs frequently as in I 24, II. 2 and 3, II. 12, IV. 28 and 30. Yogasūtra II. 3 enumerates the five kleśas as अविद्या-अस्मिता-राग-द्वेष-अभिनिवेशाः क्लेशाः'. They are so called because they harass man (क्लिश्यन्ति पुरुषम्).

2229. क्रोधलोभौ भयं दर्प एतेषां साधनाच्छुचिः॥ परमं परमात्मानं देवदेवमयमव्ययम्। विष्णुमव्यक्तसंस्थानं विशन्ते देवसत्तमम्' chap. 206. 1–2.

the first measure. In these chapters, though some doctrines peculiar to the standard Sāṅkhya of the Kārikā appear, they are all brought in line with the Vedānta of one supreme Being, which is negatived in the official Sāṅkhya.

That there were philosophers, who adopted some of the Sāṅkhya and Yoga doctrines, postulated Parameśvara (Supreme Deity) and held that the three, viz. Pradhāna, Puruṣa and Īśvara were different from each other, is expressly stated by Śaṅkarācārya[2230] in his bhāṣya on V. S. II. 2. 37. Therefore, the Mahābhārata references to Sāṅkhya probably relate to philosophical doctrines in which all three viz. Prakṛti, Puruṣas and Supreme Self were recognized, from which arose the later official Sāṅkhya that discarded any supreme Ruler of the Universe. In the Nārāyaṇīya section of the Śāntiparva (quoted in note 1544 p. 954 above) 'Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Pāñcarātra, Vedas and Pāśupata are said to be knowledges (jñānāni) and 'nānāmatāni' (different points of view) and Kapila, a paramarṣi, is said to be propounder of Sāṅkhya. Chapter 294 (in verses 26-49) deals with the twenty-five tattvas of the Sāṅkhya from Prakṛti or Avyakta, mahat, ahaṅkāra, the five elements from ahaṅkāra (these eight being called prakṛtis) and then 16 vikāras (verse 29). These are called kṣetra, the soul is the 25th (v. 35) and is called kṣetrajña and Puruṣa (v. 37 'avyaktake pure śete puruṣaś-ceti kathyate', and Īśvara or brahma is not brought in anywhere in that chapter.

Chapters 211–212 (containing in all 100 verses) of Śāntiparva deal with what Janaka, called Janadeva,[2231] king of Mithilā, learnt from Pañcaśikha, when the latter, after wandering over the whole earth, visited Mithilā and who is described as the first (or foremost) pupil of Āsuri and who is said to have performed a sattra for a thousand years on Pañcasrotas[2232]

2230. तस्मात् प्रकृतिरधिष्ठाता केवलं निमित्तकारणमीश्वर इत्येष पक्षो वेदान्तविहित-ब्रह्मैकत्वप्रतिपक्षत्वाद्यत्नेनात्र प्रतिषिध्यते। सा चेयं वेदबाह्येश्वरकल्पनानेकप्रकारा। केचित्सांख्य-योगव्यपाश्रयाः कल्पयन्ति प्रधानपुरुषयोरधिष्ठाता केवलं निमित्तकारणमीश्वर इतरेतरविलक्षणाः प्रधानपुरुषेश्वरा इति। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. II. 2. 37 (पत्युरसामञ्जस्यात्).

2231. Janadeva may be a proper name of Janaka and may mean 'Lord of men' (i. e. same as 'Janādhipa')' In the Bṛhan-Nāradīya-purāna I. chap. 45 the same story about Janaka and Pañcaśikha is narrated often in the words of the Śāntiparva.

2232. Pañcaśrotas probably means 'Pañcanada' (the five rivers of the Punjab), Vide H. of Dh. vol. IV. p. 787. The cr. ed. of the Śāntiparva

(Continued on next page)

(verse 10). He was the son of a brāhmaṇa woman called Kapilā and was therefore known as Kāpileya (verses 13–15). Janaka had a hundred ācāryas in his palace who propounded the different views of different sects. Verse 9 says that Pañcaśikha made people wonder when he appeared like Kapila, the great sage (paramarṣi) and Prajāpati, that he confounded the hundred ācāryas by his arguments (v. 17). Later Janaka abandoned those ācāryas and followed Pañcaśikha (verse 18). He, after creating disgust in Janaka about his caste or about rites and about everything, expounded to Janaka the highest mokṣa which is declared as Sāṅkhya. In chāp. 212 Pañcaśikha expounds five elements, five jñānendriyas, five karmendriyas, mind (verses 7–22) and the signs (liṅgas) of sāttvika, rājasa and tāmasa bhāvas (verses 25–28) and describes how a person who seeks the Self is freed from the fetters of pleasure and pain and being beyond the fear of old age and death reaches immortality. In the first place, these two chapters are not sometimes very clear, offer no consistent clear-cut system and employ words that are difficult to construe and are not completely identical with the scheme of the 25 tattvas of the official Sāṅkhya of the Kārikā, since chap. 211 verse 13 speaks of 'ekākṣara brahma assuming many forms'. For example, it is difficult to say what is meant by 'purusāvastham-avyaktam'. The meaning that can be drawn out of the words seems to be 'he (Pañcaśikha) conveyed knowledge (to Janaka) about Avyakta (i. e. Pradhāna) that depends upon Puruṣa (i. e. that becomes active through union of Puruṣa with it), which is the highest truth. It further says that Pañcaśikha became perfect (in knowledge) by the performance of iṣṭis and sattras, again by abounding tapas, had a vision of the deity (God) and he realized the distinction between kṣetra and kṣetrajña and also realized brahma symbolized[2233] by om. There-omits one verse in chap. 211 (corresponding to chap. 218 of the Citraśālā Press ed.), which is पञ्चस्रोतसि निष्णातः पञ्चरात्रविशारदः। पञ्चज्ञः पञ्चकृत्पञ्चगुणः पञ्चशिखः स्मृतः॥ which is 11–12 in that chap. Here पञ्चशिख is said to have been profoundly learned in पञ्चरात्र (वैष्णव) doctrines. As he was called कापिलेय, it was probably imagined that his mother was Kapilā.

(Continued from last page)

2233. तं समासीनमागम्य मण्डलं कापिलं महत्। पुरुषावस्थमव्यक्तं परमार्थं व्यशोधयत्॥ इष्टिसत्रेण संसिद्धो भूयश्च तपसा मुनिः। क्षेत्रक्षेत्रज्ञयोर्व्यक्तिं बुबुधे देवदर्शनः॥ यत्तदेकाक्षरं ब्रह्म नानारूपं प्रदृश्यते। शान्ति 211. 11–13, पुरुषावस्थं must be dissolved (in order that some sense can be made out of it) as पुरुषे अवस्था (अवस्थानं यस्य) or 'पुरुषे अवतिष्ठते इति.' The meaning of मण्डलं कापिलं महत् is not at all clear,

(Continued on next page)

fore, the doctrine of Pañcaśikha in these chapters of Śāntiparva is really advaita (monism) on which are grafted some doctrines similar to the later official Sāṅkhya for explaining creation and so forth.[2231] In Śāntiparva 306. 56–66 (= Chitra ed. 318. 58–62) Viśvāvasu tells Yājñavalkya that he has heard about the 25th tattva (i. e. Puruṣa) from Jaigīṣavya, Asita-Devala, Vārṣagaṇya (of Parāśara gotra), Bhṛgu Pañcaśikha, Kapila, Śuka, Gotama Āṛṣṭiṣeṇa, Garga, Nārada, Āsuri, Pulastya, Sanatkumāra, Śukra and Kaśyapa (father of Viśvāvasu) and 336. 65 (Chitra. ed. 318. 67) states that Yājñavalkya had mastered completely both Sāṅkhya and Yoga. Śāntiparva 304. 4 (=316. 4 of Citra. ed.) states that Sāṅkhya and Yoga are one.[2235]

Pañcaśikha figures frequently in the Mahābhārata. In Śāntiparva, chap. 307 (containing only 14 verses) Yudhiṣṭhira asks Bhīṣma how one can rise superior to old age and death, but from the passages in the Ahirbudhnya-saṁhitā, chap. XII. 18–29 it follows that the doctrines of Kapila's Sāṅkhya—tantra were divided into two maṇḍalas called Prākṛta and Vaikṛta and the two had 32 and 28 topics respectively. 'सांख्यरूपेण सङ्कल्पो वैष्णवः कपिलाह्वयेः। उदितो याद्दशः पूर्वं ताद्दशं शृणु मेऽखिलम्। षष्टिभेदं स्मृतं तन्त्रं सांख्यं नाम महासुने। प्राकृतं वैकृतं चेति मण्डले द्वे समासतः॥'. The com. Arjunamiśra appears to take it as 'the great doctrine of Kapila came to him (Pañcaśikha) in the form of an aura of light and expounded to him the highest truth' etc. This is extremely far-fetched. There is a doubt about the agent of 'nyabodhayat and as to whom 'samāsīnam' refers. To me it appears that the meaning is that 'Pañcaśikha came to him (i. e. to Janaka) and imparted to him the great Kāpila maṇḍala, the highest truth, the avyakta etc.' According to the usual sanskrit construction the agent of 'āgamya' and 'nyabodhayat' must be the same (i. e. Pañcaśikha). समासीनं refers to जनक. Compare 'एकाक्षरं परं ब्रह्म' मनु II. 83 and 'ओमित्येकाक्षरं ब्रह्म व्याहरन् मामनुस्मरन्' गीता VIII. 13. Verse 13 of chap. 211 is आसुरिर्मण्डले तस्मिन् प्रतिपेदे तदव्ययम्। (अव्ययं refers to एकाक्षर-ब्रह्म). Therefore, मण्डल should be taken to mean 'the circle of the doctrines first propounded by Kapila.'

---

(Continued from last page)

2234. The position reached by Janaka on Pañcasikha's teaching is stated in Śānti 212. 50–51. 'न खलु मम तुषोऽपि दह्यतेऽत्र स्वयमिदमाह किल स्म भूमिपालः। इदमसृतपदं विदेहराजः स्वयमिह पञ्चशिखेन भाष्यमाणः॥. Compare शान्ति 171. 56 अनन्तं बत मे वित्तं यस्य मे नास्ति किंचन॥ मिथिलायां प्रदीप्तायां न मे दह्यति किंचन॥ धम्मपद 200, उत्तराध्ययनसूत्र 9. 14 सुहं वसामो जीवामो जेसिं मो णत्थि किंचण। मिहिलाए डज्झमाणीए न मे डज्झइ किंचण॥. इमां तु यो वेद विमोक्षबुद्धिमात्मानमन्विच्छति चाप्रमत्तः। न लिप्यते कर्मफलैरनिष्टैः पत्रं विसरवेव जलेन सिक्तम्॥ शान्ति 212–44; vide note 1640, pp. 1005–6 above for the figure of a lotus leaf and water falling thereon.

2235. यदेव योगाः पश्यन्ति तत्सांख्यैरपि दृश्यते। एकं सांख्यं च योगं च यः पश्यति स पश्यति।.

whether by very great tapas [2236] or by rites or by Vedic learning or by the use of rasāyanas (elixirs of life or alchemist's prescriptions). Bhīṣma speaks of an ancient dialogue between Janaka and Bhikṣu Pañcaśikha, where the same question was put by Janaka and Pañcaśikha replied that none can escape these two and that union with wife and relatives is like meeting persons when on a journey (i. e. the company of these is not durable or permanent), nobody has seen heaven or hell, that one's duty is not to violate the ordinances of Vedas, and to make gifts and to offer sacrifices. In this chapter there is hardly anything which approaches the special doctrines of the Sāṅkhya, though Pañcaśikha's views are here set forth. Chap. 308 (191 verses out of which less than 30 have anything to do with Pañcaśikha's teachings directly) begins with the question of Yudhiṣṭhira 'who secured mokṣa without giving up the stage of householder.' Then Bhīṣma narrates to him the dialogue between Janaka called Dharmadhvaja [2237] and Sulabhā, a nun. Janaka was learned in the Veda, in mokṣaśāstra and in his own śāstra (rājadharma), he had controlled his senses and ruled the earth. She heard from ascetics about Janaka's righteous conduct and she desired to find out the truth. She gave up her form as a nun by her yogic powers and became a woman, a paragon of beauty, and met Janaka. The latter informed her that he was the pupil of old bhikṣu [2238] Pañcaśikha of the Pārāśarya gotra who stayed with him during the four months of the rainy season and who expounded to him the threefold mokṣa (viz. Sāṅkhya, Yoga and the science of government) and yet who did not ask him to give up rulership. Janaka said

---

2236. तपसा वा सुमहता कर्मणा वा श्रुतेन वा। रसायनप्रयोगैर्वा केनैतौ जरान्तकौ॥ ... केन वृत्तेन भगवन्नतिक्रामेज्जरान्तकौ। तपसा वाथ बुद्ध्या वा कर्मणा वा श्रुतेन वा॥ शान्ति 307. 2 and 5.

2237. 'Dharmadhvaja' may be a proper name here; if not, it means 'one who has raised aloft the banner of dharma' i. e. who proclaims to the world that he follows dharma in all matters.

2238. पाराशर्यसगोत्रस्य वृद्धस्य सुमहात्मनः। भिक्षोः पञ्चशिखस्याहं शिष्यः परमसंमतः॥ सांख्यज्ञाने तथा योगे महीपालविधौ तथा। त्रिविधे मोक्षधर्मेऽस्मिन् गताध्वा छिन्नसंशयः॥ तेनाहं सांख्यमुख्येन सुहृदार्थेन तत्त्वतः। श्रावितस्त्रिविधं मोक्षं न च राज्याद्विचालितः॥ सोहं तां निखिलां वृत्तिं त्रिविधां मोक्षसंहिताम्। मुक्तरागश्चराम्येकः पदे परमके स्थितः॥ वैराग्यं पुनरेतस्य मोक्षस्य परमो विधिः। ज्ञानादेव च वैराग्यं जायते येन मुच्यते॥ शान्ति 308. 24–29. A conjecture may be hazarded that this Pañcaśikha is entirely different from the Pañcaśikha who was one of the founders of the Sāṅkhya and that he is probably the same as the Pārāśarya who is credited by Pāṇini as having composed a 'bhikṣusūtra', 'पाराशर्यशिलालिभ्यां भिक्षुनटसूत्रयोः' पा. IV. 3. 110; Vide note 1901 p. 1169 above.

"I, giving up all attachment, though occupying the highest position (as ruler), follow the three paths of mokṣa; the highest rule of this mokṣa is 'freedom from attachment, the absence of attachment is due to correct knowledge whereby one is freed from bondage (of saṁsāra)". Janaka further avows that[2239] on account of the knowledge imparted to him by the bhikṣu who is called after his top-knot, he is free from all attachment, though looking after the kingdom and that he is different from other sannyāsins. Then Janaka gives in verses (308. 38–41) another meaning[2240] of the threefold Mokṣa propounded by Pañcaśikha to him viz. (1) highest knowledge and renunciation of actions, (2) strict adherence to the patha of karma (duties prescribed by Śāstra) and (3) combination of knowledge and actions, and it is said that those who follow this third path resemble householders in several respects. Janaka asserts his view 'wearing ochre-coloured[2241] garments, shaving the head, carrying a water-vessel placed on three staves-these are merely outward signs and do not lead to mokṣa and that mokṣa does not consist in non-possession of wealth and bondage does not follow possession of some wealth, but it is jñāna by which a person secures deliverance, whether there is possession or non-possession of wealth'. It appears from verse 40 that Pañcaśikha emphasized the third kind of Mokṣaniṣṭhā (Jñānakarmasamuccaya) and Janaka followed that teaching. The rest of the chapter (308) is concerned with Janaka's charges against Sulabhā and Sulabhā's scathing remarks against Janaka.[2242] She says at the end 'you

---

2239. तद्भगवता तेन शिखामोक्तेन भिक्षुणा। ज्ञानं कृतमबीजं मे विषयेषु न जायते॥... मुक्तसङ्गः स्थितो राज्ये विशिष्टोन्यैस्त्रिदण्डिभिः॥ Chap. 308. 34–37. पञ्चशिख literally means 'one having five śikhās (locks of hair on the head)'. Therefore, he is referred to as शिखामोक्त (lit. declared by his śikhās).

2240. लोके हि त्रिविधा निष्ठा दृष्टा पूर्वैर्महर्षिभिः। ज्ञानं लोकोत्तरं यच्च सर्वत्यागश्च कर्मणाम्॥ ज्ञाननिष्ठां वदन्त्येके मोक्षशास्त्रविदो जनाः। कर्मनिष्ठां तथैवान्ये यतयः सूक्ष्मदर्शिनः। प्रहाबोभयमप्येतत् ज्ञानं कर्म च केवलम्। तृतीयेयं समाख्याता निष्ठा तेन महात्मना॥ 308. 38–40.

2241. काषायधारणं मौण्ड्यं त्रिविष्टब्धः कमण्डलुः। लिङ्गान्यत्यर्थमेतानि न मोक्षायेति मे मतिः॥ ... आकिंचन्ये न मोक्षोऽस्ति कैञ्चन्ये नास्ति बन्धनम्। कैञ्चन्ये चेतरे चैव जन्तुर्ज्ञानेन मुच्यते॥ Chap. 308. 47 and 50. अकिंचन means one who possesses nothing and अकैञ्चन्य means 'the state of being अकिञ्चन'. Should we read अक्षार्थम् or अर्थार्थम् for अत्यर्थम् as some mss. do? The verses are chap. 320. 47 ff of चित्र० ed.

2242. Some of her telling retorts are set out here. 'यथात्मनि परस्मिंश्च समतामध्यवस्यसि॥ अथ मां कासि कस्येति किमर्थमनुपृच्छसि। ... सर्वः स्वे स्वे गृहे राजा सर्वः have indeed heard from Pañcaśikha the whole (doctrine) about mokṣa together with the means (for attaining it), with the Upaniṣad passages expounding it or with the auxiliaries (of meditation) and with definite conclusions.'

(Continued on next page)

This passage expressly refers to Upaniṣads in connection with mokṣa and the preceding verses emphasize the freedom from attachment on the part of Janaka (in 308. 37 'mukta-saṅga'). The Bṛ. Up. in III. 1 refers to the sacrifice performed by Janaka, king of Videha, who set apart a thousand cows to be given to him from among the brāhmaṇas assembled at it, that would be the most profound in learning and be brahmiṣṭha (most learned in or devoted to brahma). Yājñavalkya asked his disciple to take the cows away; thereupon followed a learned disquisition by questions (of angry brāhmaṇas including a woman) and answers by Yājñavalkya;[2242] the questioners were Aśvala (the holy priest of Janaka), Jāratkārava Ārtabhāga, Bhujyu Lāhyāyani, Uṣasta Cākrāyaṇa, Kahola Kāuṣītakeya, Gargī Vācaknavī, Uddālaka, Āruṇi, Vidagdha Śākalya (III. 1-9 ending with 'vijñānam-ānandam brahma)'. In Bṛ. Up. IV. 2 it is said that Janaka Vaideha approached Yājñavalkya, did obeisance to him and said 'instruct me' and that then the sage spoke to him 'you have studied the Veda and the Upaniṣads have been expounded to you by ācāryas, but, when you will be leaving this body, where will yo go'? Janaka replied that he did not know it and requested the sage to enlighten him on that point. Then a long disquition follows (Bṛ. Up. IV. 2 ff) in which occurs the famous passage ('sa eṣa neti netyātmā, agṛhyo na hi gṛhyate ..... asaṅgo na hi sajjate ..... abhayam vai Janaka prāptosi' (IV. 2. 4). It appears to the present writer that some one desirous of boosting Sāṅkhya teachings inserted the chapters about Sāṅkhya in which Pañcaśikha is substituted in place of Yājñavalkya as the teacher of Janaka.

It would be seen from the brief synopsis of the chapters 211-12, 307 and 308 that the views described in all of them are not the same as those of the official or standard Sāṅkhya, that Pañcaśikha's views as presented in chapters 211-212 seem to be different from those in chap. 308, particularly when chap. 308 emphasizes that jñāna-karma-samuccaya was the view of

---

(Continued from last page)

स्वे स्वे गृहे गृही। विग्रहाद्ग्रहौ कुर्वंस्तुल्यो जनक राजभिः॥ 308. 126-27. 147. नन्वु चाम त्वया मोक्षः कृत्स्नः पञ्चशिखाच्छ्रुतः। सोपायः सोपनिषदः सोपासङ्गः सनिश्चयः॥ chap. 308. 163. The Com. Nilakaṇṭha explains: उपासङ्गो ध्यानाङ्गानि यमादीनि.

Pañcaśikha, while the official Sāṅkhya holds that jñāna alone leads to liberation. It should be noted that these chapters nowhere refer to a work of Pañcaśikha but show him to be a wandering ascetic holding certain views. The present writer believes that the author of these passages in the Śāntiparva had no work before him and only knew by hearsay and tradition that Pañcaśikha was a great Sāṅkhya teacher. Prof. Keith holds that the Pañcaśikha of the Śāntiparva is not identical with Pañcaśikha, the author of Ṣaṣṭitantra (p. 48 of 'Sāṅkhya System'). [2243]

There are other chapters in the Śāntiparva where the peculiar Sāṅkhya doctrines and terminology are employed but they are brought in line with Vāsudeva or Highest Self to which the Sāṅkhya doctrines are made subordinate. For example, in chap. 340 Nārada is said to have been [2244] told by God himself some of the tenets of Sāṅkhya such as the twenty-four tattvas and Puruṣa as the 25th taṭṭva, the three guṇas, that Puruṣa is kṣetrajña and bhoktṛ, that ācāryas, who have arrived at definite conclusions about Sāṅkhya, call God who is in the orb of the Sun as Kapila, that Hiraṇyagarbha, who is well praised in the Veda and is announced as (author) of Yogaśāstra, is 'myself'.

Not only in the Śāntiparva, but also in other parvans of the Mahābhārata, Sāṅkhya doctrines are dwelt upon. For example, the Āśvamedhika (in chap. 35. 47–48) speaks of sattva, rajas, tamas as ātmaguṇas and mentions their equilibrium. In another place, the same parvan enumerates the 24 tattvas viz. avyakta, mahān, ahaṅkāra &c and describes the three guṇas. [2245]

2243. Vide p. 11 (note) of Hall's Preface to the edition of Sāṅkhya-pravacanasūtra (1856), where passages ascribed to Pañcaśikha are grouped together and Richard Garbe in Festgruss an Rudolph von Roth (Stuttgart, 1893) pp. 75–80 for fragments of Pañcaśikha.

2244. द्विर्द्वादशेभ्यस्तत्त्वेभ्यः ख्यातो यः पञ्चविंशकः। पुरुषो निष्क्रियश्चैव ज्ञानहृदयञ्च कथ्यते॥ यं प्रविश्य भवन्तीह मुक्ता वै द्विजसत्तम। स वासुदेवो विज्ञेयः परमात्मा सनातनः॥ ... सत्त्वं रजस्तमश्चैव गुणानेतान्प्रचक्षते। एते सर्वशरीरेषु तिष्ठन्ति विचरन्ति च। एतान्गुणांस्तु क्षेत्रज्ञो भुंक्ते नैभिः स मुच्यते॥ ... विद्या सहायवन्तं मामादित्यस्थं सनातनम्। कपिलं प्राहुराचार्याः सांख्यनिश्चितनिश्चयाः॥ हिरण्यगर्भो भगवानेष छन्दसि स्तुतः। सोहं योगगतिर्विद्वान् योगशास्त्रेषु शाश्वतः॥ शान्ति० 340. 23, 24, 26–27, 64–65. हिरण्यगर्भ is praised in the hymn Ṛg. X. 121. 1 and appears to be identified with Prajāpati in the last verse of the hymn (X. 121. 10 Prajāpate na tvadetānyanyo). The शान्तिपर्व chap. 340 corresponds to chap. 339 of the Chitrashala edition and the verses quoted here all occur in that chap.

2245. सत्त्वं रजस्तमश्चेति त्रय आत्मगुणाः स्मृताः। तेषां गुणानां साम्यं चेत्तदाहुः स्वस्थलक्षणम्। तेषामन्यतमोत्सेके विधानमुपदिश्यते॥ आश्व० 12. 4–5; compare शान्ति-

(Continued on next page)

Āsuri is mentioned by the S. Kārikā as the pupil of Kapila, also in a quotation in Yogasūtrabhāṣya on I. 25 (note 2251) and by the Śāntiparva (chap. 306). But no work is attributed to him and hardly any quotation from him is cited by writers on Sāṅkhya (except a verse quoted as his by Haribhadra a late Jain writer). Kapila is a legendary figure. In Ṛgveda X. 27. 16 Kapila[2246] is mentioned as one among ten (Aṅgirases) whom, though similar to them, they (Aṅgirases) urge on for a sacrifice. Vide Hall's Preface to Sāṅkhya-pravacanabhāṣya (ed. 1856) pp. 14 ff for the confused legends about Kapila. Some references to Kapila in the Mahābhārata have already been noted. In Vanaparva (221. 26) Kapila is styled as the promulgator of Sāṅkhya-yoga, as Paramarṣi and as an incarnation of Agni. In the Matsyapurāṇa[2247] it is stated that water should be offered to the seven sons of Brahmā, viz. Sanaka, Sananda, Sanātana, Kapila, Āsuri, Voḍhu and Pañcaśikha. The Vāmana-purāṇa (60. 70) mentions Kapila (as knower of Sāṅkhya), Voḍhu, Āsuri, Pañcaśikha (as 'yogayukta') and states that Sanatkumāra approached Brahmā for yoga lore.

In the Snānasūtra of Kātyāyana (kaṇḍikā 3) attached to the Pāraskaragṛhyasūtra the above seven are the only persons to whom tarpaṇa is offered among ṛṣis (vide II. of Dh. vol. II.

(Continued from last page)

पर्व 16. 11-13. Guṇas in the Sāṅkhya system must be understood to be of the nature of both substance and qualities. Vide also तमो रजस्तथा सत्त्वं गुणानेतान् प्रचक्षते। अन्योन्यमिथुनाः सर्वे तथान्योन्यानुजीविनः॥ तमसो मिथुनं सत्त्वं सत्त्वस्य मिथुनं रजः। रजसश्चापि सत्त्वं स्यात्सत्त्वस्य मिथुनं तमः॥ आश्वमे. 36. 4 and 6. Vide chap. 36. 12-15 for तामसगुण and 17-20 for तामसवृत्त and chap. 37 for राजसगुणवृत्त and 38. 1-9 for सत्त्वगुण.

2246. दशानामेकं कपिलं समानं तं हिन्वन्ति क्रतवे पार्याय। गर्भे माता सुधितं बक्षणास्वेनम्वं तुषयन्ती बिभर्ति॥ ऋ. X. 27. 16. The latter half is mystical and not clear.

2247. मनुष्यांस्तर्पयेद्भक्त्या ब्रह्मपुत्रान्ऋषींस्तथा। सनकश्च सनन्दश्च तृतीयश्च सनातनः। कपिलश्चासुरिश्चैव बोढुः पञ्चशिखस्तथा। सर्वे ते तृप्तिमायान्तु मद्दत्तेनाम्बुना सदा॥ मत्स्य० 102. 17-18. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa (IV. 2. 272-274) mentions these seven sons of Brahmā but in a different order. The वामनपुराण (60. 69-70) mentions the seven sons as सनत्कुमार, सनातन, सनक, सनन्दन, कपिल, बोढु and आसुरि and adds पञ्चशिख. In the बृहद्योगियाज्ञवल्क्यस्मृति (VII. 66) these same seven are said to be human sons of Brahmā. The स्मृतिच. I. p. 193 quotes मत्स्य 102. 14-21 on the topic of तर्पण, but reads 'कपिलश्चासुरिश्चैव सौढुः पञ्चशिखस्तथा।' in verse 18. बोढु or बौढ is a strange name and no verse or prose passage of his has been cited in works and commentaries on Sāṅkhya. It looks more like a prakrit form of some Sanskrit word. Vide Garbe in 'Die Sāṅkhya Philosophie' p. 72 for Voḍhu, p. 693). In the Bhāgavatapurāṇa (I. 3. 10) Kapila is said to be the 5th avatāra of Viṣṇu, is called siddheśa (the lord of siddhas) and the teacher of Āsuri in Sāṅkhya that had become decadent (by lapse of time). The Gītā also (X. 26 'siddhānām Kapilo muniḥ') mentions Kapila as a muni and the most eminent among siddhas. The S. Kārikā also refers to him as muni. The Kūrmapurāṇa (II. 7. 7) echoes the very words of the Gītā ('siddhānām Kapilo muniḥ').

In the vaṁśas in Bṛ. Up. II. 6. 3 and VI. 5. 2–3, in which succession lists of teachers and pupils differing from one another occur, Āsuri is said to be disciple of Bharadvāja in the first and the pupil of Yājñavalkya in the second. Each list contains at least 60 teachers from Brahmā downwards. In the first place, it is difficult to hold that these lists are authentic and there is no evidence to establish that the Āsuri mentioned in both is the same as the pupil of Kapila.

Pañcaśikha's is a great name in the Sāṅkhya system. His systematic work on that system was called Śaṣṭitantra. The S. Kārikā (70, 72) refers to him as the author of the Śaṣṭitantra containing great details, illustrative tales and discussions of others' views. It was called Ṣaṣṭitantra because it expounded sixty topics and it contained sixty thousand gāthās.[2248] The Yogasūtrabhāṣya (IV. 13) quotes a verse which is ascribed to Ṣaṣṭitantra by Vācaspati on Yogasūtrabhāṣya IV. 13. The present writer cannot agree with Keith p. 69 that the reference to Ṣaṣṭitantra in S. Kārikā (verse 72) is not to a work but to a philosophy of sixty topics. The āryā 72 had a Sanskrit commentary which was translated into Chinese in 546 A. D. in which it was stated that the work contained six thousand gāthās,[2249] but the Bhāmatī (by Vācaspati) on V. S. II. 1. 3 ascribes it to Vārṣagaṇya. It may be a slip on the part of Vācaspati or it is possible that he regarded Pañcaśikha and Vārṣagaṇya as the names of the same person, the first being a nickname and the latter a gotra name. On Yogasūtra I. 4, 25, 36, II. 5, 6, 13, 17,

---

2248. अयं पञ्चशिखः षष्टिसहस्रगाथात्मकं विपुलं तन्त्रमनुकवान्। p. 97 of Pandit Aiyaswami's ed.; षष्टिपदार्था यस्मिन् शास्त्रे तन्त्र्यन्ते व्युत्पाद्यन्ते तत् षष्टितन्त्रम्। माठरवृत्ति.

2249. 'Gāthā' here seems to mean 'a group of 32 syllables or a fixed number of mātrās as a unit.' The few quotations attributed to Pañcaśikha are almost all in prose, only one under Y. S. IV. 13 being in verse and later commentators like Bhāvā-Gaṇeśa on Sāṅkhya-sūtra quote verses of Pañcaśikha.

18, 20, III. 13 and 41, IV. 13 (tathā ca śāstrānuśāsanam 'Guṇānām &c), prose passages occur which Vācaspati ascribes to Pañcaśikha. On S. Kārikā 2 Vācaspati quotes in his com. the view of Pañcaśikhācārya. In Yogasūtrabhāṣya on I. 25 a sūtra is quoted which Vācaspati ascribes to Pañcaśikha in which Kapila is styled 'ādividvān' (the first master of Sāṅkhya) and 'paramarṣi' and is said to have imparted to Āsuri the Tantra, the Sāṅkhya Siddhānta.

In the dialogue between Viśvāvasu Gandharva and Yājñavalkya (in Śāntiparva, chap. 306) there is a long list of sages from whom Viśvāvasu says he learnt a great deal (in verses 56–60) but prays to Yājñavalkya[2250] that the latter should expound to him the knowledge of Sāṅkhya and Yoga (verses 65–66). Then Yājñavalkya states that prakṛti is also called pradhāna, that it does not know the 25th (viz. the puruṣa) and that there is a 26th (Highest Self) and so on. That list contains the following names: Jaigīṣavya,[2251] Asita, Devala, Vārṣagaṇya of the Parāśaragotra, bhikṣu Pañcaśikha, Kapila, Śuka, Gautama, Āṛṣṭiṣeṇa, Gārgya, Nārada, Āsuri, Pulastya, Sanatkumāra, Śukra, father of Kaśyapa. The sages are not mentioned in chronological order. Five of them (that are in Italics) are important so far as Sāṅkhya and Yoga are concerned. We saw above that Pañcaśikha is said to be of Parāśara gotra and in the above list Vārṣagaṇya also is said to be of the same gotra. Vācaspati on S. Kārikā 47 ascribes to Vārṣagaṇya the view that avidyā has five facets or aspects.[2252] The Yogasūtrabhāṣya on III. 53 quotes a sūtra of Vārṣagaṇya. It is shown above from 2250. तथा च शास्त्रानुशासनम्। गुणानां परमं रूपं न दृष्टिपथमृच्छति। यत्तु दृष्टिपथं प्राप्तं तन्मायेव सुतुच्छकम्। इति। योगसूत्रभाष्य IV. 13; अत्रैव षष्टितन्त्रशास्त्ररथानुशिष्टिः। मायेव न तु माया। सुतुच्छकं विनाशि। तत्त्ववैशारदी on योगसूत्र; अत एव योगशास्त्रमुत्पादयिता ह स्म भगवान् वार्षगण्यः। गुणानां ... सुतुच्छकम्। भामती on ब्र. सू. II. 1. 3.

---

2251. यथाह स्म भगवान् पञ्चशिखाचार्यः—स्वल्पसङ्कल्पः सपरिहारः प्रत्यवमर्षः—इति। on अविशुद्धि in सां. कारिका 2; तथा चोक्तम्। आदिविद्वान्निर्माणचित्तमधिष्ठाय कारुण्याद्भगवान् परमर्षिरासुरये जिज्ञासमानाय तन्त्रं प्रोवाचेति। योगसूत्रभाष्य I. 25; तथा चोक्तं पञ्चशिखाचार्येण। आदिविद्वान् कपिल इति। वाचस्पति's टीका.

2252. पञ्च विपर्ययभेदा भवन्त्यशक्तिश्च करणवैकल्यात्। सां. कारिका 47; 'अविद्या-अस्मिता-राग-द्वेष-अभिनिवेशाः ... पञ्च विपर्ययविशेषाः। ... पञ्चपर्वा अविद्येत्याह भगवान् वार्षगण्यः। सां. तत्त्वकौमुदी of वाचस्पति; बुद्धचरित (of अश्वघोष) XII. 33 is: इत्यविद्या हि विद्वांसः पञ्चपर्वां समीहते। तमो मोहं महामोहं तामिस्रद्वयमेव च॥. The श्वेताश्व० उप. I. 5 has the words 'पञ्चाशन्नेदां पञ्चपर्वामधीमः'. In the Kūrmapurāṇa (II. 11. 129) Kapila is said to have given instruction to both Jaigīṣavya and Pañcaśikha. It is difficult to say whether that Purāṇa had before it any ancient tradition to this effect.

the reconstruction of the Sanskrit Com. from Chinese that Vārṣagaṇa was one of the teachers after Pañcaśikha and before Īśvarakṛṣṇa. So it is extremely doubtful if Pañcaśikha and Vārṣagaṇya are identical. Vide JRAS for 1905 pp. 33–53 (by Takakusu who shows on p. 47 that Vṛṣagaṇa was a teacher of Vindhyavāsa and that Vasubandhu wrote a work called Paramārthasaptati in opposition to Vindhyavāsa and that Paramārtha was in China from 546 to 569 A. D.

In the Introduction to the Uttarādhyayana-sūtra (a Jain work) Charpentier refers to two different lists one older and shorter which speaks of the four Vedas, Itihāsas (as 5th), Nighaṇṭu as the sixth and of the Vedic aṅgas and upāṅgas and then of Ṣaṣṭitantra. This last may be a reference to Pañcaśikha's work or simply to the 60 topics dwelt upon in the Sāṅkhya system.

In Śāntiparva (chap. 222) Yudhiṣṭhira asks Bhīṣma: by what character, conduct, lores and by being intent on what does a person reach the abode of Brahmā which is higher (or beyond) prakṛti and Bhīṣma mentions the dialogue of Jaigīṣavya and Asita Devala in which it is stated that he who is unperturbed by being reviled or praised, who keeps silent over his good deeds, does not harm even him who harms him, is always calm and does good to all beings, reaches the abode of Brahmā. The Buddhacarita (XII. 67) speaks of Jaigīṣavya, Janaka and Vṛddha-Parāśara as having secured mokṣa by the path described in that chapter. The Yogabhāṣya (on III. 18) gives a long story about Āvaṭya (called prince of Yogins) and Jaigīṣavya. Jaigīṣavya is quoted in Vyāsabhāsya on Y. S. II. 55 for indriya-jaya (control over senses). He appears to be a Vedāntic writer on Yoga.

Not only does the Śāntiparva dilate upon some of the peculiar doctrines associated with the later official doctrines of the S. Kārikā, but the Bhagavadgītā also does so. A few striking passages are cited here. Gītā XIII. 5 (Mahābhūtānyahaṅkāro buddhiravyaktam eva ca। Indriyāṇi daśaikam ca pañca cendriyagocarāḥ॥) enumerates the twenty-four tattvas omitting puruṣa and mentioning the five elements in place of the five tanmātrās); XIII. 19–20 (prakṛtim puruṣam caiva viddhyanādī ubhāvapi। vikārāṁśca guṇāṁścaiva viddhi prakṛtisambhavān॥ Karyakāraṇa-kartṛtve hetuḥ prakṛtir-ucyate। Puruṣaḥ sukhduḥkhānām bhoktṛtve heturucyate॥); XIV. 5–9 (sattvam rajas tama iti guṇāḥ prakṛtisambhavāḥ &c.); VII. 4

(bhūmirāpoʻnalo vāyuḥ kham mano buddhireva ca । ahaṅkāra itīyam me bhinnā prakṛtir-aṣṭadhā ॥), VII. 13, II. 28. The Gītā in VII. 6 and 8 emphatically states that God is the source of the whole world, which ultimately is merged in Him. Herein the Gītā differs materially from the standard Sāṅkhya. The Gītā expressly mentions "Sāṅkhya-kṛtānta" [2253] (i. e. siddhānta) in XVIII. 13; what that means is that by that time Sāṅkhya tenets had assumed the form of a system but there is no express or definite reference to a work such as in the case of Veda or Vedānta (in XV. 15) or Brahmasūtra (in XIII. 4).

Vindhyavāsa or Vindhyavāsin (dweller on Vindhya mountain) is identified with Īśvarakṛṣṇa by Takakusu in B. E. F. E. O. for 1904 p. 48 and by Keith on pp. 73–79 in 'Sāṅkhya System.' His view about the non-existence of the ātivāhika body after a man's death is mentioned by Kumārila.[2254] Dr. B. Bhattacharya (in J. I. H. vol. VI. pp. 36–49) goes into the question of the identity of Vindhyavāsa with Īśvarakṛṣṇa. The present writer agrees with him but he does not agree with his further conclusion (p. 49) that Vindhyavāsa lived earlier than Īśvarakṛṣṇa whom he assigns to the period 330–390 A. D. The evidence is too meagre to prove this. In JRAS for 1905 pp. 47 ff. Vindhyavāsa is said by Takakusu to be a pupil of Vṛṣagaṇa and that according to Paramārtha Vṛṣagaṇa and Vindhyavāsa lived in the 10th century after Buddha's nirvāṇa. From Kamalaśīla (p. 22 of Tattva-saṅgraha) it appears that Rudrila was also a name of Vindhyavāsa.

The Abhinavabhāratī of Abhinavagupta distinguishes between the two; [2255] so it is possible that Vindyavāsa only revised the 2253. Vide p. 954 note 1545 above where the five Siddhāntas (Kṛtāntapañcaka) are Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Pañcarātra, Śaiva and Pāśupata.

---

2254. अन्तराभवदेहस्तु निषिद्धो विन्ध्यवासिना । तदस्तित्वे प्रमाणं हि न किंचिदवगम्यते ॥ श्लोकवार्तिक, आत्मवाद verse 62 p. 704 on which the com. Nyāyaratnākara explains: 'यद्यपि आतिवाहिकं नाम शरीरं पूर्वोत्तरदेहयोरन्तराले ज्ञानसन्तानसन्धारणार्थं कल्प्यते तदपि विन्ध्यवासिना निराकृतामित्यादि'. While criticizing the Sāṅkhya and its 'Satkāryavāda' कमलशील makes fun of the epithet Vindhyavāsin (which may also suggest 'a man who belongs to a wild tribe on the Vindhya mountain) applied to Rudrila 'यदेव दधि तत् क्षीरं यत्क्षीरं तद्दधीति च । वदता रुद्रिलेनैव कथापिता विन्ध्यवासिता ॥'.

2255. On नाट्यशास्त्र (22. 88–89, G. O. S. vol. III. p. 184 मनसश्चित्तिधो भाव:) it is said by Abhinavagupta 'कापिलदृशि तु विन्ध्यवासिनो मनस एव ईश्वरकृष्णादिमते मनःशब्देनात्र बुद्धिः ।'. मेधातिथि on मनु I. 55 remarks "कैश्चिद्विष्यते अस्त्यन्यदन्तराभवं शरीरं यत्येयमुत्क्रान्तिः । ... सांख्या अपि केचिदान्तराभवमिच्छन्ति विन्ध्यवासप्रभृतयः ।". Vide सां. का. 39–41 for the intermediate subtle body.

Sāṅkhya system after Īśvarakṛṣṇa. Bhojadeva in his Rājamārtaṇḍa [2256] on Yogasūtra IV. 22 (23 of most editions) 'dṛṣṭidṛśyoparaktam cittam sarvārtham' quotes a prose passage from Vindhyavāsin. As there is no evidence to show that Īśvarakṛṣṇa composed some work other than the Sāṅkhyakārikā, Vindhyavāsin must be treated as different from Īśvarakṛṣṇa according to Bhojadeva. The Yuktidīpikā several times mentions the views of Vindhyavāsin and indicates that he is different from the author of the S. Kārikā. Vide pp. 4, 108, 144, 148. This work says that the ācārya (author of S. Kārikā) did not enumerate jijñāsā [2257] and other constituents of the Śāstra but other ācāryas like Vindhyavāsa did mention them in other treatises. On pp. 144–145 this com. shows that Vindhyavāsin held that indriyas were vibhu (all-pervading), denied the existence of a subtle body (sūkṣma śarīra), while in S. Kārikā (40–41) Īśvarakṛṣṇa held that the indriyas were not vibhu and that there was a liṅga or sūkṣma body and Yuktidīpikā p. 144 says that Patañjali postulated a subtle body.

How the name Sāṅkhya came to be applied to a system of philosophy has to be considered. 'Saṅkhyā' means 'number', hence enumeration. As the Saṅkhya system enumerated twenty-five tattvas and as the Ṣaṣṭitantra of Pañcaśikha dealt with sixty topics, it is likely that the philosophy came to be called Sāṅkhya. The Śv. Up. I. 4 is full of numbers. [2258] Verse I. 5 of Śv. Up. employs the word pañca (five) seven times and also has the word 'pañcāśadbhedām', similar to 'śatārdhāram' in I. 4); vide VI. 3 also. In this sense Sāṅkhya means the 2256. स एव भोगोऽत्यन्तसंनिधानेन विवेकाग्रहणादभोक्तरपि पुरुषस्य भोग इति व्यपदिश्यते। अनेनैवाभिप्रायेण विन्ध्यवासिनोक्तं 'सत्त्वतप्यत्वमेव पुरुषतप्यत्वम्'। भोजदेव on यो. सू. IV. 22.

---

2257. एवं चेन्मन्यसे सन्ति जिज्ञासादयोऽवयवाः शास्त्रे तेषामनुपदेशे प्रयोजनं वक्तव्यम्। अनुष्माद्धेतोराचार्येण नोपदिश्यन्ते सन्ति च त इति। उच्यते प्रमाणान्तर्भावात्। ... तस्मान्तरेषु विन्ध्यवासिप्रभृतिभिराचार्यैरुपदिष्टाः प्रमाणं नस्ते आचार्या इत्यतश्चानुपदेशो जिज्ञासादीनामिति। युक्तिदीपिका. p. 4; विन्ध्यवासिनस्तु विभुत्वादिन्द्रियाणां बीजदेशे वृत्त्या जन्म तत्त्यागो मरणम्। तस्माच्चास्ति सूक्ष्मशरीरम्। तस्माच्चिविशेषः संसार इति पक्षः। ... तस्माच्च करणानां विभुत्वमनुपपन्नं। तस्मात्-चित्रं यथाश्रयमृते स्थाण्वादिभ्यो विना यथा छाया। तद्वद्विना विशेषैर्न तिष्ठति निराश्रयं लिङ्गम्॥ (कारिका ४१) pp. 144–145.

2258. तमेकनेमिं त्रिवृतं षोडशान्तं शतार्धारं विंशतिप्रत्यराभिः। अष्टकैः षड्भिर्विश्वरूपैकपाशं त्रिमार्गभेदं द्विनिमित्तैकमोहम्॥ श्वेता. उप. I. 4. शतार्धारं means 'having fifty spokes.' The सां. का. (46–47) refers to 50 bhedas of Buddhisarga. There are eight basic elements viz. Prakṛti, mahat, ahaṅkāra and five tanmātrās. 'सांख्यं संख्यात्मकत्वाच्च कपिलादिभिरुच्यते।' मत्स्य. III. 29. Vide also शान्ति० 294. 41.

philosophic system which postulates twentyfive tattvas, Prakṛti, Puruṣa and others. This is the sense in which the word is used once even in the Gītā (18. 13, Sāṅkhya kṛtānte proktāni &c). The Matsyapurāṇa also emphasizes this aspect of the Sāṅkhya system.

The word 'Saṅkhyā' has another sense as the Amarakośa states ('carcā saṅkhyā vicāraṇā) viz. 'rational examination' or 'discernment'; and the word Sāṅkhya may be derived from it in the sense of 'system of rational examination' and in the sense of 'philosopher' (masculine) according to 'tadadhīte tadveda' (Pāṇ. IV. 2. 59) meaning 'Sāṅkhyam veda'.[2259] The Bhāmatī explains the word in the second sense. Sāṅkhya in a general sense means tattvajñāna (knowledge of ultimate reality, including Vedānta) or a 'person who knows the ultimate reality.' The word Sāṅkhya is frequently used in the Bhagavadgītā in the sense of tattvajñāna (as in II. 39, V. 5, XIII. 24) and in the sense of a person knowing ultimate reality (in III. 3, V. 5).

Some comparatively early Sanskrit works that disclose tenets similar to the standard Sāṅkhya of the Kārikā may be briefly noticed here. The Buddhacarita of Aśvaghoṣa (in chap. XIII. 17ff) mentions a dialogue between Arāḍa and Gautama (the future Buddha) in which occur prakṛti, five elements, ahaṅkāra, buddhi, the indriyas, objects of sense, mind, kṣetrajña as Ātman and states that Kapila with his pupil was enlightened as to these; that nescience, actions and desires are the causes of saṁsāra; that avidyā has five aspects (verses 33–37) which are defined, speaks of brahmacarya, and mukti. Though the tattvas are mentioned here the rest of the doctrines bear very little resemblance to the official Sāṅkhya.

The Carakasaṁhitā[2260] (Jamnagar ed. 1949), Śārīrasthāna chap. I. (particularly verses 17, 36, 63–66) contains some doctrines similar to the Sāṅkhyakārikā scheme and verse 151 refers to Yogins and Sāṅkhyas and ultimately the liberated soul is said to become brahma. Therefore, it is more like the philosophy of Kaṭha and Śv. Upaniṣads.

2259. 'संख्या सम्यग्बुद्धिर्वैदिकी तया वर्तन्ते इति सांख्याः' भामती on वे. सू. भाष्य II. 1. 3.

2260. पुनश्च धातुभेदेन चातुर्विंशतिकः स्मृतः। मनो दशेन्द्रियाण्यर्थाः प्रकृतिश्चाष्टधातुकी॥ ... रजस्तमोभ्यां युक्तस्य संयोगोऽयमनन्तवान्। ताभ्यां निराकृताभ्यां तु सत्त्वबुद्ध्या निवर्तते॥ ... खादीनि बुद्धिरव्यक्तमहङ्कारस्तथाष्टमः। भूतप्रकृतिरुद्दिष्टा विकाराश्चैव षोडश। बुद्धीन्द्रियाणि पञ्चैव पञ्च कर्मेन्द्रियाणि च। समनस्काश्च पञ्चार्था विकारा इति संज्ञिताः॥ जायते बुद्धिरव्यक्ताद्बुद्ध्याहमिति मन्यते। परं खादीन्यहङ्कारादुत्पद्यन्ते यथाक्रमम्॥...अतःपरं ब्रह्मभूतो धृतात्मा नोपलभ्यते। निःसृतस्सर्वभावेभ्यश्चिह्नं यस्य न विद्यते। ज्ञानं ब्रह्मविदां चात्र नाज्ञस्तज्ज्ञातुमर्हति। चरक (शारीरस्थान chap. 1. verses 17, 36. 63–64, 66, 155.

The Suśrutasaṁhitā also (in Śārirasthāna, chap. I paragraphs 3, 4–6, 8–9) sets out the Sāṅkhya,[2261] is much closer to the standard system of the Kārikā than either the Buddhacarita or the Carakasaṁhitā as the quotations in the notes will show.

From p. 1352 and note 2208 above it would be seen that the tenet of pradhāna being the cause of the world was mentioned in their works by Manu and others. This will be briefly illustrated. Manu I. 15 in speaking of creation mentions mahān, the three guṇas, objects of sense, five senses. Manu I. 27 refers to the five tanmātrās of the five elements. In Manusmṛti XII. 24 sattva, rajas and tamas occur as the three guṇas, verses 26–29 define and illustrate these three and XII. 30-38 dilate upon the different effects of the three guṇas and the indications about these guṇas; XII. 40 provides that those who rest in sattva-guṇa become gods, those who are rājasa become men and those that abide in tamas become lower animals.[2262] Manu XII. 50 speaks of mahān and avyakta. Yāj. smṛti (III. 91–92) speaks of the five objects of sense, five jñānendriyas, five karmendriyas and mind (16 in all); these sixteen together with ahaṅkāra, buddhi and five elements, kṣetrajña and Īśvara are mentioned in Yāj. III. 177–178 and verses 179–180 set out the evolution of buddhi from avyakta, of ahaṅkāra from buddhi, of tanmātrās from ahaṅkāra, the five guṇas (śabda, sparśa &c.) of the five elements and verse 182 speaks of the three guṇas.

2261. सर्वभूतानां कारणमकारणं सत्त्वरजस्तमोलक्षणमहदाद्यमखिलस्य जगतः सम्भवहेतुरव्यक्तं नाम। तदेकं बहूनां क्षेत्रज्ञानामधिष्ठानं सलुब्ध इवौदकानां भावानाम्। सुश्रुत० I. 3; तस्मादव्यक्तान्महानुत्पद्यते तल्लिङ्ग एव तल्लिङ्गाच्च महतस्तल्लक्षण एवाहङ्कार उत्पद्यते स त्रिविधो वैकारिकस्तैजसो भूतादिरिति। सुश्रुत I. 4; तत्र बुद्धीन्द्रियाणां शब्दादयो विषयाः कर्मेन्द्रियाणां वचनादानानन्दविसर्गविहरणानि। सुश्रुत I. 5; अव्यक्तं महानहङ्कारः पञ्च तन्मात्राणि चेत्यष्टौ प्रकृतयः, शेषाः षोडश विकाराः I. 6; तत्र सर्व एवाचेतन एष वर्गः, पुरुषः पञ्चविंशतितमः कार्यकारणसंयुक्तश्चेतयिता भवति। सत्यप्यचैतन्ये प्रधानस्य पुरुषकैवल्यार्थं प्रवृत्तिमुपदिशन्ति क्षीरादिभ्यश्च हेतूदाहरन्ति। I. 8; compare with this last सां. कारिका 57 'वत्सविवृद्धिनिमित्तं क्षीरस्य यथा प्रवृत्तिरज्ञस्य। पुरुषविमोक्षनिमित्तं तथा प्रवृत्तिः प्रधानस्य॥'.

2262. बुद्धेरुत्पत्तिरव्यक्तात्ततोऽहङ्कारसम्भवः। तन्मात्रादीन्यहङ्कारादेकोत्तरगुणानि च॥ याज्ञ. III. 179; compare सत्त्वं ज्ञानं तमोऽज्ञानं रागद्वेषौ रजः स्मृतम्। मनु XII. 26 with सां. का. 13 सत्त्वं लघु q. above p. 1357 and गीता 14. 6–8, यो. III. 137–140.

On p. 1352 and in note 2208 above occurs the statement of Śaṅkarācārya that Devala, a Sūtrakāra on Dharma, accepted Sāṅkhya doctrines. This will be briefly indicated here. Aparārka on Yāj. III. 109 quotes a very long passage[2263] from Devala, which after stating that there are two goals of human life (puruṣārtha) viz. abhyudaya and niḥśreyasa and that the latter comprises Sāṅkhya and Yoga, defines Sāṅkhya as the knowledge of twenty-five tattvas, and yoga as the fixing of the mind on the desired goal after turning it away from objects of sense, and

---

2263. On the word योगशास्त्रं in याज्ञ. III. 109 अपरार्क quotes a long passage (all in prose except one verse) from Devala, almost the whole of which is set out here. देवमानुषयोर्द्विविधः पुरुषार्थः, अभ्युदयो निःश्रेयसमिति। तयोरभ्युदयः पूर्वोक्तः। द्विविधं निःश्रेयसं सांख्ययोगाविति। पञ्चविंशतितत्त्वज्ञानं सांख्यम्। विषयेभ्यो निवर्त्याभिप्रेतेऽर्थे मनसोऽवस्थापनं योगः। उभयत्रापवर्गः फलम्। जन्ममरणदुःखयोरत्यन्ताभावोऽपवर्गः। एतौ सांख्ययोगौ चाधिकृत्य यैर्युक्तित. समयतश्च पूर्वमणीतानि विशालानि गम्भीराणि तन्त्राणीह संक्षिप्योद्देशतो वक्ष्यन्ते। तत्र सांख्यानामेका मूलप्रकृतिः। सप्त प्रकृतिविकृतयः। पञ्च तन्मात्राणि षोडश विकाराः पञ्च पञ्चेन्द्रियाणि। अर्थाश्च (अर्थाश्च?) पञ्चभूतविशेषाः। त्रयोदश करणानि त्रीण्यन्तःकरणानि। चतस्रश्चतस्रो मातृजाः पितृजाश्च कोशाः। पञ्च वायुविशेषाः। त्रयो गुणाः। त्रिविधो बन्धः। त्रयो बन्धनहेतवः। द्वौ बन्धरागौ। त्रीणि प्रमाणानि। त्रिविधं दुःखम्। चतुर्विधः प्रत्ययसर्गः। तथा द्विविधः सर्गः। तथा विपर्ययः पञ्चविधः। अशक्तिरष्टाविंशतिधा तुष्टिर्नवविधा। सिद्धिरष्टविधेति प्रत्ययभेदाः पञ्चाशत्।

अस्तित्वमेकत्वमर्थार्थवत्त्वं परार्थमन्यत्वमथो निवृत्तिः।
योगो वियोगो बहवः पुमांसः स्थितिः शरीरस्य च शेषवृत्तिः॥

इति दशमूलिकार्थाः। अथ मूलप्रकृतिरव्यक्ता (क्तं?) महानहङ्कारः पञ्च तन्मात्राणीति प्रकृतिविकृतयः। शब्दतन्मात्रं स्पर्श०, रस०, रूप०, गन्धतन्मात्रमिति तन्मात्राणि। द्विविधानीन्द्रियाणि। भूतविशेषाश्च विकाराः। चक्षुःश्रोत्रघ्राणजिह्वात्वचो बुद्धीन्द्रियाणि। रूपशब्दगन्धरसस्पर्शास्तेषामर्थाः। वाक्पाणिपादपायूपस्थाः कर्मेन्द्रियाणि:भाषणं क्रिया गमनमुत्सर्ग आनन्द एषां कर्माणि। वाय्वग्न्यब्वाकाशपृथिव्यो भूतविशेषाः। दशेन्द्रियाणि बुद्ध्यहंकारमनांसि च करणानि। तेषु मनोबुद्ध्यहङ्काराश्चान्तःकरणानि। दश बहिःकरणानीन्द्रियाणि च। गुणसाम्यलक्षणमव्यक्तं प्रधानं प्रकृतिर्विधानमित्यनर्थान्तरम्। अध्यवसायलक्षणो महान् बुद्धिर्मतिरुपलब्धिरित्यनर्थान्तरम्। अभिमानलक्षणोऽहङ्कारो वैकारिकोऽभिमान इत्यनर्थान्तरम्। न पूर्वपूर्विका प्रकृतिः। प्रकृतेर्महानुत्पद्यते ततोऽहङ्कारः। अहङ्कारात्तन्मात्राण्येन्द्रियाणि च। तन्मात्रेभ्यो विशेषा इत्युत्पत्तिक्रमः। यो यस्मादुत्पद्यते स तस्मिंल्लीयत इति वाप्ययं क्रमः (चाप्ययक्रमः)। अपरार्क pp. 986–988 on या III. 109. For अभ्युदय and निःश्रेयस vide p. 1037 n. 1671 above. Compare pp. 1358–59 note 2218 (verse प्रधानास्तित्वमेकत्वं etc.) with the verse अस्तित्वमेकत्व ... शेषवृत्तिः of this passage. On p. 100 of Pandit Aiyaswami's edition the verse अस्तित्व ... शरीरस्य विशेषवृत्तिः is restored from Chinese. The तत्त्वसमास-सूत्रवृत्ति p. 135 (Chow S.S.) reads 'स्यत्वमकर्तृता च'. On p. 165 of कृत्यकल्पतरु (मोक्षकाण्ड) the portion देवमनुष्ययोः द्विविधः पुरुषार्थः ... वर्गः फलम् is again quoted from देवल; on p. 124 of the same work देवल in prose is again quoted for three bandhas (Prakṛitibandha, Vaikārikabandha and Dakṣiṇābandha) and for three bandhanahetus. On the same page three verses and a half are quoted from Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa for the three bandhas (Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa, Venk. Edition IV. 3. 37–40).

states that the fruit of both is apavarga which means the total disappearance of the sufferings of birth and death. The quotation then proceeds to say that there are extensive and profound tantras concerning both Sāṅkhya and Yoga composed by former (sages) relying on ratiocination and tradition and these will be summarized and their subjects set out. As to the Sāṅkhyas there are these: mūlaprakṛti, seven categories that are both prakṛtis and vikṛtis, five tanmātrās, sixteen vikāras (products); indriyas are five (jñānedriyas) and five (karmendriyas), five objects of sense, five elements; thirteen karaṇas, three being antaḥkaraṇas; viparyaya of five kinds, aśakti of 28 kinds; tuṣṭi of nine kinds, siddhis of eight kinds; in this way there are 50 pratyayabhedas, there are ten basic matters, viz. astitva (existence of prakṛti &c). After this there is again an enumeration of prakṛti, avyakta, mahān, ahaṅkāra, five tanmātrās &c.

It would be noticed that the quotation from Devala in Aparārka contains two parts, the first stopping at the words 'iti daśa mūlikārthāḥ' and the 2nd containing the rest. It appears that the two parts cover mostly the same ground and it is probable that the two parts are summaries of two different works on Sāṅkhya.

Another important digest of the first quarter of the 12th century A. D. namely the Kṛtyakalpataru of Lakṣmīdhara in its Mokṣakāṇḍa pp. 100–101 also quotes from Devala's Dharmasūtra a prose passage which agrees word for word with a portion of the passage quoted above from Aparārka viz. from the words 'tatra sāṅkhyānām ekā mūlaprakṛtiḥ' up to 'trīṇyantaḥkaraṇāni'. Then the portion from 'catasraś-catasro' to 'iti daśa mūlikārthāḥ' is dropped by the Kalpataru and then it has the whole of the passage from 'atha mūlaprakṛtiravyaktam' up to 'abhimāna ityanarthāntaram',[2264] after which it adds a short passage not found in Aparārka (which is quoted below). It has the passage 'prakṛter mahānutpadyate' up to 'ityutpattikramaḥ'.

Both Aparārka and Kṛtyakalpataru (Mokṣakāṇḍa) quote verses from Yama on the Sāṅkhya system, which are cited in 2264. After अभिमान इत्यनर्थान्तरम् occurring in note 2263 the कृत्यकल्पतरु reads: सत्तामात्रलक्षणानि तन्मात्राणि स्वानुग्रहलक्षणानीन्द्रियाण्यक्षाणीन्द्रियाण्युच्यन्ते। सङ्कल्पलक्षणं मनः। इन्द्रियार्थलक्षणा विषयविशेषा भूतानीत्यनर्थान्तरम्। सर्वपूर्विका प्रकृतिः। In some cases the editor of the Mokṣakāṇḍa has not correctly separated the clauses. On p. 100 he should have printed 'गन्धतन्मात्रमिति तन्मात्राणि। द्विविधानीन्द्रियाणि। मनो भूतविशेषाश्च विकाराः। ... दश बहिःकरणानीन्द्रियाणि च।'.

the note below. It will be noticed that after enumerating the twenty-five tattvas Yama adds Puruṣottama as the 26th tattva.[2265]

Purāṇas contain lengthy disquisitions on the Sāṅkhya doctrines. For example, the Viṣṇupurāṇa I. 2. 19–23, 25–62, VI. 4. 13-15, 17, 32-40 (in all about 66 verses) are full of Sāṅkhya doctrines and are all quoted in the Kṛtyakalpataru (Mokṣakāṇḍa pp. 102–108). But that Purāṇa emphasizes that Paramātman (called Viṣṇu) is the support of all tattvas. In Viṣṇupurāṇa I. 2. 22–23 it is asserted[2266] that brahmavādins who are proficient in Vedic doctrines recite (a verse) that expounds pradhāna, (and state) 'there was then (before creation) neither day nor night, no sky nor earth, neither darkness nor light, there was only one male brahma that was evolved as pradhāna and that could not be apprehended by the ear (and other indriyas) or by buddhi. Verses 39–40 (of Viṣṇupurāṇa VI. 4) assert that both[2267] prakṛti and puruṣa become dissolved in the Highest Self who is called Viṣṇu in Vedas and Vedāntas (Upaniṣads).

Many other Purāṇas devote a great deal of space to the elucidation of Sāṅkhya doctrines and terminology. Considerations of space preclude any statement beyond references to chapters and verses of some Purāṇas and the citation of a few striking or informative verses. Matsya (3. 14–29) begins with prakṛti, guṇas and all the twenty-five tattvas, remarks that the three gods, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Maheśvara, though one, arose from the guṇas being put into activity and winds up by saying that Sāṅkhya is full of enumerations and was proclaimed by Kapila and others.[2268] The Brahmapurāṇa (1. 33–35, 33. 3–4, 242, 67–70, 76–85) recounts the tattvas from prakṛti to kṣetrajña and remarks at the end that the soul becomes kevala (free from all contacts and liberated) when he realizes the truth about himself. The Padmapurāṇa in several places dilates upon the tattvas of the Sāṅkhya such as in Pātālakhaṇḍa 85. 11–18, Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa, chap. 2. 88–103, chap. 15. 177–187, which closely follow the S. Kārikā verses. The Kūrmapurāṇa (I. 4. 13–35) states that Maheśvara enters prakṛti and puruṣa, activates them and sets out Sāṅkhya ideas and in II. 7. 21–26 it refers to the twenty-four tattvas and the state of equilibrium (sāmyāvasthā). The Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa in chap. 42. 32–62 treats of creation with Sāṅkhya terminology. Three verses of the Brahmāṇḍa IV. 3. 37–46 referring to the threefold bondage (bandha) are quoted by the Kṛtyakalpataru (mokṣa) p. 124. Similarly, Brahmāṇḍa (II. 32. 71–76) employ the Sāṅkhya terminology of mahat, ahaṅkara &c. Prof. Das Gupta in 'Indian Philosophy' vol. IV. pp. 24–48 deals at some length with Kapila's philosophy in the Bhāgavatapurāṇa and Sri Siddhesvara Bhattacharya contributes a paper 'a critique of the Bhāgavata' in JBRS for 1950 pp. 9–50 in which he severely criticizes Prof. Das Gupta.

2265. मनो बुद्धिरहङ्कारः खानिलाग्निजलानि भूः। एताः प्रकृतयस्त्वष्टौ विकाराः षोडशापरे॥ श्रोत्राक्षिरसनघ्राणत्वचः सङ्कल्प एव च। शब्दरूपरसस्पर्शगन्धवाक्पाणिपायवः। पादोपस्थ इति ते विकाराः षोडश स्मृताः॥ चतुर्विंशकमित्येतज्ज्ञानमाहुर्मनीषिणः। पञ्चविंशकमव्यक्तं पञ्चविंशः पुरुषोत्तमः। एतज्ज्ञात्वा तु मुच्यन्ते यतयः शान्तबुद्धयः। पञ्चविंशतितत्त्वज्ञो यत्र तत्राश्रमे रतः। प्रकृतिज्ञो विकारज्ञो याति विष्णोः परं पदम्॥ यम q. by अपरार्क p. 988 and कृत्यकल्पतरु (मोक्षकाण्ड) pp. 101–102, which combines the first and 4th quarters of the last verse and reads पञ्चविंशतितत्त्वज्ञो याति विष्णोः परं पदम्. In the commentary reconstructed from the Chinese translation by Paramārtha (edited by Pandit Aiyaswami) occurs the verse पञ्चविंशतितत्त्वज्ञो यत्र तत्राश्रमे वसेत्। जटी मुण्डी शिखी वापि मुच्यते नात्र संशयः॥' (on p. 5 and again on p. 55 on Kārikā 37). This verse occurs in गौडपाद's भाष्य on कारिका one. भावागणेश (1550–1600 A. D.) in तत्त्वयाथार्थ्यदीपन (Chow. S. S.) ascribes this last verse to पञ्चशिख.

2266. वेदवादविदो विद्वत्क्षियता ब्रह्मवादिनः। पठन्ति चैवमेवार्थं प्रधानप्रतिपादकम्॥ नाहो न रात्रिर्न नभो न भूमिर्नासीत्तमो ज्योतिरभूच्च नान्यत्। श्रोत्रादिबुद्ध्याह्यपलभ्यमेकं प्राधानिकं ब्रह्म पुमांस्तदासीत्॥ ... ततस्तु तत्परं ब्रह्म परमात्मा जगन्मयः। ... प्रधानपुरुषौ चापि प्रविश्य स्वेच्छया हरिः। क्षोभयामास संप्राप्ते सर्गकाले व्ययाव्ययौ॥ विष्णुपुराण I. 2. 22–23, 28–29 quoted by कृत्यकल्पतरु (मोक्षकाण्ड, p. 103). The first two verses have in view the famous Ṛgveda hymn X. 129 (verses 1–2).

2267. प्रकृतिर्या मया ख्याता व्यक्ताव्यक्तस्वरूपिणी। पुरुषश्चाप्युभावेतौ लीयेते परमात्मनि। परमात्मा च सर्वेषामाधारः परमेश्वरः। विष्णुनाम्ना स वेदेषु वेदान्तेषु च गीयते॥ विष्णुपु० VI. 4. 39-40, q. by कृत्यकल्प० (on मोक्ष p. 108).

2268. सत्त्वं रजस्तमश्चैव गुणत्रयमुदाहृतम्। साम्यावस्थितिरेतेषां प्रकृतिः परिकीर्तिता॥ केचित्प्रधानमित्याहुरव्यक्तमपरे जनाः। एतदेव प्रजासृष्टिं करोति विकरोति च॥ गुणेभ्यः क्षोभ्यमाणेभ्यस्त्रयो देवा विजज्ञिरे। एका मूर्तिस्त्रयो भागा ब्रह्मविष्णुमहेश्वराः। ... सांख्यं कपिलादिभिरुच्यते। मत्स्य 3.14-16,29. Vide वैकारिकस्तैजसश्च भूतादिश्चैव तामसः। त्रिविधोयमहङ्कारो महत्तत्त्वादजायत। भूतेन्द्रियाणां पञ्चानां तथा कर्मेन्द्रियैः सह॥ पद्म, सृष्टिखण्ड chap. 2. 89–90; compare सां. का. 24–25. आकाशवायुतेजांसि सलिलं पृथिवी तथा। शब्दादिभिर्गुणैर्वीर युक्तानीत्युत्तरोत्तरैः। शान्ता घोराश्च मूढाश्च विशेषास्तेन ते स्मृताः। ibid, chap. 2. 99–100; the half verse शान्ता...स्मृताः occurs in मार्कण्डेयपु. (Venk. ed.) 42 57 and कूर्म I. 4. 33; compare सां. का. 38 तन्मात्राण्यविशेषास्तेभ्यो भूतानि पञ्च पञ्चभ्यः। एते स्मृता विशेषाः शान्ता घोराश्च मूढाश्च॥; vide पद्म, सृष्टिखण्ड 15. 177–179 चतुर्विंशतितत्त्वानि प्रधानादीनि संख्यया। अचेतनानि भोग्यानि पुरुषः पञ्चविंशकः। चेतनः पुरुषो भोक्ता न कर्ता तस्य कर्मणः। आत्मा नित्योऽव्ययश्चैव अधिष्ठाता प्रयोजकः।; पातालखण्ड 85. 11–12 are the same with slight variation; compare सां. का. 17 and 19 'पुरुषोस्ति भोक्तृभावात्कैवल्यार्थं प्रवृत्तेश्च॥ तस्माच्च विपर्यासात् सिद्धं साक्षित्वमस्य पुरुषस्य। कैवल्यं माध्यस्थ्यं द्रष्टृत्वमकर्तृभावश्च॥'.

Vide Bhāgavatapurāṇa III. 26. The Varāhapurāṇa (B. I. ed. of 1893) narrates the story of king Aśvaśiras to whom Kapila and Jaigīṣavya (the prince of Yogins) came after he had performed the avabhṛtha bath and was surrounded by brāhmaṇas and who asked them how the highest Nārāyaṇa was to be worshipped, when the two told him that they were themselves Nārāyaṇa. On his doubting these words of theirs Kapila assumed the form of Viṣṇu and Jaigīṣavya of Garuḍa and after other similar wonders, the king requested that his doubt whether Mokṣa is attained by him who follows karmamārga or jñānamārga be resolved. The same Purāṇa in chap. 25 (verses 1–5) declares that avyakta, the first tattva, made up of three (guṇas) arose from the highest Puruṣa, from the union of the two ahaṅkāra was produced also called mahat, that Puruṣa is named Viṣṇu or Śiva while avyakta is called Umā, Devī or Śrī and Guha (Kārtikeya) is ahaṅkāra. The Bhāgavatapurāṇa (I. 3. 10) mentions Kapila as the fifth avatāra of Viṣṇu (vide above p. 1373) and (in X. 8. 37–38) states that when Yaśodā asked the child Kṛṣṇa to open his mouth she saw inside the mouth the whole world, the five elements, the indriyas, mind, mātrās and the three guṇas. Even great poets like Kālidāsa and Bāṇa are fond of utilising Sāṅkhya doctrines and terminology. For example, vide Kumārasambhava II. 4 (Guṇatrayavibhāgāya &c.), Raghuvaṁśa X. 38 (aṅginām tamasevobhau guṇau prathamamadhyamau), Raghuvaṁśa VIII. 21 (Raghurapyajayad-guṇa-trayam prakṛtistham &c.); Kādambarī, very first verse (rajojuṣe janmani...triguṇātmane namaḥ).

Even the Tantras were influenced by the Sāṅkhya system as the Śāradātilaka shows (vide above p. 1061).

It is not a vain boast when the Śāntiparva[2269] asserts that whatever knowledge is found in the Vedas, in Sāṅkhya and Yoga, in the various Purāṇas, in the extensive itihāsas, in the arthaśāstra and whatever knowledge exists in the world, all that is derived from the Sāṅkhya. For a dispassionate appraisal of the Sāṅkhya theory of evolution and its stages, vide Dr. Behanan's work on 'Yoga' chap. IV. pp. 63–91.

2269. ज्ञानं महत्त्वद्धि महत्सु राजन् वेदेषु सांख्येषु तथैव योगे। यच्चापि दृष्टं विविधं पुराणं (णे?) सांख्यागतं तच्चिखिलं नरेन्द्र॥ यच्चेतिहासेषु महत्सु दृष्टं यच्चार्थशास्त्रे उपनिषद्-जुष्टे। ज्ञानं च लोके यदिहास्ति किंचित्सांख्यागतं तच्च महन्महात्मन्॥ शान्ति 290. 103–104 (= 301. 108–109 of Chitrashala edition).

CHAPTER XXXII

Yoga and Dharmaśāstra

Sāṅkhya and Yoga often go together in the Upaniṣads as well as in the Mahābhārata, the Bhagavadgītā and the Purāṇas and their relationship to one another is the same in all these. In Śv. Up. VI. 13, Vanaparva 2. 15, Śāntiparva[2270] 228. 28, 289. 1, 306. 65, 308. 25, 326. 100, 336. 69, Anuśāsana 14. 323, Bhagavadgītā V. 4–5, Padma purāṇa (Pātālakhaṇḍa, 85. 11 ff), the two are mentioned together.

Though Sāṅkhya greatly influenced all works dealing with the evolution of the world in its various aspects, it did not enjoy that great esteem among all sorts of people in India that the Yoga system enjoyed and still enjoys. The word yoga is derived from the root 'yuj' to join or to unite (of rudhādi class). The germs of yoga can be traced back to the Ṛgveda. Ṛgveda V. 81. 1 (a verse in praise of Savitṛ) reads 'wise men, priests and sacrificers concentrate their minds and join their prayers to the wise, the great (Savitṛ), who knows all (prayers)'. Another Vedic[2271] verse also speaks of concentrating the mind. The word 'yoga' occurs frequently in the Ṛgveda in several shades of meaning. Sāyaṇa in many passages takes 'yoga' to mean 'acquiring what is not already possessed' (as in Ṛg. I. 5. 3). In Ṛg. I. 18. 7 God Sadasaspati (Agni) is said to pervade the prayers (or thoughts) of sacrificers. In Ṛg. I. 34. 9 it means 'yoking' (kadā yogo vājino rāsabhasya yena yajñam nāsatyopayāthaḥ'. The word 'yoga' is often used with the word kṣema (separately as in Ṛg. VII. 54. 3, VII. 86. 8) or as a compound

---

2270. पञ्चविंशतितत्त्वानि तुल्यान्युभयतः समम्। योगे सांख्येपि च तथा विशेषांस्तत्र मे शृणु॥ शान्ति 228. 28 (=236. 29 Ch. ed.)

2271. युंजते मन उत युंजते धियो विप्रा विप्रस्य बृहतो विपश्चितः। वि होत्रा दधे वयुनाविदेक इन्मही देवस्य सवितुः परिष्टुतिः॥ ऋ. V. 81. 1 = तै. सं. I. 2. 13. 1, काठकसंहिता II. 51 and XV. 36, वाज. सं. 11. 4, श्वे. उप. II. 4. Ṛg. I. 18. 7 is यस्माद्दृते न सिध्यति यज्ञो विपश्चितश्चन। स धीनां योगमिन्वति॥; युञ्जानः प्रथमं मनस्तत्त्वाय सविता धियः। अग्नेर्ज्योतिर्निश्चाय्य पृथिव्या अध्याभरत्। तै. सं. IV. 1. 1. 1, वाज. सं. XI. 1 and श्वे. उप. II. 1

(as in Rg. X. 166. 5 'Yogakṣemam va ādāyāham bhūyāsamuttamaḥ'). There is a great distance or gap between the meaning of the word yoga in the Ṛgveda (even in the verses about concentrating the mind) and its meaning in some of the Upaniṣads and in classical Sanskrit. In Rg. X. 136. 2-3 there is mention[2272] of munis, sons of Vātaraśana, who wore dirty and tawny garments and who say in verse 3 'we being in ecstasy (or wild bliss) owing to our way of life as munis resort to winds; mortals! you look on our bodies only'. This shows that even in those ancient times, some people practised tapas, did not care what clothes they wore and thought they (i. e. their souls) would be merged in the wind (that is, the souls are formless and could not be seen). In Rg. VIII. 17. 14 Indra is said to be a friend of munis and muni is also a friend of every god in Ṛg. X. 136. 4. But as to yatis the position was rather different. The word yati occurs several times in the Ṛgveda but in most cases that word has no certain connection with the meaning of 'ascetic'. In Ṛg. VIII. 3. 9 'by which (says brahmā priest) wealth was given to Bhṛgu from the yatis and by which you helped (or protected) Praskaṇva'; here Indra seems to be opposed to yatis. In Ṛg. VIII. 6. 18 the poet says 'O valiant Indra! listen to my prayer alone from among the yatis and Bhṛgus that praised thee'. Here Sāyaṇa explains 'yatayaḥ' as 'Aṅgirasaḥ'. In any case 'yatis' are here shown to be devotees of Indra. But in other Saṁhitās it is said that Indra threw 'yatis' to the wolves or hyenas.[2273] Later on, however, the meaning of yati seems to have changed. In these Saṁhitā passages 'yatis' appear to be persons hostile or alien to the Vedic rites, but what they did to deserve slaughter by Indra is not clear. In Atharvaveda II. 5. 3 Indra is said to have killed Vṛtra as he did in the case of yatis. Some of the Upaniṣads, however, show that 'yati' was a person who had given up worldly affairs, practised yoga and endeavoured after the knowledge of Ātman and realized Brahma; vide Muṇḍaka Up. III. 1. 5 (yam paśyanti yatayaḥ kṣiṇadoṣāḥ) and III. 2. 6 (sannyāsayogād-yatayaḥ śuddhasattvāḥ). Some like Haüer in 'Die Anfrange der Yoga-praxis', 1922 pp. 11 ff) hold that the Vrātyas of Atharvaveda XV were ecstatics of the kṣatriya class and forerunners of Yogins.

---

2272. मुनयो वातरशनाः पिशङ्गा वसते मला। वातस्यानु ध्राजिं यन्ति यद्देवासो अविक्षत॥ उन्मदिता मौनेयेन वातां आ तस्थिमा वयम्। शरीरेदस्माक यूयं मर्तासो अभि पश्यथ॥ ऋ. X. 136. 2-3. According to the सर्वानुक्रमणी the sages of seven verses of the hymn are जूतिर्वातजूतिर्विमजूतिर्वृषाणकः। करिक्रत एतश ऋष्यशृङ्गश्चैकर्चाः. मौनेय is derived from मुनि and means मुनेर्भावः. The word 'Keśin' (having hair, hairy, by metaphor 'possessing rays' applied to the Sun or Fire) occurs five times in the first verse of this hymn and two times more in the other verses. 'Muni' appears thrice in this hymn and once more in 'mauneya'. Dr. Hauer in 'Der yoga als Hailweg' (1932) remarks (on p. 13) that the word 'muni' is probably related to Greek 'mantis' (prophet).

2273. इन्द्रो यतीन् सालावृकेभ्यः प्रायच्छत् तान् दक्षिणत उत्तरवेद्या आवृत्। तै. सं. VI. 2.7.5; vide also तै. सं. II. 4.9.2 'यतीनामद्यमानानां शीर्षाणि परापतन् ते अर्चूरा अभवन्॥'. Vide also काठकसंहिता VIII.5 and XI.10 and ऐ. ब्रा. 35.2. In कौषीतकyप. III, 1 (Indra says) 'त्रिशीर्षाणं त्वाष्ट्रमहनम्। अवर्तुक्षान् यतीन् सालावृकेभ्यः प्रायच्छम्।'.

The word 'yoga' occurs in some of the Upaniṣads in the same sense in which it is employed in the Yogasūtra. In Kaṭha Up. II. 12, it is said[2274] 'the wise man reflecting on God by means of yoga, by concentrating the mind on the inner spirit becomes free from joy and grief' (adhyātmayogādhigamena). The same Upaniṣad says that the state described in VI. 11 is regarded as Yoga because therein the organs (and the mind and buddhi) are firmly held under control. In Kaṭha Up. VI. 18 it is said that Naciketas having understood the vidyā and the whole procedure of Yoga propounded by Yama attained (the realization of) brahma. The word 'Yoga' occurs in the Tai. Up. II. 4 (in speaking about vijñanamaya ātman, yoga is said to be its ātman, the exact sense being doubtful), and in the Śv. Up. II. 11 and VI. 13. Praśna (5. 5-6) speaks of the three mātrās (a, u, m) of Om. In Śv. Up. 1. 3 occurs the word 'dhyānayoga'. The Śv. Up. (II. 8-13) refers to āsana and prāṇāyāma and sets out the first signs of the successful practice of Yoga. The Chān. Up. VIII. 15 appears to refer to pratyāhāra (though the technical word is not used) in 'ātmani sarvendriyāṇi pratiṣṭhāpya' (having brought all organs of sense to rest in the ātman).' The Bṛ. Up. (I. 5. 23) appears to refer to prāṇāyāma in 'he should observe the one vow, viz. inhalation and exhalation (tasmād-ekameva vratam caret prāṇyāc-caiva apānyācca).

2274. तां योगमिति मन्यन्ते स्थिरामिन्द्रियधारणाम्। कठ० VI.11; मृत्युप्रोक्तां नचिकेतोऽथ लब्ध्वा विद्यामेतां योगविधिं च कृत्स्नम्। ब्रह्मप्राप्तो विरजोऽभूद्विमृत्युरन्योऽप्येवं यो विदध्यात्ममेव॥ कठ. VI. 18, The important words in this last are कृत्स्नं योगविधिम्. The idea appears to be that yoga had been fully developed at the time of the Kaṭha Up. but that Upaniṣad did not set it out in detail. It may be further noted that the words एतां विद्यां refer to Brahmavidyā and that yoga-vidhi is separately mentioned (probably as a means to brahma-realization).

The Vedāntasūtra (II. 1. 3 'etena yogaḥ pratyuktaḥ) states that Yoga is refuted by the reasoning adopted for the refutation of the Sāṅkhya system. The position of Śaṅkarācārya as to both Sāṅkhya and Yoga has been stated above (pp. 1352 and 1361 n. 2208 and 2221). He points out in the pūrvapakṣa that Veda [2275] prescribes Yoga as a means of achieving correct knowledge and refers to Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 5. He further points out that in the Śv. Up. Yoga is expounded in great detail after first mentioning the proper posture (for the practice of Yoga) in the words 'having held the body straight but raised high in three places viz. chest, neck and head' (Śv. Up. II, 8). From the words of Śaṅkarācārya that in Yogaśāstra also Yoga is held to be a means of the realisation of right knowledge, it follows that he had a yogaśāstra before him in which occurred the words 'atha...yogaḥ,' but as he does not employ the word Yogasūtra he probably does not refer to a sūtra work. If a conjecture may be hazarded, it is possible that the Yogaśāstra meant by Śaṅkara is a work like the Yogaśāstra ascribed to Yājñavalkya in Yāj. Smṛti III. 110 (Yogaśāstram ca mat-proktam &c.). Śaṅkarācārya admits on V. S. II. 1. 3 that a part of the yoga is acceptable to him but other parts conflict with the Veda. Muṇḍaka Up. (II 2. 6) enjoins samādhi in the words 'om-iti dhyāyatha ātmānam' as Śaṅkarācārya states on V. S. II. 3. 39 (samādhyabhāvāc-ca). In the Upaniṣads 'Muni' and 'Yati' have come to denote [2276] the same meaning, e g. Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 22 states 'one becomes muni by realizing this very self,' 2275. सम्यग्दर्शनाभ्युपायो हि योगो वेदे विहितः श्रोतव्यो मन्तव्यो निदिध्यासितव्यः-इति। 'त्र्युन्नतं स्थाप्य समं शरीरम्' इत्यादिना चासनादिकल्पनापुरःसरं बहुप्रपञ्चं योगविधानं श्वेताश्वतरोपनिषदि दृश्यते। ... योगशास्त्रेऽपि 'अथ तत्त्वदर्शनोपायो योगः' इति सम्यग्दर्शनाभ्युपायत्वेनैव योगोऽङ्गीक्रियते। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 3. The words अथ...योगः imply that it is a quotation. Compare 'समं कायशिरोग्रीवं धारयन्नचलं स्थिरः।' गीता VI. 13.

2276. एतमेव विदित्वा मुनिर्भवति। एतमेव प्रव्राजिनो लोकमिच्छन्तः प्रव्रजन्ति। बृह. उप. IV. 4. 22; vide कठ. IV. 15 'यथोदकं...एवं मुनेर्विजानत आत्मा भवति गौतम।'. The कौषीतकि-उप. II. 15 has परिव्रजेत्. The word परिव्राजक, however, does not occur in the other Upaniṣads. In पाणिनि's day परिव्राजक was well-known as the sūtra 'मस्कर-मस्करिणौ वेणुपरिव्राजकयोः' VI. 1. 154 shows which states that मस्कर means bamboo (staff) and मस्करिन् means परिव्राजक. The महाभाष्य comments that मस्करिन् is not so called because he carries a bamboo staff but because he advises people not to do actions for securing desired objects and that for people quiescence is better 'मा कृत कर्माणि मा कृत कर्माणि शान्तिर्वः श्रेयसीत्याहातो मस्करी परिव्राजकः.'

while the Muṇḍaka (III. 1. 5)[2277] states 'this self is to be attained by Truth, by tapas, by right knowledge and by sexual purity at all times: that self resides inside the body (like a light), is pure, whom spotless ascetics realize.' The Kaṭhopaniṣad (III. 13) provides that the wise man should restrain speech in mind (speech and mind, as the text stands), he should keep it within the self which is knowledge, he should keep down knowledge within the self that is: the great, and he, should keep that (the great) within the self which is quiet. The Upaniṣads thus not only employ the word 'Yoga' but provide some of the stages of yoga and its technique for realizing the Supreme Spirit. About twenty Yoga Upaniṣads are published at Adyar, edited by A. Mahadev Sastri (1920), but as their chronology is most uncertain and as most of them appear to the present writer to be later than the Mahābhārata, Manu and probably the Yogasūtra, they are passed over here and are referred to in this work sparingly.[2278]

Pāṇini provides for the formation of the words yama and niyama (two aṅgas) of Yoga and the word 'Yogin' appears to have been derived by him from the root 'yuj' with the affix 'ghinuṇ' (i. e. in) in the sense of tācchīlya (being habituated to) according to Pāṇ. III. 2. 142 (which is a very long sūtra).[2279]

2277. कामक्रोधवियुक्तानां यतीनां यतचेतसाम्। अभितो ब्रह्मनिर्वाणं वर्तते विदितात्मनाम्॥ गीता 5. 26; यच्छेद्वाङ्मनसी प्राज्ञस्तद्यच्छेज्ज्ञान आत्मनि। ज्ञानमात्मनि महति नियच्छेत्तद्यच्छेच्छान्त आत्मनि॥ कठोप. III. 13. शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. I. 4. 1 explains this at length 'वाचं मनसि संयच्छेत् वागादिबाह्येन्द्रियव्यापारमुत्सृज्य मनोमात्रेणावतिष्ठेत'. He takes मनसी as an ārṣaprayoga equal to मनसि.

2278. That the yoga Upaniṣads are late productions may be briefly indicated here. Verses 10–14 of the गोरक्षशतक (dealing with the ādhāra and svadhiṣṭhāna cakras) are found in the ध्यानबिन्दु (verses 43–47) and in the योगचूडामणि (verses 4–9) with slight variations. Vide pp. 1060–1062 and notes 1715–1717 above for the six chakras and the nāḍis. In the description of prāṇāyāma the Śāṇḍilya Upaniṣad quotes certain verses with the words तदेते श्लोका भवन्ति, some of which occur in the गोरक्षशतक. One cannot say definitely that the Śāṇḍilya borrows from G. S., but this is possible. All the ancient and medieval works on the several branches of yoga are not yet available, and therefore one cannot preclude the possibility that Śāṇḍilya and other yoga upaniṣads and गोरक्षशतक borrow from earlier sources not yet discovered.

2279. यमः सप्तसु निमिषु च। पा. III. 3. 63; एषु अनुपसर्गे च यमेरप् वा।... नियमः नियामः। यमः यामः। सि. कौ. याम means प्रहर (watch, 1/8 part of the whole day), while यम means 'restraint' 'यम्यते चित्तं अनेन'. On पा. III. 2. 142 the काशिका remarks 'युज समाधौ दिवादिः। युजिर् योगे रुधादिः। द्वयोरपि ग्रहणम्'.

The Āpastambadharmasūtra (I. 8. 23. 3-6) quotes a verse 'The total destruction of doṣas (taints) is due to Yoga in this life; a wise man after having expelled all doṣas that cause harm to all beings reaches peace (mokṣa)' and then it sets out fifteen doṣas such as anger, ecstatic joy, greed, hypocrisy, the destruction of which is due to Yoga and enumerates the qualities that are opposites of the doṣas. This shows that long before the 4th or 5th century B. C. Yoga as a discipline of the mind had been well developed.

The V. S. II. 1. 3 indicates that the Sūtrakāra had before him a body of Yoga doctrines, some of which were the same as those of the Sāṅkhya and he also knew Samādhi (V. S. II. 3. 39). Again, the V. S. mentions (in IV. 2. 21) Yogins and distinguishes Sāṅkhya and Yoga as smārta (and not śrauta). Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 3. 33 quotes the extant Yogasūtra II. 44 (svādhyāyād-iṣṭa-devatā-samprayogaḥ) and on[2280] V. S. II. 4. 12 he appears to be willing to admit that the Yoga-sūtra preceded V. S. and quotes Yogasūtra I. 6 in the 2nd interpretation of that sūtra.

The important question is whether the author of the V. S. refers to the extant Yogasūtra. The present author holds for various reasons that the V. S. does not refer to the present Yoga-sūtra, but to the Yoga doctrines that had been developed even before the Kaṭha Muṇḍaka, Śvetāśvatara and other Upaniṣads.

In the Śāntiparva it is stated that the propounder[2281] of Sāṅkhya was paramarṣi (highest sage) Kapila. Hiraṇyagarbha 2281. सांख्यं योगं...नाना मतानि वै॥ सांख्यस्य वक्ता कपिलः परमर्षिः स उच्यते। हिरण्यगर्भो योगस्य वेत्ता (v. l. वक्ता) नान्यः पुरातनः॥ अपान्तरतमाश्चैव वेदाचार्यः स उच्यते। प्राचीनगर्भं तमृषिं प्रवदन्तीह केचन॥ शान्ति 337. 59-61 = चित्र० ed. 349. 64-66. For the first verse, vide above p. 954 n 1544 and also 'सांख्यं योगः पञ्चरात्रं वेदारण्यकमेव च। ज्ञानान्येतानि ब्रह्मर्षे लोकेषु प्रचरन्ति हि॥ शान्ति 337. 1.; एवमेकं सांख्ययोगं वेदारण्यकमेव च। परस्पराङ्गान्येतानि पञ्चरात्रं च कथ्यते। एष एकान्तिनां धर्मो नारायणपरात्मकः॥ शान्ति 336. 76 (= 348. 81-82 Ch. ed.). वेदारण्यक probably refers to upaniṣads like the Bṛhadāraṇyaka and Chāndogya, which contain passages about 'nididhyāsa' and the non-difference of jīva and brahma such as 'tat-tvam-asi'. A paramarṣi is defined in the वायुपुराण as 'निवृत्तिसमकालं तु बुद्ध्याऽभ्यक्तऋषिः स्वयम्। परं हि ऋषते यस्मात्परमर्षिस्ततः स्मृतः। 59. 80 (vide same verse in Brahmāṇḍa III. 32. 86.

---

2280. पञ्चवृत्तिर्मनोवद्व्यपदिश्यते। वे. सू. II. 4. 12; शांकरभाष्य 'श्रूयतेऽस्ति मुख्यस्य प्राणस्य वैशेषिकं कार्यं यत्कारणं पञ्चवृत्तिरयं व्यपदिश्यते श्रुतिषु प्राणोऽपानो व्यान उदानः समानः-इति (बृह. उप. I. 5. 3)। ...एवं तर्हि परमतमप्रतिषिद्धमनुमतं भवतीति व्यायादिहापि योगशास्त्रप्रसिद्धा मनसः पञ्च वृत्तयः परिगृह्यन्ते-प्रमाणविपर्ययविकल्पनिद्रा-स्मृतयो नाम। It would be noticed that Śaṅkarācārya first gave one explanation of the word 'manovat' in the V. S. and then he gave another by way of concession.

was the ancient knower of Yoga, no one else (knew it); Apāntaratamas was Vedācārya whom some called the sage Prācīnagarbha. In the previous chapter it is stated that Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Vedāraṇyaka and Pañcarātra are one and are aṅgas of each other. In Śānti. 326. 65 Hiraṇyagarbha is again connected with Yogaśāstra. Vide p. 1371 above. In the Anuśāsanaparva[2282] Sanatkumāra appears to be connected with Yoga as the founder, just as Kapila was the founder of Sāṅkhya. In the Ahirbudhnya Saṁhitā (XII. 32-33) it is stated that Hiraṇyagarbha first propounded two Yogasaṁhitās, one was called 'Nirodhayoga' and the other was called 'Karmayoga', the first of which was again divided twelve-fold. The Bhāmatī[2283] on V.S. II. 1.3 states that that sūtra does not totally negative the authoritativeness of the Yogaśāstra of Hiraṇyagarbha and Patañjali. The Viṣṇu-purāṇa[2284] appears to quote two verses from Hiraṇyagarbha (vide note below). Vācaspati in his commentary on Yogasūtra I. 1 states that Yogi-Yājñavalkya mentions that Hiraṇyagarbha was the propounder of Yoga. Vācaspati regards the Yogasūtra of Patañjali as later than Yoga-Yājñavalkya-smṛti. Therefore, it is almost certain that the V. S. refutes the doctrines of that Yoga system that was known to the Śāntiparva.

In Śalyaparva (chap. 50) a story is told about bhikṣu Jaigīṣavya who was a great Yogin and of 'Asita Devala', a householder staying on the holy Sārasvata-tīrtha.

In the Śāntiparva (cr. ed. chap. 222 = Ch. ed. chap. 229) there is a long dialogue between Jaigīṣavya and Asita about Yoga, one verse (14)[2285] from which may be cited 2282. सनत्कुमारो योगानां सांख्यानां कपिलो ह्यसि। अनुशासन 14. 323 (addressed by उपमन्यु to महादेव).

---

2283. नानेन योगशास्त्रस्य हैरण्यगर्भपातञ्जलादेः सर्वथा प्रामाण्यं निराक्रियते किं तु जगदुपादानस्वतन्त्रप्रधान-तद्विकारमहदहङ्कारपञ्चतन्मात्रागोचरं प्रामाण्यं नास्तीत्युच्यते।... न चैतानि प्रधानादिसद्भावपराणि किंतु योगस्वरूपतत्साधन-तदवान्तरफलविभूति-तत्परमफल-कैवल्यव्युत्पादनपराणि। भामती on शाङ्करभाष्य II. 1. 3.

2284. नन्वु हिरण्यगर्भो योगस्य वक्ता नान्यः पुरातनः-इति योगियाज्ञवल्क्यस्मृतेः कथं पतञ्जलेर्योगशास्त्रकर्तृत्वमित्याशङ्क्य सूत्रकारेणाप्तशासनमित्युक्तम्। शिष्टस्याप्तशासनं न तु शासनमित्यर्थः। वाचस्पति on यो. I. 2. The half verse हिरण्य...पुरातनः is बृहद्योगियाज्ञवल्क्य XII. 5 (Lonavla); संभावना परां हानिं योगर्द्धेः कुरुते यतः। जनेनावमतो योगी योगसिद्धिं च विन्दति। तस्माज्जरेत यो योगी सतां धर्ममनूषयन्। जना यथावमन्येरन् गच्छेरंश्चैव सङ्गतिम्॥ हिरण्यगर्भवचनं विचिन्त्याथ महामतिः। आत्मानं दर्शयामास जनोन्मत्ताकृतिं जने॥ विष्णु II. 13. 42-44.

2285. निन्द्यामशंसे श्लाघ्यार्थं न वक्ष्यन्ति परस्य ये। न च निन्द्याप्रशंसाभ्यां विक्रियन्ते कदाचन॥ शान्ति 229. 14 (Ch. ed.).

here 'Yogins do not talk much by way of censure and praise of others and their minds are never affected by the praise and censure of them indulged in by others.' In that chap. Jaigīṣavya is described as one who was never angry nor joyful. In the Varāhapurāṇa (4. 14) it is stated that Kapila and Yogirāṭ Jaigīṣavya came to king Aśvaśiras that had taken the avabhṛtha bath after Aśvamedha and assumed the forms of Viṣṇu and Garuḍa respectively. It may be noted that on Y. S. II. 55 the bhāṣya quotes several views, but prefers that of Jaigīṣavya. On Y. S. III. 18, [2286] the bhāṣya mentions the dialogue between Āvaṭya and Jaigīṣavya, where the latter's opinion is stated to be that from the point of view of kaivalya, the happiness of contentment is also misery, though as compared to pleasures of sense contentment is supposed to be and may be called happiness.

In the Buddhacarita (XII) when Gautama (the future Buddha) approached a philosopher Arāḍa, the latter described to Gautama his idea of the path to mokṣa and mentioned Jaigīṣavya, Janaka and Vṛddha-Parāśara as persons that had become liberated by following that path.[2287]

From these references it follows that Jaigīṣavya was a great teacher of Yoga long before the Christian era and probably had composed a work on Yoga not now available.

There are numerous English translations of the Yogasūtra (wholly or partly) and of the Bhāṣya and Vācaspati's Commentary, such as that by Dr. Rajendralal Mitra with text of Y. S., bhāṣya and com. Rājamārtaṇḍa and an appendix (p. 218-227) noting 150 mss. on Yoga (B. I. ed. 1883); Swami Vivekananda's 'Rājayoga' (Vol. I. of collected works, ed. of 1946) pp. 200-304, which translates and explains all the sūtras; Dr. Ganganath Jha's translation (Bombay 1907); translation by Rama Prasad (pub. by Panini office, Allahabad 1910); translation by Prof. J. H. Woods (in the Harvard Oriental Series, 1914) who read with the present author in Bombay for some months in 1909; Geraldine Coster in 'Yoga and Western Psychology' (London, 1934) translates and explains many of 2286. भगवान्जैगीषव्य उवाच। विषयसुखापेक्षयैवेदमनुत्तमं सन्तोषसुखमुक्तम्। कैवल्यसुखापेक्षया दुःखमेव। भाष्य on यो. सू. III. 18. सन्तोष is one of the five niyamas (यो. सू. II. 32) and यो. सू. II, 42 is सन्तोषादनुत्तमः सुखलाभः.

2287. जैगीषव्योपि जनको बुद्धश्चैव पराशरः। इमं पन्थानमास्थाय सुक्ता ह्यन्ये च मोक्षिणः॥ बुद्धचरित XII. 67.

Patañjali's sūtras (pp. 100–131); 'Aphorisms of Yoga' done into English by Shree Purohita Swami and Intro. by W. B. Yeats (Faber & Faber, London, 1937) with figures of Śiddhāsana, Baddhapadmāsana, Paścimottānāsana, Bhujaṅgāsana, Viparīt-akaraṇī and Matsyendrāsana; 'Bhāratiya Mānasa-śāstra' or 'Pātañjala-yoga-darśana' (Sanskrit text, with a table of contents, errata, Introduction of 232 pages, and meaning and explanation pp. 787 in Marathi) in all 1051 pages, edited by Krishnaji Keshav Kolhatkar and published by K. B. Dhavale, Bombay, 1951—a very exhaustive and useful work, though rather diffuse and marred by a few uncritical statements.

The number of works and papers on Yoga in general written by Indian and Western authors is very large. The present author has not read many of them. He may mention the following among those that he read or consulted; 'Rājayoga' (complete works of Vivekananda, ed. of 1946, Mayavati, vol. I, pp. 119–313); 'Yoga technique in the Great Epic' by W. Hopkins in JAOS vol. 22 for 1901 pp. 333–379; 'Yoga as a philosophy and religion' by Prof. S. N. Das Gupta (London, 1924), and 'Yoga philosophy (Uni. of Calcutta, 1930); Dr. J. W. Haüer's 'Die Anfrange der Yogapraxis im Alten Indien' (Stuttgart, 1922) and 'Der Yoga Als Heilweg nach den Indischen quellen Dargestellt, Stuttgart, 1932; this is a careful and systematic study of Yoga; this work (pp. 101–127) gives the transliterated text of the Yoga-sūtra with translation in German not in serial order but by subjects (such as yogāṅgas, kriyāyoga, Īśvarapraṇidhāna); Dr. Radhakrishnan's 'Indian Philosophy' vol. II. pp. 336–373 (London, 1931); 'The mysterious Kuṇḍalinī' by Dr. J. G. Rele (Taraporevala and sons, Bombay, 1927); 'Yoga, the science of health' by Felix Guyot (in French), translated by J. Carling, London, 1937 (3rd ed.), expounding the practical principles of Haṭha-yoga; 'Yoga, a scientific[2288] evaluation' by Dr. K. T. Behanan. pub. by Macmillan & Co., New York, 1937 (the author studied at Kaivalya-dhāma for a year); 'Tibetan Yoga and secret doctrine' by W. Y. Evans-Wentz (Oxford Uni. Press, 1935) and 'Tibetan Book of the Dead' by the same author (Oxford, 1927); 'A search in secret India' by Paul Brunton (London, 1947); Paul Tuxen's 'the religions of India' (Copenhagen, 1949);

2288. This is one of the best modern books on Yoga. The present author is much impressed by Dr. Behanan's sincerity, detailed and scientific treatment of Yoga and the very frank appraisal of some Yoga practices (pp. 225–249) at the end.

'Tibetan Yoga' by Bernard Bromage (2nd ed. of 1939) pp. 108–111; 'Yoga the method of re-integration' by Allain Danielou (London, 1949); the author states that the exposition is based on yoga works and also on the teachings of living exponents; it is a useful book with six illustrations and 352 Sanskrit texts; 'The Tibetan Book of the Great Liberation' ed. by W. G. Evans-Wentz (Oxford Uni. Press, 1954); pp. XXIX–LXIV contain C. G. Jung's Psychological commentary and pp. 63–69 on astrology; 'Source-book of Indian Philosophy' by Dr. Radhakrishnan and C. A. Moore; gives translation of the whole yogasūtra with extracts from the bhāṣya; Mercea Eliade's 'Yoga, immortality and freedom' translated from French into English by Willard R. Trask (London, 1958); 'Haṭhayoga, an advanced method of physical education and concentration' by Prof. S. S. Goswami (L. N. Fowler, London, 1959); this is a very valuable book; it deals scientifically with yoga in all its aspects, but particularly with āsanas of which 108 photographs are given; 'Concentration' by Mouni Sadhu (London, 1959); 'The Lotus and the Robot' by A. Koestler (London, 1960).

Many editions of the Yogasūtra of Patañjali with the bhāṣya of Vyāsa and the commentary (called Tattvavaiśāradī) of Vācaspati have been printed in India. I shall mention only two or three editions of the text of the Sūtra and the two commentaries viz. the edition by the late Pandit Rajaram Shastri Bodas, printed in beautiful type at the Nirṇayasāgara Press in 1892 and the other, the Ānandāśrama edition of 1932 which contains the sūtra, bhāṣya, Vācaspati's commentary and also the commentary called Rājamārtaṇḍa of king Bhoja. In the Kashi Sanskrit series the Yogasūtra was printed (in 1930) with six commentaries viz. the Rājamārtaṇḍa of Bhojarāja, the Pradīpikā of Bhāvā Gaṇeśa, vṛtti by Nāgoji-bhaṭṭa, the Maṇiprabhā by Rāmānandayati, the Candrikā by Anantadeva and the Yoga-sudhākara by Sadāśivendra Sarasvatī.[2288a]

The Yogasūtra, as compared with the sūtras of some other darśanas, is a brief one. It is divided into four pādas, viz.

2288a. It should be noted that Bhojadeva omits Yogasūtra IV. 16 (न चैकचित्ततन्त्रं चेद्वस्तु तदप्रमाणकं तदा किं स्यात्) which is commented upon in the Vyāsabhāṣya and by Vācaspati. On the other hand, Yogasūtra III. 20 (na ca tat-sālambanam tasyāviṣayībhūtatvāt) does not occur in the edition of Pandit Bodas Shastri and is not commented upon by Bhāvā Gaṇeśa and Nāgoji. The form of the sūtra in Y. S. IV. 16 makes one feel some doubt about its genuineness, but as it is explained by the bhāṣya and Vācaspati, one has to accept it as genuine.

Samādhi (concentration), Sādhana (means of attainment), Vibhūti (super-normal powers) and Kaivalya (aloofness, liberation). There are only 195 sūtras in all the pādas together (51+55+55+34).

Dr. Radhakrishnan in 'Indian Philosophy' (vol. II. of the ed. of 1931 pp. 341–42) holds that the author of the Yogasūtra is not later than 300 A. D. Prof. S. N. Das Gupta in 'History of Indian Philosophy' (vol. I. pp. 226–238) is in favour of the identity of the two Patañjalis and therefore holds that the author of the Yogasūtra flourished in the 2nd century B. C.[2289] The Sanskrit paper of Pandit R. Ramamūrtiśarmā in J. of Veṅkaṭeśvara Institute of Tirupati (vol. II. pp. 289–294) and Mr. Govind Das's brief note in I. A. vol. 44 (for 1915 p. 24) may also be read in this connection. Jacobi and (following him) Keith hold that the Yogasūtra (I. 40), meaning at the most 'the mastery of the Yogin extends from the minutest particle to the greatest magnitude imaginable',[2290] refers to the atomic theory of the world. This is a good sample of the way in which even great Western writers read in simple words later theories and try to give late dates to early works. The Upaniṣads speak of the self as more minute than what is aṇu and as greater than the great and the Mahābhārata also uses the same phraseology. There is no convincing reason to suppose that the Yogasūtra refers only to a theory of atoms propounded in the Vaiśeṣika system and is not paraphrasing the words of the Upaniṣad and the Mahābhārata.

We have also to consider the early tradition embodied in an introductory verse in Bhojadeva's commentary (not later than 1055 A. D.) and mentioned by Cakrapāṇi (commentator 2289. Most scholars accept 2nd century B. C. as the date of the Mahābhāṣya. Dr. D. C. Sircar in I. H. Q. vol. 15 (pp. 633–638) tries to show that the Mahābhāṣya cannot be placed earlier than the 2nd century A. D. His arguments cannot be discussed here. The present author does not agree with Dr. Sircar and holds that the arguments for placing the Mahābhāṣya in the 2nd century B. C. are far more weighty than those put forward by Dr. Sircar.

---

2290. अणोरणीयान् महतो महीयानात्मास्य जन्तोर्निहितो गुहायाम्। कठोप. II. 20, श्वेता. उ. III. 20; 'अणोरणीयो महतो महत्तरं तवात्मना पश्यति युक्त आत्मवान्। शान्तिपर्व 232.33 (cr. ed.); the योगसूत्र I. 40 is 'परमाणुपरममहत्त्वान्तोऽस्य वशीकारः'. शब्दानामनुशासनं विदधता पातञ्जले कुर्वता वृत्तिं राजसूगाङ्कसंज्ञकमपि व्यातन्वता वैद्यके। वाक्चेतोवपुषां मलः फणिभृतां भर्त्रेव येनोद्धृतस्तस्य श्रीरणरङ्गमल्लनृपतेर्वाचो जयन्त्युज्ज्वलाः॥ 5th Intro verse of Bhoja's vṛtti called राजमार्तण्ड on योगसूत्र.

of the Carakasaṁhitā[2291] (about 1060 A. D.) that Patañjali (deemed to be an avatāra of Śeṣa) composed works on Grammar, Yoga and Medicine.

The present author cannot deal at length in this volume with the two questions of identity and of the dates of the two works, as he is mainly concerned with the influence of Yoga on Dharmaśāstra works. He thinks that hardly any cogent arguments have been advanced to positively disprove the identity of the authors of the Mahābhāṣya and of the Yogasūtra. Whether the revision of Caraka's work was done by the same Patañjali is very doubtful. In the Śāntiparva the founder of Cikitsita (medicine) is said to have been Kṛṣṇātreya and not Caraka nor Patañjali. The Caraka-saṁhitā uses the expression 'iti ha smāha bhagavān-Ātreyaḥ' in the beginning of its chapters. Caraka (in I. 1. 23 ff) states that the sage Bharadvāja learnt Āyurveda from Indra. His pupil was Punarvasu Ātreya, who had six disciples viz. Agniveśa, Bheḍa, Jatūkarṇa, Parāśara, Hārīta and Kṣārapāṇi. First, Agniveśa composed a treatise on Āyurveda and read it to Ātreya and then Bheḍa and others did so. In the chapter called 'Tisraiṣaṇīya' in Caraka-saṁhitā (I. 11. 75) Kṛṣṇātreya's view is specially mentioned. Therefore, it appears that Kṛṣṇātreya[2292] is different from Ātreya who is reverently mentioned at the beginning of Caraka's chapters. Even the Buddhacarita of Aśvaghoṣa mentions Ātreya as the first propounder of medical science.

It is possible to argue that the tradition that Pātañjali dealt with Yoga and Grammar is older than the Vākyapadīya of Bhartṛhari. That work states in its first section[2293] (called Brahmakāṇḍa) that the taints that affect the body, speech and 2293. कायवाग्बुद्धिविषया ये मलाः समवस्थिताः। चिकित्सा-लक्षणाध्यात्मशास्त्रैस्तेषां विशुद्धयः॥ वाक्यपदीय I. 148; अलब्धमाधे गाम्भीर्यादुत्तान इव सौष्ठवात्। वाक्यपदीय II. 485; तदेवं ब्रह्मकाण्डे कायवाग्बुद्धिविषया ये मलाः—इत्यादि श्लोकेन भाष्यकारप्रशंसा उक्ता, इद चैव भाष्यप्रशंसेति शास्त्रस्य शास्त्रकर्तुश्च टीकाकृता महत्तोपवर्णिता। हेलाराज's टीका.

---

2291. पातञ्जल-महाभाष्य-चरकप्रतिसंस्कृतैः। मनोवाक्कायदोषाणां हर्त्रेऽहिपतये नमः॥ Intro. verse to com. on चरक. Another verse to the same effect is योगेन चित्तस्य पदेन वाचां मलं शरीरस्य च वैद्यकेन। योऽपाकरोत्तं प्रवरं मुनीनां पतञ्जलिं प्राञ्जलिरानतोऽस्मि॥ cited in योगवार्तिक of विज्ञानभिक्षु.

2292. वेदविद्वेद भगवान् वेदाङ्गानि बृहस्पतिः। भार्गवो नीतिशास्त्रं च जगाद जगतो हितम्॥ गान्धर्वं नारदो वेद भरद्वाजो धनुर्ग्रहम्। देवर्षिचरितं गार्ग्यः कृष्णात्रेयश्चिकित्सितम्। न्यायतन्त्राण्यनेकानि तैस्तैरुक्तानि वादिभिः। शान्ति 203. 18–20 (cr. ed. = 210. 20–22 of Ch. ed.); चिकित्सितं यच्च चकार नात्रिः पश्चाच्चकारात्रेय ऋषिर्जगाद॥ बुद्धचरित I. 50. Aśvaghoṣa is held to have flourished in the first or 2nd century A. D.

intellect are purified (respectively) by the sciences of medicine, grammar and metaphysics. Then in the eulogy of the Mahābhāṣya it remarks 'alabdhagādhe gāmbhīryād-uttāna iva sauṣṭhavāt', on which the commentator explains that in the verse from the Brahmakāṇḍa the author of the Mahābhāṣya is praised and in the other verse there is praise of the bhāṣya itself. From this it appears to follow that according to the commentator the Vākyapadīya attributes the three śāstras on medicine, grammar and metaphysics (i. e. Yoga) to Patañjali himself.

Even if it be held that the authors of the Yogasūtra and of the Mahābhāṣya are different persons, there are hardly any reasons for definitely assigning the author of the Yogasūtra to a date later than the 2nd or 3rd century A. D. The date of the Yogabhāṣya of Vyāsa is of considerable importance in arriving at the probable date of the Yogasūtra. But the question of the date of the Yogabhāṣya is also debatable. The Vyāsa who composed the Yogabhāṣya would have to be held as different from Vedavyāsa, the reputed author of the Mahābhārata.

The author of the Yogasūtra is, according to the tradition embodied in such comparatively early commentaries as that of Vācaspatimiśra, said to be Patañjali. Important questions arise as to his age and his identity with Patañjali, the author of the famous Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini's grammar and the Vārtikas thereon. The grammarian Patañjali is generally held to have flourished about 150 B. C. Therefore, the question of identity becomes important for the date of the Yogasūtra. Some scholars like Prof. B. Liebich, Dr. Haüer (p. 98 of the work of 1932) and Prof. Das Gupta favour the identity of the two, but several others such as Jacobi, Keith, Woods, Renou are against it. Prof. Renou (in I. H. Q. vol. XVI. pp. 586–591) examines the question from the grammatical point of view, points out that certain words like Pratyāhāra, Upasarga, Pratyaya are used in the Yogasūtra in senses entirely different from the senses of these words in the Mahābhāṣya. But as the subjects of the two works are entirely different, the same words may have acquired different senses. Similarly, Prof. Renou relies on breaches of grammatical rules (in the Yogasūtra I. 34), while he says that Patañjali in the Mahābhāṣya is very strict in following Pāṇini's rules though Pāṇini himself is rarely not strict in observing his own rules as in 'tat-prayojako hetuśca' (I. 4. 55) which is against his own sūtra 'tṛjakābhyām kartari' (II. 2. 15); but Patañjali also employs such an expressions as 'aviravikanyāya'[2294] (which should be avyavikanyāyena) for which Patañjali is criticized in the long Pūrvapakṣa on Vyākaraṇa contained in the Tantravārtika and which is not explained away in the reply to the Pūrvapakṣa. It cannot be supposed that the Yogasūtra for the first time settled the technical terms of Yoga. Yoga terms had been evolving from Upaniṣad times and Patañjali only used them in the sense which they had acquired in the course of centuries. Prof. Renou arrives at the conclusion that the Yogasūtra is later by several centuries than the Mahābhāṣya. Jacobi in his paper on 'the dates of the philosophical sūtras of the Brāhmaṇas' (in JAOS, vol. 31 pp. 1–29) holds (p. 29) that the Yogasūtra must be later that the 5th century A. D. and, following Garbe, thinks that it is not improbable that the Vyāsabhāṣya was composed in the 7th century A. D. The views of Jacobi are strongly criticized by Jwala Prasad in J. R. A. S. for 1930 pp. 365–375. The present author disagrees with Jacobi and Prof. Renou.

The date of the Yogabhāṣya will have considerable bearing on the date of the Yogasūtra. The Yogabhāṣya presupposes much literary activity on Yoga. It mentions by name on Y. S. II. 55 and on III. 18 Jaigiṣavya who is a prominent figure in the Mahābhārata as shown above (pp. 1367 and 1374). Vide also the story of Asita Devala with whom Jaigiṣavya stayed for many years as a bhiksu and adept in Yoga (Śalyaparva, chap. 50). It has to be remembered that several interpretations of the same Yogasūtra are noted in the bhāṣya (as on II. 55). The Yogabhāṣya quotes several Kārikās and verses dealing with the matters treated of in the Y. S. as on Y. S. I. 28, 48, II. 5, 28 (on nine causes that lead to Vivekakhyāti), II. 32, III, 6, III. 15 (on seven Cittadharmas of the aparidṛṣṭa type). Besides these, several quotations in prose are cited in the bhāṣya, many of which are attributed to Pañcaśikha by Vācaspati (vide pp. 1373–74 above), and some (as on II. 22, 30, 52) to āgamins (those who know the tradition or Veda). Therefore, it follows that some centuries intervene between the Yogasūtra and its bhāṣya.

The Bhāṣya on Y. S. II. 42 quotes a verse with the words 'tathā coktam' (it has also been said), which is identical with a verse from the Śāntiparva.[2295] It is most unlikely that an author will rely on his own work for supporting a proposition propounded in another work of his own. Besides, the Yogabhāṣya quotes on Y. S. I. 28 a verse, which is Viṣṇupurāṇa[2296] VI. 6. 2. The Viṣṇupurāṇa is one of the earliest among extant Purāṇas (vide above pp. 907-909) and cannot be assigned to a date later than the 3rd century A. D. Therefore, the Yogabhāṣya which quotes the Mahābhārata and the Viṣṇupurāṇa may be assigned to about 4th century A. D. As argued above, the Y. S. would therefore have to be assigned to a date not later than the 2nd or 3rd century A. D. Though the present writer holds that the Yoga that is said to be refuted in V. S. II. 1. 3 is not that of the Yogasūtra but the Yoga found in the Śāntiparva, yet he is not prepared to place the present Yogasūtra earlier than the 2nd century B. C. Mr. K. K. Kolhatkar in his very exhaustive and learned Introduction (in Marathi) asserts (on p. 126) that the Yogasūtra is later by 3000 years than the Brahmasūtra and that the Bhagavadgītā was composed about 5000 years before the present day (p. 224). But he adduces no evidence for such an ancient date for that work. He probably relies on the traditions that Vyāsa, the reputed author of the Mahābhārata (including the Gītā), flourished towards the end of the Dvāpara age and that Kaliyuga started in 3179 B. C. Modern critical scholarship does not accept these traditional datings.

2294. In the महाभाष्य on वार्तिक 2 on पा. IV. 1. 88 and on पा. V. 1. 7 the words अविरविकन्यायेन occur. In the पूर्वपक्ष in the तन्त्रवार्तिक against grammar (vyākaraṇa) it is urged 'भाष्येऽप्यविरविकन्यायेनेति द्वन्द्वगर्भे तत्पुरुषे पूर्वसमासपूर्वपदस्थायाः सुपः—सुपो धातुप्रातिपदिकयोः (पा. II. 4. 71) इति प्रत्ययोपदिष्टोऽपि लुङ् न कृतः।' (p. 260. Ānan. ed.)

Not only do some of the Upaniṣads contain references to Yoga technique and practices, but the Mahābhārata also dilates upon matters that pertain to the domain of Yoga. A few examples may be referred to here (the cr. ed. of the Mahābhārata is relied upon). In the Śāntiparva, chap. 232 (241 of Ch. ed.)

2295. सन्तोषादनुत्तमसुखलाभः। योगसूत्र II. 42. The only भाष्य on this is तथा चोक्तम्। यच्च कामसुखं लोके यच्च दिव्यं महत्सुखम्। तृष्णाक्षयसुखस्यैते नार्हतः षोडशीं कलाम्॥ इति. This Verse is शान्तिपर्व 171. 51 (cr. ed. =177. 51 of Ch. ed.) and वायु 93. 101; see p. 939 n. 1510 for this verse. On I. 47 'निर्विचारवैशारद्येऽध्यात्मप्रसादः' the भाष्य is: तथा चोक्तम्। प्रज्ञाप्रासादमारुह्य अशोच्यः शोचतो जनान्। भूमिष्ठानिव शैलस्थः सर्वान्प्राज्ञोऽनुपश्यति॥'. On this वाचस्पति remarks 'अत्रैव पारमर्षीं गाथामुदाहरति'।.

2296. तज्जपस्तदर्थभावनम्। यो. सू. I. 28; तस्य योगिनः प्रणवं जपतः प्रणवार्थं च भावयतश्चित्तमेकाग्र्यं सम्पद्यते। तथा चोक्तम्। स्वाध्यायाद्योगमासीत योगात्स्वाध्यायमामनेत्। स्वाध्याययोगसम्पत्त्या परमात्मा प्रकाशते इति. The printed विष्णुपु. reads 'आचरेत्' for आमनेत्, which latter is probably the older reading.

it is stated[2297] that kāma (desires), krodha (anger), lobha (covetousness), bhaya (fear) and svapna (sleep) are the five doṣas (disturbances), in the path of Yoga and then it prescribes means for mastering them. An important and striking assertion in that chapter is that even a person of the lowest varṇa (class) or a woman who is intent on dharma may reach the highest goal by following this path[2298] (of Yoga). The same chapter lays down (in verse 25) the proper places for the residence of a yogin and for the practice of Yoga, viz. untenanted mountains and caves, temples, vacant houses, in order that ekāgratā (one-pointedness of mind) may be achieved and that the yogin should treat in the same way a person who commends him or who speaks ill of him and should not contemplate the befalling of good or evil on any one. Chapter 289 of the Śāntiparva refers to Dhāraṇā (verse 37) and states that a yogin that has attained[2299] spiritual power may transfer himself to thousands of other bodies and move about in those bodies on the earth and that this path (of Yoga) is regarded as difficult of access even to wise brāhmaṇas and no one can tread it with ease and that one can stand easily on the sharp edges of razors, but to abide in Dhāraṇā of Yoga is difficult for those whose souls are not purified. Śāntiparva 304. 1 states that there is no knowledge equal to Sāṅkhya and no spiritual power equal to Yoga; it further says that Yoga is eightfold (verse 7) and in verse 9 mentions

2297. योगदोषान् समुच्छिद्य पञ्च यान् कवयो विदुः। कामं क्रोधं च लोभं च भयं स्वप्नं च पञ्चमम्॥ क्रोधं क्षमेन जयति कामं सङ्कल्पवर्जनात्। सत्त्वसंवेदनाद्धीरो निद्रामुच्छेत्तुमर्हति॥ अप्रमादाद्भयं जह्याल्लोभं प्रज्ञोपसेवनात्। शान्ति० 232. 4-7. In शान्ति० 289 (= 301 Ch. ed.) there is a dialogue between Bhīṣma and Yudhiṣṭhira in which the five doṣas are slightly different, viz. रागं मोहं तथा स्नेहं कामं क्रोधं च केवलम्। योगाच्छित्त्वादितो दोषान्पञ्चैतान् प्राप्नुवन्ति तत्। (verse 11). In chap. 290 (verses 53-54, cr. ed.) the five doṣas are कामक्रोधौ भयं निद्रा पञ्चमः श्वास उच्यते। एते दोषाः शरीरेषु दृश्यन्ते सर्वदेहिनाम्. The means of mastering them are the same as in chap. 232, but as to श्वास it is said 'छिन्दन्ति पञ्चमं श्वासं लघ्वाहारतया नृप (55)' Compare dosas as in Āp. Dh. S. quoted on p. 1390.

2298. अपि वर्णावकृष्टस्तु नारी वा धर्मकाङ्क्षिणी। तावेप्येतेन मार्गेण गच्छेतां परमां गतिम्॥ शान्ति० 232. 32.

2299. आत्मनां च सहस्राणि बहूनि भरतर्षभ। योगी कुर्याद्बलं प्राप्य तैश्च सर्वैर्महीं चरेत्। शान्ति 289. 26; this is quoted by Śaṅkarācārya on V. S, I, 3. 27 as smṛti and he remarks 'स्मृतिरपि ... एवं जातीयका प्राप्तानिमाद्यैश्वर्याणां योगिनामपि युगपदनेकशरीरयोगं दर्शयति।'. दुर्गस्त्वेष मतः पन्था ब्राह्मणानां विपश्चिताम्। न कश्चिद् व्रजति ह्यस्मिन् क्षेमेण भरतर्षभ॥ क्षुरस्येयं क्षुरधारासु निशितासु महीपते। दारुणासु तु योगस्य दुःस्थेयमकृतात्मभिः॥ शान्ति० 289. 50 and 54; compare क्षुरस्य धारा निशिता दुरत्यया दुर्गं पथस्तत् कवयो वदन्ति। कठोप. III. 14.

Dhāraṇā and Prāṇāyāma. The Āśvamedhikaparva 19. 17 (Ch. ed.) appears to refer to pratyāhāra.[2300]

There is also striking similarity between the Bhagavadgītā and the Yogasūtra.[2301] For example, the definition of Yoga in the Yogasūtra as the 'mastery over (or elimination of) the functions (or fluctuations) of the mind' has a close parallel in the Gītā. The Gītā insists on the yogin being 'aparigraha' (VI. 10); 'aparigṛha' is one of the five yamas (Y. S. II. 30). Similarly, the seat and posture (āsana) in which a yogin is to practise must be stable (this refers to the seat) and comfortable (says Yogasūtra); the Gītā says the same thing in greater detail. In VIII. 12 the Gītā speaks of Yogadhāraṇā. The Gītā says (in VI. 35) that the mind is certainly restless and difficult to control, but it can be controlled by practice and passionlessness and the Y. S. (I. 12) speaks of the same two means. The Gītā (in V. 4-5) emphasizes that it is the ignorant that regard Sāṅkhya and Yoga as different, that he who applies himself or stands committed to one of these secures the fruit held out by both and that he who sees both ways as identical sees truly. Here Sāṅkhya means (sannyāsa) 'renunciatien' and Yoga means 'Karma-yoga'.

The Yogasūtra of Patañjali nowhere expressly sets out its scheme of the evolution of the world. But it contains enough material to enable us to hold that it presupposes and accepts some of the Sāṅkhya doctrines such as the theory of Pradhāna, the three guṇas and their characteristics, the real nature of the individual self and kaivalya (the state of the soul in final liberation). This may be established by a few references to Y. S. Y. S. III. 48 describes the results that ensue to the yogin from subjugation or mastery of the organs (indriyas), one of which is

---

2300. Compare 'स्वविषयासंप्रयोगे चित्तस्वरूपानुकार इवेन्द्रियाणां प्रत्याहारः।' योगसूत्र II. 54. Vide also शान्ति 232. 13 मनसश्चेन्द्रियाणां च कृत्वैकाग्र्यं समाहितः। मात्रात्राप्ररात्रेषु धारयेन्मन आत्मना॥

2301. योगश्चित्तवृत्तिनिरोधः। योगसूत्र I. 2; compare गीता VI. 20 यत्रोपरमते चित्तं निरुद्धं योगसेवया; स्थिरसुखमासनम्। योगसूत्र II. 46; compare गीता VI. 11-13 शुचौ देशे प्रतिष्ठाप्य स्थिरमासनमात्मनः। नात्युच्छ्रितं नातिनीचं चैलाजिनकुशोत्तरम्॥ ... समं कायशिरोग्रीवं धारयन्नचलं स्थिरः।; असंशयं महाबाहो मनो दुर्निग्रहं चलम्। अभ्यासेन तु कौन्तेय वैराग्येण च गृह्यते॥ गीता VI. 35; compare 'अभ्यासवैराग्याभ्यां तन्निरोधः।' योगसूत्र I. 12.

'pradhānajaya'[2302] (subjugation of Pradhāna, the primary cause of the world according to the Sāṅkhya). The Y. S. nowhere describes what Pradhāna is and what its evolutes are. Therefore, it follows that it takes over from the Sāṅkhya all that is said about Pradhāna. About the individual soul the Y. S. states 'the seer (Puruṣa) exists[2303] as merely pure capacity of awareness (or as the mere power of seeing) and although pure (changeless or undefiled or free from any taints) appears as if he sees all experiences (that really pertain to Buddhi).' The characteristics of the three guṇas (sattva, rajas and tamas) are clearly and succintly[2304] stated in Y. S. as in S. Kārikā 13, when it says 'the seen (phenomenal universe) is characterized by light (sattva), activity (rajas) and inertia or dullness (tamas), it is the essence of the elements and organs and it exists for the purpose of giving experience and liberation (to the soul)'. The guṇas are frequently referred to in Y. S. I. 16, IV. 13, 32, 34 and sattvaguṇa in Y. S. II. 41, III. 35, 49 and 55. The Y. S. postulates three pramāṇas (in I. 7), but does not define them; the S. Kārikā (4-6) mentions the same three pramāṇas and briefly defines them. They both agree about the plurality of souls It may further be noted that Vyāsabhāṣya on Y. S. is full of Sāṅkhya doctrines and quotes, according to Vācaspati, Pañcaśikha twelve times and Ṣaṣṭitantra once (vide above p. 1374 and n. 2250).

In spite of the fact that the Yogasūtra accepts some of the fundamental doctrines of the Sāṅkhya, there are certain points of difference between the two. The standard Sāṅkhya finds no place for God (Īśvara) i. e. it is frankly atheistic (if theism means belief in God who is the creator of the universe and regulator of rewards and punishments), while Yoga finds a place for God in Y. S. I. 23-29, though not a basic one, but only secondary, probably as a concession to popular feelings and belief. The 2304. प्रकाश-क्रिया-स्थितिशीलं भूतेन्द्रियात्मकं भोगापवर्गार्थं दृश्यम्। यो. सू. II. 18; प्रकाशशीलं सत्त्वं क्रियाशीलं रजः स्थितिशीलं तम इति। एते गुणाः ... प्रधानशब्दवाच्या भवन्ति। एतद् दृश्यमित्युच्यते। व्यासभाष्य; compare सां. कारिका 13 सत्त्वं लघु॰ quoted in note 2215 p. 1357.

2302. ततो मनोजवित्वं विकरणभावः प्रधानजयश्च। यो. सू. III. 48. These are three perfections. On प्रधानजय, the व्यासभाष्य remarks 'सर्वप्रकृतिविकारवशित्वं ... प्रधानजयः। इति एतास्तिस्रः सिद्धयो मधुप्रतीका उच्यन्ते।'.

2303. द्रष्टा दृशिमात्रः शुद्धोऽपि प्रत्ययानुपश्यः। यो. सू. II. 20; व्यासभाष्य explains 'प्रत्ययानुपश्यो यतः प्रत्ययं बोद्धमनुपश्यति। तमनुपश्यन्नात्मापि तदात्मक इव प्रत्यवभासते'. Compare सां. कारिका 19 तस्माच्च विपर्यासात्सिद्धं साक्षित्वमस्य पुरुषस्य। कैवल्यं माध्यस्थं द्रष्टृत्वमकर्तृभावश्च॥.

Y. S. nowhere expressly says that Īśvara is the creator of the world and all that it says about Him is that in him omniscience is at its highest, that He was the teacher of primal sages and that by repetition of the mystic syllable 'om' and reflection on it the yogin attains correct knowledge of the real nature of the self. In the next place, though the summum bonum in both systems is called kaivalya (S. Kārikā 64, 68 and Y. S. III. 50, 55, IV. 34), yet the Sāṅkhya does not set out any elaborate discipline for attaining it except correct knowledge, that is, it is metaphysical and rational, while the Y. S. gives an elaborate treatment on mind discipline, insists on effort rather than mere jñāna, attaches great importance to prāṇāyāma and meditation (dhyāna) and is psychological.

The Sāṅkhya postulated that an intellectual understanding of the nature of puruṣa and of prakṛti (or guṇas) and of the difference between the two was sufficient for the emancipation of the individual self from the liability to rebirth, while yoga, on the other hand, was not content with this philosophic easy-going mental frame and emphasized systematic training of the will and emotions. In both Sāṅkhya and Yoga each individual soul is eternal and his destiny is to become free from the influence of Prakṛti and its evolutes and to remain for ever the same (viz. pure intelligence). Herein they differ from the Advaita Vedānta, according to which the final destiny of the self is to become absorbed in and one with brahma.

There is another matter for consideration. In the Yājñavalkya-smṛti, Yājñavalkya is put forward as saying that the soul shining like a lamp in the heart should be realized, that on such realization the soul is not born again and as adding that for the purpose of attaining to Yoga one should understand the Āraṇyaka[2305] which 'I received from the Sun and also the 2305. ज्ञेयं चारण्यकमहं यदादित्यादवाप्तवान्। योगशास्त्रं च मत्प्रोक्तं ज्ञेयं योगमभीप्सता॥ या. III. 110; याज्ञवल्क्यो महायोगी इच्छात्र तपसा हरम्। चकार तल्लियोगेन कायशास्त्रमनुत्तमम्॥ कूर्म I. 25. 44 (=B. I. ed. p. 269). एह्यास्व व्याख्यास्यामि ते व्याचक्षाणस्य तु मे निदिध्यासस्वेति। ... आत्मा वा अरे द्रष्टव्यः श्रोतव्यो मन्तव्यो निदिध्यासितव्यः। बृह. उप. II. 4. 4–5. Compare बृह. उप. IV. 5. 5–6 for the same words and वे. सू. IV. 1. 1 for this Br. Up. passage as the basis along with छा. उप. VIII. 7. 1 'य आत्मापहतपाप्मा ... सोऽन्वेष्टव्यः स विजिज्ञासितव्यः' of that topic in V. S. It is not unlikely that Yāj. III. 110 is an early interpolation, but since all commentators from Viśvarūpa downwards treat it as authentic, one has to accept it as a genuine part of Yāj. smṛti until some explicit evidence to the contrary is forthcoming.

---

Yogaśāstra propounded by me.' In the Kūrmapurāṇa it is said that Yājñavalkya composed Yogaśāstra at the order of Hara and the Viṣṇupurāṇa (IV. 4 107) states that Hiraṇyanābha attained the knowledge of Yoga from the great Yogīśvara Yājñavalkya who was a pupil of Jaimini. In the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Up. (II. 4) Yājñavalkya tells his wife Maitreyī (who hankered after immortality and cared naught for worldly goods) that he would expound to her the path to immortality and the very first sentence calls upon her to cultivate 'nididhyāsa' (i. e. dhyāna) and the first part of his discourse ends with the memorable words (ātmā vā are draṣṭavyaḥ śrotavyo mantavyo nididhyāsitavyaḥ, Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 5). What work is meant by the Yogaśāstra composed by Yāj. is a debatable point. There are three works (other than the Yāj. smṛti) connected with the name of Yājñavalkya viz.... Vṛddha-Yājñavalkya, Yoga-Yājñavalkya and Bṛhad-yogi-yājñavalkya (vide H. of Dh. vol. I. p. 188–190). The last has been published by Kaivalyadhama, Lonavla (1951), the Yoga-Yāj. was published in T. S. S. (1938) based on a single ms., then in the JBBRAS (vol. 28 and 29) by Shri P. C. Diwanji and now available in book form (1954). This last is in the form of a dialogue between the great yogin Yājñavalkya and Gārgī (who is identified with Maitreyī by Shri Diwanji on pp. 27–28 of his ed. of 1954) and sages and learned brāhmaṇas. Yājñavalkya narrates what he learnt from Brahmā. On Yāj. III. 110 the Dīpakalikā of Śūlapāṇi remarks that the Yogaśāstra referred to is called 'Yogiyājñavalkya'. But this again leads to uncertainty as both the works viz. that published by Kaivalyadhama and the one by Mr. Diwanji are so referred to as Yogi (or Yoga) Yājñavalkya in several digests. Mr. Diwanji[2306] tries hard to establish that the work published by him 'has a better claim to be adjudged the specific work on Yoga referred to in Yāj. III. 113.' I think that the claim is not at all justified. The work edited by Mr. Diwanji no doubt contains a good deal of Yoga knowledge; while the work published by Kaivalyadhama also contains a good deal of Yoga material, though not as much as the work edited by Mr. Diwanji contains. It would be irrelevant to discuss here all the points made by Mr. Diwanji. The present author is convinced that the work sponsored by Mr. Diwanji is not the work referred to by Yājñavalkya (in his smṛti III. 110). It is a compilation of a later period. Some striking matters alone may be pointed out to show that the Yoga-Yājñavalkya could not have been the work of the author of the Bṛhadāraṇyaka and the Yogaśāstra (as stated in Yāj. III. 110) and of Yāj. smṛti. In the Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 1 and IV. 5. 1 (Yājñavalkyasya dve bhārye babhūvatur–Maitreyī ca Kātyāyanī ca) it is expressly stated that Yājñavalkya had two wives, (philosophy-minded) Maitreyī and Kātyāyanī (worldly-minded). Maitreyī desired such knowledge as would lead to immortality and she asks questions, in all of which she addresses Yājñavalkya as 'bhagavān' (in Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 3 and 13 and IV. 5. 4, 14) and never as mere Yājñavalkya. On the other hand, Gārgī in the Bṛ. Up. is called Vācaknavī (in III. 6. 1, III. 8.1 and 12), is not Yājñavalkya's wife but a pert and rationalistic woman inquirer like Aśvala, Ārtabhāga, Bhujyu Lāhyāyanī, Uṣasta Cākrāyaṇa, Kahola (all present in the court of Janaka), who including Gārgī questioned the claim of Yājñavalkya to be regarded as 'brahmiṣṭha'. In Bṛ. Up. III. 6. 1 when Gārgī pursues her ratiocination too far (in matters depending upon āgama and being beyond reasoning) Yājñavalkya reprimands her and says that she would die (lit. her head would fall away) if she pursued the subject in a pure logistic way. All those inquirers address Yājñavalkya as mere Yājñavalkya without any honorific epithet like 'bhagavān' and Gārgī does the same (in Bṛ. Up. III. 6. 1, III. 8. 2–6). Acc. to Yāj. Smṛti III. 110 the Bṛ. Up., a Yoga-śāstra and the smṛti are the works of one man (whose two wives were Maitreyī and Kātyāyanī) and who had a philosophical skirmish with Gārgī Vācaknavī (according to the Bṛ. Up.). The present Yogayājñavalkya (ed. by Mr. Diwanji) makes Gārgī wife of Yājñavalkya[2307] (vadhūḥ). One would like to know whether Yāj. had three wives, as Bṛ. Up. says he had only two. Mr. Diwanji (pp. 27-28 of the ed. of 1954) tries to make light of this discrepancy and regards Maitreyī as another name of Gārgī. We are here concerned not with pure Yoga doctrines but with the question whether a work attributed to Yāj. which makes Gārgī the wife of the ancient Yājñavalkya (when the Upaniṣad makes her only a more or less insolent woman) can be regarded as the work of the same Yāj. who propounded brahmavidyā in the Bṛ. Up. and is supposed to have composed the Yāj. smṛti. This one circumstance alone is enough to brand the Yoga-Yājñavalkya (of Mr. Diwanji) as a fabrication sought to be passed off as an ancient work. If identity was really meant the verse could easily have been read as 'Maitreyyākhyā mahābhāgā' without any metrical fault. Therefore, it is not possible to hold that Yogayājñavalkya is the Yogaśāstra composed by Yājñavalkya before the Smṛti going under his name was composed. A few other decisive grounds may also be urged. The work edited by Mr. Diwanji mentions Tantras (in V. 10) and Tāntrikas (in VIII. 4 and 25). The Yāj. smṛti nowhere mentions these two and is free from the peculiar Tāntrik words or technique. Therefore, the present Yogayājñavalkya edited by Mr. Diwanji was composed long after the Yāj. smṛti and probably in the 8th century or after when Tāntrik rites and works had become common. One more important matter may be adverted to. The Yāj. smṛti and the Yoga-Yājñavalkya (ed. by Mr. Diwanji) both enumerate ten yamas and ten niyamas. But the two diverge materially in the ten names as the note below will show.[2308] The number of yamas and niyamas differs in different works, but if the Yāj. smṛti and Yoga-Yājñavalkya were the works of the same author, the differences in the ten names would not have occurred at all. Therefore, the author of the Yāj. smṛti is quite different from the author of the Y. Y. There is no evidence for holding that the latter flourished before the 8th or 9th century A. D.

2306. Vide Shri P. C. Diwanji's lengthy paper on 'Bṛhad-Yogi Yājñavalkya and Yoga-Yājñavalkya' in ABORI vol. 34 pp. 1–29.

---

2307. The योगया. I. 6-7 are तमेवंगुणसंपन्नं नारीणामुत्तमा वधूः। मैत्रेयी च महाभागा गार्गी च ब्रह्मविद्वरा॥ सभामध्यगता चेयमृषीणामुग्रतेजसाम्। प्रणम्य दण्डवद्भूमौ गार्ग्येतद् वाक्यमब्रवीत्॥. The two च्स may be noted; that would ordinarily show that मैत्रेयी and गार्गी were different. It might be argued that having already learnt from Yāj. (in Bṛ. Up.) Maitreyī was present but took no part in the discussion and Gārgī alone asked questions. Verse 6 of chap. I could be considered as using the words उत्तमा वधूः for मैत्रेयी and the words महाभागा and ब्रह्मविद्वरा as applicable to गार्गी; but this is made impossible by the text which in I. 43 and IV. 5 refers to Gārgī as the wife (bhāryā) of Yāj. and she is addressed as 'priye' (IV. 7), 'varārohe' etc.

A good deal has been said by Mr. Diwanji in his paper on 'Bṛhad-yogi-yājñavalkya and Yoga-Yājñavalkya' in ABORI, vol. XXXIV (1953) pp. 1-29, in his preface to Yoga-Yājñavalkya in JBBRAS, volumes XXXVIII and XXXIX pp. 103-106 and by Swami Kuvalayanand in his reply in ABORI, vol. XXXVII for 2308. ब्रह्मचर्यं दया क्षान्तिर्दानं सत्यमकल्कता। अहिंसास्तेयमाधुर्ये दमश्चेति यमाः स्मृताः॥ स्नानं मौनोपवासेज्या स्वाध्यायोपस्थनिग्रहाः। नियमा गुरुशुश्रूषा शौचाक्रोधाप्रमादता॥ या. III. 312-313; compare अहिंसा सत्यमस्तेयं ब्रह्मचर्यं दयार्जवम्। क्षमा धृतिर्मिताहारः शौचं सेवेत यमा दश॥ तपः सन्तोष आस्तिक्यं दानमीश्वरपूजनम्। सिद्धान्तश्रवणं चैव ह्रीर्मतिश्च जपो व्रतम्। एते तु नियमाः शौक्तास्तांश्च सर्वान् पृथक् पृथक्॥ योगयाज्ञ. I. 50-51. The striking dissimilarities between the two are: शौच is a नियम acc. to या. स्मृ. but a यम acc. to योगया and there are other notable additions and omissions which any reader will find.

---

1957 pp. 279–289 and in the paper 'the real Yogayājñavalkya-smṛti' in the journal 'Yogamīmāṁsā' vol. VII. No. 2 (and also published separately as a pamphlet in July 1958). It would not be relevant in this work to discuss the points in dispute between Mr. Diwanji and Swami Kuvalayanand. In the bhāṣya on the Śvetāśvataropaniṣad attributed to Śaṅkarācārya[2309] (published by Anan. Press) on p. 28 four verses and a half are quoted from Yogi-Yājñavalkya, none of which is found either in Bṛ. Y. Y. or Y. Y. Besides on Śv. Up. II. 9 (pp. 42–44) 29 verses on Yoga matters are quoted in the bhāṣya, but the name of the author or work whence the quotations are taken is not mentioned. Not one of the 29 verses wholly occurs in Mr. Diwanji's Y. Y. He is able to point out only five or six half verses as occurring in Y. Y. out of the 29 verses, while a whole verse quoted in the bhāṣya (viz. 'prāṇāyāmair' &c) occurs in Bṛ. Y. Y. (8. 32). It may be further pointed out that Aparārka and the Smṛticandrikā quote in all about 100 verses from Yogi (or Yoga–) Yājñavalkya which are found in Bṛ. Y. Y., but not in Y. Y. The Kṛtyakalpataru (on Mokṣakāṇḍa alone) quotes (on pp. 146, 149, 166, 171, 196–197) about 70 verses from Yogi-yājñavalkya which are found in chapters 2, 8, 9 and 11 of the Bṛ. Y. Y. Mr. Diwanji has not been able to show that verses of the Y. Y. (ed. by him) are cited anywhere in the above three digests. Mr. Bhabatosh Bhattacarya in his paper on Yogi-Yājñavalkya-smṛti and its utilization in the medieval digests of Bengal and Mithilā (in J. G. J. R. I. vol. XV for 1958 pp. 135–140) points out that king Ballālasena of Bengal (1158–1179 A. D.) in his Dānasāgara contains a fairly large number of quotations from the Bṛhad-Yogi Yāj. (pub. by Kaivalya-dhama). It appears that Viśvarūpa[2310] (first half of 9th century A.D.) quotes a half verse from the Bṛ. Y. Y. and remarks that the work is composed by the author of the Yāj.

2309. The authenticity of the bhāṣya as the great Śaṅkarācārya's work is extremely doubtful. In the whole of the extensive bhāṣya on the Brahma-sūtra Śaṅkarācārya quotes no Purāṇa by name but cites only a very few verses with the words 'iti purāṇe'. But in the bhāṣya on the Śv. Up. of only 76 printed pages over 30 verses from Brahmapurāṇa, about 30 verses from Viṣṇupurāṇa, about a dozen from the Liṅgapurāṇa and about half a dozen verses from the Śivadharmottara (on pp. 7, 34, 35) are cited.

2310. On स्नानमद्भैर्वतैर्मन्त्रैर्मार्जनं प्राणसंयमः। या. स्मृति I. 22, विश्वरूप comments "स्नानं प्रत्यहं कुर्यात्। तस्य च विधिराचार्येणैवान्यत्राभिहितः, विद्यमाने प्रभूते हि नाल्पे स्नानं समाचरेत्" इति. Compare बृह्. यो. या. VII. 6 'प्रभूते विद्यमाने तु उदके सुमनोहरे'; अपरार्क p. 235 (योगयाज्ञवल्क्य) प्रभूते ... हरे। नाल्पोदके द्विजः स्नायात्) and स्मृतिच. I. p. 129 reads as अपरार्क does.

smṛti himself. Therefore, the Br. Y.Y. is an early work and cannot be assigned to a date later than the 7th century A.D.; while Y. Y. is a much later compilation composed in the 8th or 9th century or even later. The present author is not, however, prepared to hold that Br. Y. Y. is the Yogaśāstra of Yāj. mentioned in Yāj. smṛti III. 110, since the Yoga material contained in it is meagre as compared with the Smṛti material. The present author is glad to find that on pp. 7–8 of the Sanskrit Preface to the edition of the Bṛhad-Yogi-Yājñavalkya-smṛti the editors express grave doubts about the identity of the author of the Yāj. smṛti with the author of the work edited by them.

The Yogavāsiṣṭha is an extensive work in 32000 Ślokas (one śloka meaning 32 syllables) printed in two volumes with a commentary by Ānandabodha by the Nirn. Press. It is really an eclectic work embodying[2311] the tenets of the Gītā on anāsakti, the tenets of the Trika system of Kashmir, of Advaita Vedānta &c. Its text appears to have been added to from time to time. Controversies have raged about its date and its contribution to Indian philosophy. The present writer holds on reading the contributions[2312] that the extant Yogavāsiṣṭha is a late work and was composed some time between the 11th and 13th century A. D.

It is now necessary to furnish a brief outline of the main teachings of Y. S. Though the work is comparatively small, its rendering in English requires to be amplified in order that it may be understandable. Only the most important and instructive matters are set out here.

Yoga is defined (2nd sūtra) as the elimination of or mastery over the functions (activities) or fluctuations of the mind. This is provisionally explained by Vyāsa (on I. 1.) as 2311. Though there is not much compact teaching on pure Yoga, the योगवासिष्ठ here and there has remarks on योग. For example, the उपशमप्रकरण chap. 78 verse 8 states: द्वौ क्रमौ चित्तनाशस्य योगो ज्ञानं च राघव । योगस्तद्वृत्तिरोधो हि ज्ञानं सम्यगवेक्षणम् ॥.

---

2312. Vide Dr. Atreya's thesis on the 'Philosophy of Yogavāsiṣṭha' published in 1936 at Adyar by the Theosophic Publishing House (he holds that it belongs to 6th century A. D.); I. H. Q. vol. 24 pp. 201–212 (Prof. S. P. Bhattacharya), I. H. Q. vol. 25 pp. 132–134 (Dr. D. C. Sarkar); Mr. Diwanji's papers in Pro. of 7th All India O. Conf. pp. 15–30, P. O. III. 1 pp. 29–44, N. I. A. vol. I pp. 697–715 (on Laghu-yogavāsiṣṭha), JOR. Mad. vol. XIII. pp. 71–82 and 118–128 (Dr. Raghavan), ABORI vol. 32 pp. 130–145.

Samādhi. The different stages viz. (bhūmis) of the mind are five, being restless (kṣipta), infatuated (mugdha or mūḍha), distracted (vikṣipta), one-pointed (ekāgra) and controlled (niruddha).

In this connection (i. e. on the topic of bhūmis) the present author has to bring to the notice of readers a paper by Shri Kuvalayānanda contributed to the Yogamīmāṁsā vol. VI. No. 4 on 'Traditional reading of Pātañjala-yogasūtra III. 11; is it accurate.' The traditional reading accepted by the bhāṣya of Vyāsa and all other commentators is 'Sarvārthataikāgratayoḥ kṣayodayau cittasya samādhipariṇāmaḥ'. The Svami[2314] argues that the correct reading should be 'sarvārthataikārthayoḥ &c.' He states that the bhūmis should be six, the sixth being 'ekārtha' and bases his arguments on the combined explanations of Yogasūtra I. 2–4, 18 and III. 9–12. All that the present writer can say is that his arguments deserve serious consideration. The fact that even Vyāsa, the bhāṣyakāra of Yogasūtra, would have to be held not to have seen the difficulties in the traditional reading of Y. S. III. 11 would have to be given due weight before any final conclusion can be arrived at. That sūtra states the goal of Yoga viz. the soul that is seer abides in its own form then (i. e. when the functions of the mind have been mastered), while in ordinary life the soul appears to assume the forms of the fluctuations of the mind. The Vṛttis[2315] are five, some of which are 2314. योगश्चित्तवृत्तिनिरोधः। तदा द्रष्टुः स्वरूपेऽवस्थानम्। वृत्तिसारूप्यमितरत्र। यो. सू. I. 2. 4; it would be interesting to note some definitions of yoga from other works: विषयेभ्यो निवर्त्याभिप्रेतेऽर्थे मनसोऽवस्थापनं योगः। देवल-धर्मसूत्र q. in note 2263, p. 1380 above; वृत्तिहीनं मनः कृत्वा क्षेत्रज्ञं (°ज्ञः v. l.) परमात्मनि। एकीकृत्य विमुच्येत योगोयं मुख्य उच्यते॥ दक्षस्मृति VII. 15; आत्ममयत्नसापेक्षा विशिष्टा या मनोगतिः। तस्या ब्रह्मणि संयोगो योग इत्यभिधीयते॥ विष्णुपु. VI. 7. 31. All three are q. by अपरार्क (on या. III. 109) p. 986 and by कृत्यकल्प० (on मोक्ष) p. 165. अपरार्क himself says 'जीवपरमात्मनोरभेदविज्ञानं विषयान्तरासम्भिन्नं योगः'.

---

2315. वृत्तयः पञ्चतय्यः क्लिष्टाक्लिष्टाः। प्रमाणविपर्ययविकल्पनिद्रास्मृतयः। प्रत्यक्षानुमानागमाः प्रमाणानि। ... अभावप्रत्ययालम्बना वृत्तिर्निद्रा। अनुभूतविषयासंप्रमोषः स्मृतिः। यो. सू. I, 5–7 and 10–11. The क्लेशs (hindrances or obstacles) are five, viz. अविद्या-अस्मिता-राग-द्वेष-अभिनिवेशाः क्लेशाः (यो. सू. II. 3). The भाष्य on I. 8 is 'सेयं पञ्चपर्वा भवत्यविद्या अविद्यास्मिता... निवेशाः क्लेशा इति। एत एव स्वसंज्ञाभिस्तमो मोहो महामोहस्तामिस्रोऽन्धतामिस्र इति।', अविद्या has five aspects (lit. joints) viz. अविद्या etc. which are respectively called मोह etc; वाचस्पति explains all these. About अस्मिता he says योगिनामष्टस्वणिमादिकेष्वैश्वर्येष्वप्रेयःसु श्रेयोबुद्धिरष्टविधो मोहः पूर्वस्माद्अधम्यः। स चास्मितोच्यते।'. The बुद्धचरित XII. 33 has these technical ideas: इत्यविद्या हि विद्वांसः पञ्चपर्वा समीहते। तमो मोहं महामोहं तामिस्रद्वयमेव च॥'. They are so called because they afflict men plunged in Saṁsāra with several kinds of suffering. 'अविद्यादयः क्लेशाः क्लिश्नन्ति खल्वमी पुरुषं सांसारिकैः विविधदुःखप्रहारैरेनेति' वाचस्पति on यो. सू. I. 24). afflicted by hindrances called kleśas and the others are not so hindered (those that are hindered are to be mastered or eliminated and the others are to be accepted). The five vṛttis are pramāṇa (means of valid knowledge), viparyaya (wrong conception), vikalpa (fancy), nidrā (sleep),[2316] smṛti (memory). Pramāṇas are three, pratyakṣa (perception), anumāna (inference), āgama (verbal testimony). The means for the suppression of the vṛttis are abhyāsa (practice) and vairāgya (passionlessness) (simultaneously carried on), the first being the effort to secure a calm flow of the mind free from vṛttis, continued for a long time uninterruptedly and earnestly and the latter (vairāgya) being the consciousness of mastery over (i. e. freedom from thirst for) seen objects (such as woman, food and drink, high position) and objects promised by Revelation (such as heaven, disembodied existence &c.).[2317] 'Vairāgya is of two kinds apara (described in Y. S. I. 15 just above) and para (highest) described in Y. S. I. 16 and bhāṣya thereon. In the highest vairāgya the yogin (who has reached discrimination between the self and the guṇas, sattva &c.) is free from thirst not only for objects of sense, but also free from the guṇas, attains a stage of undisturbed consciousness only and leads the yogin to reflect 'I have attained what was to be attained, the kleśas (hindrances 2316. According to the Yogabhāṣya on Y. S. I. 10 sleep is a special positive idea or experience (pratyaya) and not a mere absence of any activities or fluctuations of the mind, since when a man rises from sleep he reflects 'I have slept well, my mind is happy and makes my intellect clear' and this reflection on waking would not be possible if there had been no experience (during sleep) of the cause of such a feeling. Just as in samādhi one has to master other ideas (viz. misconception, fancy &c.), so the Yogi has to master sleep also as a hindrance to the attainment of Samādhi.

---

2317. अभ्यासवैराग्याभ्यां तन्निरोधः। तत्र स्थितौ यत्नोऽभ्यासः। स तु दीर्घकालनैरन्तर्यसत्कारासेवितो दृढभूमिः। दृष्टानुश्रविकविषयवितृष्णस्य वशीकारसंज्ञा वैराग्यम्। तत्परं पुरुषख्यातेर्गुणवैतृष्ण्यम्। यो. सू. I. 12-16. On sūtra I. 15 the bhāṣya says 'स्त्रीपोऽन्नपानमैश्वर्यमिति दृष्टविषये विरक्तस्य स्वर्गवैदेह्यप्रकृतिलयत्वमात्रापाद्यानुश्रविकवितृष्णस्य दिव्यादिव्यविषयसंप्रयोगेऽपि चित्तस्य विषयदोषदर्शिनः प्रसंख्यानबलादनाभोगात्मिका हेयोपादेयशून्या वशीकारसंज्ञा वैराग्यम्।'; वाचस्पति explains 'आनुश्रवो वेदस्ततोऽभिगताः आनुश्रविकाः स्वर्गादयः। ..... न वैतृष्ण्यमात्रं वैराग्यं, अपि तु दिव्यादिव्यविषयसंप्रयोगेऽपि चित्तस्यानाभोगात्मिका।' For the words दृष्ट and आनुश्रविक, compare सां. का. 2 दृष्टवदानुश्रविकः स ह्यविशुद्धिक्षयातिशययुक्तः। तद्विपरीतः श्रेयान् व्यक्ताव्यक्तज्ञविज्ञानात्॥. The भाष्य on I. 16 remarks 'तद्द्वयं वैराग्यम्। तत्र यदुत्तरं तज्ज्ञानप्रसादमात्रम्। ... ज्ञानस्यैव पराकाष्ठा वैराग्यम्। एतस्यैव हि नान्तरीयकं कैवल्यमिति।'. In this 2nd kind of vairāgya there is nothing but an undisturbed and calm consciousness or knowledge (unconnected with any object whatever) and Kaivalya (the goal of yoga) is inseparably connected with it.

avidyā &c.) that have to be destroyed have been destroyed, the close-knit succession of births and deaths has been out off'. The Bhāṣya remarks 'the highest limit of consciousness (knowledge) is Vairāgya and Kaivalya is inseparably connected with it.' Vācaspati states that this last is called 'Dharmamegha-samādhi' (mentioned in Y. S. IV. 29). Sūtras 17 and 18 of first pāda deal respectively with samprajñāta-samādhi (conscious concentration) or sālambanasamādhi and asamprajñāta-samādhi (concentration in which there is no consciousness of objects, gross or subtle). The first is of four kinds (or of four stages) viz. savitarka (deliberation over or realization of a gross object like Śālagrāma or the image of a god with four arms and the like), savicāra (where there is reflection over a subtle object such as the tan-mātrās), sānanda where the reflection is on the mind which is full of sattva (that is a samādhi of joy) and sāsmitarūpa (i. e. where there is only a sense of personality in which the knower himself is the object of perception).[2318] These four kinds lead on to the asamprajñāta-samādhi, which results when all vṛttis have disappeared, when there is persistent exercise of this state and the mind consists of sub-liminal impressions only. Sūtras 19-51 (to the end of the first pāda) deal with the different kinds of samādhi, the different ways of attainment, the position of Īśvara in the Yoga system, the nine obstacles (antarāya) that cause distraction of the mind of the person who practises Yoga and the companions of these obstacles, the means of preventing obstacles &c. such as practice of concentration on a single entity, the cultivation of friendliness, compassion, joy (towards holy men), indifference (towards unholy men) or by prāṇāyāma.

---

2318. वितर्कविचारानन्दास्मितानुगमात् संप्रज्ञातः। विरामप्रत्ययाभ्यासपूर्वः संस्कारशेषोऽन्यः। यो. सू. I. 17-18. These two are called सबीज and निर्बीज or सालम्बन and निरालम्बन or सविकल्प and निर्विकल्प समाधि. The भाष्य on I. 18 states तदभ्यासपूर्वं हि चित्तं निरालम्बनमभावप्रायमिव भवतीत्येष निर्बीजः समाधिः. The भाष्य on यो. सू. I. 2 states 'स निर्बीजः समाधिः। न तत्र किंचित्संप्रज्ञायत इत्यसंप्रज्ञातः। द्विविधः स योगश्चित्तवृत्तिनिरोध इति।'. अस्मिता is one of five क्लेशs (vide n. 2315 above) and avidyā is said to be the root of four out of five kleśas (II. 4), and II. 6 defines 'asmitā as the identification of the seer (the self) and the instrument of seeing i. e. buddhi'. It is somewhat surprising that one kind of samādhi is characterized by 'asmitā'. Probably asmitā here means no more than the conciousness 'I am' (i. e. of personality). It is remarkable that Buddhist texts exhibit a close parallel to the four kinds of संप्रज्ञातसमाधि (vide मज्झिमनिकाय vol. I pp. 21-22 Trenckner's ed. of 1888). 'सो खो अहं ब्राह्मण विविच्चेव कामेहि विविच्च अकुसलेहि धम्मेहि सवितक्कं सविचारं विवेकजं पीतिसुखं पठमं झानं उपसम्पज्ज विहासिं। etc. पीति (प्रीति) is the same as आनन्द in the योगसूत्र. Dr. B. C. Law's paper on 'Prince Jeta's Grove in Ancient India' (J. I. H. vol. XXXVII, Part III, December 1959 p. 353 note 94) brought to my notice this close correspondence and he kindly furnished the reference to the Majjhimanikāya.

The Pātañjalasūtra (in I. 19–23) divides yogins for asamprajñāta-samādhi into various categories (nine in all), which are passed over here. Patañjali says that asamprajñāta-samādhi in the case of yogins (who are not gods or not those whose bodies are resolved into primary matter) follows upon that practice which effects the cessation of all vṛttis and which comprises only subliminal consciousness and is preceded by faith, perfect repose or serenity, energy, mindfulness and discriminatory insight (into what is real) due to passionlessness. It would be noticed that so far Patañjali asks the aspirant for Yoga to rely on his own efforts, practice &c. He does not mention God or his grace anywhere so far. From this it follows that any man or woman and even one who is an agnostic may pursue yogic practices and attain to asamprajñāta-samādhi and liberation without devotion to God or without God's grace. But Patañjali as a keen psychologist knew the help that faith affords. Therefore, he provides that, if you believe in God, He will help you in the practice of Yoga and from that point of view he assigns to Īśvara a role of a limited scope.

In Y. S. I. 23–28 Patañjali provides that Samādhi and liberation (the result of Samādhi) may also be secured by [2319]

2319. ईश्वरप्रणिधानाद्वा । क्लेशकर्मविपाकाशयैरपरामृष्टः पुरुषविशेष ईश्वरः । तत्र निरतिशयं सर्वज्ञत्वबीजम् । स पूर्वेषामपि गुरुः कालेनानवच्छेदात् । तस्य वाचकः प्रणवः । तज्जपस्तदर्थभावनम् । ततः प्रत्यक्चेतनाधिगमोऽप्यन्तरायाभावश्च । यो. सू. I. 23–29. ईश्वरप्रणिधान is explained in two ways by the व्यासभाष्य (1) special devotion (भक्तिविशेष on I. 23) and (2) offering up of all actions to the Supreme Teacher (Īśvara) or the renunciation of the fruits of all actions (ईश्वरप्रणिधानं सर्वक्रियाणां परमगुरावर्पणं तत्फलसंन्यासो वा । on II. 1). The भावागणेशवृत्ति on this quotes कूर्मपुराण for the meaning of ब्रह्मार्पण 'नाहं कर्ता सर्वमेवैतद् ब्रह्मैव कुरुते तथा । एतद् ब्रह्मार्पणं प्रोक्तमृषिभिस्तत्त्वदर्शिभिः ॥'. The यो. सू. (I. 22–23 and II. 45) states that samādhi may be very near of attainment by devotion to God. It is remarkable that the Bṛhadyogiyāj. (published by the Kaivalyadhāma of Lonavla) appears to reproduce Y. S. I 24, 28–29 as Śruti in the following verses 'क्लेशकर्मविपाकैश्च वासनाभिस्तथैव च । अपरामृष्टमेवाह पुरुषं ईश्वरं श्रुतिः । वाच्यो यज्ञेश्वरः (वाच्यः स ईश्वरः?) प्रोक्तो वाचकः प्रणवः स्मृतः । वाचकेन तु विज्ञातो वाच्य एव प्रसीदति ॥ तदर्थं प्रणवं जप्यं ध्यातव्यं सततं बुधैः । ईश्वरः पुरुषाकारस्तु तेनोपास्तुः प्रसीदति ॥ बृहद्योगि. II. 43–45. On यो. सू. I. 28 the Bhāṣya explains 'तदस्य योगिनः प्रणवं जपतः प्रणवार्थं च भावयतश्चित्तमेकाग्रं सम्पद्यते ।' and वाच० explains

(Continued on next page)

devotion to Īśvara (Īśvara-praṇidhāna) who is a special puruṣa, who is untouched by hindrances, by karma (good or evil) or by the results of actions or by hankerings, in whom the omniscience, that is only a germ (in others), is infinite; He, being not limited by time, is the teacher of even the ancient teachers. The mystic syllable (Om) is expressive of (i. e. representative or symbol of) God and japa of that syllable and constant reflection upon the meaning of 'om' (i. e. on Īśvara) leads to one-pointedness (ekāgratā) of mind. Devotion to Īśvara secures for the practitioner attainment of right knowledge of the nature of the soul and the absence of hindrances (antarāya) that distract the mind (I. 29). These hindrances are nine such as illness, langour, doubt &c. and they are also called Yogamala (taints or blemishes of Yoga), the enemies (pratipakṣa) of Yoga. These hindrances are accompanied by pain, mental distress, tremor of the limbs, irregular inhalation and exhalation (I. 31). These distractions and their accompaniments that are the foes of samādhi may be prevented or mastered in various ways such as practice of concentration on one entity (Īśvara or the like), by the practice of such attitudes of mind as friendliness, compassion, cheerfulness and indifference respectively towards the happy or the distressed, the good and the evil (I. 33) or by the expulsion and retention of breath (bhāṣya uses the word 'prāṇāyāma'). When the mind is concentrated then arise the four kinds of samprajñātasamādhi (called savitarka &c. in I. 17). The knowledge that is gained in the last kind of samprajñātasamādhi is of a higher order than what is obtained from scripture or inference and the subliminal impression made in this samādhi is hostile to all other impressions and when this last impression also is suppressed or removed, then results the seedless samādhi (i. e. asamprajñātasamādhi). In this last the mind itself ceases (from its task) and the yogin's soul abides in itself, shines forth in its own light and is called pure, isolated and liberated.[2320] Īśvara-praṇidhāna does not lead to union with Īśvara, but it enables the soul that is still bound to become what Īśvara always is. In the Yogasūtra there is very little about bhakti for God.

---

(Continued from last page)

भावनं as 'पुनः पुनश्चित्ते निवेशनम्.' For the eulogy of 'Om' vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 301–302 and for japa (inaudibly done or mental) Manu II. 85–87, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 55. 19, Vasiṣṭha 26. 9 and p. 686 of H. of Dh. II. The Māṇḍūkyopaniṣad, which, Śaṅkarācārya declares, contains the essence of the thought of Vedānta' (Vedāntārthasārasaṅgrahabhūta), has a disquisition on 'om'. Om was in the Upaniṣads (and before them) a symbol of the whole Universe, of the supra-sensible brahma and was of metaphysical use. Yoga took it over from the Upaniṣads and made it an instrument of psychology and of dhyāna.' Compare Muṇḍaka Up. II. 2. 4 'प्रणवो धनुः शरो ह्यात्मा ब्रह्म तल्लक्ष्यमुच्यते। अप्रमत्तेन वेद्धव्यं शरवत्तन्मयो भवेत्॥'

Pāda II. The first pāda ends on the note of samādhi and liberation i. e. describes the Yoga for him who has succeeded in concentration. The 2nd pāda deals with the procedure for a person whose mind is not used to concentration but is restless, infatuated or distracted (vyutthita)[2321] and who is desirous of learning the technique. This pāda is the most important of all the four pādas for modern students, either Indian or Western, and has exerted great influence on Dharmaśāstra works. The fundamental idea of Yoga is that the individual self is real, eternal and pure, but it is immersed in the objective world and, though eternal, pursues transient objects. Patañjali is a master psychologist. The goal being set (viz how to secure the isolation of the soul from avidyā and the guṇas and its attainment of its own pure nature) Y. S. prescribes a rigorous discipline for the attainment of the goal. Patañjali differs from many modern Western psychologists (like Freud)[2322] in two very fundamental matters. The first is that Patañjali puts all emphasis at his command on the freedom and liberation of the soul from bondage, prescribes restraint of the activities of the mind as the 2320. तस्मिन् (चित्ते) निवृत्ते पुरुषः स्वरूपमात्रप्रतिष्ठोऽतः शुद्धः केवलो मुक्त इत्युच्यते। भाष्य on यो. सू. I. 51 (तस्यापि निरोधे सर्वनिरोधान्निर्बीजः समाधिः).

---

2321. व्युत्थान is explained by भोजदेव as 'व्युत्थानं क्षिप्तमूढविक्षिप्तानां भूमित्रयम्' on यो. सू. III. 9 and on III. 37 (ते समाधावुपसर्गा व्युत्थाने सिद्धयः) as व्यवहारदशा.

2322. Freud gives the name 'libido' to the energy of the sexual instinct, while Jung, who was once a disciple of Freud, diverged from Freud, holds it as applicable to all forms of mental, psycho-physical or conative energy. The theory of the Oedipus complex is the central core of the Freudian system. It appears that Freud later in life modified his theory of the Oedipus complex and, though he assumed that the Oedipus complex is present in every infant, he came to hold that in the course of normal development the complex becomes eradicated in early childhood. Vide 'An outline of abnormal psychology' by W. Macdougall (London, ed. of 1952) p. 418.

Prof. J. B. Watson propounded the theory of 'Behaviourism' (vide the work so called, London, 1925), which denies the existence of mind or mental traits, dispositions or tendencies. On this view the subject matter of psychology is not mind but the behaviour or activities of the human being and the concept of instincts on which most psychologists dwell at length becomes meaningless.

means and several preliminary steps of the training of ordinary emotions and will, while several modern psychologists condemn repression of the mind. In the 2nd place Patañjali is a firm believer in the doctrine of karma and rebirth and (in II. 12–15) holds that even good actions that give rise to a future life of pleasure and happiness are a misery to the enlightened, while modern psychologists speak of several innate instincts and are not at all agreed on what these are, they do not tackle the problem of karma and rebirth and their relation to what they call instincts. If there is no pre-existince of the soul as Christians and many others believe, how do the human instincts arise? There is hardly any convincing or satisfactory explanation of this.

The first sūtra (of pāda II) says that the activities or practices that are preliminaries to the attainment of Yoga are tapas[2323] (austerity), svādhyāya and devotion to Īśvara; these,

---

2323. तपःस्वाध्यायेश्वरप्रणिधानानि क्रियायोगः। समाधिभावनार्थः क्लेशतनूकरणार्थश्च। अविद्यास्मितारागद्वेषाभिनिवेशाः क्लेशाः। यो. सू. II. 1–3. Various definitions of tapas occur in the Dharmaśāstra and other works. The word tapas occurs in the Ṛgveda over a dozen times. Vide Ṛg. VI. 5. 4, VIII. 59. 6, VIII. 60. 16, X. 16. 4, X. 87. 14 in all of which it is possible to take tapas in the sense of heat. But in Ṛg. X. 109. 4, X. 154. 2, 4 (pitṛntapasvataḥ), 5 (ṛṣīn tapasvataḥ), X. 183. 1, X. 190. 1 tapas means 'austerities, asceticism or bodily mortification.' तपसा येऽनाधृष्यास्तपसा ये स्वर्ययुः। तपो ये चक्रिरे महस्तांश्चिदेवापि गच्छतात्॥ ऋ. X. 154. 2 (this is addressed to the soul of the deceased person) 'join them that are unassailable owing to tapas, that went to heaven by tapas and that performed great tapas'. The emphasis on asceticism (or tapas) appeared among Indians earlier than among any other known people. In Ṛg. X. 190. 1 it is stated that right and truth and the sun and the moon and the universe are born of tapas. In Ṛg X. 109. 4 the seven sages are said to have sat down for tapas. In Ṛg. X. 136. 2 sages (munis) having long hair and wearing dirty yellowish clothes are said to roam over paths. In the Śat. Br. VI. 1. 1. 13 and Ait. Br. XI. 6. 4 it is indicated that tapas like Yajña would give everything. The Upaniṣads (e. g. Tai. Up. III. 5 'tapasā brahma vijijñāsasva', Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 22) emphasize that tapas is one of the means of realizing brahma. Chān. Up. II. 23 postulates tapas as the 2nd of three dharmaskandhas. The Āp. Dh. S. I. 2. 5. 1 holds that the strict observances laid down for a Vedic student are called tapas (नियमेषु तपःशब्दः); Gautama Dh. S. 19. 15 provides that sexual purity, truthfulness, bathing three times in the day, wearing a wet garment, sleeping on the sacrificial ground and fast are austerities. Manu X. 70 provides that even three prāṇāyāmas are the highest tapas for all brāhmaṇas provided they are performed according to prescribed rules and are accompanied by the seven vyāhṛtis and praṇava. Manu (XI. 234–244) contains a grand eulogy of tapas; verse 238 states 'everything can be when resorted to, serve for the cultivation of samādhi and for minimising the kleśas, which are avidyā (nescience which is the field that produces the other four), asmitā (the feeling of personality), rāga (attachment to pleasures), dveṣa (aversion, that dwells angrily on pain and its causes) and abhiniveśa (will to live or clinging to life). Tapas is explained by Vyāsabhāṣya (on Y. S. II. 32) as bearing or enduring the pairs (of opposites) such as hunger and thirst, cold and heat, standing and sitting, stillness of a stump (i. e. not indicating what is passing in one's mind even by gestures), stillness of the body (not speaking at all), and also such observances as Kṛcchra, Cāndrāyaṇa and Sāntapana (vide H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 120 and 132, 134–137, 151 respectively for kṛechra &c.).

(Continued on next page)

The Vyāsabhāṣya explains 'svādhyāya' as the japa (inaudible repetition) of om and other holy texts or study of the śāstras treating of liberation.[2324] The Śat. Br. XI. 5. 7 contains a eulogy of svādhyāya and the words 'svādhāyoऽdhyetavyaḥ' (one should study the Veda) occur frequently therein. Om is the most prominent among the symbols (pratīkas) under which the upāsanā of the supra-sensible brahma was to be carried out. Vide Chān. Up. I. 1. 1 (om-ityetad-akṣaram-udgītham-upāsīta), Tai. Up. I. 8 (om-iti brahma, om-itīdam sarvam), Muṇḍaka Up. II. 2. 4 (praṇavo dhanuḥ śaro hyātmā brahma tal-lakṣyam-ucyate, 'om is the bow, the soul is the arrow, brahma is the accomplished by tapas, since tapas has invincible power'. Yāj. also (I. 198–202) emphasizes the great importance of tapas. Jaimini (in PMS III. 8. 9) employs the word tapas for 'fast'. Frequent eulogies of tapas are found in the Mahābhārata as in Vanaparva 259. 13. 17, Śānti, chap. 5 and 12 'Gods and sages secured their position by tapas', Ānuśāsana 122. 5–11). Śāntiparva 79. 18 explains अहिंसा सत्यवचनमानृशंस्यं क्षमो घृणा। एतत्तपो विदुर्धीरा न शरीरस्य शोषणम्॥. All passages of the Mahābhārata are taken from Chitrashālā Press edition in this note. Yogins are said to repeat the Ajapā japa i. e. while they breathe inwards there is सोहं and when they breathe out there is हंसः and the combined words सोहं हंसः mean 'I am that haṃsa' (the eternal Spirit)'. Compare बृहद्योगिया. II. 115. 'हंसं तुर्यं परं ब्रह्म'.

---

(Continued from last page)

2324. स्वाध्यायः प्रणवादिपवित्राणां जपो मोक्षशास्त्राध्ययनं वा। व्यासभाष्य on यो. सू. II. 1. गौ. ध. सू. 19. 12 (= बौ. ध. सू. III. 10. 10, वसिष्ठ 22. 9) enumerates the Upaniṣads, Vedānta and some vedic texts as holy texts by repeating which a man expiates sins. वसिष्ठधर्मसूत्र 28. 10–15 (=विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 56 in prose =शङ्खस्मृति chap. 10 12 and chap. 11) enumerate holy texts (pavitrāṇi) from all Vedas. The word 'praṇava' occurs in the Tai. S. III. 2. 9. 5–6 'उद्गीथ एवोद्गातृणामृचः प्रणवः उक्थर्क्सिनाम्, which is quoted by शबर on पू. मी. सू. III. 7. 42.

target &c.), Praśna Up. V. 5 (Yaḥ punar-etam trimātreṇomity-etenaivākṣareṇa param puruṣam-abhidhyāyIta). The Y. S. borrows this importance of Om from the Upaniṣads. The five kleśas are defined in Y. S. II. 5-9. Avidyā (ignorance)[2325] consists in regarding the non-eternal as eternal, the impure as pure, pain as pleasure, the non-self as the self. Asmitā (sense of personality) consists in the seer (the self) being held as if identical with the instruments of seeing (such as mind and sense organs). Abhiniveśa (clinging to life) means the craving ('May I not cease to live, may I live') which sweeps on by its own force and is established in this form even among the learned. Īśvarapraṇidhāna has been explained above (p. 1412 note 2319). The Y. S. (II. 11 and 12) says that the kleśas have subtile conditions (viz. avidyā and asmitā) and coarse effects in the form of vṛttis (the fluctuations of the mind, rāga, dveṣa and abhiniveśa); escape from the former is secured by resolving them by means of real knowledge while the coarse ones are controlled by contemplation (dhyāna). The accumulated deposits of Karma arise from the five kleśas, are fit to be experienced in the seen birth (that is in the present birth) and in an unseen (i. e. future) birth. So long as the root (viz. the kleśas) exists the accumulated karma leads to fruition in three forms viz. birth, life (long or short) and experience, which three result in giving joy or 2325. अनित्याशुचिदुःखानात्मसु नित्यशुचिसुखात्मख्यातिरविद्या । दृग्दर्शनशक्त्योरेकात्मतेवास्मिता । सुखानुशयी रागः । दुःखानुशयी द्वेषः । स्वरसवाही विदुषोऽपि तथा रूढोऽभिनिवेशः । यो. सू. II. 5-9; the भाष्य explains the last 'सर्वस्य प्राणिन इयमात्माशीर्नित्या भवति मा न भूवं भूयासमिति । न चाननुभूतमरणधर्मकस्यैषा भवत्यात्माशीः । ... ... स चायमभिनिवेशः क्लेशः ... कृमेरपि जातमात्रस्य ... मरणत्रास उच्छेददृष्टात्मकः पूर्वजन्मानुभूतमरणदुःखमनुमापयति ।.' With the यो. सू. II. 5 compare ब्रह्माण्डपुराण 'अनित्ये नित्यसंज्ञा च दुःखे च सुखदर्शनम् । अस्वे स्वमिति च ज्ञानमशुचौ शुचिनिश्चयः ॥ रागद्वेषविवृद्धिश्च तज्ज्ञानमुदाहृतम् । IV. 3. 39-40 q. by कृत्यकल्प० (on मोक्ष p. 124). In Venk. ed. the last half is different. Compare also विष्णुपुराण IV. 7. 11 अनात्मन्यात्मबुद्धिर्या &c. क्लेशमूलः कर्माशयो दृष्टादृष्टजन्मवेदनीयः । सति मूले तद्विपाको जात्यायुर्भोगाः । ते ह्लादपरितापफलाः पुण्यापुण्यहेतुत्वात् । परिणाम-ताप-संस्कार-दुःखैर्गुणवृत्तिविरोधाच्च दुःखमेव सर्वं विवेकिनः । यो. सू. II. 12-15. वाचस्पति explains आशय as 'आशेरते सांसारिकाः पुरुषाः अस्मिन्नित्याशयः । कर्मणामाशयो धर्माधर्मौ '. On योगसूत्र II. 13 the भाष्य puts forward four possible alternatives about karma and punarjanma, rejects the first three and accepts the 4th. It may be quoted here 'तत्रेदं विचार्यते किमेकं कर्मैकस्य जन्मनः कारणम्, अथैकं कर्मानेकं जन्म आक्षिपति-इति । द्वितीया विचारणा-किमनेकं कर्मानेकं जन्म निर्वर्तयति, अथानेकं कर्मैकं जन्म निर्वर्तयति इति. On II. 14 से ... हेतुत्वात् one may note the following Upaniṣad passages on which the sūtra is based, viz. बृ. उप. III. 2. 13, छा. उप. V. 10. 7. The last two passages illustrate the meaning of जाति in यो. सू. II. 13. The above passages will have to be quoted later under karma and punarjanma.

---

anguish according as the accumulation is due to meritorious or evil acts. The Yogasūtra says that the Yoga system has, just like the system of medicine,[2325a] four divisions or aspects, viz. saṁsāra (the round of births or transmigration), the cause of saṁsāra, the release from saṁsāra, the means of release (viz. samyak-darśana, insight into reality or discriminating discernment between the puruṣa and sattva, unassailed by false knowledge); sūtras 16–27 of the 2nd pāda set out these four and explain some of the terms used in defining them. Sūtra 28 provides that when impurities are washed away by practising the aṅgas of Yoga, the knowledge shines forth (more and more) till discriminatory discernment becomes perfect. Then sūtra[2326] 29 enumerates the eight aṅgas (aids, or auxiliaries) of Yoga, viz. yama (abstinences), niyama (observances), āsana (bodily posture), prāṇāyāma (control or regulation of breath), pratyāhāra (withdrawal or suppression of the organs of sense), dhāraṇā (fixed attention), dhyāna (meditation or contemplation), samādhi (concentration or absorption into the object of meditation). The Vaikhānasasmārtasūtra enumerates the same eight aṅgas of Yoga. The remaining sūtras of pāda two (from 30 to 55) deal with the enumeration and definitions of yamas and niyamas, their explanations and the treatment of āsana, prāṇāyāma and pratyāhāra. The Śāntiparva (304.7 = 316.7 of Ch. ed.) speaks of Yoga as 'aṣṭaguṇita' or aṣṭaguṇin). Out of the eight aṅgas the first five are indirectly useful for samādhi, because they eradicate what are opposed to samādhi (such as hiṁsā, asatya &c.), and are therefore called bahiraṅga (external, indirect) sādhanas (means) of Yoga, while dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi are said to be antaraṅga to Yoga (Y. S. III. 7, 'trayam-antaraṅgam pūrvebhyaḥ'. The last three are dealt with in the 3rd pāda. It is these sūtras in the 2nd pāda that are emphasized and elaborated in Dharmaśāstra works. Therefore some detailed treatment of these matters is needed here.

---

2325 a. यथा चिकित्साशास्त्रं चतुर्व्यूहम् ... एवमिदमपि शास्त्रं चतुर्व्यूहमेव ... तद्यथा। योगभाष्य on II. 15; vide p. 939 note 1510a for the whole passage. हेयं दुःखमनागतम्। द्रष्टृदृश्ययोः संयोगो हेयहेतुः। ... तस्य हेतुरविद्या। तदभावात्संयोगाभावो हानं तद् दृशेः कैवल्यम्। विवेकख्यातिरविप्लवा हानोपायः। यो. सू. II. 16, 17, 24–26. Compare these four aspects with the four Noble Truths of Buddhism cited in note 1510a above. विप्लव means मिथ्याज्ञान acc. to वाचस्पति.

2326. योगाङ्गानुष्ठानादशुद्धिक्षये ज्ञानदीप्तिराविवेकख्यातेः। यम-नियमासन-प्राणायाम-प्रत्याहार-धारणा-ध्यान-समाधयोऽष्टावङ्गानि॥ यो. सू. II. 28–29. The भाष्य on II. 29 is: 'तेषां (योगाङ्गानां) अनुष्ठानात् पञ्चपर्वणो विपर्ययस्याशुद्धिरूपस्य क्षयो नाशः। ... यथा यथा च साधनान्यनुष्ठीयन्ते तथा तथा तत्त्वमशुद्धिरापद्यते यथा यथा च क्षीयते तथा तथा क्षयक्रमानुरोधिनी ज्ञानस्यापि दीप्तिर्वर्धते। सा खल्वेषा विशुद्धिः प्रकर्षमनुभवत्याविवेकख्यातेः, आगुणसंबन्धस्वरूपविज्ञानादित्यर्थः।' The five क्लेशs mentioned in यो. सू. II. 3 are called विपर्यय. It is somewhat surprising that the eight aṅgas 'यम...समाधयोऽष्टावङ्गानि' (in prose) are quoted as from महाभारत in the कृत्यकल्प (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 167) and by अपरार्क p. 1022. The वैखानसस्मार्तसूत्र (B. I. ed.) VIII. 10 divides yogins into three classes owing to the differences in their practices and abstentions, viz. सारङ्ग, एकार्ष्य and विसरग; and each of these is again subdivided into further sub-classes. It further states that some of these called Anirodhakāḥ do not practise prāṇāyāma, others called Mārgagāḥ practise only prāṇāyāma and the rest and those called vimārgagāḥ practise all the eight aṅgas, but they regard even God that is proper for contemplation as not so. The original words are 'ये विमार्गगास्तेषां यमनियम ... त्यङ्गाङ्गं कल्पयन्तो ध्येयमप्यन्यथा कुर्वन्ति.' It is difficult to say what the last clause exactly means. It is probable that in this sentence reference is made to some class of yogins that do not contemplate on God, but hold that without contemplation on God they can secure liberation (kaivalya, mukti).

In some works, such as the Gorakṣasaṁhitā the aṅgas of yoga are said to be only six (omitting yama and niyama or omitting some others). The Maitrāyaṇī Up. (VI. 18), the Dhyānabindu Up. the Atri-smṛti XI. 6, Dakṣa VII. 34, Skandapurāṇa, Kāśīkhaṇḍa, 41. 59 and Buddhists say the same. Manu[2327] provides (IV. 204) 'a wise man should always practise yamas but not the niyamas always; one who only practises niyamas and does not practise yamas incurs sin (or falls into hell)'. This does not mean that niyamas are forbidden but it means only this that yamas are far more important than niyamas. The words 'yama' and 'niyama' both occur in the Śāntiparva (cr. ed. 326. 15 and 339. 16 of Ch. ed.). Some Smṛtis omit them from the aṅgas of yoga probably because they are prescribed for all persons in general by Manu, Yāj. and others. Manu does not enumerate yamas and niyamas, but Yāj. (quoted on p. 1406, n. 2303 above) enumerates ten yamas and ten niyamas. The five yamas[2328] of the Y. S. are 2327. तथा तत्प्रयोगकल्पः। प्राणायामः प्रत्याहारो ध्यानं धारणा तर्कः समाधिः षडङ्ग इत्युच्यते योगः। मैत्रा. उप. II. 18; अत्रिस्मृति IX. 6 and वृद्धस्मृति VII. 3 mention the same six aṅgas (including tarka) as in मैत्रा. उप. 'आसनं प्राणसंरोधः प्रत्याहारश्च धारणा। ध्यानं समाधिरेतानि योगाङ्गानि भवन्ति षट्॥ ध्यानबिन्दु उप.० verse 41 (Adyar ed p. 196), गोरक्षशतक I. 4, and स्कन्दपु. (काशीखण्ड 41. 59); अपरार्क on या. III. 110 p. 990) quotes a smṛti text enumerating six aṅgas of yoga (omitting यम, नियम, आसन and adding तर्क). The बृहद्योगियाज्ञ. IX. 35 and लिङ्ग-पुराण (I. 8. 8-9) mentions eight aṅgas. अपरार्के (p. 990) explains 'ततो मनोबुद्धिपरित्यागेनात्मनि विमर्शरतर्कः'. वायुपुराण XI. 76 mentions only five, प्राणायाम, ध्यान, प्रत्याहार, धारणा and स्मरण in that order.

2328. अहिंसा-सत्यास्तेय-ब्रह्मचर्यापरिग्रहा यमाः। जातिदेशकालसमयानवच्छिन्नाः सार्वभौमाः महाव्रतम्। यो. सू. II. 30-31; some words of the भाष्य may be quoted; ahiṃsā (non-injury to all creatures and at all times), satya (truthfulness), asteya (non-stealing i. e. not appropriating others' things in a way not sanctioned by the Śāstra), brahmacarya (i. e. control of the organ of generation while guarding the other organs of sense also), aparigraha (non-acceptance of anything from another beyond what is necessary for preserving the body). These five constitute for a yogin a great vrata when practised without reference to species, place, time and occasions (or exigencies). As provided by Manu, yamas have to be observed by all but there are exceptions. The observance of yamas would be called vrata, but the rigorous observance of yamas without allowing exceptions is called by the Y. S. mahāvrata which has to be observed by yogins without exception at all stages. The observance of yamas and niyamas is a first step for the soul's ultimate success in winning Liberation or Isolation (kaivalya), since, unless the soul is purged of all sexual and egoistic desires, it cannot live the divine or spiritual life that the higher stages of yoga require. What is meant may be briefly exemplified as follows: Smṛtis recognize some exceptions to all these in the case of ordinary people. For example, it is the kṣatriya's duty to fight and therefore it was provided by Manu (VII. 87, 89) that a kṣatriya should not run away from battle and that kṣatriyas fighting and dying in battle on both sides went to heaven. Vide Yāj. I. 324. So hiṃsā was allowed to a kṣatriya but if he wanted to follow the Yoga discipline he had to give up hiṃsā. Similarly, Smṛtis excused untruth on five occasions (vide Gautama 23. 29, Vasiṣṭha 16. 36, Ādiparva 82. 16, Śāntiparva 34. 25 and 165. 30, quoted in H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 353 and notes 536, 537). Manu in IV. 138 makes an exception for ordinary men viz. one should not speak what though true is painful to another (na brūyāt satyamapriyam). But one who enters on the discipline of Yoga must always speak the truth except when speaking the truth would result in the ruin of creatures.[2329] The Mitākṣarā on Yāj. III. 312 remarks that telling a falsehood in the case of arranging a marriage though excused (by smṛtis) should be avoided and also the beating of a son or a pupil as punishment by one who observes a vrata. A householder who approaches his wife on certain specified days after her monthly illness and avoids the parvan days (vide H. of Dh. vol. III. n 1425) is to be regarded as one observing brahmacarya, acc. to Yāj. I. 79 and Manu IV. 128, but if he takes to the path of Yoga, he would have to give up this latitude (vide note 2308,[2330] above) and avoid all contact whatever with all women including his own wife as the Liṅgapurāṇa emphasizes. The Yuktidīpikā, one of the earliest commentaries on the Sāṅkhyakārikā, mentions (on p. 112) five yamas but puts 'akalkatā' (absence of crookedness) as the 5th instead of aparigraha. The Viṣṇupurāṇa (VI. 7. 36-37) enumerates five yamas and five niyamas as in Y. S. but substitutes 'mind bent on the highest brahma' (kurvīta brahmaṇi tathā parasmin pravaṇam manaḥ) for 'Īśvarapraṇidhāna'. The five niyamas according to Y. S. II. 32 [2331] are śauca (cleanliness), santoṣa (contentment), tapas (austerity), svādhyāya (study of Veda), īśvarapraṇidhāna (devotion to God, or surrendering all actions to him). Three of the five niyamas, viz. tapas, svādhyāya and Īśvarapraṇidhāna constitute kriyāyoga as already stated in Y. S. II. 1. It is most difficult to give an objective definition of duty, but duties can be defined on the subjective side. The object of emphasizing duties is to make men rise above lower desires and to make the higher self shine forth. These are 2331. शौच-सन्तोष-तपः-स्वाध्यायेश्वरप्रणिधानानि नियमाः। यो. सू. II. 32; भाष्य 'तत्र शौचमृज्जलादिजनितं मेध्याभ्यवहरणादि बाह्यं, आभ्यन्तरं चित्तमलानामाक्षालनम्'; for तपः acc. to यो. सू. vide n. 2323 above. Vide कूर्मपु. II. 11. 20-29 for these five and their definitions. The युक्तिदीपिका (p. 112) enumerates the नियमs as अक्रोधो गुरुशुश्रूषा शौचमाहारलाघवमप्रमादः इति पञ्च नियमाः. The same five are quoted as Vyāsa's in a verse by कृत्यक० (गृहस्थकाण्ड p. 302). वाचस्पति explains 'चित्तमला मद्यमानासूपादयस्तदपनयो मनःशौचम्'.

(Continued on next page)

---

(Continued from last page)

तत्राहिंसा सर्वथा सर्वदा सर्वभूतानामनभिद्रोहः। उत्तरे च यमनियमास्तन्मूलास्तत्सिद्धिपरतयैव तत्प्रतिपादनाय प्रतिपाद्यन्ते। ... ब्रह्मचर्यं गुप्तेन्द्रियस्योपस्थस्य संयमः। विषयाणामर्जन-रक्षण-क्षयसङ्गहिंसादोषदर्शनादस्वीकरणमपरिग्रहः। सिद्धि in the भाष्य above means ज्ञान and not उत्पत्ति; on गुप्तेन्द्रियस्य, वाचस्पति explains 'संयतोपस्थोऽपि स्त्री-प्रेक्षण-तदालाप-कन्दर्पायतन-तदङ्गस्पर्शनसक्तो न ब्रह्मचर्यवानिति तन्निरासायोक्तं गुप्तेन्द्रियस्येति'। The भोजवृत्ति and योगसुधाकर respectively explain अपरिग्रह as 'अपरिग्रहो भोग-साधनानामनङ्गीकारः' and 'अपरिग्रहः शरीरस्थितिमात्रव्यतिरिक्तभोगसाधनास्वीकारः'। देवल quoted by गृहस्थकाण्ड of कल्पतरु states that hiṃsā is of ten kinds (p. 304). The लिङ्गपु. I. 8. 10–28 names these five यमs and defines them.

---

2329. यदि चैवमप्यभिधीयमाना (वाक्) भूतोपघातपरैव स्यात् न सत्यं भवेत्यापमेव भवेत्तेन पुण्याभासेन पुण्यप्रतिरूपकेण कष्टं तमः प्राप्नुयात्। तस्मात्परीक्ष्य सर्वभूतहितं सत्यं ब्रूयात्। भाष्य on यो. सू. II. 30; यथा विवाहादिष्वन्यत्रज्ञातस्याप्यनृतवचनस्य निवृत्त्यर्थं सत्यत्वविधानम्। पुत्रशिष्यादिकमपि न ताडनीयमेवमर्थमहिंसादिविधानमित्येवमादि। मिता. on या. III. 312-13. देवल (in कल्पतरु गृहस्थकाण्ड) states 'अनृतं द्विविधं, असत्यं विसंवादश्च। प्रागभ्युपगतानामसंकीर्तनं विसंवाद इति।' p. 309.'

2330. कर्मणा मनसा वाचा सर्वावस्थासु सर्वदा। सर्वत्र मैथुनत्यागं ब्रह्मचर्यं प्रचक्षते॥ कूर्म II. 11. 18, यो. या. I. 55; अङ्गारसदृशी नारी घृतकुम्भसमः पुमान्। तस्माद्वारीषु संसर्गं दूरतः परिवर्जयेत्। लिङ्गपु. I. 8. 23.

based more or less on the Upaniṣads; vide e. g. Chān. Up. III. 17. 4 where tapas, ahiṁsā, truthfulness, dāna, (charity) and ārjava (straightforwardness) are put forward as virtues to be cultivated by a sacrificer, Br. Up. V. 2.3. where all men are asked to cultivate dama (self-restraint), dāna (charity), dayā (kindness). Therefore, the yamas prescribed by the Yogasūtra constitute what may be called extra-regarding duties and are mostly in the nature of prohibitions (such as 'don't injure anyone, don't tell a lie, don't rob a person, don't accept gifts'), while the niyamas are concerned with the individual himself (who has embarked on Yoga practice) and are of a positive character (viz. be clean, be contented, be austere, do study the Veda and be a devotee of Īśvara). The Amarakośa[2332] defines 'yama' as actions that are obligatory (or to be always performed) and that depend upon the body as the means for being carried out, while niyamas are acts that are not obligatory (or not to be continuously engaged in) and that depend (for carrying them out) on means that are outside the body (such as water &c). Śauca (cleanliness) is of two kinds, bāhya (of the body effected with water, loose earth, pañcagavya, pure food &c.) and ābhyantara (internal or mental). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 651–52 and vol. IV. pp. 310–311 for details of the śauca of both kinds. A verse of Manu (V. 106) deserves to be noted[2333] in this connection viz. 'of all kinds of śauca the highest is the one that relates to wealth (one must desire wealth without depriving another of his wealth by improper means); that man is śuci (pure) who is pure as to wealth and not he who is purified by loose earth and water.' Sūtras 33–34 of pāda II provide that when the practitioner of Yoga is assailed by the outbreak of the fever of perverse thoughts (such as 'I shall kill him who has harmed me', 'I shall tell a lie, I shall appropriate another's wealth, I shall commit adultery with another's wife'), he should revolve in his mind and cultivate the opposites of such thoughts and dwell on the consequences of such thoughts, viz. they cause endless suffering and lack of right knowledge. Yama and niyama constitute the preliminary ethical code which an aspirant for yoga must observe and some part of it must be followed by all men as Manu and Yāj. prescribe.

2332. शरीरसाधनापेक्षं नित्यं यत्कर्म तद्यमः । नियमस्तु स यत्कर्मानित्यमागन्तुसाधनम्॥ अमरकोश (2nd काण्ड, ब्रह्मवर्ग). क्षीरस्वामी quotes the yogasūtra definitions and explains 'आगन्तु चार्द्रं मृज्जलादि साधनं यत्रेति, अत एव कृत्रिमकर्म नियमः।'.

2333. सर्वेषामेव शौचानामर्थशौचं परं स्मृतम्। योऽर्थे शुचिर्हि स शुचिर्न मृद्वारिशुचिः शुचिः॥ मनुस्मृति V. 106; विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 22.89 has the same verse, but reads अन्न for अर्थ in both places. The विष्णुधर्मोत्तर III. 275. 13 states: तस्माद्धि सर्वशौचानां मनःशौचं परं स्मृतम्। Compare आहारशुद्धौ सत्त्वशुद्धिः in छा. उप. VII. 26. 2 and आहार ... शुद्धिरित्याचार्याः as quoted from हारीतधर्मसूत्र by अपरार्क on या. I. 154.

In sūtras 35 to 45 (of pāda II.) the results of the continuous practice of the several yamas and niyamas are set out viz. when the aspirant has become established in ahiṁsā, all beings (men and animals) give up enmity [2334] in his presence. When the aspirant for Yoga is well grounded in the practice of abstinence from falsehood his speech comes out to be effective unfailingly (that is, if he says to a person 'be you a righteous man' or 'may you attain heaven', the man becomes righteous or attains svarga). When he becomes rooted in abstinence from theft all jewels wait upon him from all quarters (that is, though he may not hanker after riches or means, the latter come to him of their own accord). When the Yogin is firmly fixed in brahmacarya,[2335] he secures energy (whereby he treads the path to such super-normal powers as aṇimā) and when he reaches perfection he is able to transfer knowledge about Yoga and its aṅgas to his disciples. In Y. S. I. 20 it is stated that asamprajñāta-samādhi follows when the yogin has faith, vīrya (energy) and other qualities. The greatest emphasis is laid on chastity in thought, word and deed for the yogin or the seeker for brahma (vide Muṇḍaka III. 1. 5, 'satyena labhyas-tapasā hyeṣa ātmā samyag-jñānena brahmacaryeṇa nityam'). The idea is that the yogin makes very rapid progress towards the final goal of samādhi and kaivalya if he is thoroughly chaste and that without it the practice of rājayoga is futile and dangerous. Those interested in the importance of 'brahmacarya' should read Mahātmā Gandhi's 'self-restraint versus self-indulgence' (3rd ed. 1928), particularly the Appendix I. pp. 137–158 which reproduce W. L. Hare's article). When the yogin is firmly established in non-acceptance of gifts he has a desire to know his past, present and future lives (and receives illumination thereon).

2334. अहिंसाप्रतिष्ठायां तत्संनिधौ वैरत्यागः। यो. सू. II. 35; वाचस्पति remarks 'शाश्वतिकविरोधा अप्यश्व-महिष-सूयक-मार्जारादिनकुलादयोऽपि भगवतः प्रतिष्ठितहिंसस्य संनिधानात्तद्धित्तात्मकारिणो वैरं त्यजन्ति.' Sanskrit poets love to dwell on this aspect of the hermitages of sages e. g. vide कादम्बरी, पूर्वभाग p. 45 (of Peterson's ed., description of Jābāli's hermitage') 'अस्य भगवतः प्रसादादेवोपशान्तवैरमपगत-मत्सरं तपोवनम्। अहो प्रभावो महात्मनाम्। अत्र हि शाश्वतिकमपहाय विरोधमुपशान्तात्मा-नस्तिर्यञ्चोऽपि तपोवनसुखमनुभवन्ति। तथाहि एष ... ... विशति शिखिनः कलापमातपाहतो निःशङ्कमहिः। अयमुत्सृज्य मातरं ... प्रक्षरत्क्षीरधारमापिबति कुरङ्गशावकः सिंहीस्तनम्।'.

2335. Vide छा. उप. VIII. 2. 10 यं यमन्तमभिकामो भवति यं कामं कामयते सोऽस्य सङ्कल्पादेव समुत्तिष्ठति तेन सम्पन्नो महीयते।; ब्रह्मचर्यप्रतिष्ठायां वीर्यलाभः। यो. सू. II. 38; I. 20 is 'श्रद्धावीर्यस्मृतिसमाधिप्रज्ञापूर्वक इतरेषाम्'. अपरिग्रहस्थैर्ये जन्मकथंतासम्बोधः। यो. सू. II. 39, कथंता means किंप्रकारता.

As a result of having to clean[2336] one's body the Yogin becomes disgusted with his own body and avoids contact with the bodies of others. Other results of cleanliness (of the mind) that arise are the purity of sattvaguṇa (i. e. not being assailed by rajas and tamas), gentleness, one-pointedness (of the mind), mastery over the senses and fitness for the sight (realization) of the Self. From contentment results[2337] supreme happiness. Tapas gives rise[2338] to perfection in the body (i. e. acquisition of some occult powers like aṇimā) and perfection as to the sense organs (such as being able to hear and to see what is distant) owing to the eradication of impurities (i. e. the kleśas and sin); (continuous) study of the Veda (and japa of om &c.) leads on to the union with (realization of) the deity he chooses. From devotion to Īśvara results perfection in Samādhi.

Āsana (bodily posture)[2339] is defined in Y. S. as one that is stable and easy (or comfortable). Āsana means a seat which is covered with kuśa grass, deer-skin and a garment in that order (this would be bāhya āsana) as laid down in Gītā (VI. 11),

---

2336. शौचात् स्वाङ्गजुगुप्सा परैरसंसर्गः। सत्त्वशुद्धिसौमनस्यैकाग्र्येन्द्रियजयात्मदर्शनयोग्यता च। यो. सू. II. 40–41. The first sūtra refers to बाह्यशौच and the 2nd to आभ्यन्तरशौच. मनु II. 98 defines जितेन्द्रिय as 'श्रुत्वा स्पृष्ट्वा च दृष्ट्वा च भुक्त्वा घ्रात्वा च यो नरः। न हृष्यति ग्लायति वा स विज्ञेयो जितेन्द्रियः॥'; vide कुल्लूक for illustrations.

2337. सन्तोषादनुत्तमः सुखलाभः। यो. सू. II. 42. The भाष्य on this only quotes a Śāntiparva verse (vide p. 1399 n. 2295 above). वाचस्पति explains न विद्यते अस्मादुत्तमः इत्यनुत्तमः.

2338. कायेन्द्रियसिद्धिरशुद्धिक्षयात् तपसः। स्वाध्यायादिष्टदेवतासंप्रयोगः। समाधिसिद्धिरीश्वरप्रणिधानात्। यो. सू. II. 43–45. भोज explains सम्प्रयोग as 'सा देवता प्रत्यक्षीभवति' and समाधिसिद्धि as 'स भगवानीश्वरः प्रसन्नः सकलान्तरायरूपान् क्लेशान् परिहृत्य समाधिं सम्बोधयति'. Vide यो. सू I. 23 for समाधिलाभ from ईश्वरप्रणिधान. The भाष्य on II. 44 explains 'देवा ऋषयः सिद्धाश्च स्वाध्यायशीलस्य दर्शनं गच्छन्ति, कार्ये चास्य वर्तन्ते'.

2339. स्थिरसुखमासनम्। प्रयत्नशैथिल्यानन्तसमापत्तिभ्याम्। ततो द्वन्द्वानभिघातः। यो. सू. II. 46–48. Compare श्वेता. उप. 'त्रिरुन्नतं स्थाप्य समं शरीरं' and 'समे शुचौ शर्करावह्निवालुकाविवर्जिते॥' (II. 8 and 10). The word अनन्त is explained in different ways. वाच० explains अनन्ते वा नागनायके स्थिरतरफणासहस्रविधृतविश्वम्भरामण्डले समापन्नं चित्तमासनं निर्वर्तयतीति'. This is rather far-fetched and unsatisfactory, as hardly anywhere else is अनन्तनागसमापत्ति recommended. भोज takes अनन्त to mean आकाश 'यदा चाकाशादिगत आनन्त्ये चेतसः समापत्तिः क्रियतेऽल्पावधानेन तादात्म्यमापद्यते तदा देहाहंकाराभावाद्भासनं दुःखजनकं भवति। This is a little better than Vācaspati's explanation. Brahma is described as सत्यं ज्ञानमनन्तं ब्रह्म (तै. उप. II. 1).

while the word āsana (in Yoga) means bodily posture. It should be noticed that the Yogasūtra does not expressly prescribe any of the numerous āsanas mentioned and defined in the Haṭhayogapradīpikā and other works on Haṭhayoga and indicates that those āsanas are not necessary in the practice of the Pātañjala Yoga and that any posture which is easy, stable and comfortable would be enough for the yogin. The Y. S. here follows the Śv. Up. (II. 8 and 10) and not the works on Haṭhayoga, if any existed in its times. In order to secure the posture described above the yogin should relax the usual physical movements of the body (prayatnaśaithilya) and bring the mind to reflect on the Infinite (brahma). As a result of perfect mastery over posture, he is not overwhelmed (or overcome) by the pairs of opposites (such as heat and cold, hunger and thirst).

A few words must be said about āsanas. The present author recommends to all those interested in āsanas a very useful and instructive handbook (in 188 pages) on 'āsanas' composed and published by Sri Kuvalayānanda of the Kaivalyadhāma at Lonavla near Poona (third impression in 1949) with 81 plates (78 on different āsanas and 3 on nauli). The Dakṣasmṛti (VII. 5) mentions Padmāsana and Yāj. in III. 198 appears to allude to it. Dr. K. T. Behanan on 'Yoga, a scientific evaluation' inserts 16 figures (between pp. 186–187) of several āsanas. Though the Y. S. does not mention any āsana by name yet the Vyāsabhāṣya[2340] names ten and indicates by the word 'ādi' that it knew more. Vīrāsana[2341] is mentioned in Raghuvaṃśa 13. 52. Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. IV. 1. 10 remarks that Padmakāsana and other special āsanas are propounded in Yogaśāstra. The V. S. (IV. 1. 7–10) has in view, acc. to Śaṅkarācārya, the description of āsana in the Gītā (VI. 11), the relaxation of bodily activities and stableness of posture indicated by such words as 'dhyāyatīva pṛthivī' (Chān. Up. VII. 6. 1). According to the H. P. (I. 17) āsana is the first aṅga of Haṭhayoga, that Śiva speaks of 84 āsanas, of which four āsanas called Siddha, Padma, Siṃha and Bhadra are the most essential (sārabhūta) and it recommends Siddhāsana as the best (I. 34) and describes it (I. 35). The Haṭhayogapradīpikā names and describes 15 āsanas in I. 19-55. The Dhyānabindu Upaniṣad states that there are innumerable āsanas but mentions the same four as the most prominent. Vide figures 16 (p. 55), 18 (p. 57), 62 (p. 97) in Śrī. Kuvalayānanda's work for Siddha, Padma and Siṃha āsanas respectively and figures 105 (p. 186), 106 (p. 187), and 108 (p. 188), for the āsanas called Siddha, Padma and Baddhapadma respectively in Prof. S. S. Goswami's work on Haṭhayoga and p. 28–30 for Siddhāsana, Padmāsana and Baddha-padmāsana respectively in Alain Danielou's work (London, 1949). The Śivasaṃhitā (III. 100) and Gheraṇḍasaṃhitā (II. 1) mention that there are 84 āsanas, while the Gorakṣaśataka[2342] states that there are as many āsanas as there are living species, that all of them are known to Śiva, that out of 84 lakhs of āsanas Śiva chose 84 and that out of these Siddhāsana and Padmāsana are the best and defines these two (I. 5–9).

2340. तद्यथा पद्मासनं वीरासनं भद्रासनं स्वस्तिकं दण्डासनं सोपाश्रयं पर्यङ्कं क्रौञ्चनिषदनं हस्तिनिषदनमुष्ट्रनिषदनं समसंस्थानं स्थिरसुखं यथासुखं चेत्येवमादीनि। भाष्य on योगसूत्र II. 46. About क्रौञ्च० and the following two वाचस्पति says 'क्रौञ्चादीनां निषण्णानां संस्थानदर्शनात् प्रत्येतव्यानि'. सोपाश्रयं 'with the support of a cushion' 'योगपट्टकयोगात् सोपाश्रयम्' (वाचस्पति). In E. I. vol. XXI p. 260, the Kolagallu Ins. of the Rāṣṭrakūṭa king Khoṭṭiga of Śaka 889 (exact date, 17th February 967 A.D.) mentions 'Daṇḍāsana,' (p. 263) and 'Lohāsanī' p. 264 l. 35. दण्डासनं is explained by वाचस्पति as 'उपविश्य श्लिष्टाङ्गुलिकौ श्लिष्टगुल्फौ भूमिश्लिष्टजङ्घोरुपादौ प्रसार्य दण्डासनमभ्यसेत्'. Yoga had permeated society so much that in several Inscriptions Yogaśāstra and Yoga techniques are mentioned; e. g. in the Tewar Stone Inscription (C. I. I. vol. IV p. 306) of Gayākarṇa in the Cedi year 902 (=1151 A. D.), Yogaśāstra (verse 6) and Pātañjalāgama (verse 8) are referred to and in verse 11 the first quarter is प्राणायामसमाधिसिद्धानियमध्यानासनैरन्वहम्. न च पद्मासनाद्योगो न नासाग्रनिरीक्षणात्। दक्षस्मृति VII. 5, explained by विश्वरूप on या. III. 189 (T. S. S.). ऊरुस्थोत्तानचरणः सव्ये न्यस्योत्तरं करम्। उत्तानं किंचिदुत्तान्य मुखं विष्टभ्य चोरसा॥ याज्ञ. III. 198.

The word Yoga is applied to many matters in an extended sense (i. e. the method or methods by which union with the 2341. वीरासन is explained by वाच० as 'स्थितस्यैकतरः पादो भूम्यस्त एकतरश्चाकुञ्चितजानोरुपरि न्यस्त इत्येतद्वीरासनम्।', while मल्लिनाथ (on रघु०) quotes वसिष्ठ's description एकपादमथैकस्मिन्विन्यस्योरुणि संस्थितम्। इतरस्मिंस्तथा चान्यं वीरासनमुदाहृतम्॥. This is almost the same as ह. यो. प्र. I. 21. वाचस्पति explains all the āsanas named by the bhāṣya except the padmāsana (which he says is well known). पद्मासन is described in ह. यो. प्र. II. 58 and गोरक्षशतक verse 9. The त्रिशिखिब्राह्मणोपनिषद् (verses 39–40) describes पद्मासन and चद्मपद्मासन and so does Kāśikhaṇḍa 41. 62–63. भद्रासन is defined by वाच० as 'पादतले वृषणसमीपे सम्पुटीकृत्य तस्योपरि पाणिकच्छपिकां कुर्यात्तद्भद्रासनम्' (on यो. सू. II. 46). The योगयाज्ञ० (ed. by Mr. Diwanji) defines it as 'पार्श्वपादौ च पाणिभ्यां दृढं बद्ध्वा सुनिश्चलम्। भद्रासनं भवेदेतत्सर्वव्याधिविषापहम्॥' (III. 12).

2342. आसनानि च तावन्ति यावन्त्यो जीवजातयः। एतेषामतुलाम्भेदान् विजानाति महेश्वरः॥ सिद्धं भद्रं तथा सिंहपद्मं चेति चतुष्टयम्। ध्यानबिन्दू० 42 p. 196 (Adyar) The verse आसनानि ... महेश्वरः occurs in गोरक्षशतक 5.

Supreme Self may be promoted) in the Bhagavadgītā, which itself is described as Yogaśāstra and each chapter of which is also called Yoga. For example, we have in the Gītā 'abhyāsayoga' (8. 8, 12. 9), karmayoga (3. 3. and 7), jñānayoga (3. 3.), bhaktiyoga (14. 26). A few other works also do the same. Some Western writers speak of several kinds of Yoga such as Mantrayoga, Jñānayoga, Bhaktiyoga, Karmayoga, Rājayoga and Haṭhayoga (vide 'Bengal Lancer' by F. Yeats-Brown, London, 1930, p. 284), R. C. Oman's 'The Mystics, ascetics and saints of India' p. 172 (ed. of 1905), Geraldine Coster's 'Yoga and Western psychology' p. 10, Alain Danielou's work pp. 83 ff. (for descriptions of Mantrayoga, Layayoga, Kuṇḍalinīyoga &c.). Some late Sanskrit works like the Yogatattvopaniṣad [2343] and Śivasaṁhitā (5. 9) speak of four Yogas viz. Mantrayoga, Haṭhayoga, Layayoga and Rājayoga. All these have in view the system of Patañjali, but each emphasizes some particular aspect of yoga discipline. But there are really only two main systems of Yoga, viz. the one expounded in the Yogasūtra and its bhāṣya by Vyāsa and the other dealt with in such works as the Gorakṣaśataka, the Haṭhayogapradīpikā of Svātmārāma-yogin[2344] with the commentary called Jyotsnā by Brahmānanda. Briefly, the difference between the two is that the Yoga of Patañjali concentrates all effort on the discipline of the mind, while Haṭhayoga mainly concerns itself with the body, its health, its purity and freedom from diseases. This is illustrated by the facts that Patañjali defines āsana as any posture that is 'sthirasukha', while works on Haṭhayoga describe many āsanas like Mayūrāsana, Kukkuṭāsana, Siddhāsana, which are deemed to remove 2343. योगो हि बहुधा ब्रह्मन् भिद्यते व्यवहारतः। मन्त्रयोगो लयश्चैव हठोसौ राजयोगकः॥ मातृकादियुतं मन्त्रं द्वादशाब्दं तु योजयेत्। क्रमेण लभते ज्ञानमणिमादिगुणान्वितम्॥ अल्पबुद्धिरिमं योगं सेवते साधकाधमः॥ लययोगश्चित्तलयः कोटिशः परिकीर्तितः। गच्छंस्तिष्ठन् स्वपन् भुञ्जन् ध्यायेच्चिष्कलमीश्वरम्। स एव लययोगः स्यात् &c.। योगतत्त्वोप० verses 19. 21–23.

---

2344. A translation of this work (which contains 388 verses) into English by Srinivasa Iyengar has been published by the Theosophical Publishing House, Madras (3rd ed. 1949). The proper name of the work appears to be हठप्रदीपिका, as shown by I. 3 'हठप्रदीपिकां धत्ते स्वात्मारामः कृपाकरः', by the colophons at the end of each Upadeśa and the first verse of the commentary of Brahmānanda 'Haṭhapradīpikā Jyotsnā'. Acc. to the com. ह and ठ mean सूर्य and चन्द्र and represent respectively right and left nostril-breath. The Śivasaṁhitā is translated by Rai Bahadur Srischandra Vidyārṇava, Pāṇini Office, 2nd ed. 1923 and Gheraṇḍasaṁhitā was translated by Srischandra Vasu, Bombay, 1896.

diseases (I. 31) and which are said to be 84 (for the names of the 84 āsanas vide pp. 146-149 of Danielou's work) and Haṭhayoga deals with such processes[2345] as Dhauti (washing the stomach), Basti (yogic enema) and Nauli (shaking the abdomen) about which Patañjali is silent. Haṭhayoga, if practised with proper guidance and perseverance, will not only endow a man with a strong, healthy, pure and active body but also may develop inner strength and happiness. The technique of Haṭhayoga claims three kinds of results viz. (1) cure of diseases and disorders of the mind also; (2) attainment of supernatural powers called siddhis; (3) leading to Rājayoga and Kaivalya. The Haṭhayogapradipikā itself states that Haṭhayoga

---

2345. The six क्रियाs of हठयोग are: धौतिर्बस्तिस्तथा नेतिस्त्राटकं नौलिकं तथा। कपालभातिश्चैतानि षट् कर्माणि प्रचक्षते॥ ह. यो. प्र. II. 22. धौति is described in the Journal योगमीमांसा vol. II. pp. 170-177, बस्ति (yogic enema) in vol. I. pp. 101-104, नौलि in vol. I. pp. 25-26 and vol. IV. pp. 320-24 and कपालभाति in the Handbook on 'Prāṇāyāma' (by Shri Kuvalayānanda), part I. pp. 79-100. There are various methods of Dhauti. The present author, who has been suffering from hyperacidity for over 60 years and from duodenal ulcer for at least 35 years, practised on the advice of an Indian doctor holding an English degree in medicine washing of the stomach by swallowing a large quantity of tepid water and then vomitting it. This was done for several years, generally once a week (or oftener). He can say from personal experience that it washed the stomach and reduced acute pain. But he found or thought that it was no cure and gave up the practice after some years. नेति is cleansing the nose and त्राटक is fixing the eyes without winking on a minute object till the tears fill the eyes (निरीक्षेन्निश्चलदृशा सूक्ष्मलक्ष्यं समाहितः। अश्रुसम्पातपर्यन्तमाचार्यैस्त्राटकं स्मृतम्॥ ह. यो. प्र. II. 31). त्राटक is of various types such as नक्षत्रत्राटक, सूर्यत्राटक, आदर्शत्राटक, भ्रूमध्यत्रा०, नासाग्रदृष्टित्रा०. One with weak eyes must not attempt it except under the guidance of an expert. It is a preliminary to ekāgratā (one-pointedness of mind) and dhyāna. Those interested in the Haṭhayoga may read 'Haṭhayoga, the report of a personal experience', by Theos Barnard, Columbia University Press, New York, 2nd impression, 1945. This author travelled over the whole of India, settled down at a guru's retreat in the hill near Ranchi, and went to Tibet also at his guru's bidding. The book contains 36 photographs, 28 of which represent various āsanas, VII, XXVI-VII of Mahāmudrā, Vajrolimudrā and Pāśinīmūdrā, XXXII and XXXIII represent the first and second stages of Uḍḍiyāna-bandha and Nos. XXXIV-VI represent Naulī-madhyamā, Naulī-vāmā and Naulī-dakṣiṇā. The H. Y. P. (III. 6-7) names ten mudrās. Another recent work is 'The Yoga of Health, Youth and Joy' (a treatise on Haṭha-yoga adapted to the West) by Sir Paul Dukes (Cassell, London 1960). This is a very useful book, contains about seventy excellent photographs and is written with great moderation after long personal practice. The author was engaged for years in lecturing to the army on the usefulness of yoga practices.

is expounded only for leading on to Rājayoga[2346] i. e. Rājayoga is the principal fruit of Haṭhayoga and not siddhis and Kaivalya is due to Rājayoga. The Haṭhayogapradīpikā enumerates the names of the same eight aṅgas as Patañjali does, but its yamas are ten of which taking a light meal is the principal and ahiṁsā is the first among niyamas. Besides the eight angas, it deals specially with Mahāmudrā, Khecarī, Jālandhara, Uḍḍiyāna and Mūlabandha, Vajrolī, Amarolī and Sahajolī (I. 26–27). The Haṭhayogapradīpikā (I. 5–8) mentions that Haṭhayoga started from Ādinātha (i. e. Śiva) and then enumerates 35 great siddhas in all from Matsyendranātha, Gorakṣanātha onwards. The famous exposition of the Bhagavadgītā by Jñānadeva called Jñāneśvarī cites at the end the Guruparamparā as Ādinātha, Matsyendranātha, Gorakṣanātha, Gahinīnātha, Ṇivṛttinātha, Jñānadeva.

There are other differences between the works on Haṭhayoga and the Pātañjala Yoga. According to the Gorakṣaśataka and H. Y. P. the main aim of āsana and prāṇāyāma is to rouse the Kuṇḍalinī (the vital force in a person slumbering at the base of the spine coiled like a snake) and take it through the several cakras and the Suṣumnānāḍī to brahmadvāra, while the Y. S. hardly ever dilates upon chakras and nāḍīs.[2347] Several people after reading some modern works on Kuṇḍalinī are tempted to make efforts to rouse the Kuṇḍalinī. This is a dangerous experiment. Shri Purohit Swami in his 'Aphorisms of Yoga' states that the awakening of the Kuṇḍalinī is a terrifying experience, that on the first day on which the Kuṇḍalinī was awakened, the whole body was as it were on fire and he thought that he was dying and that he drank in three months gallons of milk and clarified butter and ate all the leaves on two nimba trees (pp. 57–58 of the translation). The germ of the doctrine of nāḍīs in Tantras is found in a verse occurring in Kaṭhā Up. VI. 16 and Chān. Up. VIII. 6. 6 'there are hundred and one nāḍīs (arteries) of the heart; one of them penetrates the (crown of) head; moving upwards by it, one attains immortality; the others (of the nāḍīs) serve for departing in various directions.' The Praśna Up. (III. 6–7) states that each of 101 nāḍīs has 72 sub-nāḍīs, each of which again has 1000 more. Vide Muṇḍaka Up. II. 2. 6. In Chān. Up. VIII. 6. 1 it is stated that the nāḍīs of the heart consist of a subtle substance, brown, white, blue, yellow or red in colour. This is probably the germ of the statement of a nāḍī being called piṅgalā. The Maitrāyaṇī Up. VI. 21 speaks of the nādī going upwards as Suṣumnā.

---

2346. केवलं राजयोगाय हठविद्योपदिश्यते । हठ० I. 2, on which the com. उद्घोतना remarks राजविद्या एव मुख्यं फलं न सिद्धयः । राजयोगद्वारा कैवल्यं फलम् । ; after mentioning several siddhas such as मत्स्येन्द्रनाथ, शाबरानन्द, भैरव, गोरक्ष, the हठयोगप्रदीपिका (V. 8) concludes इत्यादयो महासिद्धा हठयोगप्रभावतः ।

2347. Y. S. mentions Nābhicakra, which means no more than the navel that is circular in shape, and Kūrmanāḍī in III. 29 and III. 31 respectively. Vide Gorakṣaśataka verses 10–23, 54–67 for the chakras, nāḍis, brahmadvāra &c. and H. Y. P. III for the awakening of Kuṇḍalinī. The Gorakṣaśataka is set out (transliterated text and translation) in W. G. Briggs' work 'Gorakhnath and the Kanphāṭas' pp. 284–304 and was recently edited and published by Swami Kuvalayanand with translation and notes (1959). Dr. Hazariprasad Dwivedi has written a work called 'Nath Sampradaya' (1950) and Dr. Mohansingh also has a work on 'Gorakhnath and medieval Hindu mysticism'. If we take the Guruparamparā set out in the Jñāneśvarī, Gorakhnath should be taken to have flourished about 1100 A. D. or a little later. Vide 'the life of Gorakṣanāth and the succession of disciples' (in Marathi) by Mr. R. C. Dhere (1959). pp. 224.

The Viṣṇupurāṇa mentions Bhadrāsana [2348] which passage is quoted by Vācaspati. The Purāṇas, Vāyu (11. 13), Mārkaṇḍeya (36. 28), Kūrma (II. 11. 43), Liṅga (I. 8. 86), Garuḍa (I. 238. 11) mention the same three āsanas, viz. Svastika, Padma and Ardhāsana. The Viṣṇudharmottara-purāṇa (III. 283. 6) prescribes for dhyāna the āsanas called Svastika, Sarvatobhadra, Kamala (Padma) and Paryaṅka. The Bhāgavata III. 28. 8 employs the same words as the Gītā VI. 11 about āsana (viz. 'śucau deśe pratiṣṭhāpya).

Āsanas are of two kinds, one type being helpful for prāṇāyāma, meditation and concentration, such as Padma, Siddha and Svastika (figure 20 p. 59 in Śrī Kuvalayānanda's handbook on 'Asanas'). The other kind of āsanas are helpful in eradicating diseases and for physical culture. But most of them require different physical movements and the final form assumed by these postures would make deep meditation difficult, if not impossible (vide Śīrṣāsana figures 24–27 between pp. 62–63 of Śrī Kuvalayānanda's handbook on Āsanas), Sarvāṅgāsana (figures 33–36) of the same work, Hālāsana (fig. 42–47 of the same), Viparītakaraṇī (figures 77–78 pp. 121–123), Mayūrāsana 2348. आसनमप्युक्तं विष्णुपुराणे—एवं भद्रासनादीनां समास्थाय गुणैर्युतम्। इति। वाच० on यो. सू. II. 48. The half verse is विष्णुपु. VI. 7. 39.

(figure 72 p. 109). The Tejobindu Upaniṣad I. 23 (Adyar ed)[2349] holds 'that alone is (proper) āsana which makes continuous meditation on brahma possible; other postures only lead to discomfort.' It should not be supposed that one who seeks higher yogic disciplines must devote some time to āsanas and then pass on to the next stage. The āsanas are primarily meant for physical culture and eradication of diseases. If the individual yogin possesses a tolerably sound body he may proceed with prāṇāyāma and other aṅgas. Besides the postures, the practitioner of Yoga is asked to gaze steadily at the tip of his nose (Gītā VI. 13).

Some regulations are prescribed about the food to be taken or avoided by a seeker after Yoga and about the places where he is to practise. The Śāntiparva[2350] of the Mahābhārata provides that the yogin should subsist on cooked small particles of grains, or oilcakes and should avoid oily substances and even when subsisting on yāvaka (i. e. kulmāṣa or cooked barley grains) for long, he would still be strong; he should drink water and milk mixed together and should resort to caves. The Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa (q. by Kṛtyakalpataru on Mokṣa pp. 167–177) states 'The yogin should begin meditation in unoccupied spots, in forests, caves and should avoid practising Yoga in noisy places, near fire and water, in old cowsheds, where four roads meet, near a heap of dried leaves, on a river bank, in a cemetery or in a place where creeping creatures exist, in a dangerous place, near a well, near a caitya (funeral ground) or an anthill'. The same purāṇa says that he should not practise when his stomach is windy, or he is hungry or tired or when disturbed in mind, nor when it is very cold or hot or windy. The Devala Dharmasūtra[2351] prescribes that a yogin should practise meditation in a shrine, empty house, mountain cave, on the sands of a river, in caves, or in a forest, in a pure spot free from danger. H. Y. P. I. 61 and 64 prescribe what foods to avoid and what foods may be eaten. The Goraksaśataka[2352] prescribes that the yogin should give up pungent, sour and salted food and should subsist on milk diet. The Gītā (VI. 16-17) says 'one cannot succeed in Yoga who eats too much nor one who observes total fast and Yoga removes pain for him who takes proper food and exercise. The Chān. Up. (VII. 26. 2) where Sanatkumāra gives instruction to Nārada about the Reality remarks 'Purity of the mind follows on purity of food &c. (āhāraśuddhau sattvaśuddhiḥ' &c.). Aparārka on Yāj. I. 154 quotes a long prose passage (on p. 221) from Hārīta "one should be pure and should subsist on a limited quantity of food that would be enough or useful for his purpose as the ācāryas say 'purity of mind ...food". It is clear that Hārīta takes the words 'āhāraśuddhau &c.' literally, while Śaṅkarācārya in his bhāṣya on Chān. takes āhāra to mean 'experience of objects of sense such as Śabda'.

2349. सुखेनैव भवेद्यस्मिन्नजस्रं ब्रह्मचिन्तनम्। आसनं तद्विजानीयादन्यत्सुखविनाशनम्॥ तेजोबिन्दु-उप. I. 25.

2350. कणानां भक्षणे युक्तः पिण्याकस्य च भक्षणे। स्नेहानां वर्जने युक्तो योगी बलमवाप्नुयात्॥ युञ्जानो यावकं रूक्षं दीर्घकालमरिन्दम। एकाग्रमो विशुद्धात्मा योगी बलमवाप्नुयात्। पक्षान् मासानृतूंश्चैतान् सञ्चरंश्च गुहास्तथा। अपः पीत्वा पयोमिश्रा योगी बलमवाप्नुयात्॥ शान्ति. 289. 43–45 (cr. ed.) = 300. 43–45 चित्र. ed.) q. by कृत्यकल्प० (on मोक्ष pp. 173–176). Vide मार्कण्डेय (36. 48–50), ब्रह्मपुराण 234. 7–9, कूर्म II. 11. 47–52, स्कन्द. काशीखण्ड 41. 65–66, लिङ्गपु. I. 8. 79–84 for places to be avoided for yoga practice.

2351. देवतायतनशून्यागारगिरिकन्दरनदीपुलिनगुहाख्यानामन्यतमे शुचौ निराबाधे विभक्ते ... मनसा तच्चिन्तने ध्यानम्। देवल q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष p. 181). Compare श्वेता० उप, II. 10.

Prāṇāyāma—It is this anga of Yoga that figures most in the works on Dharmaśāstra from the earliest times. Literally the word means 'restraint or pause of prāṇa'. Other synonymous words are 'prāṇasaṁyama' (note 2310) and 'prāṇasaṁrodha'. The important point is: What does 'Prāṇa' mean here. The word is derived from the root 'an' (to breathe) with the prefix 'pra'. The verb and its forms occur in the Ṛgveda as in I. 101. 5, X. 121. 3, X. 125. 4. In various passages of the Ṛg. prāṇa means simply 'breath' (as in I. 66. 1, III. 53. 21, X. 69. 6). In Ṛg. X. 90. 13 (prāṇād-vāyur-ajāyata) it is stated that Vāyu (air, wind) arose from the prāṇa of the primeval puruṣa. The word 'asu' also is used in the Ṛgveda in the sense of 'prāṇa' in I. 113. 16 (udhīrdhvam jīvo asur-na āgāt), I. 164. 4. We have both prāṇana (breath) and jīvana (life) in Ṛg. I. 48. 10 (addressed to Uṣas). Perhaps apāna is suggested in Ṛg. X. 189. 2 (antaścarati rocanāsya prānād-apānatī). All the five 2352. कट्वम्ललवणत्यागी क्षीरभोजनमाचरेत्। गोरक्षशतक 50; कट्वम्लतीक्ष्णलवणोष्ण-हरीतशाकसौवीरतैलतिलसर्षपमद्यमत्स्यान्। आजादिमांसं-दधि-तक्रकुलत्थकोल-पिण्याक-हिङ्गुलशुनाद्यमपथ्यमाहुः॥ गोधूमशालियवषष्टिकशोभनान्नं क्षीराज्यखण्डनवनीतसिता-मधूनि। शुंठीपटोलकफलादिकपञ्चशाकं मुद्गादि विष्णमुदकं च यमीन्द्रपथ्यम्। पुष्टं सुमधुरं स्निग्धं गव्यं धातुप्रपोषणम्। मनोभिलषितं योग्यं योगी भोजनमाचरेत्। ह. यो. प्र. 61. 64-65.

---

names of prāṇas appear in pairs as in the note[2353] below from Tai. S. In the Tai. S. I. 7. 9. 2 occur the three words 'prāṇa, apāna and vyāna'. The Atharvaveda (in VIII. 1. 1) mentions 'prāṇāḥ' and 'apānāḥ' in the plural and 'asu', 'prāṇa' and 'āyuḥ' in VIII. 1. 3, all probably meaning 'life'. In the Upaniṣads, prāṇa becomes the vital force or principle of all beings, the representative or symbol of brahma; vide Bṛ. Up. I. 6. 3 (Prāṇo vā amṛtam, nāmarūpe satyam, tābhyām-ayam prāṇaśchannaḥ), Bṛ. Up. I. 5. 23, which, after quoting a verse that the sun rises from Prāṇa and sets in Prāṇa, goes on to say (tasmādekam-eva vratam caret, prāṇyāc-caiva-apānyācca, nen-mā ṛāpmā mṛtyur-āpnavad-iti) 'therefore one must observe only one vow, he should inhale and exhale with the (fearful) thought that otherwise, the Evil one, Death, might seize me'. Here it appears that we have the germ of the theory of the importance of prāṇāyāma. In Chān. Up. V. 18–24 it is stated that the five āhutis are offered to prāṇa, vyāna, apāna, samāna and udāna (in the words 'Prāṇāya svāhā' &c.) at the time of a meal and that one who knows the true meaning of Agnihotra and offerings offers it in all worlds, in all beings and in all selves. Even now these āhutis are taken before meals by brāhmaṇas, only the order of the five differs. Praśna II. 13 says :—'All this that is established in the three worlds is under the dominance of Prāṇa.' In Chān. Up. IV. 3. 3 Prāṇa is again given five names on account of its working in the different parts of the human body viz. prāṇa, apāna, vyāna, samāna and udāna (all five being named in the Tai. S.). It follows that some distinction among the operation of the five prāṇas must have been made at least a thousand years before the Christian era.

2353. प्राणापानौ मे पाहि समानव्यानौ मे पाह्युदानव्यानौ मे पाहि। तै. सं. I. 6. 3. 3. On this सायण has in the com. the clear and interesting note 'एक एव वायुः शरीरगतस्थानभेदात् कार्यभेदाच्च प्राणादिनामभिर्भिद्यते। स्थानभेदः कैश्चिदुक्तः। हृदि प्राणो गुदेऽपानः समानो नाभिसंस्थितः। उदानः कण्ठदेशस्थो व्यानः सर्वशरीरगः॥ इति। उच्छ्वास-निःश्वासौ प्राणव्यापारः। मलमूत्रयोरधः पातनमपानव्यापारः। भुक्तस्यान्नरसस्य शरीरे साम्येन नयनं समानव्यापारः। उद्गारहिक्कादिरूपोर्ध्वदानव्यापारः। कृत्स्नासु शरीरनाडीषु व्याप्य प्राणापानवृत्त्योः सन्धिकाले शरीरस्य बलप्रदानं व्यानव्यापारः॥. Then सायण relies on छा. उप. I. 3. 3 यद्वै प्राणिति स प्राणः यदपानिति सोऽपानः। अथ यः प्राणापानयोः सन्धिः स व्यानः। यो व्यानः सा वाक्. In connection with the parts of the animal to be offered in a sacrifice as प्रायश्चित्त, the तै. सं. (III. 4. 1. 3–4) states: पुरस्ताद्वै नाभ्यै प्राण उपरिष्टादपानो यावानेव पशुस्तस्यावरुन्धे।; यथा सम्राडेवाधिकृतान् विनियुङ्क्ते। एतान् ग्रामानेतान् ग्रामानधि-तिष्ठस्वेति। एवमेवैष प्राण इतरान् प्राणान् पृथक् पृथगेव संनिधत्ते। पायूपस्थेऽपानम्। चक्षुः श्रोत्रे मुखनासिकाभ्यां प्राणः स्वयं प्रातिष्ठते। मध्ये तु समानः। एष ह्येतद्धुतमन्नं समं नयति प्रश्न III. 4–5.

In this work it is not necessary to enter upon an exhaustive discussion on prāṇa from the Upaniṣads. A controversy has gone on about the meaning of prāṇa and apāna. Caland, Keith, Dumont and a few others hold that 'prāṇa' means in the ancient Vedic literature 'expiration' and 'apāna' means 'inspiration', but that this meaning was revised in later days. On the other hand almost all Sanskrit commentators and writers and G. W. Brown, Edgerton and others hold the opposite view.[2354] The present author agrees with the latter view viz. that 'prāṇa' meant and means 'inhalation or thoracic breath', while 'apāna' means 'abdominal breath.' All scholars are agreed that these are certainly the meanings of the words prāṇa and apāna in all classical Sanskrit literature, the opposite view being confined to the ancient period even by those who hold that prāṇa and apāna meant respectively 'expiration' and 'inspiration'. We should as far as possible so construe all Upaniṣad passages as to yield the same sense consistently. The Praśna Up. (certainly an early Upaniṣad, though not among the earliest ones) contains the following interesting and rather decisive passage "just as the king appoints his officers saying '(each of) you should govern such and such villages', in the same way this prāṇa assigns to the other prāṇas separate spheres viz. apāna in the organs of excrement and generation, the prāṇa going in from the mouth and nose establishes himself (as king) in the eyes and ears, Samāna in the middle (of the spheres of Prāṇa and Apāna) i. e. in the navel, since it is he (Samāna) that carries the food offered (in the fire i. e. in the stomach) equally (to all bodily parts)."

Caland, Dumont and others who hold that the word 'prāṇa' in ancient Sanskrit literature means 'expiration', chiefly rely on Śaṅkarācārya's explanation of Chān.[2355] Up. I. 3. 3. (yadvai prāṇiti sa prāṇo yad-apāniti soऽpānaḥ &c.). They hold that 'antarākarṣati vāyum' in Śāṅkarabhāṣya (on Chān. Up I. 3. 3) only mean 'inhaling'; but that expression is capable of meaning 'it draws the air into the inside of the body (i. e. in the abdomen) and what is more important, one has to note that the interpretation put on Śaṅkara's words here by Caland, Dumont and others is directly opposed to Śaṅkarācārya's own explanations in several other passages of the Upaniṣads, such as Bṛ. Up. I. 5. 3, III. 4. 1, Chān. Up. III. 13. 1-6, Kaṭha 5. 3; Praśna III. 4-5 (vide note 2353). The bhāṣya on Bṛ. Up. I. 5. 3 [2356] remarks 'Prāṇa is an activity of the heart which moves about in the mouth and nose and is so called because it is led forth; Apāna is a downward movement starting from the navel and is so called because it casts out urine and excreta'. On Praśna Up. III. 4 (quoted in n. 2353) the Śāṅkarabhāṣya says the same thing about Prāṇa and Apāna. Not only Śaṅkarācārya but a much earlier authority viz. the Dharmasūtra of Devala (mentioned by Śaṅkara, vide p. 1352 n. 2208 above) defines the working of Prāṇa and Apāna as done by Śaṅkarācārya in his bhāṣya on Bṛ. Up. I. 5. 3.

---

2354. Vide Z. D. M. G. vol. 55 pp. 261–265 and vol. 56 pp. 556–558, J. A. O. S. vol. 39 (1919) pp. 104–112 on 'Prāṇa and Apāna' by G. W. Brown, J. A. O. S. vol. 77 (1957) pp. 46–47 by Prof. Dumont, J. A. O. S. vol. 78 (1958) pp. 51–57 (Prof. Dumont versus Prof. Edgerton).

2355. शंकराचार्य on छा. I. 3. 3 explains 'यद्वै पुरुषः प्राणिति मुखनासिकाभ्यां वायुं बहिर्निःसारयति स प्राणाख्यो वायोर्वृत्तिविशेषः, यदपानित्यपश्वासिति ताभ्यामेवान्तरा कर्षति वायुं सोऽपानाख्या वृत्तिः।'; vide also शाङ्करभाष्य on बे. सू. II. 4. 42 (पञ्चवृत्तिर्मनोवदव्यपदिश्यते) 'प्राणः प्राग्वृत्तिरुच्छ्वासादिकर्मा, अपानोऽर्वाग्वृत्तिर्निश्वासादिकर्मा। व्यानस्तयोः सन्धौ वर्तमानो वीर्यवत्कर्महेतुः। उदान ऊर्ध्ववृत्तिरुत्क्रान्त्यादिहेतुः। समानः सनं सर्वेष्वङ्गेषु पीतान्नरसानयतीति।'. The गीता in IV. 29 'अपाने जुह्वति प्राणं प्राणेऽपानं तथापरे। प्राणापानगती रुद्ध्वा प्राणायामपरायणाः॥' appears to use the two words in a special sense.

In the Yoga system (which is based on the Upaniṣads) prāṇa implies more than mere breath. It means vital energy, powers such as speech, eye, ear, manas in the body as well as in different forms in the universe. Its most perceptible manifestation in the human body is the movement of the lungs. The Y. S. inculcates on the yogic student the doctrine that by scientific control (as laid down in it) of prāṇa in the body it is possible to obtain control over the deep-seated (and ordinarily imperceptible) forces in human consciousness as well as in the external world.

2356. On बृह. उप. 1. 5. 3 'श्रीण्यात्मनेऽकुरुतेति मनो वाचं प्राणम्। ... यः कश्च शब्दो वागेव सा। एषा ह्यन्तमायत्तैषा हि न प्राणोऽपानो व्यान उदानः समानोऽन इत्येतत्सर्वं प्राण एव ...।', the important भाष्य passage is अथ प्राण उच्यते। प्राणो मुखनासिकासञ्चारी हृदयवृत्तिः प्रणयनात्प्राणः। अपनयनान्मूत्रपुरीषादेरपानोऽधोवृत्तिः आनाभिस्थानः'; on प्रश्न III. 5 the relevant भाष्य on अपान is: अपानमात्मभेदं, मूत्रपुरीषाद्यपनयनं कुर्वंस्तिष्ठति संनिधत्ते।'; on कठोप. 5. 3 'ऊर्ध्वं प्राणमुन्नयत्यपानं प्रत्यगस्यति' the भाष्य is 'ऊर्ध्वं हृदयात्प्राणं प्राणवृत्तिं वायुमुन्नयत्यूर्ध्वं गमयति तथा अपानं प्रत्यगधो अस्यति क्षिपति यः इति वाक्यशेषः।'. This clearly shows that prāṇa is taken by the bhāṣya as meaning 'inhalation or thoracic breath' and apāna as 'abdominal breath' or 'exhalation'. तत्र ऊर्ध्वं नाभेर्गतो रेचनोच्छ्वासक्षरणोद्गारकर्मा प्राणः। अधो नाभेरुत्सर्गान्नद्यकर्माऽपानः। देवल q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 170); वनपर्व 213. 7 (चित्र० ed.) says 'बस्तिमूलं गुदं चैव पावकं समुपाश्रितः। वहन् मूत्रं पुरीषं वाप्यपानः परिवर्तते॥'.

The word 'prāṇāyama' does not occur in any of the principal Upaniṣads.[2357] But it occurs frequently in the Sūtras. For example, the Āp. Dh. S. provides that if a householder[2358] is still asleep when the sun rises he should fast and keep silent that day (till night) and observes that, according to some ācāryas, he should continue to perform prāṇāyāma till he feels exhausted (by way of penance). The Gaut. Dh. S. states that if animals other than dogs, snakes, frogs and cats pass between the teacher and the pupil when the latter has sat down before the former for study, he (pupil) should practise three prāṇāyāmas and should partake of some clarified butter (by way of prāyaścitta). Similarly, it provides that if a person smells the odour from the mouth of one that has drunk liquor, he should perform (as penance) three prāṇāyāmas and should partake of clarified butter and that if a Vedic student chances to see an impure person like a Cāṇḍāla, he should, after performing one Prāṇāyāma, look at the sun. Similarly, Baud. Dh. S. (IV. 1. 4-11, prose) provides prāṇāyāmas as expiation for several lapses.

The above examples show that in the times of the Sūtras (i. e. several centuries before the Christian era) the conception of prāṇāyāma had been so developed as to hold that it was a sort of penance and religious rite for removing the taint attaching to acts and omissions that were condemned by the then society. At this stage prāṇāyāma appears merely to have been a religious act independent of any theory about its being one of the eight aṅgas of yoga.

To the five prāṇas mentioned in Vedic literature, the Purāṇas and other medieval works added five more prāṇas with different[2359] names.

2357. In a श्लोक ten ancient and principal upaniṣads are enumerated 'ईश-केन-कठ-प्रश्न-मुण्ड-माण्डूक्य-तित्तिरि। ऐतरेयं च छान्दोग्यं बृहदारण्यकं तथा॥.'

2358. स्वपन्नभ्युदितोऽनाश्वान्वाग्यतोऽहस्तिष्ठेत्। आ तमितोः प्राणमायच्छेदित्येके। आप. ध. सू. II. 5. 12. 14-15; श्वनकुलसर्पमण्डूकमार्जाराणां व्यहमुपवासो विप्रवासश्च। प्राणायामा घृतप्राशनं चेतरेषाम्। गौ. I. 61; गन्धाघ्राणे सुरापस्य प्राणायामा घृतप्राशनं च। अशुचिं दृष्ट्वादित्यमीक्षेत प्राणायामं कृत्वा। गौ. 23. 6 and 22. Compare with गौ. 23. 6 मनु XI. 149 and with गौ. 23. 22 मनु V. 86.

2359. प्राणोऽपानः समानश्च उदानो व्यान एव च। नागः कूर्मस्तु कृकलो देवदत्तो धनञ्जयः॥...उद्गारे नाग आख्यातः कूर्म उन्मीलने तु सः। कृकलः क्षुत्कार्यंत्र देवदत्तो विजृम्भणे। धनञ्जयो महाघोषः सर्वगः स मृतेपि हि। इति यो दशवायूनां प्राणायामेन सिध्यति। लिङ्गपु. I. 8. 61, 65-66; compare योगयाज्ञवल्क्य (ed. by Mr. Diwanji) IV. 64-71 for the ten vāyus and their functions; वनपर्व 213. 16 (वहन्त्यन्नरसान् नाड्यो दशप्राणप्रचोदिताः) mentions the function of ten prāṇas. Vide Dr. B. N. Seal's 'the positive sciences of the ancient Hindus' (Longmans, Green, 1915) pp. 228-231 for explanation about these ten.

It is now proper to see how the Y. S. defines and explains prāṇāyāma. 'When the stability of posture has been assured (or secured) prāṇāyāma is the pause (lit. cutting off) in the movements of inhalation and exhalation'. The bhāṣya explains 'śvāsa' as 'drawing in of the air which is outside one's body' and 'praśvāsa' as the expelling of the air in the trunk (or chest)' and the absence of both these is prāṇāyāma. This shows that the chief element in prāṇāyāma is the absence of both inhalation and exhalation i. e. kumbhaka in the technical language of yoga works. The next sūtra states that prāṇāyāma (the pause in movement) is of three kinds, viz. external, internal and suppressed. The idea is that Kumbhaka (stopping or pause) may be done after one has taken in air from outside (first kind) or after one has expelled air from the trunk (2nd kind) or when one is in a normal condition (i. e. neither making an effort to fill his chest with air or emptying it of air) one may make a pause (3rd kind). Each of these may be regulated and considered from the point of the units of space, time (measurement by kalās or mātrās) and numbers. Prāṇāyāma is called mṛdu (mild) when pause is kept up for 36 mātrās, then moderate one when kept up for 72 mātrās and keen (tīvra) when kept up for 108 mātrās. When practised for days, fortnights and months, it is called protracted and when performed with great skill it is called sūkṣma (subtle).

In connection with prāṇāyāma we must look to Y. S. I. 34 also. That sūtra lays down that for securing the undisturbed calm of the mind one remedy is the expulsion and retention of the breath.[2360] It appears from that sūtra and its bhāṣya that vidhāraṇa (retention of breath, i. e. Kumbhaka) is prāṇāyāma.

Some explanation must be offered about deśa (space), kāla and saṅkhyā in relation to prāṇāyāma. Ordinarily a healthy grown-up man breathes in and out in about four seconds i. e. about 15 times a minute (21600 times in one day and night). In order to measure the force of the recaka a piece of cotton or a thin thread is held at some distance from the nostrils and the distance up to which the air driven from the nostrils makes the cotton or thread move or cease to move is measured by means of finger-breadths. As regards time several units of time are mentioned because in those ancient days there was no scientific apparatus. The time taken for winking (nimeṣa) is equal[2361] to the time required for pronouncing a short vowel and this was called mātrā. The time taken for touching one's knees thrice with one's hand and snapping the thumb and forefinger was also called mātrā. Other units are passed over. The general rules are that both recaka and pūraka must be uniform and quiet, that the time given for pūraka should be half of that given to recaka. Three views about the duration of pūraka, kumbhaka and recaka are that they should be in the proportion of 1 : 4 : 2 or 1 : 2 : 2 or the same for all. The Purāṇas give different mātrās for prāṇāyāmas e. g. the Mārkaṇḍeya (36. 13, 14) says that the laghu (mṛdu of the bhāsya) is of twelve mātrās, double of that is madhyama and the uttarīya (tīvra in the bhāṣya) is for three times twelve mātrās, while the Garuḍapurāṇa (I. 226. 14–15) puts down the figures as 10, 20, 30 respectively and the Kūrmapurāṇa (II. 11. 32) agrees with the Mārkaṇḍeya. The Mitākṣarā on Yāj. III. 200-201 provides that prāṇāyāma is of three varieties (adhama of 15 mātrās, madhyama of 30 mātrās and uttama of 45 mātrās). The Liṅgapurāṇa (I. 8. 47–48) also puts forth 12, 24, 36 mātrās as the time of nīca udghāta, madhyama udghāta and mukhya and states that obvious results of these three are respectively perspiration, tremor and utthāna (prasāda-kampanotthāna-janakaśca yathākramam). Compare Märk. 36. 16 which states that those three are to be mastered respectively by the different lengths of prāṇāyāma (prathamena jayet svedam madhyamena ca vepathum | viṣādam hi tṛtīyena jayed-doṣān anukramāt ॥).

2360. प्रच्छर्दन-विधारणाभ्यां वा प्राणस्य। यो. सू. I. 34; कौष्ठ्यस्य वायोर्नासिकापुटाभ्यां प्रयत्नविशेषाद्गमनं प्रच्छर्दनं विधारणं प्राणायामस्ताभ्यां वा मनसः स्थितिं सम्पादयेत्। भाष्य.

It should be noticed that neither Patañjali nor the Vyāsabhāṣya employs the well-known words, pūraka, recaka and 2361. निमेषकालतुल्यं हि विद्याल्लघ्वक्षरं च यत् । वायुपु. 57. 6; निमेषो मानुषो योयं मात्रामात्रप्रमाणतः । ब्रह्म 231. 6; निमेषोन्मेषणा मात्रा तालो लघ्वक्षरं तथा ॥ मार्क० 36. 13 (Venk. ed.). विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 73. 1 लघ्वक्षरसमा मात्रा निमेषः; परिकीर्तितः । वाचस्पति says 'स्वजानुमण्डलं पाणिना त्रिः परामृश्य च्छोटिकावच्छिन्नः कालो मात्रा ताभिः षट्त्रिंशता मात्राभिः परिमितः प्रथमः उद्घातो मृदुः । स एव द्विगुणीकृतो द्वितीयो मध्यमः । स एव त्रिगुणीकृतस्तृतीयस्तीव्रः ।' on यो. सू. II. 50; अङ्गुलिमोक्षत्रितयं जानूर्वोः परिमार्जनमथापि । तत्कालत्रयमपि तज्ज्ञा मात्रासंज्ञां प्रशंसन्ति ॥ बृहद्योगिया. VIII. 12 q. as योगियाज्ञवल्क्य in कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 171). The गोरक्षशतक says 'प्राणायामो भवेत्त्रेधा मात्राद्वादशसंयुतः ॥ द्वादशाधमके मात्रा मध्यमे द्विगुणस्ततः । उत्तमे त्रिगुणा मात्राः प्राणायामस्य निर्णयः ॥ verses 47-48; vide वायुपु. 11. 80-81 मन्द्रो द्वादशमात्रस्तु उद्घाता द्वादश स्मृताः । मध्यमश्च द्विरुद्घातश्चतुर्विंशतिमात्रिकः ॥ उत्तमः स्यात् त्रिरुद्घातो मात्राः षट्त्रिंशदुच्यते ॥. The योगतत्त्वोपनिषद् (verses 41-42) lays down the proportion of the three (पूरक, कुम्भक and रेचक) is as 16, 64, 32 mātrās, while the गरुडपु. (I. 226. 14-15) speaks of 10, 20, 30 mātrās.

---

kumbhaka, but only śvāsa, praśvāsa and gativicchedа.[2362] Besides, Patañjali and Vyāsa say nothing about the japa of Om, Gāyatrī or Vyāhṛtis in prāṇāyāma, as the smṛtis and later medieval works do. A third matter to be considered is that in some later works recaka, pūraka and kumbhaka are said to be three prāṇāyāmas and this latter is said to be of four kinds, three set out in Y. S. II. 50 and the fourth in II. 51.

The words 'recaka', 'pūraka' and 'kumbhaka' also must be, however, regarded as ancient enough. They are mentioned and defined by the Dharmasūtra of Devala[2363] referred to by 2362. तस्मिन्सति श्वासप्रश्वासयोर्गतिविच्छेदः प्राणायामः । बाह्याभ्यन्तरस्तम्भवृत्तिर्देशकालसंख्याभिः परिदृष्टो दीर्घसूक्ष्मः । बाह्याभ्यन्तरविषयाक्षेपी चतुर्थः । यो. सू. II. 49–51; सत्यासनजये बाह्यस्य वायोराचमनं श्वासः कौष्ठ्यस्य वायोर्निःसारणं प्रश्वासः तयोर्गतिविच्छेदः उभयाभावः प्राणायामः । भाष्य on II. 49. The word वृत्ति is to be connected with each of the three words बाह्य, आभ्यन्तर and स्तम्भ. Here the कुम्भक that follows रेचक is called बाह्यवृत्ति and the one that comes after पूरक is called आभ्यन्तरवृत्ति. The कुम्भक that is made when there is neither रेचक nor पूरक is called स्तम्भवृत्ति. For an exhaustive and lucid exposition of the Pātañjala sūtras on prāṇāyāma, the bhāṣya thereon and the views of other commentators, vide Yogamīmāṃsā (of Shri Kuvalayānanda) vol. VI. pp. 44–54, 129-145, 225–257.

---

2363. देवलः । त्रिविधः प्राणायामः । कुम्भो रेचनं पूरणमिति । निश्वासनिरोधः कुम्भः । अजस्रनिःश्वासो रेचनम् । निश्वासाध्मानं पूरणमिति । स पुनरेकद्वित्रिभिरुद्घातै– (हृषातै?) र्मृदुर्मन्दस्तीक्ष्णो वा भवति । प्राणापानव्यानोदानसमानान् सङ्कुचनं मूर्धानमाहत्य (हत्य!) निवृत्तिश्चोद्घातः (हृषातः?)। कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 170) and अपरार्क p. 1023. Compare व्यासभाष्य 'संख्याभिः परिदृष्टा एतावद्भिः श्वासप्रश्वासैः प्रथम उद्घातस्तद्वज्जिगृहीतस्यैतावद्भिर्द्वितीय उद्घातः । एवं तृतीयः । एवं मृदुरेवं मध्य एवं तीव्र इति संख्यापरिदृष्टः' on यो. सू. II. 50. The राजमार्तण्ड explains 'उद्घातो नाम नाभिमूलात्प्रेरितस्य वायोः शिरस्यभिहननम्'. This word is differently explained by different writers; vide योगमीमांसा vol. II. part 3 pp. 225–234. Sometimes पूरक, रेचक and कुम्भक are said to be three प्राणायामs, sometimes all three together are deemed to be one प्राणायाम. Each of these again is either मृदु, मन्द (or मध्यम) and तीव्र. Vide बृहद्योगिया. VIII. 7 त्रिविधं केचिदिच्छन्ति तथा च नवधा परे। मृदु मध्याधिमात्रत्वादेकैकं त्रिविधं भवेत् ॥. Vide विष्णुधर्मोत्तर III. 280. 1 रेचकं पूरकं चैव कुम्भकं च तथा द्विजाः। एकत्रयवस्थो विज्ञेयः प्राणायामो महाफलः॥ रेचक-पूरक-कुम्भकेष्वस्ति श्वास-प्रश्वासयोर्गतिविच्छेद इति प्राणायामसामान्यलक्षणमेतदिति । तथाहि । यत्र बाह्यो वायुराचम्यान्तर्धार्यते पूरके तत्रास्ति श्वास-प्रश्वासयोर्गतिविच्छेदः । यत्रापि कौष्ठ्यो वायुर्विरेच्य बहिर्धार्यते तत्रास्ति श्वास-प्रश्वासयोर्गतिविच्छेदः । एवं कुम्भकेपीति । वाचस्पति on यो. सू. II. 50; पूरकः कुम्भकश्चैव रेचकस्तदनन्तरम् । प्राणायामस्त्रिधा ज्ञेयः कनीयो मध्यमोत्तमः॥ पूरकः कुम्भको रेच्यः प्राणायामस्त्रिलक्षणः । बृहद्योगिया. VIII. 9–10; the last half verse is quoted by स्मृतिच., I. p. 142 (as योगया.) and the three are defined in बृहद्योगिया. VIII. 19–21 of which verse 19 is q. by स्मृतिच. I. p. 142. कुम्भक is so called because in it there is resemblance to a jar filled with water (which remains steady in it). राजमार्तण्ड explains 'तस्मिञ्जलमिव कुम्भे निश्चलतया प्राणा अवस्थाप्यन्ते इति कुम्भकः ।'. Vide पाणिनि V. 3. 97 'प्रतिकृतौ च'; इवार्थे कन् स्वाङ्गसमुदायेन चेत्संज्ञा गम्यते । So कुम्भक means कुम्भ इव कुम्भकः कुम्भसदृशस्य संज्ञा.

Śaṅkarācārya (vide note 2208 above). The Bṛhad-Yogi-Yāj. and Vācaspati also mention them. The Viṣṇupurāṇa in a poetic description of the Śarad season employs them by way of śleṣa[2364] (as below). Several modes of performing prāṇāyāma are prescribed. One of the simplest is to stop the right nostril with the thumb, to fill in air through the left nostril according to one's ability; then to throw out the air through the right nostril; again inhale through the right nostril and eject air through the left. Do this at least thrice. Practise this at least twice every day, preferably in the morning after bath and in the evening or four times (before dawn, during midday, in the evening or at midnight). In the beginning kumbhaka need not be practised at all. After some practice with pūraka and recaka, kumbhaka may be begun after recaka. Kumbhaka after pūraka is to be practised with great caution and should be attempted under the direction of an expert.

The Manusmṛti contains[2365] a great eulogy of prāṇāyāma in the following words 'even three prāṇāyāmas performed according to the rules prescribed and accompanied by the vyāhṛitis and praṇava (the syllable om) should be regarded as the highest tapas for a brāhmaṇa; just as in the case of metals (like gold and silver) impurities are burnt when they are melted in the blast of a furnace, so blemishes (like passion &c.) of the organs of sense (including the mind) are destroyed by the control of breath; one should extinguish the blemishes (passion, hatred &c.) by prāṇāyāmas, sin by dhāraṇā, contact with the objects of sense by pratyāhāra and such attributes as are ungodly (viz. anger, avarice, jealousy &c.) by meditation (on brahma). The Y. S. states that from the practice of prāṇāyāma results the dwindling of actions (or kleśas) that envelop enlightenment (which is the characteristic of sattva) and the mind of the yogin becomes fit for fixed attention.[2365] The Gorakṣaśataka[2367] provides 'a yogin always eradicates diseases by āsana, sin by prāṇāyāma and mental disturbance by pratyāhāra'. The Smṛtis state that prāṇāyāmas have great efficacy in destroying sins. Manu XI. 248 (=Vasiṣṭha 26. 4, Baud. Dh. S. IV. 1. 31 and Śaṅkhasmṛti XII. 18-19) states 'sixteen prāṇāyāmas performed everyday for a month together with the vyāhṛtis and praṇava (om) purify even the murderer of a brāhmaṇa. Manu XI. 199 and 201 prescribe the performance of a single prāṇāyāma as a purification for light lapses or riding an ass or a camel and such incidents as being bitten by a dog, jackal, horse, camel, boar or man. Yāj. III. 305 prescribes the performance of a hundred prāṇāyāmas for the destruction of all sins, of upapātakas (lesser sins described in Yāj. III. 234-242) and of sins for which no specific prāyaścitta is provided. Manu II. 83 (=Vasiṣṭha X. 5 and Viṣṇudharmasūtra 55.83) states 'the one syllable (om) is (the representative of) the highest brahma and prāṇāyāmas are the highest tapas'.

---

2364. प्राणायाम इवाम्भोभिः सरसां कृतपूरकैः । अभ्यस्यतेऽन्वहं रेचकाकुम्भकादिभिः ॥ विष्णुपु. V. 10. 14.

2365. प्राणायामा ब्राह्मणस्य त्रयोऽपि विधिवत्कृताः । व्याहृतिप्रणवैर्युक्ता विज्ञेयं परमं तपः ॥ दह्यन्ते ध्मायमानानां धातूनां हि यथा मलाः । तथेन्द्रियाणां दह्यन्ते दोषाः प्राणस्य निग्रहात् ॥ प्राणायामैर्दहेद् दोषान् धारणाभिश्च किल्बिषम् । प्रत्याहारेण संसर्गान् ध्यानेनानीश्वरान् गुणान् ॥ मनुस्मृति VI. 70–72. All these are बृहद्योगिया. VIII. 29, 30, 32. The last verse occurs also in शङ्खस्मृति VII. 13, वायुपु. X. 93, भागवत III. 28, मार्कण्डेयपु. 36. 10=39, 10 B. I. ed.; it is quoted from मार्कण्डेय by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 168), which explains 'दोषान् स्वेदश्वेथुप्रभृतीन्, अनीश्वरान्, प्राकृतान्'. अपरार्क p. 990 explains 'अनीश्वरा गुणा रागद्वेषादयः'.

It may interest readers to note that the great Jaina monk, ācārya Hemacandra, condemns prāṇāyāmas by saying that they allow no rest to the mind, that there is physical effort in pūraka, kumbhaka and recaka and that prāṇāyāma is an obstacle to mukti.[2368]

In kumbhaka performed after pūraka the nerves, heart and lungs are under strain and permanent damage to these may result from careless or hasty practice of kumbhaka after pūraka. Those suffering from lung or cardiac affections should not enter upon the practice of prāṇāyāma on their own initiative but must first consult an expert. Swami Vivekananda said long ago that all students of Yoga[2369] 'are expressly and earnestly reminded 2366. ततः क्षीयते प्रकाशावरणम्। धारणासु च योग्यता मनसः। यो. सू. II. 52-53; 'प्राणायामानभ्यस्यतोऽस्य योगिनः क्षीयते विवेकज्ञानावरणीयं कर्म। ...तथा चोक्तम्। तपो न परं प्राणायामात्ततो विशुद्धिर्मलानां दीप्तिश्च ज्ञानस्य। इति। भाष्य.

---

2367. आसनेन रुजो हन्ति प्राणायामेन पातकम्। विकारं मानसं योगी प्रत्याहारेण सर्वदा॥ गोरक्षशतक 54.

2368. तत्रामोति मनः स्वास्थ्यं प्राणायामैः कदर्थितम्। प्राणस्यायमने पीडा तस्य स्याच्चित्तविप्लवः॥ पूरणे कुम्भने चैव रेचने च परिश्रमः। चित्तसंक्लेशकरणान्मुक्तेः प्रत्यूहकारणम्॥ योगशास्त्र of हेमचन्द्र, 6th प्रकाश verses 4-5 (pub. in जैनग्रन्थमाला, Surat, Vikrama Saṁvat 1995).

2369. Vide p. 123 Vol. I of the complete works of Swami Vivekānanda, Mayāvatī ed. of 1946. Vide a similar warning given by Swami Kuvalayā-that with few exceptions Yoga can safely be learnt by direct contact with a teacher'. The fact, that the Yogasūtra containing 195 sūtras in all devotes only five sūtras (II. 49–53) to prāṇāyāma and that even these five are of a very general nature, indicates that Patañjali intended that the yogin should not practise prāṇāyāma by merely listening to or reading these sūtras but should approach an expert yogin for instruction and guidance.

(Continued on next page)

It should be noticed that Patañjali does not require in his definition of prāṇāyāma the mental or inaudible repetition of any syllable like 'om' or any mantra like the Gāyatrī. But the Smṛtis prescribe the practice of prāṇāyāma every day in the Sandhyāvandana. Yāj. (I. 22) prescribes [2370] that a man of the three higher varṇas must every day take a bath, perform mārjana (sprinkling water with kuśas) with the mantras (Ṛg. X. 9. 1–3 'āpo hi ṣṭhā &c.'), practise prāṇāyāma, worship of the sun and japa of Gāyatrī (Ṛg. III. 62. 10) and that prāṇāyāma comprises the japa three times of Gāyatrī preceded by the Vyāhṛtis, each being preceded by Om and followed by the Śiras. Prāṇāyāma as described by Yāj. is prescribed even in modern times for the morning and evening Sandhyā adorations. Prāṇāyāma with mental repetition of 'Om' or a 'mantra' is called 'sagarbha' [2371] or 'sabīja,' while prāṇāyāma not so accompanied nanda in 'Prāṇāyāma' part I. p. 66 and by Shree Purohit Swami in 'Aphorisms of Yoga' (London, 1938 p. 56). Figures 27 to 40 (pp. 68–89 in Shri Kuvalayānanda's popular handbook on Prāṇāyāma, part one) illustrate the three (pūraka &c.) in prāṇayāma of the best scientific type.

---

(Continued from last page)

2370. स्नानमब्दैवतैर्मन्त्रैर्मार्जनं प्राणसंयमः। सूर्यस्य चाप्युपस्थानं गायत्र्याः प्रत्यहं जपः। गायत्रीं शिरसा सार्धं जपेद् व्याहृतिपूर्विकाम्। प्रतिप्रणवसंयुक्तां त्रिरयं प्राणसंयमः॥ याज्ञ. I. 22–23. The second verse occurs in वसिष्ठ 25. 13, बृहद्योगिया. VIII. 3, अत्रिसंहिता verse 298. The whole japa for प्राणायाम would be ओं भूः ओं भुवः ओं स्वः ओं महः ओं जनः ओं तपः ओं सत्यं ओं तत्सवितुर्वरेण्यं भर्गो देवस्य धीमहि। धियो यो नः प्रचोदयात्। ओं आपो ज्योती रसोऽमृतं ब्रह्मभूर्भुवः स्वरोम्। This has to be repeated thrice in the सन्ध्यावन्दन. The words आपो ज्यो ... रोम् are called शिरः of गायत्री. Vide बृहद्योगिया. VIII. 4–6 q. by स्मृतिच. I p. 141 as योगया.

2371. अगर्भश्च सगर्भश्च द्वितीयस्तु ततो वरः। जपध्यानं विनाऽगर्भः सगर्भस्तत्समन्वितः॥ कूर्म II. 11. 31 mentions these two. प्राणास्त्यजनिलं वश्यमभ्यासात्कुरुते तु यः। प्राणायामः स विज्ञेयः सबीजोऽबीज एव च॥ विष्णुपु. VI. 7. 40 q. by वाचस्पति on यो. सू. II. 52 and by अपरार्क p. 1022 (which explains सबीजः समन्त्रकः, अबीज इतरः). Vide also कूर्म II. 46. 40–41 'आवरुह्यात्तु सगुणं पूजयेत्परमेश्वरम्। पिनाकिनं त्रिनयनं जटिलं कृत्तिवाससम्। रुक्माभं वा सहस्रार्कप्रख्यं वैदिकी श्रुतिः। एष योगः समुद्दिष्टः सबीजो मुनिपुङ्गवाः॥'.

is called 'agarbha' or 'abīja' and it is said that 'sagarbha' is the better of the two. Śāntīparva (304. 9. cr. ed. = Ch. ed. 316. 9–10) speaks of saguṇa and nirguṇa prāṇāyāma. The Yogabhāṣya (on Y. S. II. 52) quotes a passage [2372] 'there is no higher tapas than prāṇāyāma, therefrom arises purification of the taints and knowledge flashes forth.'

The H. Y. P. speaks of eight kinds of Prāṇāyāma (in II. 44). The two most important ones, viz Ujjāyī and Bhastrikā are described by Śrī Kuvalayānanda in chap. IV. pp. 67–68 and chap. VI. pp. 101–115 respectively in his handbook on Prāṇāyāma, part one and the other six viz. Sūryabhedana, Sītkārī, Śītalī, Bhrāmarī, Mūrcchā, Plāvinī in. pp. 6–25 of the handbook part 2. H. Y. P. (II. 48–70) describes all the eight at some length.

Dr. Rele in his work 'Mysterious Kundalinī' provides at the very beginning a diagram of the autonomic nervous system according to the Western anatomical science, showing the six cakras and identifying the positions of these six and the sahasrāracakra (lit. thousand-petalled i. e. having numberless petals). He propounded an original view that the Kuṇḍalinī is the right vagus nerve. His book is very interesting and he has explored a very large field of yogic practices. He has very thoroughly utilized his deep knowledge of Western anatomy and physiology, but he himself admits in his preface (p. 2) that the explanations of the various Yogic practices and phenomena given by him are possible suggestions only. But it may be noted that Sir John Woodroffe, who made a deep study of Yoga and of Tantra works and who wrote a foreword to Dr. Rele's work, was not prepared to accept Dr. Rele's identification of Kuṇḍalinī with the right Vagus Nerve (p. ii) and holds that Kuṇḍalinī is not a nerve or any other physical substance or mental faculty but rather the Ground Substance of both (Foreword p. iii). Similarly, Shri Kuvalayānand (in his popular handbook on prāṇāyāma part 1, p. 57 n. 3), after referring to Dr. Rele's admission about his explanations being possible suggestions only, points out that Dr. Rele had not tried a single experiment in the laboratory nor had he taken much care to consult the practical experience of the students of Yoga and he states that to him the whole book of Dr. Rele seems to be of doubtful scientific value. He goes further and asserts that Swami 2372. तथा चोक्तम्। तपो न परं प्राणायामात्ततो विशुद्धिर्मलानां दीप्तिश्च ज्ञानस्य। इति। योगभाष्य on II. 52; compare विष्णुधर्मोत्तर III. 280. 4 प्राणायामात्परं नास्ति द्विजातीनां तथा तपः।.

Vivekananda's lectures on Rājayoga suffer from the same drawbacks as the work of Dr. Rele does. Śrī Kuvalayānand shows (on pp. 121–126) the value of prāṇāyāma for physical health and the proper functioning of the lungs, the organs of digestion, the liver, pancreas and kidneys and asserts that the spiritual value of Prāṇāyāma is very great.

Pratyāhāra (withdrawal of the sense organs from the objects of sense) is defined[2373] in Y. S. II. 54 as 'when the senses have no contact with (are withdrawn from) their objects (because the mind is restrained) and thereby resemble the state of the mind itself, there is pratyāhāra.' When the mind, being restrained by the yogin, does not come in contact with the objects of sense, viz. sound, touch, form, taste, smell, the organs of sense also become disconnected with them, the organs come to resemble the mind itself (hence the words 'anukāra iva' in the sūtra). From this (non-contact) results the complete mastery over the senses. The idea is that in restraining the mind from the objects of sense the organs also are withdrawn from contact with them. Since the mind is made ekāgra (one-pointed) the sense organs together with the mind do not cognise or apprehend the objects. Pratyāhāra is the checking of the outgoing activities of the mind and freeing it from being the slave of the senses. The Śāntiparva (cr. ed. 188. 5-7 = Ch. ed. 195. 6–7) speaks of it. The Viṣṇupurāṇa in V. 10. 14 (in describing Śarad, i. e. autumn, states 'Śarad removed the turbidness of waters as pratyāhāra withdraws the organs from their objects') refers to pratyāhāra[2374] 2373. स्वविषयासंप्रयोगे चित्तस्वरूपानुकार इवेन्द्रियाणां प्रत्याहारः। ततः परमा वश्यतेन्द्रियाणाम्। यो. सू. II. 54–55. The word प्रत्याहार is formed from the root हृ with प्रति and आ. The राजमार्तण्ड explains 'इन्द्रियाणि विषयेभ्यः प्रतीपमानीयन्तेस्मिन्निति प्रत्याहारः'. The word प्रत्याहार literally means 'bringing back'. The भाष्य explains 'स्वविषयसंप्रयोगाभावे चित्तस्वरूपानुकार इवेति चित्तनिरोधे चित्तवत्रिरुद्धानीन्द्रियाणि नेतरेन्द्रियजयवदुपायान्तरमपेक्षन्ते। यथा मधुकरराजं मक्षिका उत्पतन्तमनूत्पतन्ति निविशमन्तमनु निविशन्ते तथेन्द्रियाणि चित्तनिरोधे निरुद्धानीत्येष प्रत्याहारः।'. The illustration of the queen bee and the honey-making bees occurs in Praśna Up. II. 4 'तद्यथा मक्षिका मधुकरराजानमुत्क्रामन्तं सर्वा एवोत्क्रामन्ते तस्मिंश्च प्रतिष्ठमाने सर्वा एव प्रातिष्ठन्ते। एवं वाङ्मनश्चक्षुः श्रोत्रं च। This sūtra is variously interpreted but the bhāṣya follows the view of Jaigīṣavya.

2374. शब्दादिष्वनुपक्तानि निगृह्याक्षाणि योगवित्। कुर्यान्चित्तानुकारीणि प्रत्याहारपरायणः॥ वश्यता परमा तेन जायते निश्चलात्मनाम्। इन्द्रियाणामवश्यैस्तैर्न योगी योगसाधकः॥ विष्णुपु. VI. 7. 43–44. These are also quoted by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 173) and by अपरार्क p. 1025. The मार्क० पु. (39. 41 of Cal. ed. =36, 41–42 of Venk. edition) says 'शब्दादिभ्योऽनिवृत्तानि यदक्षाणि यतात्मभिः। प्रत्याहियन्ते योगेन प्रत्याहारस्ततः स्मृतः॥ q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष p. 173).

as 'Indriyāṇindriyārthebhyaḥ pratyāhāra ivāharat'.| Vācaspati quotes two verses from the Viṣṇupurāṇa which employ the very characteristic words of the Y. S. and probably borrow the idea and language from the Y. S. The Dharmasūtra of Devala[2375] explains pratyāhāra as 'establishing (or yoking) the mind to the soul by bringing it back (to the soul) when it has swerved from the path of Yoga, because of its subtlety, its restlessness, its thoughtlessness or its force'. The Kūrmapurāṇa[2376] defines it as 'the suppression or mastery over the organs of sense that are naturally attracted to objects of sense'. Vide Śāntiparva (cr. ed. 232. 13) also.

It appears that when the Chān. Up. (in VIII. 15) enumerates the circumstances which enable a person to reach the worlds of brahman it has an idea of pratyāhāra in the word 'ātmani sarvendriyāṇi sampratiṣṭhāpya' ('when he concentrates all his senses in the self').

The third pāda of the Y. S. is called 'Vibhūti-pāda' (pāda that deals with the super-normal powers of the yogin). The word 'vibhūti' occurs in Praśna 5. 4 where it is stated that he who contemplates on Om of the dvimātra type is taken to the world of the moon where he enjoys 'vibhūti' and again returns to the earth. There the word probably means nothing more than prosperous life. The third pāda first deals with the last three of the eight aṅgas of Yoga, the first five being called bahiraṅga (indirect helpers of samprajñāta-samādhi), while the last three are said to be antaraṅga of samprajñāta-samādhi (but even these three are bahiraṅga with reference to nirbīja Yoga, as the latter may occur even in the absence of the three 'dhāraṇā' &c. These three are called dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi and these three when practised on the same object are called saṁyama, which is a technical term in the Yoga system. Vibhūtis are the results of saṁyama of various kinds. Instead of employing the three words dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi Patañjali employs expressly or impliedly the word 'saṁyama' in most of the sūtras from 16 to 52 of the 3rd pāda.

2375. अशुलाद्राप्रवाहाचनाद्वलवत्त्वाद्वा योगब्रह्मस्य मनसः पुनः प्रत्यानीयार्थे योजनं प्रत्याहारः। देवल q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष० p. 173); अपरार्क p. 1025 ascribes this sūtra to हारीत and reads 'अशुलाद्राप्रवाहाचनाद्वलवत्त्वाद्वा योगब्रह्मस्य ... प्रत्याहारः' (we should read -त्त्वाद्वा योग०). कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष० p. 173) explains 'अर्थोत्प्रत्या'.

2376. इन्द्रियाणां विचरतां विषयेषु स्वभावतः। निग्रहः क्रियते तेषां प्रत्याहारस्तु तत्परम्॥ कूर्म II. 11. 38. स्कन्द, काशीखण्ड 41. 101 'इन्द्रियाणां हि चरतां विषयेषु यदृच्छया। बलात्प्रत्याहरणं सुधिया प्रत्याहारः स उच्यते॥. सुधिया means 'विषयदोषदर्शनेन'.

Dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi are said to be the direct auxiliaries of Yoga and are three successive stages, the preceding one leading to the next. Dhāraṇā is the holding of the mind to a certain spot or point [2377] or object. The bhāṣya explains that the mind is to be held down to such spots (in one's body) as the navel, the heart-lotus, the head, the light (in the eye), the tip of the nose, the tip of the tongue and the like or on external objects (such as images of gods in various forms). In this stage attention has to be firmly held upon the chosen object for a period of time determined by the will of the yoga aspirant. In this stage there are three elements, the subject, the object and the act of concentration. The next stage is dhyāna, which will be described immediately below. The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa speaks of ten dhāraṇās on the different parts of the yogin's own body [2378] and is in accordance with the plural 'dhāraṇāsu ca yogyatā manasaḥ' (in Y. S. II. 53) employed by Patañjali himself. The Āśvamedhikaparva also employs the plural 'dhāraṇāsu'. Vide the Śāntiparva (cr. ed. 188. 8-12 = Ch. ed. 195.8). The Yājñavalkyasmṛti [2379] in a succint manner brings 2377. देशबन्धश्चित्तस्य धारणा। तत्र प्रत्ययैकतानता ध्यानम्। यो. सू. III. 1, 2; the भाष्य on these is: नाभिचक्रे हृदयपुण्डरीके मूर्ध्नि ज्योतिषि नासिकाग्रे जिह्वाग्र इत्येवमादिषु देशेषु बाह्ये वा विषये चित्तस्य वृत्तिमात्रेण बन्ध इति धारणा। तस्मिन्देशे ध्येयालम्बनस्य प्रत्ययस्यैकतानता सदृशः प्रवाहः प्रत्ययान्तरेणापरामृष्टो ध्यानम्। The लिङ्गपु I. 8. 42-43 appears to echo the words of यो. सू. in 'चित्तस्य धारणा योक्ता स्थानबन्धः समासतः। ... तत्रैकचित्ततायानं प्रत्ययान्तरवर्जितम्।' The Upaniṣads speak of the heart as lotus (vide above note 1717 and शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. I. 3. 14-21 दहर उत्तरेभ्यः &c.). ज्योतिषि probably refers to the Puruṣa in the eye (as in छा. VIII. 7. 4 or IV. 15. 1 (य एषोऽक्षिणि पुरुषो दृश्यत एष आत्मेति होवाच) or the Lord in one's heart; वाचस्पति explains बाह्ये वा विषये by quoting several verses of the विष्णुपुराण VI. 7. 77-85 where it speaks of contemplation on the form of Viṣṇu with a benign face, lotus-like eyes, wearing ear-rings and having the Śrīvatsa jewel on his chest, with four or eight long arms, wearing a yellow garment and holding conch, śārṅga bow, mace.

---

2378. भ्रूनाभ्यां हृदये चाथ तृतीये च तथोरसि। कण्ठे मुखे नासिकाग्रे नेत्रभ्रूमध्यमूर्धसु॥ किंचित्तस्मात्परस्मिंश्च धारणा परमा स्मृता। दशैता धारणाः प्राप्य प्राप्नोत्यक्षरसात्म्यताम्॥ मार्कण्डेय (36. 44-45 =39. 44-45, Cal. ed.), गरुडपु (I. 226. 21-22) q. by अपरार्क p. 1023 and कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष० p. 173). Compare कूर्म 'हृत्पुण्डरीके नाभ्यां वा मूर्ध्नि पर्वसु मस्तके। एवमादिषु देशेषु धारणा चित्तबन्धनम्॥' II. 11. 39; तथैव सुप्ते योगी धारणासु समाहितः। प्राप्नोत्याशु परं स्थानं लक्ष्यमुक्त इवाङ्गजः॥ आश्वमेधिक 19. 37.

2379. ऊरुस्थोत्तानचरणः सव्ये न्यस्योत्तरं करम्। उत्तानं किंचिदुन्नाम्य मुखं विस्तभ्य चोरसा। निमीलिताक्षः सत्त्वस्थो दन्तैर्दन्तानसंस्पृशन्। तालुस्थाग्रजिह्वश्च संवृतास्यः सुनिश्चलः। संनिरुध्येन्द्रियग्रामं नातिनीचोच्छ्रितासनः। त्रिगुणं त्रिगुणं वापि प्राणायाममुपक्रमेत्। ततो ध्येयः स्थितो योऽसौ हृदये दीपवत्प्रभुः। धारयेत्तत्र चात्मानं धारणां धारयन्

(Continued on next page)

in the aṅgas from āsana to dhāraṇā and dhyāna as follows: (The yogin) occupying a seat neither too high nor too low, having placed his upturned heels on his thighs and having placed on the left (palm placed on the upturned right heel) his other (right) palm (turned upwards), having slightly raised his face and having braced up his body with his (raised) chest, having closed the eyes, being free from rajas and tamas, not allowing the upper and lower rows of teeth to touch, holding his tongue firmly in the palate, and allowing no shaking of the body, covering the mouth, holding back the organs of sense from their objects, should perform prāṇāyāma of the twofold or threefold type (of 24 or 36 mātrās), should contemplete on the Lord that occupies his heart like a lamp, and fix his mind on that Lord by way of Dhāraṇā. Devala states [2380] that dhāraṇā is the holding in check of the body, senses, mind, intellect and ātman (egoism).

M. Charles Baudouin in 'Suggestion and auto-suggestion' tr. by Elder and Cedar Paul (ed. of 1922, Allen and Unwin) says (on p. 150) 'As one of the curiosities of history and further as a lesson in humility we must point out that the states just described under the names of collectedness, contention and auto-hypnosis are described with considerable psychological acumen (though not in modern psychological terminology) in the precepts by which for centuries past the Yogis of Hindustan have been accustomed to attain to self-mastery' and the author refers to Pratyāhāra and Dhāraṇā in this connection and on p. 151 remarks that auto-hypnosis is encountered in Yoga but it is tinged with mysticism because the sacred word 'om' is repeated hundreds of times.

Dhyāna (contemplation) is the one-pointedness (continuous flow) of the apprehension of the object contemplated upon,

---

(Continued from last page)

बुधः ॥ याज्ञ. III. 198–201. These except the last are quoted by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 180) and occur in स्कन्द, काशीखण्ड 41. 69–71 and the last (verse 201) is q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष on p. 194). Vide figure 16 in Shri Kuvalayānanda's handbook on 'Āsanas' (pp. 54–55) for पद्मासन. These verses in या. are commented upon by Viśvarūpa, the Mitākṣarā and Aparārka. Therefore they cannot be said to be later interpolations.

2380. शरीरेन्द्रियमनोबुद्ध्यात्मनां धारणाद्धारणा।, देवल q. by अपरार्क p. 1025, कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष p. 174). अपरार्क says 'अत्रात्माहंकारः; the कृत्यकल्प० says nothing on आत्मा.

unaffected by any other idea or apprehension. The Upaniṣads[2381] insist upon dhyāna, e. g. Muṇḍaka says 'contemplate upon the Self in the form of Om'; the Bṛ. Up. has the famous passage 'the self should be seen, heard, understood and reflected upon.' The Chān. Up. (VII. 6. 2) employs the word 'dhyāna' in the sense of 'concentrating all thoughts on one object'. The Śv. Up. (I. 3) mentions dhyānayoga and also Gītā 18. 52 does so (dhyānayoga-paro nityam). The Śāntiparva (cr. ed. 188. 13 ff = Ch. ed. 195. 13–18) speaks of dhyāna. The Kṛtyakalpataru (on Mokṣa p. 181) quotes a long prose passage from Devala-dharmasūtra about dhyāna. The Viṣṇupurāṇa[2382] closely agreeing with the Yogabhāṣya in phraseology describes dhyāna as the one-pointed succession of the apprehension of the Lord's form, unmixed with another idea, brought about by the practice of the first six aṅgas of Yoga. Aparārka (pp. 1025–27) quotes a long prose passage from Viṣṇudharmasūtra (chap. 97), which asks the yogin to contemplate upon the all-pervading and all-powerful Lord who is free from guṇas (sattva, rajas, tamas), is beyond the twenty-four tattvas and who is imperceptible to the senses, and that, if he be unable to focuss his mind on formless God all at once, to 2382. तद्रूपप्रत्ययैकाऽयसन्ततिश्चान्यनिःस्पृहा। तद् ध्यानं प्रथमैरङ्गैः षड्भिर्निष्पाद्यते नृप॥ विष्णुपु. VI. 7. 91 q. by वाचस्पति, कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्षकाण्ड p. 175) and अपरार्क p. 1026 who explains 'ब्रह्मरूपप्रत्ययात्मिका सन्ततिः प्रवाहः सा विषयान्तरासंसृष्टा सती ध्यानमित्युच्यते।'; सगुणं वर्णभेदेन निर्गुणं केवलं मतम्। समन्त्रं सगुणं विद्धि निर्गुणं मन्त्रवर्जितम्॥ स्कन्द, काशी० 41. 120. One verse from नृसिंहपुराण is repeated even now in worship viz. ध्येयः सदा सवितृमण्डलमध्यवर्ती नारायणः सरसिजासन-संनिविष्टः। केयूरवान् मकरकुण्डलवान् किरीटी हारी हिरण्मयवपुर्धृतशङ्खचक्रः॥ 26. 17 q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष p. 192); हृत्स्थस्य ध्यानयोगेन देवदेवस्य दर्शनम्। ध्यानं प्रोक्तं प्रवक्ष्यामि ध्यानयोगमतः शुभम्॥ शङ्खस्मृति VII. 16. This is followed by seven verses, two of which are अणोरणीयान् and वेदाहमेतं (VII. 20 and 23) that are the same as श्वेताश्व. उप. III. 20 and 8 respectively, and all the eight verses are q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष p. 193). The editor did not identify them from शङ्ख; बहिर्मुखानि सर्वाणि कृत्वा चान्तर्मुखानि वै। मनसैवेन्द्रियग्रामं मनश्चात्मनि योजयेत्। सर्वभावविनिर्मुक्तं क्षेत्रज्ञं ब्रह्मणि न्यसेत्। एतज्ज्ञानं च ध्यानं च शेषोन्यो ग्रन्थविस्तरः॥ दक्षस्मृति VII. 20–21. These and the following five verses are q. by कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष० pp. 207–208) which the editor did not identify. The verse सर्वभाव ... विस्तरः is q. by अपरार्क p. 970 (reads एतद् ध्यानं च योगश्च).

---

2381. आत्मा वा अरे द्रष्टव्यः श्रोतव्यो मन्तव्यो निदिध्यासितव्यः। बृह. उप. II. 4, 5; ओमित्येवं ध्यायथ आत्मानम्। मुण्डक II. 2. 6. निदिध्यासितव्यः is the potential passive participle of the desiderative form of ध्यै with नि.; The छा. उप. VII. 6 is 'ध्यानं वाव चित्ताद्भूयः। ध्यायतीव पृथिवी ... ध्यायन्तीव देवमनुष्याः। तस्माद्य इह मनुष्याणां महत्तां प्राप्नुवन्ति ध्यानोपादांशा इवैव ते भवन्ति। ... ध्यानमुपास्स्वेति। The earth is motionless, just as a yogin when deep in contemplation is motionless and therefore it is said "the earth is as it were engaged in contemplation."

gradually rise up from Pṛthvī and the other elements, mind, intellect, the soul, avyakta (unmanifested Spirit); if he be unable to do even this he should contemplate on the person that is like a lamp in his own heart (lotus); if this is impossible, he should contemplate upon the form of Vasudeva having on his chest vanamālā, having four arms, holding the conch, the quoit, mace and lotus; and adds that he secures whatever he contemplates upon and that this is the secret of dhyāna. This shows that dhyāna is either saguṇa or nirguṇa as stated by the Padmapurāṇa IV. 84. 80–86 (nirguṇa) and IV. 84. 88–96 (saguṇa) or sūkāra and nirākāra (Padmapurāṇa, II. 80. 70, 77–78). The Viṣṇupurāṇa (VI. 7. 78–90) contains a passage similar to the Viṣṇu Dh. S. Skanda (Kāśīkhaṇḍa, chap. 41. 19) speaks of dhyāna as saguṇa and nirguṇa and defines saguṇa as depending on different forms or as accompanied by repetition of mantras and nirguṇa as 'not depending on any particular form or as not accompanied by mantras'. The Narasiṁhapurāṇa (17. 11-28 and 26. 17) describes at some length the form in which Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu is to be contemplated upon and these verses are quoted by the Kṛtya-kalpataru (Mokṣa, pp. 191–192). The Śaṅkha-smṛti states that one has realization (darśana) of the Lord of gods that abides in the heart (of every person) by means of dhyānayoga and describes the mode of dhyāna. Dakṣasmṛti also emphasizes dhyāna and jñāna (correct knowledge) and states that description of others serves no purpose beyond adding to the bulk of the work. In this stage there is only the duality of subject and object, there is no awareness of effort to tie down the mind on an object (as in mere dhāraṇā).

Samādhi (concentration and absorption)—Dhyāna itself is Samādhi, when only the contemplated object shines forth and when dhyāna is as if emptied of its own form because there is no apprehension of dhyāna as distinct from dhyeya.[2383] When

---

2383. तदेवार्थमात्रनिर्भासं स्वरूपशून्यमिव समाधिः। त्रयमेकत्र संयमः। तदपि बहिरङ्गं निर्बीजस्य। यो. सू. III. 3, 4, 8. The भाष्य on these three is: ध्यानमेव ध्येयाकार-निर्भासं प्रत्ययात्मकेन स्वरूपेण शून्यमिव यदा भवति ध्येयस्वभावावेशात् तदा समाधिरित्युच्यते॥ तदेतद् धारणा-ध्यान-समाधि-त्रयमेकत्र संयमः। एकविषयाणि त्रीणि साधनानि संयम इत्युच्यते। तदस्य त्रयस्य तान्त्रिकी परिभाषा संयम इति॥ तदप्यन्तरङ्गं साधनत्रयं निर्बीजस्य योगस्य बहिरङ्गं भवति। कस्मात्। तदभावे भावात्। The राजमार्तण्ड explains the word समाधि as सम्यगाधीयते एकाग्रीक्रियते विक्षेपान् परिहृत्य मनो यत्र स समाधिः। The योगसुधाकर p. 118 (Kashi series, 1930) brings out the distinction between संप्रज्ञात and असंप्रज्ञात समाधि as follows: ब्रह्माकारमनोवृत्तिप्रवाहोऽहंकृतिं विना। संप्रज्ञातः समाधिः, meditation is carried to a stage where the object contemplated upon alone appears and the meditator is not conscious of the idea of contemplation, because the object meditated upon entirely engulfs the meditator. The yogin becomes so much identified with the object meditated upon that he is not conscious that he is contemplating upon an object. This is what is meant by 'svarūpaśūnyam-iva' (in Y. S. III. 3). In Samādhi the subject and object, the individual and Paramātman are completely blended into one, so that the consciousness of the subject as separate from object disappears. The word 'Samādhi' does not occur in any of the ancient Upaniṣads, though it is known to the Maitrāyaṇi Up. (vide n. 2327 above). The word Samādhi occurs in the Bhagavadgītā (II. 53–54) and in Vanaparva (3. 11) and in Śāntiparva 195. 19–20, Ch. ed.). The Viṣṇupurāṇa[2384] provides that it is called Samādhi when the mind grasps as a result of dhyāna the real nature of that (the Paramātman) in which there is absence of the separate apprehension (of the object to be meditated upon, the act of meditation and the meditator). The three (dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi) are direct aids in samprajñāta-samādhi but they are indirect aids in asamprajñātasamādhi, as this last may follow without these. The Haṭhayoga-pradīpikā [2385] states 'that is called Samādhi where there is equality and oneness of the individual self and the Highest Self and where all desires cease to exist'. Sabīja and nirbīja samādhis would be equal to savikalpa and nirvikalpa samādhi defined by the Vedāntasāra. There are several grades or stages in samādhi. There are four grades[2386] of Samprajñāta

(Continued on next page)

---

(Continued from last page)

स्याद्ध्यानाभ्यासप्रकर्षतः। इति। ... परवैराग्यपूर्वकनिरोधप्रयत्नेन तस्यापि निरोधे सर्ववृत्तिनिरोधान्निर्बीजः समाधिर्भवति। तदुक्तम्। मनसो वृत्तिशून्यस्य ब्रह्माकारतया स्थितिः। या ऽसंप्रज्ञातनामासौ समाधिरभिधीयते। इत्येष विभागो द्रष्टव्यः। योगसुधाकर of सदाशिवेन्द्रसरस्वती on यो. सू. III. 3.

2384. तस्यैव कल्पनाहीनं स्वरूपग्रहणं हि यत्। मनसा ध्याननिष्पाद्यं समाधिः सोऽभिधीयते॥ विष्णुपु. VI. 7. 92 q. by वाचस्पति, कृत्यकल्प० (मोक्ष p. 175), अपरार्क p. 1026 (who explains तस्य ब्रह्मणः कल्पनाहीनं ध्येयं ध्यानं ध्यातेति भेदमत्वपरहितं etc.). The लिङ्गपु. I. 8. 44 is 'चिद्भासमर्थमात्रस्य वेद्यशून्यमिव स्थितम्। समाधिः सर्वहेतुश्च प्राणायाम इति स्थितः॥' samādhi, viz. savitarka, nirvitarka, savicāra, nirvicāra. Vide p. 1411 note 2318 above. The word gauḥ, the object cow denoted by it and the concept or idea (jñāna) 'this is a cow' are all really three separate matters, but they are apprehended as mixed up. When a yogin concentrates upon a gross object and his intellect is conscious of that object as permeated by all the above three, then that samādhi is savitarka (Y. S. I. 42). For the others vide note 2318 and below. In the asamprajñāta Samādhi, the ultimate reality dawns on the yogin, prakṛti does not affect him in any way, his soul which abides in itself and is not conscious of personality and even of joy is all cit or citśakti and nothing else. In this section about the influence of yoga on Dharmaśāstra it is not necessary to go deeply into the several stages of samādhi described in the yoga works. The Gorakṣaśataka [2387] describes the final stage of samādhi as follows: 'A yogin in Samādhi does not apprehend smell, flavour, form, touch or sound nor does he apprehend himself or others (as distinct); knowers of brahma hold it to be pure, immovable, eternal, not engaged in activities, free from the guṇas, expansive like the sky, as intelligence and bliss; the knower of yoga reaches non-duality in the highest stage as milk poured in milk, ghee into ghee or fire into fire.'

2385. तत्समं च द्वयोरैक्यं जीवात्मपरमात्मनोः। प्रनष्टसर्वसंकल्पः समाधिः सोऽभिधीयते॥ ह. यो. प्र. IV. 7. This is practically the same as स्कन्द, काशी० 47. 127 यत्समत्वं द्वयोक्त ... भिधीयते॥

2386. तत्र शब्दार्थज्ञानविकल्पैः संकीर्णा सवितर्का समापत्तिः। स्मृतिपरिशुद्धौ स्वरूपशून्येवार्थमात्रनिर्भासा निर्वितर्का। एतयैव च सविचारा निर्विचारा च सूक्ष्मविषया व्याख्याता।... सा एव सबीजः समाधिः। यो. सू. I. 42–44, 46; तद्यथा गौरिति शब्दो गौरित्यर्थो गौरिति ज्ञानमित्यविभागेन विभक्तानामपि ग्रहणं दृष्टम्। विभाज्यमाना श्चान्ये शब्दधर्मा अन्येऽर्थधर्मा अन्ये विज्ञानधर्मा इत्येषां विभक्तः पन्थाः। भाष्य.

It would have been noted that in dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi the principal emphasis is mental. External conditions do help in the training but they are subsidiary. As noted above (pp. 1421-22) cleanliness, contentment, austerities (tapas), sexual purity, certain easy postures and living in detachment, restrictions as to quantity and quality of food—these are the chief physical or external conditions. While the yogin practises the above three he may develop certain super-normal powers which he is advised to ignore, as they are hindrances in the attainment of his goal (Yogasūtra III. 36). Though this is the opinion of Patañjali, from the fact that with most yogins the siddhis are an important part of yoga doctrines and the fact that, out of 195 sūtras of the Yogasūtra, 35 (III. 16-50) are devoted to the description of siddhis, the present author is constrained to say that siddhis are an integral part of Yoga. The Vaikhānasa-smārtasūtra says that the yogin can vanish from people, can see distant objects and hear in spite of great distance.

---

2387. न गन्धं न रसं न रूपं न स्पर्शं न च निःस्वनम्। आत्मानं न परं वेत्ति योगी युक्तः समाधिना॥ निर्मलं निश्चलं नित्यं निष्क्रियं निर्गुणं महत्। व्योम विज्ञानमानन्दं ब्रह्म ब्रह्मविदो विदुः॥ दुग्धे क्षीरं घृते सर्पिरग्नौ वह्निरिवार्पितः। अद्वयत्वं व्रजेन्नित्यं योगवित्परमे पदे॥ गोरक्षशतक verses 97, 99-100. The first verse is also ह. यो. प्र. IV. 108. Compare श्वेता. उप. VI. 19 निष्कलं निष्क्रियं, कठोप. 3. 15 अशब्दमस्पर्शमरूपमव्ययं; विज्ञानमानन्दं ब्रह्म बृह. उप. III. 9. 28 and श्वेताश्व. उप. I. 15 तिलेषु तैलं ... चाग्निः with दुग्धे क्षीरं &c.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the results of all saṁyamas mentioned in Y. S. pāda three. A few are cited by way of sample. By saṁyama on the power of an elephant one secures the strength of an elephant (III. 24), by saṁyama on the sun there arises the knowledge of the seven worlds (III. 26) and by saṁyama on the moon, there arises knowledge of the arrangement of the stars (III. 27), by saṁyama on the navel cakra arises knowledge of the arrangement of the body (III. 29, viz. the three doṣas, vāta, pitta, kapha and the seven dhātus viz. skin, blood, flesh, sinews, bones, marrow and semen). By saṁyama on the coarse [2388] forms, the essential attributes (svarūpa), the subtle form (tanmātrās), the inherence (anvaya) and the purposiveness of the five elements results the conquest (or mastery over) elements and from this results the appearance of the perfections called aṇimā and others, perfection of body and non-obstruction (of the actions of the yogin by the qualities of the elements i. e. the earth cannot prevent the yogin by its hardness from penetrating inside the earth's rocks nor can fire burn him &c.). In IV. 1 Patañjali states that supernormal powers (siddhis) arise in five ways viz. by birth in certain [2389] bodies

---

2388. स्थूलस्वरूपसूक्ष्मान्वयार्थवत्त्वसंयमाद्भूतजयः। ततोऽणिमादिप्रादुर्भावः कायसम्पत्तद्धर्मानभिघातश्च। रूपलावण्यबलवज्रसंहननत्वानि कायसम्पत्। योगसूत्र III. 44–46. स्वरूप consists of nature or attributes of the five elements and is explained as solidness (or hardness) of the earth, liquidity of water, heat of fire, mobility of the wind, all pervading nature of ākāśa. The 4th rūpa of the elements viz. anvaya is the attributes of khyāti (cognition), activity and inertia. भाष्य explains: अन्वयिनो गुणाः प्रकाशप्रवृत्तिस्थितिरूपतया सर्वत्रैवान्वयित्वेन सदुपलभ्यन्ते. Vide यो. सू. II. 18 'प्रकाशक्रियास्थितिशीलं भूतेन्द्रियात्मकं भोगापवर्गार्थं दृश्यम्।'. The three प्रका... स्थिति stand for guṇas सत्त्व, रजस्, तमस् respectively. Vide above p. 1357 note 2215 (सत्त्वं लघु etc.). The fifth 'arthavatva' consists in the five elements serving the purpose of affording experience and liberation to the soul. वज्रसंहननत्व having a body as hard as diamond. वज्रस्य इव संहननं संहतिः अस्य तस्य भावः वज्रसंहननत्वम्. The भाष्य explains तद्धर्मानभिघातश्च as पृथ्वी मूर्त्या न निरुणद्धि योगिनः शरीरादिक्रियां, शिलामप्यनुविशतीति। नापः स्निग्धाः क्लेदयन्ति। नाग्निरुष्णो दहति etc.

2389. जन्मौषधिमन्त्रतपःसमाधिजाः सिद्धयः। यो. सू. IV. 1. Ernest Wood on 'Yoga' (1959, in Penguin Books) observes on p. 104 about levitation (laghimā) 'I remember one occasion when an old yogin was levitated in a recumbent position about six feet above ground in an open field for about

(Continued on next page)

(e. g. being born as a bird which can fly high in the sky), by the use of certain drugs, by the japa of certain mantras, by tapas (which is one of the niyamas) and by samādhi, each succeeding one being superior to each preceding one.

The siddhis have been enumerated and explained above on pp. 1112–13. The Devaladharmasūtra has a long note on siddhis, which is quoted in Kalpataru (Mokṣakāṇḍa pp. 216-217).[2390] The Yājñavalkya smṛti (III. 202–203) enumerates some characteristic signs of Yogasiddhi, viz. becoming invisible to others, remembrance of incidents in past lives, charming appearance, ability to see past and future happenings or objects that are distant, knowing what is being said at a great distance, entering another body after leaving one's own body, creation of things at one's will (without possessing the appropriate materials).

A great deal has been said above on mantras under Tantra (pp. 1096–1107 and notes thereto). There are two theories about mantras; one is the vibration theory, viz. that the letters of the mantra are charged with certain powers by the original composer and user of it and when the mantra is repeated certain imperceptible vibrations are set up which help in securing the purpose for which the mantra is repeated. The other theory is that the mantra comes down from antiquity and from half an hour, while the visitors were permitted to pass sticks to and fro between'. He further refers to levitation which a princess of Sikkim asserted she saw as a girl. A. Koestler in 'The Lotus and the Robot' (London, 1960, on p. 114) doubts the quality of the evidence of E. Wood on the ground that no exact date or place is mentioned and asserts that no experiment on levitation with definite date and place has been published. But Dr. Alexander Cannon in 'The invisible influence' (1935) pp. 39-41 narrated a personal experience of lavitation (laghimā). It is not clear whether A, Koestler was aware of this statement.

---

(Continued from last page)

2390. A short extract from the long prose passage of Devala-dharmasūtra may be set out here. तत्र देवलः। अणिमा महिमा लघिमा प्राप्तिः प्राकाम्यमीशित्वं वशित्वं यत्रकामावसायित्वं चाष्टावैश्वर्यगुणाः। तेषामणिमा महिमा लघिमा त्रयः शारीराः। प्राप्त्याद्वयः पञ्चेन्द्रियाः। ... शरीराद्गुणाभित्वं लघिमा। तेनातिदूरस्थानपि क्षणेनासादयति। विश्वविषयावाप्तिः प्राप्तिः। प्राप्त्या सर्वमत्यक्षवदर्शी भवति। ... अमतिहतैश्वर्यमीशित्वम्। ईशित्वेन दैवतानाप्यतिशेते। ... यत्रकामावसायित्वं त्रिविधम्-छायावेशः, अवध्यानावेशः, अङ्गप्रवेश इति। यत् परस्य अङ्गप्रवेशमात्रेण चित्तं वशीकरोति स छायावेशः। यद्दूरस्थानामपि अवध्यानेन चित्ताधिष्ठानं सोऽवध्यानावेशः। यस्सजीवस्योभिस्ते (?) जीवस्य वा शरीरानुप्रवेशनं सोऽङ्गप्रवेशः। अन्तर्धानं स्मृतिः कान्तिर्दृष्टिः श्रोत्रज्ञता तथा। निजं शरीरमुत्सृज्य परकायाप्रवेशनम्। अर्थानां ह्युत्वतः सृष्टिर्योगसिद्धेश्च लक्षणम्। या. III. 202-203.

a great sage and its power of suggestion is great. But the real effective power of a mantra seems to the present author to depend far more on the knowledge, the responsiveness and the high spiritual level which the person who repeats it brings to bear on its use. No scientific tests have been employed and different works emphasize with exaggeration one of the two theories about mantras. All is speculation. The present author believes that the 2nd theory has greater elements of trust-worthiness than the first, as it relies on human psychology, while the first degenerated so much that the famous mantra 'om maṇi padme hūm' (dedicated to Avalokiteśvara) written on some material and pasted on a wheel which was turned round and round hundreds of times was supposed to yield great results. The 2nd theory led to the importance of guru and dikṣā (initiation) and here also extravagant claims were made. This latter theory, however, required that the disciple should possess certain qualifications such as implicit faith in the guru, respect for matters spiritual, some knowledge of the tenets and the basic scriptures and readiness to devote time and energy to the study and practice of the teachings of the guru. Vide Śiva-saṁhitā (III. 10-19) for the relation between guru and disciple.

The fourth pāda deals with Kaivalya. The yogin who has gone through the whole discipline up to samādhi and has become thoroughly aware of the distinction between Puruṣa and the guṇas (sattva and others), becomes free from the influence of the three guṇas, because they merge in Pradhāna after having served the purpose of the soul, that is Kaivalya (isolation) or it (Kaivalya) may be stated to be the principle of consciousness that abides by itself (and does not become connected with even sattva-guṇa).[2391] This has also been alluded to in Y. S. II. 25 that states that when avidyā (nescience) is removed by discrimination the self (who is the perceiver) does not come into contact with the guṇas, which state is Kaivalya.[2392] Kaivalya is put forword in IV. 34 from two points of view. When a puruṣa ceases to be affected in any way by the guṇas (that constitute prakṛti) because he has become entirely passionless, prakṛti becomes aloof (kevala) so far as that puruṣa is concerned. When puruṣa has thorough knowledge and ceases to be affected by guṇas he remains as bare consciousness (citiśakṭi) and remains aloof (kevala) and that is the 2nd point of view about kaivalya. In that state of kaivalya or mokṣa we cannot predicate any happiness or bliss about him but we can only say about him that he is in a state of bare consciousness (citiśakṭi). The Upaniṣads declare[2393] that in such a state the liberated soul has neither joy nor sorrow, that happiness or its opposite does not touch such an one, since he has risen above identifying the body with himself. The ideal of Yoga is to be jIvan-mukta (i. e. to reject Life and Personality, to die to this world though the body may persist for some time).

2391. पुरुषार्थशून्यानां गुणानां प्रतिप्रसवः कैवल्यं स्वरूपप्रतिष्ठा वा चितिशक्तिरिति। यो. सू. IV. 34; भाष्य 'कृतभोगापवर्गाणां पुरुषार्थशून्यानां यः प्रतिप्रसवः कार्यकारणात्मकानां गुणानां तत्कैवल्यं, स्वरूपप्रतिष्ठा पुनर्बुद्धिसत्त्वानभिसम्बन्धात्पुरुषस्य चितिशक्तिरेव केवला, तदयाः सदा तथैवावस्थानं कैवल्यमिति'. वाचस्पति explains प्रतिप्रसवः as स्वकारणे प्रधाने लयः.

2392. तस्य हेतुरविद्या। तदभावात्संयोगाभावो हानं तद्दृशेः कैवल्यम्। यो. सू. II. 24-25; । तस्यादर्शनस्याभावाद् बुद्धिपुरुषसंयोगाभाव आत्यन्तिको बन्धनोपरम इत्यर्थः। एतद्धानम्। तद्दृशेः पुरुषस्यामिश्रीभावः पुनरसंयोगो गुणैरित्यर्थः। दुःखकारणनिवृत्तौ दुःखोपरमो हानं तदा स्वरूपप्रतिष्ठः पुरुष इत्युक्तम्। भाष्य. कैवल्य means 'एकाकिता' remaining alone by itself.

The eight aṅgas of Yoga are described in more or less detail in several Purāṇas. Vide Agni, chap. 214–215 and 372–76, Bhāgavata III. 28, Kūrma II. 11, Narasiṁha 61 (verses 3–13 of which are quoted by Kalpataru, mokṣakāṇḍa pp. 194–195), Matsya chap. 52, Mārkaṇḍeya (chap. 36–40 of Veṅk. edition, 39–43 of Cal. ed.) about 250 verses, many of which are quoted by Kṛtyakalpataru (on Mokṣa), Aparārka and others; Liṅga I. 8., Vāyu, chap. 10–15, Viṣṇu VI. 7 (which closely follows the Y. S, in thought and phraseology), Viṣṇudharmottara III. 280–284, Skanda (Kāśīkhaṇḍa, chap. 41).

Geraldine Coster in 'Yoga and Western Psychology' (Oxford Uni. Press, 1934) observes 'I am convinced that the ideas on which Yoga is based are universally true for mankind and that we have in the Yoga-sūtras a body of material which we could investigate and use with infinite advantage (p. 244)... My plea is then that Yoga as followed in the East is a practical method of mind development, quite as practical as analytical therapy and far more practical and closely related to real life than the average university course. I am convinced that the Yogasūtras of Patañjali do really contain the information[2393] that some of the most advanced psychotherapists of the present day are ardently seeking' (p. 245).

2393. अशरीरं वाव सन्तं न प्रियाप्रिये स्पृशतः। छा. उप. VIII. 12. 1; अध्यात्मयोगाधिगमेन देवं मत्वा धीरो हर्षशोकौ जहाति। कठ. II. 12. वे. सू. IV. 4. 2 (मुक्तः प्रतिज्ञानात्) is based on छा. उप. VIII. 12. 1.

The last chapter in Dr. Behanan's book on 'Yoga, a scientific evaluation' is interesting and important. He makes an appraisal of several aspects of Yoga by means of experiments which he carried out on himself after spending one year under the guidance of Swami Kuvalayānand of Lonavla and after he had three years of experience in Yogic breathing. It is not possible for reasons of space to give here a summary of his appraisal of several aspects of Yoga but reference may be made to a few of his findings. He finds that by yogic practices the mind is turned inward and detached from the external world (p. 232), it seems to him very probable that the prāṇāyāmic breathing induces a state of relaxation, thereby inducing the mind to take an inward course (p. 234), that taking normal breathing as a basis of comparison it was found that oxygen consumption increased 24. 5 per cent in Ujjāyī, 18. 5 per cent in bhastrikā and 12 per cent in Kapālabhāti; that the nasal gaze in a meditative posture is an aid to checking the wandering propensities of the mind (p. 242), that Yogic practices lead to an emotional stability and that watching at close range for a year the daily lives of more than half a dozen practitioners of yoga Dr. Behanan concluded that they were the happiest personalities that he had known and that their serenity was contagious (p. 245).

Dr. P. A. Sorokin of the Harvard University, one of the greatest living sociologists, contributes a very valuable paper on 'Yoga and man's transfiguration' to the Bhāratiya Vidyā Bhavan's Journal for November 1958 (pp. 111–120), the very first sentence of which opens with the words 'The methods and techniques of the yoga, particularly those of the Rājayoga, contain in themselves nearly all the sound techniques of modern psycho-analysis, psychotherapy, psycho-drama, moral education, and education of character.'

That a person engaged in Yoga practices is succeeding in reaching higher and higher spiritual levels is shown by the appearance of certain traits in himself. The Śv. Up. states that the first favourable signs of the working of Yoga are: lightness or agility of body, health, freedom from desires, brightness of complexion, fineness of voice, pleasant bodily odour, passing only a small quantity of urine or excreta. Almost the same verse occurs in the Vāyu [2394] and the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas and 2394. लघुत्वमारोग्यमलोलुपत्वं वर्णप्रसादः स्वरसौष्ठवं च। गन्धः शुभो मूत्रपुरीषमल्पं योगप्रवृत्तिं प्रथमां वदन्ति॥ श्वेता. उप. II. 11; वायु. 11. 63 reads सत्त्वं तथारोग्य ...

(Continued on next page)

Mārkaṇḍeya further says 'people come' to like the yogin and sing praises of his qualities behind his back and all animals are not afraid of him; he is not affected by severe cold or heat and is not afraid of others; these show that siddhi in Yoga is approaching.' The Vāyupurāṇa adds 'if the practitioner of Yoga sees the earth or his body as if on fire and if he sees himself entering the elements (or all beings) he should understand that success in Yoga is near.' [2395]

The Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa (chap. 38 verse 26) and the Viṣṇupurāṇa II. 13 describe at some length yogicaryā (i. e. behaviour or conduct of a yogin). It is not possible to set out all that is said in these chapters but two striking verses are rendered here. The Mārkaṇḍeya [2396] says 'honour and disrespect cause pleasure and distress to man (in general), but these two have the reverse effect and serve to produce perfection in the yogin; these two are called poison and nectar respectively; disrespect is nectar for the yogin and honour is terrible poison.' The Viṣṇupurāṇa emphasizes that a yogin should so act that people will disrespect him and would not seek his company. The Manusmṛti (in VI. 38–85) enlarges upon the duties of sannyāsins, many of which are applicable to yogins. In VI. 65 Manu calls upon the sannyāsin to ponder by means of Yoga over the subtleness of the Highest Self and in VI. 73 Manu advises the ascetic to practise dhyānayoga. The Yājñavalkyasmṛti also (in III. 56–67) prescribes the duties of sannyāsins, one of which (in verse 64) is the same as Manu VI. 73.

The Śāntiparva provides [2397] that a man is said to be a yogin by those who know the procedure and ordinances of Yoga,

---

(Continued from last page)

वर्णप्रभा सुस्वरसौम्यता च गन्ध ... योगप्रवृत्तिः प्रथमा शरीरे ॥. The मार्कण्डेय reads अतौल्य-मारोग्यमनिष्ठुरत्वं गन्धः ... ल्पम् । कान्तिः प्रसादः स्वरसौम्यता च योगप्रवृत्तेः प्रथमं हि चिह्नम् ॥ 36. 63 (= 39. 63 in Cal. ed.). This and two more verses of Mārkaṇḍeya (36. 64–65) are q. by कृत्यकल्प० (on मोक्ष) p. 211.

2395. आत्मानं पृथिवीं चैव ज्वलन्तीं यदि पश्यते । भूतान्याविशते चैव विद्यात्सिद्धि-मुपस्थिताम् ॥ वायु 11. 64 q. by कृत्यकल्प० (on मोक्ष) p. 211.

2396. मानापमानौ यावेतौ प्रीत्युद्वेगकरौ नृणाम् । तावेव विपरीतार्थौ योगिनः सिद्धि-कारकौ ॥ मानापमानौ यावेतौ तावेवाहुर्विषामृते । अपमानोऽमृतं तत्र मानस्तु विषमं विषम् ॥ मार्क. 38. 2–3; compare विष्णुपुराण II. 13. 42–43 संमानना परां हानिं योगर्द्धेः कुरुते quoted in note 2284 above.

2397. स्थिरीकृत्येन्द्रियग्रामं मनसा मिथिलेश्वर । मनो बुद्ध्या स्थिरं कृत्वा यावत्प्य इव निश्चलः ॥ स्थाणुवच्चाप्यकम्पः स्यादृषिरिच्चापि निश्चलः । बुद्ध्या विधिविधानज्ञास्तदा युक्त

(Continued on next page)

when he curbs the senses by his mind and makes the mind itself firm by his intellect and he becomes unmoved (by objects of sense) as if he were a stone, is unshakable like a tree-trunk, strong and motionless like a mountain. The wise call a man yukta (a yogin), when he neither hears, nor smells fragrance, nor tastes nor sees, nor touches and when his mind does not form (ever changing) ideas, when he does not regard anything as his own, when he does not cognise (external objects) as if he were a log of wood and when he can be said to have recovered the original real nature (of the Self). The Devaladharmasūtra provides that all beings come under bondage owing to ahaṅkāra (egoism that one will do this or that) and mamatva (regarding transient things as owned by oneself) but he who is free from these becomes liberated.[2398]

Through centuries Sannyāsins and Yogins have been paid the highest honours in India. Special emphasis is laid on inviting a Yogin at a śrāddha and it is said by some authorities that a single yogin is equal to hundreds and thousands of brāhmaṇas. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. IV. pp. 388, 398–399 for original authorities. In cases of doubt as to what the proper conduct or Dharma is in a set of circumstances, the matter was left to be decided by a pariṣad (an assembly) of ten learned brāhmaṇas or at least three, but even one may constitute a pariṣad, provided he is learned in Veda and knows Dharma (vide Manu XII. 108–113). But Yāj. I. 9 and others say that four persons knowing the Veda and Dharmaśāstra or three of the same type or even one who is the best among knowers of spiritual matters (ascetics) may constitute a pariṣad and what he declares would be the right course of conduct. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. 969 for texts on this point. The Bhagavad-gītā says 'the yogin (who is a real karmayogin surrendering the

---

(Continued from last page)

प्रचक्षते। न शृणोति न चाघ्राति न रस्यति न पश्यति॥ न च स्पर्शं विजानाति न सङ्कल्पयते मनः॥ न चाभिमन्यते किञ्चिन्न ब्रुवति च काष्ठवत्। तदा प्रकृतिमापन्नं युक्तमाहुर्मनीषिणः॥ शान्तिपर्व। (cr. ed. 294. 14–17=306. 14–17 Ch. ed.) q. by कृत्यकल्पतरु (on मोक्ष pp. 187–188). The editor did not identify this passage. The गोरक्षशतक q. above in n. 2387 appears to be based on this passage of the शान्तिपर्व.

2398. इदं ममेति यत्स्नाय्यमात्मनोऽर्थेषु मन्यते। अजानंस्तदनित्यत्वं ममत्वमिति तद्विदुः॥ अहमित्यभिमानेन यः क्रियासु प्रवर्तते। कार्यकारणयुक्तासु तदहङ्कारलक्षणम्। अहङ्कार-ममत्वाभ्यां बध्यन्ते सर्वदेहिनः। संसारविनिर्योगेषु ताभ्यां मुक्तस्य (मुक्तस्तु?) मुच्यते॥ देवल q. by कल्पतरु (मोक्षप्रकरण pp. 90–91).

fruits of his actions to God) is superior to persons practising tapas (such as fasts or following Haṭhayoga) and superior even to those who have mastered philosophical knowledge (like that of Sāṅkhya) and he is superior to those who are performers of Vedic rites (leading to svarga); therefore, O Arjuna! be a yogin, that does acts (because it is his duty to do so and who does not hanker afer the fruits of those actions).

Manu (XII. 83) states 'study of the Veda, tapas, true knowledge (about brahma), restraint of the sense organs, ahiṁsā, attending on one's guru-these are the highest means of niḥśreyasa (i. e. mokṣa). Then verse 85 proceeds 'of all these six means true knowledge of the Self is the highest, it is at the head of all vidyās (lores), since immortality (mokṣa) is obtained by means of it.

The highest value is attached to Yoga [2399] as an integral part of Vedānta by the Yājñavalkyasmṛti when it states that realization of the Self by means of Yoga is the highest Dharma. Then the same Smṛti provides [2400] 'study of the Veda, performance of sacrifices, brahmacarya (sexual purity), tapas and dama (restraint of senses), faith, fasting and freedom from attachment to worldly objects; these are the causes of securing knowledge of the Ātman.' It should be noticed that some of these fall under yama, niyama and pratyāhāra. The Dakṣasmṛti avers 'even the country, where a yogin, who has profound knowledge of yoga and who is given to dhyāna, becomes holy; what need is there to say about his relatives (i. e. they will certainly be pure). [2401]

The Yogasūtras are difficult and do not give complete explanations of the several stages of Yogic practices. They are in the nature of brief notes or hints that are calculated to rouse the curiosity of the hearer or reader and induce him to go to a competent teacher and learn Yoga practices. A few examples may be cited. Y. S. II. 50 refers to three kinds of Prāṇāyāmas, and II. 51 mentions a fourth (bāhyābhyantaraviṣayākṣepī caturthaḥ). There is no further explanation of this 4th variety. In IV. 1 Patañjali lumps together siddhis arising from janma, oṣadhi, mantra, tapas and samādhi. There is a vast difference between a siddhi due to a drug and siddhis due to samādhi. Patañjali says that Om is the symbol of Īśvara and that repetition thereof and reflection on its meaning is a means of attaining ekāgratā, but there is no explanation why Om is expressive of Īśvara nor is any reference made to the Upaniṣads &c. about the importance of Om or how japa is to be performed. This is probably due to the agelong tradition that spiritual knowledge should be kept secret, should not be taught to all and sundry, but only to a disciple possessing certain qualifications. Already on pp. 1071–72 notes 1733, 1734 it has been shown from a few Upaniṣad quotations how esoteric knowledge was imparted only by a guru to a disciple. In the dialogue of Yājñavalkya and Ārtabhāga (Bṛ. Up. III. 2. 13), when the latter asked, after saying 'after a man's death his speech enters fire, his breath enters into wind, his eye into the sun, his body into the earth' 'where does then the man remain?' Yājñavalkya replied take my hand, on this matter we two alone must come to some understanding, but not here in the midst of company.' Then the two went aside and conferred with one another. That shows that the knowledge about what happens after death was not held to be a matter proper for being discussed in an assembly of people. The Chāndogya Up. (III. 11. 5) states 'therefore a father may tell that doctrine of Brahma to his eldest son or to a worthy pupil but not to anyone else even if the latter gave him this earth girt by waters (seas) and full of wealth, for this doctrine is worth more than that'. The Bṛ. Up. VI. 3. 12 provides 'one should not speak of it (brahma doctrine) to one who is not his son or pupil'; vide Śv. Up. VI. 22, Maitrāyaṇī Up. VI. 29 for similar words. The Śāntiparva in a chapter dealing with spiritual knowledge provides that it should be imparted to one's dear son and an obedient disciple, but not to one whose mind is not quiescent nor controlled, nor one who is jealous or crooked or a backbiter or a logic-chopper.[2402] H. Y. P. states 'a Yogin desirous of attaining siddhi should keep the knowledge of Haṭha as highly secret; it becomes potent if kept secret, but becomes impotent if exposed to all; one should practise yoga alone in the way expounded by the guru'.[2403] This applied in ancient times not only to esoteric knowledge but to other scholastic studies. The Nirukta (II. 3) says that it (Nirukta) should not be taught to one who does not know grammar, nor to one who does not approach (the guru) for knowledge or who is not aware of the importance of the śāstra, since an ignorant person always bears ill-will to knowledge; and the Nirukta quotes (II. 4) four verses (called Vidyāsūkta) on this matter.[2404] In the Bhagavadgītā Kṛṣṇa frequently emphasizes that the knowledge of Bhaktiyoga is a sovereign secret (IX. 2), in XVII. 63 the knowledge conveyed to Arjuna is stated to be more secret than all secrets and in XVIII. 64–65 Kṛṣṇa asks Arjuna to listen to the most secret words of his viz. 'fix they mind on Me, be my devotee, offer sacrifice to me, prostrate thyself before me; thou shalt come to me; I promise to thee truly as thou art dear to me'. This last is repeated from IX. 34. At the end of chap. XV it is said 'O blameless one! this most secret doctrine has been expounded by me to you'.

2399. अयं तु परमो धर्मो यद् योगेनात्मदर्शनम्। याज्ञ. I. 8.

2400. वेदाद्युक्तवचनं यज्ञो ब्रह्मचर्यं तपो दमः। श्रद्धोपवासः स्वातन्त्र्यमात्मनो ज्ञानहेतवः॥ याज्ञ. III. 193; compare बृह. उप. IV. 4. 22 q. in note 1464, p. 918 above.

2401. यस्मिन्देशे वसेद्योगी ख्यायी योगविचक्षणः। सोऽपि देशो भवेत्पूतः किं पुनस्तस्य बान्धवाः॥ ब्रह्मस्मृति VII. 45.

2402. तदिदं नाप्रशान्ताय नादान्तायातपस्विने। नासूयकायानृजवे न चानिर्दिष्टकारिणे। न तर्कशास्त्रदग्धाय तथैव पिशुनाय च। शान्ति० 246. 16–18 (Ch. ed). The words असूयकायानृजवे seem to be an echo of the verse quoted in the निरुक्त II. 4 विद्या ह वै ... असूयकायानृजवे &c.

2403. हठविद्या परं गोप्या योगिना सिद्धिमिच्छता। भवेद्वीर्यवती गुप्ता निर्वीर्या तु प्रकाशिता॥ गुरूपदिष्टमार्गेण योगमेव समभ्यसेत्। ह. यो. प्र. I. 11 and 16.

Whether the path of Yoga is desirable or feasible in its entirety cannot be debated here. But there have been great men in India for thousands of years who have trodden the path of Yoga that led to the desired goal of freedom of the self from avidyā and the bondage of birth and death by means of Yoga. Even as early as the Śāntiparva (chap. 289, cr. ed. verses 50 and 54), the path of yoga is said to be very difficult and that it is easy to stay on the sharp edges of razors, but that those whose souls are not purified would find it difficult and painful to continually practise Dhāraṇās. Kālidāsa so finely describes in the 8th canto of the Raghuvaṁśa (verses 16–24) how Yoga was practised by king Raghu. Kālidāsa refers (in VIII. 16) to apavarga as the goal of the ascetic Raghu as contrasted with mahodaya (abhyudaya or bhoga), both words occurring in Y. S. II. 18 (prakāśa ... ... bhogāpavargārtham dṛśyam); mentions dhāraṇā (in VIII. 18), praṇidhāna practice and consequent mastery over the five prāṇas (in Raghu VIII. 19, Y. S. II. 45 'samādhisiddhirīśvara-praṇidhānāt); mastery over the three guṇas that constitute prakṛti (Raghu VII. 21, Y. S. III. 48 mentions 'pradhānajaya), Yogavidhi as a means of paramātmadarśana (Raghu VIII. 22, Yāj. smṛti I. 8 quoted in note 2399).

2404. Vide the Gospel of Mark IV. 11 and 33–34 where Christ is said to have expounded all things to his twelve disciples, but only in parables to the multitude.

Rājayoga holds the supreme goal to be liberation from Nature (prakṛti) or Māyā of the Advaita) and its attitude towards the world of senses and our empirical life is that of shunning these. Mukti means absorption into brahma for the Vedantist or Kaivalya (isolation of the Individual self from the bonds of birth and death and from prakṛti according to pure Yoga). For the vast majority of men and women the path and final goal of Pātañjala Yoga or of the Advaita Vedānta are almost inaccessible and unattainable, as the Gītā itself states (XII. 5) "Those whose mind is set on the Unmanifested encounter greater difficulties (than those who worship a personal God), since the goal of the unmanifested is hard to reach by embodied beings'. The path of Karmayoga (performing good deeds and acts prescribed by Śāstra without hankering for rewards) and Bhaktiyoga (wherein there is deep devotion to God and self-surrender) appear to be more suitable and practical for ordinary human beings. The Gītā in chap. XIII. (verses 13-17) contains one of the best descriptions of God as transcendent and immanent and verse 18 adds that the devotee of God who understands this reaches God.

Many readers familiar with Shri Aurobindo's āśrama at Pondicherry and his voluminous writings might express surprise at the present author's non-mention (in what precedes) of Shri Aurobindo (who is called Mahāyogī by his disciples and admirers) in this section on Yoga and its influence on Dharmaśāstra. But the reasons are obvious. In the first place, Shri Aurobindo says hardly anything about Dharmaśāstra in relation to Yoga. In the 2nd place, Shri Aurobindo admits that he had 'no touch from a guru', that he got an inner touch and practised Yoga, that he got some help from Mr. Lele of Gwalior, that when he came to Pondicherry he got from within a programme for his sādhanā, that he could not make much progress as to the help to be given to others and that when the Mother (Mira Richard) came to the āśrama in 1920 he found with her aid the method of helping others. In the next place, he departs from the teachings of a galaxy of Sanskrit writers on Yoga, viz. that a yogin must shun women (vide p. 1421 and note 2330), while his biographer Mr. Diwakar states that the Aurobindo Ashram was founded on 24th November 1926, that the Mother was entirely in charge of it from that day and that Shri Aurobindo thenceforward cut off all contacts except through the Mother (p. 257). In this, he strikes an entirely new line and appears to ordinary men like the present author to have diverged far from the well trodden path of ancient Yoga and become like one described in the well-known words ('Murārestṛtīyaḥ panthāḥ'). Shri Aurobindo is a mystic,[2405] the experiences of mystics are peculiar and their own, ordinary words and modes of speech fail to communicate them to those that cannot claim to have ever shared such experiences. Aurobindo became a recluse from November 1926 to his Mahāsamādhi on 5th December 1950 and gave darśana[2406] only on four days in the year viz. 15th August (his birth date), 24th November (day of victory for him), 21st February (the birth date of the Mother) and 24th April the day of the Mother's coming to the Ashrama (vide Mr. Diwakar's 'life of Mahāyogī' p. 265). For forty years Aurobindo lived in Pondicherry. His Ashram became a centre of the gospel of integrated Yoga and a home for those who sought real life and light, a place of pilgrimage for men and women attracted by his teachings.

On 15th August 1947 when India attained Independence (which happened to be the date of Aurobindo's birth) he issued a long statement referring to the dreams of his youth, which he thought were arriving at fruition or were on their way to achievement. He stated 'the first of these dreams was a revolutionary movement which would create a free and united India. Another dream was the resurgence and liberation of the peoples of Asia and her return to her great role in the progress of human civilization. The third dream was a world union forming the outer basis of a fairer, brighter and nobler life for all mankind. A catastrophe may intervene and interrupt or destroy what is being done; but even then the final result is sure. For unifica-2405. It is difficult to give an accurate definition of 'mysticism'. W. R. Inge in his work 'Christian Mysticism' publishes 26 definitions of the word in an Appendix. James H. Leuba defines it as follows: "Mysticism means for us any experience taken by the experiencer to be a contact (not through the senses, but immediate or intuitive) or union of the self with a larger than self, be it called the World Spirit, God, the Absolute or otherwise" ('Psychology of religious mysticism,' Kegan Paul, 1929). In a recent work 'Mysticism, sacred and profane' Prof. R. C. Zaehner (Oxford, 1957) says 'Mysticism is the realization of unity' (p. 144) and translates and examines Chān. Up. VI. 9.1–4, Bṛ. Up. II. 3–6, III. 7.I. ff. Bhagavadgītā II. 55–72 (pp. 136–145) for that purpose.

---

2406. Vincent Sheean in his work 'Lead, kindly light' (Random House, New, York, 1949) pp. 269–277 has a very illuminating and sympathetic note on what 'obtaining darshan' of such Great Men as Mahatma Gandhi and Shri Aurobindo means to the crowds that throng for it.

tion is a necessity of Nature, an inevitable movement. Another dream, the spiritual gift of India to the world, has already begun; India's spirituality is entering Europe and America in an ever-increasing measure. The final dream was a step in evolution which would raise man to a higher and larger consciousness and begin the solution of the problems which have perplexed and vexed him since he began to think and to dream of individual perfection and a perfect society. Here too, if the evolution is to take place, since it must proceed through a growth of the spirit and the inner consciousness, the initiative can come from India and, although the scope must be universal, the central movement may be hers'.

These emotional and eloquent words are flattering to the pride of all Indian people, but it is possible that, bearing in mind that the whole of India was mostly under the heel of ruthless or exploiting conquerors for over seven hundred years from the 13th century A. D. (except for some parts and for brief periods as under the Vijayanagar Empire or under the Marathas for about 150 years and for about 50 years under Maharaja Ranjit Singh in Panjab) these proud assertions of Aurobindo are likely to bring derisive smiles on the faces of many non-Indian readers. It is for discerning Indian readers to judge whether any of the dreams of Shri Aurobindo (except the first about [2407] Independence) are on the way to achievement or realization, whether during the last fourteen years after Independence India has progressed in the way of spirituality among men in general, whether there is any likelihood of there being a union of peoples and nations in the near future or whether the world is on the brink of a precipice.

Shri Aurobindo had set his heart on the unity of the human race by an inner oneness and purpose and not by an external association of interests; for '24 years he completely withdrew from the outer world and gave darśana only on four days in the year. What efforts he made for the inner oneness of the human race except by his writings is not clear and nor does it appear that in the community of men and women that gathered under his leadership and influence at Pondicherry any one occupied 2407. There has been no 'United India' after Independence. The country was partitioned and Pakistan came into being as a separate entity and has been a source of constant irritation to India, in spite of the policy of the appeasement of Pakistan followed by Indian leaders throughout. 'There is today hardly a Hindu or a Sikh to be found in West Pakistan' says Mr. V. P. Menon in 'Transfer of Power in India' on p. 43.

a pre-eminent position and energetically and fruitfully pursued the path marked by the Master and carries on the work that the master dreamt of and left unattempted and unfinished. Passages quoted from his letters by Shri Diwakar (on p. 258) clarify what visions he had 'there will be first a race representing the supermind as man represents the mind', 'in what I am trying to do the spiritual realization is the first necessity, but it cannot be complete without an outer realisation also in life, in men in this world, spiritual consciousness within but also spiritual life without'. About his Sādhanā he says 'I began my Yoga in 1904. My Sādhanā was not founded upon books but upon personal experiences that crowded on me from within.....It is a fact that I was hearing constantly the voice of Vivekananda speaking to me for a fortnight in the Jail' (p. 131 of Mr. Diwakar's book).

In a letter to his brother Barindra dated 7th April 1920 which is set out in full on pp. 309–314 in the work 'Shri Aurobindo on himself and on the Mother' (1953), Aurobindo asserts 'the main defect in the old Yogas consisted in the fact that they knew mind and intelligence and the Ātman; they used to be satisfied with spiritual experience on the mental level; but the mind is capable of only partial knowledge and it can comprehend only parts and not the whole. The mind can know the infinite and the total reality only through Samadhi, Moksha or Nirvana and by no other means. Of course, some people do attain this kind of Moksha which may be said to be a blind alley. But then what is the use of it? But what the Bhagwan intends to do with man is to enable him to realize God in life, in the individual as well as in the collective society (to manifest God in life). The old systems of Yoga could not bring about a synthesis or unity between spirituality and life; they disposed of the world calling it Māyā or the transitory play of the Lord. The result is vitality and vigour in life have been sapped and India has decayed'. In this passage Aurobindo tries to bring out the distinction between his integral Yoga and the Yoga of ancient and medieval Indians. There is hardly anything very new in his theory of Yoga. The Gītā also says the same in 'ajñānenāvṛtam' (Gītā V. 15), in 'utsīdeyur-ime lokā' (Gītā III. 24–25, II. 47, III. 8, 19, IX. 27, XVIII. 45–46, all of which emphasize that disinterested work is worship of God). Aurobindo should have brought into being an organised body of workers after his own heart. The Pātañjala Yoga does not employ the word Māyā at all nor did it say that the world was a play of God. It was the Vedānta-sūtra II. 1. 33 (lokavat-tu līlākaivalyam) that said so by way of repelling an objection. In the Pātañjala yoga Īśvara has nothing to do with the creation of the world (vide above pp. 1402–3) but it speaks of avidyā by which the individual self is enmeshed (Y. S. II. 3–5 and 24) and not God or the Supreme Self. Besides one is tempted to echo the question of Aurobindo himself 'What is the use of integral Yoga, mind, overmind and supermind?' Can anybody point out even half a dozen men and disciples of Aurobindo who have devoted all their energies to the regeneration of the country and of the human race on his lines? The position of the Ashram itself is rather vague, anomalous and undefined. But it is unnecessary to say in this work anything further about it. [2408]

The writings of Shri Aurobindo are numerous and voluminous. For a list of his writings along with a few other works, vide the Bibliography (pp. 267–269) given by Shri Diwakar at the end of his work 'Mahāyogī'. The present author has read only the following works of Shri Aurobindo 'Yoga and its objects' (1938, a brief work in which 'adhyātma Yoga' is said to be higher than Haṭhayoga and Rājayoga); 'The Mother' (1937), 'Essays on the Gītā (5th ed. of 1949), 'The Synthesis of Yoga' (1948) which attempts to show that all three paths, viz. of knowledge (Jñānayoga), of Devotion (Bhaktiyoga) and of Divine works (Karmayoga) can be integrated; 'the problem of Rebirth' (published by the Aurobindo Ashram in 1952 after his passing away); 'Foundations of Indian culture' (essays brought together in one volume, revised by Shri Aurobindo), New York, 1953; Aurobindo's Magnum Opus is 'Life Divine' (originally in three volumes, now available in one of 1272 pages, published by the Aurobindo International University Centre, Pondicherry 1955). The present author has read only the first volume of this last work. Men of ordinary intelligence like the present writer find this philosophical work not easy to read, and are often at a loss to find out, in the flood of high sounding phrases used by Shri Aurobindo concerning the mind, overmind, 2408. I have to acknowledge my obligations to two biographies of Sri Aurobindo, one by G. H. Langley (former Vice-Chancellor of Dacca University) published in 1949 and 'Mahāyogī' (on the life, Sādhanā and teachings of Aurobindo) written by Shri R. R. Diwakar and published by the Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan in Bombay, 1953. There is an interesting work published by the Aurobindo International University Centre at Pondicherry called 'Sri Aurobindo on himself and on the Mother' (1953) supermind, his precise meaning. Only one sentence is cited here for sample (from p. 345 of the big one volume edition); 'Overmind, intuition, even supermind not only must be principles inherent and involved in the Inconscience from which we arise in the evolution and inevitably destined to evolve, but are secretly present, occult actively with flashes of intuitive emergence in the cosmic activity of mind, life and matter.' The present author regards the book 'Foundations of Indian culture' as the best of the works of Shri Aurobindo which he has read. Prof. R. D. Ranade in his Lectures on 'Bhagavadgītā as a philosophy of God Realization' (Nagpur, 1959 pp. 163–176) submits to examination Aurobindo's 'Essays on the Gītā' and disagrees with him on some points. While these pages were passing through the press the present writer received a copy of 'Integral Philosophy of Aurobindo', a symposium edited by Dr. Haridas Chaudhuri and Dr. Frederic Spiegelberg (and published by Allen and Unwin, 1960), which contains 30 papers written by Indian and Western scholars on the Philosophy of Aurobindo, p. 32 defining the essence of integral Yoga and p. 44 distinguishes between 'mind' and 'supermind' (of Aurobindo's philosophy).

CHAPTER XXXIII

Tarka and Dharmaśāstra

The Yājñavalkyasmṛti (I. 3) mentions Nyāya (logic)[2409] as one of the fourteen vidyās and as one of the means of knowing what Dharma is. Nyāya is rendered as 'tarkavidyā' by the Mitākṣarā on Yāj. and the Mit. states that the fourteen vidyās are the hetu (means) of (knowing) dharma.

Both the Nyāyasūtra and the Vaiśeṣikasūtra of Kaṇāda postulate that 'niḥśreyasa' follows from the correct knowledge of the categories of the two darśanas.[2410]

One of the earliest occurrences of the word tarka is in the Kaṭhopaniṣad[2411] where it is declared 'This knowledge (about the Self) cannot be obtained by (mere) ratiocination' and the previous verse states that the Self is subtler than the subtlest and not capable of being understood by mere inference or reasoning. The word 'mantavyaḥ' in the passage[2412] 'Ātmā vā are draṣṭavyaḥ śrotavyo mantavyo' (in Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 5 and IV. 5. 6) is held by the objector (in bhāṣya on V. S. I. 1. 2) and also by Śaṅkarācārya as referring to tarka on V. S. II. 1. 4. Tarka is accepted as an aṅga of Yoga in the Maitrāyaṇī Up. (vide note 2327 above), which further quotes a passage stating that by the control of speech, mind and prāṇa one apprehends brahman 2409. Some works read the verse as 'Purāṇa-tarka-mīmāṁsā'; vide note 1337 for the verse.

2410. अथातो धर्मं व्याख्यास्यामः। यतोऽभ्युदयनिःश्रेयससिद्धिः स धर्मः। द्रव्यगुणकर्मसामान्यविशेषसमवायानां पदार्थानां साधर्म्यवैधर्म्याभ्यां तत्त्वज्ञानं निःश्रेयसहेतुः। वैशेषिकसूत्र I. 1. 2 and 4; प्रमाणप्रमेयसंशयप्रयोजन-दृष्टान्त-सिद्धान्तावयवतर्क-निर्णय-वादजल्पवितण्डाहेत्वाभासच्छलजातिनिग्रहस्थानानां तत्त्वज्ञानान्निःश्रेयसाधिगमः। न्यायसूत्र I. 1. 1. The word निःश्रेयस occurs in 'अचतुर०' (a long sūtra) in पा. and in कौषीतक्युपनिषद् II. 14 and III. 2.

2411. नैषा तर्केण मतिरापनेया प्रोक्तान्येनैव सुज्ञानाय प्रेष्ठ। कठोप. II. 9 q. by शङ्कराचार्य in भाष्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 6. The previous verse ends with the words 'अणीयान्ह्यतर्क्यमणुप्रमाणात्.' आपनेय is an irregular form for आपनीय। (आप्+अनीय) or for अपनेय (from नी with अप).

2412. अथाप्यत्राप्युक्तम्। अतः परास्य धारणा तालुरसनाग्रनिपीडनाद्वाङ्मनःप्राणनिरोधनाद् ब्रह्म तर्केण पश्यति। मैत्रा. उप. VI, 20.

with the help of tarka.[2413] The Gautamadharmasūtra[2414] remarks 'tarka is the means for securing justice (among contending parties)'. One of the replies given by Yudhiṣṭhira to the Yakṣa guarding a lake is 'ratiocination is unstable (leads to no certain conclusions), the Vedic texts differ (among themselves), there is no single sage whose opinion is held authoritative (by people or other sages); the essence of Dharma is placed in a cave (i. e. is enveloped in darkness and cannot be seen clearly), that is the path (to be followed) by which the majority of people[2415] proceed'. This appears to make man in the mass the ultimate tribunal on all questions of value. In its peroration at the end, the Manusmṛti observes 'one who desires to secure the pure Dharma must know well the three viz. direct perception (or experience), inference, and śāstra based on various traditions; none but that man who considers the sayings of sages (i. e. the Veda), the instruction on Dharma (contained in the Smṛtis) with the help of reasoning that does not (directly) conflict with Veda and śāstras knows what Dharma is'.[2416] This is the position of most orthodox Sanskrit writers about Tarka. Their reasoning appears to have been this. If one were to rely on mere reason, the result would be uncertainty and anarchy. Every theorist states that his system is based on reason; but the answers arrived at on the basis of reason as to questions of vital importance to ordinary men are bewilderingly different. Thinkers brought up in different environments and of different experiences have different logics and propound even different moral laws. Whom should an ordinary man follow? The Vedas and Smṛtis

---

2413. श्रुतिरपि 'श्रोतव्यो मन्तव्यः' इति श्रवणव्यतिरेकेण मननं विदधती तर्कमप्यावर्तव्यं दर्शयति (this is पूर्वपक्ष in भाष्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 4); to this the भाष्य replies 'यद्यपि श्रवणव्यतिरेकेण मननं विदधच्छब्द एव तर्कमप्यावर्तव्यं दर्शयतीत्युच्यते। नानेन निषेण शुष्कतर्कस्यात्रात्मलाभः सम्भवति। श्रुत्यनुगृहीत एव ह्यत्र तर्कोऽनुभवपर्यवसायीष्यते॥'. The following sentence in the भाष्य cites three examples of inferences not opposed to śruti.

2414. न्यायाधिगमे तर्कोऽभ्युपायः। तेनाभ्यूह्य यथास्थानं गमयेत्। गौ. ध. सू. II. 23–24.

2415. तर्कोऽप्रतिष्ठः। ... पन्थाः। वनपर्व 313. 117 (Chitrashala ed. whole verse q. in n. 2072). Some mss read नैको मुनिर्यस्य. The sūtra तर्काप्रतिष्ठानादप्यन्यथानुमेयमिति चेदेवमप्यनिमोक्षप्रसङ्गः (वे. सू. II. 1. 11) seems to echo the words of वनपर्व. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 860 n. 1667, where मेधातिथि on मनु. II. 1 refers to 'महा ... पन्थाः' as a न्याय.

2416. प्रत्यक्षमनुमानं च शास्त्रं च विविधागमम्। त्रयं सुविदितं कार्यं धर्मशुद्धिमभीप्सता॥ आर्षं धर्मोपदेशं च वेदशास्त्राविरोधिना। यस्तर्केणानुसन्धत्ते स धर्मं वेद नेतरः॥ मनु XII. 105, 106, relied upon by शङ्कराचार्य in भाष्य on वे. सू. II. 1, 11.

embody the principles of conduct in all spheres of life arrived at by eminent and selfless sages during the course of thousands of years i. e. they embody the experiences and the reasonings of numerous wise men. Therefore, if a modern man says that reason leads him to hold opinions opposed to the Veda, most people are not prepared to accept a single man's opinion pitted against the views of numerous ancient sages. This point need not be elaborated further. On many important questions viz. whether there is God or a Supreme Intelligence guiding the universe, or whether there is an individual self, or what the future of a man when he dies is, the wisest among men have given widely differing answers.[2417] On such questions final answers acceptable to all or most people cannot be given by reason alone. Though the orthodox position is as stated above, it has been shown above (e. g. on pp. 1267–1269) how Vedic practices have been discarded by the weight of popular opinion from time to time. It is laid down by Smṛti writers themselves that blindly following the words of Śāstra would lead to loss of Dharma and that in case of conflict between two Smṛtis reasoning should be resorted to and popular opinions and practices should be considered. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 866–868 for this. The Mahābhārata enjoins[2418] 'one should not try to solve incomprehensible matters by ratiocination.' In the dialogue between the famished sage Viśvāmitra (who desired to eat the tail of a dog) and a cāṇḍāla the great Epic winds up by saying 'therefore a learned man whose soul is pure should act after relying on his intelligence in the matter of deciding what Dharma and adharma are'.[2419] It should not be supposed that Śaṅkarācārya and other great Indian writers wanted to throw reasoning overboard altogether. What they emphasized was that mere reasoning of one or more men should not as a rule be followed if the 2417. Pascal quoted in 'This I believe' edited by E. P. Morgan (London, 1953) on p. 60 says 'The heart has its reasons which reason does not understand.'

2418. अचिन्त्याः खलु ये भावा न तांस्तर्केण योजयेत् । प्रकृतिभ्यः परं यच्च तदचिन्त्यस्य लक्षणम् । भीष्मपर्व 5. 12, q. by शङ्कराचार्य as स्मृति on वे. सू. II. 1.6. First half only q. by शङ्कराचार्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 6. This also occurs in मत्स्य 113. 6, पद्म (आदि 3. 12), the first half in ब्रह्माण्ड II. 13. 7-8. ब्रह्माण्ड reads तदचिन्त्यं प्रचक्षते and some read साधयेत् for योजयेत्. प्रकृति would mean material cause. The मत्स्य (Anan. ed.) reads अचिन्त्याः ... तांस्तु तर्केण साधयेत्, thus reversing the position adopted by others.

2419. तस्मात्कौन्तेय विदुषा धर्माधर्मविनिश्चये । बुद्धिमास्थाय लोकेऽस्मिन्नतिवर्त्यं कृतात्मना ॥ शान्तिपर्व 141. 102 = cr. ed. chap. 139. 94.

conclusions arrived at by reasoning are in direct conflict with Vedic and smṛti texts. Śaṅkarācārya clearly states his position on V. S. II. 1. 1. and 11.[2420] Beliefs (such as those of Jains and Buddhists) were held to be heterodox, because they did not acknowledge the authority of the Veda and the sacred tradition, though they often observed Hindu practices and married with Hindus; but within this limit there was room enough for an enormous and bewildering variety of convictions, rites and practices that claimed to be orthodox. This may be illustrated by the attitude of some Upaniṣads. For example, the Muṇḍaka Up. (I. 1. 4–5) speaks of two vidyās, parā and aparā, includes under aparā the four Vedas and the six aṅgas and parā (highest) vidyā is that by which the imperishable brahman is attained. In the Chān. Up. (VII. 1. 1–5) when Nārada approached Sanatkumāra for instruction, the former recounted what he had already learnt viz. the four Vedas, Itihāsapurāṇa and other lores; then Sanatkumāra tells him that all that he has studied is mere name and then explains what is better than all those. Muṇḍaka (I. 2. 7) condemns yajñas as leaky vessels. It is extremely surprising that the Chān. Up. in I. 12. 2–5 compares the procedure of the five priests and the sacrificer touching each other and creeping from the sadas towards the cātvāla where the Bahiṣpavamāna chant is to be sung with a procession of dogs, each dog holding the tail of the preceding dog in his mouth. Vide for the creeping of priests noiselessly and silently Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa VI. 7. 9–12 and Āp. Śrauta-sūtra XII. 17. 1–4 and H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1166 and 1169. Though this is so, the Upaniṣads are called Vedānta, are looked upon as orthodox and as the highest end of the Vedic religion and literature. Most ancient Upaniṣads, however, quote Vedic Saṁhitā texts as authorities. For example, Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 10 and Ait. Up. II. 5 quote Ṛg. IV. 26. 1 and IV. 27. 1 respectively; Bṛ. Up. II. 5. 16–17 quote Ṛg. I. 116. 12 and I. 117. 22 and Bṛ. Up. II. 5. 19 cites Ṛg. VI. 47. 18; Kaṭha IV. 9 is the same as Atharvaveda X. 8. 16, Praśna I. 11 is quoted from Ṛg. I. 164. 12. The Muṇḍaka III. 2. 10 provides that brahmavidyā is to be expounded to śrotriyas (those who have studied the Veda). Herein the Upaniṣads rely upon the principle of adhikārabheda.

2420. वेदस्य हि निरपेक्षं स्वार्थे प्रामाण्यं स्वेरिव रूपविषये। पुरुषवचसां तु मूलान्तरापेक्षं वक्तृस्मृतिव्यवहितं चेति विभागः। तस्माद्वेदविरुद्धे विषये स्मृत्यनवकाशदोषप्रसङ्गो न दोषः। भाष्य on वे. सू. II.1.1; तर्कज्ञानानां स्वन्योन्यविरोधात्सिद्धा विप्रतिपत्तिः। यद्धि केनचित्तार्किकेणेदमेव सम्यग्ज्ञानमिति प्रतिपादितं तदपरेण व्युत्थाप्यते तेनापि प्रतिष्ठापितं ततोऽपरेण व्युत्थाप्यते इति प्रसिद्धं लोके। कथमेकरूपानवस्थितविषयं तर्कप्रभवं सम्यग्ज्ञानं भवेत्। न च प्रधानवादी तर्कविदामुत्तम इति सर्वैस्तार्किकैः परिगृहीतो येन तदीयं मतं सम्यग्ज्ञानमिति प्रतिपद्येमहि। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. II. 1. 11.

One of the oldest philosophical problems is Authority and Reason or to put it in different words, Faith and Reason and there has been throughout the ages a constant struggle between these two. Most men want to rely on some authority, on some one deemed higher than themselves. For vast numbers of people this authority or the something greater than themselves is Revelation and God. They have neither the leisure nor the inclination nor the intellectual ability to think for themselves rationally on such abstruse questions as the existence of God or an individual self, free will and determinism, the general principles of conduct, the final destiny of men after physical death &c. In sociological matters human judgement is often warped by prevailing dogmas and prejudices; on questions which are deemed to be religious (and in India the field of matters deemed to be religious has always been very extensive) a frank discussion is almost impossible without creating anger and rancour. Several ethical questions such as divorce and birth control often assume the position of religious dogmas and when openly discussed create great heat. In several so-called democracies of the present day rational discussion comes last and vital questions are determined by party loyalties or by personality cults or by lust for power and self-aggrandisement. It should not be supposed that ancient and medieval India had no rationalists nor atheists. As a matter of fact there were several rationalists. Vide the present author's note 875 pp. 358–359 in H. of Dh. Vol. II, Vol. III. pp. 46–47 note 57 on Lokāyatas and their views, [2421] and pp. 974–975 note 1596 above for rationalistic criticism of sacrifices, śrāddhas &c. Many rationalists hold that there is no proof of the existence of God, they deny an individual soul, they deny immortality and the existence of any intelligence in the universe higher than man's, deny that there is any design or purpose in the Universe and they believe that in all religions there is some truth mixed with a great deal of error. The case of the rationalist is that he should not be called upon to prove that there is no God (which is a negative proposition), that it is for theists to prove that God exists (which is a positive proposition) and that he is omnipotent and omniscient. They say that to attribute anger, love, pity to God is to implicitly negative God's omnipotence. The problem of evil in the world is, according to rationalists, a great stumbling block in accepting God as good, kind, all-knowing and all-powerful. The rationalist might agree with the theist that man as an individual depends on something greater than himself that is able to give directions and to punish him for the disobedience of directions. For the rationalist it is some kind of community or society in which men live and have their being that is greater than themselves. This would be substituting the worship of the human community or of collective human power for the worship of God. What human community is to be in the place of God? Is it to be the whole human race (now having over two thousand million human beings) or some big or small groups out of these? There are now two well-defined blocks between whom there is a conflict of ideological ends, viz. the communist block represented by the U. S. S. R. and China and the capitalistic block represented by U. S. A., England and several other countries of Europe, and a third unorganized block of countries professing to have no alignment with anyone of the two blocks.

2421. For Lokāyata or Laukāyatika, vide the work Tattvopaplavasiṁha of Jayarāśibhaṭṭa (GOS). The word Lokāyata occurs in the gaṇa Ukthādi mentioned in Pāṇini 'Kratūkthādisūtrāntaṭ-ṭhak' IV. 2. 60. Vide Dr. Dakshinaranjan Shastri's 'Short History of Indian Materialism' (Calcutta, 2nd ed. of 1957) and pp. 1205–6 note 1956 above.

In these days Communism is really a form of worship i. e. worship of man or men in place of the worship of God. It may be conceded that probably the masses of the Russian people are far better off in the matter of physical needs than they were in the regime of the Tsars. The masses seem to have devotion to Communism. But that devotion is more apparent than real, based on the hope of quick gains or the fear of prompt punishment and is the product of rigid State control of education and the environment. The communists have an attractive slogan in the words 'Workers of the world! unite, you have nothing to lose but your chains.' There are also the catchwords 'Dictatorship of the proletariat.'. But this ends in fact in a dictatorship of the Communist Party over the proletariat. In return for physical well-being the common people have had to bargain away several freedoms, freedom to think for themselves, freedom of expression, freedom of intercourse with foreigners, freedom to choose their occupation &c. The communists make no secret that they want to bring the whole world under Communism. Therefore, they pose that they are the saviours of common men and women throughout the world and they cannot be charged with aggression since they mean to liberate people from the bonds of capitalism or colonialism &c. Their creed is one of fanaticism, of intolerance or hatred of others. The only experiment of a godless society on a large scale was made by the Soviet, but it does not appear to outsiders to have been a happy or successful one. The universal exhibition of portraits of great Soviet leaders (some of whom were declared by successor leaders to be no better than murderers)[2422] proclaims the necessity of worship even in a godless society. Dictators have nationalized not only all the means of the production of wealth but also all the labour in the country. They have established themselves in the place of God and desire to have total control over the bodies and the minds of all their subjects. The faith of the communists is that their country is a heaven on earth and one must accept their word for that without wanting to see for one self the real state of things. The Communists have their own special versions of history, economics and science. These one must not question.

The followers of Judaism, Christianity and Islam (all believing in one God and one Book) did not hesitate for centuries to inculcate their doctrines and practices by terrible persecutions and bloody wars. This spirit is very shocking to people brought up in Hinduism or Buddhism. If Rationalists substitute blocks of humanity or the leaders of such blocks for worship and authority, humanity itself would soon be wiped out. Conceding for argument that the existence of an omnipotent and omniscient Power cannot be proved to the satisfaction of the so-called rationalists, the present writer feels that it is for the good of most societies consisting of millions of common men and women that they believe in God and the individual soul. Most men are influenced to keep to the path of virtue and right by the fear of God, by the prickings of conscience (which is the inner light implanted in man by God), by the fear of public opinion, and by fear of punishment at the hands of the rulers of the State (vide 2422. Those interested in this phase of Communism should read 'Krushchev and Stalin's Ghost' by Bertram De Wolfe (1957); pp. 88–252 contain on even pages Krushchev's secret report to 20th Congress on the night of February 24, 25 in 1956, translated into English and odd pages contain notes and commentaries by the author. On p. 91 note it is stated that Stalin placed the number of Kulaks disposed of at one crore. Vide 'Assignment in Utopia' by E. Lyon (1937) for the horros in Russia before 1934, and 'Communist China to-day' by S. Chandrasekhara, Asia Publishing House, Bombay, 1961 for the present state of morals in China.

Śāntiparva quoted in H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 389 note 619). Those who reject the first of these would have to reject the 2nd also and would have to fall back upon hedonism (the greatest pleasure for themselves) or the idea of greatest good of the greatest number or progress towards some ideal state of society painted by imagination. The pursuit of purely secular or worldly happiness is incompatible with the precepts and ideals of Hinduism and all higher religions. Rationalism accepts the postulates which science finds convenient and useful. Though these postulates work well up to certain limits, it must be said that those limits are very narrow. Science aims at establishing general rules or laws. From those laws we know only the behaviour of nature and how man can utilize natural forces for realizing human aims; but science does not tell us what those aims should be, it is amoral and not concerned with morals or spirituality. Rationalism appears to smother many experiences of the human mind which are beyond the present machinery of science. When the scientific method is adopted in social studies, there is little to show that it leads to increased wisdom about the values that should be pursued. Rationalism insists that all our beliefs ought ultimately to be based on tangible and definite grounds and that modern scientific method is the only reliable method for acquiring knowledge of all kinds. But there are sub-conscious and non-rational impulses, beliefs and intuitions in men that are held by men to be truer or of a higher order than what is on the rationalistic level (vide W. James' 'Varieties of religious experience' p. 74, ed. of 1920). It should be the endeavour of leaders of thought in each generation to find out what is essential and vital in tradition (without believing in the infallibility of all traditions) and to present reasoned dogmas which, while retaining the essential elements of tradition, will meet the demands of modern thought and conditions and environment. It is not necessary to say here more about modern rationalism. For over two thousand years our ancient writers and smṛtis like those of Manu (XII. 105-106 which are relied upon by Kumārila himself as shown on p. 1261 above) have allowed to tarka a place in the matter of finding out what Dharma is and have been most tolerant of differing views even on fundamental matters as shown above and brought about great changes even in religious rituals, philosophical views, social customs and practices without perpetrating atrocities and indulging in wholesale persecutions. A man may be a monotheist, or a polytheist or an image-worshipper, an agnostci, or atheist or an idealist philosopher holding 'nirguṇa brahma' as the only reality, yet he may nevertheless be held to be a full Hindu, if he conforms to the general attitude towards Veda and social usages. A more radical tolerance than what our people showed throughout the ages is almost unthinkable. Western writers while admitting great tolerance in religious views and practices harp often on the requirements about observing caste rules in matters of food, marriage etc. But caste is more a social institution than a religious one and therefore just as in Western countries there were rules of etiquette and observance (such as the number 13 and the regulations against working on Sabbath and against theatre going, card playing and physical exercise except walking) that had to be observed meticulously, in India caste rules had to be observed. Besides, even when caste rules were broken the offender had in a meeting of the caste people to admit his mistake, to pay a fine to the caste or village temple and then was restored to all privileges of the caste. As the Christian churches were extremely intolerant of the slightest departure from religious views held at particular times, there arose in Europe the emphasis on rationalism and freedom to hold opinions. Government could effectively mould the opinions of its subjects by controlling education, by censorship of books and by inflicting severe penalties on those who expressed opinions opposed to those espoused by them. The Roman Church prepared an Index of forbidden books and an Index expurgatorius (a list of passages to be expunged from books that were otherwise permitted). The first Index Librorum Prohibitorius in its latest edition (before 1949) contains 5000 titles. Lecky in his 'History of the rise and influence of rationalism in Europe' [2423] points out to the extirpation of Christianity from Japan, of Protestantism from Spain, of the Huguenots from France, of most Catholics from England. The Jesuits acted on the [2424] principle that the end justifies the means.

2423. Vide Lecky's work, vol. II p. 5 for these instances (ed. of 1890). The Toleration Act' (1689) in England expressly excluded Catholics and Unitarians from the benefits of the Act. In 1401 the English Parliament passed the Statute for the burning of heretics which was not repealed until the Stuarts came back. Vide 'Conscience and Liberty' by Robert S. W. Pollard (1940) pages 46–48, for harsh laws in force in England a little over one hundred years ago against non-Conformists and Roman Catholics.

2424. Vide 'Rationalism in Theory and Practice' by Archibald Robertson (pub. by Watts & Co., 1954) p. 57 for the Jesuits. Vide p. 59 of the

(Continued on next page)

Their end was the 'greater glory of God', which meant to them the conversion of peoples and kingdoms to Roman Catholicism. Their means included incitements to assassination and to war. It has been mentioned above (p. 483) how Galileo was persecuted for espousing the Copernican theory in astronomy. Not much difference is made to religion whether the Sun revolves round the earth or the earth round the sun. In this connection it may be pointed out that Āryabhaṭa (born in 476 A. D.) appears to have held the view that the stars did not revolve round the earth, but the latter revolved round itself and gave the illustration of a man sitting in a moving boat feeling that it is the stationary objects on the banks that rush past in the opposite direction.[2425] The Pañcasiddhāntikā (13. 6) of Varāhamihira refers to this view and rejects it, not on the ground that it is opposed to the Veda, but on the ground that, if that view were correct, hawks and other birds flying high up in the sky would not be able to come back to their nests without fail. He did not know that the atmosphere also goes with the earth. This was more than eleven hundred years before Galileo and there is nothing to show that Āryabhaṭa suffered in the least for his views. For Āryabhaṭa's view vide 'Āryabhaṭīyam' by W. E. Clark (Chicago, 1930) p. 64. As observed by Archibald Robertson the history of the Rationalist movement in Europe is to a very great extent the history of a fight for the right to hold and propagate opinions unpopular for the time being and the growth of religious toleration in Europe has in fact gone hand in hand with the decay of traditional religious beliefs. Reason arrives at different conclusions on the same matter in different ages and even in the same age what appears reasonable to one group or people is held to be unreasonable by another people. Vide Robert Bridges' 'Testament of Beauty' Book I lines 465–470 on what is reasonable. Millions of people saw fruits falling from tree tops to the earth, but it was only the intuition and logic of Newton that enabled him to formulate the laws of gravitation.

(Continued from last page)

same book and also 'The flame and the light' by Hugh T. Anson Fausset (London, 1958) pp. 11–12, where the author says that Western man is very little sustained or guided by the doctrines of orthodox Christianity and that European civilization of the last five hundred years is dissolving.

2425 अनुलोमगतिर्नौस्थः पश्यत्यचलं विलोमगं यद्वत्। अचलानि भानि तद्वत्समपश्चिमगानि लङ्कायाम्॥ आर्यभट्टीय, गोलपाद verse 9.

Doubt has been and is a frequent and legitimate attitude of the mind as recognised by the Bṛ. Up. (I. 5. 3) 'Kāmaḥ saṅkalpo vicikitsā śraddhā, aśraddhā, dhritir, adhritir hrīr-dhīr-bhīr-etyetat sarvam mana eva' (desire, fancy, doubt, faith, want of faith, steadiness, restlessness, shame, understanding, fear, all these are aspects of mind). Even the Ṛgveda (II. 12. 5) refers to doubters about Indra (utem-āhur-naiṣostityenam'). In the Kaṭha Up. Naciketas says "when a man dies there is the doubt, some saying 'he (the self) exists', others saying 'he ceases to exist" and prays to Yama to resolve that doubt for him as the third boon.

Descartes held that only one truth is beyond doubt viz. cogito ergo sum (I think, therefore I am). In Europe the whole of the 18th and 19th centuries were dominated as far as thoughtful men were concerned by boundless faith in reason and progress. But owing to the two world wars (particularly the second), their aftermath and the rise of two powerful Communist countries have greatly weakened the faith in progress guided by reason and ethics, faith in the dignity of man and in equality is on the decline and is assailed in many regions and the view that might creates or is right is gaining ground.

The Upaniṣads teach that a sound moral preparation must precede the acquisition of true vedāntic view. The Bṛ. Up. states 'therefore one who knows this, after securing quiescence, restraining his senses, being free from all hankerings, bearing with fortitude all pairs of opposites (such as heat and cold), having his mind concentrated, sees the Self in the self, looks upon everything as Ātman'; the Kaṭhopaniṣad II. 24 says 'one who has not ceased from doing evil actions, who is not quiescent, who has not concentrated his mind nor has made his mind quiescent would not realize this Self by correct knowledge'; Praśna I. 16 'those secure the pure world of brahman who are free from crookedness, falsehood and deceitful conduct'; Śv. Up. VI. 22 'this highly esoteric knowledge of Vedānta should not be imparted to one whose mind is not quiescent or who is not a son or disciple'. The great formula 'thou art That' teaches one to look upon all men as Ātman or as the Gītā (VI. 29–30) puts it 'he who is endowed with Yoga and knows Ātman to be in everything and everything as abiding in Ātman, is not lost to the Lord nor is the Lord lost to him'. Compare Īśā Up. 6 and Manu XII. 91. In the Chān. Up. (III. 16. 1) man is symbolically represented as sacrifice and in III. 17. 4 it is stated that tapas, charity, straightforward conduct, ahiṁsā and truthfulness are the dakṣiṇā (sacrificial fees).

This shows that Vedānta in its highest form is the best support of pure morality for individuals. It is on account of this teaching that many sages cultivated these virtues in hermitages and were honoured by kings and common people in ancient times in India, but in medieval times the sages became[2426] rare and as regards common people they were tied down by customs and caste and very few people made strenuous efforts for solidarity of all their countrymen, for meeting their common needs and safeguarding all peoples' interests; and by the side of sublime philosophical tenets our country witnessed abject poverty among large masses of people and political domination by alien or brutal invaders. The tendency to rely on the Vedas, to believe and to argue that what has been is the best, and to appeal to the past has been very strong throughtout our history for centuries. Our motto must not be 'back to the Vedas' but rather 'forward with the Vedas'. While giving due weight to the Veda and authority, we must not condemn all independence in thought.

Some Western rationalists such as Bentham, James Mill and John S. Mill put forward the theory of utilitarianism which briefly comes to this that actions are to be judged by their consequences and are right in proportion as they tend to make for the greatest good or happiness of the community or of the greatest number. This theory has great drawbacks, the most important being that it is not really a moral theory at all as it does not tell us exactly what a man or community ought to do. Religions tell their followers what they ought to do or not to do. Another difficulty is that what may appear to one man as being for the greatest good of the greatest number may not be so accepted by others and further it is difficult to define what the greatest number regards as good or happiness. Besides, many men care nothing at all about the happiness of others. Moral, political and economic actions are confused by this doctrine. In practice, as the emphasis was put on happiness, this theory was made the excuse for epicurianism and indulgence in things material.

---

2426. Even in these days our country can produce men imbued with the true spirit of Advaita-vedānta like Raman Maharshi, the sage of Arunachal (1879–1950) about whom Arthur Osborne has published a very interesting and revealing work 'Raman Maharshi and the path of Self-knowledge' (Rider and Co, 1954).

The present author is not at all against freedom of thought, but what he objects to is making a fetish of rationalism and making millions of common men and women waver in their faith and principles of conduct by the constant talk of the non-existence of God or of the individual soul &c. The rationalists and utilitarians hardly agree upon any values and principles of conduct to be inculcated among ordinary young men and women. If God and soul be eliminated, they have not been able to put something more valuable in their place, for which the young generation that is growing up would be ready to live laborious days or to sacrifice themselves. Though we may not subscribe to the position that the last word of wisdom on all religious and social matters is to be found in the Veda or in the works of ancient sages and writers, even wise men may hesitate before they decide the question whether we should carry on a campaign for eradicating beliefs in God and an immortal self. The Gītā strikes the right note for most people when it utters the warning (III. 26) 'let not the knowing or wise man (the jñānin or vidvān) unsettle the minds of the ignorant that are attached to (certain) actions (by habit); the enlightened man, himself doing all work in the true spirit of a yogin, should set others to do all actions.'

As a result of the two world wars in which unspeakable atrocities and barbarities [2427] were committed by highly educated and organized countries most of whose people professed Christianity, there is a revulsion of feeling and several eminent men are busy in attributing the present difficulties to the decay of religious belief and in inviting humanity to return to religion. But the crux of the problem is what religious beliefs and practices are to be inculcated and practised by men in the present age. It appears to the present writer that religions can hardly be a panacea for the ills of the world. Very large blocks of modern educated men are dissatisfied with the tenets and practices of several current religions and their authoritative books. The real difficulty to be grappled with is to define what must be the content of the faith that would appeal to and secure the allegiance of most or all good, intellectual and educated modern men. At different times different virtues (such as monachism, charity, humility, patriotism, social service or philanthrophism) were preached as of supreme importance. The growth of the virtue of patriotism and of the feeling of nationalism in Western countries was not due to Christianity's teachings but to various other causes in Europe's political and economic history. There are religious virtues, heroic virtues, amiable virtues &c. The Christian people of Europe and America during the last four centuries achieved great wealth and prosperity by throwing to the winds the virtues preached in the Sermon on the Mount, by extending their colonial empires for exploiting vast regions, by decimating millions of unoffending backward races, by hunting human beings as if they were beasts and forcing on them slavery and by preaching from the house tops the great need of competition in all spheres and worshipping it as if it were God. After the holocaust of the great wars, many eminent men, not only religious men, but even those that occupy positions in Government and political life, preach the necessity of the moral sense, of benevolence and kindness towards others, restraint, unselfishness and a desire to allow others to share in the good things of life, which virtues were emphasized for all men in the Br. Up. V. 2. 1–3 quoted above.[2428]

2427. Vide 'Scourge of the Svastika' by Lord Russell of Liverpool p. 171 where he cites the confession of Höss that not less than three million people were put to death at Auschwitz, 2500000 of them by gas chambers and on p. 250 he remarks 'the murder by the Germans of over five million European Jews constitutes the greatest crime in World History.'

In India Emperor Aśoka in the 3rd century B. C. inculcated in his Edicts tolerance for the Brahmanic and the Buddhist faith (vide pp. 1011-12 above). Aśoka does not enter into dogma of any kind, but regarding himself as the father of all his subjects enjoins on them a morality that is practical and would be acceptable to all, such as tolerance, humanity, charity to monks and also to the poor and compassion towards dumb animals. Later on, it was at the most necessary to show that the doctrines put forth by reasoning were not directly opposed to the dicta of the Veda. To take only one example: though the Upaniṣads express Advaita in such Mahāvākyas 'aham brahmāsmi' (Ch. Up. III. 14. 1), 'tat-tvam-asi' (Ch. Up. VI. 8. 7), Madhvācārya could expound his thorough-going dvaita doctrine, could explain away by reasoning the above passages and claim to be the only true expounder of Veda and denounce the advaita doctrine as Buddhism in disguise without any serious persecution on either side. Yājñavalkya (II. 192) calls upon the king to safeguard the special usages of guilds and heretics and their modes of livelihood. This tolerance for multiplicity of forms and practices in religion and for diametrically opposed philosophic views has had also its weakness viz. it permitted the growth of endless variations in the formulation of faith, ritual and philosophic doctrines and led in great measure to several abuses, to some unhealthy and even revolting practices.

2428. Archibald Robertson in "Rationalism in theory and Practice" (Watts and co, London 1954) asserts (on page 41) that Christian morals have never been practised and that a society would not last for a month if run on the lines of the Sermon on the Mount. W. R. Mathews in 'Christ' (London, 1939) agrees (on page 76) with Professor Whitehead that the adoption of the principles of the Sermon on the Mount literally understood on any large scale would mean the sudden death of civilization. C. H. Tawney in 'Acquisitive Society' (1921) asserts that what was Christian in Christianity had largely disappeared from about 1700 A. D. (pages 12–13).

SECTION IX

CHAPTER XXXIV

COSMOLOGY

All writers on Dharmaśāstra are agreed on the existence of God. They rarely enter upon the task of adducing arguments for the existence of God. Christian theologians for hundreds of years put forward various arguments pointing to the existence of God. They are briefly summarised in William James' 'Varieties of religious experience' p. 437 (ed. of 1920). The cosmological argument reasons from the ordered universe to a First Cause which must be conceived as God who must at least possess whatever perfection the universe itself contains. The argument from purpose or design (teleological argument) bases itself on the evidence of purpose or design in Nature and concludes that the First Cause (God) must be a creative intellect or mind. Then there are other arguments also such as the 'moral argument' (viz. the moral law presupposes a law-giver), the argument ex consensu gentium (viz. there is widespread belief in God all over the world and it should carry weight).[2429]

2429. Vide also F. W. West-way's 'Obsessions and convictions of the human intellect' (Blackie & Son, 1938), which adds a fifth to James' four viz,. ontological argument (the very idea or concept of God makes the existence of God requisite) pp. 378–80. W. James in 'Pragmatism' (p. 109, ed. 1910) states that the evidence for the existence of God lies primarily in inner personal experience. Mr. Westway (on p. 374) gives a definite answer that there is no proof of the existence of God, but (on p. 387) he admits that the argument from design carries an extremely high degree of probability and that he believes that the Universe is not merely a chance-made affair as some philosophers believe. The argument from design (for God's existence) is held to have been shattered by the theory of evolution. If everything has a cause, it is also argued, why should God not have a cause? And it is said by some that there is no reason to suppose that the world had a beginning at all. This is the view of famous Mīmāṁsakas like Kumārila. Vide above pp. 1209–1210 and note 1963. H. G. Wells in his 'You can't be too careful' (London 1942, p. 282) holds that the idea of God's omniscience, omnipresence and omnipotence must be

(Continued on next page)

The Upaniṣads speak of the Absolute brahman as the creator, preserver and destroyer of the bhūtas (beings or elements or both). For example, the Tai. Up. III. 1 (Bhṛgu[2430] is instructed by his father Varuṇa) 'desire to know that from which all bhūtas spring, by which, after being created, they live (are sustained) and to which they return and are absorbed therein; that is brahma'. This is the basic text on which V. S. I. 1. 2 (janmādyasya yataḥ) is based. This means 'from which the creation (sustenance and dissolution) of this (world) proceed' (that is brahma). Another passage of the Tai. Up. (II. 1) states that 'from this Ātman Ākāśa sprang, from ākāśa Vāyu, from Vāyu Agni, from Agni waters, from waters the earth, from earth plants, from plants food, from food man'. A passage of the Chān. Up. states[2431] 'all this, indeed, is brahma; a man, cultivating restraint of the mind, should meditate on that (world) as springing from, ending in and breathing on account of that (brahma)'. This is the basis of V. S. I. 2. 1 (sarvatra prasiddhopadeśāt). Here the three attributes of brahma are creator, preserver and destroyer of the universe.

The Vedāntasūtra of Bādarāyaṇa further says that śāstras (sacred canon or texts) are the source of the correct knowledge abandoned, since, according to him, these are preposterous absolutes. On the other hand Dr, F. W. Jones in his work 'Design and purpose' (London, 1942) puts forward the view that many people are in danger of losing sight of the truth that the Cosmos is an ordered entity and that many have lost belief in the purpose of human life (p. 13). The teleological argument may strengthen the faith of a person who already believes in God, but it appears that it cannot create faith in God in the case of one who does not subscribe to that view. Abel Jones in 'In search of truth' (1945) holds that the three main arguments for the existence of God are cosmological, teleological and ontological.

---

(Continued from last page)

2430. यतो वा इमानि भूतानि जायन्ते येन जातानि जीवन्ति यत्प्रयन्त्यभिसंविशन्ति तद् विजिज्ञासस्व। तद् ब्रह्मेति। तै. उप. III. 1.

2431. सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म तज्जलानिति शान्त उपासीत। छा. उप. III. 14. 1. The word तज्जलान् applied to brahma is peculiar; it is explained by शङ्कराचार्य as follows: तज्जलानिति। तस्माद् ब्रह्मणो जातं तेजोबन्नादिक्रमेण सर्वम्। अतस्तज्जम्। तथा तेनैव जननक्रमेण प्रतिलोमतया तस्मिन्नेव ब्रह्मणि लीयते तदात्मतया श्लिष्यते इति तल्लम्। तथा तस्मिन्नेव स्थितिकाले अनिति प्राणिति चेष्टते इति। Vide also छा. उप. I. 9. 1 सर्वाणि ह वा इमानि भूतान्याकाशादेव समुत्पद्यन्त आकाशं प्रत्यस्तं यन्त्याकाशो ह्येवैभ्यो ज्यायान्। आकाशः परायणम्।.

of brahma.[2432] To the objection that the Veda is concerned with rites, that some portions of it are meant for the praise of rites, that the Vedic mantras only remind the performer about the various ingredients of sacrifice, that, therefore, the Vedānta texts either serve no purpose at all or at the most give information about the soul of the sacrificer or the deity to be worshipped in sacrifices, the reply is given by the Vedāntasūtra I. 1. 4 (tat-tu samanvayāt), which means that all Vedānta texts are agreed that their purport is to establish that brahma, which has been postulated (in V. S. I. 1. 2) as the creator, preserver and absorber of the world has that character and is omniscient and omnipotent.

That the argument from design also was present to the minds of the propounders of Vedānta follows from the fact that the Vedāntasūtra (II. 2. 1, racanānupapatteśca nānumānam) denies that the Pradhāna of the Sānkhya (that is postulated as acetana) can be inferred as the cause of the universe.[2433]

It may be noted here that, according to Śaṅkarācārya, the detailed[2434] statements on the doctrine about creation contained in the Upanisads are not to be taken literally, that no special purpose dependent thereon can be found nor is such a purpose laid down by Śruti (Veda), but all those statements are intended to lead on to the knowledge of brahma and to expound the non-difference of the world from brahma.[2435] From early times most

---

2432. शास्त्रयोनित्वात्। वे. सू. I 1. 3; शाङ्करभाष्य। यथोक्तसूत्रवेदादिशास्त्रं योनिः कारणं प्रमाणमस्य ब्रह्मणो यथावत्स्वरूपाधिगमे। तत्तु समन्वयात्। वे. सू. I. 1. 4; भाष्य 'तद् ब्रह्म सर्वज्ञं सर्वशक्ति जगदुत्पत्तिस्थितिलयकारणं वेदान्तशास्त्रादेवावगम्यते। कथम् समन्वयात्। सर्वेषु हि वेदान्तेषु वाक्यानि तात्पर्येणैतस्यार्थस्य प्रतिपादकत्वेन समनुगतानि।'

2433. अतो रचनानुपपत्तेश्च हेतोर्नाचेतनं जगत्कारणमनुमातव्यं भवति। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू II. 2. 1.

2434. न ह्ययं सृष्ट्यादिप्रपञ्चः प्रतिपिपादयिषितः। न हि तत्प्रतिबद्धः कश्चित्पुरुषार्थो दृश्यते श्रूयते वा। न च कल्पयितुं शक्यते, उपक्रमोपसंहाराभ्यां तत्र तत्र ब्रह्मविषयैर्वाक्यैः सार्वमेकवाक्यतायाः गम्यमानत्वात्। दर्शयति च सृष्ट्यादिप्रपञ्चस्य ब्रह्मप्रतिपत्त्यर्थताम्—'अनेन सोम्य शुङ्गेनापो मूलमन्विच्छ ... सन्मूलमन्विच्छ' (छा. VI. 8. 4) इति। सृष्टादिदृष्टान्तैश्च कार्यस्य कारणेनाभेदं वदितुं सृष्ट्यादिप्रपञ्चः श्राव्यत इति गम्यते। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू' I. 4. 14. For सृष्टादिदृष्टान्त, vide छा. उप. VI. 3. 4–6 यथा सोम्यैकेन मृत्पिण्डेन सर्वं मृन्मयं विज्ञातं स्यात्। वाचारम्भणं विकारो नामधेयं मृत्तिकेत्येव सत्यम्॥ Again on V. S. IV. 3. 14 Śaṅkarācārya remarks: सृष्टादिदृष्टान्तैर्हि सतो ब्रह्मण एकस्य सत्यत्वं विकारस्य चानृतत्वं प्रतिपादयच्छास्त्रं नोत्पत्त्यादिपरं भवितुमर्हति। ... एवमुत्पत्त्यादिश्रुतीनामैकात्म्यावगमपरत्वाज्ज्ञानैकफलत्वोपपत्तेर्ब्रह्मणः॥

2435. The following works may be read for cosmology of Vedic texts: H. W. Wallis on 'Cosmology of the Ṛgveda' (1887); 'Vedic mythology philosophers oscillate between the doctrine of the First Principle as immanent in the universe and the doctrine that God is the creator and is transcendent. The Rgveda and Upaniṣads appear to postulate the first doctrine according to which the Absolute enters into it when it creates the Universe (Tai. Up. II. 6 'tat sṛṣṭvā tad-evānuprāviśat'), Chān. Up. VI. 2. 1, VI. 3. 2, Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 10. They also speak of God as ruling the Universe (antaryāmin) as in Bṛ. Up. III. 7. Kauṣitaki Up. III. 8. At that time there was no atomic theory. Early Greek thought also wavered between the two doctrines. Later on came the rival theory of cosmology in which atoms played a great part, that was adumbrated by Democritus (died about 370 B. C. acc. to William James in 'Some Problems', and explained by Lucretius. In India also the Vaiśesikas put forward the theory that the world is paramāṇus (atoms). Kaṇāda or Kaṇabhuk (lit. one who assumes or subsists on kaṇas, very subtle particles) is the reputed founder of the Vaiśeṣika system. He does not expressly say anything about God. But later medieval writers on Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika combined the two doctrines of God and atoms. As the Tarkadīpikā[2436] puts the theory it is as follows: when God desires to create, activity is produced among the atoms, two atoms join, dvyaṇuka (dyad) is produced, tryaṇuka is produced from three dvyaṇukas and in the end the great earth is produced; of things created when God desires to bring about dissolution an activity is produced in the atoms. The atoms are eternal and infinite in number.

(Continued on next page)

Though there was almost universal agreement about the existence of God among the Dharmaśāstra writers, there was (as in the[2437] West) divergence about the names, nature and by A. A. Macdonell pp. 8–15, Deussen's 'Philosophy of the Upanishads' translated into English by A. S. Geden (1906) pp. 180–253; 'Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and the Upanishads' by A. B. Keith, pp. 570–584. A recent work 'Theories of the Universe' by Milton K. Munitz (pub. by Free Press, Glencoe, Illinois, 1957) deals with the cosmologies of several countries from Babylonian myth to modern science (but omits the Indian material).

(Continued from last page)

2436. ईश्वरस्य चिकीर्षावशात्परमाणुषु क्रिया जायते। ततः परमाणुद्वयसंयोगे सति द्व्यणुकमुत्पद्यते त्रिभिर्द्व्यणुकैस्त्र्यणुकम्। एवं चतुरणुकादिक्रमेण महती पृथिवी ... वायुरुत्पद्यते। ... एवमुत्पन्नस्य कार्यद्रव्यस्य संहितीर्षावशात् परमाणुषु क्रिया। तर्कदीपिका p. 9 (Athalye's 2nd ed. of 1918).

2437. In the West, Jeans in 'Mysterious Universe' (Cambridge 1931 goes so far as to say (on p. 134) 'the great Architect of the Universe ...

(Continued on next page)

attributes of God. Most were agreed that God is one without a second, is spiritual (and not physical, though several people worshipped Him in the form of Śiva or Viṣṇu or Devī), immutable, omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent, creator, holy, good and just &c. Difficult questions arise about belief in God. One or two may be mentioned: Is God omniscient in the completed and strictest sense viz. whether he could do anything whatever as he likes or whether there are certain things which he cannot do. Another question is whether all existing things other than himself have been created by him or whether there are some things whose existence is as ultimate as God's. All religions are faced with difficulties and therefore religion is a matter of faith.

Though the Ṛgveda is full of the deeds of and prayers to individual Gods (such as Agni, Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, Soma), the Ṛgveda contains several hymns and verses to the effect that the original Principle is only one, that it creates the world out of itself, enters into it and inspires it. In Ṛg. I. 164. 46 the sage says 'the wise speak of the One existing (principle) under various names, they call it Agni, Yama, Mātariśvan (wind god)'. This is not a solitary verse. There are similar verses in the Ṛgveda. For example, Ṛgveda VIII. 58. 2 (a verse from the Vālakhilya hymns) says 'The one fire is kindled in many places, the one Sun appears in the whole world, the one Dawn shines over all this world and the One (Principle, Spirit) became all this'. In Ṛg. X. 90. 2, it is declared 'all this universe is (in reality) the Puruṣa alone, (both) what has been and what will come into existence in future'. In Ṛg. II. 1. 3–7 Agni is identified with Indra, Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, Tvaṣṭṛ, Rudra, Draviṇodas, Savitṛ and Bhaga. All these verses establish that ultimately all plurality is only a play of words, a mere name ('Vācārambhaṇam vikāro nāmadheyam' as the Chān. Up. VI. 1. 4 states) and that unity is the only Reality and that the fundamental teaching of the Upaniṣads appears in germ in the Ṛgveda.

(Continued from last page)

begins to appear as a pure mathematician.' Einstein, the greatest scientist of modern times, is reported to have cabled back to Rabbi H. S. Goldstein of New York (who asked by wire 'Do you believe in God) that 'I believe in Spinoza's God who reveals himself in the harmony of all beings, not in a God who concerns himself with the fate and actions of men.' In 'Out of my later years' he holds that the main conflict between science and religion lies in the concept of a personal God. Vide Viscount Samuel's address in the symposium 'In search of faith' edited by E. W. Martin p. 78, where four views on the relation of God and the world are mentioned.

In the Ṛgveda there are several hymns about the creation of the world in the 10th Maṇḍala (X. 72, X. 81 and 82, X. 90, X. 121, X. 129). For reasons of space all these cannot be set out at length, but some important texts will be mentioned. The main purpose of the hymn (X. 72) is to describe the birth of eight Ādityas. Ṛg. X. 72. 2 states[2438] that Brahmaṇaspati brought about the (births of) gods like a smith (that works with bellows) and that in the primeval ages of the Gods' sat was produced from asat. In Ṛg. X. 72. 4–5 and 8 it is said that Dakṣa was born from Aditi and Aditi from Dakṣa, that the gods were born after her (Aditi) and that from Aditi eight sons were born. The two hymns X. 81 and 82 refer to Viśvakarman who fashioned the worlds. X. 81. 2 and 4 ask questions 'what was the base[2439] (from where he created the world), what was the 2438. ब्रह्मणस्पतिरेता सं कर्मार इवाधमत् । देवानां पूर्व्ये युगेऽसतः सदजायत ॥ ऋ. X. 72. 2. Here 'Asat' must be taken to mean 'undeveloped' (Avyakta) and not as meaning 'non-existent'. The Bṛ. Up. (I. 4. 7) states 'all this was then (before creation began) undeveloped and it was developed by name and form'. Similarly, in the Tai. Up. II. 7 it is said असद्वा इदमग्र आसीत् ततो वै सदजायत. But the Chān. Up. (VI. 3. 1–3) emphatically asserts "in the beginning there was that only which was 'sat', one only without a second; some say 'in the beginning there was that only which is asat, from which arose sat'; but how could it be thus, how would sat (that which is) spring from asat (that which is not)? It is sat only that was at the beginning, one without a second. It reflected 'may I be many, may I produce'; it created fire &c." Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 4. 15 refers to Tai. Up. II. 7 'asad vā idam-agra āsit' and Chān. Up. III. 19. 1 'asad-evedam-agra āsīt' and explains what is meant by asat in such passages viz. 'नामरूपव्याकृतवस्तुविषयः प्रायेण सच्छब्दः प्रसिद्ध इति तद्व्याकरणाभावापेक्षया प्राग्उत्पत्तेः सदेव ब्रह्मासदिवासीदित्युपचर्यते' and points out that in such passages Śruti itself adds words which give the go-by and refute the words 'asad-evedam' &c. In Ṛg. X. 72. 4 (aditer dakṣo ajāyata) Prof. Velankar (Pro. of All I. O. Conference, 17th Session in 1953) holds 'aditeḥ' to be in the genitive case (p. 62) and not in the ablative case, to avoid the riddle how Dakṣa and Aditi were born of each other; but that breaks the symmetry of the words, such as 'asataḥ', 'uttānapadaḥ', 'bhuvaḥ' that precede and are taken as ablatives The present author demurs to this explanation offered by Prof. Velankar.

---

2439. किं स्विदासीदधिष्ठानमारम्भणं कतमत्स्वित्कथासीत् । यतो भूमिं जनयन्विश्वकर्मा वि द्यामौर्णोन्महिना विश्वचक्षाः॥ विश्वतश्चक्षुरुत विश्वतोमुखो विश्वतो बाहुरुत विश्वतस्पात् । सं बाहुभ्यां धमति सं पतत्रैर्द्यावाभूमी जनयन्देव एकः॥ किं स्विद्वनं क उ स वृक्ष आस यतो द्यावापृथिवी निष्टतक्षुः । मनीषिणो मनसा पृच्छतेदु तद्यदध्यतिष्ठद्भुवनानि धारयन् ॥ ऋ. X. 81. 2–4. The half verse किंस्विद्वनं occurs in Ṛg. X. 31. 7 also. सायण explains कथासीत् in the first verse as 'कथमभूत् किं स्वयं सदसद्वा भवेदित्यर्थः । उभयथापि नोपपद्यते । सती

(Continued on next page)

material (out of which he fashioned the earth), what was the forest and the tree from which heaven and earth were chiselled out' and the third verse describes the one God as follows 'The one God who sees all round, whose face is turned in all directions, who has hands and feet everywhere, who when creating heaven and earth sends them forth with his (two) hands as with bellows and with wings' (as a bird is propelled). Ṛgveda X. 90 (containing 16 verses) is the famous hymn called Puruṣasūkta and postulates a supreme creator as a Puruṣa (called Ādipuruṣa by Sāyaṇa) with a thousand heads, eyes and feet, asserts that all this that has come into being and that is yet to come is Puruṣa, that from Puruṣa arose Virāj, from whom arose (what we may call the second) Puruṣa (Hiraṇyagarbha) whom the gods offered as havis (oblation or paśu) in a symbolical sacrifice in which the three seasons, Vasanta, Grīṣma and Śarad were respectively the ghee, the fuel and the havis. This hymn was probably composed at a time when, it appears, there was a firm belief (as in Śat. Br. V. 2. 4. 7, VI. 1. 1. 3 and Tai. S. VII. 4. 2. 1) that nothing great can be accomplished without yajña or tapas. The hymn then proceeds to say that from that primeval yajña all animals (horses, cows &c.), the four varṇas, the Sun, the Moon, Agni, Indra, the Veda, heaven and earth were produced. In the Atharvaveda XIX. 6 also there are 16 verses of which the first fifteen correspond with the first 15 verses of the Puruṣasūkta, but the order of verses is different and some of the words also are slightly changed. The Vāj. S. 31 has all the 16 verses of the Puruṣasūkta but it contains five more verses and a prose passage at the end. Rg. X. 121. 1 declares[2440] that in the beginning Hiraṇya-

---

(Continued from last page)

वद्देतमङ्गमसङ्गः। असच्चेत् सदात्मकयोर्द्यावापृथिव्योरुपादानानर्हत्वात्। नान्यत्किंचन मिषत् इति श्रुतेश्चेत्यभिप्रायः।". The तै. ब्रा. (II. 8. 9. 3 ff) repeats all the verses of Ṛg. X. 129 except the 3rd verse and in II. 8. 9 6 states that the answer to the question किं स्विद्वनं (Ṛg. X. 81. 4) is ब्रह्म वनं ब्रह्म स वृक्ष आसीद्यतो द्यावापृथिवी निष्टतक्षुः। मनीषिणो मनसा विब्रवीमि वो ब्रह्माध्यतिष्ठद्भुवनानि धारयन्॥ 'Brahma was the forest and the tree from which they chiselled heaven and earth (and worlds)'.

2440. हिरण्यगर्भः समवर्तताग्रे भूतस्य जातः पतिरेक आसीत्। ऋ. X. 121. 1. The तै. सं. V. 5. 1. 2 provides 'हिरण्यगर्भः समवर्तताग्रे इत्याधानमाधास्यति प्रजापतिर्वै हिरण्यगर्भः प्रजापतेरनुरूपत्वाय'. य आत्मदा बलदा यस्य विश्व उपासते प्रशिषं यस्य देवाः। यस्य छायामृतं यस्य मृत्युः कस्मै देवाय हविषा विधेम॥ ऋ. X. 121. 2. 'He gives life and strength, his commandments are honoured by all the Gods, whose shadow is immortality and also death; who is this God whom we worship with other offerings (or to what God we may offer worship with havis?).

garbha (the Golden Egg) was born; and verse 10 identifies him with Prajāpati and verses 8 and 10 declare that waters were produced by him from which issues forth Hiranyagarbha (the Golden egg), which was Prajāpati Himself. The second verse is quoted in n. 1440. Rg. X. 125 is a hymn placed in the mouth of Vāk (speech), wherein speech is portrayed as a power even beyond the gods and as creative. Three (1, 6, 8) out of the eight verses may be rendered here 'I move along with the Rudras and Vasus, with the Ādityas and Viśvedevas; I support both Mitra and Varuṇa, Indra and Agni and the two Aśvins. I stretch the bow of Rudra in order to kill the enemy, the hater of brahma (sacred prayer); I cause war for men; I entered heaven and earth. I blow like the wind, producing all the worlds; I am beyond heaven and beyond this earth; by my greatness (power) I have become such a one'. Here one must hold that the sage is not referring to ordinary speech or language but to the conception that word has creative power and that it is one with God or was the thought uttered by brahman.

Rg. X. 129 (called Nāsadīya-sūkta from the opening words) is a unique hymn.[2441] Several passages of his hymn are yet very obscure in spite of the labour bestowed upon it by eminent scholars. In this hymn the First Principle or Creator is not given any name but is simply spoken of as 'tad-ekam', as done in the Upaniṣads in 'Tat-tvam-asi' or 'ekam-evādvitīyam' (Chān. Up. VI. 2.1-2.). The important and tolerably clear passages are translated here: "There was then neither 'asat' (what is not, non-being) nor 'sat' (what is); there was no sky nor the heaven which is beyond; what was it that covered all? Where was it and under whose shelter? Was there deep unfathomable abyss of waters?; (2) There was no death, hence nothing immortal; there was no consciousness (distinction) of night and day; that one breathed by its own nature (power) without there being any air, really nothing other than that existed; (4) desire came into being, that was the first flow (seed, offspring) of the mind; (6) who knows directly, who can proclaim it here whence this creation came into being; (7) He from whom arose this creation, whether he made it or did not make it, the Highest seer in the highest heaven, he indeed knows or even he does not know?

---

2441. नासदासीन्नो सदासीत्तदानीं नासीद्रजो नो व्योमा परो यत्। किमावरीवः कुह कस्य शर्मन्नम्भः किमासीद्गहनं गभीरम्॥ न मृत्युरासीदमृतं न तर्हि न रात्र्या अह्न आसीत् प्रकेतः। आनीदवातं स्वधया तदेकं तस्माद्धान्यन्न परः किं च नास॥ तम आसीत्तमसा गूळ्हमग्रेऽप्रकेतं सलिलं सर्वमा इदम्। ... कामस्तदग्रे समवर्ततताधि मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत्। ... को अद्धा वेद क इह प्रवोचत् कुत आजाता कुत इयं विसृष्टिः। ... इयं विसृष्टिर्यत आबभूव यदि वा दधे यदि वा न। यो अस्याध्यक्षः परमे व्योमन् सो अङ्ग वेद यदि वा न वेद॥ ऋ. X. 129. 1–7. The शतपथब्राह्मण (X. 5. 3. 1–2) makes an interesting reference to this hymn: 'नेव वा इदमग्रेऽसदासीन्नेव सदासीत्। आसीदिव वा इदमग्रे नेवासीत्तद्ध तन्मन एवास। तस्मादेतदृषिणाभ्यनूक्तम्। नासदासीन्नो सदासीत्तदानीमिति। नेव हि सन्मनो नेवासत् तदिदं मनः सृष्टमिवरुवूपत्।' This Br. makes it clear that this (Universe) was as it were neither non-existent nor existent and it further says 'in the beginning this (Universe) as it were existed and did not exist: there was then only the mind and that mind as it were was neither existent nor non-existent.' It may be noted that the Bhāgavatapurāṇa speaks of the Lord as importing the esoteric (guhya) Truth in verses 32–36 of II. 9; verse 32 which reminds us of Rg. X. 129. 1 is: अहमेवासमेवाग्रे नान्यद्यत्सदसत्परम्। पश्चादहं यदेतच्च योऽवशिष्येत सोऽस्म्यहम्॥.

It would be noticed that the sage, who was a poet and philosopher, proclaimed that there was that one Being, raised high above all gods, conditions and limitations; he, the sage, gives expression to what he conceived to be the state before the creation of the universe. Night and day, death and immortality are opposites. These exist only when there is manifestness or creation and therefore he says 'there was no death, nor anything immortal'. The hymn does not say that there was non-being out of which being grew. What he means is that That One alone breathed, the opposites, being and non-being, did not exist. For translations and remarks on this hymn, vide Max-Müller's 'History of ancient Sanskrit Literature' (1859) pp. 539–566, and 'Six systems of Indian Philosophy' (1919 ed.) pp. 49–52, Dr. Radhakrishnan's 'Indian Philosophy' (1923), vol. I. pp. 100-104. Prof. Whitney (Proceedings of American Oriental Society Vol. XI p. CXI.), in his characteristic supercilious manner referred to above on p. 512, remarked that the praises bestowed on this hymn were nauseating. Deussen, long after Whitney's diatribe, said 'in its noble simplicity, in the loftiness of its philosophic vision, it is possibly the most admirable bit of the philosophy of olden times' and that 'no translation can ever do justice to the beauty of the original' (vide Bloomfield's 'The religion of the Veda,' p. 234, ed. of 1908). Vide Keith's 'Religion and philosophy of the Veda and Upanisads.' Vol. II. pp. 435–436. In many other passages of the Ṛgveda, different gods are referred to as creators. God Prajāpati is said to have created heaven and earth, the wide, deep, well formed and to have pushed them by his power without support (IV. 56. 3). Indra is said to have created the Sun and Uṣas (Rg. II. 12. 7) and to have established heaven without any beam to support, supported and spread the earth (Rg. II. 15. 2).

The creation hymns refer to a stage when there was no generally accepted theory about the origin of the world. But this much is clear that in the most ancient times, at least some of the Vedic sages had arrived at the theory that there was only one Principle or Spirit, though called by various names and that it willed to create the world and created it from itself.

Apart from the above-mentioned hymns that may be called creation hymns, the Ṛgveda contains many references to the creation or the support [2442] of heaven and earth by several gods and also creation of other things. In Ṛg. X. 89. 4 Indra is said to have made from heaven and earth on all sides as the axle does the wheels. Ṛg. I. 154. 4 refers to Viṣṇu who single-handed supports the three, viz. the earth, the heaven (and antarikṣa) and all the worlds. Mitra is said to support heaven and earth (Ṛg. III. 59. 1) and to bear all gods (Ṛg. III. 59. 8) [2443]. Brahmaṇaspati (Lord of Prayer, Bṛhaspati) is said to have sent forth (blazed) the births of gods like a blacksmith and that in the primeval times of the gods sat was born from asat. Soma is said (Ṛg. VI. 47. 4) to have made the width of the earth and the loftiness of the heaven and supported the wide antarikṣa (mid regions) and in Ṛg. II. 40 (which is addressed jointly to Soma-Pūsan) it is said that one of them (Soma) produced all worlds and the other (Pūṣan, the Sun) goes overseeing or marking, the doings of the whole world (verse 5).

In Ṛg. VII. 78. 3 dawns (plural) are said to have created the Sun, Yajña and Agni. This is metaphorical, since after each dawn the Sun rises, sacrificial fire is kindled into flames and sacrifice is offered. In Ṛg. I. 96. 2 Agni is said to be the progenitor of men. In Ṛg. II. 35. 2 (apām napāt, grandson of waters i. e. Agni) is said to have created all worlds.

Heaven and earth (as dual divinities) have six hymns addressed to them in the Ṛg., viz. I. 159–160, 185, IV. 56, VI. 70, VII. 53) and they are called 'rodasī' and sisters (Ṛg. I. 185. 5). They are also called parents of the gods (Ṛg. VIII. 97. 8, X. 2. 7).

2442. य उ त्रिधातु पृथिवीमुत द्यामेको दाधार भुवनानि विश्वा। ऋ. 1. 154. 4. The word त्रिधातु occurs at least two dozen times in the Ṛgveda, but the meaning is not certain. In Ṛg. VIII 40 12 we have 'tridhātunā śarmaṇa pātamasmān' (protect us with a three-fold protection) and it is difficult to say what 'tridhātu' protection is.

2443. ब्रह्मणस्पतिरेता...सदजायत। ऋ. X. 72. 2. एता refers to जाना (जज्ञानि) in the first verse (देवानां नु वयं जाना प्रवोचाम विपन्यया). For the meaning of सत् and असत् vide note 2438 above.

The word 'antarikṣa' (atmospheric region) occurs at least a hundred times in the Ṛgveda. Sometimes we have phrases like (tisraḥ pṛthvīḥ) meaning the three worlds including the earth (Ṛg. I. 34. 8), while in other passages reference is made to lower, middle and highest pṛithivi as in Ṛg. I. 108. 9 (yad indrāgni avamasyām pṛthivyām madhyamasyām paramasyām uta sthaḥ) meaning thereby the earth, antarikṣa and heaven. Antariksa is often called 'rajas' as the region of dust, mists and clouds in Ṛg. I. 35. 2 and 9).

In Ṛg. I. 35. 6 it is said 'there are three dyaus (i. e. heaven, antarikṣa and earth), two are on the lap of Savitṛ (i. e. heaven and earth) and one (antarikṣa) is in the world of Yama. The sage explains in Ṛg. X. 88. 15 'I have heard of two paths viz. of the pitṛs and of the gods and also of men; the whole world that moves reaches that (region) which is between the father (heaven) and the mother (the earth)'.

Varuṇa is said to have spread antarikṣa on forests, spread the Sun in heaven and Soma on mountains (Ṛg. V. 85. 2). Even in the times of the Ṛgveda speculation had begun about the distance between heaven and earth. In Ṛg. I. 155. 5 the poet says that no one dare soar up to the third step of Viṣṇu (i. e. heaven), not even the birds flying on their wings. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa the distance between the earth and heaven is put at one thousand days' journey for a horse.[2444]

In the Taittirīya Saṁhitā Prajāpati is frequently mentioned as creating the gods and asuras (III. 3. 7. 1), as creating yajñas (I. 6. 9. 1), as creating people (II. 1. 2. 1) and animals (I. 5. 9. 7) and desiring to create prajā and performing tapas for that (III. 1. 1. 1). Tai. S. (V. 6. 4. 2) states that all this in the beginning was water, a sea and that Prajāpati becoming wind floated rapidly on a lotus leaf.

The Atharvaveda has some hymns on creation. But they are verbose, repetitive and do not possess the depth, philosophy and terse style of the hymns of the Ṛgveda cited above. In hymns 7 and 8 of the 10th kāṇḍa it puts forward Skambha as the base and as identified with Prajāpati, as the creator and supporter of all worlds and as having all the thirty-three gods in himself; it asks 'by how much did Skambha enter the manifold forms of the highest, lowest and middling type that Prajāpati created; how much is that in which he (Skambha) did not enter'? In Rg. IX. 86. 46 Soma made for sacrifice is spoken of as Skambha. Hymn 8 of kāṇḍa X (of Atharvaveda) is styled 'description of Jyeṣṭha-brahma' (the highest or oldest brahma). Two verses from it may be cited 'Obeisance to that Jyeṣṭha Brahma that governs all, whether produced or to be produced, and to whom alone heaven pertains. These two, heaven and earth, stand supported by Skambha; all this that has Ātman, that breathes and blinks is Skambha. Skambha literally means 'support' or 'pillar'. The verbal form 'Skabhnāti' occurs in Rg X. 6. 3 and the word 'Skambha' occurs several times in the Rg. but not in the sense of 'creator'. In Atharva X. 8. 2 Skambha is mentioned twice, while in X. 7[2445] (of 44 verses) it occurs many times. Atharva X. 2 is called Brahmaprakāśana hymn (of 33 verses). Numerous questions are asked in verses one to 19. In verses 20, 22, 24 questions are asked and verses 21, 23, 25 give replies to them. One question and answer may be set out 'By whom was this earth made (or arranged), by whom was the high heaven placed, by whom was the sky placed above and crosswise and in various directions'? 'Brahma made the earth, brahma is the heaven placed high, it is brahma that is the sky placed above, cross-wise and in various directions.' Verse 27 of Atharva X. 8 is the same as Śv. Up. IV. 3 and identifies the creator with young and old, men and women and boy and girl. In Atharva X. 8 several other deities also are mentioned but they are deemed to be comprehended in the Supreme Entity. In Atharva IX. 2 (25 verses) there is apotheosis of Kāma, in the first eighteen verses of which there are prayers to Kāma for vanquishing and driving away enemies, the last quarter of each of the verses 19 to 24 ends 'tasmai te Kāma nama it kṛṇomi' (I offer obeisance to you, O Kāma'). These six verses declare that Kāma appeared first, that neither the gods, nor pitṛs nor men reached Kāma who is greater than heaven and earth, waters, Agni, the directions, all beings that blink their eyes, the sea; Vāta, Agni, the Sun and the Moon do not reach Kāma.

2444. सहस्रमस्यै स्वर्गस्यानत्य सहस्राय्हीये वा इतः स्वर्गो लोकः। ऐ. ब्रा. (7th अ, 7th खण्ड or 2nd पञ्चिका 17).

2445. यस्मिन् स्तब्ध्वा प्रजापतिर्लोकान्सर्वां° अधारयत्। स्कम्भं तं ब्रूहि कतमः स्विदेव सः॥ यत्परममवमं यच्च मध्यमं प्रजापतिः ससृजे विश्वरूपम्। कियता स्कम्भः प्रविवेश तत्र यत्र प्राविशत्कियत्तद् बभूव॥ यस्य त्रयस्त्रिंशद्देवा अङ्गे सर्वे समाहिताः। स्कम्भं तं ब्रूहि कतमः स्विदेव सः॥ अथर्व X. 7. 7, 8, 13; केनेयं भूमिर्विहिता केन द्यौरुत्तरा हिता। केनेदमूर्ध्वं तिर्यक् चान्तरिक्षं व्यचो हितम्॥ ब्रह्मणा भूमिर्विहिता ब्रह्म द्यौरुत्तरा हिता। ब्रह्मेदमूर्ध्वं तिर्यक्चान्तरिक्षं व्यचो हितम्। अथर्व° X. 2. 24-25.

Atharva XIX. 52 is a hymn[2446] of five verses addressed to Kāma, who is said to have appeared in the beginning and was the first flow of the mind.

Atharvaveda XI. 4 (26 verses) is addressed to Prāṇa, the first verse being 'obeisance to Prāṇa under whose domination is all this (world); he is the Lord of all and in him everything is centred (or established)' and verse 12 is 'Prāṇa is Virāj, Prāṇa is the directing power, all offer worship to Prāṇa, Prāṇa is indeed the Sun, the Moon and they (the sages) call him Prajāpati'.

In hymns 53 (10 verses) and 54 (5 verses) of Kāṇḍa 19 the Atharvaveda appears to put forward Kāla (time) as the first principle. Three of these are here translated. 'Tapas is placed in Kāla, also the Jyeṣṭha Brahma, Kāla is the Lord of all, he was the father of Prajāpati; Kāla created people, in the beginning Kāla created Prajāpati, Svayambhū (Brahmā), Kaśyapa and tapas sprang from Kāla; from Kāla were born waters, brahma, tapas and directions, sun-rise is due to Kāla and it is merged in Kāla (at night).'

The Śat. Br. in many places speaks of creation. A few passages only can be referred to here. The Śat. Br. (in VI. 1. 1) starts by saying that 'in the beginning there was here the non-existent' and asserts that the non-existent was the sages, the vital airs and then it postulates Prajāpati (made from seven vital airs) who desired 'May I be more, may I have progeny'. 'He toiled and practised tapas, and being tired, he created first of all the Brahman, the triple lore (the three Vedas), that Prajāpati then created waters from Vāk that is the world; that he (Prajāpati) entered the waters with the triple lore and that thence an egg arose; he touched it, then earth was produced and so on.

In XI. 1. 6. 1 ff. the Śat. Br. states "In the beginning this was water, only a sea. The waters desired 'How shall we have 2446. कामस्तदग्रे समवर्तत मनसो रेतः प्रथमं यदासीत्। स काम कामेन बृहता सयोनी रायस्पोषं यजमानाय धेहि॥ अथर्व० XIX. 52 1. For मनसो रेतः, compare Ṛg. X. 129. 4 quoted above in n. 2441; प्राणाय नमो यस्य सर्वमिदं वशे। यो भूतः सर्वस्येश्वरो यस्मिन्त्सर्वं प्रतिष्ठितम्॥ प्राणो विराट् प्राणो देष्ट्री प्राणं सर्व उपासते। प्राणो ह सूर्यश्चन्द्रमाः प्राणमाहुः प्रजापतिम्॥ अथर्व० XI. 4. 1 and 12; काले तपः काले ज्येष्ठं काले ब्रह्म समाहितम्। कालो ह सर्वस्येश्वरो यः पितासीत्प्रजापतेः॥ कालः प्रजा असृजत कालो अग्रे प्रजापतिम्। स्वयंभूः कश्यपः कालात्तपः कालादजायत॥ अथर्व XIX. 53. 8 and 10; कालादापः समभवन् कालाद् ब्रह्म तपो दिशः। कालेनोदेति सूर्यः काले नि विशते पुनः॥ अथर्व० XIX. 54. 1.

---

progeny?' They toiled and practised austerities; while they were doing this a golden egg was produced, which floated for about a year, in about a year's time a Puruṣa, Prajāpati, was born; he broke open the egg; he created the Gods by (the breath of) his mouth; he created Agni, Indra, Soma" &c.

In XI. 2. 3. 1-2 the Śat. Br. says—In the beginning this (universe) was brahma, it created the gods, Agni, Vāyu, Sūrya; then a reference is made to name and form (nāma-rūpe) by which he descends into the worlds and it is said 'these two (nāmarūpe) are the great manifestations of brahma'.

This myth about a golden egg of the universe is developed from Rg. X. 129. 3 and X. 121. 1 (Hiraṇyagarbhaḥ samavartatāgre) in the Ch. Up. III. 19. 1-2 'In the beginning this universe was asat (not unfolded), it became sat (began to unfold), it was born (i. e. it took form); then an egg was evolved; it lay (in waters) for the period of a year; then it broke up, the two halves were one of silver and the other of gold; the silver half is this earth and the golden half is heaven'. This is followed in Manusmṛti as will be shown later on.

It is stated in the Śat. Br. X. 4. 2. 22-23 that Prajāpati arranged the Ṛgveda in such a way that the number of syllables in the Ṛgveda come to 12000 Bṛhatī metres (each Bṛhatī has 36 syllables).

The Tai. Br. states "Prajāpati created Gods and asuras (II. 2. 3) but he did not create Indra; the Gods said to him 'create Indra for us'; just as I created you by means of tapas in the same way you create Indra; they practised tapas and they saw Indra (abiding) in themselves (i. e. in their hearts) they said to him 'be born'". In II. 2. 9. 1 the Tai.[2447] Br. states "this universe was nothing at all in the beginning; there was no heaven nor earth nor mid region; that non-existent created Mind with the thought 'let me be'". In II. 6. 2. 3 the same Brāhmaṇa says "Prajāpati created by the help of Veda the two forms 'sat' and 'asat'". The Tai. Br. in II. 8. 8. 9-10 cites as Puronuvākyā and Yājyā of purodāśa and puronuvākyā of 'havis' as follows: 'Brahma produced the Gods and all this world;

2447. इदं वा अग्रे नैव किंचनासीत्। न द्यौरासीत्। न पृथिवी। नान्तरिक्षम्। तदसदेव सन् मनोऽकुरुत स्यामिति। तै. ब्रा. II. 2. 9. 1, ब्रह्म देवानजनयत् ब्रह्म विश्वमिदं जगत्। ब्रह्मणा क्षत्रं निर्मितम्। ब्रह्म क्षत्रेण आत्मना॥ अन्तरिक्षमिमे लोकाः। ब्रह्मैव भूतानां ज्येष्ठम्। तेन कोऽर्हति स्पर्धितुम्॥ ब्रह्मन्देवाजायन्त। ब्रह्मजिज्ञमजापती। ब्रह्मेदं विश्वा भूतानि। नावीवान्तः समाहिता॥ तै. ब्रा. II. 8. 8. 9-10.

the kṣatriyas were produced from brahman and brahma transformed its form into brāhmaṇas; (Yājyā) 'these worlds abide inside brahman, similarly all this world is inside it; brahma is the best among all bhūtas; who vie or compete with it, brahman is thirty-three Gods, and all bhūtas, all placed inside it as in a boat'.

In the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa there are brief allusions to Prajāpati. In VI. 1 it is stated 'Prajāpati, desirous of progeny, practised tapas; while he was thus practising tapas five were born, viz. Agni, Vāyu, Āditya, the Moon and Uṣas as fifth;' in VI. 10 it is said 'Prajāpati practised tapas; after having practised tapas, he produced this world (the earth) from prāṇa, the mid regions from apāna and the yonder world (heaven) from vyāna; he then created Agni, Vayu and Āditya respectively from the earth, mid regions and heaven, and he produced ṛk verses from Agni, yajus texts from Vāyu and sāman texts from Āditya; in XIII. 1 it is asserted 'Prajāpati is indeed yajña, in which all desires, all immortality are centered'; in XXVIII. 1 it is said 'Prajāpati created yajña, the gods worshipped by means of yajña, when it was created and thereby obtained all desired objects.'[2148]

The chief aim and purpose of the Brāhmaṇas of the Veda are to prescribe the acts and parts of the ritual of various sacrifices, to set out some myths and legends for their origin and to postulate various rewards on the performance of numerous sacrifices.

Prajāpati, who is mentioned very rarely in the Ṛgveda (IV. 53. 2 where Savitṛ is called Prajāpati, IX. 5. 9 where Soma is called Prajāpati, X. 85. 4 where in the marriage hymn Prajāpati is prayed to bestow offspring, X. 169. 4 where Prajāpati is invoked to bestow good cows, X. 184. 1 where Prajāpati along with other gods and goddesses is invoked for the blessing of conception in a married woman, X. 121. 10 (already referred to above on p. 1490), becomes the most prominent god in the Brāhmaṇas. The Ait. Br. narrates the story that after Indra killed Vṛtra he wanted to be great and honoured in place of Prajāpati, that then Prajāpati said (if you are to be great) 'who am I going 2148. प्रजापतिर्वै यज्ञस्तस्मिन्सर्वे कामाः सर्वमसुतत्वम्। कौषी. ब्रा. XIII. 1 (Lindner's ed. Jena, 1887); प्रजापतिर्ह यज्ञं ससृजे तेन ह सृष्टेन देवा ईजिरे तेन हेष्ट्वा सर्वान्कामानाप्नुः। ibid XXVIII. 1.

to be' (koham-iti) and thereby Prajāpati came to be called 'Ka'.[2449]

The Ait. Br. states that Prajāpati desiring to propagate and to be many and having practised tapas created the three worlds, earth, mid region and heaven from which arose three lights (jyotis), Agni, Vāyu and Āditya, from which arose the three Vedas &c.

The Vedic Saṁhitās and Brāhmaṇas show that the popular belief about the individual self was that by good deeds the soul reaches heaven, becomes immortal and enjoys various joys and pleasures. Vide Ṛg. IX. 113. 7–11, I. 125. 4-6, Atharva IV. 34. 2 and 5, VI. 120. 3. There was also the idea of retribution and recompense for evil or harmful acts done by one person to another. For example, the Śat Br. says (XII. 9. 1. 1) 'for whatever food a man eats in this world, by the very same is he eaten again in the other world.' Vide also Śat. Br. XI. 6. 1. But when we come to the Upaniṣads, the whole intellectual atmosphere is changed. The Upaniṣads frequently assert that Ātman is the only reality, that there is nothing else and that the Ātman can only be described as 'not this–not this' i. e. the Ātman is unknowable. This is the first and foremost aspect of Vedānta. But this lofty metaphysical conception clashed with the ideas of common people who thought that a real universe existed apart from the Creator. The higher philosophic minds had to concede the reality of the universe for common people. They were prepared to say that the universe exists; in truth, however, it is nothing but the Ātman entered into the universe. They said that the world was phenomenal, not false or nothing, but the world had the Ātman behind it. This was the good aspect of the Vedānta viz. that the universe evolved from the first principle, brahma. They distinguished between saguṇa (qualified) brahman that was for prayer and worship (upāsanā), and for practical purposes (vyavahārāvasthā) and nirguṇa (unqualified) brahma. But the higher thought also insisted that the highest truth (pāramārthikasatya) is that brahman is one, that everything in the world (men, animals, inorganic matter) is brahman (' sarvam khalvidam brahma' Chān. Up. III. 14. 1, 'aham brahmāsmiti tasmāt tatsarvam-abhavat' Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 10). The Ait. Up. quoted below is most emphatic about the identity [2450] of the first principle with men, beasts, motionless beings and other passages do the same. As regards the elements the Bṛ. Up. has a long passage [2451] (III. 7. 2-23) in which Yājñavalkya propounds to Uddālaka Āruṇi the sublime doctrine viz. that the Ātman residing in the earth and other elements is inside them, whom they (the elements) do not know, whose body is the earth and other elements, who rules from within the earth and others, that that Ātman is the soul of thee (and of mine and others), is the inner ruler and is immortal. The last part of this passage is 'the ruler within is unseen but seeing, unheard but hearing, unperceived but perceiving, unknown but knowing, there is no other seer but he, there is no other hearer but he, that is no other perceiver but he, there is no other knower but he. This is the Self, the ruler within, the immortal. Everything else is distress' This whole section called 2450. आत्मा वा इदमेक एवाग्र आसीन्नान्यत्किंचन मिषत्। स ईक्षत लोकान्नु सृजा इति। स इमाँल्लोकानसृजताम्भो मरीचीर्मरमापः।...स ईक्षत इमे नु लोकाः। लोकपालान्नु सृजा इति। सो अद्भ्य एव पुरुषं समुद्धृत्यामूर्छयत्। ... स ईक्षत कथं न्विदं मदृते स्यादिति। स ईक्षत कतरेण प्रपद्या इति।...स एतमेव सीमानं विदार्यैतया द्वारा प्रापद्यत। ऐ. उप. I. 1-3, I. 3. 11-12. This passage is dealt with in V. S. III. 3. 16 which establishes that here the word Ātman stands for Paramātman, अम्भः, मरीचीः, मरं, आपः stand for heaven, mid-region, earth and waters below the earth.

2449. In Ṛg. X. 121 the last quarter of the first 9 verses is "Kasmai devāya haviṣā vidhema" (to what god shall we offer havis?). Then the 10th and last verse addresses Prajāpati with the words 'there is no God other than you who encompassed all these creations.'. It is probably due to this that from 'kasmai' (in the first nine verses) Prajāpati came to be called 'Ka'.

---

2451. यः पृथिव्यां तिष्ठन् पृथिव्या अन्तरो यं पृथिवी न वेद यस्य पृथिवी शरीरं या पृथिवीमन्तरो यमयत्येष त आत्माऽन्तर्याम्यमृतः। ... अदृष्टो द्रष्टाऽश्रुतः श्रोताऽमतो मन्ताऽविज्ञातो विज्ञाता। ... एष त आत्माऽन्तर्याम्यमृतः। अतोऽन्यदार्तम्। बृह. उप. III. 7. 3 and 23; compare with this last, बृह. उप. III. 4. 2 कतमो याज्ञवल्क्य सर्वान्तरः। न दृष्टेर्द्रष्टारं पश्येः ... एष त आत्मा सर्वान्तरः। अतोऽन्यदार्तम् and III. 5. 2. शंकराचार्य in his भाष्य on the last passage explains अतोऽन्यदार्तं as 'एतदेवैकमनार्तमविनाशि कूटस्थम्' and so आर्तं means liable to sorrow, infatuation, old age and death, as appears from the question and answer in बृह. उप. III. 5. 1 कतमो याज्ञवल्क्य सर्वान्तरः। योऽशनायापिपासे शोकं मोहं जरां मृत्युमत्येति। After quoting this passage Rene Grousset in 'Sum of History' tr. into English by A. and H. Temple Patterson (1951) pays a handsome compliment to it (on p. 95) 'what better introduction to Christianity is there than the conception of the sanctity of the human individual and of the universe as temples of God.' In ऐ. उप. III. 2 we are given 17 words that are said to be names of Prajñāna (i. e. brahman) and then ऐ. उप. III. 3 runs 'एष ब्रह्मा, एष इन्द्रः, एष प्रजापतिः, एते सर्वे देवाः, इमानि च पञ्च महाभूतानि पृथिवी वायुराकाश आपो ज्योतींषि, एतानीमानि च क्षुद्रमिश्राणीव बीजानीतराणि चेतराणि चाण्डजानि च जारुजानि स्वेदजानि चोद्भिज्जानि चाश्वा गावः पुरुषा हस्तिनो यत्किंचेदं प्राणि जङ्गमं च पतत्रि च यच्च स्थावरं सर्वं तत्प्रज्ञानेत्रं प्रज्ञाने प्रतिष्ठितम्। प्रज्ञानेत्रो लोकः। प्रज्ञा प्रतिष्ठा। प्रज्ञानं ब्रह्म।'. This carries to its logical conclusion the idea in the Puruṣasūkta X. 90. 6, 8, 10.

antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa has a parallel in Bṛ. Up. II. 5 (Madhu-vidyā). The ordinary man's conception of brahman as the creator was not, however, entirely given up by the thinkers in the Upaniṣads, though it was said that that concept was due to avidyā (ignorance about Reality). Brahman conceived as creator was called Īśvara (a personal God), though the worshipper might know that brahman in essence is above all conditions and limitations of personality. This is theism, which acknowledges three entities viz. a real world, the Paramātman (creative Ātman) and the individual self dependent on Paramātman. But the real thought of the Upaniṣads is centred round the non-difference of brahman and ātman and the physical world. This thought that brahman entered into what are called individual souls and also the material universe is the third aspect of Vedānta. On V. S II. 3. 43 Śaṅkarācārya quotes passages from the Brahma-sūkta belonging to the Atharvaveda[2452] and from the Śv. Up. expressive of the identity with brahman of fishermen, slaves, gamblers, of men and women, of boys and girls and old men tottering on a staff. The faith that the same Spirit animates the universe, from the stone, worms and beasts to man, is an elevating one, may make one feel that all creatures are brethren seeking the Creator and may, in a world dominated by egoism and urged to activities for individual prosperity and benefit, introduce some sweetness and consolation. Deussen in 'The philosophy of the Upanishads' (translated by A. S. Geden, Edinburgh, 1906) pays a glowing tribute to the sages of the Upanishads in the following eloquent passage 'It was here that for the first time the original thinkers of the Upanishads, to their immortal honour, found it (key) when they recognized our ātman, our inmost individual being, as the Brahman, the inmost being of universal nature and of all her phenomena' (p. 40). Vide also J. Royce in 'The world and the individual', First series of Lectures, particularly pp. 156-175 for the exposition of Chān. Up. III. 14 and VI. 2–15 and the Bṛ. Up. dialogue between Yāj. and Maitreyī

The Upaniṣads are full of theories of creation and of the nature of the First Principle A few passages may first be cited about creation. The Bṛ. Up. I. 4 (in 3–4, 7) has an original and significant passage on creation. Some part of it is set out here 'In the beginning this was Ātman alone in the form of Puruṣa; He (being alone) found no pleasure; he desired to have a second (a companion); he became of the extent of a male and a female in close embrace; he made this very Ātman fall aside in two parts that became husband and wife; from them were born men and he produced lower animals up to ants; this (universe) was then undeveloped (or not unfolded), it was then developed in names and forms; that (Ātman) entered into this up to the finger tips, just as a razor remains hidden in a sheath or just as the all supporting (fire) is not seen in wood'. In this passage the popular idea of the creation of the world is taken up and related to the one reality, Ātman, and the emphasis appears to be placed on the theory that the sole reality is Ātman, under the phantasmagoria of world phenomena. In Ch. Up. VII. 10. 1 it is said 'this earth, mid regions, heaven, gods and men, beasts and birds, grass and herbs, animals including insects, butterflies, ants. These are all nothing but waters in solid form.' The Chān. Up. (VI. 2. 3–4 and VI. 3. 2–3) states "in the beginning Sat alone was existent, one without a second; it thought 'I shall become many, I shall have progeny"; it created heat (tejas); from tejas waters were produced, from water food; that divinity proposed 'I shall enter into these three divinities (heat, water and food) with this living self and unfold name and form'. Here reference is made to three elements only viz. tejas, water, and earth (anna is produced from plants which spring from the earth). It is not, however, proper to hold that only three were then recognized, these three were the most obvious and the other two Vāyu and Ākāśa mentioned in Ait. and Tai. Up. are elusive. The Ait. Up. (quoted in note 2451) begins "In the beginning there was here this Ātman alone, there was nothing else that was active (lit. that opened and closed eyes); He reflected' I shall create worlds'. He created these worlds, the ambhas (water above heaven), marici 'rays' (i. e.) atmospheric region, death, waters". Then the Up. proceeds: He created guardians of worlds and proposed to produce food for them. Then he reflected 'how can this frame subsist apart from me? Then he reflected 'by what way shall I enter into it?' Then it is stated that he split open the crown of the head and entered by that door. The Tai. Up. II. 6 says "He (the Ātman) desired 'May I become many, I shall have progeny'; having practised tapas, he created all this (universe) whatever it is; after having created it he entered into it" and again in II. 7 'in the beginning this was asat (not unfolded), then it became sat (developed), it unfolded itself'. This is the basis of V. S. I. 4. 26 (ātmakṛteḥ pariṇāmāt) which establishes that brahman is both kartṛ (agent) and karma (object) of creation. The same Up. in II. 1 speaks of the creation of ākāśa from the Ātman, of Vāyu from ākāśa, of Agni from Vāyu, of waters from Agni and of the earth from waters. Here we have five elements instead of three (as in the Chān. Up.). The Ait. Up. III. 3 names the five elements and calls them Mahābhūtāni (though the usual order is not followed); so do Praśna VI. 4, Śv. Up. II. 12, Kaṭha III. 15 (where the five guṇas, śabda, sparśa, rūpa, rasa and gandha, each peculiar to the five elements from ākāśa to pṛthvī, are mentioned).[2453]

---

2452. एके शाखिनो दाशकितवादिभावं ब्रह्मण आमनन्त्यार्थवणिका ब्रह्मसूक्ते-ब्रह्म दाशा ब्रह्म दासा ब्रह्मैवेमे कितवाः-इत्यादिना। ... इति हीनजन्तूदाहरणेन सर्वेषामेव नामरूप-कृतकार्यकरणसङ्घातप्रविष्टानां जीवानां ब्रह्मत्वमाह। तथान्यत्रापि ब्रह्मप्रक्रियायामेवायमर्थः प्रपञ्च्यते। त्वं स्त्री त्वं पुमानसि त्वं कुमार उत वा कुमारी। त्वं जीर्णो दण्डेन वञ्चसि त्वं जातो भवसि विश्वतोमुखः। इति।. The last is अथर्व० X. 8 27 and श्वेता. उप. 4. 3.

2453. Prof. George Sarton in 'A History of Science' (Harvard University Press, 1952) states (p. 247) that Empedocles born about 490 B. C. (in Greece) postulated only four elements; fire, air, water and earth and that a fifth, ether, was added by Plato and Aristotle. Vide also Introduction (p. 11) to Plato's Timaeus (in Loeb's classical library, Vol. VII, ed. of 1952) translated by Rev. R. G. Bury. Plato's exuberant imagination constructed the physical world on the pattern of geometrical figures most familiar to him and assigned the cube to earth and different kinds of triangles to fire, air and water (vide Jowett's translation of Timaeus, Vol. III pp. 638–639). The Greek philosophers relied on reason and not on ancient texts (as Indian sages did) and Plato's philosophy and cosmology were looked upon as the acme of wisdom even up to the 19th century, but Sarton (on p. 420 of the above work) remarks that modern men of science can regard it only as a monument of unwisdom and recklessness (rather a harsh judgment). Dr. W. M. Smart in 'Origin of the Earth' remarks that in probing into the mystery of creation science has not been more successful than the poetic Hebrew expounders of cosmology (pp. 8–9). For comparison of ancient Indian ideas on cosmology with those of ancient Egyptians, Babylonians, Hebrews, and Greeks one may read a small book in the 'Corridors of Time' Series' Vol. I on 'Apes and men' by H. Peak and H. J. H. Fleure pp. 6–8 (Oxford, 1927); on p. 7 there is a figure of a Babylonian tablet recording part of the creation story. On p. 56 it states that the probable place of the origin of man and the period at which human story began are matters of great speculation. The principal questions that arise in cosmology are: (1) when were the earth and planets produced, (2) what is the process that accounts for the present state of the earth and the solar and other systems. Sanskrit works from the Ṛgveda down to the Purāṇas tried to answer these questions in their own ways. During the last one hundred years or so the theories of Lemaitre and Darwin and the developments in the sciences of Geology, Biology, Physics and Astronomy have revolutionized the whole conception of cosmology. Even the work of Sir A. Eddington 'The expanding Universe' (Cambridge, 1933) has become

(Continued on next page)

It has already been shown that in the Tai. Up. and the Chān. Up. (vide note 2430) it is stated that the bhūtas spring from and are absorbed in brahman. The order of dissolution is the reverse of that of creation. This is stated by the Vedāntasūtra II. 3. 14 ('viparyayeṇa tu kramoऽta upapadyate ca'). Śaṅkarācārya in his bhāsya quotes a verse of the Śāntiparva in support of this.[2454]

The theory of yugas, mahāyugas, manvantaras and kalpas has already been dealt with in vol. III. pp. 885–896 and above pp. 686–692. The dissolution of the world was called pralaya which was said to be of four kinds (vide above pp. 693–95), two of which are naimittika pralaya (which occurs at the end of a day of Brahmā, that is equal to 1000 mahāyugas) and Prākṛtika (when everything including Prakṛti is dissolved in Paramātman). The Gītā (VIII. 17–18) and Manu I. 73 state that the day of Brahmā is equal to one thousand yugas and the night is also of the same duration, that all manifested things spring from the unmanifested (First Principle) at the beginning of the day (of Brahmā) and at the coming of the night (of Brahmā) they merge in the same unmanifested (Principle). The present author does not like the disagreeable task of comparing Sanskrit cosmology with the theories in other religious scriptures such as the Bible, but will only refer to some Western writers on that subject. About these ideas of creation and dissolution of the universe René Grousset in the work mentioned above observes (p. 96) 'the same power of synthesis appears in the ancient Indian cosmogonies which transcend in their breadth all that the Ionian philosophers or Lucretius have left us. In them the somewhat outmoded by recent discoveries. The present author does not know much of science. But from what little he has read in a few scientific works he may say that the history of science makes it clear that the actual state of man's scientific knowledge is provisional, that scientific theories are always subject to corrections and modifications. For instance, Newton's laws of motion were regarded for over two hundred years as absolutely correct enunciations of fundamental and universal laws of physics, but in recent times they have been found to be mere approximations.

---

(Continued from last page)

2454. स्मृताववुत्पत्तिक्रमाविपर्ययेणैवाप्ययस्तत्र तत्र प्रदर्शितः। 'जगत्प्रतिष्ठा देवर्षे पृथिव्यप्सु प्रलीयते। ज्योतिष्यापः प्रलीयन्ते ज्योतिर्वायौ प्रलीयते॥' इत्यादौ. This verse is शान्तिपर्व 340. 29 (=326. 28 of cr. ed.). The three following verses (which occur in both editions) may be cited here: खे वायुः प्रलयं याति मनस्यकाशमेव च। मनो हि परमं भूतं तत्रव्यक्ते प्रलीयते॥ अव्यक्तं पुरुषे ब्रह्मन् निष्क्रिये संप्रलीयते। नास्ति तस्मात्परतरं पुरुषाद्धे सनातनात्॥ नित्यं हि नास्ति जगति भूतं स्थावरजङ्गमम्। ऋते तमेकं पुरुषं वासुदेवं सनातनम्॥.

world alternates between periods of creation (which correspond to the activity of the Demiurge) and of dissolution (which correspond to the slumber of the God)'. Similarly, Gerald Heard remarks (in 'Is God evident' Faber and Faber, London, 1950) 'Final and most helpful fact is that Sanskrit cosmology not only gets rid of intellectual difficulties such as the crude Hebrew Geology and Astronomy fossilized in the Christian dogmas, but it gets rid likewise of those more serious moral difficulties such as eternal damnation, pre-destination and that this life is man's only chance' (p. 51).

The high metaphysical conception that in reality there is no universe outside brahman (i. e. brahman is one and is unqualified, nirguṇa) and the popular empirical conception that there is a personal God who creates (saguṇa brahma) and real universe, often run together in the Upaniṣads. The Praśna Up. V. 2 asserts that Om is both para (highest) brahma and apara (other, lower) brahma. Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 1. 12 (ānandamayosbhyāsāt) states that in the Upaniṣads brahman is described in two ways, (firstly) as qualified by various adjuncts such as name and form and created objects and meant to be worshipped and (secondly) as devoid of all adjuncts (as meant to be mystically realized). As instances of the 2nd way (nirupādhika or nirguṇa brahman) he instances several passages viz. Br. Up. IV. 5. 15 ('where there is as it were duality, there one sees the other ..... one touches the other or knows the other, but where one has come to realize that all is only Ātman, whom will one see, with what will one understand the knower himself'), Bṛ. Up. III. 9. 26 = IV. 4. 22 and IV. 5. 15 (this self is to be spoken of as 'not this, 'not this'), Bṛ. Up. III. 8. 8 (it is that imperishable one that the brāhmaṇas speak about as neither coarse nor small, neither short nor long, neither red nor fluid, neither wind nor ether...neither as having an inside nor outside &c.); Chān. Up. (VII. 24. 1 'where one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, understands nothing else that is the Infinite; where one sees something else, hears something else, understands something else, that is small (finite): the Infinite is immortal, the finite is mortal; the Infinite rests in its own greatness, or does not rest in greatness); Śv. Up. VI. 19 (who is without parts, without activities, tranquil, faultless, without taint, the highest bridge to immortality, like a fire that has consumed its fuel). There are also other passages of the same import e. g. Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 19 (neha nānāsti kiñcana, there is no diversity in it), Kaṭha Up. IV. 10-11 (mṛtyoh sa mṛtyum-āpnoti ya iha nāneva paśyati). The 4th aspect of Upaniṣadic thought is concerned with the destiny of the self after the death of the body and the matters that govern it (i. e. Ethics and Eschatology).

These passages emphasize that it is impossible to describe what brahman is and that we can only say what it is not. Śaṅkarācārya[2455] on V. S. III. 2. 17 refers to the dialogue of Bāṣkali and Bādhva where Bādhva declared the characteristic of brahman by his silence. Bāṣkali said 'Sir, tell me about brahma'; then Bādhva remained silent; when Bāṣkali asked a second and a third time Bādhva replied 'we have been telling you indeed; but you don't understand; this self is still (without any activity)'. J. Royce in 'The world and the individual' vol. I. p. 148 is just like this episode of Bāṣkali and Bādhva "Believe not those prattlers' says one often quoted mystical work 'who boast that they know God.' 'Who knows Him is silent". Śaṅkarācārya puts the distinction between para-brahma and apara-brahma (personal God) as follows: Where texts reject the connection of brahma with names and forms that are the product of avidyā (nescience) and speak of brahma in negative expressions such as 'asthūla' (not gross or big), there it is parabrahma (that is meant), but where in such passages as 'He is mind, has prāṇa or body, the form of light, whose thoughts are true, whose nature is like ākāśa (present everywhere), who creates everything' &c, brahma is mentioned for worship and it is apara.[2456] 2456. किं पुनः परं ब्रह्म किमपरमिति। उच्यते। यत्राविद्याकृतनामरूपादिविशेषप्रतिषेधादस्थूलादिशब्दैर्ब्रह्मोपदिश्यते तत्परम्। तदेव यत्र नामरूपादिविशेषेण केनचिद्विधिना उपासनायोपदिश्यते 'मनोमयः प्राणशरीरो भारूपः' (छा. III. 14. 2) इत्यादिशब्दैस्तदपरम्। भाष्य on वे. सू. IV. 3. 14; एवमेकमपि ब्रह्मापेक्षितोपाधिसम्बन्धं निरस्तोपाधिसम्बन्धं चोपास्यत्वेन ज्ञेयत्वेन च वेदान्तेषूपदिश्यत इति। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. I. 1. 12. It should be noted that the words 'neti neti' occur four times in the great exposition of Yājñāvalkya on brahman in Bṛ. Up. IV. 2. 4, IV. 4. 22, IV. 5. 15, III. 9. 26. The highest brahman is conceived as beyond space, time and independent of the law of causality. We may compare the conceptions of para-brahma and apara-brahma with what Plato postulates (in Timaeus, Introduction p. 6 to Bury's translation) as the distinction between Being and Becoming viz. Being is changeless, eternal, self-existent and apprehensible by thought only; Becoming is the opposite, ever changing, never truly existent and the object of sensations, and the perceptible universe belongs to the latter.

2455. बाष्कलिना च बाध्वः पृष्टः सत्यवचनेनैव ब्रह्म प्रोवाचेति श्रूयते। 'तद्होवाचाधीहि भो इति स तूष्णीं बभूव तं ह द्वितीये वा तृतीये वा वचन उवाच ब्रूमः खलु त्वं तु न विजानासि। उपशान्तोऽयमात्मा' इति। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 2. 17. This is a Vedic Text acc. to Śaṅkara, but it has not yet been identified.

The description of the creation of the universe and its dissolution are valid only on the practical plane. In Advaita Vedānta, Sattā (reality) is said to be of three kinds, viz. Pāramārthikī (the highest, the absolute), vyāvahārikī (of practical life) and prātibhāsikī (apparent or illusory). The first is the province of parā-vidyā which teaches that only the Ātman exists, that the cosmos exists within the Ātman and nothing else has intrinsic reality apart from it. From this high metaphysical standpoint there is in reality no creation nor dissolution, the individual self is not really in bondage, therefore none is liberated. The 2nd kind of reality is empirical and practical and the dogmas of the creation and dissolution of the world, of the individual self, its bondage, transmigaration and final liberation are valid only for the aparā-vidyā. Most religions postulate three fundamental entities viz God, individual self and the external world. These three are true but only up to a certain limit (only so long as a man holds his own ego as a separate reality) but these three are not the ultimate Truth. Even in this lower kind of reality, a man who is in deep sleep becomes (for a time) united with (or absorbed in) the True, as stated by the Chān. Up. VI. 8. 1 (yatraitat puruṣaḥ svapiti nāma satā somya tadā sampanno bhavati). The third kind of reality pertains to dream state. One may have experience of pleasure and pain and misery from what one sees in a dream, which are real as long as the dream lasts, but all this that is seen in a dream vanishes the moment the man is awake. As stated above (p. 1485 and note 2434) the descriptions of the creation of the world have only this in view that there is non-difference between cause and effect and that they all lead to a correct understanding about brahman. Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. II. 3. 30 extends the same reasoning to individual selves (to be quoted later on under 'Karma and transmigration').

In the Upaniṣads there is apparent discrepancy as regards what was created and the order of the things[2457] created. The 2457. It may be noted that the creation of the universe is put in the Upaniṣads in the distant and dim past, not at a definite date as fixed by Biblical chronology (4004 B. C.). Vide Pringle-Pattison in 'Idea of God' (ed. of 1917) p. 299; H. D. Anthony in 'Science and its background' (MacMillan, 1948, p. 2) states that James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh, in the 17th century introduced into the Anglican Church the year 4004 B.C. as the date of creation. On the medieval Christian doctrine, creation is only an incident in God's existence and man is made in the image of God and it is by the breath of God that man became a living soul (Genesis I. 27 and II. 7). There is another point that distinguishes Christian doctrine about man from the Vedānta doctrine; according to the former man is conceived and born in sin, according to the latter the human soul is divine.

Bṛ. Up. (V. 5. 1) states 'in the beginning there were only waters; the waters created satya, which is brahma, brahman created Prajāpati, who created the gods'. In Chān. Up. VI. 2. 3 the thing expressly mentioned as the first creation is tejas (heat), ākāśa not being mentioned at all, while in the Tai. Up. II. 1 ākāśa is said to have been first created and then Vāyu (was created from ākāśa), then Agni from Vāyu. Similarly, in the Chān. Up. IV. 2 where the creation of tejas, waters and food (i. e. the earth) is expressly mentioned, nothing is said about the creation of Vāyu, which is set out in Tai. Up. II. I. This matter about the creation of the elements and their order is discussed in V. S. II. 3. 1–11. The reply of Śaṅkarācārya is that a Śruti passage like the one in Ch. Up. is concerned only with the creation of some elements like tejas and cannot be also interpreted as having a second purpose, viz. showing that the creation of ākāśa in Tai. Up. is wrong and should be discarded.[2458]

On the subject of creation, the question arises whether the individual Self is also a creation like that of the earth, trees and shrubs. The Upaniṣads have a good deal to say on this. Here also two kinds of texts have to be considered. In the first place, some texts seem to state that the individual selves spring from the Supreme Spirit. A few passages that are sometimes relied upon for this last matter may be cited here.[2459] The Bṛ. Up. states 'just as tiny sparks spring forth from fire, in the same way from this Ātman spring up all prāṇas, all worlds, all gods and all creatures'. The Muṇḍaka Up. expands this same idea as follows: As from a well-kindled fire sparks of the same nature spring forth in thousands, so from the Imperishable various living beings issue and return into it. The Smṛti of Yāj. cites the same illustration of fire and sparks. Another and perhaps apter illustration is in the Kaṭha Up. 'just as pure water poured in (other) pure water becomes like it (i. e. not distinguishable), so the self of the wise sage becomes (indistinguishable from the Supreme Essence). On the other hand, there are numerous Upaniṣad[2460] passages which categorically state that the individual self is unborn, undying, is not a product, that the Supreme Spirit enters as individual self, that there is non-difference between the one Supreme Spirit and the individual self. Some of these passages are set out in the note below. All those passages are cited by Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. II. 3. 17, which states two propositions viz. the individual self is unproduced and that it is eternal according to Śruti passages (nātmāśruter-nityatvācca tābhyaḥ). How the one Supreme Spirit expands into and pervades the manifold universe of plurality is a great mystery and can only be explained by illustrations. The few passages in which the texts seem to mention the creation or dissolution of individual selves are to be understood as referring to the Upādhis (such as body and mind) by which the self is affected. Yājñavalkya gives this answer in finally winding up his exposition to Maitreyī[2461] 'this self is imperishable and indestructible; but (when one speaks of death what is meant is) that the self has no longer any contact with material elements'. The Śāntiparva[2462] and the Gītā (II. 20, 21, 24, 25) say the same thing.

---

2458. न ह्येवं श्रुतिस्तेजोजनिप्रधाना सती श्रुत्यन्तरप्रसिद्धामाकाशस्योत्पत्तिं बाधितुं शक्नोति, एकस्य वाक्यस्य व्यापारद्वयासम्भवात्। भाष्य on ब्र. सू. II. 3. 6.

2459. यथाग्नेः क्षुद्रा विस्फुलिङ्गा व्युच्चरन्त्येवमेवास्मादात्मनः सर्वे प्राणाः सर्वे लोकाः सर्वे देवाः सर्वाणि भूतानि व्युच्चरन्ति। बृह. उप. II. 1. 20; यथा सुदीप्तात्पावकाद्विस्फुलिङ्गाः सहस्रशः प्रभवन्ते सरूपाः। तथाक्षराद्विविधाः सोम्य भावाः प्रजायन्ते तत्र चैवापियन्ति। मुण्डकोप० II. 1. 1. Compare कौषीतक्युप० 'यथाग्नेर्ज्वलतः सर्वा दिशो विस्फुलिङ्गा विप्रतिष्ठेरन्नेवमेवैतस्मादात्मनः प्राणा यथायतनं विप्रतिष्ठन्ते। प्राणेभ्यो देवा देवेभ्यो लोकाः। IV. 18 and also मैत्री VI. 26 and 31 for a similar verse. याज्ञ. III. 67 is निःसरन्ति यथा लोहपिण्डात्ततस्तास्फुलिङ्गकाः। सकाशादात्मनस्तद्वदात्मानः प्रभवन्ति हि॥; यथोदकं शुद्धे शुद्धमासिक्तं तादृगेव भवति। एवं मुनेर्विजानत आत्मा भवति गौतम॥ कठोप. IV. 15.

The highest metaphysical standpoint can be realized by only a few. For millions of men, the empirical standpoint alone remains and it is for them that texts speak of a personal God, ritual and sacrifices; they are only on the first rung of the ladder 2460. जीवापेतं वाव किलेदं म्रियते न जीवो म्रियत इति। छा. उप. I. 11. 3; स वा एष महानज आत्माऽजरोऽमरोऽमृतोऽभयो ब्रह्म। (बृह. IV. 4 25); न जायते म्रियते वा विपश्चित्... अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे। कठ 2. 18; तत्सृष्ट्वा तदेवानुप्राविशत्। तै. उप. II. 6; अनेन जीवेनात्मनानुप्रविश्य नामरूपे व्याकरवाणि। छा. उप. VI. 3. 2; स एष इह प्रविष्ट आ नखाग्रेभ्यः। बृह. I. 4. 7; तत्त्वमसि (छा. उप. VI. 8. 7); अहं ब्रह्मास्मि (बृ. उप. I. 4. 10); अयमात्मा ब्रह्म सर्वानुभूः। बृह. उप. II. 5-19.

2461. अविनाशी वा अरे आत्माऽनुच्छित्तिधर्मा मात्रासंसर्गस्त्वस्य भवति। बृह. उप. IV. 5. 14. This is quoted by शङ्कराचार्य on ब्र. सू. II. 3. 17.

2462. न जीवनाशोऽस्ति हि देहभेदे मिथ्यैतदाहुर्मृत इत्यबुद्धाः। जीवस्तु देहान्तरितः प्रयाति वृक्षार्धतैवास्य शरीरभेदः॥ एवं सर्वेषु भूतेषु गूढश्चरति संवृतः। दृश्यते त्वग्र्यया बुद्ध्या सूक्ष्मया तत्त्वदर्शिभिः॥ तं पूर्वापररात्रेषु युञ्जानः सततं बुधः। लघ्वाहारो विशुद्धात्मा पश्यत्यात्मानमात्मनि। शान्ति 180. 26-28 (=187. 27-29 Ch. ed.). वृक्षार्ध means five and वृक्षार्धता means पञ्चत्व. With न जीवनाशोऽस्ति compare छा. उप. VII. 11. 3 जीवापेतं वाव किलेदं म्रियते न जीवो म्रियत इति and the verse एवं सर्वेषु भूतेषु is almost the same as कठ. III. 12 एष सर्वेषु भूतेषु गूढोऽत्मा न प्रकाशते। दृश्यते त्वग्र्यया बुद्ध्या सूक्ष्मया सूक्ष्मदर्शिभिः॥. The verse एवं सर्वेषु ... दर्शिभिः occurs again in शान्ति. chap. 246. 5 (=cr. ed. 238. 5).

to enlightenment and are only dimly aware of God; there is a much smaller class of people other than the preceding, who pray, seek God and come to realize that God is both immanent and transcendent; there is a third class of a very few people, the great sages and masters, the spiritual elite such as Śaṅkarācārya. who reach the peak of pure monism, who lose the sense of the ego and who are ripe for entering into union with the One and they cannot and should not say that the individual soul and the physical world are all unreal (or Māyā). Both Bādarāyaṇa (V. S. II. 2. 29 'Vaidharmyāc-ca na svapnādivat') and Śaṅkarācārya are agreed that the ordinary physical world is entirely different from dreams and that the impressions in the waking state are not independent of existing objects. Apart from the question whether the word 'Māyā' used in V. S. III. 2. 3 (Māyāmātram tu &c.) is used by Bādarāyaṇa in the sense in which Śaṅkarācārya understands it, it cannot be denied that Upaniṣad passages like Kaṭha Up. II. 4. 2, Praśna I, 16, Chān. Up. VIII. 3. 1-2, the prayer in Bṛ. Up. I. 3. 28 (asato mā sadgamaya &c) could easily suggest the doctrine of Māyā and lead to it as an intelligible development. Hence the proper language for almost all men is not to speak about the world as Māyā (illusion). If the individual soul and the world are unreal, then it may be argued by one who does not subscribe to the doctrine of Māyā as against those who hold it that you are teaching that an unreal soul has to escape from an unreal Saṃsāra and secure what you call mokṣa by means which are themselves unreal (such as Upaniṣad study) and that therefore mokṣa itself is unreal. How the one Reality becomes many and expresses itself in the ever-changing physical world is really an inexplicable mystery, but that does not entitle all of us to say that the world is unreal or a dream. The few highly philosophical men may say that what is real is the one Absolute, that all else is only an appearance of that Absolute. Common men may, however, complain that explanations offered by these philosophers do not satisfy them or are beyond them.

When one has to emphasize what the Reality behind the world is in itself, one speaks of the Absolute brahman, but when one has to speak about the relation of the one Reality to the individual selves and the physical world one speaks of a personal God. When the Vedāntasūtra (II. 1. 14) states[2463] that the world is non-different (ananya) from brahman, what is meant is not that the two are identical, but only this that the selves and the world are not entirely different from brahman. When it is said that Mokṣa results if one realizes brahman, there is no question of the destruction of the world but all that it comes to is that the false idea or outlook in that case is displaced or sublated by a true one. How the finite world arises from the Infinite is a mystery, for which Śaṅkarācārya employs the word 'Māyā'. But he is positive that till a person realizes the one Ātman all religious and worldly courses of life, real-unreal, go on unobstructed. The concept of Māyā as postulated by Śaṅkarācārya (on V. S. II. 1. 14 and other places) is one of the most misunderstood elements of Vedānta. Further, it should not be forgotten that a very large number of philosophically minded Hindus do not advocate the doctrine that the world is an illusion; all that is said by advaitins is that the world is not as real as the Absolute is. The passages quoted below from Śaṅkarācārya's Bhāṣya clarify his position, which is this. There is the physical world with its manifold distinctions, but it must rest on something else; that something is called the absolute brahman. The relation between the two is inexplicable and therefore it is spoken of as Māyā. In that way Śaṅkarācārya is agnostic, while other religious philosophers are not willing to admit the futility of theories or their helplessness to put forward a generally acceptable and reasonable theory of the relation of the universe and the Eternal Spirit behind it.

2463. On तदनन्यत्वमारम्भणशब्दादिभ्यः (वे. सू. II. 1. 14) शङ्कराचार्य says 'प्राक् चात्मैकत्वावगतेरभ्याहृतः सर्वः सत्यानृतव्यवहारो लौकिको वैदिकश्चेत्यवोचाम'।; सर्वज्ञ-

(Continued on next page)

It should not be forgotten that, according to our śāstras the goals of human life are four, Dharma (an ethical life of doing what is right), Artha (a life of acquisition of wealth i. e. economic life based on justice), Kāma (a life of the enjoyment of innocent pleasures and right desires) and Mokṣa (liberation), this last being the highest goal to be attained only by a few people (it is called Paramapuruṣārtha). Even in the Ṛgveda (I. 89. 8) the sage prays for physical health,[2464] happiness and स्येश्वरस्यात्मभूते इवाविद्याकल्पिते नामरूपे तत्त्वान्यत्वाभ्यामनिर्वचनीये संसारप्रपञ्चबीजभूते सर्वज्ञस्येश्वरस्य माया शक्तिः प्रकृतिरिति च श्रुतिस्मृत्योरभिलप्येते।; तदेवमविद्यात्मकोपाधिपरिच्छेदापेक्षभेदेश्वरस्येश्वरत्वं सर्वज्ञत्वं सर्वशक्तित्वं च न परमार्थतो विद्ययापास्तसर्वोपाधिस्वरूपे आत्मनीशित्रीशितव्यसर्वज्ञादिव्यवहार उपपद्यते।' वाचस्पतिमिश्र in the भामती on वे. सू. II. 1. 14 makes the laconic remark 'न खल्वनन्यत्वमित्यभेदं ब्रूमः किन्तु भेदं व्यासेधामः'.

---

(Continued from last page)

2464. भद्रं कर्णेभिः शृणुयाम देवा भद्रं पश्येमाक्षभिर्यजत्राः। स्थिरैरङ्गैस्तुष्टुवांसस्तनूभिर्व्यशेम देवहितं यदायुः॥ ऋ. I. 89. 8 = वाज. सं. 25. 21.

a life of hundred years in the words "O Gods, may we be able to hear words of welfare (i. e. we may not suffer deafness till our death), may we see with our eyes pleasing sights, may we, engaged in praising you and possessing strong limbs and bodies, enjoy (long) life as fixed by God (i. e. 100, 116 or 120 years)". Vide also Ṛg. VII. 66. 16. The Manusmṛti, after referring to several views about the number of the goals of human life, states its own final conclusion (in II. 224) that there are three goals[4655] (Dharma, Artha and Kāma) for all men and condemns premature resort to sannyāsa in the following words (VI. 36-37) "Having studied the Vedas as laid down in śāstras, having produced sons and having performed sacrifices according to one's ability, one should fix his mind on Mokṣa (liberation); if a man desires Mokṣa without having performed these duties he falls into hell". Manu emphasizes that a man must discharge his duties (i. e. pay off the three debts) as laid down in Tai. S. VI. 3. 10. 5 (quoted in H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 270 n. 621) before he can renounce the world. The experience of sexual life and other pleasures not opposed to righteousness was not condemned by Manu and other Śāstras and in the Bhagavadgītā (VII. 11) Lord Kṛṣṇa identifies himself with Kāma that is not in opposition to righteousness. In the three goals[2466] of ordinary human life there is hardly anything that should cause surprise. The Gītā demands a life dedicated to active work and regards doing one's duty as worship (III. 8, 19, 20, 25, IV. 18, XVIII. 65-66). The 4th goal (mokṣa) is in a way opposed to the first three. But the first three goals enable a man to attain liberation, after he has discharged his duties. It was not meant for everybody but only for a selected few.

The 4th goal can be attained only by a few men. The theory in the Upaniṣads is that in order to secure correct knowledge of the Self, Reality behind everything, the study of the Veda, sacrifices, charity, austerities and fasts are necessary 2465. For the three views about the four āśramas, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 424-425.

---

2466. तमेतं वेदानुवचनेन ब्राह्मणा विविदिषन्ति यज्ञेन दानेन तपसाऽनाशकेन। बृह. उप. IV. 4. 22; तस्माद्देवमिच्छाप्तो दान्त उपरतस्तितिक्षुः समाहितो भूत्वात्मन्येवात्मानं पश्यति। सर्वमात्मानं पश्यति ... विपापो विरजोऽविचिकित्सो ब्राह्मणो भवति। एष ब्रह्मलोकः सम्राट्। एनं प्रापितोसीति होवाच याज्ञवल्क्यः। बृह. उप. IV. 4. 23. These two passages of Bṛ. Up. are the basis of वे. सू. III. 4. 26-27.

as preparation (Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 22). Because the Upaniṣads often employ the words "Brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati" (as in Muṇḍaka III 2. 9) one should not run away with the idea that mere knowledge of brahma (from books or a teacher) is enough. Though the verb "vid" (to know) is employed, the Upaniṣads are emphatic that before one attains realization of brahma one must have lived a life of detachment, peace, self-restraint etc. For example, in Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 23 Yājñavalkya says to Janaka "Therefore, one who knows this (under tarka quoted above p. 1478) evil does not overcome him, he overcomes all evil and hence he becomes free from evil, free from rajas (desires), free from doubts, he becomes a (true) Brāhmaṇa. This is the Brahma-world. O king! you have been made to reach the world. So said Yājñavalkya." This passage clearly emphasizes three stages, firstly, verbal knowledge about brahma (evam-vid), secondly he becomes śānta, dānta &c., thirdly, he realizes the non-difference of himself and the world from the Supreme Self. In this text the indeclinable past participle[2467] (bhūtvā) in "tvā', acc. to Pāṇini III. 4. 21, is used and so clearly conveys that (as Sanskrit grammar and usage require), in order that a person may realize the Self in his own self, he must have been already endowed with all that precedes the word "bhūtvā".

Similarly, in the Muṇḍakopaniṣad it is provided[2467a] 'After carefully examining all the worlds that are collected (gained or brought about) by actions, a brāhmaṇa should reach a sense of disgust or disregard with the thought that by actions (which are all impermanent) nothing that is imperishable (lit. unmade) can be attained, he should, for the special understanding of that, approach with fuel in hand a teacher who is learned in the Veda and who solely dwells in brahman, that wise (guru) declared brahma-vidyā to the one who thus properly (respectfully) approaches and whose mind is quiescent (not perturbed by vanity &c.) and whose mind has ceased to hanker after objects of sense, whereby the disciple would realize the immutable Reality, the Puruṣa (Self).' Here also the word "parikṣya" shows that brahmavidyā can be attained only by him who already has become tired of the world of senses. It is further provided that[2468] when a man becomes freed from all hankerings that cling to the heart of man, he becomes immortal and attains brahma in this very life. The Br. Up. (iv. 4. 6) states that of him who does not desire, who, not desiring, is freed from desires, who feels that he has obtained all desires in that he desires only the Self, the life breaths do not depart towards higher worlds (heaven etc.) as he, being (in reality) brahma only, becomes absorbed in brahma.

2467. Vide Śabara on Jaimini X. 3. 48 'ktvā tāvat pūrvakāla eva smaryate.'

2467a. परीक्ष्य लोकान्कर्मचितान् ब्राह्मणो निर्वेदमायान्नास्त्यकृतः कृतेन। तद्विज्ञानार्थं स गुरुमेवाभिगच्छेत् समित्पाणिः श्रोत्रियं ब्रह्मनिष्ठम्॥ तस्मै स विद्वानुपसन्नाय सम्यक् प्रशान्तचित्ताय शमान्विताय। येनाक्षरं पुरुषं वेद सत्यं प्रोवाच तां तत्त्वतो ब्रह्मविद्याम्॥ मुण्डकोप I. 2. 12-13; नाविरतो दुश्चरितान्नाशान्तो नासमाहितः। नाशा...नसो वापि प्रज्ञानेनैनमाप्नुयात्॥ कठ 2. 24.

The Kaṭha Up. (2. 24) remarks 'He, who had not ceased from evil conduct, whose mind is not serene, who does not practise concentration, would not be able by mere knowledge to find the Ātman.'

The unalloyed Upaniṣad doctrine appears to be that, even when a man does good actions, they produce good results, to enjoy which the soul would have to undergo the bondage of fresh good births and thus liberation will be put off. Therefore, complete renunciation of all actions and their rewards was inculcated for the sannyāsin, who was to give up all desires for wealth, progeny and higher worlds and beg for alms as long as the body lasts. As no other course of conduct for the sannyāsin is specified here, it would have to be deemed that the Upaniṣad teaches only this mode of life for the sannyāsin. This view is further strengthened by other passages of the Upaniṣads, where it is said that the liberated are beyond sukṛta (good deeds and their consequences) and duṣkṛta (evil deeds and their consequences). The Chāndgoya says[2469] "the self is a bank (a dike or ridge) so that these worlds are kept asunder and are not confounded, day and night do not pass beyond (over) bank, nor old age, death and misery, neither good deeds nor evil deeds; all evil deeds turn away from him, for the world of brahma is free from all evil'. Similarly, the Kauṣītaki Up. says "being freed from good actions and from evil ones, this knower of brahma moves towards brahma (i. e. becomes one with or is absorbed in brahma)'.

2468. यदा सर्वे प्रमुच्यन्ते कामा येऽस्य हृदि श्रिताः। अथ मर्त्योऽमृतो भवत्यत्र ब्रह्म समश्नुते॥ कठोप. VI. 14 and बृह. उप. IV. 4. 7 (which latter quotes it as a śloka).

2469. अथ य आत्मा स सेतुर्विधृतिरेषां लोकानामसम्भेदाय। नैनं सेतुमहोरात्रे तरतो न जरा न मृत्युर्न शोको न सुकृतं न दुष्कृतम्। सर्वे पाप्मानोऽतो निवर्तन्ते। अपहतपाप्मा ह्येष ब्रह्मलोकः। छा. उप. VIII. 4. 1; स एष विधुकृतो विधुष्कृतो ब्रह्म विद्वान्ब्रह्मैवाभिमेति। कौषी. उप. I. 4.

In this way the Upaniṣads appear to inculcate that the sannyāsin should completely give up all actions except living till the body lasts. The Jābālopaniṣad[2470] (4) provides that the very day on which a person becomes disgusted (with worldly life) he should become a wandering ascetic (a sannyāsin). This emphasizes that not mere knowledge but disgust with worldly life is necessary before one becomes a sannyāsin. Vide Kaṭhopaniṣad (II. 24) quoted above in note 2467a. The Praśnopaniṣad emphasizes 'to them alone comes the pure world of brahman, in whom there is no crookedness, no untruth and no duplicity' (I. 16). The Upaniṣads sometimes do say that 'one who knows brahma becomes brahma itself' (Muṇḍaka II. 3. 9), but the same Upaniṣads (e. g. Muṇḍaka I. 2. 12-13 quoted in n. 2467a) require great moral and spiritual attainments besides mere knowlegde of brahma.

It is not necessary to set out more Upaniṣad passages to exhibit the proper relation between mere knowledge of brahma and Realization of brahma.[2471]

In classical Sanskrit several words are employed to describe the state of liberation. The Amarakośa regards mukti, kaivalya, nirvāṇa, śreyas, niḥśreyasa, amṛta, mokṣa and apavarga as synonyms. Mukti, mokṣa, and amṛta (or amṛtatva) are frequently employed in the Upaniṣads and the Gītā. They refer to the state of Salvation or Liberation from different points of view. Man is liable to have hankerings and to birth and death; therefore when the soul becomes free from that cycle and realizes brahma it is said that he becomes immortal or secures immortality. Vide Bṛ. Up. VI. 4. 7 and 14, V. 15–17 (Vidyayāmṛtamaśnute), Chān. Up. II. 23. 2 (he who is firmly grounded in brahma attains immortality), Kaṭha Up. VI. 2 and 9, Śvet. Up.

2470. यदहरेव विरजेत्तदहरेव प्रव्रजेत्। जाबालोप० 4. नाविरतो दुश्चरितान्नाशान्तो नासमाहितः। नाशान्तमानसो वापि प्रज्ञानेनैनमाप्नुयात्। कठोप. II. 24; तेषामसौ विरजो ब्रह्मलोको न येषु जिह्ममनृतं न माया चेति। प्रश्नोप. I. 16.

2471. So much had to be said because Prof. Edgerton in his paper 'Dominant ideas in the formation of Indian culture' in J. A. O. S. Vol. 62 (for 1942) pp. 151–156 appears to suggest that the Upaniṣads carry forward the idea of the Atharvaveda that knowledge of a matter was supposed to have magic power. It is not possible for limitations of space to examine his arguments at length. With great respect for such a veteran scholar, it has to be said that, so far as the Upaniṣads are concerned, mere knowledge of brahma is only a first step, and that one who desires liberation has to live life on a high moral and spiritual level. Vide Gītā XIII. 7–11 for definition of jñāna.

IV. 17 and 20, III. 1, 10, 13, Gītā 13. 12, 14. 20. Mukti and mokṣa are both derived from the root 'muc' (to be free) and the verbal forms of 'muc' are frequently used along with 'immortality' as in Kaṭha Up. VI. 8 (yam jñātvā mucyate jantur-amṛtatvam ca gacchati) and 14, Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 7, Śv. Up. I. 8 and IV. 16 (jñātvā devaṁ mucyate sarvapāśaiḥ). The word mokṣa occurs in Śv. Up. IV. 16 and Gītā 5. 28, 7. 29, 18. 30. Niḥśreyasa (moksa, than which there is nothing better) occurs in Kauṣ. Up. III. 2, Gītā V. 2. Vide p. 1037 n 671 for 'niḥśreyasa'. The word 'śreyas' often means 'better' in the Upaniṣads (Tai. Up. I. 11 and Chān. Up. IV. 6. 5) and Gītā II. 7, 31, III. 35, XVIII. 47 &c., but in Kaṭha Up. II. 1 and 2 śreyas (as opposed to preyas i. e. pleasure) really means 'niḥśreyasa' (salvation).[2472] Kaivalya does not occur in the principal Upaniṣads, but kevalaḥ (not affected by guṇas or isolated as pure consciousness) occurs in Śv. Up. IV. 18 and VI. 11 (sākṣī cetā kevalo nirguṇaśca) Nirvāṇa occurs in Gītā VI. 15 (the yogin, that has subdued his mind and always practises yoga, secures peace, centred on me that is highest nirvāṇa); in Gītā II. 72 and V. 24–25 we find 'brahmanirvāṇam' which means 'bliss in brahma'. Apavarga occurs only in the Maitri Upaniṣad VI. 30 and was the goal laid down by the very first sūtra of the Nyāyadarśana.

It should be noted that cosmology whether in the Upaniṣads or later works is based on the geocentric theory and is concerned mostly with the earth, the elements, the Sun, Moon, planets and stars in general (without details).

The Manusmṛti has several theories on creation. In I. 5–19 we have the first theory: this (universe) existed in the form of darkness, was unperceived, destitute of distinctive signs, not subject to reasoning, unknowable, immersed in deep sleep as it were. Then the divine Self-existent appeared with irresistible power, dispelling darkness and making all this including the great elements discernible; he shone forth of his own (will); he, desirous of producing beings of various types from his body, first produced water only after reflecting (over the idea of creating) and planted therein his seed; the seed became a golden egg, equal in brilliance to the sun and in that egg he himself was born as Brahmā, the progenitor of the whole world. He is called Nārāyaṇa,[2473] since waters, designated as nārās (offspring of Nara), were his first place of residence. From that first cause, not yet unfolded, which can neither be called sat nor asat, was produced a puruṣa (a male) who is called by people Brahmā. In that egg the divine one resided for one year; he divided the egg into two parts after reflecting on that matter; out of those two halves (of the egg) he created heaven and earth, between these two middle region, the eight directions and the abode of waters (the sea). From himself he drew forth mind which is neither sat nor asat, from mind Ahaṅkāra (self-consciousness), and the mahat-ātman, all products produced by the combinations of three guṇas, the five organs of sense which perceive the objects of sense; He created all beings by joining the subtle particles of the six (ahaṅkāra and tanmātrās) with portions of himself, the five great elements enter the framer of all beings. This theory combines the ideas contained in Ṛg. X. 129 (particularly verses 1–3) with those in the Śat. Br. XI. 1. 6. 1 and Chān. Up. III. 19. 1–2 (about the golden egg) and with the Sāṅkhya theory of tattvas and guṇas, though Manu differs from the standard Sāṅkhya of the Kārikā as regards the order in which Mahat, Ahaṅkāra and the five subtle elements arise. In I. 21 Manu states[2474] that Hiraṇyagarbha in the 2474. सर्वेषां तु स नामानि कर्माणि च पृथक् पृथक्। वेदशब्देभ्य एवादौ पृथक्संस्थाश्च निर्ममे॥ मनु. I. 21. The वे. सू. I. 3.28 is 'शब्द इति चेन्नातः प्रभवात्प्रत्यक्षानुमानाभ्याम्. On this the bhāṣya is "कथं पुनरवगम्यते शब्दात्प्रभवति जगदिति। प्रत्यक्षानुमानाभ्याम्' प्रत्यक्षं श्रुतिः प्रामाण्यं प्रत्यनपेक्षत्वात्। अनुमानं स्मृतिः प्रामाण्यं प्रति सापेक्षत्वात्। ते हि शब्दपूर्वां सृष्टिं दर्शयतः। 'एते इति वै प्रजापतिर्देवानसृजत, असुग्रमिति मनुष्यान्, हन्दव इति पितॄन्, तिरः पवित्रमिति ग्रहान्, आशव इति स्तोभं विश्वानीति शस्त्रम्, अमिसौभगेत्यन्याः प्रजाः' इति श्रुतिः, ... स्मृतिरपि। अनादिनिधना नित्या वाग्युत्सृष्टा स्वयम्भुवा। आदौ वेदमयी दिव्या यतः सर्वाः प्रवृत्तयः। ... तथा। नामरूपं च भूतानां कर्मणां च प्रवर्तनम्। वेदशब्देभ्य एवादौ निर्ममे स महेश्वरः॥ इति. The śruti text cited is Tāṇḍya-mahābrāhmaṇa VI. 9.15, explains the words of Ṛg. IX. 62. 1, the mantra being 'एते असृग्रमिन्दवस्तिरः पवित्रमाशवः। विश्वान्यभि सौभगा॥'. The verse अनादिनिधना॰ is शान्तिपर्व 233.24 (=cr. ed. 224. 55 which has only the first half) and the verse नामरूपं च occurs in विष्णुपुराण I. 5. 62, वायुपु. 9. 63 (reads प्रपञ्चनं) and कूर्म I. 7. 67–68 (reads प्राकृतानां प्रपञ्चनं).

---

2472. निःश्रेयस is one of twenty-five words mentioned by Pāṇini in V. 4. 77 as irregular and the Mahābhāṣya explains it as निश्चितं श्रेयः.

---

2473. आपो नारा इति प्रोक्ता आपो वै नरसूनवः। ता यदस्यायनं पूर्वं तेन नारायणः स्मृतः॥ मनु I. 10. शान्तिपर्व 342. 40 (=cr. ed. 328. 35) has first half and the 2nd half is अयनं मम तत्पूर्वमतो नारायणो ह्ययम्; विष्णुपु. I, 4. 5–6, ब्रह्माण्ड I. 5.5–6, कूर्म I. 6. 4–5 इमं चोदाहरन्त्यत्र श्लोकं नारायणं प्रति। ... आपो नारा...सूनवः। अयनं तस्य ताः पूर्वं ... स्मृतः. It is obvious that the two Purāṇas borrow from some work probably from मनु. मार्कण्डेयपु. 44. 4–5 (Venk. ed,) has the same verses as विष्णुपु. viz. इमं चोदा॰ and आपो ... सूनवः। तासु शेते स यस्माच्च तेन नारायणः स्मृतः॥; वराहपु. 2. 25–26 are the same as विष्णुपु. I 4. 5–6. ब्रह्मपु. (I. 38–39) has आपो नारा ... सूनवः। अयनं तस्य ता ... स्मृतः॥.

beginning of creation assigned names, peculiar activities and conditions to all created beings by means of the words of Veda. In this it follows a śruti text (explaining Ṛg. IX. 62. 1) quoted by Śaṅkarācārya (on V. S. I. 3. 28) who quotes a verse in support from the Mahābhārata and another verse also (the source of which is not mentioned but which is found in some purāṇas).

Another theory of creation is stated in Manusmṛti I. 32-41. Brahmā divided his own body into two halves, one half a male and the other a female and from that female he created Virāj, who practised tapas and created a male who was no other than Manu (promulgator of Manusmṛti). Manu desirous of producing created beings, first created ten great sages as Prajāpatis, who created seven Manus, Gods, classes of gods, great sages, yaksas rākṣasas, gandharvas, apsarases, snakes, birds classes of pitṛs, lightning, clouds, large and small stars, monkeys, fishes, cattle, deer, men, lions, worms, insects, flies, immovable things (trees etc.). This account appears to be inspired by the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90), particularly verses 5, 8-10.

A third theory of creation by Brahmā after he awakes from his sleep is briefly noticed in Manusmṛti I. 74-78, viz. he creates (or appoints) his mind which impelled by Brahmā's desire to create, produces ākāśa (ether), of which sound is the (peculiar) quality; that ether modifying itself creates Vāyu possessing the quality of touch; from Vāyu arises refulgent light, from which arises water and from water arises the earth of which the special quality is smell. This theory is a modification of the Sāṅkhya doctrine, according to which (kārikā 25) all five elements proceed from ahaṅkāra and God Brahmā is thrown in (who has no place in standard Sāṅkhya). The Manusmṛti is in the habit of stating opposing views on the same topic one after another; e. g. note on the use of flesh in Manu V. 27-46 as compared with V. 48-56, Manu III. 13 as compared with III. 14-19 (on brāhmaṇa having a śūdra wife), Manu IX. 59-62 as opposed to IX. 64-68 on the practice of Niyoga.

Accounts of creation occur frequently in the Mahābhārata, mostly in the Śāntiparva. All cannot be set out here, but a few would be described. Chap. 175. 11-21 (=Ch. ed. 182. 11-21) states that from God known as Avyakta all beings were born, he first created mahān also called ākāśa, from ākāśa water was produced, from water were produced fire and vāyu, from the combination of these two the earth was produced. Then the self-existent created a lotus, from which arose Brahmā, known as Ahaṅkāra and he produced the whole world. In chap. 176 (183 of Ch. ed.) it is stated that Brahmā first created water, from water arose Vāyu, from the combination of water and Vāyu arose Agni and earth was produced from the combination of Agni, Vāyu and ākāśa. Chap. 177 (=184, Ch. ed.) explains that the Mahābhūtas (great elements) are five viz. vāyu, ākāśa, agni, water and earth, that all bodies are made of these five, that there are five indriyas, five objects of sense and five qualities, śabda, sparśa (touch), rūpa (colour), rasa (taste) and gandha (smell); subdivisions of each of these five are mentioned. Chap. 178 (=189 of Ch. ed.) speaks of the five prāṇas and the spheres of their activities. Chap. 179–180 (=186–187 of Ch. ed.) deal with jīva (individual self) and states at the end that the body is perishable, that the self passes from one body to another and that by yoga one can see the self in the Highest Self. Chap. 200 (=207 Ch. ed.) states that Puruṣottama created the five elements, that he reclined on waters, that from his navel sprang a lotus brilliant like the sun, from which arose Brahmā, who created from his mind seven sons, Dakṣa, Marīci, Atri, Aṅgiras, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu. Dakṣa had many daughters (the eldest being Diti), from these daughters Daityas, Ādityas, the other gods, Kāla and its parts, the earth, the four varṇas, all kinds of men, Āndhras, Pulindas, Śabaras and others in Dakṣiṇāpatha and in the Uttarāpatha, Yauna (Yavanas), Kāmbojas, Gāndhāras, Kirātas, Barbaras and others were produced. Chap. 224 (=231 Ch. ed.) starts by saying that in the beginning there was brahma, beginningless and endless, unknowable and proceeds to divisions of time from nimeṣa to the yugas and their characteristics. Herein occur verses that are the same as in Manusmṛti I. 65–67, 69–70, 75–77, 81–83, 85–86. It is difficult to say who borrow as even the Manusmṛti (in X. 44) mentions Pauṇḍrakas, Oḍras, Draviḍas, Kāmbojas and Yavanas, Śakas, Pāradas, Pahlavas, Cīnas, Kirātas, Daradas and Khaśas, as having been originally sub-divisions or sub-castes of Kṣatriyas (Kṣatriyajātayaḥ) but reduced to the position of śūdras, because of losing all contact with brāhmaṇas (X. 43) and because of the cessation of religious rites (like Upanayana &c.). In Śānti 311 (=cr. ed. 299) creation is described in Sāṅkhya terms with Brahmā thrown in. Brahmā (identified with mahān) was born in the golden egg, he remained inside the egg for a year, then he created within the two parts of the egg (heaven and earth), antarikṣa, from ahaṅkāra five elements were produced and their five qualities are mentioned. Āśvamedhika (Chap. 40–42 is similar to Śānti 311) states the order of creation as avyakta-mahat-ahaṅkāra-five elements, the only peculiarity being that in verse 2 mahān is identified with Viṣṇu, Śambhu, buddhi and several other words are given as synonyms thereof.

The Smṛti of Yājñavalkya (III. 67–70) states that from the one Self, many individual selves arise just as from a red-hot iron ball sparks go out, that the unborn and imperishable Atman is said to be born when connected with body, that in the beginning of creation, Paramātman creates the five elements, ether, vāyu, tejas, water and earth, each succeeding one possessing a rising series of qualities and when appearing as individual self, it receives (for body) the same elements. Then after pointing out how a human being is conceived, how the foetus grows in the womb and describing the anatomy (with number of bones, veins, arteries, muscles &c.) of the human body, the Smṛti avers that the whole world proceeds from the Paramātman and the individual self appears from the elements (which form the body). The individual self is beginningless[2475] and is not born, but it comes in intimate contact with a body that is due to acts influenced by false ideas, hankerings and aversions (III. 125). From the several parts (mouth, arms, thighs, feet &c) of the First Principle that assumes numerous forms arise the four varṇas in order, the earth, heaven, prāṇas, directions, Vāyu, Agni, Moon (from mind), the Sun (from His eye), sky and the whole movable and immovable world (III. 126–128). Here the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 1 and 12–14) is closely followed.

The Purāṇas devote thousands of verses to the theories of cosmology and cosmography. Only a very brief summary is all that can be attempted from the contents of a few among the extant Purāṇas that have been shown above to be the earliest, viz. Matsya, Vāyu, Brahmāṇḍa, Viṣṇu and Mārkaṇḍeya. It has been stated above (pp. 838–840) that the topics with which Purāṇas were deemed to be concerned were according to the Amarkośa five and that some of the Purāṇas themselves set out the five topics as creation (sarga), recreation after dissolution (pratisarga), dynasties (vaṁśa), the vast periods of time (called Manvantaras), and history and deeds of the descendants of the solar, lunar and other dynasties (Vaṁsānucarita). Thus, many of the Purāṇas deal with creation at some length. A few striking theories and passages alone can be set out or cited.

2475. अनादिरात्मा कथितस्तस्यादिस्तु शरीरकम्। आत्मनस्तु जगत्सर्वं जगतश्चात्मसम्भवः॥ पा. III. 117.

The Matsyapurāṇa begins the topic of creation in the same way as the Manusmṛti does and some of the verses of the former are identical (or almost identical) with the verses of the Manusmṛti.[2476] The Matsya (2. 27) states; Nārāyaṇa alone appeared first and being desirous of creating the manifold world, produced from his body waters, cast the seed therein and a golden egg emerged; inside that egg the Sun appeared, he is called Āditya as well as Brahmā, he made the two halves of the egg into heaven and earth and produced all directions and the sky between the two (heaven and earth). Then the Meru and other mountains and the seven seas (of salt, sugarcane juice &c.) were produced. Nārāyaṇa became Prajāpati who created all this world including gods and asuras. The 3rd chap. of the Matsya speaks of the Vedas, Purāṇas and Vidyās as proceeding from his lips and states that he created from his mind ten sages, Marīci, Atri and others (3. 5–8). Then the Matsya launches on the Sāṅkhya scheme of creation (in 3. 14–29), stating that the three guṇas are sattva, rajas, tamas, and the state of their equilibrium is called Prakṛti, that some call it Pradhāna, others call it Avyakta, that this Pradhāna produces creation, that from the three guṇas rose Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara; that from Pradhāna arose Mahān, from the latter ahaṅkāra, then five Jñānendriyas and five Karmendriyas and the mind as the 11th sense and the five tanmātrās (subtle elements); that ākāśa was produced from the śabda-tanmātrā, vāyu from ākāśa, tejas from Vāyu and water from tejas, that the Puruṣa is the 25th tattva. Then the Matsya (3. 30–44) tells a fantastic story that Brahmā produced a woman (called Śatarūpā, Sāvitrī, Sarasvatī, Gāyatrī or Brahmāṇī) from himself, felt passion for her and had after a long time a son named Manu (called Svāyambhuva) and also Virāj from her; then Brahmā called upon his sons to create people. The Matsya in chapter four states that Brahmā had from Śatarūpā seven sons, Marīci and others (verses 25–26, contradicting chap. 3. 5–8), mentions two sons of Svāyambhuva Manu and also the descendants of those two sons. Some 2476. For example, Matsya 2. 25–27 and 32 echo the phraseology of Manu I. 5–6, 13, Matsya 2. 28 is the same as Manu I. 8, Matsya 3. 23 is same as Manu I. 75, Matsya 4. 55 (one half) is same as Manu IX. 129. The Brahmapurāṇa I. 37–39 are almost the same as Manu I. 6 and 8.

chapters from five onwards describe the descendants of Dakṣa, of Kaśyapa, of Diti, the coronation of Pṛthu, the solar and lunar dynastie and various classes of pitṛs.

The Vāyupurāṇa devotes five chapters (4–9) to creations of differents kinds (in over 600 verses). In Chap. 4 verses 22–61 the Sāṅkhya scheme of Pradhāna, Mahat, Ahaṅkāra, Tanmātrās is set out and is combined with the egg theory (verses 66ff). Chap. 6 appears to refer (verses 2–3) to the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 1–2), explains that Nārāyaṇa is so called because he reclines on waters, refers to the Boar incarnation, to nine kinds of creation, states a (different theory) that Brahmā created in the beginning the mind-born sons and Sanandana and Sanaka (6. 65). Chapter 7 refers to re-creation, Chap. 8 (containing 198 verses) refers to the Yugas, their durations, the creation of eight Devayonis, of animals, metres &c., and different sons of Brahmā.

The Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa I (chapters 3–5) deal with the appearance of Hiraṇyagarbha and various kinds of creations and chapter 4 refers to Pradhāna, the guṇas and states that creation is due to the uneven mixture of guṇas that constitute Pradhāna but these work under Viṣṇu. Chap. 5 speaks of various kinds of creations, and the mānasa sons of Brahmā. Chapters 8, 11 of the Anuṣaṅgapāda (2nd section of the Purāṇa) deal with the creation of gods, pitṛs, men and of the great sages, Bhṛgu &c.

The first three chapters (containing about 240 verses) of the Brahmapurāṇa deal with creation. Chap. 1 (verses 34 ff) puts forward Brahmā as the creator of all bhūtas (beings) and as devotee of Nārāyaṇa and then states that ahaṅkāra arose from mahat and from ahaṅkāra the elements were produced. The Brahma like the Matsya closely follows (in I. 37-41) Manu I. 5-13. It refers to the creation of the seven sages Marīci, Atri and others who were seven Brahmāṇaḥ, the creation of Sādhyas, gods, the Ṛgveda and other Vedas, birds and all sorts of beings; it also states (I. 53) that Viṣṇu created Virāj, who created Puruṣa (this is based on the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 5) and that Puruṣa created people. Chapter 2 states that Puruṣa married Śatarūpā, that Puruśa is called Svāyambhuva Manu, that a son Vīra was born to Puruṣa and Śatarūpā and Vīrā's two sons were Priyavrata and Uttānapāda; then their descendants are described, that Dakṣa had 50 daughters 10 of whom were married to Dharma, 13 to Kaśyapa and 27 (the nakṣatras) were married to king Soma. Chapter 3 deals with the creation of gods and asuras.[2477]

The Viṣṇupurāṇa in Chapters 2, 4, 5, 7 of the first aṁśa deals with several kinds of creation. Chapter 2 starts with Viṣṇu and asserts that Pradhāna and Puruṣa are his forms and in verses 34-50 proclaims the details of the Sāṅkhya system and verse 54 refers to the production of the egg by Mahat and other tattvas. Chap. 3 deals with the question how brahman, which is free from guṇas, inconceivable, pure and untainted, is the author of creation, the reply being that there are natural powers (Śaktis) in all things that are inconceivable and so brahman has the power of creating the universe. Chap. 5 deals with nine kinds of creations viz. of Mahat, Tanmātrās. bhūtas, (elements), Vaikārika (i. e. Aindrīyaka), Mukhya (i. e. of immovable objects), of lower animals, of ūrdhvaretas (i. e. divine beings), of human beings, of Kumāras (i. e. Sanatkumāra and others).

The Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa in Chap. 42 speaks of the creation of Pradhāna, Mahat, Ahaṅkāra, Tanmātrās under the aegis of Brahmā. Chap. 44 speaks of the nine kinds of creation as in Viṣṇu. Chapters 45, 46, 47 deal with the creations of Gods, pitṛs, human beings, the four varṇas, beasts, birds, trees and plants &c. Passages from other Purāṇas need not and cannot be quoted as they are in the same strain as above and as limitations of space preclude further elaboration.

In the Upaniṣads the geographical details are very few and are limited to the territory between the Himālayas and Vindhya (the Kauṣitaki Up. II. 13 speaks of two parvatas, the north and south, the Bṛ. Up. 1. 1, 1-2 alludes to the eastern and western seas). Noble steeds were brought from Sindhu country (Bṛ. Up. VI. 1. 13), the country of Gandhāra (Chān. Up. VI. 14. 2) appears to have been known and was at some distance from the place where the Upaniṣad was composed; the country Madra is mentioned in Bṛ. Up. III. 3.1 and III 7.1. Janaka was a king of Videha at whose court brāhmaṇas from Kurus, Pañcālya, gather together for argument with Yājñavalkya (Bṛ. Up. III 1.1), king Ajātaśatru of Kāśī (Banaras) humbled the vain Bālāki Gārgya (Bṛ. Up. II. 1.1), and Kauṣītaki IV. 1.1, which latter mentions also the countries of Vaśa, Uśīnara, Kuru. Pañcāla and Videha); Kuru country occurs in Chān. Up. I. 10.1. IV. 17.10. Pañcāla country by itself in Chān. Up. V. 3.1, Bṛ. Up. VI. 2.1; Aśvapat king of Kekaya (in the extreme North-west) imparted knowledge of Vaiśvānara-vidyā to brāhmaṇas.

---

2477. As a sample of how several Purāṇas repeat the same verses, the following is set out: अव्यक्तं कारणं यत्तत्प्रधानमृषिसत्तमैः। प्रोच्यते प्रकृतिः सूक्ष्मा नित्यं सदसदात्मकम्॥ ... त्रिगुणं तज्जगद्योनिरनादिप्रभवाप्ययम्। ... वेदवादविदो विप्रजिघ्यता ब्रह्मवादिनः। पठन्ति चैतमेवार्थं प्रधानप्रतिपादकम्। नाहो न रात्रिर्न नभो. न भूमिर्नासीत्तमो ज्योतिरभूच्च नान्यत्। श्रोत्रादि बुद्ध्याद्यनुपलभ्यमेकं प्राधानिकं ब्रह्म पुमांस्तदासीत्। विष्णोः स्वरूपात्परतो-विधे हे रूपे प्रधानं पुरुषश्च विप्र। विष्णुपु. I. 2. 19, 21-24; ब्रह्माण्डपुराण I. 3, 1-9 'अव्यक्तकारणं ... दात्मकम्। प्रधानं प्रकृतिं चैव यमाहुस्तत्त्वचिन्तकाः॥; the वायुपु. 4. 17 has अव्यक्तं कारणं यत्तु नित्यं सदसदात्मकम्। प्रधानं...तत्त्वचिन्तकाः॥. The ब्रह्मपुराण 1.33 has अव्यक्तं कारणं ... त्मकम्। प्रधानं पुरुषस्तस्माज्जिमंमे विश्वमीश्वरः॥. Mārkaṇḍeya, Chap. 42. 36-52 and 59-63 are identical almost word for word with Viṣṇu I. 2. 34-49, 51-55.

The Purāṇas devote thousands of verses to cosmography [2478] i. e. description of the divisions of the earth called dvīpas, varṣas, the mountains, the oceans, the rivers and the countries therein and their extent, the motions of the sun, moon, planets, the yugas, manvantaras, and kalpas [2479] and Dharmaśāstra works frequently rely on them. Jambudvīpa was known at least before 300 B. C. as Aśoka mentions it in his Rūpanātha Rock Inscription, quoted above on p. 1016 n 1649. The word 'dvīpa' occurs in the Ṛgveda I. 169. 3 and VII. 20. 4 (vi dvīpāni pāpatan). Pāṇini derives the word from dvi and āpaḥ. (VI. 3. 97). A bare outline of these from some Purāṇas may be indicated here. The Matsyapurāṇa starts by saying (in chap. 113. 4-5) that there are thousands of dvīpas, but as it is not possible to describe the whole of the world in order it would expound only the seven [2480] dvīpas.

2478. The most systematic and complete work on the cosmography of ancient India as described in Purāṇas is W. Kirfel's 'Die Kosmographie der Inder' (Bonn, 1920, pp. 401) with plates. He deals with Purāṇa material in. pp. 1–177, with Buddhist material in pp. 178–207 and with Jaina material in pp. 208–339 and there is an index of proper names in pp. 340–401.

2479. Many of the Purāṇas contain the same questions put by the sages to the Sūta about the dvīpas. ऋषयः ऊचुः। कति द्वीपाः समुद्रा वा पर्वता वा कति प्रभो। कियन्ति चैव वर्षाणि तेषु नद्यश्च काः स्मृताः॥ महाभूमिप्रमाणं च लोकालोकस्तथैव च। पर्वतेषु परिमाणं च गतिश्चन्द्रार्कयोस्तथा। एतद् अवीहि नः सर्वं विस्तरेण यथार्थवित्। स्वयम्भूतमेतत्सकलं श्रोतुमिच्छामहे वयम्। सूत उवाच। द्वीपभेदसहस्राणि सप्त चान्तर्गतानि च। न शक्यन्ते क्रमेणेह वक्तुं वै सकलं जगत्॥ ससैव तु प्रवक्ष्यामि चन्द्रादित्यग्रहैः सह॥ मत्स्य. 113. 1–5, वायु 134. 1–3, 6–7, ब्रह्माण्ड II. 15. 2–3, 5–6, मार्कण्डेय 51. 1–3.

2480. The dvīpas are generally said to be seven, but sometimes they are said to be 18 as in Vāyu 2. 15 (aṣṭādaśa samudrasya dvīpān aśnan Purūravāḥ) and by Kālidāsa in Raghuvaṁśa VI. 38 (aṣṭādaśa-dvīpa-nikhāta

(Continued on next page)

Chapters 121-123 of the same Purāṇa mention by name seven dvīpas viz. Jambudvīpa, Śakadvīpa, Kuśa, Krauñca, Śālmala, Gomedaka and Puskara, each succeeding one being double of each preceding one and each surrounded by a sea and each having seven varṣas, seven principal mountains, seven main rivers. The seven oceans surrounding the seven dvīpas are stated to be respectively of salt [2481] water, milk, liquid ghee, curds, liquor, sugar-cane juice, fresh water. The names and order of the dvīpas differ to some extent in different Purāṇas e. g. the Viṣṇu II. 1.12–14, II. 2.5, the Brahmapurāṇa (18.11) mention them as Plakṣa, Śālmala, Kuśa, Krauñca, Śāka and Puṣkara. The Vāyu (33. 11-14), Kūrma I. 45. 3, Mārk, 50, 18-20 mention the same seven in the same order.

The descriptions of Kalpa, Manvantara, Yuga in the Purāṇas have already been dealt with in H. of Dh. Vol. III. p. 890–91 and above pp. 686–693 and pralaya has been treated of in Vol. III pp. 893-895 and pp. 693-695 above. The Purāṇas contain thousands of verses on these topics.

The Viṣṇu (II. 2. 13-24) mentions the varṣas as Bhārata (the first among them), Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Uttara-Kuru, Ilāvṛta, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla. The Vāmana (13. 2–5) mentions the same except that it substitutes Campaka for Ramyaka. Viṣṇu II. (1. 16–17) states, however, that Nābhi, Kiṁpuruṣa, Harivarṣa, Ilāvṛta, Ramya, Hiraṇvat, Kuru, Bhadrāśva, Ketumāla were the names of nine kings, sons of Āgnīdhra, son of Priyavrata, a son of Svāyambhuva Manu and that the varṣas given to the nine sons of Āgnīdhra were respectively Himāhva (i. e. Bhārata), Hemakūṭa, Naiṣadha, Ilāvṛta, Nīlācala, Śveta, Śṛṇgavat, a varṣa to east of Meru, Gandhamādana. Thus there is a confusion of names of kings and names of varṣas. Vāyu (30. 38-40) states the same names of yūpaḥ). It is possible to take the word dvīpa in the sense of islands and not in the sense of continents in these cases. From Pāṇ. IV. 3. 10 (dvīpādanusamudram yañ) it appears that the word 'dvīpa' was also used about islands near the sea coast. Vide 'Nine dvīpas of Bharatavarṣa' by Sashi bhushan Chauduri in I. A. Vol. 59 pp. 204–208 and 224–226.

---

(Continued from last page)

2481. एते द्वीपाः समुद्रैस्तु सप्त सप्तभिरावृताः । लवणेक्षुसुरासर्पिर्दधिदुग्धजलैः समम् । विष्णु II. 2. 6. ब्रह्मपु. 18. 12, मार्क० 51. 7 (लवणे ... दधिक्षीरजलादिभिः) द्विगुणैर्द्विगुणैर्व्याप्ता सर्वतः परिवेष्टिताः).

sons and in 33. 41–45 mentions the same varṣas except Mālyavat, which was given to Bhadrāśva.[2482]

The Vāyu (45. 75-81) states that Bhāratavarṣa is to the north of the ocean and to the south of Himavat (Himālaya) and Manu was called Bharata because he supported his subjects and therefore this varṣa is called Bhārata. The Brahmāṇḍa (II. 16.7, says the same thing. The same (Vāyu) Purāṇa contradicts itself by stating (in 33. 50-52) that Nābhi's son was Ṛṣabha, whose son was Bharata after whom Bharata-varṣa is so called. Brahmāṇḍa (II. 14.60-62) says the same thing; Vāyu also stated (in 99. 134) that from Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā was born Bharata and Bhārata is so called[2483] after him. The seven 2482. उत्तरं यत्समुद्रस्य हिमाद्रेश्चैव दक्षिणम्। वर्षं तद्भारतं नाम भारती यत्र सन्ततिः॥ नवयोजनसाहस्रो विस्तारश्च द्विजोत्तमाः। कर्मभूमिरियं स्वर्गमपवर्गं च गच्छताम्॥ महेन्द्रो मलयः सह्यः शुक्तिमानृक्षपर्वतः। विन्ध्यश्च पारियात्रश्च सप्तात्र कुलपर्वताः॥ विष्णु. II. 3. 1–3, ब्रह्मपु. 19. 1–3; vide अग्नि 118. 1–3 (which reads हेमपर्वतः for ऋक्षपर्वतः), मार्कण्डेय (54. 10–11), ब्रह्माण्ड II. 16. 5 and 18–19. It is worthy of note that Pāṇini expressly names only Himavat (in IV. 4. 112) out of these mountains, though he knew other mountains like Kimśulukagiri and others (VI. 3. 117). अत्रापि भारतं श्रेष्ठं जम्बूद्वीपे महामुने। यतो हि कर्मभूरेषा यतोऽन्या भोगभूमयः॥ ब्रह्म. 19. 23, विष्णु. II. 3. 22. In both several verses after this are the same. भीष्मपर्व (chap. 9. 11 has the verse महेन्द्रो० (but reads ऋक्षवान्), while in chap. 6 (verses 4–5) only six are mentioned.

---

2483. The Viṣṇupurāṇa II. 1. 32 agrees with Vāyu 33, 50–52. In the Śākuntala (Act. VII.) Kālidāsa makes a character state that Śakuntalā's son called Sarvadamana in the hermitage of Kaṇva would become known as Bharata (इहार्थं सत्त्वानां प्रसभदमनात्सर्वदमनः पुनर्यास्यत्याख्यां भरत इति लोकस्य भरणात्). It is likely that in Kālidāsa's days Śakuntala's son had not been probably connected with the name Bhāratavarṣa, otherwise there would have been nothing to prevent the poet from adding another prophecy about him that a varṣa would be named after him. Pāṇini speaks of prācyas and Bharatas (II. 4. 66, IV. 2. 113). The Bharatas were an ancient people mentioned several times even in the Ṛgveda; vide III. 33. 11–12. The Bharatas are spoken of as grāma i. e. a group or saṅgha, to have crossed the confluence of the rivers Vipāś and Śutudri (modern Beas and Sutlaj), III. 23. 2 (Bharatas are said to have produced Agni by attrition), III. 53. 12 (where the prayer of Viśvāmitra is said to have protected Bhārata-jana). Agni is styled Bhārata in several verses (as in Ṛg. II. 7. 1 and 5, IV. 25. 4, VI. 16. 19 and 45). It is stated in the Ait. Brāhmaṇa (39. 9) that Dīrghatamā Māmateya crowned Bharata Dauṣpanti (Dauṣyanti) by the Aindra Mahābhiṣeka, that Bharata thereon conquered the earth all round, performed many Aśvamedha sacrifices and then five ślokas are quoted stating that Bharata made gifts of innumerable elephants in Masnāra country, that he performed sacrifices on the banks of the Yamunā river and on the principal mountains of Bhāratvarṣa are Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Śuktimat, Ṛkṣaparvata, Vindhya and Pāriyātra. The Purāṇas affirm that Bhārata is the best in the varṣas of Jambudvīpa (Brahma 19. 23-24, Viṣṇu III. 3. 22, Brahmāṇḍa II. 16. 17). Some of them contain fine eulogies of Bhārata (e. g. Brahma 27. 2.9 and 69-79, Viṣṇu II. 3. 23-26.).

(Continued on next page)

In several Purāṇas nine divisons of Bhāratavarṣa are named viz. Indradvīpa, Kaśeru, Tāmraparṇa, Gabhastimat, Nāgadvīpa, Sahys, Gandharva, Vāruṇa and a ninth which is 1000 yojanas long from north to south, on the east of which are Kirātas and on the west Yavanas and the four varṇas in the middle of it.[2484]. It may be noted that though Bhāratavarṣa is only one the divisions of Jambudvīpa, some of the nine divisions are themselves called Indradvīpa and Nāgadvīpa. Another important matter is that Matsya 114. 10, Vāyu 45. 81, Vāmana 13. 11, and Brahmāṇḍa appear to call the 9th dvīpa Kumāra or as extending from Kumārikī to the sources of the Gaṅgā. There-

---

(Continued from last page)

Ganges; the last verse (the 5th) says 'महाकर्म भरतस्य न पूर्वे नापरे जनाः। विश्वं सर्वं इव हस्ताभ्यां नोदापुः पञ्चमानवाः॥'. Vide Śatapatha Br. XIII. 5. 4. 11–13 (for Bharata Dauṣpanti born of Śakuntalā, where four gāthās are quoted about him, three of which are almost the same as in Ait. Br. and it is added that he attained the same sway or eminence that belongs to the Bharatas in its times. The Atharvaveda frequently refers to Himavat (as in V. 2. 8, XIX. 39. 1) and it is said that Kuṣṭha plant is found in the north and is taken to the east from Himavat and that (Atharva VI. 24. 1 and 3) all rivers flow from Himavat and join the ocean (Sindhu). The महाभाष्य on Pāṇ. II. 4. 66 remarks that Bharatas are not found in any countries other than those in the east.

2484. भारतस्यास्य वर्षस्य नवभेदान् निबोधत। इन्द्रद्वीपः कसेरुश्च ताम्रपर्णो गभस्तिमान्। नागद्वीपस्तथा सौम्यो गन्धर्वस्त्वथ वारुणः। अयं तु नवमस्तेषां द्वीपः सागरसंवृतः। योजनानां सहस्रं तु द्वीपोऽयं दक्षिणोत्तरात्। पूर्वे किराता यस्यान्ते पश्चिमे यवनाः स्मृताः॥ ब्राह्मणाः क्षत्रिया वैश्या मध्ये शूद्राश्च भागशः॥ विष्णु. II. 3. 6–9, मार्क. 54. 5–8 and Brahmāṇḍa II. 16. 8 add one half verse समुद्रान्तरिता ज्ञेयास्ते त्वगम्याः परस्परम् (after भारतस्यास्य ... ते), वामन 13.8–11 (reads नागद्वीपः कटाहश्च सिंहलो वारुणस्तथा, and adds कुमाराख्यः परिख्यातो द्वीपोऽयं दक्षिणोत्तरः after अयं ... संवृतः), वायु 45. 78–83 (adds आयतो ह्या कुमारिक्याद्या गङ्गाप्रभवाच्च वै and one verse more after this), ब्रह्मपु. (27. 14–17 and 19–20) has also the verses इन्द्रद्वीपः ... यवनाः स्मृताः but the first verse is शृणुध्वं भारतं वर्षं नवभेदेन भो द्विजाः। समुद्रान्तरिता ज्ञेयास्ते समाश्च परस्परम् (v. l. दुर्गम्याः परस्परम्). The मत्स्य (14. 7–12) has some of the above verses but adds आयतस्तु कुमारीतो गङ्गायाः प्रवहावधिः (प्रभवावधिः?)। तिर्यगूर्ध्वं तु विस्तीर्णः सहस्राणि दशैव तु। Agni 118 also has similar verses. The ब्रह्माण्ड II. 16. 11 adds आयतो ह्याकुमार्यां वै या गंगाप्रभवाच्च वै। तिर्यगुत्तरविस्तीर्णः सहस्राणि दशैव तु.

fore, it appears that the 9th division of Bhāratvarṣa was held to be a country like modern India and the other eight divisions seem to be countries and islands lying to the south-east of present India. It is probable that early works identified Bhāratvarṣa with what is now modern India, but when Indian culture spread to South-East Asia, Bhāratavarṣa was used to denote India as well as Greater India.

Śabara (bhāṣya on Jai. X. 1, 35) shows that the language of cultured people from the Himavat to cape Comorin was the same (prasiddhaśca sthālyām caruśabdaḥ ā Himavataḥ ā ca Kumarībhayaḥ prajujyamāno dṛṣṭaḥ). Vide also his bhāṣya on Jai. X. 1. 42 for the same words. The snow-capped mountains were known to the sages of the Ṛgveda (vide X. 121, 4 'yasyeme Himavanto mahitvā yasya samudram rasayā sahāhuḥ). 'Yasya' in the verse quoted refers to Hiraṇyagarbha. The Atharvaveda (V. 4. 2 and 8) mentions Himavat in the singular. Parvatas (plural) occur several times in Ṛg. III. 33. 1, IV. 54. 5 and also parvata in the singular (Ṛg. I. 37. 7, V. 56. 4). The Mahābhārata, Śabara, Purāṇas and the Bṛhat-saṁhitā show that ancient Indian people identified their culture with Bhāratavarṣa i. e. they identified country and culture, not race with culture.

The Brahmapurāṇa and the Mārkaṇḍeya appear to confine Bhāratvarṣa substantially to what has been known for centuries as India when they describe it as 'to its south, west and east there is the great ocean, to its north is Himavat resembling the string of a bow.'[2485] Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II, pp. 11–16 for discussion as to the limits of Āryāvarta and pp. 17–18 for Bhārata-varṣa.

The Vāyu devotes about 1000 verses (chap. 36-49) to what is called Bhuvanavinyāsa (arrangement of the universe), the Brahma devotes chap. 18-21 to the same viz. Bhuvanakośa, the Matsya chap. 114 deals with Bhuvanakośa, Kūrma I. 40 is called Bhuvanavinyāsa and deals with dvīpas and varṣas.

The countries[2486] of ancient and medieval India are enumerated in Viṣṇu II. 3. 15–18, Vāyu 45. 109–136, Brahmāṇḍa II. 16.

2485. दक्षिणापरतो यस्य पूर्वे चैव महोदधिः। हिमवान्धनुरेणास्य कार्मुकस्य यथा गुणः। तवेतद्भारतं वर्षं सर्वबीजं द्विजोत्तमाः। ब्रह्म. 27. 65–66, मार्क० 54. 59.

2486. For the Janapadas and other geographical data in Pāṇini, vide J. of U. P. H. S. Vol. 16 pp. 10-51 by Dr. V. S. Agravala and IHQ Vol. 21 pp. 297–314 for countries in the Purāṇas and Dr. D. C. Sirkar's 'Text of the Purāṇic list of peoples' in IHQ vol. 19 pp. 297–314. It appears from 40-68, Matsya 114. 34-56, Mārkaṇḍeya 54, Padma (Ādi 6. 34-59), Vāmana 13. 36 ff. The Bhīṣmaparva (chap. 9) mentions countries and peoples. In the Nakṣatrakūrmādhyāya of the Bṛhatsaṃhitā of Varāhmihira (chap. 14. 1-33) numerous names and countries in the centre of Bhāratavarṣa and in the eight directions of it are set out. Many rivers are named in the Ṛgveda. In Ṛgveda X. 75. 5-6 eighteen or nineteen rivers are mentioned in order from the Ganges towards the west up to Kubhā (Kabul river), Gomatī, Krumu (modern Kurram). Twenty-one rivers, seven in three groups, are referred to in Ṛgveda) X. 64. 8 and X. 75.1 and 99, in Ṛgveda I. 32.12 and X. 104.8 seven Sindhus are mentioned and in (Ṛgveda II. 12. 12, IV. 28. 1, X. 43, 3). Rivers are enumerated as flowing from the principal mountains in Matsya 114. 20-33, Kūrma I. 47. 28-39, Brahmāṇḍa II. 16. 24-39, Vāmana 13, 20-35 and 34. 6-8, Brahma 19. 10-14 and 27. 25-40, Padma (Ādikhaṇḍa 6. 10-32). The Anuśāsanaparva (chap. 165. 19-29) mentions many rivers.

(Continued on next page)

Pātālas (nether regions) are generaly mentioned as seven, but the names slightly vary in the several Purāṇas. Vide Vāyu 50. 11-12, Brahma 21. 2-3 and 54. 20-11, Brahmāṇḍa II. 20. 10 ff, Kūrma I. 44. 15-25, Viṣṇu II. 5. 2-3.

The Bhāṣya of Vyāsa on Y. S. III. 25 (26 in some editions) 'bhuvanajñānam sūrye saṃyamāt' contains a concise but remarkably detailed summary of the description of the seven lokas (bhūr, bhuvaḥ, svaḥ, mahaḥ, jana, tapas and satya,[2487]

(Continued from last page)

Pāṇini that he was well acquainted with the whole of India from the extreme northwest to Kalinga (modern Orissa) and Aśmaka (region about Ajanta and Paithan) and modern Kutch as he expressly names Gāndhāra (IV. 1. 169), Suvāstu (in IV. 2. 77, modern Swat), Kamboja (IV. 1. 175) and Takṣaśilā (IV. 3. 93), Sindhu (IV. 3. 93), Śalātura (IV. 3. 94, the birth place of Pāṇini who is hence called Śalāturīya by later writers like Bhāmaha), Sauvīra (IV. 1. 148), Kaccha (IV. 2. 133), Magadha, Kaliṅga, Sūramasa (Surma valley ?) in IV. 1. 170, Aśmaka (IV. 1. 173). Cunningham's 'Ancient Geography of India (1872), Nundolal Dey's 'The Geogtaphical Dictionary of Ancient and Medieval India' (1927), 'Bibliography of Ancient Geography of India' by Surendranath Majumdar' in I. A. Vol. 48 (for 1919) pp. 15-23 and 'the list of Tīrthas' in the author's H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 723-825 may be consulted for ancient Indian Geography.

2487. The words for the three or seven Vyāhṛtis were supposed to denote lokas. Vide Tai. Br. II. 2. 4. 3 'एता वै व्याहृतय इमे लोकाः' and Tai. Up. I. 5 भूरिति वा अयं लोकः। भुव इत्यन्तरिक्षम्। सुवरित्यसौ लोकः। मह इत्यादित्यः। आदित्येन वाव सर्वे लोका महीयन्ते।, the कूर्मपुराण (I. 44. 1-4) mentions the lokas from महः to सत्य.

the seven narakas from Avīci upwards, the seven pātālas, the earth with seven dvīpas, the seven parvatas with Meru in the middle of the earth, varṣas, the seven dvīpas, jambu, śaka, kuśa, krauñca, śālmala, gomedha (not gomedaka as in the printed Purāṇas) and Puṣkara, the seven seas, the parks of the gods, their assembly hall called Sudharmā and city called Sudarśana and palace called Vaijayanta, the groups of gods in Mahendra-loka, Prājāpatya-loka, in Jana, Tapas and Satya lokas. Many of these details closely agree with the enumerations and descriptions in the Purāṇas. This shows that the Paurāṇika cosmography had been established long before the 4th century A. D.

CHAPTER XXXV

The doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma (transmigration or metempsychosis)

This is one of the most fundamental doctrines of the Indian system of religion and philosophy, is an endeavour to answer the question that occurs to all thoughtful persons, viz. what happens to man after the death of the body and has influenced for thousands of years or at least from the times of the Upaniṣads all Indian thought and all Hindus, Jains and Buddhists. This is a vast subject and has during the last few decades attracted the minds of numerours writers in the West. There is now a voluminous literature in the West on reincarnation.[2487a] Several countries in historical times believed in transmigration. Herodotus[2487b] states that some of the Greeks (whose names he knew but did not disclose) had used that doctrine as their own, but that the Egyptians were the first to teach that the human soul was immortal and that at the time of the death of the body it entered into some other living thing then coming to birth. Pythagoras appears to have believed in it and there are controversies whether he derived it from India. Prof. A. B. Keith (in J. R. A. S. for 1909 pp. 569-606) after a lengthy discussion holds that Pythagoras did not borrow it from India. The present writer does not express any opinion on that subject as it is irrelevant for the purpose of this volume. Hopkins and Macdonnell accept the theory of Indian Influence on Pythagoras, but Oldenberg and Keith do not.

Not only Pythagoras, but Empedocles (who is reported to have said that he was a boy, a girl, a bush, a bird and a fish) and Plato believed in the pre-existence and post-existence of the soul, in the idea that the bodies which will accompany the soul in several births would bear similitude to the lives that they had led, that the happiest would be those who had practised the social and civil virtues called temperance and justice and that supersensible thinking would be the only means of disengaging the soul from successive lives of sense. Vide Kenneth Walker's 'The circle of Life' p. 93 (where he says that the doctrine of metempsychosis was probably well-known in India at the time of Christ) and Gough's 'Philosophy of the Upaniṣads' (London 1882), pp. 25–28, where he cites a long passage from Plato's Phaedon on this subject and pp. 29–31 for a long quotation from Hume's Dialogues concernig Natural Religion on the miseries and migration of the soul from body to body. Gough on p. 25 of the above work opines that since in the Vedic literature prior to the Upanisads there is no reference to the belief in the passage of the soul into plants and human bodies, it is reasonable to suppose that the Hindus borrowed this doctrine from the indigenes in the course of their absorption of indigenous blood. Vide also 'Studies in honour of Bloomfield' pp. 76–88 for G. W. Brown's views to the same effect. This is a most gratuitous assumption, it is a pure conjecture and without any evidence whatever. If belief in transmigration could exist among Egyptians and many primitive tribes, there is no reason to assume that Indians did not themselves arrive at the doctrine, particularly when there exists nowhere else in the whole world any theory of Karma and transmigration so detailed, so influential and so thorough as in Sanskrit Literature. One may dismiss the conjectures of Gough and G. W. Brown as verbiage (the latter conjectures on pp. 87–88 that even the words Yoga, Sāṅkhya and Upaniṣad are coined from similar words in some Dravidian tongue now lost). All Scholars (particularly Western ones when writing about the East) should lay to heart the words of Mallinātha 'nāmūlam likhyate kiñcit'. The present writer is not against conjectures at all but they must not be bold and must always be treated as such. But the danger is that the conjectures of former scholars or men are often treated as valid conclusions by later writers. All scholars must bear in mind Acton's warning 'Guard against the prestige of great names; no trusting without testing'. In the H. of Dh. Vol. IV. pp. 38–40 the doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma was briefly discussed in relation to the consequence of sins and their removal and details were reserved for treatment later.

---

2487a. Even so early as 1913, E. D. Walker (Rider and Co., London) devotes to a bibliography of books and articles on 'Reincarnation' 15 pages (pp. 329-343).

2487b. Vide English translation of Herodotus by A. D. Godley, Vol. I. (book II. 123).

In the present chapter the author proposes to examine the Vedic literature for tracing the origin and the growth of this doctrine and the vicissitudes and modifications of it and the objections raised against it in modern times. It is a remarkable circumstance that, though the several darśanas (such as Sānkhya, Yoga, Nyāya, Vaiśesika, Pūrvamīmāmsā and Vedānta) severely criticize some doctrines of each other, the doctrine of Karma and transmigration received almost unanimous support except among materialists (like Cārvāka). Prof. Wilson in 'Religion of the Hindus' (London, ed. of 1862) vol. II, p. 112 remarks 'metempsychosis is not only the one point on which all are agreed, it is the one point which none have ever disputed'. The Buddhists and Jains, though they differed on many matters from Vedic and Smrti literature, adopted this doctrine in their own way. There are some suppositions antecedent to all beliefs in Karma and transmigration viz. (1) man has a soul, eternal and separate from the physical body, (2) that other organisms, animals, plants and probably inanimate objects possess souls, (3) that the souls of men and lower animals can pass from one kind of physical organism to another, (4) that the soul is both doer and sufferer.

It has already been shown at some length (in Vol. IV. pp. 154–171) how ideas of Heaven and Hell were developed from ancient Vedic times and it has been stated (on p. 158 of that volume) that the doctrine of Karma and transmigration modified the doctrine of Heaven and Hell.

The word karma occurs in the Rgveda over forty times. In some passages it appears to mean 'exploits' or 'valiant deeds' as in the following: 'Observe the exploits of Visnu' (Rg. 1. 22. 19), 'proclaim by your word (or verses) the [2488] ancient deeds of Him (Indra) who is worthy of praise' (Rg. I. 61. 13); 'that deed of his (of Indra), who is wonderful, is most worthy of worship, that deed is most beautiful, that he filled with sweet waters of four rivers' (Rg. I. 62. 6); 'who is firm in each exploit' (Rg. I. 101. 4); 'O Indra! four are your divine and unconquerable names,... under which you performed exploits' (Rg. X. 54. 4); 'O Aśvins! frequent drinkers of delicious Soma and Lords of splendour, you helped (or protected) Indra in his exploits against Namuci, son of Asura (or of the Asura breed)' in Ṛg. X. 131. 4. In several other passages of the Ṛgveda 'karma' means 'religious works' (such as sacrifices or gifts); '(the gods) accept (or like) all works of this poet who brings to you a hymn of praise' [2489] (Ṛg. I. 148. 2); (O Indra), give your ear to (the prayer) of Śyāvāśva who offers Soma to you, as you listened to (the prayers of) Atri who performed religious works' (Ṛg. VIII. 36. 7); O pure Soma! with thy help our ancient and wise forefathers performed works' (Ṛg. IX. 96. 11). In very ancient times Heaven was believed to be the place for enjoying the rewards of most works. Rewards of this world such as wealth, heroic sons were no doubt prayed for, but it was immortality (amṛtatva) and the joys of heaven, that were highly valued. In Ṛg. X. 16. 4 Agni is prayed to take the deceased to the world of those who performed good works (tābhir-vahainam sukṛtām u lokam). The words 'sukṛtām lokam' occur in the Atharvaveda [2490] (III. 28. 6, XVIII. 3. 71) and in the Vāj. S. 18. 52. In Ṛg. IX. 113. 7–10 the sacrificer who offers Soma to Indra prays that he may be placed in that world (heaven) as an immortal, where there is never-ending light, where Yama, the son of Vivasvat, is the King, where there are joys and delights and where there are desires and their fulfilment. The prayers for immortality are made in the Ṛgveda to all gods, e. g. to Agni in I. 31. 7, IV 58. 1, V. 4. 10., Vi. 7. 4, to the Maruts in V. 55. 4, to Mitra and Varuṇa in V. 63. 2, to Viśve-Devas in X. 52. 5 and X. 62. 1, to Soma in I. 91. 1, IX. 94. 4, IX. 108. 3. But about the fate of evil-doers not much is said in the Ṛgveda. In the Brāhmaṇa works greater details are offered as to rewards of good works and the retribution for evil deeds. Śat. Br. (XII. 9. 1. 1) puts forth the idea of retribution (cited above).[2491] The same idea is set forth as to flesh-eating in Manu and Viṣṇu-dharmasūtra, which state 2489. शुष्वन्त विश्वान्यस्य कर्मोपस्तुतिं भरमाणस्य कारोः। ऋ. I. 148. 2: इयावाश्वस्य सुन्वतस्तथा शृणु यथा शृणोरत्रेः कर्माणि कृण्वतः। ऋ. VIII. 36. 7; the same verse is repeated in VIII. 37. 7 (with रेभतः for सुन्वतः); त्वया हि नः पितरः सोम पूर्वे कर्माणि चक्रुः पवमान धीराः। ऋ. IX. 96. 11.

---

2488 अस्येदु प्र ब्रूहि पूर्व्याणि तुरस्य कर्माणि नव्य उक्थैः। ऋ. I. 61. 13; तदु प्रयक्षतमस्य कर्म दस्मस्य चारुतममस्ति दंसः। उपह्वरे यदुपरा अपिन्वन् मध्वर्णसो नद्यश्चतस्रः॥ Rg. I. 62.6; युवं सुरामममश्विना नमुचावासुरे सचा। विपिपाना शुभस्पती इन्द्रं कर्मस्ववर्धतम्॥ ऋ. X. 131. 4.

---

2490. ताम्यां पतेम सुकृताम् लोकं यत्र ऋषयो जग्मुः प्रथमजाः पुराणाः। वाज. सं. 18. 52; शरीरमस्य संवृहाथैनं धेहि सुकृताम् लोके॥ अथर्व. XVIII. 3. 71.

2491. एतस्माद्वै यज्ञात्पुरुषो जायते। स यद्ध वा अस्मिँल्लोके पुरुषोऽन्नमत्ति तदेनममुष्मिँल्लोके प्रत्यत्ति। शतपथ XII. 9. 1. 1; मां स भक्षयिताऽमुत्र यस्य मांसमिहाद्म्यहम्। एतन्मांसस्य मांसत्वं प्रवदन्ति मनीषिणः॥ मनु. V. 55, विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 51. 78; मां means 'me' and सः 'that being' and the word मांस (that contains these two) is explained as above.

"that being whose flesh I eat here would eat me in the next world, the wise declare this to be the origin of the word 'māṃsa'." The Śat. Br. in another passage refers to a strange legend.[2492] Bhrgu, who had become vain on account of his learning and thought himself more learned than his father Varuna, was asked by his father to go to the four quarters from east to north and report what he would see there. Horrible sights met him in all directions e. g. in the east he saw men dismembering men, hewing off their limbs one by one and saying 'this to you, this to me'. He said 'this is horrible'. They replied 'these indeed dealt with us in yonder world and so we now deal with them in return'. Then in the north he saw that men crying aloud were being eaten by men crying aloud. When he said 'horrible &c'; they replied 'these indeed dealt with us...in return'. This is a long story and it is not necessary to set out the whole. This story probably gives expression to the popular notion of 'tit for tat'. But one thing is clear that the Śat. Br. indicates by this story that a belief had then arisen that one who does evil in one life has to suffer for it in a later life from that being whom he treated badly. The Śat. Br and the Tai. Br. both several times speak of conquering or casting off 'punarmṛtyu' (renewed death, liability to be born and die again and again). Two passages from the Śat. Br. and Tai. Br. may be quoted. In X. 4. 4 the Śat. Br. tells the story that gods became immortal by means of the proper performance of Agnicayana as Prajāpati advised them viz. by laying down 360 enclosing stones, 360 Yajuṣmatī bricks and 36 more thereon, 10800 Lokampṛṇā bricks. In X. 4. 4. 9 it is said 'he who is to become immortal through knowledge (vidyā)[2493] and through sacred works (karman) shall become immortal after separating from the body', and then X. 4. 4. 10 asserts that 'those who know this or those who do this holy work come to life again after dying and coming to life they secure immortal life; but those who do not know

---

2492. स तत एव माङ् प्रवव्राज। एतु पुरुषैः पुरुषान्पर्वाण्येषां पर्वशः संव्रश्चं सर्वशो विभजमानानिहं तवेहं ममेति। स होवाच भीष्मं वत भोः। पुरुषान्वा एतत्पुरुषाः पर्वाण्येषां पर्वशः संव्रश्चं पर्वशो व्यभक्षतेति ते होचुरित्थं वा इमेऽस्मानद्युष्मिँल्लोकेऽसचन्त तान्वयमिहमिह प्रतिसचामह इति। ... स ह तत एवोदङ् प्रवव्राज। एतु पुरुषैः पुरुषानाक्रन्दयत आक्रन्दयद्विरध्यमानान्। स होवाच। भीष्मं वत भोः पुरुषान् वा एतत्पुरुषाः आक्रन्दयत आक्रन्दयन्तोऽवन्तीति। ते होचुरित्थं वा इमेऽस्मा ... सचामह इति। शतपथ XI. 6, 1. 3–6.

2493. ते य एवमेतद्विदुर्ये वै तत्कर्म कुर्वते सुत्वा पुनः सम्भवन्ति ते सम्भवन्त एवासुतत्वमभि सम्भवन्त्यथ य एवं न विदुर्ये वै तत्कर्म न कुर्वते सुत्वा पुनः सम्भवन्ति त एतस्यैवार्थं पुनः पुनर्भवन्ति। शतपथ X 4. 3. 10.

this or do not perform this sacred work come to life again when they die and they become the food of him (Death) time after time.' In the Tai. Br. III. 11. 8 the story of Naciketas is narrated just as in the Kaṭhopaniṣad (some of the verses are the same in both). Death grants Naciketas three boons in the Tai. Br., the third being different in the Kaṭhopaniṣad. The third boon asked by Naciketas in Tai. Br. is 'Declare to me how to cast off punarmṛtyu.' Death declared to him the Nāciketa fire, thereby he (Naciketas) cast off or kept off punarmṛtyu.[2494] The words 'apa punarmṛtyum jayati' occur in Kauṣitaki Br. 25. 1 and several times in the Bṛ. Up. I. 2. 7., I. 5. 2, III. 2., 10, III. 3. 2.

From the ancient popular idea of retribution for evil deeds probably arose the idea of the setting of good deeds against the evil deeds of a person and weighing them as if in a balance. The Śat. Br. states[2495] 'Now this one is the balance, viz. the right side of the vedi.[2496] Let him sit down touching the right edge of the vedi, for indeed they place him on the balance in yonder world and whichever of two will rise he will follow, whether it be good or evil. And whosoever knows this mounts the balance even in this world and escapes being placed on the balance in yonder world, for it is good deed that rises and not his evil deed'.

The Śatapatha had arrived at the idea that man's will (and corresponding deed) governs what world he will reach after death. It says 'Let him meditate on truth as brahma. Now man here is mostly will and, according as his will is when he departs from this world, does he on departing become of similar will in the yonder world'.[2496]

There is a curious passage in the Śatapatha (X. 1. 5. 4) about the powers conferred by sacrifices in the yonder world. It states that he who had regularly performed Agnihotra eats food 2494. तृतीयं वृणीष्वेति। पुनर्मृत्योर्मेऽपचितिं ब्रवीति होवाच। तस्मै हैतमग्निं नाचिकेतमुवाच ततो वै सोऽप पुनर्मृत्युमजयत्। अप पुनर्मृत्युं जयति योऽग्निं नाचिकेतं चिनुते य उ चैनमेवं वेद। तै. ब्रा. III. 11. 8. 6.

---

2495. अथ हैवैव तुला यद्दक्षिणो वेद्यन्तः स यत्साधु करोति तदन्तर्वेद्यथ यदसाधु तद्बहिर्वेदि। तस्माद्दक्षिणं वेद्यन्तमधिसृज्येवासीत। तुलायां ह वाऽअमुष्मिँल्लोक आदधति यतरद्धरयति तदन्वेष्यति यदि साधु वाऽसाधु वेति। अथ य एवं वेदास्मिन्हैव लोके तुलामारोहयत्यमुष्मिँल्लोके तुलाधानं मुच्यते। साधुकृत्या हैवास्य यच्छति न पापकृत्यां। शतपथ XI. 2. 7. 33. Here the edge of the right side of the Vedi is spoken of as the beam of the balance.

2496. सत्यं ब्रह्मेत्युपासीत। अथ खलु क्रतुमयोऽयं पुरुषः स यावत्क्रतुरस्माल्लोकात्प्रैत्येवं क्रतुर्हीतं लोकं प्रेत्याभिसम्भवति। शतपथ X. 6. 3. 1.

in the evening and morning in the yonder world, the performer of Darśa and Pūrṇamāsa sacrifice eats food every half month; the performer of Cāturmāsyas (seasonal sacrifices) eats food in the yonder worlds every four months. the performer of animal sacrifice every six months: the Soma sacrificer once a year; the builder of the fire after (agnicit) eats food every hundred years at his will or may not require it at all after once taking it, for a hundred years are as much as immortality, unending and everlasting.

The Śat. Br. had arrived at the conclusion that every man is born in a world fashioned by himself. It also asserted that he who sacrifices to the gods does not win such a place as the one who sacrifices to the Ātman and the latter frees himself from the mortal body, from sin, as a snake frees itself from its slough [2497].

It must be conceded that a clear statement about the doctrine of karma and punarjanma is absent from the whole of the Ṛgveda. Rg. VII. 33 is an important hymn. The first nine verses are spoken by Vasiṣṭha about his sons. Verses 10–14 refer to Vasiṣṭha[2498] himself and are either attributed to his sons or according to another view are part of a dialogue with Indra. The verses are mythological, mystical and rather difficult to explain. Verse 10 refers to one birth of Vasiṣṭha when the gods Mitra and Varuṇa saw him reaching the refulgence of lightning and it is said that Agastya brought him (Vasiṣṭha) to the people. Here the words 'ekam janma' indicate that another janma of Vasiṣṭha is intended in this hymn. Verse 11 refers to Vasiṣṭha as born of Mitra and Varuṇa from Urvaśī and states that all the gods placed him in puṣkara (either antarikṣa or lotus); verse 12 is important for the metaphorical and mystical statement that wishing to weave the cloth stretched by Yama, Vasiṣṭha was born from Urvaśī. Verse 13 refers to the seed cast in a pitcher by the two (Mitra and Varuṇa) from the midst of which arose (Agastya) and from which also Vasiṣṭha was born. Verse 14 is addressed to Pratṛds (the Tritsus according to Sāyaṇa) and calls upon them to wait upon (or honour) Vasiṣṭha who would be coming to them (for performing sacrifice. This, it seems, is the second birth of Vasiṣṭha.

---

2497. तदाहुः। आत्मयाजी श्रेयान् देवयाजी ३ ... इत्यात्मयाजीति ह ब्रूयात्। ... स यथाहिस्त्वचो निर्मुच्येतैवमस्मान्मर्त्याच्छरीरात्पाप्मनो निर्मुच्यते स ... स्वर्गं लोकमभिसम्भवति। अथ ह स देवयाजी ... न तावन्तं लोकं जयति यावन्तमितरः। शतपथ XI. 2. 6. 13–14.

2498. विद्युतो ज्योतिः परि संजिहानं मित्रावरुणा यदपश्यतां त्वा। तत्ते जन्मोतैकं वसिष्ठा-गस्त्यो यत्त्वा त्रिश आजभार॥ उतासि मैत्रावरुणो वसिष्ठोर्वश्या ब्रह्मन्मनसोधि जातः। द्रप्सं स्कन्नं ब्रह्मणा दैव्येन विश्वे देवाः पुष्करे त्वाददन्त॥ स प्रकेत ... सदानः। यमेन ततं परिधिं वयिष्य-न्नप्सरसः परिजज्ञे वसिष्ठः॥ सत्रे ह जाताविषिता नमोभिः कुम्भे रेतः सिषिचतुः समानम्। ततो ह मान उदियाय मध्यात्ततो जातमृषिमाहुर्वसिष्ठम्॥ ऋ. VII. 33. 10–13. The verse उतासि is explained in the Nirukta V. 14. मानः is explained as शमीप्रमाण or शम्याप्रमाण (of the measure of a yoke-pin). For शम्या (ordinarily 32 aṅgulas), vide H. of Dh. vol, II. p. 1112 n 2487.

Prof. R. D. Ranade[2499] in his 'Constructive survey of the Upanishadic philosophy' (pp. 145–166) relies upon certain mantras of the Ṛgveda for stating that there is evidence for holding that an approach to the idea of Transmigration was being made by the vedic sages (p. 147), though he concedes (on the same page) that in the major part of the Ṛgveda the idea of transmigration is conspicuous by its absence.

Among the texts on which he relies are Ṛg. I. 164. 3, 4, 16, 17, 20, 30, 31, 38. The whole hymn has several riddles, has highly imaginative descriptions of the year, the path of the Sun, questions and answers and is a late hymn, as he him self admits (p. 150). Verses 3 and 17 contain nothing suggestive of punarjanma. Verse 4 is really concerned with the first creation, as it literally means 'who saw that one that was first being born, when the boneless (prakṛti) bears a body possessing bones; where was the life (prāṇa) of the earth, or its blood or its self? Who (a pupil) approached a wise one (a guru) to ask this?'. Verse 16 means 'they declare to me the women that exist and the men; one possessing eyes (the light of true knowledge) may see (the Reality); the blind (the ignorant) will not know; the wise son may know this; he who knows these would be the father's father'. Sāyaṇa gives several meanings of this verse. The present author fails to understand how the words 'father's father' indicate any reference to transmigration in this verse, as Prof. Ranade asserts. Why he presses this verse of I. 164 into service the present author cannot understand. After referring to I. 164. 32 (which doubts whether he who created all this knows its real nature) he states 'it sets such a high price on the mystical knowledge which it glorifies that any one who comes in possession of this knowledge may be said to be his father's father.' To whom does 'his' refer?.

---

2499. All verses on which Prof. Ranade relies are set out here in one place: को ददर्श प्रथमं जायमानमस्थन्वन्तं यदनस्था बिभर्ति। भूम्या असुरसृगात्मा क्व स्वित् को विद्वांसमुप गात्मण्वुमेतत् ॥ ऋ. I. 164. 4; स्त्रियः सतीस्ताँ उ मे पुंस आहुः पश्यदक्षण्वान्न वि चेतदन्धः। कविर्यः पुत्रः स ईमा चिकेत यस्ता विजानात्स पितुष्पितासत् ॥ 16; अवः परेण पर एनावरेण पदा वत्सं बिभ्रती गौरुदस्थात्। स कद्रीची कं स्विदर्धं परागात् क्व स्वित्ते नहि यूथे अन्तः ॥ 17; द्वा सुपर्णा सयुजा सखाया समानं वृक्षं परि षस्वजाते। तयोरन्यः पिप्पलं स्वाद्वत्त्यनश्नन्नन्यो अभि चाकशीति। 20; अनच्छये तुरगातु जीवमेजद् ध्रुवं मध्य आ पस्त्यानाम्। जीवो मृतस्य चरति स्वधाभिरमर्त्यो मर्त्येना सयोनिः ॥ 30; अपश्यं गोपामनिपद्यमानमा च परा च पथिभिश्चरन्तम्। स सध्रीचीः स विषूचीर्वसान आ वरीवर्ति भुवनेष्वन्तः ॥ 31; अपाङ् प्राङेति स्वधया गृभीतोऽमर्त्यो मर्त्येना सयोनिः। ता शश्वन्ता विषूचीना वियन्ता न्यन्यं चिक्युर्न नि चिक्युरन्यम् ॥ 38; the word जीव occurs only in I. 164. 30. In I. 164. 38 the word जीव does not occur. At the most there is a contrast between the immortal part i. e. soul) and the mortal part (the body) in the verses 30 and 38. These two (soul and body) are always bound together; one of them (the body) is well known to people, the other (the soul) is not so known. The verse अपश्यं गोपां (ऋ. I. 164. 31) is repeated in X. 177. 3. The आश्वमेधिकपर्व 47. 16 द्वाविमौ पक्षिणौ नित्यौ is an echo of द्वा सुपर्णा सयुजा etc.

The verse 20 'dvā suparṇā' also occurs in the Muṇḍakopaniṣad III. 1. and ŚV. Up. IV. 6 and refers to the individual soul and the Supreme Self and tells us that the former is bhoktṛ (taster of worldly pleasures), while the latter simply looks on. But so far as the present writer can see there is absolutely nothing about a former or future life in the verse. Verse 30 draws a sharp distinction between the self which is immortal and the body which is mortal and states that the two are bound together to the same place. Verse 31 is a description of the movements of the Sun who is called 'gopā' (protector, guardian) and speaks of his coming to the worlds again and again. Prof. Ranade sees too much in the words 'gopām', which is applied to Agni (Ṛg. I. 1. 8, I. 96. 7), to Soma (in Ṛg. VI. 52. 3), to Varuṇa (in Ṛg. VIII. 42. 2), to Viṣṇu in Ṛg. I. 22. 18. In Ṛg. III. 43. 5 the words 'gopām janasya' (protector of the people) occur. Prof. Ranade translates (p. 151) 'he saw the guardian returning frequently to mundane regions'. Why should we not translate (particularly when we have the words 'bhuvaneṣvantaḥ') 'I saw the guardian Sun again and again returning to the worlds and moving towards me and away from me by different paths'?. Prof. Ranade also[2500] relies on Ṛg. X. 16. 3 and particularly on the word 'dharmaṇā' in it which he renders as 'his qualities'. Rg. X. 16 has 14 verses, is one of the funeral hymns and the cremation fire (as Agni or Jātavedas) is expressly mentioned in eleven verses. Verse 3 (addressed to the deceased) may literally be translated as 'may thy eye go to the Sun, ātman (prāṇa) to wind, go to heaven or the earth by dharman or go to the waters if you find your benefit in them; be firmly established in the plants with the limbs of the body.' The express mention of 'heaven' shows that this is only one of the numerous verses of the Ṛgveda in which heaven is referred to as the abode of those who perform good works and that there is nothing more in it than that. Vide above pp. 20–21 for the meaning of dharman (which is the only form of the word employed in the Ṛgveda) viz. 'religious rites or sacrifices' (in most Ṛgveda passages) or rarely 'fixed principles of conduct'. The very next verse (X. 16. 4) contains a prayer to Agni to carry the deceased to the world of people of good deeds (tābhirvahainam sukṛtām-u lokam). There is no reason to suppose that in Rg. X. 16. 3 anything more is meant than what is prayed for in verse 4. Besides, the basic idea of punarjanma is that future existence is regulated by the good or evil deeds of a person and he has no option whatever. In Rg. X. 16. 3 the departed spirit is told that he may go to heaven or earth or waters or plants. This is not the doctrine of punarjanma at all. In X. 16. 5 the cremation fire is addressed 'O Agni! send forth the departing man who is offered as an oblation into thee and who will move on with the food offered, again to (the world of) pitṛs; the remainder (left after the body is burnt) putting on a new life may go near (pitṛs) and be connected with (a new) body in that world.' This verse contains the same idea as in X. 16. 4 in different words and refers only to the other world (pitṛs) and not to transmigration. Prof. Ranade refers (p. 148) to Ṛg. X. 58 and translates one of the verses as meaning that the sage will recall the soul and make it live again by his song. It is not clear what verse or verses he has in view. He has probably only the first verse in view. That hymn has twelve verses in each of which a quarter is different but three quarters are the same. None of the verses contains any express word for song. Besides, mind is different from the soul even in the Ṛgveda (vide Ṛg. X. 57. 5 where both words 'manaḥ' and 'jīvam' occur). Moreover, the man is not yet dead. The composer uses the present tense (ā vartayāmasi) and means to say that he will try to prevent his dying. In the present author's opinion there is not even a distant reference to transmigration in this hymn or in any of the four hymns (Ṛg. X. 57–60) which are assigned to brothers Bandhu, Śrutabandhu and Vipra-bandhu, who are called Gaupāyanas in the Anukramaṇī. In Ṛg. X. 60. 7 Subandhu who appears to have been a brother of the three is addressed 'O Subandhu! here comes your mother, your father, your very life' etc., and in X. 60. 10 it is said 'I have brought the mind of Subandhu from Yama Vaivasvata in order that he may live and not die.'

2500. सूर्यं चक्षुर्गच्छतु वातमात्मा द्यां च गच्छ पृथिवीं च धर्मणा। अपो वा गच्छ यदि तत्र ते हितमोषधीषु प्रति तिष्ठा शरीरैः॥ ऋ. X. 16.3. धर्मणा means सुकृतेन (good deeds or sacrifices). In Ṛg. X. 85. 24 we have ऋतस्य योनौ सुकृतस्य लोकेऽरिष्टां त्वा

(Continued on next page)

(Continued from last page)

सह पत्या वधानि. Compare with ऋ. X. 16.3, शतपथ X. 3.8, स यदैवंविदस्माल्लोकात्प्रैति वाचैवाग्निमप्येति चक्षुषादित्यं मनसा चन्द्रं श्रोत्रेण दिशः प्राणेन वायुं स यतमय एष भूत्वैतासां देवतानां यां यां कामयते सा भूत्वेलयति; and यत्ते यमं वैवस्वतं मनो जगाम दूरकम्। तत्त आवर्तयामसीह क्षयाय जीवसे॥ ऋ X. 58. 1. The words underlined occur in all twelve verses of the hymn, which must be supposed to have been addressed to the man who is moribund. The first verse means 'thy mind that has reached far away to Yama, the son of Vivasvat, we bring back for the purpose that it may reside and live here.' The remaining eleven verses refer to the dying man's mind having gone to (i.e. as having the dying thought of) heaven and earth, to the earth with four points, four intermediate quarters, the sea, rays and high hilly tracts, waters and plants, to the Sun and Dawn, the big mountains, this whole world, most distant regions, past and future.

In Ṛg. X. 14. 8 there is no reference (as some suppose) to return to this world after enjoying the fruits of good deeds in the company of pitṛs. The first half of the verse expresses that the newly departed spirit will be united with pitṛs, with Yama and with his good deeds. The 2nd half asks the departed to leave behind his sons and be united in heaven with a new and brilliant body.

Ṛg. IV. 42 (in ten verses) is a hymn of a sage-like king Trasadasyu, son of Purukutsa, who identifies himself with Indra and Varuṇa in verse 3[2501] 'I who have become enlightened about the worlds am Indra and Varuṇa and by my greatness am the two worlds (heaven and earth) that are wide, deep (spacious) and well-fixed. I sent forth heaven and earth like Tvaṣṭṛ (Prajāpati) and support them.' Here by virtue of true knowledge he identifies himself with Indra and Varuṇa but there is no conception of transmigration. Similarly, Vāmadeva 2501. अहमिन्द्रो वरुणस्ते महित्वोर्वी गभीरे रजसी सुमेके। त्वष्टेव विश्वा भुवनानि विद्वान् समैरयं रोदसी धारयं च॥ ऋ. IV. 42. 3. The निरुक्त IV. 19 gives several meanings of the word 'rajas', one of which is लोका रजांस्युच्यन्ते.

---

having attained knowledge of Reality asserts[2502] 'I have become Manu and the Sun, I am the wise sage Kakṣīvat; I reached Kutsa, the son of Arjunī, I am the seer Uśanas; look upon me (as identifiable with all)'. This verse is quoted in Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 10 (which would be set out later on and explained). In this also there is no express reference to a past birth as Manu or as the Sun. In Rg. IV. 27. 1 Vāmadeva declares 'while still staying in the womb (of my mother) I learnt all the births of these gods; if a hundred fortresses of ayas (copper or iron) had guarded me, I would have still escaped like a hawk with swiftness' (another meaning is also possible which may be set out later). This is quoted in the Ait. Up. II. 5 (to be quoted and explained later). Prof. R. D. Ranade understands (pp. 49, 153) Rg. IV. 26. 1 as saying that Vāmadeva makes an unconscious utterance that he was in a former life Manu or the Sun. In that verse Vāmadeva indentifies himself with five persons, Manu, Sūrya, sage Kakṣīvat, Kutsa and Uśanas. There is no word like 'janma'. On Prof. Ranade's view Vāmadeva would have to be held to state five previous births at least (and if so in a confused order). Besides, the following verses clearly show that Vāmadeva makes a claim to be identical with the Supreme Principle by giving the earth to the Āryas, sending rain to those who give offerings, making the gods follow his desire or will. The utmost that can be said is that he claims identity with the Godhead. Deussen in 'Philosophy of the Upanishads' (p. 318) holds that both the verses (Rg. IV. 26. 1 and IV. 27. 1.) have nothing to do with the doctrine of the soul's transmigration. The present author respectfully agrees with Deussen and thinks that Prof. Ranade is wrong. Śaṅkarācārya[1503] on V. S. I. 1. 30 explains that Indra looking upon himself as brahma according to the Vedāntaśāstra gives the instruction 'know me alone', quotes Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 10, and on V. S. III. 4. 51 reiterates that in Rg. IV. 27. 1 the Veda expressly asserts that Vāmadeva, while still in the mother's womb, realized his identity with brahma and then remarks that this vedic assertion indicates that correct knowledge of Reality may arise in a succeeding life owing to the means (or efforts) made in a previous life or lives. It may be noted that Śaṅkarācārya draws a distinction between what Śruti (Veda) expressly declares (vadanti) and what it indicates or what is to be inferred from it (darśayati).[2504]

---

2502. अहं मनुरभवं सूर्यश्चाहं कक्षीवाँ ऋषिरस्मि विप्रः। अहं कुत्समार्जुनेयं न्युञ्जेऽहं कविरुशना पश्यता मा॥ ऋ. IV. 26. 1. गर्भे नु सन्नन्वेषामवेदमहं देवानां जनिमानि विश्वा। शतं मा पुर आयसीररक्षन्नध श्येनो जवसा निरदीयम्। ऋ. IV. 27. 1.

2503. शास्त्रदृष्ट्या तूपदेशो वामदेववत्। वे. सू. I. 1. 30; भाष्य-इन्द्रो नाम देवतात्मानं स्वमात्मानं परमात्मत्वेनाहमेव परं ब्रह्मेत्यार्षेण दर्शनेन यथाशास्त्रं पश्यन्नुपदिशति स्म—मामेव विजानीहि-इति। यथा 'तद्धैतत्पश्यन्नृषिर्वामदेवः प्रतिपेदेऽहं मनुरभवं सूर्यश्च' इति तद्वत्। This is बृह. उप. I. 4. 10.

Mr. J. S. Karandikar of Poona (a staunch disciple and follower of Lokamānya Tilak) in his learned work 'Gītātattvamāñjarī' (in Maṛathi, Poona 1947) asserts (on pp. 775-776) that the doctrine of transmigration is as old as the Vedic age (i. e. the Saṁhitās) and relies for this proposition on only four verses of the Ṛgveda viz. X. 14. 8, X. 16. 3 and 5 and X. 135. 6. The first three of these four have been explained above in dealing with Prof. R. D. Ranade's views. Mr. Karandikar summarises Ṛg. X. 16. 5 as a prayer to Agni that the latter should take the departed to the world of pitṛs and should send him back to his relatives after endowing him with a new brilliant body. There are no words for 'back to his relatives' nor for 'brilliant' in the verse at all. The word 'punaḥ' occurs in the first half and refers to the deceased's coming to pitṛloka after the body is burnt on the earth and the second half refers to the new body to be had in the world of pitṛs (and not to relatives). Ṛg. X. 14. 8. on which Mr. Karandikar relies has nothing to do with returning to the earth. After leaving his bad deeds (avadya) behind the deceased is asked to go to the home of the pitṛs with a brilliant body. The brilliant body is not earthly but of the pitṛ world. Ṛg. X. 135. 6. is quoted in the note below.[2505] That verse is an extremely vague one and is a riddle or is metaphorical. That hymn of seven verses is addressed to Yama and the Anukramaṇī says that the ṛṣi of it is Kumāra of Yama's family.

2504. गर्भस्थ एव च वामदेवः प्रतिपेदे ब्रह्मभावमिति वदन्ती जन्मान्तरसञ्चितात्साधनाज्जन्मान्तरे विद्योत्पत्तिं दर्शयति। न हि गर्भस्थस्यैवंविधं किंचित्साधनं सम्भाव्यते। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 4. 51.

2505. यथाभवदनुदेयी ततो अग्रमजायत। पुरस्ताद् बुध्न आततः पश्चान्निरयणं कृतम्॥ ऋ. X. 135. 6. The word अनुदेयी occurs only thrice in the Ṛg. viz. in this hymn twice (in verses 5 and 6) and once in Ṛg. X. 85. 6 where it is in the feminine gender, means a friend of the newly married bride who goes along with her to the bridegroom's house to keep her company' (वैग्यासीवनुदेयी). अनुदेयी literally means 'what is given after the principal gift'. Even in these days when a substantial gift is made to a brāhmaṇa, another small gift is added to it. The word निरयणं occurs only here in the whole of the Ṛgveda. अग्र and बुध्न are contrasted as top and bottom in Ṛg. X. 111. 8 'क्व स्विदग्रं क्व स्विद् बुध्न आसाम्'.

The first verse of Ṛg. X. 135 refers to Yama who is said to drink (Soma) along with the gods under a tree (i. e. in a garden) with fine foliage, where our (my) father, lord of people, desires to send (me) to the ancient fathers. It is possible that this refers to Naciketas as Sāyaṇa, following the story of Naciketas in the Tai. Br. III. 11. 8 and in the Kaṭhopaniṣad, holds. This verse may be taken as containing the words of Naciketas, sent by his angry father Vājaśravasa to the world of Yama as donation in the Viśvajit sacrifice. The 2nd verse also contains what Naciketas said viz. that he (at first) looked upon his father in anger, since he (the father) desired to send him (the son) to the ancient pitṛs in that evil way, but that he (on further consideration) liked (what the father did). He liked the idea of facing Yama himself. Verses 3 and 4 are addressed by Yama to the boy Naciketas who approached Yama with prayer (or metaphorically in a chariot). Verse 3 says 'O boy! the new wheel-less chariot (viz. ṛk prayer) with only one beam that you created by your intellect soars up in all directions and that you mount it without seeing (without considering the result of your action).' In Ṛg. a prayer to (and a laud of) gods is often compared to a chariot (as in V. 73. 10, VIII. 3. 15). Therefore, verse 3 suggests two meanings viz. Naciketas went to Yama in a chariot or that he sent up a prayer to Yama. Verse 4 is spoken by Yama 'O boy! that chariot (i. e. prayer which you sent up from the learned priests on the earth) was followed by Sāman (a melody) from this place (the earth) as if it were placed in a boat.' Almost all the verses of the Sāmaveda except about 75 are taken from the Ṛgveda and therefore the Chān. Up. says [2506] 'therefore Sāman is sung as resting on the ṛk'. As the melody (Sāman) is sung on a ṛk verse, the Sāman is said in this verse (4) as placed in a boat. Verse 4 may also convey another meaning. Sāman also means 'reconciliation' and the verse may be taken as referring to the legend that Yama gave the boy a boon that the boy's father would become well-disposed to him. Verse 5 contains a question (supposed to be asked by Yama). It means 'who is the father of this boy' (meaning probably that the father must be a bad man as he sent his own son to Yama)? Who sent up the chariot? Who would tell me to-day how (this boy) became anudeyī (a small gift accom panying the large principal gift)?' Then follows the verse on which Mr. Karandikar relies as expressing Karma and rebirth. That verse literally means 'as it or he became an anudeyī, it stood in front (or on top); the bottom (or base) was spread in front (or first or to the east), the coming out (or end) was behind (or afterwards or to the west).' This conveys no clear sense. But it is possible to explain it in this way, viz. though the boy was sent by his father as an anudeyī (as a subsidiary gift) still he came on top of all (in that Yama was pleased with him and bestowed on him three boons); he was in front of all though he (boy) was at the bottom of all gifts (i. e. though he came last of all gifts)'. There is another possible way of explaining this verse. Each Sāman in a stotra has five parts called Prastāva, Udgītha, Pratihāra, Upadrava and Nidhana (finale); vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 1169 note 2589. Naciketas (who was a subsidiary donation following the donation of all hia father's property and designated 'anudeyī') is deemed here to have chanted a Sāman; when he began that, the ṛk verse on which the Sāman rests went forth. The bottom of a Sāman is a ṛk verse. Therefore it is again said that the base or bottom went forward and the 'Nirayaṇa' (i. e. the nidhana of the Sāman) came last. Mr. Karandikar explains verse 6 as 'the cremation rite of the body of a deceased person shows the two-fold path; by the front path he should go to the highest world or by the hind path he should return to this world' (p. 776). It passes the present author's understanding how this translation follows from the words of verse 6. Verse 7 of the hymn presents no difficulty; it means 'this is the house of Yama that is called the the palace of gods; here is played (or blown) the flute (or tube or trumpet) for him (Yama); he (Yama) is embellished with songs (of praise).'

2506. Vide छा. उप. I. 6. 4 'नक्षत्राण्येवर्क् चन्द्रमाः साम। तदेतदेतस्यामृच्यध्यूढं साम। तस्मादृच्यध्यूढं साम गीयते। नक्षत्राण्येव सा। चन्द्रमा अमः। तत्साम।'. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1181-1184 for Sāman, Stotra and Śastra, particularly notes 2606-9.

An interesting passage of the Taittirīya-saṁhitā[2507] may be cited here. "Whoever threatens a brāhmaṇa, he shall atone for it with a hundred years; he who strikes him (shall atone) with a thousand years; he who sheds the blood of a brāhmaṇa would not know the world of the Fathers for as many years as the number of the particles of dust that would be moistened into a ball by the stream of blood. Therefore a person should not threaten a brāhmaṇa or strike him or draw blood from his body, since (in doing so) so much (sin) is involved." This does not mean that only the world of Fathers had been conceived at the time of this passage (as Deussen supposes on p. 325 of his Ph. Up.). It will be shown below that even the Ṛgveda was well aware of both Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa. Most men would go to pitṛloka presided over by Yama according to the Ṛg. and only the blessed would go by the Devayāna to the world of gods. This passage is important as conveying that for a very mortal sin the offender would have to suffer for a thousand years or even several thousand years and, therefore, would have to be born for several lives, since one human life was held to extend to one hundred years only (Ṛg. X. 161. 4 = Atharva III. 11. 4, Ṛg. 1. 89. 9 = Vāj. S. 25. 22). Following the above Tai. S. passage, the Gautama Dh. S. provided that threatening a brāhmaṇa in anger would bar going to heaven for a hundred years (or lead to hell for &c), striking him would bar for a thousand years and on drawing blood there would be bar for as many years as the number of the particles of dust that would be made into a ball by the stream of blood. Manu (XI. 206–7) understands that the several acts against a brāhmaṇa mentioned therein would lead to the offender being consigned to hell for 100, for 1000 or for thousands of years. Jaimini (III. 4. 17) discusses this passage and holds that the prohibition is not restricted only to Darśapūrṇamāsa, but it applies to all brāhmaṇas in all conditions. It is possible to understand by the words 'śatena' and 'sahasreṇa' as a hundred or a thousand cows (or money). The Tantravārtika refers to this meaning but seems to prefer the idea of connecting the two words with years. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 151–152 where the first meaning was put forward and also A. B. Keith's tr. of the Tai. S. in the H. O. S. vol. I pp. 216–217 'him who reviles him (a brāhmaṇa) he shall fine with a hundred' &c.

---

2507. योऽपगुरातै शतेन यातयाद्यो निहनत् सहस्रेण यातयाद्यो लोहितं करवद्यावता प्रस्कद्य पांसून् संगृह्णात् तावतः संवत्सरान् पितृलोकं न प्रजानादिति। तस्माद् ब्राह्मणाय नापगुरेत, न निहन्याच्च लोहितं कुर्यादेतावता हैनसा भवति। तै. सं. II. 6. 10. 2; अभिक्रुद्धा वगोरणं ब्राह्मणस्य वर्षशतमस्वर्ग्यम्। निघाते सहस्रम्। लोहितदर्शने यावतस्तत्प्रस्कन्द्य पांसून्-संगृह्णीयात्। गौ. ध. सू. 21. 20-22; शंयौ च सर्वपरिदानात्। जै. III. 4. 17; शबर 'किं प्राप्तम्। प्रकरणाद् दर्शपूर्णमासयोरवगोरणादिप्रतिषेधः। ... एवं प्राप्ते ब्रूमः ... सर्वावस्थस्य "ब्राह्मणस्यायं प्रतिषेध उक्तः, न दर्शपूर्णगतेनैव नावगोरणादि कर्तव्यमिति।; तन्त्रवार्तिक (p. 950) 'शतेन यातयात् सहस्रेण यातयात्' इति शतगुणं सहस्रगुणमनुभवेदित्यर्थः। अथवा संख्येयान्तराद्युपादानादुपरि संवत्सरब्रह्मणादिष्वपि संवत्सरशतेन यातनां निस्तरेत्सहस्रेणेत्येवं सम्बध्यते।."

The doctrine of how a man's own works and conduct fashion his future life is taught as follows in the[2508] Br. Up. IV. 4. 5–7:

2508. स वा अयमात्मा ब्रह्म विज्ञानमयो मनोमय ... इति। यथाकारी यथाचारी तथा भवति साधुकारी साधुर्भवति पापकारी पापो भवति पुण्यः पुण्येन कर्मणा भवति पापः पापेन।

(Continued on next page)

"so truly according as he works and according as he behaves so will he be, a man of good deeds will become (be born) good, a a man of evil deeds will become (be born) evil; he becomes holy by holy deeds, evil by evil deeds. Here they say 'a person only consists of desires (or is fashioned out of) desires and as his desire is so will be his (determination or) will and as is his will, so is his deed; and whatever deeds he does that he will become (reap)."[2509] On this there is av erse 'To whatever a man's mind and subtle body are attached to that he goes together with (the fruits of) his deeds and after having obtained the end

---

(Continued from last page)

अथो खल्वाहुः। काममय एवायं पुरुष इति। स यथाकामो भवति तत्क्रतुर्भवति यत्क्रतुर्भवति तत्कर्म कुरुते यत्कर्म कुरुते तदभिसम्पद्यते। तदेष श्लोको भवति। तदेव सक्तः सह कर्मणैति लिङ्गं मनो यत्र निषक्तमस्य। प्राप्यान्तं कर्मणस्तस्य यत्किंचेह करोत्ययम्। तस्माल्लोकात्पुनरैत्यस्मै लोकाय कर्मणे। इति तु कामयमानः। अथाकामयमानो "योऽकामो निष्काम आप्तकाम आत्मकामो न तस्य प्राणा उत्क्रामन्ति ब्रह्मैव सन्ब्रह्माप्येति। तदेष श्लोको भवति। यदा सर्वे प्रमुच्यन्ते कामा येऽस्य हृदि स्थिताः। अथ मर्त्योऽमृतो भवत्यत्र ब्रह्म समश्नुते॥" बृह. उप. IV. 4. 5–7; the verse यदा सर्वे occurs in कठोपनि०; the भाष्य of शङ्कराचार्य on this begins: स वा अयं य एवं संसरत्यात्मा ब्रह्मैव पर एव। He distinguishes यथाकारी यथाचारी as 'करणं नाम नियता क्रिया विधिप्रतिषेधादिगम्या चरणं नामानियतामिति विशेषः।'. On क्रतु he says क्रतुर्नामाध्यवसायो निश्चयो यदनन्तरा क्रिया प्रवर्तते।'. आत्मकाम is explained as यस्य आत्मैव नान्यः कामयितव्यो वस्त्वन्तरीभूतः पदार्थो भवति. With कामयमानः and अकामयमानः, compare मुण्डकोप० III. 2.3 (कामान्यः कामयते). The affix मय as in काममय is employed in two senses viz. प्राचुर्य and विकार acc. to पाणिनि 'तत्प्रकृतवचने मयट्' (V. 4. 21 and IV. 3. 134 and 143). The word क्रतु by itself and in compounds like शतक्रतु and सुक्रतु occurs hundreds of times in the Ṛgveda. It is an Indo-European word, as in Greek we have 'Kratos' meaning power. Several meanings have been assigned to क्रतु. Indra called 'Śatakratu' is invoked to bestow ojas, courage, an heroic son and stated to be the father and mother of the devotee (in Ṛg. VIII. 98. 10–12). With the Bṛ. Up. passage, we may compare छा. उप. III. 14. 1 'सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म तज्जलानिति शान्त उपासीत। अथ खलु क्रतुमयः पुरुषो यथा क्रतुरस्मिँल्लोके पुरुषो भवति तथेतः प्रेत्य भवति। स क्रतुं कुर्वीत।'

2509. Compare Epistle to Galatians by Apostle Paul 6. 7 'whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap'. Even in the Old Testament we find in the Book of Job, chap. 4. 8 'they that plough iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same'. From the question of the disciples of Jesus as regards a man blind from birth 'Master! who did sin, this man or his parents that he was born blind' (St. John IX. 2), it appears that the idea of Karma was prevalent among the Jewish people in the time of Jesus. From Matthew XI. 14 and XVII. 12-13 it appears that John the Baptist was declared to be an incarnation of :prophet Elias. Shaw Desmond in 'Re-incarnation for every man' points out (on p. 63) that the doctrine of re-incarnation was taught in the Christian Church in the early centuries and that the 2nd Council of Constantinople in 551 A. D. made the doctrine of re-incarnation an anathema.

(the last results) of whatever deeds he does in this world, he returns again from that world (where he temporarily went by way of reward) to this world of action; so much with regard to him who is consumed by desires; now concerning the man who has no desires (akāmayamāna); he who is without desire, free from desire, in whose case desires are laid to rest, who is himself his own desire, his vital spirits do not withdraw elsewhere but he, being brahma itself (here), is absorbed into brahma (or attains to brahma). On this point there is a verse: 'When all hankerings that found an abode in a man's heart vanish, then he who was liable to death becomes immortal, here (in this body itself) he attains to brahma." In the above passage the sequence is: desire, will and act.

About the grandeur of this passage it is enough to quote what Deussen (in 'Philosophy of the Upanishads' p. 348) says 'there follow words than which deeper, truer, more noble were never uttered by human lips.' Vide also remarks of Gerald Heard in 'Is god evident' (Faber and Faber, London) p. 34 'Here (in Vedānta and Mahāyāna) is spirituality showing its full fruits; freedom from physical craving, from economic possessiveness, from social desire for recognition and that triple freedom removing all fear' and he hopes that the Vedānta picture, far from being contradicted, is being increasingly confirmed by modern science.

This sublime passage is preceded and followed by illustrations two of which may be cited for explaining the conception of the passage of the soul from one body to another: 'Just as the caterpillar, having reached the tip of one blade of grass, makes an approach to another blade, draws itself towards it and establishes itself thereon, so this (individual) self, casting down this body in death, dispelling avidyā (ignorance) and making approach to another body draws itself to another body and establishes (or identifies itself) therein.' This is Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 3. Another illustration (in Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 7) is 'just as the skin (slough) of a snake lies dead and cast-off in an ant-hill, in the same way the body lies (dead and cast-off) and then the self is bodiless, immortal spirit, is brahma only and is light only.'

This whole passage (Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 5–7) is the leading, the oldest and the clearest passage on the doctrine of transmigration in the Upaniṣads. There are several others of similar import. At the end of the story about Yājñavalkya and Ārtabhāga referred to above (where Yājñavalkya discussed with Āratbhāga alone in private the question as to what happens to a man when the body dies) the Upaniṣad states 'what they said was Karma alone, what they praised was Karma alone viz.[2510] that a man becomes good by good works and evil by evil works.' These two are the fundamental passages which express the reason and motive that lie at the basis of the doctrine of transmigration.

The gist of these two passages is that works and conduct done in this life fashion a man's future life and that the present birth of a man depends on his actions and conduct in a past life or lives. But works and conduct are the result of volition or will and this last is due to desires. A man may have several desires, he may curb some of them, but may make a resolve to consummate some of his desires. Therefore, desires (kāma) are the root of volition, of works and conduct and ultimately of the cycle of birth and deaths (that is called 'saṁsāra'). Hence Śaṅkarācārya, following the idea of the verse 'yadā sarve pramucyante kāmā' (in Bṛ. Up. IV. 5. 7) says 'Kāmo mūlam saṁsārasya' (Kāma is the root of saṁsāra).

Then there is another important passage in the Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. There the story is told of Śvetaketu, son of Āruṇi, who being proud of his learning, came to the assembly hall of the Pañcālas and saw there Pravāhaṇa Jaivali (a kṣatriya or prince) being waited upon by servants. When the prince saw him he asked Śvetaketu 'have you been taught by your father'? When Śvetaketu replied 'yes', the prince put to him five questions viz. (1) do you know how men when they depart from this world go in separate (different) directions; (2) Do you know how they come back to this world; (3) Do you know how the yonder world does not become full with many men going there again and again; (4) Do you know at the offering of which oblation waters become endowed with human voice and rise and speak; (5) Do you know the access to the path called 'Devayāna'[2511] 2510. तौ होत्क्रम्य मन्त्रयांचक्राते। तौ ह यदूचतुः कर्म हैव तदूचथुः। अथ यत्प्रशशंसतुः कर्म हैव तत्प्रशशंसतुः। पुण्यो वै पुण्येन कर्मणा भवति पापः पापेनेति। बृह. उप. III. 3.13.

2511. The question about देवयान and पितृयाण is put in the Bṛ. up. VI. 2.2 in the following form; वेत्थो देवयानस्य वा पथः प्रतिपदं पितृयाणस्य वा। यत्कृत्वा देवयानं वा पन्थानं प्रतिपद्यन्ते पितृयाणं वा। अपि हि न ऋषेर्वचः श्रुतम्—द्वे सृती अशृणवं पितृणामहं देवानामुत मर्त्यानाम्। ताभ्यामिदं विश्वमेजत्समेति यदन्तरा पितरं मातरं च। इति। The verse द्वे सृती etc. is ऋ. X. 88. 15 (which reads द्वे स्रुती अशृणवं etc.) and तै. आ. I. 4. 2-3 (which reads स्रुती...अन्तरापूर्वमपरं च केतुम्). द्यौः (heaven) and पृथिवी are respectively called father and mother in Ṛg. I. 164. 33 and I. 191. 6., and to the path called 'Pitṛyāṇa' (i.e. the deeds by which men gain access to the paths called Devayāna ans Pitṛyāṇa), for we have heard the saying of a sage 'I heard two paths for men, one leading to the Fathers and the other leading to the Devas; on those two paths all the world that is active moves on, whatever exists between father (sky) and mother (earth).' To all these five questions Śvetaketu replied that he did not know any one of them. The prince offered hospitality but Śvetaketu ran to his father and demanded how the latter could say that he had been thoroughly-taught by him and that he could not answer even one of the five questions that the fellow of a Rājanya asked. Then the father replied that he had taught all that he knew but he himself did not know the answers to those questions. He went to the prince (kṣatriya) who honoured him with offerings. Āruṇi did not want wealth but the replies to those questions. The prince said 'come as pupil.' Āruṇi (Gautama) stated he came as a pupil. The prince stated that the vidyā[2512] that he would teach was never before with any brāhmaṇa. Then he propounds to Śvetaketu the anwers to the five questions (to be brief) viz. that the five fires are (figuratively) heaven, god of rain, the earth, man and woman, and the five āhutis (oblations) are śraddhā (faith), Soma (Moon), rain, food and seed. This answers the 4th question. The first and fifth questions are answered by the statement 'Some go by the path of Devas, others by that of pitṛs and others (like flies and worms) know no path (they merely live and die)'; vide Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 15–16. The 2nd and 3rd questions are answered by the same viz. those that go by the path of pitṛs return to the earth and others that go to brahman do not return and therefore the world does not become full.

In the Ch. Up. V. 3. 2 the questions are put in a slightly different form: (1) do you know to what place men go from here, (2) how they return, (3) do you know where the path of devas and the path of the fathers diverge, (4) why the world never becomes full, (5) why in the 5th oblation water is called 'man.' The answers to these in Bṛ. Up. and Chān. Up. are not identical, though very similar. A fire has five constituents, fuel, smoke, flame, live coals, sparks. In both Chān. Up. V.10.4–9 and Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 9–13 the fires are the same, but the constituents of each of these five differ slightly; compare, for example, Br. Up. VI. 2. 11 with Chān. Up. V. 3. 6. The first question in the Ch. Up. is answered by the mention of the two paths. The 2nd is answered in Chān. Up. V. 10. 3-5.[2513] The paths diverge (3rd question) after reaching the moon (Chān. Up. V. 10. 2 and 4-5), the 4th is answered in Chān. V. 10. 8. The fifth is answered by means of the statement on pañcāgnividyā.

---

2512. This Vidyā is called Pañcāgnividyā. 'Rājanya' in this Upaniṣad passage should mean only Kṣatriya as in the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 12) and not king.

Before proceeding further some remarks are called for about what might possibly happen when a man's body dies. There are mainly three possibilities, viz. (1) annihilation, (2) endless retribution in heaven or hell and (3) punarjanma (transmigration. Those who do not believe in an individual immortal self, including some most eminent[2514] men such as G. B. Shaw, hold the first view and even in ancient India (as the Kaṭhopaniṣad I. 20 testifies) there were people who had doubts about survival after death. Those who hold that there is no survival after death are not troubled by other questions. Therefore, the most vital question is the one about survival after death. The very first verse of Śv. Up. puts forward four problems; is brahma the cause, whence do we come, what sustains us and whither we are going? Many of those who believe in God, heaven and hell do not admit pre-existence of the soul but only post-existence. They believe that if a man leads a virtuous career in this life (and virtue according to them consists in obedience to the will of God as disclosed to their intellect in Revelation such as the Bible or the Koran) he would have an eternal life of bliss in heaven and that if one led a life of sin and evil, he would after death remain for ever in hell. Very few accept the first possibility (annihilation) because it is in conflict with man's cherished desires and with deep-rooted emotional certitude that efforts made in a long life, the mental and spiritual equipment acquired cannot have been meant to be dissolved altogether without leaving any trace behind. The 2nd possibility also leads to the prospect of eternal reward or eternal damnation for acts done during a life of a few years' span and becomes unacceptable to many by the unparalleled disproportion between deeds (as causes) and their endless rewards or retribution (as effects). Therefore, to many people the third possibility of transmigration appeals, since it allows continued existence of the soul after physical death in some other forms and environments.

---

2513. छा. उप. V. 10. 4 'आकाशाच्चन्द्रमसमेव सोमो राजा तद्देवानामन्नं तं देवा भक्षयन्ति' and बृह. उप. VI. 2. 16 ते चन्द्रं प्राप्यान्नं भवन्ति तांस्तत्र देवाः ... भक्षयन्ति. are dealt with in वे. सू. III. 1. 7 (भाक्तं वानात्मवित्त्वात्तथाहि दर्शयति), which states that the words (gods eat them) are not to be taken literally but metaphorically and what is meant is that Gods like the company of those people (who perform sacrifices), since the Chān. Up. itself says elsewhere (in III. 8. 1) that the Gods do neither eat nor drink but they feel satisfied by seeing nectar.

2514. In 'In search of faith', a 'symposium' edited by E. W. Martin (London, 1943) G. B. Shaw states (pp. 9-10) that he may be described as a creative evolutionist, that he does not believe in personal immortality and abhors it, that he does not believe in the Resurrection of Jesus. It is difficult for a non-Christian to state definitely the doctrine as to what happens after death, there being many varying interpretations accepted by the Christian Church at various times and in different countries. But the general traditional scheme is a particular judgment immediately after death, the general judgment at the general Resurrection- the ultimate issue of judgment being consignment to Hell or admission to Heaven eternally.

The above Upaniṣad passages are enough to show how the doctrine of transmigration was being moulded in the Upaniṣad period. The Ṛgveda knows the two paths of Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa and also that in heaven there were joys and delights but the Ṛgveda does not say how long the joys of Heaven were to last and makes no clear and definite statement on the doctrine of transmigration. In the Brāhmaṇa period the two paths were often referred to and the conception had dawned upon the minds of thinkers that man might have to pass through death several times (punarmṛtyu). But even then there is hardly any definite theory of punarjanma based on good or bad deeds. The clearest statements (and probably earliest) of the origin of the doctrine of transmigration are the two passages (Bṛ. Up. III. 3. 13 and IV 4. 5-7) in which Yājñavalkya is concerned and is the instructor and emphasizes that it is man's own works and conduct that lead a man to new births. In both those passages the Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa paths are not mentioned at all. But the Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 16 and Chān. Up. V. 10 relate the two paths to transmigration and speak of a third place for those born as worms and flies. This is an addition to the doctrine of the two paths, but they make a further departure. The Chān. Up. V. 10. 5 states that those that perform sacrifices, works of public utility and charity go to the moon and when the results of their actions are exhausted after staying in the moon they have to return to this world by the path they went (i. e. from the Moon to ether, then to Vāyu, smoke, mist, cloud and rain and they may be born from a mother's womb.[2515] This shows that a double retribution awaits those who perform sacrifices &c. viz. stay in the moon for a time and their rebirth on this earth. Other Upaniṣads follow the Chān. Up. in the theory of double retribution e.g. the Praśna has the following passage in prose:[2516] "The year indeed is Prajāpati, there are two parts thereof, the southern and the northern. Now those who believe in sacrifice and gifts for public utility as work that must be done, secure the moon only as their (future) world and it is they who return to this world. Therefore, the ṛṣis who desire offspring resort to the southern (path). That path of the Fathers is indeed treasure (or wealth). But those who, after having sought the Ātman by austerities, (sexual) abstinence, faith and knowledge go by the northern path to the Sun. This is the home of the vital spirits, it is immortal, free from fear, it is the highest (or final) end. Thence they do not return, that is a check to other things. On this there is a verse (Rg. I. 164. 12) 'some call him the father with five feet (the five seasons) and with twelve forms (twelve months), the giver of rain in the highest of heaven; others again say that the sage is placed in the lower half, in the chariot with seven wheels (horses or rays of sun) and six spokes'". This verse of the Rgveda is probably quoted here in support of the conception of the two paths symbolically represented as two parts of the year, as the Rg. verse (first half) appears to refer to the Sun, placed in highest half of heaven and as the second half seems to refer to a lower (upari) half of heaven with six spokes (i. e. the six months of Dakṣiṇāyana). Deussen (Ph. Up. p. 338) is positive that Rg. I. 164. 12 has nothing to do with

2515. अभ्रं भूत्वा मेघो भवति मेघो भूत्वा प्रवर्षति। त इह व्रीहियवा ओषधिवनस्पतयस्तिलमाषा इति जायन्तेऽतो वै खलु दुर्निष्प्रपतरम्। यो यो ह्यन्नमत्ति यो रेतः सिञ्चति तद्भूय एव भवति। छा. उप. V. 10. 6; and 8 is अथैतयोः पथोर्न कतरेण च न तानीमानि क्षुद्राण्यसकृदावर्तीनि भूतानि भवन्ति जायस्व म्रियस्वेति। एतत्तृतीयं स्थानम्। तेनासौ लोको न सम्पूर्यते।. Compare मुण्डक II. 1. 5. शङ्कराचार्य has a very long and interesting note on this passage. He explains दुर्निष्क्रमणं दुर्गतिःसरणम्।' and again says the word is निष्प्रपततरम् (one त being lost) 'तकार एको लुप्तो द्रष्टव्यः। व्रीहियवादिभावो दुर्निष्प्रपतः। तस्मादपि दुर्निष्प्रपतात्रेतःसिग्देहसम्बन्धो दुर्निष्प्रपततर इत्यर्थः। यस्माद्ऊर्ध्वरेतोभिर्बालैः पुंस्त्वरहितैः स्थविरैर्वा भक्षिता अन्तराले शीर्यन्ते अनेकत्वादन्नादानाम्। कदाचित्काकतालीयवृत्त्या रेतसिग्भिर्भक्ष्यन्ते।'.

2516. संवत्सरो वै प्रजापतिस्तस्यायने हे दक्षिणं चोत्तरं च। तद्ये ह वै तदिष्टापूर्ते कृतमित्युपासते ते चान्द्रमसमेव लोकमभिजयन्ते। त एव पुनरावर्तन्ते तस्मादेत ऋषयः प्रजाकामाः दक्षिणं प्रतिपद्यन्ते। एष ह वै रयिर्यः पितृयाणः॥ अथोत्तरेण तपसा ब्रह्मचर्येण श्रद्धया विद्ययात्मानमन्विष्यादित्यमभिजयन्ते। एतद्वै प्राणानामायतनमेतदमृतमभयमेतत्परायणमेतस्मान्न पुनरावर्तन्ते इत्येष निरोधस्तदेष श्लोकः। पञ्चपादं पितरं ... षडर आहुरर्पितमिति। प्रश्नोप. I. 9–11. पञ्चपादं० is ऋ. I. 164. 12 (उपरे as one word, while प्रश्नोप० reads उ परे separately.)

with the subject (of the two paths). But what is there to prevent an ancient sage of the Upaniṣadic times from holding that the verse in its two halves refers (figuratively or symbolically) to two paths, particularly when even in the Ṛgveda times paths called Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa were well-known as shown below? It should be noted that in the preceding verse (I. 164. 11) the wheel of ṛta (the year or the sun) is Dvādaśāra (with twelve spokes, viz. months) and therefore when ṣaḍare (with six spokes) is mentioned in I. 164. 12 a period of six months could well have been intended or could very well be got by interpretation.

The Kauṣītaki Up. (I. 2–3), however, speaks only of Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa and has no third place for worms and birds &c. and states (vide n 2520 below) that worms &c. also come to the same world to which men return. Further, the stations of the Devayāna path (Agni, bright half of the month etc.) had been given a counterpart in the Pitṛyāṇa path in the Bṛ. Up. and Chān. Up. which made the moon the point of divergence for the two paths. The Kauṣītaki Up. omits all the preliminary stations up to the moon and brings all transmigrating beings to the moon (in I. 2). There are some other variations also that need not be dwelt upon here.

Deussen (in Ph. Up. p. 318) argues that in the Ṛg. verse (X.88. 15) the two ways are really to be understood as day and night and he translates that verse as 'I have heard from my forefathers that there are two ways alike for gods and men', thus giving to the world 'pitṛṇām' the sense of the ablative and holding that 'my' is to be understood before pitṛṇām, though not to be understood before the other two words in the genitive in the same verse. The meaning which the Upaniṣad reads in the Ṛg. verse is proper and also the original meaning of the verse. The path called Pitṛyāṇa [2517] is mentioned in Ṛg. X. 2.7 (Agni knows well the path called pitṛyāṇa) and Ṛg. X. 18. 1 runs 'O Death! Follow another path which is your own and different from Devayāna.' These two verses clearly show that the Ṛgvedic sages had arrived at the conception of paths called Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa. Therefore, the express mention of two paths in Ṛg. X. 88. 15 in connnection with Pitṛs and Devas should be deemed to refer to Pitṛyāṇa and Devayāna paths and it is far-fetched to take them as day and night, which are hardly ever referred to in the Rgveda as paths. This verse is explained in the Śat. Br. XII. 8. 1. 21[2518] (quoted below) which says that the two ways are those of the gods and pitṛs and the commentary of Dvivedagaṅga explains the first half in the same way. Vide also Śat. Br. I. 9. 3. 1–2. Devayāna is sometimes used in the plural in the Rgveda (as in III. 58. 5, VII. 38. 8, VII. 76. 2, X. 51. 5, X. 98. 11). In Rg. X. 15. 8 Yama is said to enjoy offerings along with the ancient forefathers of the sage and in X. 154. 4 Yama is requested to be united with ancient pitṛs, righteous and full of austerities. The Śat. Br. (XIII. 8. 1. 5) states that the door to the world of the Fathers is in the southwest, while Northeast is the direction of Gods and men (I. 2. 5. 17 and XII. 4. 2. 15). The Atharvaveda (XV. 12. 5.) mentions both Pitṛyāṇa and Devayāna paths. Soma, rain, food, retas (semen) may be described as watery, but the question is how the first āhuti 'śraddhā' (faith) can be described as an āhuti offered in Agni (viz. the yonder world) by the Gods from which king Soma arises (in Chān. Up. V. 4. 2 and Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 9). This is answered by V. S.[2519] III. 1. 5 and (and at some length) in the Śāṅkarabhāṣya thereon.

2517. पन्थामनु प्रविद्वान् पितृयाणं यमदग्ने समिधानो वि भाहि। ऋ. X. 2. 7; परं मृत्यो अनु परेहि पन्थां यस्ते स्व इतरो देवयानात्। ऋ. X. 18. 1.

The Kauṣītaki Up. (I)[2520] sets out rather obscurely the doctrine of the two paths as part of the Pañcāgnividyā taught

---

2518. द्वे सृती ... इमिति द्वे वाव सृती इत्याहुर्देवानां चैव पितॄणां चेति। शतपथ. XII. 8. 1. 21; मर्त्यानां मनुष्याणां द्वे सृती द्वौ मार्गौ श्रुतवानस्मि तयोर्मध्ये एका पितृलोकप्रापिका द्वितीया तु देवलोकप्रापिका। Com. of द्विवेदगङ्ग (Weber's ed. p. 1165); यो यजते सोऽरयैव यज्ञो देवलोकमेवाभिमैति तदनूची दक्षिणा यां ददाति सैति। दक्षिणामन्वारभ्य यजमानः। स एष देवयानो वा पितृयाणो वा पन्थाः। शतपथ I. 9. 3. 1–2.

2519. प्रथमेऽश्रवणादिति चेन्न ता एव ह्युपपत्तेः। वे. सू. III. 1. 5; भाष्य 'यदि नाम पर्जन्यादिष्वुत्तरेषु चतुर्ष्वग्निष्वपां हौम्यश्रुत्यता परिकल्प्येत परिकल्प्यतां नाम। तेषु होतव्यतयोपात्तानां सोमादीनामब्बहुलत्वोपपत्तेः। प्रथमे त्वग्नौ श्रुतां श्रद्धां परित्यज्याश्रुता आपः परिकल्प्यन्त इति साहसमेतत्। ... नैष दोषः। ... श्रद्धाकार्ये सोमबृहत्त्वादि स्थूलीभवदब्बहुलं लक्ष्यते। सा च श्रद्धाया अप्ये युक्तिः। कारणानुरूपं हि कार्यं भवति। श्रद्धाशब्दश्चाप्युपपद्यते वैदिकप्रयोगदर्शनात्–श्रद्धा वा आपः–इति। तदुक्तं श्रद्धासारूप्यं मन्यमान आपो देहबीजभूता ह्युच्यतः श्रद्धाशब्दाः स्युः। It may be noted that V. S. III. 1. 1–7 are explanatory of Chān. Up. V. 3. 9 and Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 9–13 and the whole of V. S. III. 1 explains on the basis of Pañcāgnividyā how the self passes through various stages of saṃsāra.

2520. स होवाच ये वै केचास्माल्लोकात्प्रयन्ति चन्द्रमसमेव ते सर्वे गच्छन्ति। तेषां प्राणैः पूर्वपक्ष आप्यायते। तानपरपक्षेण प्रजनयति। एतद्वै स्वर्गस्य लोकस्य द्वारं यच्चन्द्रमाः। तं यः प्रत्याह तमतिसृजते। अथ य एनं न प्रत्याह तमिह वृष्टिर्भूत्वा वर्षति। स इह कीटो वा पतङ्गो वा शकुनिर्वा शार्दूलो वा सिंहो वा मत्स्यो वा परश्वा वा पुरुषो वान्यो वैतेषु स्थानेषु प्रत्याजायते यथाकर्म यथाविद्यम्। कौषी. उप. I. 2: स एतं देवयानं पन्थानमापद्याग्निलोकमागच्छति। स वायुलोकम्। ... ब्रह्मलोकम्। ... ibid I. 3; स एष विद्युतो विद्युत्वतो ब्रह्म विद्वान् ब्रह्मैवाभिमैति। ibid I. 4.

by Citra Gārgyāyaṇi (v. l. Gāṅgyāyni) to Śvetaketu, son of Āruṇi. It is passed over here for reasons of space and as not of material importance except one passage which runs 'He (Citra) said that all those that depart from this world go to the moon; in the bright half the moon is increased by their spirits, in the dark half the moon sends them on to be born again. The moon is verily the door of the heavenly world. Now if a man disowns the moon (i. e. is dissatisfied with life there) the moon sets him free. But if a man is not dissatisfied then the moon sends him down as rain here (on the earth). And according to his deeds and according to his knowledge he is born again here as a worm, a locust, a bird, a tiger or a lion or a fish, or a snake, as a man or as something else in different places.' Then I. 3 begins by referring to Devayāna and I. 4 ends by saying, 'being freed from good deeds and from evil deeds, he, the knower of brahman, (neuter) moves towards brahman alone.'

In the Kaṭhopaniṣad [2521] Yama tells Naciketas the secret about Brahmavidyā and what the self becomes on the death (of the body) viz. some men go to a mother's womb for an embodied existence while others are transferred into stumps (of. trees) according to their deeds and knowlege.

The Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 15-16 and Chān. Up. V. 3. 10 ff deal with the question of those who go by Devayāna and by the Pitṛyāṇa paths. First [2522] the Bṛ. Up. 'Those (even householders) who know this (Pāñcāgnividyā) and also those (hermits and ascetics) who, in the forest being full of faith, worship Truth (Brahman, Hiraṇyagarbha) go to arcis (light), from arcis to day (ahan) from day to the increasing fortnight (i. e. śukla-pakṣa), from the increasing half to the six months during which the Sun moves in the north, from those six months to the world of the Devas (Devaloka), from the Devaloka to the Sun, from the sun to lightning. When they have reached the place of lightning a person born of the mind (of Brahmā) comes to them and leads them to the worlds of Brahmā. In these worlds they being exalted, dwell for ages and there is no return (to saṃsāra) for them. But they who conquer (attain) worlds by sacrifice, charity and austerities go to smoke, from smoke to night, from night to decreasing half (of the month), from decreasing half month to the six month during which the Sun moves in the south, from these months to the world of the fathers, from the world of the fathers to the Moon, having reached the Moon, they become food and then the Devas feed on them there as sacrificers feed on king Soma as it increases and decreases (in a sacrifice). But when this (the result of their works done on earth) is exhausted they return to either (ākāśa), from that to Vāyu, from Vāyu to rain, from rain to the earth; on reaching the earth they become food. They are then again offered into the fire called man, from that (i. e. man) they are born in the fire called woman. These, making efforts to secure worlds (by sacrifices &c.), again and again repeat coming to this world. Those, however, who do not know both these paths, they become (are born as) worms, locusts (or birds) and flies.'

---

2521. हन्त त इदं प्रवक्ष्यामि गुह्यं ब्रह्म सनातनम्। यथा च मरणं प्राप्य आत्मा भवति गौतम॥ योनिमन्ये प्रपद्यन्ते शरीरत्वाय देहिनः। स्थाणुमन्येऽनुसंयन्ति यथाकर्म यथाश्रुतम्॥ कठोप. V. 6-7.

2522. ते य एवमेतद्विदुर्ये चामी अरण्ये श्रद्धां सत्यमित्युपासते तेऽर्चिरभिसम्भवन्ति। अर्चिषोऽहः। अह्न आपूर्यमाणपक्षम्। आपूर्यमाणपक्षाद्यान् षण्मासानुदङ्‌ङादित्य एति। मासेभ्यो देवलोकम्। देवलोकादादित्यम्। आदित्याद्वैद्युतम्। तान् वैद्युतान् पुरुषो मानस एत्य ब्रह्मलोकान् गमयति। ते तेषु ब्रह्मलोकेषु पराः परावतो वसन्ति तेषां न पुनरावृत्तिः। बृह. उप. VI. 2. 15. Compare याज्ञ. स्मृति III. 193-94, which closely follow the above in verse.

The Chān. Up. V. 10. 1–2 are almost in the same words as Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 15 with a few slight changes viz. Chān. Up. reads 'Śraddhā tapa ityupāsate' and 'from months in the north to the year, from year to the Sun, from the Sun to the Moon, from the Moon to lightning; there is a person who is not human (amānavaḥ' for 'mānasaḥ' of Bṛ. Up.) who leads him to brahman &c.; then Chān. Up. V. 10. 3–4 are again the same as Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 16 except that Chān. Up. reads 'those who living in a village practise (a life of) sacrifices, works of public utility (called pūrta) and almsgiving, go to smoke', but adds 'these do not reach the year,' and proceeds 'from the months to the world of fathers, from that world to ether, from ether to the moon, this is king Soma that is the food of Gods (i. e. the gods like or love them). Having dwelt there (in the moon) till their works are exhausted, they return by the same way by which they came i. e. to ether, from ether to Vāyu, smoke, mist, cloud. (The persons that had performed sacrifices &c) having become clouds come down as rain, are then born as rice and barley, herbs and trees, sesame and māṣa beans. Escape from that state (to that of human beings) is beset with extreme difficulties. Whoever the beings (cattle or other animals or man) may be that eat the food (into which one has been transformed) and beget offspring he (the transmigrating entity) becomes most like them.'

One of the most important passages in the Upaniṣads on conduct fashioning the life that would follow is the Chān. Up. V. 10. 7–8 which may be rendered as follows:[2523] Those whose conduct has been good will quickly attain some good birth, the birth of a brāhmaṇa, of a kṣatriya or of a vāiśya. But those whose conduct has been evil will quikly attain an evil birth, the birth of a dog or a hog or a cāṇḍāla. Those that do not go by either of the two paths become those small creatures (worms, flies &c) that are continually returning and whose destiny may be said to be 'to live and die'. Theirs is a third place (apart from the two paths). Therefore the yonder world does not become full. Hence one should be disgusted (with this Saṁsāra).

It may be stated here that the Bhagavadgītā (VIII. 23–27) also refers to the two paths following one of which a yogin does not return to this world and following the other of which he returns to this world. These are called śukla (bright) and kṛṣṇa (dark) gati (in VIII. 26) and śṛti (in VIII. 27). The former is fire, light,[2524] day, the bright half of the month, the six months of the northern path of the sun; those men who have realized brahman when going from this world go to brahman (the absolute)'. The latter path is 'smoke, night, the dark half (of the month), the six months of the southern path of the Sun; the yogin reaching the moon-light by that path returns to this world. The Śāntiparva[2525] of the Mahābhārata refers to the northern and southern paths, the latter of which is attained by gifts, study of Veda and sacrifices (as in Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 16 and Chān. Up. V.10. 8). The Yājñavalkya-smṛti[2526] also refers to those 2523. तद्य इह रमणीयचरणा अभ्याशो ह यत्ते रमणीयां योनिमापद्येरन् ब्राह्मणयोनिं वा क्षत्रियोनिं वा वैश्ययोनिं वाथ य इह कपूयचरणा अभ्याशो ह यत्ते कपूयां योनिमापद्येरन् श्वयोनिं वा सूकरयोनिं वा चण्डालयोनिं वा। अथैतयोः पथोर्न कतरेणचन तानीमानि क्षुद्राण्यसकृदावर्तीनि भूतानि भवन्ति जायस्व म्रियस्वेत्येतत्तृतीयं स्थानं तेनासौ लोको न सम्पूर्यते तस्माज्जुगुप्सेत। छा. उप. V. 10 7–8. अभ्याशो ह is explained as क्षिप्रमेव by शङ्कराचार्य.

---

2524. It is better to read 'agni-jyotir' (in Gītā VIII. 24) as one word instead of 'agnir jyotir' (as in most editions), because both the Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 15 and Chān Up. V. 10 1 start the Devayāna path with arcis and omit Agni.

2525. अवाप्येतानि कर्माणि वेदोक्तानि धनंजय। दानमध्ययनं यज्ञो नियमश्चैव दुर्ग्रहः। दक्षिणेन च पन्थानमर्यम्णो ये द्विवंगताः। एतान् क्रियावतां लोकाञ्जुक्लशान् पूर्वमप्यहम्॥ उत्तरेण तु पन्थानं नियमाद्यं प्रपश्यसि। शान्तिपर्व 26. 8–10 (Ch. ed. = Cr. ed. App. I, no. 4, Lines 15–19).

2526. एतद्यो न विजानाति मार्गद्वितयमात्मवान्। दन्दशूकः पतङ्गो वा भवेत्कीटोऽथवा कृमिः॥ याज्ञ. III. 197; compare बृह. उप. VI. 2. 16 'अथ य एतौ पन्थानौ न विदुस्ते कीटाः पतङ्ग यदिदं दन्दशूकम्।' and छा. V. 10. 8 अथैतयोः ... तृतीयं स्थानम् quoted in the note. 2523.

paths. In III. 195–196 it mentions the Pitṛyāṇa path, which is very like the one described in Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 16 (except that Yāj. omits ākāśa) and Chān. Up. V. 10. 3–7 (which mentions more stages than in Bṛ. Up.). Yāj. III. 197 also states that those who do not know any one of these two paths (i. e. do not perform the acts peculiar to those who go by these paths) become snakes, locusts, creeping insects or worms.

The Vedāntasūtra frequently refers to the doctrine of transmigration, but owing to the limits imposed by available space only a few important sūtras and their explanations will be set out here. The three sūtras of V. S. II. 1. 34–36[2527] are of great importance for the theory of transmigration. An objector says 'to hold that God is the cause of the world does not stand to reason, for, if it be so, God would be liable to the charges of unequal treatment (or dispensation) and cruelty. He creates some that enjoy extreme happiness (like gods and others), some lead an extremely miserable life such as beasts (of burden &c.) and some like men, who enjoy an intermediate position, secure a modicum of enjoyment. So God may be charged with acting through hatred and love (like ordinary men). God also produces misery and finally destroys all persons. This aspect (of great cruelty) appears abhorrent even to evil men. To this the reply is: if god had created inequality in the world at his sweet will and without regard to any other matter, he might have been liable to the two charges of unequal treatment and cruelty. But God has regard to the righteousness (merit) or otherwise of beings when he produces inequalities among creatures. The position of God should be looked upon like that of rain, which is the common cause (or factor) in the production of crops of rice and barley, but the difference (in quality) between rice and barley is due to the varying potentialities of the seeds. God is the common cause in the creation of beasts, men and gods but the inequalities in these are due to the special potentialities of each. Śaṅkarācārya relies expressly on two Upaniṣad passages viz. Kaus. Up. III. 8 and Bṛ. Up. III. 2. 13 'puṇyo vai puṇyena karmaṇā bhavati pāpaḥ pāpena). The Kauṣ. Up. passage means 'He[2528] (the Absolute Ātman) is not exalted by good works nor degraded by evil works, but it is He indeed who inspires (a person) to do good works, whom he wishes to lead high over those worlds and it is he who inspires one to do evil deeds whom he wishes to lead down from these worlds'. It will be noticed that the Kauṣītaki bases the attainment of a higher life (or birth) or a lower life on the quality of men's deeds (just as in Bṛ. Up. III. 2. 13, IV. 4. 5, Chān. Up. V. 10. 7, Praśna 3. 7). The Gītā states 'I treat them the same way (with appropriate fruits) in which they come to (or approach) me.'

2527. वैषम्यनैर्घृण्ये न सापेक्षत्वात् तथाहि दर्शयति। न कर्माविभागादिति चेन्नानादित्वात्। उपपद्यते चाप्युपलभ्यते च। वे. सू. II. 1. 34–36

2528. स एष माण एव प्रज्ञात्माऽऽनन्दोऽजरोऽमृतः। न साधुना कर्मणा भूयान् नो एवासाधुना कनीयान्। एष एवैनं साधु कर्म कारयति तं यमेभ्यो लोकेभ्य उन्निनीषते। एष उ एवैनमसाधु कर्म कारयति तं यमधो निनीषते। एष लोकपालः। एष लोकाधिपतिः। एष सर्वेशः। स म

(Continued on next page)

Another objection is raised to the above proposition contained in V. S. II. 1. 34. The Upaniṣads often state 'In the beginning there was that only which is one without a second (Chān. Up. VI. 2. 1 sad-eva somyedam agra āsīd-ekam evādvitīyam). Therefore, before creation there was no difference between deeds and so there could have been no inequality among the first created beings dependent on difference in deeds. You may say that after difference in deeds arose God has regard to deeds of men, but all beings created in the beginning must have been alike. To this the reply is that saṁsāra is without beginning (anādi) and that such a conception of the beginninglessness of saṁsāra stands to reason and is supported by (Śruti) texts.

Another discussion on the working of Karma occurs in V.S. II. 3. 41-42.[2529] According to the highest metaphysical doctrine the Ātman is one and all individual selves are really free but they are affected in the empirical state by the Upādhis of buddhi, mind &c. and in that state they are controlled by Īśvara (as Antaryāmin, as Bṛ. Up. III. 7. 23 or Kauṣ. Up. III. 8 says) and they आत्मेति विद्यात्। कौषी. उप. III. 8. मे refers to इन्द्र who in this adhyāya (chapter) expounds Vidyā to Pratardana, son of Divodāsa, and asks him to meditate upon Prāṇa who is immortal. The Bṛ. Up. and Chān. Up. passages are quoted above. The Praśna Up. passage is III.7 'अथैकयोर्ध्व उदानः पुण्येन पुण्यं लोकं नयति पापेन पापम्। उभाभ्यामेव मनुष्यलोकम्।', एकया refers to नाडी. The गीता passage quoted by Śaṅkara is 'ये यथा मां प्रपद्यन्ते तांस्तथैव भजाम्यहम्' IV. II.

---

(Continued from last page)

2529. परात्तु तच्छ्रुतेः। कृतप्रयत्नापेक्षस्तु विहितप्रतिषिद्धावैयर्थ्यादिभ्यः। वे. सू. II.3. 41-42; कृतो यः प्रयत्नो जीवस्य धर्म्माधर्म्मलक्षणस्तदपेक्ष एवैनमीश्वरः कारयति ततश्चैते चोदिता दोषा न प्रसज्यन्ते। जीवकृतधर्माधर्मवैषम्यापेक्ष एव तत्तत्फलानि विषमं विभजेत्पर्जन्यवदीश्वरो निमित्तत्वमात्रेण। ... अपि च पूर्वप्रयत्नमपेक्ष्येश्वरो कारयति पूर्वतरं च प्रयत्नमपेक्ष्य पूर्वमकारयदित्यनादित्वात्संसारस्येत्यनवद्यम्। शाङ्करभाष्य.

receive the fruits of their good and bad actions through Īśvara who does not act at his sweet will but has regard to good or bad conduct.

A few passages about karma and transmigration and stories illustrating how people's minds were affected by them in ancient times may be cited here. The Āp. Dh.[2530] S. provides 'Members of all varṇas (classes) reap (in heaven) highest and measureless happiness by carrying out their prescribed duties; thereafter (i. e. after enjoying happiness in heaven) they return (to this world) on account of the (unenjoyed) residue of the results of their actions and secure birth in an (appropriate) caste (or family), beauty of form, charming complexion, power, mental ability, wisdom, wealth, the (blessing of the) performance of duties and this results in happiness only in both worlds like a wheel. A similar rule applies to the increase of the results of evil acts. The thief of gold, one guilty of brāhmaṇa murder, according as he belongs to the brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya or vaiśya class, after undergoing torments in hell for a limited time becomes respectively a cāṇḍāla, paulkasa or vaiṇa.' The Gautama Dharmasūtra has a passage in very similar words: 'Members of the varṇas (brāhmaṇa and others) and of āśramas (brahmacārin &c) who are devoted to performing the appropriate duties (of their class or stage in life) enjoy the fruit (heaven) of their actions after death and then by virtue of the residue (of their actions) they attain a (new) birth (in this world) endowed with a good country, caste, family, life, learning, character, wealth, mental ability and happiness. Those who act contrary to this are ruined by having to resort to many (evil) births.' On V. S. III. 1. 8 Śaṅkarācārya after quoting Gautama XI. 29 states 'there is no possibility of the destruction of the effect of an evil deed except by some of the methods prescribed by śāstra (such as expiations and realisation of the Absolute) and that it is possible that a good deed may begin to yield its reward after a long time because it is hampered by the results of an evil deed and quotes a smṛti (Mahābhārata) in support.[2531]

---

2530. सर्ववर्णानां स्वधर्मानुष्ठाने परमपरिमितं सुखम्। ततः परिवृत्तौ कर्मफलशेषेण जातिं रूपं वर्णं बलं मेधां प्रज्ञां द्रव्याणि धर्मानुष्ठानमिति प्रतिपद्यते तच्चक्रवदुभयोर्लोकयोः सुख एव वर्तते। ... एतेन दोषफलवृद्धिरुक्ता। स्तेनोऽभिशस्तो ब्राह्मणो राजन्यो वैश्यो वा परस्मिँल्लोके परिमिते निरये वृत्ते जायते चाण्डालो ब्राह्मणः पौल्कसो राजन्यो वैणो वैश्यः। आप. ध. सू. II. 1. 2. 2-3, 5-6; वर्णाश्रमाः स्वस्वधर्मनिष्ठाः प्रेत्य कर्मफलमनुभूय ततः शेषेण विशिष्टदेशजातिकुलरूपायुःश्रुतवित्त (वृत्त?) वित्तसुखमेधसो जन्म प्रतिपद्यन्ते। विपर्यये विपरीता नश्यन्ति। गौ. ध. सू. XI. 29-30.

The principle of the doctrine of Karma is that every act, whether good or bad, produces a certain result or return which cannot be escaped. In the physical world there is the universal law of causation. The doctrine of Karma extends this inexorable law of causality to the mental and moral sphere. The doctrine of Karma is not a mechanical law; it is rather a moral or a spiritual necessity. It cannot, however, be said that this doctrine is an induction from observed facts nor can it be asserted that it is experimentally verifiable, but it is only a hypothesis or supposition; it is, however, far better than other naive and childlike theories. In the absense of the theory of karma and rebirth it would have to be assumed that the world is arbitrary, that the Creator is not bound to regard the nature of men's actions but may distribute rewards as he pleases or by caprice. This doctrine of Karma emphasizes three things, firstly it regards an existence as a sort of expiation for the doings of a previous existence or existences; secondly, an evil deed cannot be expiated by works of merit but its punishment must be borne; thirdly, the punishment for wrong is automatic and personal. Under the doctrine of Karma there is no such thing as chance or luck. When we use those words they correspond to no reality and are a tacit confession of our ignorance or inability to state the cause or causes of what has happened. This doctrine of Karma leads on to the doctrine of transmigration. The results of a man's actions may not happen at once or in the present life. The Ādiparva and Manu say[2532] 'an evil deed does not yield its retribution immediately like a a cow (that yields plenty of milk immediately after she is well fed) but returning slowly it cuts off the very roots of the perpetrator.' Man's actions in past existences determine or fashion the nature of the present existence and the actions in the present existence taken along with the residue of past actions will determine the future existence. This, in short, is the basis of the doctrine of punarjanma. The modifications introduced by texts or popular notions will be briefly dealt with later. The theory of rebirth is as logical as any of the hypotheses that hold the field about what happens after physical death of the body. It is certainly as satisfactory as (or rather more satisfactory than) the theory of absolute annihilation after physical death (held by atheists) or the theory of eternal reward or retribution in heaven or hell (for confirmed criminals of one life). The leaders or exponents of almost all religions hold that God is with them and they generally have never seen (up to at least the 19th century A. D.) any good outside their respective Churches. Hinduism of the Upaniṣads and Gītā is the only religion and philosophy that proclaimed thousands of years ago that the man of good deeds is nearest to God on account of his goodness and the man of evil deeds cannot secure divine grace and fellowship, whomsoever he may regard as a prophet or messiah sent by God.

---

2531. न हि प्रायश्चित्तादिभिर्हेतुभिर्विना कर्मणामुच्छेदः सम्भाव्यते। स्मृतिरपि विरुद्धफलेन कर्मणा प्रतिबद्धस्य कर्मान्तरस्य चिरमवस्थानं दर्शयति — कदाचित् सुकृतं कर्म कूटस्थमिह तिष्ठति। मज्जमानस्य संसारे यावद् दुःखात्प्रमुच्यते॥ इत्येवंजातीयका। (शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 1. 8). The verse कदाचित्सुकृतं is शान्तिपर्व 290. 18 (Ch. ed. = cr. ed. 279. 17).

2532. नाधर्मश्चरितो लोके सद्यः फलति गौरिव। शनैरावर्तमानस्तु कर्तुर्मूलानि कृन्तति॥ आदिपर्व 80. 2, मनु IV. 172. गौः may also mean 'the earth.' But in that case the meaning would be ' when you sow seed in the earth it takes time before the crops are ready.' If गौः means ' an ox ' (or cow) here, then it would mean an ox is immediately useful for carrying loads unlike adharma or ' a cow yields milk immediately after she is fed well.'.

The Vedāntasūtra in III. 1 examines the passages of the Chān. Up. and of the Bṛ. Up. dealing with Pañcāgnividyā. It is not possible to set out in detail the discussions in the bhāṣya of Śaṅkara on the sūtras in V. S. III. 1. Some of the important final conclusions are: The individual self, while passing from one body to another, is accompanied or surrounded by subtle elements (bhūtasūkṣma), that the āhutis are spoken of as 'āpaḥ' (in Chān. Up. V. 9. 1) because the human body is full of fluids in the form of chyle, blood &c., because sacred works like Agnihotra &c. are the causes of a new body after death and in those works the principal materials used (such as Soma juice, ghee, milk) are mainly fluid. In the statement that those who perform sacrifices &c. go to the moon by the Pitṛyāṇa path and that śraddhā is offered as oblation from which Soma that is the food of gods arises, the words 'food of gods' are used in a metaphorical sense (and not in the sense of eating). The souls of sacrificers and the like, after reaching the moon and enjoying the fruits of their good deeds that can be enjoyed in the moon, return to the earth by the way they went but in reverse order of stations for enjoying the fruits of their actions that can only be enjoyed on the earth.[2533] This combines the idea of a life beyond (often referred to in the Ṛgveda) with the notion of rebirth and offers two prizes for good deeds (viz. reward in heaven and then a rebirth with material well-being and cultural environment, as in Gautama Dh. S. XI. 29 and Gītā VI. 37-45 and there is a double penalty for evil deeds (viz. hell torture and then a despised or low life).

The V. S. (III. 1. 13-17) further explains that all men do not go to the moon, but only those that perform sacrifices &c. and those that do not perform sacrifices or works of public utility but are guilty of evil acts go to the abode of Yama for undergoing tortures of hell [2534] (which are seven, according to V. S. III. 1. 15) and after that they come to the earth. Those who follow the path of faith and austerity go by the Devayāna path (Chān. Up. V. 10. 1 and Muṇḍaka I. 2. 11) and those who perform sacrifices, charity and works of public utility go by the pitṛyāṇa path (Chān. Up. V. 10. 3 and Muṇḍaka I. 2. 10)[2535] and those that do not follow any one of the two have to go to a third place and be born as worms &c. (Chān. Up. V. 10. 8), that when a śruti text like Kauṣītaki Up. (I. 2) states that all those that depart from this world go to the moon, what is meant by 'all' is all those that have the adhikāra (capability or fitness) to go to the moon.

There is one word, namely 'saṁsāra', which occurs frequently in the comparatively later literature on Vedānta and Dharmaśāstra but rarely in the Upaniṣads. It means 'passing through a succession or a round or a cycle of births and deaths.' The 2533. कृतात्ययेऽनुशयवान् दृष्टस्मृतिभ्यां यथेतमनेवं च। वे. सू. III. 1. 8. अनुशय is explained by शङ्कराचार्य as 'आमुष्मिकफले कर्मजाते उपभुक्तेऽवशिष्टमैहिकफलं कर्मान्तरजातमनुशयस्तद्वन्तोऽवरोहन्तीति।'. अनुशय means 'residue' here; compare मेघदूत (पूर्व ३०) स्वल्पीभूते सुचरितफले स्वर्गिणां गां गतानां शेषैः पुण्यैर्हृतमिव दिवः कान्तिमत्खण्डमेकम्॥. This is a fine fancy (उत्प्रेक्षा) based on the doctrine stated in V. S. III. 1. 8.

---

2534. संयमने त्वनुभूयेतरेषामारोहावरोहौ तद्गतिदर्शनात्। वे. सू. III. I. 13, on which शङ्कराचार्य quotes कठोप. II. 6 'न साम्परायः प्रतिभाति बालं प्रमाद्यन्तं वित्तमोहेन मूढम्। अयं लोको नास्ति पर इति मानी पुनः पुनर्वशमापद्यते मे॥.'

2535. विद्याकर्मणोरिति तु प्रकृतत्वात्। वे. सू. III. 1. 17; 'तद्य इत्थं विदुः' (छा. V. 10. 1.) इति विद्या तया प्रतिपत्तव्यो देवयानः पन्थाः प्रकीर्तितः। 'इष्टापूर्ते दत्तम्' (छा. V. 10. 3.) इति कर्म तेन प्रतिपत्तव्यः पितृयाणः पन्थाः प्रकीर्तितः। शाङ्करभाष्य.

Kaṭhopaniṣad says[2536] 'that person who has no understanding, who has not controlled his mind, who is always impure, does not attain that (highest) state and undergoes saṁsāra (births and deaths)'. The Śv. Up. VI. 16 speaks of the Supreme Spirit as the 'creator and knower of the universe, as self-born, the knower, the destroyer of time, possessing (all) qualities, knowing everything, Lord of Pradhāna, individual souls and the guṇas (sattva, rajas, tamas) and as the cause of release from saṁsāra, of sustaining it and of bondage.' The Maitrāyaṇī Up. I. 4. says 'such being the nature of saṁsāra what is the use of the enjoyment (of pleasures)'. The Muktikā Up. (II. 37) states 'mind is established as the root of the tree of saṁsāra'. The word 'saṁsāra' occurs in the Vedāntasūtra[2537] IV. 2. 8. The Bhagavadgītā mentions the word several times e. g. 'men who have no faith in this way (of life) do not attain to me (Lord Kṛṣṇa) and return to the path of death and transmigration (IX. 3); those whose minds are fixed on me I deliver in no time from the ocean of death and transmigration' (XII. 7). The Manusmṛti employs the word saṁsāra frequently e. g. in the table of the subjects to be treated in the Smṛti 'the passing through saṁsāra' is mentioned (in I. 117) and the 12th chap. uses the word often. It is said (in XII. 51) 'the entire saṁsāra of three kinds due to three sorts of Karma affecting all beings has been expounded'. After describing the various characteristics of the three guṇas, sattva, rajas and tamas (in XII. 26–29), and the effects of these guṇas (XII. 30–38), Manu states that those in whom sattva, rajas or tamas preponderates respectively become gods, men or lower animals and again divides each of these three classes into lowest, middling and highest (XII. 40–50). Manu uses the word 'saṁsāra' in the plural (in XII. 52, 54, 70) in the sense of 'gati' or 'yoni'. In chap. VI. 40–60 Manu first dilates at length on the daily routine of one who has entered on the stage of sannyāsa, what he should wear and carry, how he should maintain himself, how he should restrain 2536. यस्त्वविज्ञानवान्भवत्यमनस्कः सदाऽशुचिः। न स तत्पदमाप्नोति संसारं चाधिगच्छति॥ कठ III. 7; the words तत्पदं refer to कठ II. 15–16; स विश्वकृद्विश्वविदात्मयोनिर्ज्ञः कालकालो गुणी सर्वविद्यः। प्रधानक्षेत्रज्ञपतिर्गुणेशः संसारमोक्षस्थितिबन्धहेतुः। श्वेताश्व० VI. 16.

---

2537. तदापीतेः संसारव्यपदेशात्। वे. सू. IV. 2.8; the शाङ्करभाष्य on this quotes कठ V. 7 as the basis of the use of the word संसार 'योनिमन्ये ... यथाकर्म यथाश्रुतम्' ॥ q. above in n. 2521.

his senses and give up love and hate and practise ahiṁsā and then proceeds 'he should ponder over the destinies of men due to bad deeds, falling in hell and the tortures of hell, separation from loved ones and contact with undesirable persons, the ravages of old age and the pains of diseases, the departing from the body and again lying in the womb and the passage of the soul through thousands of crores of births of all sorts.' It is entirely wrong to suppose (as done by Mr. Sanjana on p. 10 of his 'Dogma of reincarnation') that Manu prescribes that 'each ego has to go through ten thousand millions of existences.' Manu nowhere says so. All that he means is that the Sannyāsin desirous of liberation should revolve in his mind the possibility of some souls having to migrate through millions of births. Yāj. (in III. 169) employs the verb 'saṁsarati' in the sense of 'undergoes births' and states 'The fruition of actions done by some men results after death (in other bodies) or in this very life (as in the case of Kārīrī sacrifice) and in some cases either in this world or the next (i. e. there is no hard and fast śāstra rule that fruits of actions result immediately after they are done); it also states in a fine simile [2538] 'just as an actor, when acting different parts, colours his body in different colours (fair, dark, brown), so the soul assumes various forms (as short, hunchback, &c.), assumes different bodies due to the various acts done by it. In Yāj. III. 140 the word saṁsāra itself occurs 'The soul affected by (or under the influence of) rajas and tamas, wandering in this world and coming in contact with undesirable objects (or mental attitudes) goes through transmigration (i. e. assumes various bodies)'. This is in reply to the question in Yāj. III. 129 (Īśvaraḥ sa katham bhāvairaniṣṭaiḥ samprayujyate). The Śāntiparva [2539] remarks 'there is no doubt that in life there is far more misery than happiness'. The Purāṇas often harp on the theme that saṁsāra is impermanent, abounds in sorrows and is fragile like a plantain leaf (e. g vide the Brahmapurāṇa 'saṁsāre..., anitye duḥkhabahule kadalīdalasannibhe' (178. 179). The present writer cannot help feeling that this view of the thorough miserableness of life has been so much and so persistently dinned into the ears of common people not only by much of Sanskrit literature but also by medieval saints like Tukaram (who says 'happiness is as little as a grain of barley while misery is as big as a mountain') that people have lost zest in life, are unable to put their heart and soul and serious efforts for improving their own lot and the lot of others. It cannot be denied that in India the doctrine of Karma, instead of being a powerful means of urging all men to put great efforts in doing good deeds and a gospel of hope, became in the minds of many confused with fatalism, which led men to become feeble, submissive and disinclined to work hard.

---

2538. विपाकः कर्मणां प्रेत्य केषांचिदिह जायते। इह वाऽमुत्र वैकेषां भावस्तत्र प्रयोजनम्॥ यथा हि भरतो वर्णैर्वर्णयत्यात्मनस्तनुम्। नानारूपाणि कुर्वाणस्तथात्मा कर्मजास्तनूः॥ याज्ञ. III. 133, 162; the words नानारूपाणि कुर्वाणः may be construed with भरतः also.

2539. सुखाद्बहुतरं दुःखं जीविते नास्ति संशयः। स्निग्धस्य चेन्द्रियार्थेषु मोहान्मरणमप्रियम्॥ शान्तिपर्व 205. 6 (= Cr. ed. 198 lines 11–12).

All the above discussion in the Upaniṣads about transmigration of the individual self are valid and concerned with the empirical or phenomenal world (saṁsārāvasthā or vyavahārāvasthā) but considered from the highest metaphysical standpoint of thorough-going advaita (the parā vidyā of Muṇḍaka I. 1. 5–6 or amūrta brahma of Bṛ. Up. II. 3. 5–6) it falls to the ground, since the individual self is non-different from the Absolute Brahman. Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. II. 3. 30 emphasizes this point. He states: As long as the individual self is in saṁsāra state and has not attained perfect knowledge and brought the empirical or phenomenal state to an end, so long the connection of the self with buddhi does not cease. As long as this connection with buddhi (a limiting adjunct) lasts, so long lasts the state of being an individual self merged in saṁsāra. But the real truth is that there is no entity called jīva by itself except in so far as it is fictitiously hypostatized by buddhi, the limiting adjunct. For, when we determine the real meaning of Vedānta texts, we find no intelligent substance other than the one omniscient Lord whose nature is eternal freedom. Then Śaṅkarācārya cites certain texts (viz. Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 7, III. 7–13, Chān. Up. VI. 1. 6, VI. 8. 7 [2540] and remarks that there are hundreds of such texts. Śaṅkarācārya states that even Bādarāyaṇa, the author of the Vedāntasūtras, composed some sūtras from the highest advaita standpoint and some from the empirical standpoint. In the following sūtras of V. S. Bādarāyaṇa is obliged to differentiate Jīva and Paramātman I. 1. 16–17; I. 1. 21, I. 2. 20, I. 3. 5, II. 1. 21–23, II. 3. 21. II. 3. 41, II. 3. 43 &c. But the sūtras I. 1. 33, II. 1. 14, IV. 13 indicate that there is non-difference between the two.[2541]

2540. यावदात्मभावित्वाच्च न दोषस्तद्दर्शनात्। वे. सू. II. 3. 30, यावदयमात्मा संसारी भवति यावदस्य सम्यग्दर्शनेन संसारित्वं न निवर्तते तावदस्य बुद्ध्या संयोगो न शाम्यति। यावदेव चायं बुद्ध्युपाधिसम्बन्धस्तावज्जीवस्य जीवत्वं संसारित्वं च परमार्थतस्तु न जीवो नाम बुद्ध्युपाधिसम्बन्धपरिकल्पितस्वरूपव्यतिरेकेणास्ति। न हि नित्यमुक्तस्वरूपात्सर्वज्ञात्सर्वेश्वरादन्यश्चेतनो धात्वर्थद्वितीयो वेदान्तार्थनिरूपणायामुपलभ्यते। नान्योतोस्ति द्रष्टा श्रोता मन्ता विज्ञाता (बृ. III. 7. 23), नान्यदतोऽस्ति द्रष्टृ श्रोतृ मन्तृ विज्ञातृ (छा. VI. 8. 7.), तत्त्वमसि (छा. VI. 1. 6.), अहं ब्रह्मास्मि (बृ. I. 4. 7.) इत्यादिश्रुतिशतेभ्यः। ... अपि च मिथ्याज्ञानपुरःसरोऽयमात्मनो बुद्ध्युपाधिसम्बन्धः। न च मिथ्याज्ञानस्य सम्यग्ज्ञानादन्यत्र निवृत्तिरस्तीत्यतो यावद् ब्रह्मात्मतावबोधस्तावदयं बुद्ध्युपाधिसम्बन्धो न शाम्यति। शाङ्करभाष्य. Similarly on वे. सू. I. 1. 5. शाङ्करभाष्य says 'सत्यं, नेश्वरावयवः संसारी, तथापि वेदादिसङ्कलितोपाधिसम्बन्ध इत्यत एव, घटकरकगिरिदुर्गाद्युपाधिसम्बन्ध इव व्योम्नः'

The theory of transmigration postulates that each life is the result or fruit of the actions of the preceding existence or existences. It follows from this that if we go backwards far enough, no existence or birth can be the first. Therefore, the Vedāntasūtra had to declare (in II. 1.35 quoted in n. 2527 above) that saṁsāra is anādi (beginningless). But this is in conflict with many passages of the Upaniṣads, which, in speaking of creation, employ the words ' in the beginning ' (as in Chān. Up. VI. 2.1, Bṛ. Up. I. 4., 1, 10 and 17, V. 5.1, Tai. Up. II. 7. 1). In order to get over this conflict the conception of the recurring creation of the universe periodically from all eternity was postulated by means of the machinery of kalpas,[2542] which provides that the universe created by brahman persists through a vast period called Kalpa, after the lapse of which it is absorbed into brahman. Vide Śāntiparva 231. 29–32 (Ch. ed.= cr. ed. 224. 28-31). It is stated in the Gītā VIII. 17–19 that the day of Brahmā is equal to one thousand yugas (four yugas make one unit or Mahāyuga) and the night of Brahmā is also of the same duration. All objects spring up from Prakṛti at the advent of the day of Brahmā and at the advent of night are absorbed (or merged) in the Prakṛti. Vide Bhagavadgītā IX. 7 also ' at the end of a Kalpa all elements (or beings) pass into prakṛti over which I preside; but when the next Kalpa starts I send them forth '.

The reasoning is; just as we cannot decide which comes first, the seed or sprouting plant, so it is impossible to say which comes first (body or Karma), since no body is possible without Karma (deeds) and no deeds are possible without a body. The Chān. Up. (V.13·2) states " that Being (deity) that had produced fire, water, and earth thought ' let me enter those three beings (fire, water and earth) with this living self and then develop names and forms." That shows that Jīva (the self) was there at the time of creation and thereby indicates that saṁsāra is beginningless. The Ṛgveda in X. 190.3, expressly says ' the creator arranged (or created) as before.'[2542a] Similarly, the Gītā (15.3) states ' the real form of it (of the tree of saṁsāra) is not thus perceived, nor its end nor beginning nor its support; having cut off this deeply rooted Aśvattha (pippala) tree with the powerful sword of non-attachment, that place must be sought for from which those who have reached it do not again return '. The Smṛti verses relied upon by Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. 1.3.30 are noted below.[2543] 2542a. It is possible that the words 'dhātā yathāpūrvamakalpayat' (in Rg. X. 190.3) simply mean that the Creator arranged the Sun, the Moon, Heaven, Earth and regions according to the priorities (or their proper order). But it cannot be gainsaid that these words are at least the germs of the later doctrine of Kalpa, Manvantara & c. Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 3.30 explains the Ṛgveda verse as ' the creator created in the present Kalpa the universe including the Sun and the Moon in the same way as in the preceding Kalpa.' यथा पूर्वस्मिन्कल्पे सूर्याचन्द्रमःप्रभृति जगत् कृतं तथास्मिन्नपि कल्पे परमेश्वरोऽकल्पयदित्यर्थः. He quotes as supporting his views several smṛti verses which occur in the Mahābhārata and in some of the Purāṇas. The present writer feels that it is difficult to hold that a mere illustration or analogy (of seed and tree) can amount to a logical argument. At the most an illustration may lend some plausibility to a theory, belief or conclusion.

---

2541. तदनन्यत्वमारम्भणशब्दादिभ्यः । वे. सू. II. I. 14; सूत्रकारोपि परमार्थाभिप्रायेण तदननन्यत्वमित्याह व्यवहाराभिप्रायेण तु व्याख्योक्त वितिमहासहस्रद्वयानीयतां ब्रह्मणः कथयति। अमत्याख्यायैव कार्यप्रपञ्चपरिणामप्रक्रियां चाश्रयति सगुणेपूपासनेषूपयोक्ष्यत इति। शाङ्करभाष्य at end, ' भोक्त्रापत्तेरविभागश्चेत्स्याल्लोकवत् '-this is वे. सू. II. 1. 13.

2542. The one thousand Mahāyugas constituting a day of Brahmā are called a Kalpa. For detailed treatment of Kalpa, Manvantara, Mahāyuga and Yuga, vide pp. 686–697 above. The ancient Upaniṣads have not elaborated this theory of Kalpas &c.

2543. The verses quoted by Saṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 3. 30 as smṛtis are;

(1) तेषां ये यानि कर्माणि प्राक्सृष्ट्यां प्रतिपेदिरे । तान्येव ते प्रपद्यन्ते सृज्यमानाः पुनः पुनः ॥ शान्तिपर्व 232. 16. (ch. ed. = cr. ed. 224. 47), वायु 8.32 and 9. 57, विष्णु I. 5. 60, कूर्म I. 7. 64-65, मार्कण्डेय 45.39.

(2) हिंस्राहिंस्रे मृदुक्रूरे धर्माधर्मावृतानृते । तद्भाविताः प्रपद्यन्ते तस्मात्तत्तस्य रोचते ॥ शान्ति 232. 17 (Ch. ed. = cr. ed. 224. 48), वायु 8. 33, 103. 33, मनु I. 29, विष्णु I. 5. 61, कूर्म I, 7. 65, मार्कण्डेय 45. 40.

(3) ऋषीणां नामधेयानि याश्च वेदेषु दृष्टयः। शर्वर्यन्ते प्रसूतानां ताम्येवैभ्यो ददाद्यजः॥ वायु 9. 64, मार्कण्डेय 45. 43. शर्वरी here refers to night of ब्रह्मा.

(4) यथर्तुष्वृतुलिङ्गानि नानारूपाणि पर्यये । दृश्यन्ते तानि तान्येव यथा भावा युगादिषु ॥ शान्ति 210.17 (=cr. ed. 203.15), मार्कण्डेय 45. 44, वायु 9. 65, विष्णु I. 5. 65. This verse is quoted without name in the तन्त्रवार्तिक p. 202 on Jai. I. 3. 7; compare मनु I. 30.

(5) यथाभिमानिनोऽतीतास्तुल्यास्ते सांप्रतैरिह । देवा देवैरतीतैर्हि रूपैर्नामभिरेव च ॥

The Bhagavadgītā (VI. 37–45) is very emphatic that no exertions made by a man on the path of Yoga with faith are lost even if he does not quickly attain perfection. Lord Kṛṣṇa replies (VI. 40 ff) that such a man failing to secure perfection does not come to an evil end, but he attains to the worlds of the righteous, dwells there for many years, is born in the houses of prosperous and pure men or is born in the family of wise yogins, where he regains the mental impressions of his past lives. He makes fresh efforts to gain perfection and is carried forward irresistibly by his practice in former lives and being free from all sins and perfecting himself through many lives attains the highest goal. In the Gītā, Kṛṣṇa says (in IV. 5) 'many are my lives that are past and thine also. All of them I know but thou knowest them not.' In many places the Gītā touches upon the doctrine of transmigration (such as in II. 12–13 and 22–27, IV. 8–9, VII. 19, VIII. 6, 15–16, IX. 21).

In chapters 30–32 (of ch. ed.) of Vanaparva there is a dialogue between Draupadī and Yudhiṣṭhira, who, having lost his kingdom in gambling with the Kauravas, was in exile and hard pressed. Draupadī wonders how such a straightforward, mild, benevolent and truthful prince allowed his mind to be involved in gambling (30. 19), that God does not act towards beings like a father or mother, but He appears to be irascible like a common man, when she sees that honourable men of high character have difficulties in maintaining themselves and dishonourable men live in pleasures (30. 38–39); she proceeds 'human beings,[2544] ignorant and having no control over happiness and misery, go to heaven or hell at the caprice of God.' Yudhiṣṭhira warns her that she talks like an atheist, that he performed no deed with the thought of seeking the reward thereof, that he made gifts and performed sacrifices because he held that it was his duty to do so.' He asked her to give up atheistic talk and not to disrespect Highest God. Then Draupadī came round and replied that she did not mean to disrespect or censure Dharma, that it is far from her thoughts to show disrespect to God, but that, being distressed, she talked like an atheist. She then enters upon a discussion[2545] about what people mean by diṣṭa (fate) or haṭha (chance) or nature (svabhāva) and winds up by saying that whatever a person gains is all the result of deeds in past lives.

2544. अज्ञो जन्तुरनीशोयमात्मनः सुखदुःखयोः। ईश्वरप्रेरितो गच्छेत्स्वर्गं नरकमेव च॥ वन० 30. 28; this is द्रौपदी's lament.

2545. तथैव हठदुर्बुद्धिः शक्तः कर्मण्यकर्मकृत्। आसीत न चिरं जीवेन्नाथ इव दुर्बलः। अकस्मादिह यः कश्चिदर्थं प्राप्नोति पूरुषः। तं हठेनेति मन्यन्ते स हि यत्नो न कस्यचित्॥ ... एवं

(Continued on next page)

It is not necessary to say here anything about human effort (puruṣakāra) and daiva. That topic has been dealt with and the different views of ancient and medieval writers about the respective spheres of these two have been pointed out in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 168–170 and notes 214–216.

When the son of Gautamī, who was an old woman that had attained control of mind, died by snake-bite, a hunter caught the snake, brought it bound to Gautamī and said that he would kill the snake for having bitten an innocent and unoffending boy. Gautamī dissuades him from killing the snake by stating 'by killing the snake my son would not be brought back to life, I see no good in killing the snake.' Then Kāla came forward and explained 'Just as a potter moulds from a lump of clay whatever he desires, so man secures fruits of deeds done by himself; the boy's death was due to his deeds in a former life' and Gautamī agreed that her son died by his own deeds in a previous life and that her bereavement by the death of her son was due to her own former deeds.[2546] This story occurs in the very first chapter of the Anuśāsanaparva.

Draupadī who had to work as Sairandhrī (a maid servant) in the harem of Virāṭa bewails before Bhīma 'in my girlhood I must have done something which displeased the Creator by virtue of which I have been reduced to this distressing condition.'[2547] The Anuśāsanaparva states 'just as the calf finds

---

(Continued from last page)

हठाच्च दैवाच्च स्वभावात्कर्मणस्तथा। यानि प्राप्नोति पुरुषस्तत्फलं पूर्वकर्मणाम्॥ वनपर्व 32. 15–16, 20. नीलकण्ठ explains हठादिकः as 'प्राग्जन्माभावादकृतमेवोपरथास्यतीति वदन् चार्वाकः।'

2546. यथा मृत्पिण्डतः कर्ता कुरुते यद्यदिच्छति। एवमात्मकृतं कर्म मानवः प्रतिपद्यते॥ नैव कालो न सृजगो न मृत्युरिह कारणम्। स्वकर्मभिरयं बालः कालेन निधनं गतः। मया च तत्कृतं कर्म येनायं मे मृतः सुतः। यातु कालस्तथा मृत्युर्मुञ्चार्जुनक पन्नगम्। अनुशासन I. 74, 78–79.

2547. नूनं हि बालया धातुर्मया वै विप्रियं कृतम्। यस्य प्रसादाद्दुर्नीतं प्राप्तास्मि भरतर्षभ॥ विराटपर्व 20. 14. She implies that she does not remember having done any wrong. यथा धेनुसहस्रेषु वत्सो विन्दति मातरम्। एवमात्मकृतं कर्म कर्तारमनुगच्छति॥ अनुशासन 7. 22 = पद्म U. 81. 47 (तथा शुभाशुभं कर्म), 94. 17 (तद्वच्छुभाशुभं कर्म). This verse is quoted in an English translation by A. G. Hogg in 'Karma and redemption' (ed. of 1910 p. 19) and by M. Macnicol in 'Indian Theism' (Oxford Uni. Press, 1915) p. 224 its own mother from among thousands of cows, so karma done in a previous life pursues the doer of it.' The Āśvamedhika-parva[2548] asserts that there is no destruction of good and evil actions; they ripen and produce results when the self passes from one body to another. The Śāntiparva (cr. ed. 316. 25 and 35 = ch. ed. 329. 25, 35) avers 'a man by performing good deeds secures the state of a god, he is reborn as a human being by actions of a mixed character (good and evil both) and he is born as lower (than man) by evil deeds; when you (yourself) start after death no one will follow you; only your good or evil deeds will follow you when you leave this world.'

All strata of Hindu society were permeated by the theory of Karma and transmigration. Great Sanskrit poets often allude to it. In the Raghuvaṁśa XI. 22 describing the visit of Rāma to the hermitage of Vāmana pointed out by Viśvāmitra, Kālidāsa remarks 'Rāma became restless (or disturbed) in mind, though not remembering his actions in the former existence as Vāmana' (both Vāmana and Rāma being avatāras of Viṣṇu). Similarly, in Śākuntala (Act V) the poet remarks 'when on seeing charming sights and hearing pleasing words, a person, though surrounded by pleasures, becomes restless (or sorrowful), that is indeed due to this that his mind unconsciously has the impressions of loves and friendships of past lives presented to it'. In the seventh Act of the same play when Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā were re-united, she, referring to her previous rejection by the king, remarks[2549] 'indeed at that time some (bad) actions of mine (in some former life) hampered my good deeds and became ripe for fruition'. In the Raghuvaṁśa the 14th canto contains at first a message of spirited protest by Sītā whom Rāma ordered Lakṣmaṇa to abandon near Vālmīki's hermitage on account of the scandal about her among common people, but afterwards qualifies the message by saying that the terrible misfortune that she was going to suffer was the fruition of her misdeeds in former existences and that she desired to be his wife in a future existence but without separation from him. Vide also the Meghadūta verse quoted above in note 2533 p. 1563.

2548. शुभानामशुभानां च नेह नाशोस्ति कर्मणाम्। प्राप्य प्राप्यानुपच्यन्ते क्षेत्रे क्षेत्रे तथा तथा। आश्वमेधिक 18. 1.

2549. नूनं मे सुचरितप्रतिबन्धकं पुराकृतं तेषु दिवसेषु परिणामसुखमासीत्। शाकुन्तल VII; ममैव जन्मान्तरपातकानां विपाकविस्फूर्जथुरप्रसह्याः॥ साहं तपः सूर्यनिविष्टदृष्टिरूर्ध्वं प्रसूतेश्चरितुं यतिष्ये। यूयो यथा मे जननान्तरेपि त्वमेव भर्ता न च विप्रयोगः। रघुवंश 14. 62 and 66.

Many questions naturally arise on the doctrine of Karma and transmigration. One of them is discussed by the bhāṣya of Vyāsa on Yogasūtra II. 13. In Yogasūtra II. 3 five kleśas (hindrances) such as avidyā (nescience) are enumerated and it is stated (II. 13) that these kleśas lead on to fruition of actions by way of birth, life (long or short), kind of experience. Actions (Karma) are of four sorts according to Yogasūtra (IV. 7) viz. kṛṣṇa (dark found in wicked people), (2) śuklakṛṣṇa (white-dark) that are accomplished by external means in which there is some injury to or benefit of others; (3) śukla (white) belonging to those who engage in tapas, svādhyāya (study of the sacred texts) and contemplation; because this kind of deed depends on the mind alone and does not depend on external means and does not involve injury to others; (4) Aśuklākṛṣṇa (neither white nor dark), which is found in sannyāsins (ascetic saints) whose hindrances (avidyā &c) have dwindled and whose bodies are the last (they will have). Of these four kinds, the yogin alone has non-white karma since he has renounced the fruit of all actions (even of good ones) and he has akṛṣṇa since he will never resort to dark actions. The bhāṣya on Yogasūtra II. 13 states four questions, (1) whether one Karma is the cause of one birth, or (2) whether one Karma is the cause of more births than one; (3) whether more than one Karma brings about more births than one; (4) whether more than one Karma brings about one birth. The bhāṣya raises objections to the first three and states that the fourth alternative alone is acceptable. Vide p. 1417 note 2325 for the text of the Yogabhāṣya on these four alternatives. The Śāntiparva (chap. 273. 33–34 of cr. ed. =chap 280. 33–34 of ch. ed.) mentions individual souls as of six colours viz. kṛṣṇa (dark), dhūmra (grey), nīla (blue), rakta (red), hāridra (yellow) and śukla (white) in an ascending order, the dark being the lowest and śukla being the highest and verses 36–46 describe these six in detail.

There are several features of our present life that can be more satisfactorily explained on the theory of transmigration than on any other. Why do two people who have seen but little of one another feel friendship or hatred? The surmise that in past existences they were friends or had obliged each other or harmed each other offers an explanation. The doctrine of karma and transmigration accounts for the apparently unmerited misery and suffering of many people, while some enjoy undeserved happiness or a good life. Our sense of fairness and justice would be shocked by the inequalities in the world, if such a doctrine were not there. The hypothesis and belief that all human volition and conduct will suitably be rewarded and punished in subsequent existences has an important bearing on present conduct, would act as an urge to continual effort for goodness in this life and is likely to deter men from vice and cruelty. This doctrine of karma not only offers an explanation about the varying degrees of happiness and unhappiness among human beings, but also accounts for differences in material well-being and unhealthy bodily conditions. It offers a solution of the problem of evil in the world and explains precocious abilities in mathematics, music and arts among children and grown up men as in the case of Ramanujan about whom Prof. Hardy of Cambridge (in 'Ramanujan,' Cambridge, 1940) says that he was the most romantic figure in the recent mathematics. If rightly understood, it is not pessimistic or fatalist, but rather emphasizes all out human effort in this life. It will be seen how many of the works on Dharmaśāstra or connected with it as sources emphasize effort (puruṣakāra) as against views of various people that it is Daiva or Svabhāva or time or the combination of all these that yield rewards or retribution in this life. It also explains sudden accession of prosperity or high position such as, for example, a poor man's son being adopted by a prince or queen and then becoming an enlightened and famous ruler as was the case with the late Sayajirao Maharaj Gaikwad of Baroda.

Even from Upaniṣadic times various views were held about the origin of the world and similar questions. The Śv. Up. (I. 1) asks the question 'Is brahma the cause ? Whence are we born ? Whereby do we live and whither are we going ? Tell us, O knowers of brahman, under whose control do we abide in pain or pleasure' ? The next verse states 'Should Time or nature or necessity or chance or the elements be considered as the cause or He who is (called) Puruṣa ? It cannot be their combination either, since even the self has no power over happiness and misery.' Then verse 3 (latter half) states 'He being one superintends (or controls) all causes viz. Time, self and the rest.' Yāj. I. 350 refers to five views on the question as to what causes desirable or undesirable results viz. some hold that it is Daiva alone, some put forward Svabhāva (nature), some rely on Time, some on human effort and some on a combination of all these; but, Yājñavalkya's own view (I. 349, 351) is that good or bad results are due to daiva and puruṣakāra and that the former is nothing but effort of former existences that has begun to manifest results. The Śāntiparva (chap. 238. 4–5 = cr. ed. 230. 4–5) refers to the fact that there are three views viz. either human effort or daiva or svabhāva being the cause, but its own view appears to be that Purusākāra and Daiva combine to produce fruits. The Matsyapurāna (221. 8) asserts that daiva, effort and kāla working together produce the fruits of actions. The Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa (II. 8. 61-62) refers to three views viz. Daiva, effort and Svabhāva are put forward as causes separately but its own view is that daiva and effort together yield fruits.

It may be stated here that Karma is put in three groups viz. sañcita, prārabdha and kriyamāṇa (or sañclyamāna). The first is the total accumulated deeds of all past existences, the fruits of which have not been experienced. The prārabdha Karma is that which was the strongest among the group of sañcita deeds just before the present existence of a person begins and which is supposed to determine one's present existence. What a person accumulates during the present existence is called kriyamāṇa (or sañciyamāna, being collected) and the next existence is determined by the strongest (or the earliest according to some) among the sañcita and kriyamāṇa deeds put together. As the karmans[2550] are of different characters and yield different consequences (heaven in case of sāttvika deeds, or the earth or mid-regions when they are mainly rājasa), and places of tortures when deeds are mainly tāmasa the existences (or births or bodies) differ and the self being affected by the body, the individual souls appear as different. The objection is raised that freedom of will is the basis of all ethical values and that if a man's Karma in past lives determines the present life, then a man in the present life is merely a toy in the power of Karma and has no power to do as he sees best. The question about a man's freedom of will is a most thorny one, on which the greatest thinkers from ancient times to the present day have differed[2551] and no 2550. Vide विज्ञानदीपिका of पद्मपाद verses 5 and 8. 'कर्मणां फलवैचित्र्याद्वैचित्र्यं जन्मनामिह। देहवैचित्र्यतो जीवे वैचित्र्यं भासते तथा॥ सञ्चितं क्षीयमाणं च प्रारब्धं कर्म तत्फलम्। क्रमेणावृत्तिरेतेषां पूर्वं बलवतोऽपि वा॥. The com. explains सञ्चितानां शुभाशुभकर्मणां मध्ये यस्य पूर्वकालिकत्वं तस्य पूर्वं प्रारम्भः। तत्समानौ तदनन्तरजातस्यैवं वा क्रमेणावृत्तिः। अपि च सञ्चितकर्मणां मध्ये पौर्वापर्यमनपेक्ष्य यस्य कर्मणो बलवत्तरत्वं तस्यैव पूर्वं प्रारम्भः।

2551. Jeans in 'Mysterious Universe' (p. 30) observes 'And if Time is so fundamental that an understanding of its true nature is forever beyond our reach, then so also in all probability is a decision the age-long controversy between determinism and free will.'

satisfactory reply can be given. There are numerous works on discussions on Free will and Determinism such as Rashdall's 'Theory of good and evil' vol. II. pp. 302-355 (1907) on 'Free Will,' Bergsons's 'Time and Free will,' Viscount Samuel in 'Belief and action' pp. 303-320; but the present author does not propose to recommend any of these books to the reader of this volume. But if the reader wants a small book on the Free Will controversy he may read the book by M. Davidson (London, 1942). So far as the Indian doctrine of Karma is concerned, it appears that freedom of will is postulated for a man during the present existence to lead a good moral life and perform meritorious acts subject to the limitations caused by the environment in which the present existence is cast. The important working belief is that one has free will and that one is free in the present existence to mould the future (so far as he is concerned) by means of meritorious works. This is the message of the Śāntiparva.[2552] Lord Kṛṣṇa, after a long discourse in the Bhagavadgītā gives Arjuna permission to do as the latter likes (18.63 'yathecchasi tathā kuru'). In Gītā 9.30 also Lord Kṛṣṇa says 'if even a person of the vilest conduct worships me with undivided devotion, he must be held to be righteous, for he has made a right resolve.' Similarly, in VI. 5 the Gītā provides 'let a man lift himself higher by himself, let him not degrade himself; for the self alone is the friend of the self and the self alone is the enemy of the self'. Vide notes below for Upaniṣad passages, V. S. and Śaṅkarabhāṣya. It is possible to accept, on the ancient Indian doctrine, both predestination and free will, the first so far as one's being born in a certain environment is concerned and the 2nd so far as one's actions in the present life are concerned. The Bhagavadgītā (VI. 5-6) holds out the hope even to a sinner that it is never too late to mend and (II. 40) avers that even a little of righteousness saves a man from great fear and no effort is lost.

Though the general drift of the Gītā is in favour of Free Will, there are a few passages that seem to savour of determinism, e. g. 'everyone is made to do acts helplessly by the guṇas born of Prakṛti (III. 5); 'all beings follow prakṛti (Nature); what can control (or repression) do'? (III. 33); "due to your conceit you think 'I shall not fight,' this thy resolve is vain; (your) Nature will compel you to do it; you being constrained by your own acts born of your nature will helplessly do that which you do not wish to do" (XVIII. 59–60). It may have to be conceded that there is no freedom of will in the matter of environment during childhood.

2552. आयुर्न सुलभं लब्ध्वा नावकर्षेद् विशांपते। उत्कर्षार्थं प्रयतते नरः पुण्येन कर्मणा॥ शान्तिपर्व 280. 3 (= 291. 3. of ch. ed.).

The Rāmāyaṇa gives expression to the belief that sorrow in the present life is the result of similar actions done in past life or lives. When Rāma left Ayodhyā as an exile for the sake of fulfilling the promise given to queen Kaikeyī by king Daśaratha, Kausalyā, mother of Rāma, laments 'I believe indeed that in a past life I must have made many persons lose their sons or I must have harmed (or killed) living beings; it is therefore that this (sorrow) has befallen me'; 'I think beyond doubt that in a former life, I, a wretched woman, must have cut off the breasts of cows (or mothers) when their calves (or children) desired (to drink milk at the breasts) of their mothers'.[2553]

The Purāṇas also emphasize the importance of good or evil deeds and say that one has to reap the fruits of one's actions, whether good or evil, and Karma does not come to an end even after hundreds of lives unless the results thereof are undergone.[2554] The Padmapurāṇa states 'there is no destruction of Karma except by reaping the fruits thereof; no one can set aside the bondage due to the Karma of past lives' and further 'man by his own actions may become a God, or a human being, cattle, a bird or a lower animal or even a tree (or rock); no man in this world is able to annul the effects of actions done in previous existences by his power or by the birth of progeny'[2555] (son &c). The 2553. मन्ये खलु मया पूर्वं विवत्सा बहवः कृताः। प्राणिनो हिंसिता वापि तस्मादिदमुपस्थितम् ॥ अयोध्याकाण्ड 39. 4; निःसंशयं मया मन्ये पुरा वीर कदर्यया। पातुकामेषु वत्सेषु मातॄणां ज्ञातितः स्तनाः ॥ अयोध्या० 43. 17 (Madras Law Journal Press edition).

---

2554. अवश्यमेव भोक्तव्यं कृतं कर्म शुभाशुभम्। नाभुक्तं क्षीयते कर्म ह्यपि जन्मशतैः प्रिये ॥ नारदीय पु० (उत्तरभाग) 29. 18; the quarter नाभुक्तं क्षीयते कर्म is quoted by the भामती on शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. IV. 1. 13. (without name). Vide H. of Dh. Vol. IV. p. 39 note 95 for the same verse quoted by others. भामती notes 'नाभुक्तं...कर्म इति च स्मरणमप्राप्तिबद्धसामर्थ्यकर्माभिप्रायम्।.'

2555. उपभोगादृते तस्य नाश एव न विद्यते। प्राक्तनं बन्धनं (बन्धकं ?) कर्म कोन्यथा कर्तुमर्हति ॥ पद्म. II. 81. 48. and 94. 118; देवत्वमथ मानुष्यं पशूनां पक्षिणां तथा। तिर्यक्त्वं स्थावरत्वं च याति जन्तुः स्वकर्मभिः ॥ पूर्वदेहकृतं कर्म न कश्चित्पुरुषो भुवि। बलेन प्रजया वापि समर्थः कर्तुमन्यथा ॥ पद्म. II. 94. 13, 15. The first occurs in पद्म. II. 81. 43 also. Vide Ṛgveda प्रजाभिरग्ने अमृतत्वमश्याम्' V. 4. 10. and मनु IX. 137 पुत्रेण लोकाञ्जयति पौत्रेणानन्त्यमश्नुते. These are merely laudatory acc. to the पद्म; न तु भोगादृते पुण्यं पापं वा कर्म मानवम्। परित्यजति भोगाच्च पुण्यापुण्ये निबोध मे ॥ मार्कण्डेय 14. 17; यादृशं वपते बीजं क्षेत्रे तु कृषिकारकः। सुनक्ति तादृशं वत्स फलमेव न संशयः ॥ यादृशं क्रियते कर्म तादृशं परिभुज्यते। विनाशहेतुः कर्मास्य सर्वं कर्मवशा वयम् ॥ पद्म. II, 94. 7–8.

idea of transmigration as described in the Upaniṣads had become universal in India at the time of Buddha. Buddha rejected the reality of a permanent ego or self as an entity. He was not a metaphysical philosopher, but wanted to lay down a way or method by which mankind could be freed from ignorance and suffering and liberation could be achieved. Therefore, while rejecting a permanent ego he accepted the doctrine of rebirth.

A side issue has been very much debated by some eminent scholars, viz. whether the cherishers of the Vedānta thoughts were originally the Kṣatriyas and not the Brāhmaṇas. The present author dealt with that question in a brief compass in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 105–107 and note 222. Deussen in 'Das System des Vedānta' (1883 pp. 18–19) and Ph. Up. (tr. by Geden pp. 18–19) and Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar in 'Vaiṣṇavism and Śaivism' p. 9 hold the view that the kṣatriyas were the original possesseors of Vedānta doctrines. Deussen relies mainly on six passages and Dr. Bhandarkar on two only (Chān. V. 3 and 11) and besides Deussen (in Ph. Up. p. 19) admits that his conclusion is not absolute certainty but has a high degree of probability. Barth in 'Religions of India' p. 65, Hopkins in 'Ethics of India' (1924) p. 63, 'Vedic India' by Macdonell and Keith (vol. II. p. 206), and Tuxen on 'The religions of India' (Copenhagen, 1949, p. 88) do not subscribe to this view. Deussen went so far as to aver (p. 19) 'this teaching with regard to the ātman was studiously withheld from them (the brāhmaṇas), that it was transmitted in a narrow circle among the kṣatriyas to the exclusion of the brāhmaṇas'. The present author had not set out the passages on which reliance was placed by Deussen and those who followed him. They will be set out here and will be examined as to the context in which they appear and the subject with which they deal. But it must first be emphasized that the most important doctrines of the main and ancient Upaniṣads are two, viz. 'non-difference of the individual self from the Supreme Self, and (2) transmigration of the self depending on his deeds and conduct. Both these doctrines are expounded by Yājñavalkya to king Janaka in various places in the Upaniṣads e. g. in Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 4–7 and following passages. Deussen regards this part of the instruction as deepest, truest and noblest (Ph. Up. p. 348; quoted above on p. 1547) and this passage is (acc. to him) the leading passage on the doctrine of transmigration and on what accompanies the self in its transmigration (Ph. Up. p. 281). Besides, the words of Yājñavalkya in Bṛ. Up. III. 2. 13 'He who does good is born good' and in IV. 4. 5 'He who does good is born good, he who does evil is born evil, he becomes righteous by righteous works &c.' are declared by Deussen himself (Ph. Up. p. 410) as 'the oldest in which a doctrine of transmigration is found'. Therefore, according to Deussen himself, the original possessor of these two fundamental doctrines of the Upaniṣads is the brāhmaṇa Yājñavalkya who in the same Upaniṣad (Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 1-14) propounds to his wife Maitreyī the identity of the self and elements and everything else with brahma (idam sarvam yadayamātmā). Not only so, there are other brāhmaṇa teachers of these. For example, Uddālaka Āruṇi expounds at great length to his son Śvetaketu the doctrine of identity in the famous words 'tat-tvamasi' (Chān. Up. VI. 8-16).

Now the examples on which Deussen (Ph. Up. pp. 17-19) bases his couclusions must be cited and examined. Chān. Up. (V. 11. 1) tells the story of five (named) wealthy householders and great students of Veda who came together and discussed the question 'what is our ātman, what is brahma'. They proposed to go to Uddālaka Āruṇi who knew the self called Vaiśvānara. Uddālaka thought that he would not be able to explain all and therefore told them that Aśvapati Kaikeya (king of Kekaya country) at that time knew the self called Vaiśvānara and all five together with Uddālaka went to that king, who said he would give an answer the next day. The next day those six went to him with fuel in hand (i. e. as pupils) and the king without performing further preparatory rites asked each of them what they medidated upon. When each replied as to what he meditated upon, such as heaven, Āditya, air, ether, water and earth (this last by Uddālaka Āruni), he told them that all these are parts of Vaiśvānara and he explained to them how the proper Agnihotra is to be performed.

Two things should be noticed viz. Uddālaka Āruṇi is here shown as ignorant of true Vaiśvānaravidyā, though in the very next section (Chān. Up. VI. 8. 7. ff.) Uddālaka Āruṇi teaches the sublime doctrine of 'Tat-tvamasi'. Probably these two Uddālakas are different or the present story is more or less a myth. In the second place, all that Aśvapati Kaikeya teaches is about Vaiśvānara and not brahmavidyā (about the identity of individual soul with the Supreme Self. From before the times of Yāska, there have been various opinions about Vaiśvānara, frequently mentioned in the Ṛgveda (e. g. in I. 52. 6. I. 98. 1.). The Nirukta (VII. 21-23) has a long discussion and quotes three different views viz. that Vaiśvānara is lightning or Āditya or terrestrial fire. The Chān. Up. (V. 18. 2) winds up the description of Vaiśvānara and brings it (V. 19–24) in line with the oblations to five breaths (as 'Prāṇāya' svāhā &c.) and sets forth the results of the observance of Agnihotra with full knowledge of its true purport. The Vedāntasūtra (I. 2. 24–32) deals with what is meant by Vaiśvānara in Chān. V. 11 ff. and the conclusion is that it means paramātman (the highest Self) and not individual self or fire as an element or the digestive (stomach) heat.

Deussen then refers to the story of Gārgya Bālāki (in Bṛ. Up. II. 1) who offered to expound brahma to Ajātaśatru, king of Kāśi, who offered to give a thousand cows if he did so and remarked that people run exclaiming 'Janaka, Janaka' (meaning Janaka is donor and also listener to brahma exposition).[2556] Bāiāki offered twelve objects of meditation on brahma such as the person in the sun, the person in the moon &c. Ajātaśatru replied as to the twelve objects that he knew them already and brahma is different from them and cannot be understood by what he said. Then Bālāki remained silent. Bālāki offered to be his pupil. Then Ajātaśatru said[2557] " this is topsy-turvy that a brāhmaṇa should approach a ksatriya as a pupil with the idea 'the kṣatriya would expound brahman to him.' I shall make known to you (brahma)." So saying he took hold of Bālāki's hand and got up (from his seat). Certain matters in this story must be carefully noted here. This does not at all say that the class of brāhmaṇas did not know brahmavidyā and that kṣatriyas alone were then the only possessors of it. On the contrary, Janaka is specially mentioned as a donor of cows and is eager to listen to brahmavidyā and people ran to him desiring to accept large gifts of cows for imparting brahmavidyā. We know about Janaka from Bṛ. Up. III. 1 ff. wherein Janaka king of Videha, offered a thousand cows and, when Yājñavalkya took away those cows, numerous persons present in Janaka's court such as his hotṛ priest Aśvala, Ārtabhāga, Gargī, Uddālaka Āruṇi, Vidagdha Śākalya ply him with questions. In Bṛ. Up. IV. 4, 7 (Janaka offers a thousand cows to Yājñavalkya, in IV. 4.23 (Janaka offers to give his Videha kingdom to Yājñavalkya along with himself as a slave). The story of Bālāki only comes to this at the most that when Janaka had learnt brahmavidyā, a brāhmaṇa Bālāki did not know it though he professed to know it, and had to be instructed in it by king Ajātaśatru of Kāśī, who knew it and who only stated that a brāhmaṇa did not become a pupil of a kṣatriya. All brāhmṇas could never have been proficient in brahmavidyā much less kṣatriyas. One regrets to say that Deussen is guilty of making a sweeping generalisation without adequate data. It may be noted that in this story Ajātaśatru of Kāśī does not say that the Vidyā was not known to any brāhmaṇas before (as Pravāhaṇa Jaivali claimed), but, on the contrary, expressed surprise that a brāhmaṇa should come to him for learning the Vidyā.

---

2556. हसवालाकिर्हान्यूचानो गार्ग्य आस स होवाचाजातशत्रुं काशि ब्रह्म ते ब्रवाणीति स होवाचाजातशत्रुः सहस्रमेतस्यां वाचि वदमो जनको जनक इति वै जना धावन्तीति। बृह. उप. II. 1. 1; the words 'ब्रह्म ते ... धावन्तीति occur in कौषीतकि उप. IV. which has the same story with some variations. Max-Muller's tr. in. S. B. E. vol. I. p. 300 " for verily all people run away saying 'Janaka (king of Mithilā) is our father (patron) " is not accurate and does not bring out the sense properly. Saṅkarācārya's explanation is far more satisfactory' 'जनको विस्तुर्जनकः शुश्रूषुरिति ब्रह्म शुश्रूषवो विवक्षवः प्रतिजिघृक्षवश्च जना धावन्ति).'

2557. सहोवाचाजातशत्रुः। प्रतिलोमं चैतद्यद् ब्राह्मणः क्षत्रियमुपेयाद् ब्रह्म मे वक्ष्यतीति। ज्येव त्वा ज्ञपयिष्यामीति। तं पाणावादायोत्तस्थौ। बृह. उप. almost the same words occur in कौषी. उप. IV. 18 'प्रतिलोमरूपमेव तत् स्याद्यत्क्षत्रियो ब्राह्मणमुपनयेत्। प्रेहि ज्येव त्वा ज्ञपयिष्यामीति तं ह पाणावभिपद्य प्रवव्राज।'.

The same story occurs in Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad[2538] IV. 1–19 often in the same words. Bālāki offers 16 explanations about the objects of his meditation. The V. S. devotes three sūtras (I. 4. 16-18) to the passage in which Ajātaśatru stated ' He who is the maker of those persons (you mentioned), he of whom all this is the work, he alone is to be known '. There is in Bṛ. Up. II. 1 and Kauṣītaki Up. IV hardly anything about transmigration. Both passages simply affirm that from the Ātman all prāṇas, all worlds, all gods, all elements spring forth (Bṛ. II. 2. 20). This is nothing more than what is stated in the leading text (Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 7) of Yājñavalkya or in Chān. Up. VI. 1–16 in the oft-repeated words of Āruṇi to his son Śvetaketu (aitadātmyam idam sarvam...tattvamasi).

It is most surprising that Deussen should press into service the story of Sanatkumāra and Nārada in order to fortify his proposition that kṣatriyas were the original possessors of the great doctrines of Vedānta. He relies on Chān. Up. VII, where it is said that Nārada approached Sanatkumāra and prayed 'Teach me, Sir.' Sanatkumāra said to him 'tell me what you know; then I shall tell you what is beyond that'. Nārada stated (in Chān. Up. VII. 1-2) that he had studied the four Vedas,[2559] Itihāsa-purāṇa and gave a long list of lores including Devavidyā, Brahmavidyā (whatever that may mean), kṣatravidyā, Nakṣatravidyā, admitted he knew mantras only and did not know Ātman (the Self) and added 'I have heard from men like you that he who knows the Ātman overcomes sorrow. I am in sorrow; bhagavan ! do help me to cross (to get over) my sorrow.' Sanatkumāra replied 'whatever you have studied is mere name, there is something better than a name'. Then Sanatkumāra teaches him to meditate on speech as better than name, then on manas as better than speech and several others as better than the preceding (in VII. 4-24) till he reaches bhūman (the Infinite, the Paramātman) and describes bhūman in VII. 25-26 ending with the words 'all this springs from the Self' and it is stated at the end (in VII. 26. 2) 'Bhagavān (venerable) Sanatkumāra showed to Nārada, all whose blemishes had been crushed (uprooted), what is beyond darkness (avidyā); they call him (Sanatkumāra) Skanda.'[2560]

2558. यो वै बालाक एतेषां पुरुषाणां कर्ता यस्य वैतत्कर्म स वै वेदितव्य इति। कौषी. उप. IV. 18. The conclusion in वे. सू. I. 4. 16–18 is that the person to be known is Paramātman and the words यस्य वैतत्कर्म refer to the world (जगत्), and that this has no reference to ' jīva ' or principal prāṇa.

In all this long passage there is not a word whether Sanatkumāra and Nārada belonged to a brāhmaṇa or kṣatriya class. Skanda is known in classical Sanskrit as the God of War (as in Gītā X. 24 'Senānīnām-aham Skandaḥ') and in the Vanaparva 229. 22-23 he is mentioned as the commander of the armies of gods and the Śāntiparva mentions that Nārada approached Devala for knowledge about the creation and dissolution of the world (chap. 275 = 267 of Cr. ed.). From this Deussen at once draws the conclusion that Sanatkumāra must have been a kṣatriya and Nārada a brāhmaṇa. In the Mahābhārata, Manusmṛti and the Purāṇas both of them are semi-divine sages and beyond varṇa or caste. Gītā X. 13 speaks of Nārada as Devarṣi, the Vāyu-purāṇa speaks of Parvata and Nārada as sons of Kaśyapa and as included among Devarṣis (Vāyu 61. 85). The Manusmṛti includes Nārada among the first ten Prajāpatis 2559. Compare Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 10 for a similar but smaller list of lores that are said to be the breath of the great Being and another list of the four Vedas and six Vedāṅgas (called aparāvidyā) in Muṇḍaka Up. I. 1. 5.

2560. तस्मै मृदितकषायाय तमसस्पारं दर्शयति भगवान् सनत्कुमारः। तं स्कन्द इत्याचक्षते। छा. उप. VII. 26. 2. कषाय means रागद्वेषादिदोषः; the root स्कन्द् is given two senses in धातुपाठ viz. गति and शोषणे.

(I. 25). The Brahmapurāṇa (I. 46–47) describes both Skanda and Sanatkumāra as sons of Brahmā. The Nāradīyapurāṇa (Pūrvabhāga, 2. 3) speaks of Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanatkumāra and Sanātana as the mind-born sons of Brahmā and Sanatkumāra as brahmavādin and as expounding all Dharmas to Nārada. The Vāmanapurāna (60. 68–69) describes the same four as sons of Dharma and Ahiṁsā, and as exponders of Yogaśāstra. To crown all, Kūrmapurāṇa [2561] I. 7. 20–21 speaks of these four along with Kratu as Vipras (brāhmaṇas), yogins, and as mind-born sons of Brahmā. Sanatkumāra might have been literally or metaphorically called 'Skanda', because he attacked and routed Avidyā just as God Skanda routed armies of asuras, if at all the myth about Skanda was known in times before the Upaniṣads.

Chān. Up. I. 8 narrates that there were (in some part of India not mentioned) three persons well versed in (the esoteric meaning of Udgītha i. e. Om), viz. Śilaka Śālāvatya, Caikitāyana Dālbhya and Pravāhana Jaivali. They sat down for a discussion on Udgītha. The first two (who were brāhmaṇas) first put questions to each other and answered. Then Pravāhana Jaivali told them that they were giving replies about matters that were not permanent. Then Pravāhana Jaivali told them that Ākāśa was the origin of this world, that beings owe their origin to Ākāśa and will return into it, that Ākāśa is Udgītha, greater than the great and without end &c. Deussen relies on this passage also for supporting his theory. Udgīthavidyā is only one of several Upāsanās in the Upanisads. Therefore, what would follow is that Pravāhaṇa Jaivali knew it and two brāhmanas of some place not mentioned did not know it. It is not possible to see how this story lends any support to Deussen's sweeping thesis of all brāhmaṇas being originally excluded from the central doctrine of identity. In the same context (Chān. Up. I. 9. 3) Pravāhaṇa mentions that one Atidhanvan Śaunaka[2562] taught Udgītha-vidyā to Udaraśāṇḍilya.

2561. अग्रे ससर्ज वै ब्रह्मा मानसानात्मनः समान्। सनकं सनातनं चैव तथैव च सनन्दनम्। क्रतुं सनत्कुमारं च पूर्वमेव प्रजापतिः। एतेते योगिनो विप्राः परं वैराग्यमाश्रिताः। कूर्म I. 7. 19–21.

2562. Dhanus becomes 'dhanvan' when it is at the end of a bahuvrihi compound, according to Pāṇini V. 4. 132. (धनुषश्च). What is the meaning of अतिधन्वन् as a बहुव्रीहि? It may mean 'who has gone beyond the bow (i. e. who is far above those who wield the bow). धन्वन् itself means a bow (as in Rg. VI. 75. 2 and 3) and 'arid desert' in the Ṛgveda (x. 4. 1. धन्वञ्चिव प्रपा असि). Then अतिधन्वन् may mean one who had crossed an arid desert and would have nothing to do with one wielding a bow.

Deussen without giving any reason asserts 'the names allow of the conjecture that in this case also a brāhmaṇa received instruction from a kṣatriya' (p. 18). He probably connected the first name with 'dhanus' (bow) which was the forte of kṣatriyas. But he forgets that Śaunaka and Śāṇḍilya are both brāhmaṇa names. This will illustrate how even the most profound scholar goes astray when he becomes over-enthusiastic about a theory of his. In this story Pravāhaṇa does not claim that the Udgīthavidyā was unknown among brāhmaṇas. On the contrary he himself states that Śaunaka, a brāhmaṇa (called Atidhanvan) expounded that Vidyā to Udaraśāṇḍilya, another brāhmaṇa. Besides, Udgīthavidya is only one among numerous upāsanās and what Pravāhaṇa teaches is that all bhūtas spring from Ākāśa and are absorbed in Ākāśa, the purport being that Ākāśa here denotes brahman as the V. S. (I. 1. 22) establishes. This doctrine is the same as the one taught in Tai. Up. III. 6 (basis of V. S. I. 1.2) and other texts. Moreover, there is nothing about transmigration in this passage of Chān. Up.

The sheet anchor of the views of Deussen and Dr. Bhandarkar are the dialogue between Pravāhaṇa Jaivali and Śvetaketu (Bṛ. Up. VI. 2, Chān. Up. V. 3–10) about Pañcāgni-vidyā and that between Aśvapati Kaikeya and Uddālaka Āruṇi about Vaiśvānara (Chān. V. 11. 24). The latter has been already dealt with. In the former occurs an important passage which has been made much of and misunderstood. Before proceeding to expound the Pañcāgnividyā to Śvetaketu and his father Āruṇi Gautama, Pravāhaṇa Jaivali remarks (Chān. Up. V. 3. 7) 'this vidyā did not go to brāhmaṇas before you; therefore in all worlds domination (or government) has remained with the kṣatriya class alone'. In the corresponding Bṛ. Up. passage the words are 'this vidyā did not reside in any brāhmaṇa before this day, but I shall expound it to you, for, who would like to refuse when you address me thus'[2563] (viz. I approach you as pupil). In the 2563. यथेयं न प्राक् त्वत्तः पुरा विद्या ब्राह्मणान् गच्छति । तस्माद्व सर्वेषु लोकेषु क्षत्रस्यैव प्रशासनमभूत् । छा. V. 3. 7; यथेयं विद्येतः पूर्वं न कस्मिंश्चन ब्राह्मण उवास । तां त्वहं तुभ्यं वक्ष्यामि । को हि त्वैवं ब्रुवन्तमर्हति प्रत्याख्यातुमिति । बृह. VI. 2. 8. प्रशासन is translated by MaxMuller as 'teaching' in S. B. E. Vol. I. p. 78. But it is better to take प्रशासन in the sense of 'domination or government,' as is clearly the meaning of the word in Bṛ. Up. III. 8. 9 एतस्य वा अक्षरस्य प्रशासने गार्गि सूर्याचन्द्रमसौ विधृते तिष्ठतः'. Besides, there is nothing to show that kṣatriya rulers everywhere were teaching that doctrine (if we take prasāsane to mean

(Continued on next page)

Kauṣītaki Up. I. the doctrine of the two paths of Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa is expounded to Āruni (and his son Śvetaketu) by Citra Gārgyāyaṇi (v. l. Gāṅgyāyani), but the remarks about kṣatriyas alone being the first possessors of the doctrine do not occur there at all and Gārgyāyaṇi appears to be a brāhmaṇa teacher. The question is: what is meant by 'this vidyā' in the above passages of Chān. and Bṛ. Upaniṣads? In the Upaniṣads (particularly in Chāndogya and Bṛ.) numerous vidyās for the upāsanā of brahman by men that are not yet far advanced on the path of brahmavidyā are dilated upon, such as Udgīthavidyā (Chān. Up. I. 8-9, Bṛ. Up. I. 3), Daharavidyā (Chān. VIII. 1. 1-2, Bṛ. Up. I. 3, Vedāntasūtra 1. 3. 14-21), Madhuvidyā (Chān. III. 1. 1 ff., Bṛ. Up. II. 5. 1-15), Saṁvargavidyā (Chān. IV. 3). In the same way Pañcāgnividyā is an Upāsanā. Deussen and others admit (as shown above) that the great and original texts about the identity of the individual self with the Supreme Self and about transmigration of the soul based on works and conduct are those of Yājñavalkya in the Bṛ. Up. The Pañcāgnividyā expatiates upon and is concerned mainly with only one aspect of transmigration viz. the path of those who living in a village practise a life of sacrifices, works of public utility and alms. The five fires and five offerings relate only to the pitṛyāṇa path. It contains an esoteric and semi-physical explanation of the process by which persons come to be born again on the earth. At the most it may be argued that some kṣatriya rulers or noblemen claimed to have given an esoteric or metaphorical explanation of the mode of the return of pious men from the moon to the earth again. Nothing positive is said as to whether Pravāhaṇa Jaivali was the ruler of a country or only a kṣatriya (rājanya in Bṛ. Up. VI. 2.3, Chān. Up. V. 3.5) but we are told that Aśvapati was king of the Kekaya country in the extreme northwest of India, while the original proclaimer of the immortality of the self and its identity with the supreme self was Yājñavalkya who was in Videha (Mithilā, modern Bihar), which was at least a thousand miles away from Kekaya. Yājñavalkya's philosophy must have taken a long time before it became well known in the distant Kekaya. Conceding for argument that a few rulers like Aśvapati were the first to propound an explanation of the way of the transmigration of pious sacrificers and the like, it is a far cry from that to assume as Deussen does (Ph. Up. p. 20) that the doctrine of the Ātman as the first Principle of the universe was fostered and progressively developed by the kṣatriyas in opposition to the principles of the brahmanical ritual and this assumption is contrary to what he himself states elsewhere in his own work (pp. 410, 281, 348).

(Continued from last page)

(teaching). Further, this sentence (in Chān. V. 3. 7. is a boastful assertion like the one of Aśvapati in Chān. V. 11. 5. that there was in his country of Kekaya no thief, no miser, no drunkard, no man who had not consecrated sacred fire in his house, no ignorant person and no adulterer.

Before proceeding further a passage from the Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 10 and another from the Ait. Up. (II. 4–5) would have to be considered. In Bṛ. Up. occurs the following passage:[2564] "In the beginning brahman was there, it cognised itself as 'I am brahma'; therefore it became all; whoever from among the Gods perceived this (viz. 'I am brahman'), he became that (brahman); the same occurred to sages and men. The sage Vāmadeva realizing this reached the conclusion 'I was (or became) Manu and the Sun also.' Therefore, this (will occur) even now. Whoever (even a man) who realizes 'I am brahman he becomes (identical with) all this (universe); even the gods are not able to prevent that man's being one with brahman and with all, for he is the soul of all these." Deussen translates 'aham Manurabhavam Sūryaśca' as 'I was once Manu, I was once the Sun'. There is no word for 'once' and it is supplied by Deussen who remarks 'as a proof of his knowledge of brahman, (Vāmadeva) alleged his acquaintance with his former births as Manu and Sūrya' (p. 317). The words can very well be construed as meaning that Vāmadeva, having realized brahman when he sang the hymn Rg. IV. 26, expressed his identity with Manu and Sūrya (and the whole universe). There is no express reference to former births and Śaṅkarācārya in [2565] his bhāṣya on Bṛ. Up. understands the passage in this sense and does not refer to former births. It cannot be said that the Bṛ. Up. quotes Rg. IV. 26. 1 for supporting the conception of transmigration but it relies on it merely for the conception of identity of the individual soul with the Supreme Self.

---

2564. ब्रह्म वा इदमग्र आसीत्। तदात्मानमेवावेत्। अहं ब्रह्मास्मीति। तस्मात्तत्सर्वमभवत्। तद्यो यो देवानां प्रत्यबुध्यत स एव तदभवत्। तथर्षीणाम्। तथा मनुष्याणाम्। तद्धैतत्पश्यन्नृषिर्वामदेवः प्रतिपेदेऽहं मनुरभवं सूर्यश्चेति। तदिदमप्येतर्हि य एवं वेदाहं ब्रह्मास्मीति स इदं सर्वं भवति। तस्य ह देवाश्चनाभूत्या ईशते। आत्मा ह्येषां स भवति। बृह. उप. I. 4. 10; compare मुण्डकोप. III. 2. 9 'यो हि तत्परमं ब्रह्म वेद ब्रह्मैव भवति। ... तरति शोकं तरति पाप्मानं गुहाग्रन्थिभ्यो विमुक्तोऽमृतो भवति।; कठोप. 4. 15 यथोदकं शुद्धे शुद्धमासिक्तं तादृगेव भवति। एवं मुनेर्विजानत आत्मा भवति गौतम।; कठोप. 6. 14 'अथ मर्त्योऽमृतो भवत्यत्र ब्रह्म समश्नुते॥; मुण्डक III. 2. 8 यथा नद्यः ... परात्परं पुरुषमुपैति दिव्यम् and प्रश्न. VI. 5 स यथेमा नद्यः &c.; छा. उप. VIII. 12. 3 and वे. सू. I. 4. 22 and शाङ्करभाष्य thereon. These passages emphasize that the moment a man realizes the identity of the self and the Supreme Self and moulds his life accordingly, he becomes brahman and that his works after this realization do not cling to him. Vide for this latter proposition, Chān. Up. IV. 14. 3 (यथा पुष्करपलाश आपो न श्लिष्यन्त एवमेवंविदि पापं कर्म न श्लिष्यत इति), Muṇḍaka Up. III. 1. 3 (तद्या विद्वान्पुण्यपापे विधूय निरञ्जनः परमं साम्यमुपैति), मुण्डक II. 2. 9, बृह. उप. IV. 4. 22–23 and वे. सू. IV. I. 13–15.

Then there is a passage in the Ait. Up. which Deussen refers to (pp. 317–318 of Ph. Up.). In the 2nd adhyāya that Upaniṣad refers to the conception of a person as the first birth; when the child is actually born that is described as the 2nd birth. Then it proceeds "He (the son) being the self of the father is placed in his (the father's) stead for the performance of all sacred works; then his other self (the father) having performed all he has to do and having reached the span of his life (having become very old) departs (from this world) and departing from this world is born again, that is his third birth. And this has been declared by a sage 'while dwelling in (mother's) womb I came to know all the births of the gods; a hundred strongholds of ayas (copper or iron) held me, but I escaped down with speed like a hawk.' Vāmadeva lying in his mother's womb declared this". In this passage the father and son are treated as identical, as elsewhere it is so said (vide note below). This Ṛgveda verse (the 2nd half) is liable to several interpretations. In the Ṛgveda (I. 80. 2, VIII. 95. 3, IX. 68. 6, X. 11. 4 &c.) it is frequently stated that (śyena) hawk brings Soma for Indra. Śyena may also be interpreted as standing for the soul and the iron fortresses as the bodies through which the transmigrating soul wanders. The Ṛgveda sage might have only meant the mythical hawk of Indra. But as the word 'janimāni' occurs in the first half the Upaniṣadic sage (in Ait. Up.) might have used the verse to support his ideas about the three births. But even in the Ait. Up. passage the three births are not clearly of one person, unless we resort to a myth, viz. the conception of a son and the son's birth are 2565. स एतस्मिन् ब्रह्मात्मदर्शनेऽवस्थितः एतान्मन्त्रान्ददर्श अहं मनुरभवं सूर्यश्चेत्यादीन्। तदेतद् ब्रह्म पश्यन्निति ब्रह्मविद्या परामृश्यते। अहं मनुरभवं सूर्यश्चेत्यादिना सर्वभावापत्तिं ब्रह्मविद्याफलं परामृशति। पश्यन् सर्वात्मभावं फलं प्रतिपेदे इत्यस्मात्पदयोगाच् ब्रह्मविद्यासहायसाधनसाध्यं मोक्षं दर्शयति। ... तस्य ह ब्रह्मविज्ञातुर्यथोक्तेन विधिना देवा महावीर्याश्च नापि अभूत्यै अभवनाय ब्रह्मसर्वभावस्य नेशते न पर्याप्ताः किमुतान्ये। शाङ्करभाष्य on बृह. उप. I. 4. 10. अहं मनुरभवं is Ṛg. IV. 26. 1.

---

taken as the two births of the father himself on the ground that the son is the father himself born again.[2566]

The Upaniṣads laid down an inexorable law that fruits of all actions, good or evil, must be experienced and that a person's deeds and conduct determined the character of his succeeding existences. But from some passages in the Upaniṣads themselves it appears that they recognised some exceptions. One exception was that when a pesron realized that he was one with brahman the actions both good and evil, if any, done by him after that Realization and before the physical death of the body produced no results. In Chān. Up. VI. 14. 3 Satyakāma[2567] Jābāla tells his pupil Upakosala that 'Just as water does not cling to a lotus leaf, so no evil deed clings to one who knows (realizes) brahman'; Chan. Up. V. 24. 3 'just as the (soft) cottonlike fibres of the iṣīkā reed when cast into fire are burnt out, so all evil deeds of him who knowing (the purport of) Vaiśvānara (brahma) offers Agnihotra are burnt'. The Bṛ. Up. states 'Him who knows these two do not overwhelm, whether he says that he did evil for some reason or that he did a good deed for some reason; he overcomes both these; neither what he has done nor what he has omitted to do afflict (lit. heat or burn) him'. The Muṇḍaka Up. provides 'when a person has seen (realized) the Highest (cause) and lowest (effect) his actions perish.' But this is only true as regards all acts before he attained Realization and all acts that his body may do after his attainment of Realization but he cannot rescind the prārabdha karma which brought about that existence wherein he reached Realization of brahman. The idea is that the actions which led to a person's present embodiment must all be consumed by the body persisting till the appointed period for its death, and then only he becomes free from the 2566. सोऽस्यायमात्मा पुण्येभ्यः कर्मभ्यः प्रतिधीयते। अथास्यायमितर आत्मा कृतकृत्यो वयोगतः प्रैति। स इतः प्रयन्नेव पुनर्जायते। तदस्य तृतीयं जन्म। तदुक्तमृषिणा। गर्भे नु ... निरवीयम्॥ इति। गर्भ एवैतच्छयानो वामदेव एवमुवाच। ऐ. उप. II. 5. This has been quoted on p. 1541. अथ प्रोष्यायन पुत्रस्य मूर्धानमभिमृशेत्। अङ्गादङ्गात् सम्भवसि हृदयादधिजायसे। आत्मा त्वं पुत्र मा विध स जीव शरदः शतम्। कौषी उप. II. 11. This is quoted as a ṛk in Nirukta III. 4 (probably because it occurs in the Kauṣītaki Āraṇyaka of the Ṛgveda).

---

2567. यथा पुष्करपलाश आपो न श्लिष्यन्त इति। छा. उप. IV. 14. 3; तद्यथेषीकातूलमग्नौ प्रोतं प्रदूयेतैवं हास्य सर्वे पाप्मानः प्रदूयन्ते य एतदेवं विद्वानग्निहोत्रं जुहोति। छा. उप. V. 24. 3; एतह्येवैते न तरत इति। अतः पापमकरवमिति। अतः कल्याणमकरवमिति। उभे उ हैवैष एते तरति। नैनं कृताकृते तपतः। बृह. उप. IV. 4. 22; क्षीयन्ते चास्य कर्माणि तस्मिन्दृष्टे परावरे। मुण्डक II. 2. 8; एवमेवेहाचार्यवान् पुरुषो वेद। तस्य तावदेव चिरं यावन्न विमोक्ष्येऽथ संपत्स्य इति। छा. उप. VI. 14. 2.

physical body. The Chān. Up. states[2568] as to a man who has attained true knowledge of the Supreme Self from a teacher that 'for him there is only delay so long as he is not delivered (from the body), then he will become perfect'. All these Upaniṣad passages are relied upon in V. S. IV. 1. 13–15 and Śaṅkarācārya explains their purpose concisely but very clearly. The Gītā also says (IV. 37) that the fire of knowledge reduces to ashes all deeds. Here all means only Sañcita and Sañciyamāna and excludes prārabdha-karma. About the acts during the period between the attainment of Vidyā and the fall of the body Śaṅkarācārya gives the instance of an arrow shot from a bow, which stops only after the initial impetus is exhausted in the flight of the arrow. Some works say that when the meritorious deed or the sinful deed done in the present life is of the extremest kind it may yield results in this very life.[2569]

The Upaniṣad theory is that one must bear the consequences of all actions, good or evil. But sometimes an evil action is done without any previous thought, as, for example, when a man's gun goes off by accident and somebody is killed or seriously injured. This led to a discussion in Dharmasūtras and Smṛtis and the doctrine of prāyaścittas (expiations) for sins was developed. From Vedic times some rites had been performed to counteract mishaps and irregularities in the course of religious ceremonies and for portentous phenomena or personal misfortunes such as a dog-bite. In these the idea was

---

2568. तदधिगम उत्तरपूर्वाघयोरश्लेषविनाशौ तद्व्यपदेशात् । इतरस्याप्येवमसंश्लेषः पाते तु । अनारब्धकार्ये एव तु पूर्वे तदवधेः । वेदान्तसूत्र IV. 1. 13–15; शाङ्करभाष्य 'ब्रह्माधिगमे सत्युत्तरपूर्वयोरघयोरश्लेषविनाशौ भवतः उत्तरस्याश्लेषः, पूर्वस्य विनाशः इतरस्यापि पुण्यस्य कर्मणः एवमघवदसंश्लेषो विनाशश्च ज्ञानवतो भवतः । अवश्यंभाविनी विदुषः शरीरपाते मुक्तिरित्यवधार्यते ।'. On बृह. उप. 1. 4. 10 the शाङ्करभाष्य states 'यावच्छरीरपातस्तावत्फलोपभोगाङ्गतया विपरीतमप्ययं रागादिदोषं च तावन्मात्रमाक्षिपत्येव । मुक्तेषुवत्प्रवृत्तफलत्वात्तद्धेतुकस्य कर्मणः । तेन न तस्य निवर्तिकी विद्या । अविरोधात् । ... ज्ञानोत्पत्तेः प्रागूर्ध्वं तत्कालजन्मान्तरसञ्चितानां च कर्मणामप्रवृत्तफलानां विनाशः सिद्धो भवति ।.' The विज्ञानदीपिका of पद्मपाद says 'उभयोर्ज्ञानतो नाशो भोगात्प्रारब्धकर्मणः ।' (verse 9). The com. says: ज्ञान is of two kinds, परोक्ष and अपरोक्ष. The first is in the form 'there is brahman and I must engage in upāsanā thereof.' The other is of this sort: 'ब्रह्म सत्यं जगन्मिथ्या । अतोहमपि ब्रह्मैवेत्याकारकं यज्ज्ञानं तदपरोक्षम् । अपरोक्षज्ञानं तावत्प्रारब्धेतरकर्मनाशकम् । एवं चात्र ज्ञानमपरोक्षमेव । तस्माद्द्वयोः सञ्चितसञ्चीयमानयोः कर्मणोर्नाशो बीजलोपः ।'

2569. पूर्वं फलति देहेऽस्मिन् कृतमत्र परत्र यत् । अदृष्टत्वाद् द्वयोरेवोत्कटमत्रैव जन्मनि ॥ वि. दी. 10; com. says 'उत्कटं तु कर्म शुभमशुभमपि एतज्जन्मकृतमेतस्मिन्नेव जन्मनि प्रारब्धमाक्रम्य फलति'. Compare अत्युत्कटैः पापपुण्यैरिहैव फलमश्नुते ।.

of ceremonial purity and the averting of evil results from such phenomena in which no question of sin as ordinarily understood entered. In the Gautama Dharmasūtra there is a discussion on this, which is probably the earliest clear exposition on expiations for sins. Gautama states that there were two views on the efficacy of expiations against sins. One view was that expiations should not be performed as regards sins, because a sin is not destroyed unless its consequences are experienced; the other view was that one should perform expiations since there are Vedic passages indicative of this, such as 'after performing the sacrifice called Punaḥstoma one can come back (i. e. become fit for) Soma sacrifice (i. e. for all Vedic rites in general)'; 'after performing the Vrātyastoma' (one becomes fit for vedic sacrifices), 'he who offers the Aśvamedha sacrifice crosses beyond all sin, beyond (even)[2570] brāhmaṇa murder.' Some held the view that only sins committed inadvertently were removed by expiations;[2571] while others held the view that expiations were efficacious even against sins committed wilfully as there are Vedic indications to that effect (Manu XI. 45). Manu, however, appears to have held that a man is relieved of the lapses inadvertently committed by means of the study of the Veda, but sins wilfully committed can be removed only by various prescribed expiations (XI. 46) and that a man must always resort to expiations for sins, since those who have not done so have to undergo a double retribution viz. the tortures of horrible hells for long terms of years and also being born in other human existences with bodily deformities and diseases (Manu XI. 48 and XII. 54). The subject of expiations and of Karmavipāka (fruition of evil actions by being born as a worm or lower animal, or having a short life and premature death and undergoing torments of Hell) has been dealt with at length in H. of Dh. Vol. IV. pp. 1–178).

2570. तत्र प्रायश्चित्तं कुर्याच्च कुर्यादिति मीमांसन्ते। न कुर्यादित्याहुः। न हि कर्म क्षीयत इति। कुर्यादित्यपरम्। पुनः स्तोमेनेष्ट्वा पुनः सवनमायान्तीति विज्ञायते। व्रात्यस्तोमैश्चेष्ट्वा। तरति सर्वं पाप्मानं तरति ब्रह्महत्यां योऽश्वमेधेन यजते। अग्निष्टुताऽभिशस्यमानं याजयेदिति च। गौ. ध. सू. 19. 3–10. Vide वसिष्ठधर्मसूत्र 22. 3–7 for almost the same words. For explanation of all these, vide H. of Dh. vol. IV pp. 61–62 and notes 152-153 thereon. For Aśvamedha freeing the sacrificer from all sins, from even brāhmaṇa-murder, vide Tai. S. V. 3. 12. 2 and Śat. Br. XIII. 3. 1. 1 'सर्वं वा एतेन पाप्मानं देवा अतरन्नपि वा एतेन ब्रह्महत्यामतरंस्तरति सर्वं पाप्मानं तरति ब्रह्महत्यां योऽश्वमेधेन यजते।'

2571. अनभिसन्धिकृते प्रायश्चित्तमपराधे। अभिसन्धिकृतेष्येके। वसिष्ठ 20. 1–2.

So far as rebirth for sins is concerned attention may be drawn here to the following authorities: Manusmṛti XII. 54–69, Yāj. III. 131, 135–136, 207–215, Viṣṇudharmasūtra, chap. 44, Atrismṛti 4. 5–14, 17–44, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 15. 1–41 (B. I. ed.), Brahmapurāṇa 217. 37–110, Garuḍapurāṇa, Pretakāṇḍa, chap 2. 60–88 (which incorporate almost word for word Yāj. III. 206–215) and also quotations from Śaṅkha Dharmasūtra collected by the present author in ABORI. vol. VIII, pp. 116–117 items 375–378 culled from the Mitākṣarā on Yāj. III. 216, the Madanapārijāta pp. 701–702, the Parāśara-Mādhavīya, vol. II. part 2 pp. 246, 259, 263, 269. For reasons of space it is not possible to set out this whole mass but a few illustrative passages will be cited.

Manu states (XII. 54–69, with which Yāj. III. 206–208 and 212–215 agree in many places) 'those guilty of mortal sins (Mahāpātakas), having gone through terrible hells during a large numbers of years, come after the expiration (of hell punishment) to the following births. The slayer of a Brāhmaṇa passes through the births of dog, pig, ass, camel, cow (or ox), goat, sheep, deer, a bird, a cāṇḍāla and a pukkasa; a brāhmaṇa who drinks the liquor called Surā enters the bodies of worms and (large) insects, of moths (or locusts), of birds feeding on ordure and of carnivorous animals; a brāhmaṇa (who steals gold of a brāhmaṇa) shall pass a thousand times through the births of spiders, snakes, lizards, aquatic animals and of destructive goblins; the violator of his guru's bed passes a hundred times through (the form of) grasses, shrubs, creepers, carnivorous animals and of beasts with fangs and of those (animals) like tigers doing cruel acts. Those men who are given to injuring others become animals that eat raw flesh, those who eat forbidden food become worms, those that thieve become creatures consuming their own kind (such as fishes) and those who have intercourse with women of the lowest classes become pretas (ghostly spirits); one who has associated with outcasts (for certain specified periods), he who approaches the wives of other men and he who has deprived a brāhmaṇa of his property (other than gold) becomes Brahmarākṣasa (an evil demon); a man who has on account of greed stolen gems, pearls or coral or any of the other kinds of precious stones is born among goldsmiths; for stealing grain a brāhmaṇa becomes a rat, for stealing bell-metal a man becomes a haṁsa bird, for depriving another of water he becomes the bird called Plava, for stealing honey a stinging insect, for stealing milk a cow, for stealing sweet juice (sugar-cane &c) a dog, for stealing clarified butter an ichneumon; for stealing meat a vulture, for stealing fat a cormorant, for stealing oil a bird called Tailapaka, for stealing salt a cricket, for stealing curds a bird called Balākā (crane); for stealing silk a partridge, for stealing linen a frog; for stealing cloth of cotton threads Krauñca bird, for stealing a cow an iguana, for stealing molasses a bird called vāgguda (a bat?), for stealing fine perfume a musk-rat, for stealing vegetables consisting of leaves a peacock, for stealing cooked food of various kinds a porcupine and for stealing uncooked food a hedgehog; for stealing fire a person becomes a heron, for stealing household utensils a mason-wasp, for stealing dyed garments a cakora bird; for stealing a deer or an elephant a wolf, for stealing a horse a tiger, for stealing fruits and roots a monkey, for stealing a woman a bear, for stealing drinking water a cātaka, for stealing vehicles a camel, for stealing cattle a he-goat; that man who has forcibly taken away any kind of property belonging to another or who eats sacrificial food of which no part has been offered in sacrifice certainly becomes a lower animal; women also who in like manner committed theft shall incur guilt; they become the females of those same creatures (enumerated above).

It may be noted that some of the births assigned to those guilty of thefts of various articles have some logic or reason behind those regulations e. g. when Manu XII. 62 and Yāj. III. 214 prescribe that a thief of grains becomes a rat in the next birth or when Manu XII. 61 prescribes that a thief of jewels, pearls and coral is born among the class of goldsmiths, one can easily appreciate this retribution as appropriate or reasonable, but the same cannot be said of all others. It is noteworthy that, in spite of what the bhāṣya on Y. S. quoted in note 2325 and pp. 1417-18 above says, a single mortal sin like brāhmaṇa-murder might make the perpetrator pass through several vile births, as stated by Manu in XII. 55-58, Yāj. III. 207-208 and by Śaṅkarācārya.[2572]

Once the strict rule of the original doctrine of Karma in the Upaniṣads was loosened by the theory of prāyaścittas, a quick pace was set even in early times for the removal or reduction of the effects of sins in other ways than by means of expiations. Gautama[2573] prescribes five means for redeeming (or expiating) blamable acts viz. inaudible recitation of the Veda, austerities, sacrifice in fire, fasting, giving gifts. The history of Dharmaśāstra vol. IV deals at some length with japa (pp. 44-51), tapas (pp. 42-43), homa (pp. 43-44), dāna (pp. 51-52) and fasting (pp. 52–54). Therefore, it is not necessary to say here anything about them. But attention must be drawn to some special and far-reaching modifications of these and other means. Śūdras and members of pratiloma castes were not authorized to study the Veda. Hence the authors of medieval works, particularly of Purāṇas, went so far as to say that remembrance[2574] of the name of Kṛṣṇa is superior to all expiations and all forms of austerities and that if a man only remembers Nārāyaṇa in the morning, noon, evening, at night and other times, he at once secures the destruction of (the consequences of) sins. Other means were also provided for the removal of sins, one being pilgrimage to holy places. Vide H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 55–56 and 552–580. Another was the practice of prāṇāyāma which has been dealt with on p. 42 of H. Dh. vol. IV.

---

2572. ब्रह्महत्यादीनां चैकैकस्य कर्मणोऽनेकजन्मनिमित्तत्वं स्मर्यमाणमुपलभ्येत। न च धर्माधर्मयोः स्वरूपफलसाधनादिसमधिगमे शास्त्रादविरिक्तं कारणं शक्यं सम्भावयितुम्। शाङ्करभाष्य on वे. सू. III. 1. 8.

Even in the earliest times open confession of sin was in certain cases regarded as freeing the person from sin. In the Cāturmāsya called Varuṇa-praghāsa, the wife who took part with her husband had to confess expressly or by some indirect ways whether she had at some time a paramour and if she did so she was purified and could take part in the sacred rites thereafter. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 575–576 and 1098 for this. Similarly, according to Āp. Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 15, I. 10. 28. 19 and 1, 10. 29. 1 it was necessary when undergoing expiations for forsaking one's wife or for brāhmaṇa murder to confess one's sin. So also the brahmacārin, if guilty of sexual intercourse, had to proclaim his lapse while begging at seven houses (vide Gautama and Manu quoted below).[2575]

---

2573. तस्य निष्कृयणानि जपस्तपो होम उपवासो दानम्। गौ. ध. सू. 19.11. In 19.12 Gautama gives a long list of Vedic texts the recitation of which purified a person of sins. Manu (XI. 249–250) specifies Vedic hymns and verses that remove the consequence of brāhmaṇa-murder, drinking Surā, theft of gold, violation of guru's bed and other grave and light sins and highly praises (XI. 259–260) the japa of Aghamarṣaṇa hymn (Ṛg. X. 190.1-3) as removing all sins.

2574. प्रायश्चित्तान्यशेषाणि तपःकर्मात्मकानि वै। यानि तेषामशेषाणां कृष्णानुस्मरणं परम्॥ प्रायनिर्हारं तथा सन्ध्यॉमध्याह्नादिषु संस्मरन्। नारायणमवाप्नोति सद्यः पापक्षयं नरः॥ विष्णुपु. II. 6. 39 and 41, भागवपु. 22.39. These are q. by प्राय. विवेक p. 31, अपरार्क p. 1232 and प्राय. तत्त्व p. 524.

Repentance (anutāpa). Manu (XII. 227 and 230) provides that a sinner is relieved of the consequences of sin by proclaiming his sin to people, by repentance, by austerities, by recitation of Vedic texts, by gifts in case of distress (i. e. if he is unable to undergo tapas); a man after commiting a sin becomes free from it by feeling remorse and if he makes a resolve 'I shall never again do so' he is purified. The Viṣṇupurāṇa provides that, when afer committing a sin the man feels remorse, the one high expiation that he has then to undergo is the remembrance of Hari.[2576] MacNicol, a Scottish Missionary, wrote a work (in 1915) on 'Indian theism' in which he boldly asserts, after referring to the Upanisadic doctrine of Karma that 'there is no place for repentance in the Hindu doctrine of Karma' (p. 223). It has been shown above that confession was known in Vedic times and that repentance was valued in Dharmaśāstra works either as removing sins or as making the repentant man fit for receiving expiatory rites (vide H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 41–42). The worthy missionary author probably thinks his Christian brand of remission of sins by confession and repentance better than the Upaniṣadic teaching. Ancient Indian authors were not prepared to accept mere confession and repentance as enough to absolve a man of all sins. The Biblical position that if one believes in Christ and his gospel, confesses his sins and says he repents (as required in Matthew 4. 17, Mark I. 15 and Luke 24. 47) is very likely to engender among common men a complacent attitude about sins. This complacent frame of mind, the ancient Dharmaśāstra writers wanted to prevent and therefore, they insisted upon a good deal more than repentance and confession of sins. They blended the old doctrine of confession and repentance with retribution viz. hell tortures and vile births. Later Paurāṇik writers approached very close to the probable attitude of common Christians that one has simply to believe in Christ as a redeemer, to confess and to take the name of God for being absolved from all sins. Macnicol either did not read the relevant texts from Purāṇas or he forgot them when he made the assertion noted above.

---

2575. तस्याजिनमूर्ध्ववालं परिधाय लोहितपात्रः सप्त गृहान्भैक्षं चरेत्कर्माचक्षाणः। गौ. 23. 18; मनु XI. 122 एतस्मिन्नेनसि प्राप्ते वसित्वा गर्दभाजिनम्। सप्तागारांश्चरेद्भैक्षं स्वकर्म परिकीर्तयन्॥.

2576. कृते पापेऽनुतापो वै यस्य पुंसः प्रजायते। प्रायश्चित्तं तु तस्यैकं हरिसंस्मरणं परम्॥ विष्णुपु. II. 6. 40.

Long before MacNicol wrote and since his days numerous Western scholars brought up in Christian surroundings have expressed their view that the ancient Indian doctrine as regards man's destiny after death is far more preferable to Biblical ideas on the same subject. It is enough to refer to only two or three authors. Arberry in his 'Asiatic Jones' quotes (p. 37) from Sir William Jones' letter to Earl Spencer the following passage 'I am no Hindu, but I hold the doctrine of the Hindus concerning a future state to be incomparably more rational, more pious and more likely to deter men from vice, than the horrid opinions inculcated by Christians on punishments without end'. Lowes Dickinson in 'Religion and Immortality' (Dent and Sons, 1911) observes (on p. 74) 'it is really a consoling idea that our present capacities are determined by our previous actions and that our present actions again will determine our future character'. Owen Rutter, author of 'the scales of Karma' (London, 1925) says that Christianity has failed to solve the intellectual and moral problems which beset those who live in the complexities of the modern world, that he began to study the doctrine of Karma and reincarnation seven years before he wrote the book, which is a personal statement rather than an essay on Karma (pp. 12–13). Many who have written against this doctrine, while conceding that the Upaniṣadic doctrine is an ancient and serious attempt to solve the problem of injustice and evil in the world, call it a weak one and beset with difficulties. One should like to ask, what systems of religion and philosophy are not beset with difficulties? One may take the Christian doctrines for example. To all non-Christians (and to several Christians also in modern times) its doctrine of original sin, its damnation of unbaptized infants, of predestination deduced from the belief that God is an Omniscient and Omnipotent Creator of heaven and earth appear strange and unjustified. L. T. Hobhouse in 'Morals in Evolution' part II (1906) pp. 130 ff points out how all systems with a personal God, particularly Christianity, are beset with difficulties, such as making the problem of evil urgent, eternal punishment for a great sinner in one life suggestive of a moral impossibility, the inescapable conclusion that all men, however good, that did not or could not or do not believe in Christ and are not members of the Christian Church by baptism are irrevocably doomed. That Christianity is unique and that Christians are God's chosen people are beliefs which would make God appear quite unjust and therefore some Christian writers like Prof. Toynbee in 'Christianity among the religions of the world' (Oxford Un. Press, 1958) have begun to urge that Christianity must be purged of such beliefs (pp. 13 and 95).

The strict doctrine of Karma would require that there can be no transfer of good or bad karma from one man to another and a man cannot suffer for the sins of others. But in the Ṛgveda there are allusions to the belief that God might inflict punishment on the sons for the sins of their fathers. For example, in Ṛg. VII. 86. 5 Vasiṣṭha[2577] prays to Varuṇa "cast away from us the transgressions of our fathers, and those that we committed in our own person'; 'May we not have to suffer for the sin committed by another, may we not do that for which you punish (this is addressed to Viśve-devāḥ). The Śāntiparva, however, asserts 'whatever deed a man does in four ways viz. with eye, with thought, speech or action, he receives (in return) that same kind of action; a man does not enjoy (i. e. experience the results of) the good deeds or evil deeds of another; man attains (a result) in consonance with the actions done by himself'.[2578] Similarly, in the Gṛdhra-gomāyu-saṁvāda, it is asserted 'the son does not have to go by the path due to the actions of the father, nor vice versa, they being bound by their own respective good or evil deeds proceed each by a different path'. Whatever deed a man does, whether holy or very unholy (terrible), the consequences of that are experienced by the doer alone, what have the relatives to do with that' (Śāntiparva 153. 38 and 41 = cr. ed. 149. 34 and 37).

Modifications of this doctrine were early introduced. The Gaut.[2579] Dh. S. provides that the king should guard all the

---

2577. अव द्रुग्धानि पित्र्या सृजा नोऽव या वयं चकृमा तनूभिः। ऋ. VII. 86 5; मा व एनो अन्यकृतं भुजेम मा तत्कर्म वसवो यच्चयध्वे। ऋ. VI. 51. 7; ऋ. VII. 52. 2 practically repeats this 'मा वो भुजेमान्धजातमेनो मा तत्कर्म वसवो यच्चयध्वे॥.'

2578. चक्षुषा मनसा वाचा कर्मणा च चतुर्विधम्। कुरुते यादृशं कर्म तादृशं प्रतिपद्यते॥ नायं परस्य सुकृतं दुष्कृतं चापि सेवते। करोति यादृशं कर्म तादृशं प्रतिपद्यते॥ शान्तिपर्व 279. 15 and 21 (= 290. 16, 22 of Ch. ed.)

2579. Vide also शान्तिपर्व 287. 28 (= ch. ed. 298. 30); वर्णानाश्रमांश्च न्यायतोऽभिरक्षेत्। चलतश्चैतान् स्वधर्मे स्थापयेत्। धर्मस्य ह्यंशभाग्भवतीति। गौ. XI. 9-11.

varṇas and āśramas according to Śāstra and if they swerve from their duties he should make them follow their duties, since he gets a share of the dharma (merit) observed by them. Manu provides (VIII. 304-305, 308) that the king who protects his subjects secures the sixth part of the (spiritual) merit of all (his subjects), but if he does not guard them he also shares in the sixth part of their adharma (sin); the king who protects well is entitled to the sixth part of the merit of the Veda study, the sacrifices, the gifts, and of the worship of gods done by all subjects; that king who takes as his one-sixth part of the crops and other products, but fails to guard the subjects is declared (by sages) as receiving all the sins of all his subjects'. Manu says elsewhere (in IX. 301) that the king is the Yuga, that his actions may bring in Kṛta or any of the other Yugas. Kālidāsa in Śākuntala echoes this idea.[2580] Manu (in VIII. 316) provides that when a thief comes to a king, confesses his guilt and asks the king to punish him with a heavy staff or a sharp weapon and the king either punishes him or lets him off, the thief is freed from (the effects of) the sin, but the king incurs the guilt of the thief if he does not punish him. To the same effect is Vasiṣṭha 19. 46 and 20. 41. It was stated by Manu (III. 100) that all the merit of even a man who lives a plain life by subsisting on grains left in the field after the crops are garnered and who performs homa in the five fires (to be kept by an householder) is taken away by a brāhmaṇa guest who stays unhonoured by him. Śāntiparva, Viṣṇu Dh. S. and several Purāṇas provide that [2581] when a guest, being disappointed (in getting food), turns away from the house of a person, the guest goes away taking all the merit of the person and transfers to him all his own misdeeds. This was probably not meant to be taken literally. It is only an arthavāda (in the language of the Mīmāṁsā) and merely exhorts a householder to honour a guest properly. The exhortation addressed by the judge to a witness before the latter began to depose contains in Yāj. the following 2581. अतिथिर्यस्य भग्नाशो गृहात्प्रतिनिवर्तते। स तस्मै दुष्कृतं दत्त्वा पुण्यमादाय गच्छति॥ शान्तिपर्व 184. 12 (expressly quoted) as a श्लोक = Ch. ed. 191. 12), विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 67. 33, विष्णुपुराण III. 9. 15 and III. 11. 68, वराहपुराण 170. 46 (with variations).

---

2580. सर्वतो धर्मषड्भागो राज्ञो भवति रक्षतः। अधर्मादपि षड्भागो भवत्यस्य ह्यरक्षतः॥ मनु VIII. 304; compare शाकुन्तल II. 14 'यदुत्तिष्ठति वर्णेभ्यो नृपाणां क्षयि तत्फलम्। तपःषड्भागमक्षय्यं ददत्यारण्यका हि नः॥.'

verse [2582]: 'whatever good deeds you performed in hundreds of existences, all that will go to that party whose defeat you will bring about by your false evidence.' The Mit. and Aparārka both say that this is meant only to frighten and quote a verse of Nārada (ṛṇādāna 200) in support 'he (the judge) should frighten them (from telling lies) by citing ancient dharmaśāstra texts, by recounting the greatness of truth and by censuring falsehood.' Manu (VIII. 90), however, makes the exhortation run as follows 'Whatever good deeds you performed from your birth, the merit of all of them would go to dogs if you will depose falsely'. Manu XII. 81 says [2583] 'with whatever disposition of mind (either sāttvika or rājasa or tāmasa) a man does an act he reaps the fruits thereof (in a future life) in a body endowed with the same character.'

The Bhagavadgītā, apart from the fact that knowledge of reality destroyed the effects of all deeds, emphasized at the end the path of singleminded devotion (bhakti) to God and surrendering all one's acts and their fruits to Him 'giving up all the various paths, come to me alone as your refuge; don't grieve, I shall release you from the consequences of all evil deeds, if any, of yours'. [2584]

As regards husband and wife, the Dharmaśāstra works say a good deal but all that is said should not be taken literally. For example, Manu (V. 164–166) states [2585] 'by playing false to her husband (i. e. by adultery) the wife is censured in this world, she becomes (after death) a female jackal and is tormented by evil diseases (such as leprosy). That woman controlling herself in thought, word and deed, who does not play false to her 2582 सुकृतं यत्त्वया किंचिज्जन्मान्तरशतैः कृतम्। तत्सर्वं तस्य जानीहि यं पराजयसे मृषा॥ या. II. 75; the मिता० says: अन्यस्यानेकजन्मार्जितसुकृतसंक्रमणस्य महापातकादिफलप्राप्तेश्चानृतवचनमात्रेणानुपपत्तेः साक्षिसंत्रासार्थमिदमुच्यते। यथाह नारदः। पुराणैर्धर्मवचनैः सत्यमाहात्म्यकीर्तनैः। अनृतस्यापवादैश्च भृशमुत्त्रासयेद्दिमान्॥ इति॥.

---

2583. यादृशेन तु भावेन यद्यत्कर्म निषेवते। तादृशेन शरीरेण तत्तत्फलमुपाश्नुते॥ मनु XII. 81.

2584. सर्वधर्मान्परित्यज्य मामेकं शरणं व्रज। अहं त्वा सर्वपापेभ्यो मोक्षयिष्यामि मा शुचः॥ भगवद्गीता 18.63. Here dharma does not mean 'religion' but paths which are deemed to lead to man's goal and many of which are set out in Śāntiparva 342.10–16 (= Ch. ed. 354. 10–16), such as mokṣadharma, yajñadharma, rājadharma, ahiṁsādharma. The last verse in that chapter is 'एवं बहुविधैर्लोकैर्धर्मद्वारैरनावृतैः। ममापि मतिराविग्ना मेघलेखेव वायुना॥' husband, resides in the same world (heaven) as her husband, and is called a virtuous wife. A woman restrained in thought, word and deed, secures by such conduct (as is laid down for her) in this life highest renown and residence with her husband in the next world'. For hyperbolical descriptions of the power of a chaste wife (pativratā) in the great epic and Purāṇas, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 567–568. A verse cited there may be repeated here 'just as a snake-charmer forcibly draws out from a hole a snake, so a chaste wife snatches away her husband's life from the messengers of death and reaches heaven with her husband'. This is also an arthavāda but it probably reflected the popular ideas of those times.

2585. मनु V. 164–165 are repeated in मनु IX. 30, 29.

The Mahābhārata has certain interesting verses on the transference of the effects of karma to one's descendants. The Ādiparva states 'if the consequences of sin are not seen affecting the perpetrator, they will surely be seen in the sons or grandsons'. This again is an arthavāda.[2586]

It was believed that punishment by the king for a sinful deed (like a theft &c.) liquidated the consequences of the sin, made the offender pure and enabled him to reach heaven as men of good deeds do.[2587]

It is difficult to reconcile the doctrine of Karma and punar-janma with the system of Śrāddhas in which balls of rice are offered to the three paternal ancestors of the performer of śrāddha. This subject has been dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. IV. pp. 335–339. The offering of balls of rice to the spirits of the departed male ancestors was in vogue in the times of the Veda probably and even before the Vedas and the theory of Karma and Punar-janma arose later and as people were not prepared to give up the theory of śrāddhas, they kept both.

The popular idea of the last thought at one's death leading to a future birth appropriate to that thought in spite of a life of sin and iniquity is an interference with the working of the law of Karma and transmigration. This notion has been dealt with above (pp. 972–973) where it has been pointed out that that notion is not supported by the Bhagavadgītā (VIII. 5–7).

---

2586. नाधर्मश्चरितो ... कृन्तति ॥ पुत्रेषु वा नप्तृषु वा न चेदात्मनि पश्यति । फलत्येव ध्रुवं पापं शुक्लमुक्तमिवोद्वरे ॥ आदि 80: 2–3; the first has been quoted above on p. 1561 note 2532; to the same effect is शान्ति 139.22 (= cr. ed. 137.19) पापं कर्म कृतं किञ्चिद्यदि तस्मिन् न दृश्यते । नृपते तस्य पुत्रेषु पौत्रेष्वपि च नप्तृषु ॥

2587. राजभिः कृतदण्डास्तु कृत्वा पापानि मानवाः । निर्मलाः स्वर्गमायान्ति सन्तः सुकृतिनो यथा ॥ मनु VIII. 318 = वसिष्ठ 19.45 (reads धृतदण्डास्तु).

Apart from the Upaniṣads (and commentaries thereon), the Vedāntasūtras (and the bhāṣyas thereon) and the Bhagavadgītā, there are very few regular treatises on the doctrine of Karma and re-incarnation. One work comparatively early in date is the Vijñānadīpikā of Padmapāda (said to be the same as the favourite pupil of the first Śaṅkarācārya) in 71 verses (edited with a commentary and Introduction by M. M. Dr. Umesha Mishra, Allahabad, 1940) which deal with the means of achieving mokṣa by realizing the identity of the individual self and the Supreme Self (they being like the reflection and its original) and by annihilating karma. Some of the important verses in it have been adduced above in the notes. That work (verse 9) [2588] compares sañcīyamāna-karma to grain standing in the field, sañcita to grain stored in one's house and prārabdha-karma to food put in one's stomach. The food put in one's stomach is exhausted by its being digested which takes some time. Therefore, Karma of the sañcita and sañcīyamāna types is annihilated by correct knowledge, while prārabdha karma by undergoing its results for some time. It emphasizes that it is Vairāgya (extreme non-attachment to objects of sense) that leads to the rise of correct knowledge of Reality, to the elimination of vāsanās (unconsciously working impressions), to the annihilation of Karma and to cessation of rebirth.

Another work is the Janma-maraṇavicāra of Bhaṭṭa Vāmadeva (published in the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies vol. 19, 1918 A. D.). It is a small work in 25 pages.[2589] It appears to belong to the Kashmir Śaiva cult. It states that Śiva has three Śaktis, Cit-śakti (which is of the nature of light or consciousness), Svātantrya (free will, independence) and Ānandaśakti (bliss). There are six kañcukas (sheaths, covers) viz. Māyā, Kalā, Śuddha-vidyā, Rāga, Kāla and Niyantraṇā. On p. 15 it says that when the bodily machine is broken, consciousness, taking hold of prāṇana (breathing), is carried to another body by the Ātivāhika (subtle body).[2590] This latter body becomes like a vehicle between the body that lies dead and the next physical body. The work then quotes from a Kośabhāṣya three verses which support the theory of the antarābhavadeha (the intermediate body between the dead physical body and the future physical body) and also relies on Rg. X. 85. 16.[2591] It also quotes Bhagavadgītā 14. 14–15 (yadā sattve pravṛddhe tu &c) and says that those bodily states are referred to in such Vedic passages as 'Pañcāre cakre &c' (Rg. X. 164. 13), in Kaṭhopaniṣad I. 6 (sasyam-iva martyaḥ pacyate), in 'Vāsāṁsi jīrṇāni' (Gītā II. 22). He further says that by God's grace a man becomes pure and by dīkṣā and other means he understands his real character and reaches Śiva. It states that all men do not attain liberation, while those who hate (discard) dīkṣā, temples and correct knowledge go to hell. There is very little discussion about the kinds of Karma and the removal of the effects of these.

---

2588. उभयोर्ज्ञानतो नाशो भोगात्प्रारब्धकर्मणः। क्षेत्रागारोदरस्थानामक्षानामिव तद्विदा॥ वैराग्याज्ज्ञानसम्पत्तिर्वैराग्याद्वासनाक्षयः। वैराग्यात्कर्मनाशश्च कर्मनाशाज्जनेर्लयः॥ वि. दी. verses 9 and 16. The com. remarks: क्षेत्रस्थितमक्षं सञ्चीयमानं गृहस्थितमक्षं सञ्चितम्। उदरस्थितमक्षं प्रारब्धम्। तत्र क्षेत्रागारस्थितपोरक्षपोर्द्वानादिना तात्कालिकक्षपोपि सम्भवति। उदरस्थाक्षस्य तु भोगात् कालपरिपाकादेव क्षयः।

2589. The ms. of this work was copied in Laukika year 4603 i. e. 1527 A. D. The author was a disciple of योगीश्वराचार्य, probably the same as Yogarāja, who wrote a commentary on the Paramārthasāra of Abhinavagupta. So he flourished probably about 1050–1100 A. D. and at any rate before 1500 A. D.

There is another rather modern work called Prārabdha-dhvānta-saṁhṛti (destruction of the darkness i. e. ignorance about prārabdha) composed in śaka 1741 (1819 A. D.) at Pañcavaṭī near Nasik by Acyutarāya Moḍaka, a learned and prolific writer. The only known ms. is in the Mysore Government

2590. V.S. IV. 3.4, is 'ātivāhikās-talliṅgāt' and for 'antarābhavadeha', vide Ślokavārtika (ātmavāda, verse 62 p. 704 q. above in n. 2254 p. 1376) and न्या. र. यदप्यातिवाहिकं नाम शरीरं पूर्वोत्तरदेहयोरन्तराले ज्ञानसन्तानसन्धारणार्थं कल्प्यते तदपि विन्ध्यवासिना निराकृतमित्याह। अन्तरेति।

2591. द्वे ते चक्रे सूर्ये ब्रह्माण ऋतुथा विदुः। अथैकं चक्रं यद्गुहा तदद्धातय इद्विदुः॥ ऋ. X. 85.16. This literally means 'O Sūryā (daughter of the Sun)! two are thy wheels which the brāhmaṇas (or priests) know as coming at proper seasons; one of the wheels is inside a cave and is known only to addhātis (wise men?).' Acc. to Sāyaṇa here Sūryā addresses herself. The two wheels are the Sun and the Moon and the wheel in the 2nd half is a third one viz. the year. The Nighaṇṭu includes 'addhātayaḥ' among the twenty-four words meaning 'medhāvin' (III. 15). That word occurs only here in the whole of the Ṛgveda. The work explains 'Sūryā' as 'ātmaśakti' and takes 'cakra' as meaning 'body'; two bodies would be 'the present and the future body' and it holds that addhātayaḥ means 'yogins' and 'guhā' (in the cave) suggests that one body cannot be seen but is only known to yogins. That one body is the ātivāhika body according to this writer.

Oriental Library and is in Kannaḍa script. The present author got a Devanāgarī transcript of the Ms. through the kindness of the authorities of the Library.

Dr. H. G. Narahari (in N. I. A. vol. V. pp. 115–118) furnishes an account of the ms., its date and a brief description of its contents. In another paper the same scholar gives a tolerably full analysis of its contents (in J. G. J. R. I. vol. III. for 1945-46, pp. 349–367).

The author Acyutarāya states that the work really means 'Prārabdha-vāda-dhvāntasaṁhṛti' (destruction of the darkness caused by the doctrine of prārabdha) and that all that he wants is to combat the false idea that all human acts from the moment of conception to death are governed by past deeds alone to the exclusion of everything else. He postulates that all human activity is due to prārabdha, to saṁskāras (sub-conscious or latent impressions or tendencies) and prayatna (human effort). He explains : the moment after the body dies, all the accumulated good and bad deeds set in motion by God become ready to yield their retribution (results) and that a good or evil deed (or both) that is strongest begins a suitable body. The birth is that of a brāhmaṇa or the rest when there is mixed good and evil as the strongest karma, as a lower animal when sin is strongest, as a godly birth when a good deed is strongest. The duration of life may be 100 years, less or more, and bhoga means experiencing pleasure or pain that is regarded as favourable or unfavourable.[2592] Then he launches on the discussion of pleasure (sukha) as threefold, viz. illusory (prātibhāsika), actual (vyāvahārika) or actual due to illusory pleasure. Pleasure is again ramya (beautiful) and priya (dear or liked). These two are not synonymous, since gold would appear beautiful to an ascetic but it is not dear to him. Then he divides what is priya into three kinds (or degrees). He divides each of the three kinds of pleasure into three varieties, which are passed over here. The preceding are classifications of pleasure that is 'Laukikakārya' (ordinary or common); but there are also other sukhas, viz. vaidika [fourfold such as pratikopāsanā, āhārya (assumed) and vāsanātmaka

2592. प्रारब्धकरणकः संस्कारकरणकः प्रयत्नकरणकश्चापि निरुक्तव्यवहारः। देहपात-व्यवहितोत्तरक्षणे परमेश्वरेरितानि सर्वाणि सञ्चितपुण्यपापानि फलदानोन्मुखानि भवन्ति। तेषां मध्ये यद् बलवत्पुण्यं पापं वोभयं वा तद्भावितदेहमारभज्जात्यायुर्भोगदं प्रारब्धमित्युच्यते। तत्र जातिर्ब्राह्मणादिर्मिश्रे तिर्यक्त्वादि पापे देवत्वादिः पुण्ये। आयुः शतवर्षादि यथायथम्। भोगस्त्वनुकूलप्रतिकूलवेदनीयलक्षणयोः सुखदुःखयोः साक्षात्कार एव। pp. 4–5 of the transcript. He relies on the योगसूत्र II. 13 सति मूले तद्विपाको जात्यायुर्भोगाः।

(as in sleep)]. This last he subdivides into three kinds (sāttvika, rājasa and tāmasa) that are passed over. Pain (duḥkha) is divisible in the same way as sukha and the author illustrates the different kinds of pain, that are left out here. Then the author dilates upon the cause or causes of pleasure and pain (sukha and duḥkha) that constitute man's experience on earth, which causes are prārabdha (past karma that has begun to operate and determines the body the soul secures), saṁskāra and prayatna.[2593] He states that the bliss that a man feels in meditation (samādhi) is due to prārabdha, the pleasure he feels in deep sleep is due to saṁskāras[2594] and the pleasure on the fall of rain after the performance of the Kārīrī (sacrifice) is due to human effort From the Upanisad passages it follows (says Acyutarāya) that in deep sleep there is no desire, no karma and no fear and so the pleasure (expressed on waking in the words 'sukham-ahamasvāpsam' (I had a happy sleep) is not due to prārabdha but to saṁskāras. He relies on the Bṛ. Up.[2595] (IV. 4. 2) for holding this view (i. e. he takes 'pūrvaprajñā' in that passage as equal to vāsanā ('latent impressions or reminiscences of past experiences). The activities of a person in past lives may be madhya[2596] (middling or moderate),

---

2593. एवमेतादृशसुखदुःखक्षयोर्मनुष्यादीनां भोगः प्रारब्धतः संस्कारतः प्रयत्नतश्च भवति। p. 14 of transcript.

2594. The छान्दोग्योप० avers that in deep sleep man's soul loses personal consciousness and becomes merged in the Sat (the True, brahma). उद्दालको हारुणिः श्वेतकेतुं पुत्रमुवाच। स्वप्नान्तं मे सोम्य विजानीहीति। यत्रैतत्पुरुषः स्वपिति नाम सता सोम्य तदा संपन्नो भवति। तस्मादेनं स्वपितीत्याचक्षते। स्वं ह्यपीतो भवति। छा. उप. VI. 8.1. In स्वपिति, स्व means 'his own i. e. Self', पिति represents अपीत (absorbed). अपीति or अप्यय means लय. The वे. सू. I. 1, 9 (स्वाप्ययात्) and IV. 4. 16 are based on this Chāndogya text; compare बृह. उप. IV. 3. 19 यत्र 'सुप्तो न कंचन कामं कामयते न कंचन स्वप्नं पश्यति.'

2595. तमुत्क्रामन्तं प्राणोऽनूत्क्रामति। ... तं विद्याकर्मणी समन्वारभेते पूर्वप्रज्ञा च। बृह. उप. IV. 4.2, quoted by अच्युतराय on p. 16 of the transcript. शङ्कराचार्य explains: तं परलोकाय गच्छन्तमात्मानं ... विद्या च कर्म च ... विद्या सर्वप्रकारा विहिता प्रतिषिद्धा च अविहिता अप्रतिषिद्धा च तथा कर्म विहितं प्रतिषिद्धं च अविहितमप्रतिषिद्धं च समन्वारभेते ... अनुगच्छतः। पूर्वप्रज्ञा च। पूर्वानुभूतविषया प्रज्ञा पूर्वप्रज्ञा अतीतकर्मफलानुभवनासनेत्यर्थः।. वे. सू. III. 4.5 and 11 refer to this passage and explain it. अच्युतराय quotes a verse: कर्मणः क्रियमाणस्य संस्कारो यो ह्यवि स्थितः। तत्फलस्य च भुक्तस्य पूर्वप्रज्ञेति सोच्यते॥ (which is बृहदारण्यकोपनिषद्-भाष्यवार्तिक p. 1743, verse 118) p. 17 transcript. पूर्वप्रज्ञा (knowledge or acquaintance with former things) is postulated for explaining the peculiar genius or deficiency observed in children.

2596. एवं मध्यमन्दतीव्राभिधाऽप्यपि जन्मान्तरीयकर्मण्येव तारतम्यात्तथा तथोद्भवानि। तत्र त्रिपादसात्त्विकमेकपादराजसं पुण्यं मध्यम्। एवं द्विपाद्-सात्त्विक द्विपादराजसमपि

(Continued on next page)

manda (inferior), tīvra (formidable). A good deed which is three parts sāttvika and one part rājasa is called madhya; a deed which is half sāttvika and half rājasa is tīvra. Then Acyutarāya refers to a conflict of views. Following the words 'puṇyo vai puṇyena karmaṇā bhavati pāpaḥ pāpena' (Bṛ. Up. III. 3. 13 quoted in note 2510 above), some writers held that it is only Karma that is the cause of a new birth and that vidyā (knowledge of all kinds) and pūrvaprajñā have nothing to do with it, while others relying on Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 2 (to which reference is made in the Saṅkṣepaśārīraka III. 18) held that Vidyā, Karma and Pūrvaprajñā have all to do with the assumption of a new body by the soul. Achyutarāya agrees with this latter view. He divides and subdivides Karma, vidyā and pūrvaprajñā, so that ultimately the threefold apparatus for giving a new body comes to 96 varieties and remarks that these divisions are not of much use.[2597] To the objection that all this refutation of prārabdhavāda is idle and serves no purpose he replies: men are of three sorts, mukta (liberated), mumukṣu (desirous of liberation) and viṣayin (immersed in enjoying the objects of sense). As regards the first the Chān. Up. VI. 14. 2 says 'for him there is delay so long as he is not delivered (from the body), then he will be perfect'.[2598] The same is relied upon in V. S. IV. 1. 19. The idea being that until prārabdhakarma that brought about the body in which Realisation was attained is done away with by the death of the body, the self is jīvanmukta, but his other karma that has not begun to yield fruit is done away with by Realisation, To the same effect is Bhagavadgītā.

Acyutarāya quotes thirteen verses from Vārtikasāra about Vāsanā (pūrvaprajñā), Karma and Vidyā (pp. 31–33). He किंचित्पापोपसृष्टं तीव्रमिति । p. 18 transcript. There is some mistake in making this transcript. Probably a line is omitted. What is half Sāttvika and half rājasa and slightly affected by viciousness should be called manda and tīvra should be described as one part sāttvika and three parts rājasa and predominantly sinful.

---

(Continued from last page)

2597. एतदुदाहरणानि तु पूर्वाचार्योक्तविशेष स्वयमेवोह्यानि विस्तरभयादनतिप्रयोजनत्वाच्च नेह विविच्यन्ते । p. 29 (transcript).

2598. तस्य तावदेव चिरं यावन्न विमोक्ष्येऽथ संपत्स्ये इति । छा. उप. VI. 14.2. विमोक्ष्ये and संपत्स्ये are in the first person singular. The father Āruṇi instructs the son Śvetaketu. When he reaches the stage of describing the step of Mokṣa due to realisation he passes on to the first person from the third and states about himself 'I shall become mukta and perfect at that stage.'

quotes the Jīvanmuktiviveka on the three means of jīvanmukti viz. tattvajñāna (knowledge of the Reality as enunciated in 'Tat-tvamasi' Chān. Up. VI. 8. 7, 'Aham brahmāsmi' Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 10), manonāśa (disappearance of the activities of the mind) and Vāsanākṣaya (destruction of the instincts of anger &c). Then he gives a lengthy disquisition on the condemnation of prārabdhavāda and the superiority of effort from the Vāsiṣṭha-Rāmāyaṇa. About mumukṣu Acyutarāya advises going to a guru as laid down in Muṇḍakopaniṣad I. 2. 12 (tadvijñānārtham sa gurumevābhigacchet &c).

The present author has read either wholly or partially the following modern works, mostly written by Western scholars on Karma and rebirth, that either offer remarks for or against that doctrine. The space at the author's disposal precludes any detailed statement about the objections raised against this doctrine in some of them. But a few important objections will be stated and will be briefly dealt with. The works read or consulted are: "Philosophy of the Upanishads" by Paul Deussen, translated by A. S. Geden (1906) pp. 313-338; J. R. A.S. for 1906 pp. 586–593 and for 1907 pp. 665–72 on modifications of the doctrine of Karma by E. W. Hopkins; 'Transmigration of souls' by Alfred Berthelot, translated by H. J. Chaytor (Harper, London, 1909); 'Karma and redemption' by A. G. Hogg (ed. of 1910); 'Religion and immortality' by G. Lowes Dickinson (Dent, 1911); 'Re-incarnation' by E.D. Walker (Rider and Co., London, 1913); this book contains extracts from Western authors (22 in number) on re-incarnation (pp. 63–124); there is also a long chapter (pp. 127–191) of extracts from Western Poetry on the same subject; he also deals with evidences of the doctrine in the Bible and early Christendom and a Bibliography on pp. 329-343; 'Fate and free will' by Ardesar Sorabji N. Wadia (Dent and Sons, London 1915). He states the problem to be 'whether fate by itself influences and directs the course of human evolution or freewill by itself or both fate and freewill working conjointly lay down the lines along which human progress must lie'. He states that it must be the one or the other and that it can never be both (p. 180). He himself believes in a fixed and determinist future; 'Immortality' essays on, by B.H. Streeter and others (Macmillan & Co. 1917); pp. 293-317 deal with re-incarnation and Karma by Miss Lily Dougall and pp. 317–341 deal with modern Theosophy which adopts the doctrines of re-incarnation and Karma; 'Religion and philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads' by A. B. Keith, vol. II. pp. 570-584; 'Karma and reincarnation' by Paul Yevtic (Luzac & Co., London, 1927); L'Ame et le Dogme de la Transmigration dans les Livres Sacres de L'Inde ancienne' by Eric de Henseler, Paris, 1928; 'Some dogmas of Religion' by McTaggart with Introduction by C. D. Broad (London, 1930 pp. 77–111 on 'Human Immortality'), pp. 112–139 on human pre-existence, pp. 140–185 on Free Will; 'Vicissitudes of karma doctrine' by Prof. H. D. Bhattacharya in Malaviya Commemoration Volume (1932) pp. 491–526; 'Reincarnation for every man' by Shaw Desmond (Rider & Co., London). This work mentions in chap. VIII European great men that believed in this doctrine; 'The scales of karma' by Owen Rutter (London). This book contains numerous references to Greek and Roman writers and to modern English and German poets and philosophers from whose works extracts are cited for showing that they believed in Karma and reincarnation such as Shakespeare, Hume, Goethe, Wordsworth; 'Indian Philosophy', by Dr.S. Radhakrishnan (1941) pp. 244–249; 'The circle of life' by Kenneth Walker (Jonathan Cape, London, 1942) chap. VIII and IX pp. 81–104; 'Karma and re-birth' by Christmas Humphreys (London, 1944); in chap. VII. pp. 62–66 he tries to show that Schopenhauer, Tennyson, Browning, Rossetti and John Masefield, the English Poet Laureate, believe in this doctrine; 'The problem of re-birth' by Sri Aurobindo (Pondicherry, 1952); 'The Brahmasūtras' by Dr. S. Radhakrishnan (1959), pp. 194–207 of the Introduction; 'The dogma of re-incarnation' by J. E. Sanjana (New Book Co., Bombay, 1954) pp. 1–134 with an Appendix on the rationale of the dogma of rebirth, pp. 137–157. This is one of the largest and latest works on 're-incarnation' that the present author read. Mr. Sanjana writes bitterly and sometimes in offensive language about those from whom he differs. He asserts that he is a true Zoroastrian and that 'it can be said without any exaggeration and with the most perfect reason and justice that a man who believes in re-incarnation is not a true Zoroastrian' (p. 125). None need quarrel with his first belief, but the latter part of the sentence invites serious consideration. He appears to aver that he has a monopoly of the true doctrines of Zoroastrianism and like the Roman Church and the Popes, that held that the true religion was only in their keeping and that all others (even those who believed in the Bible and Christ) were damned, holds that Zoroastrians believing in re-incarnation are apostates. I shall cite only one or two Parsi scholars who hold just the opposite view. Mr. R. F. Gorvala contributed a paper on the "Immortal Soul, its pre-existence, persistence after death and transmigration" to the Spiegel Commemoration Volume edited by no less a Parsi scholar than Dr. J. J. Modi (Bombay, 1908) pp. 99–124, in which he states (p. 124) 'that the Hindu doctrine of the transmigration of the soul influenced the faith of the ancient Zoroastrians in all times. Indeed the struggle between Good and Evil could not end in the triumph of the former if but one brief life was the only time given for the fight.' Vide also 'Philosophy of Zoroastrianism' by Faredun K. Dadachanji (Bombay, Times of India Press, 1941) pp. 108–133, particularly pp. 116 ff. Mr. Sanjana seems to have been much upset by the fact that some Parsis, who were scholars of Avesta and Sanskrit, became Theosophists and admirers of Mrs. Besant and other famous personages in the Theosophist movement. Nearly half the main book of 129 pages is concerned with the criticisms (sometimes extremely offensive) of the doings and writings of Madame Blavatsky (pp. 28–42), Mrs. Besant (pp. 43–51), C. W. Leadbeater (pp. 57–59), A. P. Sinnett and others (like Col. Olcott and Mr. K. A. K. Iyer, author of 'Vedanta), W. Q. Judge and a Gujarati book of an unnamed scholar (pp. 59–73). On pp. 82–88 he deals with McTaggart, G. L. Dickinson and W. Lutosowski (Polish writer who claims that he remembers his many past lives). Mr. Sanjana returns (pp. 89–103) to the charge against the Theosophists and the storms aud eruptions in the Theosophical society and considers some works on Sufism also (pp. 106–115). He emphasises the good points of Zoroastrianism as certified by W. B. Henning, J. W. Waterhouse and Hopkins. He does not devote much thought to the objections, more or less insuperable, against all monotheistic religions with a personal God in such works as Hobhouse's 'Morals in Evolution' part 2, though in the appendix (on p. 140) he has to admit that no satisfactory answer can be given to the question why an omnipotent and omniscient God should allow Evil to exist. He contrasts Zoroaster's religion and philosophy with Hinduism and Buddhism and winds up with an article by Winternitz (pp. 119–121) and then ends on an illuminating personal note in which he confesses (p. 126) that he in his youth was particularly attracted by the doctrine of re-incarnation eloquently propounded by Mrs. Besant, but later he became sceptical about what was said by Mrs. Besant. Neophytes generally indulge in opprobrious language for the cult once ardently professed by them and later abjured and Mr. Sanjana seems to be no exception to this. I may mention here only one or two instances of his language against Theosophists; on p. 64 he speaks of Blavatsky, Mrs. Besant, Sinnett and Leadbeater as "proved charlatans" and on p. 95 he writes about Mrs. Besant's entry into Politics as "these later metamorphoses of the megalomaniac Mrs. Besant". It appears to the present writer that his study of original Sanskrit works is not deep and that he commits serious mistakes in the small portion of his work that he devotes to the ancient Indian view of the doctrine of re-incarnation. His wrong interpretation of Manu VI. 63 (p. 10 of his book) has been pointed out (on p. 1565). Some more cases of mistakes may be cited here. On p. 11 of his book he relies on Thibaut for the statement that there is nothing in the sūtras (the Vedānta-sūtras) to warrant the main doctrine of Śaṅkara about two Vidyās, the higher (parā) and the lower (aparā), which respectively lead to the higher (para) brahma and the lower (apara) brahma. If he had carefully read only a few of the eleven principal Upaniṣads (the Īśāvāsya, Kena, Kaṭha, Muṇḍaka, Praśna) he would have found for himself that Thibaut is not a trustworthy guide in all cases. The Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad (I. 1. 4–5) speaks of two vidyās, parā and aparā 'dve vidye veditavye parā ca, aparā ca, atha parā yayā tadakṣaram adhigamyate' and this Muṇḍaka text is treated as the basis of Vedāntasūtra I. 2. 21–23 by Śaṅkara and Rāmānuja. The Praśna Upaniṣad 2 states both para and apara brahma 'etadvai Satyakāma param cāparam ca brahma yad-oṁkāraḥ". On pp. 21, 121, 146 he alleges that the words "yadahareva virajet tadahareva pravrajet" (a man should become a sannyāsin the very day on which he feels disgust for this worldly life) are a dictum or saying of Śaṅkara. But this text is taken from the Jābālopaniṣad 4. The whole passage of the Jābālopaniṣad 4 on the āśramas is quoted by Śaṅkara on Vedāntasūtra III. 4. 20 and Śaṅkara calls it Jābālaśruti. On p. 22 Mr. Sanjana quotes Bhagavadgītā (IX. 32, 'mām hi pārtha vyapāśritya yepi syuḥ pāpayonayaḥ, striyo vaiśyās-tathā śudrās-tepi yānti parām gatim) and holds that women, vaiśyas and śūdras are declared to be included under 'pāpayonayaḥ' (of evil or sinful birth). This is quite wrong. A Vaiśya from very ancient times belonged to the three higher classes and in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad V. 10. 7, it is expressly stated that Vaiśyayoni is of good birth (those whose conduct has been good will quickly attain some good birth, the birth of a brāhmaṇa or of a kṣatriya or of a vaiśya, but those whose conduct has been evil will attain an evil birth, the birth of a dog or a hog or a cāṇḍāla'. So vaiśya's was good birth in Chān. Upaniṣad. Women of the higher classes could not study the Veda in medieval times but women of the three higher classes co-operated with their husbands in all religious rites (including Vedic sacrifices). Therefore, the Gītā first mentions the worst case viz. that of Cāṇḍālas and affirms that even Cāṇḍālas (who belonged to the lowest class) would attain the highest goal if they surrendered themselves as devotees to God and then adds three more classes of people viz. women, vaiśyas and śūdras. A Śūdra was never among untouchables; on the contrary, early Smṛtis like Manu VI. 253, Yājñavalkya I. 166, Parāśara XI. 19 provide that a brāhmaṇa could take food at the house of a śūdra provided the latter was born of his slave woman or cultivated the brāhmaṇa's fields on the rent of half share of crops or was the friend of his family or tended his cattle or was his barber. In medieval times (after the 5th or 6th century A.D.), however, the caste system became more rigid but even up to the 12th century A.D. a brāhmaṇa could take food at a śūdra's house in extreme calamity (vide History of Dharmaśāstra, vol. III. pp. 952–53). Thereafter this was forbidden and was included among Kalivarjya acts. The vaiśyas are probably equated with women and śūdras because in their pursuit of wealth they never cared to study the Veda and Upaniṣads. Other passages of Mr. Sanjana's work are not cited for criticism for reasons of space.

Some of the objections raised by Western thinkers and writers against the doctrine of Karma and re-incarnation will now be mentioned and briefly dealt with. One or two preliminary matters have to be emphasized. Many in the West regard our life after the death of the bodies as certain, but hardly anyone of them regards our life before our present bodies as a possibility. The explanation of this attitude of many Western thinkers lies in the fact that in modern Western thought the great support of the belief in immortality of the soul has been the Christian religion, which is supposed not to recognize the pre-existence of the soul. Besides, Christian writers from Augustine onwards firmly believed that religious truths outside the revelation in the Bible as interpreted by them were a work of the devil. McTaggart in 'Some Dogmas of religion' (London, 1930) attacks this attitude. He holds (p. 113) that any evidence which will prove immortality will also prove pre-existence and that there is nothing in pre-existence that is incompatible with any of the dogmas that are generally accepted as fundamental to Christianity.' L. P. Jacks in 'Near the brink' (Allen and Unwin, London, 1952, pp. 10–11) holds the same opinion (at the age of 92) as McTaggart's. Wordsworth in his famous Ode appears to agree that the present life is preceded by another existence when he says 'Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting, the soul that rises with us, our life's star, had elsewhere its setting and cometh from afar.' L. P. Jacks in the work mentioned above remarks (on p. 9) that an endless punishment is not, strictly speaking, a punishment at all but an exercise of cruelty or vengeance and that the same is true of an endless reward.

The first objection raised against the doctrine of Karma by Pringle-Pattison in 'Idea of immortality' (Oxford, 1922) is that absence of memory of the pre-existence is fatal to it (p. 112) and that immortality without recollection is quite useless. Miss Lily Dougall in 'Immortality' by Canon Streeter and others raises a similar objection (p. 29). This objection can be answered in various ways. Does any one remember anything of what one did during the first two years of his life? It is also well-known that men do not correctly remember in old age even the names of their grand-children nor does a man remember what he did exactly ten years ago during his present life. It is rather merciful that there is no memory of past lives. If all the multifarious memories of many lives were to crowd on us in the present life, our minds would be confused and matters in the present life would be very much complicated. Karma is a cosmic law like the law of gravitation. The latter was not recognized by humanity for thousands of years but all the same it existed and worked. Several people claim to remember their past lives. The story of Śāntidevī was published as a case of re-incarnation by Lala Deshbhandhu Gupta, Pandit Nekiram Sharma, and Tarachand Mathur. The 'Theosophist Monthly' for January 1925 mentions concrete instances of the memory of past lives. 'The lives of Alcyone' (Adyar, 1924) is a work in two volumes by Mrs. Besant and Mr. Leadbeater in which 48 lives are traced from 70000 B. C. to 624 A. D. with photographs of some of them as they must have appeared in the respective incarnations. The present author does not go into that question here. In the Essays on Immortality edited by B. H. Streeter it is said (on p. 297) that lack of conscious continuity between two incarnations of a soul negatives the doctrine. One may ask: what grounds are there to hold or to prove that the reprobate criminal who will be awarded a judgment of eternal punishment will remember while undergoing hell fires his past life on earth? If one can believe in future eternal punishment for a confirmed sinner without any tangible evidence of memory of the sinful life he lived, why refuse to believe in pre-existence merely on the ground of absence of memory? Vide 'Some Dogmas &c.' p. 130. Further, science holds that matter and energy are indestructible, they are only transformed into other forms. Why should one regard it as absurd if one were to hold that the soul (to which post-existence is granted by Christianity and some other religions) should be held to come into existence in the present life all at once and not be held to have had previous existence but only in a different form? The continuity of the soul in past and future existences is merely a metaphysical question and cannot be affected by the loss of memory. The latter occurs in one life of many years as to numerous happenings and at least in that one life the soul is admittedly one throughout.

Another objection is on the ground of heredity. We often find a strong likeness between parents and children in body and sometimes in mental faculties also. How are we to explain this? One answer may be that by some law not yet discovered the soul that has to undergo rebirth is born to parents suited to his condition. Besides, children are not exactly like their parents, some resemble in several physical features the mother or the father, but not in all and children of the same parents differ among themselves even as regards physical features. As regards mental qualities, children do not very often resemble their parents. What sort of mental equipment was possessed by the parents of such men of genius as Shakespeare, Newton, Ramanujan, Einstein? Karma does not express what a man inherits from his ancestors, but it expresses that which he inherits from himself in some previous state or states of existence.

Another objection is often raised that belief in the doctrine of Karma would make men callous to human misery and suffering and unwilling to help. This also is a perverse idea. From the ancient Vedic times charity and compassion have been inculcated as the duties of all men without distinction. The Ṛgveda (X. 117. 6) sage declares 'that man who cooks food for himself and eats it himself alone simply incurs sin' (kevalāgho bhavati kevalādī). The Bṛ. Up. V. 2. 3 prescribes for all men the three duties viz. self-restraint, charity and compassion. If a man having the means to help another does not offer help he would be failing in his duty. It is possible that the result of the sufferer's Karma might have been meant to be mitigated by the kindness of helpers.

Another objection is sometimes raised as follows. The population of the earth is growing rapidly. The question is: where do the additional egoes come from (vide Berthelot's work, English tr. p. 127 and J. E. Sanjana's book on the 'Dogma of re-incarnation' p. 81). Several answers are possible. Several species of lower animals have become extinct and the number of wild animals such as the lion is rapidly being reduced. It is possible for one who believes in Karma doctrine to argue that the selves that were masquerading as beasts now appear as human beings, because their Karma that reduced them to the state of beasts has been exhausted.

Some of the Purāṇas declare that a man who is very sinful may reach lower and lower states e. g. the Vāyupurāṇa[2599] (chap. 14 verses 34–37) provides that a very sinful man may become paśu (cattle or a beast), then deer, then a bird, then a creeping insect and then a tree or other immobile object. Theosophists and some modern scholars hold that once the human state is reached there is no regression at all. It may be noted that the Kaṭhopaniṣad expressly states (in V. 6–7) that after the death of the body the souls take up birth in other bodies, while some become tree-trunks according to their actions and knowledge. The Ch. Up. V. 10. 7 says 'those whose conduct has been evil will quickly attain an evil birth, the birth of a dog or hog or cāṇḍāla.' Manu (XII. 9) avers that a man is reduced by bodily sins to the stage of a tree-trunk, by sins due to speech to being a bird or a beast and by mental sins to lowest births (of a cāṇḍāla etc.). In verses 62–68 of chapter XII, Manu describes the different births of various animals by the commission of thefts of various articles and in verses 52–59 the births due to the grave sins of brāhmaṇa-murder, drinking liquor, incest. The Yājñavalkya Smṛti (III. 213–215) also contains provisions similar to Manu XII. 53–59. The Yogasūtra II. 13 also suggests that the retribution for various sins results in being born in low births or dying prematurely or experiencing misery and suffering.

---

2599. कर्मणा मनसा वाचा यद्यभीक्ष्णं निषेव्यते। तत्तथा हरेत्पापं तस्मात्सुकृतमाचरेत्॥ पाञ्चरज्जातानि पापानि पूर्वं कर्माणि देहिनः। संसारं तामसं ताद्दक् षड्विधं प्रतिपद्यते॥ मानुष्यं पशुभावं च पशुभावाच्च सूगो भवेत्। सूगत्वात्पक्षिभावं तु तस्माच्चैव सरीसृपः॥ सरीसृपत्वाद्वृक्षत्वं स्थावरत्वं न संशयः। वायुपु. 14. 34–37.

It is rather difficult to regard all this body of authority as mere arthavādas (not meant to be taken seriously but intended only to frighten intending sinners). Dr. Radhakrishnan (in 'An idealist view of life' ed. of 1932) suggests that it is possible that rebirth in animal form is a figure of speech for rebirth as human beings with animal or beastly qualities (page 292).

SECTION X

The fundamental conceptions and characteristics of Hindu (Bhāratīya) culture and civilization from the Vedic times to about 1800 A. D. and future trends.

CHAPTER XXXVI

Fundamental and leading characteristics of Hindu culture and civilization

It is necessary to gather together the threads scattered over six thousand pages of the History of Dharmaśāstra and to emphasize the fundamental and leading characteristics and conceptions of Hindu culture and civilization.

The word Hindu (in the form 'Hidu') appears to have been applied by the Persian[2600] Emperors Darius (522–486 B. C.) and Xerxes (486–465 B. C.) to the territory and people to the west and to the east of the great river Sindhu, while the Greeks referred to the people in the same region as 'Indoi', from which comes the word 'Indian'. Herodotus in his History (Loeb series) states that the Thracians were the biggest nation in the world next to the Indians (Book 5 para 3, vol. III p. 5) and that the Indians constituted the 20th province of the Persian Empire and paid 360 talents of gold dust as tribute. The word 'Sindhu' occurs more than two hundred times in the Ṛgveda alone in the singular as well as in the plural. The words 'Sindhavaḥ' and 'Sapta Sindhūn' occur more frequently than Sindhu in the singular. Indra is often described as having let loose the seven Sindhus for flowing (Ṛg. I. 32.12, II. 12.12, IV. 28.1, VIII. 96.1, X. 43.3). In such passages what is meant is the great river Sindhu and its tributaries (or possibly its seven mouths).

2600. Vide the Naqkh-i-Rustam Inscription of Dāraya-ush (Darius) and the Persepolis Inscription of Kshayārsha (Xerxes) in 'Select Inscriptions' edited by Dr. D. C. Sircar, No. 4 p. 10 and No. 5 p. 12. Sanskrit 'sa' is changed to 'ha' even now in some parts of our country. The ancient Parsi scripture Vendidad (S.B.E. Vol IV p. 2) mentions sixteen lands out of which nine can be identified, the 15th being Hapta Hindu (Sapta Sindhu).

Many passages of the Ṛgveda where the singular is employed refer to the river Sindhu alone (as in Ṛg. II. 15.6, IV. 30.12, V. 4.9 &c). In Ṛg. II. 15.6 it is said that Indra made Sindhu flow northwards. This would obviously refer to the first part of the river flowing northward from the Himālayas. Pāṇini uses the word 'Sindhu' as the name of a country in IV. 3.93 ('Saindhava' means one who or whose ancestors lived in the Sindhu country). For the fluctuating limits of Āryāvarta, vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 11–16 and p. 1525, note 2483 above, where Ṛg. passages about Bharatas are set out and it is shown that the Purāṇas speak of Bharata-varṣa as of the same extent as that of modern India and the name is said to have been due to Bharata, son of Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā. Bharatavarṣa occurs in the Hathigumpha Inscription of Khāravela (line 10 on p. 79) which cannot be assigned to a date later than the 1st century[2601] B. C. It has been shown above (p. 1016 n. 1649) that Aśoka in one of his edicts refers to his kingdom as Jambudvīpa. Even in these days in the rather long saṅkalpa (declaration) at the beginning of a religious act in Mahārāṣṭra, occur the words 'Jambudvīpe Bharatavarṣe Bauddhāvatāre Godāvaryā dakṣiṇe tīre' &c. Therefore, the proper word to be used by us for our country should be Bharatavarṣa. It may be said that our culture and civilization had throughout the past ages a geographical background. The Constitution of India has recognized this in its very first Article which runs 'India, that is Bharat, shall be a union of States'. In view of the fact, however, that the words 'Hindu' and 'Indian' have been employed for centuries by foreign as well as our own writers, this work will employ those words instead of 'Bharatavarṣa'.

The words 'culture' and 'civilization' are used as synonyms by some writers, while some others regard them as quite distinguishable. These two are defined in various ways by scholars. A few definitions are set out here by way of sample.

Dr. Tyler states (in 'Primitive Culture' vol. I p. 1, Murray, London, 1871) 'Culture or civilization is that complex whole which includes knowledge, belief, art, morals, law, custom and 2601. Vide E. I. vol. XX pp. 71–89. Scholars differ about the date of this Inscription, Jayaswal holding (ibid. p. 77) that it belongs to the first half of the 2nd century B. C., while N. N. Ghosh in J. G. J. R. I. vol. VI pp. 97–106 opines that it belongs to the last quarter of the first century B. C.

---

any other capabilities and habits acquired by man as a member of society'. Matthew Arnold's definition of culture in his lengthy essay on 'Culture and Anarchy' (1869, Preface p. VIII) is rather restricted in scope. He regards culture as a 'pursuit of our total perfection by means of getting to know, on all the matters which concern us, the best which has been thought and said in the world, and through this knowledge turning a stream of fresh and free thought upon our stock notions and habits which we know follow staunchly but mechanically, vainly imagining that there is a virtue in following them staunchly which makes up for the mischief of following them mechanically'. Prof. P. A. Sorokin in 'Social and Cultural Dynamics' (1957, p. 2) defines human culture as 'the sum total of everything which is created or modified by the conscious or unconscious activity of two or more individuals interacting with one another or conditioning one another's behaviour.[2602]' Prof. Edgerton in Journal of American Oriental Society in a paper on the 'Dominant ideas in the formation of Indian Culture' (vol. 62 for 1942 pp. 151–156) understands culture as a total way of life viewed as a norm and as such approved or at least tolerated by a people as a whole and by its articulate representatives generally.

Prof. Toynbee in 'Civilizations on trial' (1948) states (p. 223) 'I mean by a civilization the smallest unit of historical study at which one arrives when one tries to understand the history of his own country, U. S. A., say, or U. K.' Prof. Toynbee in his latest work 'Reconsiderations' (vol. XII pp. 76–77, of his Study of History) adopts Bagbey's definition of culture as meaning 'regularities in the behaviour, internal and external, 2602. Prof. Sorokin (ibid. pp. 24–25) distinguishes two types of integrated cultures, one called ideational and the other sensate. None of the two has, according to him, existed in the purest form. In some cultures the first type prevails, in others the 2nd; while in still others both might mingle in equal proportions and on equal basis. This last he terms 'idealistic type' (which is not to be confused with the ideational type). Dr. G. S. Ghurye's 'Culture and Society' (University of Bombay Publications, 1947) is a very useful book on culture and civilization and considers at length the views of eminent writers like Emerson, Arnold, Morley, Whitehead, Russell, Laski, Wells and others. Prof. Northrop in 'Meeting of East and West' (1946) and Prof. Sorokin in 'Social Philosophies in an age of crisis' (London, 1952) p. 145 hold that the total culture of a nation in the East or West is not a mere heap of numerous phenomena unrelatied to each other but rather as grounded in differing philosophical conceptions of the nature of man and of the universe.

---

of the members of a Society, excluding those regularities which are clearly hereditary in origin' and adds that 'religious practices and institutions and, by implication, also religious beliefs and experiences are certainly a part of culture as thus defined' and mentions religion together with art, technology, social structure as examples of the elements of which culture consists (pp. 84, 95). Prof. Toynbee further says that in his volumes he employed the word 'culture' in two different senses, viz. (1) the comprehensive one in which it is used by Bagby and (2) in an exclusive sense in which the word has been current in contemporary English since the time of Matthew Arnold (ibidi. p. 272). As regards the word 'civilization' he remarks (p. 273) that civilization is a hybrid word of modern French coinage and Johnson refused to include it in his dictionary.

Archibald Robertson (in 'Rationalism in theory and practice', London, 1954 p. 62) says "when we use the word 'civilization', we mean a society with enough command over nature to raise it above savagery or barbarism. Civilization primarily means 'civitas' city life, division of labour and consequent surplus production over and above mere animal needs.' Vide Prof. S. Levi's book 'L' Inde et le Monde' p 63 translated in H. Kraemer's 'World cultures and world religions' (London 1960) p. 345 where it is really a definition of Hindu civilization alone.

It is unnecessary to cite further definitions. We may accept any one of these for a working hypothesis. If a distinction is to be made between the two words, one may say that the word 'culture', being neutral in meaning, is the better one to use than the word 'civilization'. The latter word is often employed for an advanced stage of social development and is contrasted with the stage of primitive or barbarian societies. People often speak of primitive culture, but rarely, if at all, of primitive civilization.

During the last 6000 years of human history, several cultures and civilizations rose and fell. Spengler, a militarist and anti-rationalistic author, who does not rely on religion, morality or politics but is a votary of force, examines about thirty civilizations and cultures and propounds the thesis that all of them (except seven or eight) follow a certain common pattern, viz. they are born, grow, decline and die and that once defunct they are not revived. Prof. Toynbee, a Christian (and not a militarist) in his 'Study of History' appears to arrive at conclusions not unlike those of Śpengler, viz. culture and societies have stages of childhood, maturity, senility and disintegration. On p. 758 of Volume IX of his 'Study of History' he gives a table for nineteen civilizations with the dates of their Epiphany (manifestation), of their breakdown and the span of growth phase in number of years. He puts down Indic civilization as starting in 1375 B. C. and as breaking down in 725 B. C. and Hindu civilization as beginning in 775 A. D. and its breakdown in 1175 A. D. This is, to say the least, most objectionable.[2603] The distinction between Indic and Hindu civilization is arbitrary and the dates also are so. Why the Hindu civilization is held by him as breaking down in 1175 A. D. is quite unconvincing and what was the nature or name of India's civilization between 725 B. C. and 775 A. D. is not stated by him. On the other hand, the whole metaphor of being born, growing, maturing and disintegrating is held inapplicable to civilizations by other distinguished writers, such as J. G. De Beus in the 'Future of the West' (London, 1953), who remarks that civilizations are not born and they do not die (p. 60), but are transformed or absorbed. Prof. Sorokin asserts (in 'Social and Cultural Dynamics') that his theory has little in common with the age-old theories of the life cycle of culture and societies with stages of childhood, maturity, senility and decay (p. 627). Leonard Woolf in 'Quack, quack' mercilessly criticizes Spengler's theories (pp. 139–160). A. L. Kroeber in 'Style and Civilizations' (New York, 1957) agrees with Prof. Sorokin and disagrees with Spengler and Toynbee and remarks that 'the study of civilizations can hardly become truly scientific or scholarly until it divests itself of emotional concern about crisis, decay, collapse, extinction and doom' (p. 160).

Among the numerous civilizations and cultures that flourished in the world there are only two (namely, the Indian and the Chinese) that have survived and kept up a continuity of tradition for four thousand years (if not more) in spite of recurrent invasions by foreign hordes like those by Persians, 2603. While these pages were passing through the press, I received Prof. Toynbee's 'Reconsiderations' (Vol. XII of his Study of History) on p. 184 of which he revises his opinion by saying "the maintenance of the brahmans' monopoly of the religious ministry gives Indian History a continuity throughout the period running from the Aryan invasion to the impact of the West".

---

Greeks, Scythians, Huns, Turks and notwithstanding internal conflicts and convulsions.[2604] India absorbed such people and made many Greeks, Śakas and other foreigners adopt the spiritual ideologies of India and found for them a place in the Indian social fabric (as has been and will be shown later). Not only so, India could spread its literature, religion, art and culture, not by invasions or annexations but mostly by peaceful means, viz. teaching, translations of Sanskrit works and persuasion, to Ceylon, Burma, Sumatra, Malaya, Java, Bali, Borneo, China, Tibet, Japan, Mongolia and Corea.[2605] The charming island of Bali is still Hindu with four varṇas, priests being called Pedanda (Pandita), consecrated water for worship being called Toya (vide S. Levi's 'Sanskrit texts from Bali' Preface p. XIII G. O. S.), priests still repeating one quarter of Gāyatrī, viz. 'bhargo devasya dhīmahi' (ibid. p. XV) and repeating the yajñopavīta mantra (yajñopavītam paramam etc.) in a corrupt form.

This persistence of Indian culture and civilization for several millennia requires an explanation and a consideration of the fundamental conceptions, values and characteristics of that civilization would enable us to offer a satisfactory one. Indian culture and civilization have a distinct personality and should not and could not be judged by purely European standards.

2604. Vide Prof. Sorokin in 'Social and Cultural Dynamics' p. 697, Dr. Radhakrishnan in 'Religion and Society' (1947) p. 101.

2605. The number of works and papers on the spread of Indian culture in South East Asia, China and what is called 'Further India' or 'Greater India' is very large. A few only out of those that the author has read or consulted are mentioned here : Dr. R.C. Majumdar's 'Ancient Indian Colonies' Vol. I and II; 'Towards Angkor' with 42 illustrations, 1937 and 'Making of Greater India' (London, 1951), both by H. G Quaritch Wales, the latter containing a good Bibliography; 'Śrī Vijaya' by Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, 1949, with an appendix of Inscriptions from 683 A. D. to about the 14th century A. D.; 'Civilizations of the East' by Rene Grousset, translated from French by Catherine A. Phillips with 249 illustrations, Vol. II on 'India, Farther India and Malaya' pp. 1-343. For China's debt to India, vide Viśvabhāratī Quarterly, Vol. II pp. 251-261 by Prof. Liang Chi Chao, who states that Hindu scholars that came to China from 8th century A. D. were 24 and Chinese scholars that went to India for study from 265 A. D. to 790 A. D. numbered 187 (the names of 105 out of these being ascertained); vide also 'India and China' by Prof. P. C. Bagchi (Hind Kitabs, 1950), particularly chapters II and III.

Various peoples during past centuries had the conceit that they were far superior to others and had a mission to propagate. When the British empire became so extensive that the 'Sun never set on it', many British imperialists claimed (most hypocritically) that they were carrying on the 'white man's burden'[2605 A] for the benefit and betterment of undeveloped and backward people (when British Imperialism was impoverishing to the utmost the people whom they governed by their colonial policies as will be briefly indicated later on so far as India is concerned). Russia claims that it has the mission to liberate the proletariat from capitalism and to bring about a Paradise on Earth. The Germans under Hitler believed that they belonged to the superior Nordic race and that they would save the world from communism. Such a conceit is not confined to the West. The Chinese believed that they alone were civilized. The Japanese hold that their Emperor is the son of Heaven. In these days some Indians also claim that spirituality existed nowhere except in India. It is quite correct to say that ancient Indian culture and civilization were based on great spiritual values. It would be entirely in the wrong to say that other people had no spirituality. All that we can at most say is that spirituality is more basic to Hinduism and was more diffused among Hindu people than anywhere else. The Manusmṛti provides that only those usages of varṇas and mixed castes that are traditionally prevalent in the country of Brahmāvarta, in Kurukṣetra, in the countries of Matsya, Pañcāla (the country called Doab) and Śūrasena (round about Mathurā) are spoken of as sadācāra (II. 17–19) and that all men on the earth should learn their respective duties from brāhmaṇas born in those countries. The Manusmṛti excludes the countries ef Madhyadeśa (as defined by it) and Āryāvarta from this provision (II 21–22). Recently, some people appear to rely on the words 'kṛṇvanto viśvam-āryam' occurring in Ṛg. IX. 63. 5–6 and hold that the Veda has put forward the mission of our country as making the whole world ārya. But there is hardly any foundation for this conceit. These words occur about the offering of Soma juice (indavaḥ) to Indra. They only mean this-these Soma libations, brown in colour,[2606] (pressed from Soma plant) increase (the 2605 A. Vide Leonard Woolf in 'Barbarians at the Gate' (London, 1939) p. 54 for saying that 'white man's burden' was another name for economic imperialism and also p, 162.

2606. इन्द्रं वर्धन्तो असुरः कृण्वन्तो विश्वमार्यम्। अपघ्नन्तो अराव्णः॥ शुना अनु स्वना might of) Indra, making the waters to fall (from the sky), destroy hostile men coming to Indra, making all (the whole environment) noble they reach their proper sphere.' There is here no reference whatever to Vedic people making the whole world Ārya. At the most these verses may be interpreted as suggesting that Soma sacrifices to Indra would make the world Arya. Then there is no message in it which modern Indians can give and spread. Soma plant itself became unavailable in Vedic times and substitutes had to be utilized. And hardly any solemn Vedic sacrifices have been performed for centuries in India and very rarely, if at all, Soma sacrifices.

(Continued on next page)

During the last four or five hundred years the Western nations professing Christianity started on a career of conquest, exploitation of undeveloped countries and peoples, colonial empires, use of the discoveries of science for competitive purposes, the amassing of wealth with such ideologies as those expressed in the words 'everybody should be for himself and the devil take the hind-most.' But the devastation and atrocities of the last two world wars and the possibility of the annihilation of the human race or a very large part of it by atomic warfare have now opened the eyes of many thoughtful leaders and people in the West that, if modern civilization is to be saved, they must cultivate regard for spiritual values, love of righteousness and justice, sympathy with the oppressed, and active belief in the brotherhood of man. Though our ancient sages and lawgivers laid great emphasis on spiritul values, a very large majority of our people and so-called leaders have been wanting in the practice of those values for centuries. Instead of merely praising our past glories, the present author would humbly request all educated Indians to be introspective and to ponder over certain questions that are often asked and seek to find the reasons for the loss of our freedom from the 13th century onwards. (1) Why Hindus were generally found inferior to the invaders, Persian, Greek, Scythian, Turk, English, even though Indians far outnumbered and even though most invaders were impressed by the courage and perfect indifference to death on the part of India's soldiers; (2) Why Hindus could not form a permanent organized State comprising the whole of India for many centuries; (3) why did they fail to take advantage of the splendid natural resources of India to excel in manufactures, commerce and industry. We must enter upon a thoroughgoing and honest inquiry into our past to find our own defects (political and others) that led to our fall for centuries and try to remove those defects as quickly as possible, now that Bhārata has won independence after centuries. There was no political unity of the whole of India till the British began to rule over the whole of India. There were constant wars among Hindu kingdoms and princes. For example, because the Marathas invaded Bengal, the Bengalis hated Marathas and were jubilant over the defeat of the Marathas by the British. We Indians hardly had any deep-seated feeling of all Indians being one people or of nationalism till the 2nd half of the 19th century A. D. This chapter cannot discuss at length the subject of the causes of the downfall of India, politically and in other respects. But a few remarks would not be altogether out of place here.

---

(Continued from last page)

रजोऽन्यर्षन्ति वसवः । इन्द्रं गच्छन्त इन्दवः ॥ ऋ. IX. 63.5-6; compare verse 14 of the same hymn एते धामान्यार्या शुक्रा ऋतस्य धारया । वाजं गोमन्तमक्षरन् ॥ The words धामान्यार्या mean 'the noble dwellings or noble statutes' (of Gods).

Hinduism is a combination of many systems and religious ideologies including Vedic ritualism, Vedāntic thought, Vaiṣṇavism, Śaivism, Shāktism and primeval cults, adapted to the requirements of different types of men and communities with great disparities of intellectual and spiritual attainments. There were only a few matters that would be said to have bound most of the Hindus to each other, viz. the doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma, the unifying influence of the vast and venerated Sanskrit literature that gradually enriched the regional languages, the veneration in which the Vedas were held by all Hindus as the final authority in religious matters, though only a small minority could learn and understand them, the geographical unity of the country from the Himālaya to Cape Comorin emphasized by the Purāṇas and by the pilgrimages to holy places from Mānasa lake and Badrinath to Rāmeśvara. These few elements, however, were not enough to neutralize the causes that militated against effective unity amongst all Hindus. Most of the ācāryas and saints laid too much emphasis on otherworldiness and Vedānta and did not lay equal or greater emphasis on or recognize the importance of active and thorough performance of people's duties to themselves, to their families, and to society, the result being that many people, whether fit or unfit, tried to become otherworldly and did not actively pursue worldly values with righteousness. Another cause of disunity and downfall was the great disparity between the high metaphysical teaching of the whole world being one and the treatment meted out to lower classes and untouchables, owing to ideas of exclusiveness, of purity and pollution by touch &c. The education of the masses was greatly neglected[2607] and the higher classes did not seriously mind who ruled the country as long as their life was not much disturbed. The great patriot and revolutionary Savarkar, hammered on seven fetters by which Hindu society was bound for centuries, viz. untouchability, prohibitions of several kinds viz. sea travel, of mutual dining among the hundreds of castes and subcastes, of intercaste marriages, of Veda study against several castes, prohibition against following certain occupations and prohibition against re-admission to Hinduism of people that were converted to other religious faiths by force, fraud or ignorance.

Our cultural history shows some central features which may be mentioned in one place here. The first is that there has been an unbroken religious tradition from the Vedic times almost to the present day. Vedic mantras are still employed throughout the whole of India in religious rites and ceremonies by all brāhmaṇas and by a large number of the members of castes claiming to be Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas. The Vedic gods are not entirely forgotten. Kindling of Agni is still required at the beginning of all rites; Viṣṇu (though not so frequently praised as Indra, Agni or Varuṇa, yet often enough, is praised in Ṛg.I. 22 16-21, I. 154. 1-6, I. 155. 1-6, VI. 69. 1-8, both Indra and Viṣṇu are praised in Ṛg. VII. 99. 1-7, Atharvaveda VII. 27. 4-9) and Siva (Rudra of the Ṛgveda, transformed a great deal yet highly praised in Ṛg. II. 1.6, II. 33,9, X. 92.9 where he is spoken of as Śiva) are even now the principal deities worshipped. In the morning and evening Sandhyā worship, brāhmaṇas in many parts of India still repeat respectively verses addressed to Mitra (Ṛg. III. 59) and Varuṇa (Ṛg. I. 25). The second feature is that, India being a vast country (as large as the whole of Europe minus Russia), central authority in political power never existed (except perhaps for a short time under Aśoka). The ideal was that of supreme ruler (saṃrāṭ or cakravartin). But, if a king submitted, acknowledged the prowess of the successful conqueror and paid some tribute, no saṁrāṭ troubled himself to look into the affairs of the kingdoms ruled by petty kings. There could, therefore, be no common front against a foreign invader, no uniformity in laws, customs and practices and there were frequent wars among kings and petty princes. A third feature was that there did not develop a serious clash of cultures, there was tolerance about varying ideologies and beliefs and constant adaptation to create harmony in diversity.

2607. Vide Works of Vivekananda (Mayavati ed. Vol. III. pp. 191–192, 428–29, V. 122, VI. 224). The census of 1951 disclosed that there were fifty-one million untouchables in Bhārata.

It makes one sad to find that not a single Hindu scholar resembling Alberuni came forward to inquire into the causes of the successful invasions of India by Mahmud of Gazni and later hordes. Intellectuals were mostly engaged at least from the 11th century onwards in composing works of thousands of pages on such topics as Vrata, Dāna, Śrāddha (as the very learned minister Hemādri did) or in mental gymnastics about logic, Vedānta, Poetics and similar subjects and appear to have bestowed little thought on finding means of meeting the onslaught of foreigners or the remedies for removing their own weaknesses and defects. There were also other causes of the downfall of Hindus. Our intellectuals did not or could not pursue and make their own discoveries of science and technology made in the world from the 15th century A. D. Shahaji purchased firearms from foreigners. Neither he, nor his great son Shivaji, the founder of the Maratha empire, started factories for the manufacture of up-to-date firearms and cannon. Similarly, our people did not properly appreciate the role of a powerful navy. If the Hindus or their rulers had possessed a powerful navy they would have been able to nip in the bud the ambitions of the Portuguese, the French and the English.

We must now set out the important characteristics of Hindu culture and civilization.

1. The most striking conception even as early as the Ṛgveda is that there is only one Reality or Essence, in spite of the fact that people speak of it or worship it as Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, Agni &c. (Rg. I. 164. 46, VIII. 58. 1, X. 129. 2, q. above on p. 1487). In the Mahābhārata, Purāṇas, in classical Sanskrit Poetry and even in medieval times, when there were various cults and schisms, such as the worship of Viṣṇu or Śiva or Śakti, almost all Hindus had an inner consciousness that God is one though called by various names; vide p. 118 note 306, p. 973 and note 1593 above, and Harivaṁśa (Viṇṇuparva 25. 31), Kumārasambhava VII. 44.

2. From this conception arose the great tolerance that Hinduism at all times showed to freedom of thought and worship, which has been dwelt upon by the present author in H. of Dh. Vol. II p. 388 note 928, Vol. V. pp. 970-71, 1011-1018 (references to Aśoka's edicts and Yāj. I. 343 and numerous instances of Indian kings and donors of one persuasion making gifts to temples and institutions of other cults and persuasions); vide also Gītā 7. 21-22 and 9.23. To hunt down heretics, real or supposed, has been a favourite business of some religions[2607] for centuries. This has been absent from Hinduism. Hindusim is not bound by any fixed creed nor does it rely on a single book[2608] or a prophet as its founder. All that it requires is that man shoud be God-fearing and what matters is not correct beliefs but moral conduct and social behaviour. Hindus do not deny the truth of any religion or reject the validity of another man's religious experience. A verse[2609] quoted below breathes a broad-minded approach to religious beliefs and worship 'May Hari, the Lord of the three worlds, bestow on you the desired reward, whom the Śaivas worship as Śiva, Vedāntins as brahman, the Bauddhas as Buddha, the Naiyāykas proficient in the means of knowledge as the Creator, those devoted to Jain teachings as Arhat and Mīmāṁsakas as Yajña'. The great logician Udayana who composed his Lakṣaṇāvali in śaka 906 (984 A. D.) breathes in his Nyāyakusumāñjali the same spirit as is contained in the verse translated above. Tolerance is thus of the essence of Hinduism and even an atheist is often met with amusement and not with persecution.

III. Working on the doctrine that there is only one Essence or Godhead, the sages of the Upaniṣads arrived at the 2608. For Biblical intolerance one may read Jeremiah 29.8–9, Colossians II. 8, Galatians I. 7–9.

---

2609. यं शैवाः समुपासते शिव इति ब्रह्मेति वेदान्तिनो
बौद्धा बुद्ध इति प्रमाणपटवः कर्तेति नैयायिकाः।
अर्हन्नित्यथ जैनशासनरताः कर्मेति मीमांसकाः
सोऽयं वो विदधातु वाञ्छितफलं त्रैलोक्यनाथो हरिः॥
सुभाषितरत्नभाण्डागार (Nir. ed. of 1935 p. 15 verse 27);

न्यायकुसुमाञ्जलि I. 2 is: स्वर्गापवर्गयोर्मार्गमामनन्ति मनीषिणः। यदुपास्तिमसावत्र परमात्मा निरूप्यते॥ इह यद्यपि ये कमपि पुरुषार्थमर्थयमानाः शुद्धबुद्धस्वभाव इत्यौपनिषदाः। आदिविद्वान् सिद्ध इति कापिलाः। क्लेशकर्मविपाकाशयैरपरामृष्टो निर्माणकायमधिष्ठाय सम्प्रदायप्रद्योतकोऽनुग्राहकश्चेति पातञ्जलाः। लोकवेदविरुद्धैरपि निर्लेपः स्वतन्त्रश्चेति महापाशुपताः। शिव इति शैवाः। पुरुषोत्तम इति वैष्णवाः। पितामह इति पौराणिकाः। यज्ञपुरुष इति याज्ञिकाः। निरावरण इति दिगम्बराः। उपास्यत्वेन ज्ञेशित इति मीमांसकाः। यावदुत्कर्षपर्यन्त इति नैयायिकाः। लोकव्यवहारसिद्ध इति चार्वाकाः। किंबहुना कारणोऽपि यं विश्वकर्मेत्युपासते॥.

conclusion that the individual self is non-different from the one Essence, that all manifoldness is only apparent, that even fishermen, slaves, gamblers and the inanimate world are non-different from it. This Vedānta doctrine is one of the most characteristic features of Hinduism and is India's great contribution to the spiritual development of man, though there are sporadic instances of this doctrine having been held by some ancient philosophers in other lands. This idea of one in the many and many in one is the very core or centre of Vedānta. This has been dealt with above (vide pp. 1499-1500 notes 2451-52 and pp. 1509-10). In Europe the study of philosophy is an end in itself. In ancient India this idea of the unity in diversity was made the basis of education and sociology and it was held that the realization of this unity in one's life was the highest freedom (mokṣa).

The Upaniṣadic teaching is a universal doctrine in which all men of good will can meet and combine, in whatever religion they might have been brought up from their childhood. Many illustrations are adduced in the Upaniṣads to bring home non-difference to the inquirer about the Essence. But two are very apt. The Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad (III. 2. 8) declares " just as rivers flowing (towards the ocean) become merged in the ocean after giving up their names and forms, so the man who realizes (knows), being free from name and form, attains the divine Person that is higher than the highest ". The Praśnopaniṣad has (VI.5) the same illustration in prose. The Kaṭhopaniṣad IV. 15 states 'just as pure water poured into pure water assumes the same form (appearance), similarly the soul of the sage who has realized (the Essence) becomes the Ātman (Self).' Deussen in his address on 20th February 1893 before the Asiatic Society of Bombay (in J. B. B. R. A. S. No. 18 for 1893 Art 20 pp. 330-340) after quoting the verse of Muṇḍaka III. 2. 8 remarks " It is not the falling of the drops in the infinite ocean, it is the whole ocean returning to that which he really is and has never ceased to be, to his own all-pervading eternal almighty nature " and concludes (p. 340) " Vedānta in its unfalsified form is the strongest support for morality, is the greatest consolation in the sufferings of life and death; Indians, keep to it. " Vide V. S. II. 3.43, where reference is made to Atharvaveda 'Brahma dāśā brahma dāsā brahmeme kitavā uta ' (occurring in the Paippalāda version as shown by Prof. Durgamohan Bhattacharya in his paper on a palm-leaf ms. of the Paippalāda-saṁhitā in Adyar Library Bulletin, vol. XXV, parts 1-4).

IV. From very ancient Vedic times one of the fundamental conceptions of our Indian culture has been the idea of three spiritual and religious debts owed by a person to the sages, gods and pitṛs, which he paid off by the study of the ancient lore, by sacrifices, and by having a son or sons respectively. This subject has been dealt with at length in the H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 270, 425, 560-61, 676, Vol. III p. 416 and above. p. 1318 note 2168. To these three debts the Mahābhārata added a fourth viz. the debt owed to all men paid off by goodness (vide H. of Dh. Vol. III p. 416 n. 675). Śabara on Jaimini VI. 2.31 explains that this doctrine is not confined to brāhmaṇas but to all members of the three classes, the word 'brāhmaṇa' used in the Tai. S. and other Vedic texts being only illustrative.

V. Another set of values is contained in the conception of puruṣārthas (ends or goals of human endeavour) viz. Dharma (right conduct), Artha (economics, politics and civics), Kāma (life of sex, of pleasures and aesthetics), Mokṣa (salvation, release or recovery by the self of its real nature and freedom from the bondage of low desires and aims). Mokṣa is said to be the highest goal (paramapuruṣārtha) and the first three are spoken of as 'trivarga'. The concept of Dharma is a far-reaching one and has been emphasized from very ancient times and refers to the principles which men have to observe in their lives and in social relations. This subject of puruṣārthas and of dharma has been dealt with at some length in H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 2-11 and Vol. III pp. 8-10 and 239-241. Therefore, only a few matters would be briefly emphasized here. It has been shown above on pp. 1-21 how the Ṛgveda had three words viz. ṛta (cosmic order), vrata (laws or ordinances deemed to be laid down by a god or gods) and dharma (religious rites or sacrifices or fixed principles), how gradually ṛta receded into the background and 'satya' took its place and Dharma became an all-embracing conception and vrata came to be restricted to sacred vows and rules of conduct. When a teacher was about to take leave of the pupil at the end of the latter's studenthood he placed in his final exhortation (Tai. Up. I. 11) Truth as the first and Dharma as next to it (satyaṁ vada dharmaṁ cara). The Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 14 equates Satya with Dharma. One of the noblest prayers occurs in the Bṛ. Up. (I. 3. 28) 'from falsehood lead me unto truth, from darkness unto light, from death unto life eternal'. The same Upaniṣad in V. 2. 3 inculcates on all men the three cardinal virtues of self-restraint (dama), charity (dāna) and compassion (dayā). The Chān. Up. V. 10 quotes a verse 'the thief stealing gold, the drinker of liquor, one who dishonours his guru's bed and the murderer of a brāhmaṇa—these four fall (into hell) and the fifth is one who associates with them.' It would be noticed that this ancient verse contains some of the ten commandments of the Bible. In spite of these (noble) Upaniṣadic teachings of Dharma and morality, Prof. Keith (in 'Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upaniṣads', Vol. II. p. 584, ed. of 1925) makes the pontifical but perverse pronouncement that 'the ethical content of the Upaniṣads is negligible and valueless'. It is not necessary to combat here his views. Most scholars would rather follow Schopenhauer (quoted in S. B. E. Vol. I. p. LXI) and Deussen (quoted above in Vol. II. p. 424) rather than Keith. The concept of Dharma began to occupy the highest position in the times of the Upaniṣads. The Bṛ. Up. I. 4.14 states 'there is nothing higher than Dharma.' The Tai.[2610] Āraṇyaka avers 'Dharma is the support (or prop) of the whole world'. The Mahābhārata and Manu repeatedly refer to the high value of Dharma. The Mahābhārata claims that everything concerning the four puruṣārthas is contained in it and that what is not contained in it about them would be found in no other work. In Udyogaparva it is stated 'Dharma is so called because of its character as the sustainer of all beings.' Vanaparva and Manu both declare 'Dharma when violated kills the violator, when preserved it preserves man; therefore, Dharma should not be violated lest Dharma might destroy us.' Vyāsa winds up the Mahābhārata with the solemn appeal 'with arms up-raised I here raise a loud cry, but no one listens to me; from Dharma spring wealth and (satisfaction of) all desires, why is Dharma not resorted to? One should not give up Dharma for some desired object, nor through fear nor from greed nor even for the sake of life itself. Dharma is eternal, pleasure and pain are impermanent, the individual self is eternal, but the conditions (under which self works) are impermanent.' The Mahābhārata passages quoted in n. 18 p. 8 of H. of Dh. Vol. II say 'the three (Dharma, Artha, Kāma) are meant for all men, that Dharma is the best of the three, that Artha is middling and Kāma is the lowest and that if there be conflict then Dharma must be followed and the other two abandoned.' This shows that Artha and Kāma were made subservient to Dharma (the ethical code) and all three were subservient to the spiritual goal. Our Śāstras do not at all prescribe asceticism for all, but they recognized a scale of values. The Manusmṛti (IV. 3 and 15) provides 'one should accumulate wealth for securing only his needs by actions proper for his station (varṇa &c) and without harm to his body. One should not desire to acquire wealth by excessive attachment nor by actions condemned by Śāstra nor when he has already enough wealth nor from any kind of person (a sinner or like), even when he is in straightened circumstances.' Āp. Dh. S. (II. 8. 20 22-23) declares that man should enjoy all such pleasures as are not against Dharma; by doing so he secures both worlds (this life and life in the next world). Gautama Dharmasūtra[2611] IX. 46-47 and Yāj. I. 115 practically say the same thing. In the Bhagavadgītā (VII. 11) Kṛṣṇa identifies himself with Kāma that is not in conflict with Dharma. The Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya no doubt says (I. 7) that 'Artha is the chief among the three puruṣārthas', but he also provides that one should enjoy a life of pleasures in such a way as not to conflict with Dharma and Artha, that one should not lead a life devoid of pleasures altogether. The Anuśāsanaparva (chap. III. 18-19) states that Dharma, Artha and Kāma are the three prizes (fruits) of human life, these three should be striven for but in such a way as not to coflict with Dharma'. The Manusmṛti (V. 56) declares that eating flesh, drinking intoxicants and sexual intercourse are not sinful in themselves; all beings are naturally inclined to these; but abstention (from these) leads to great rewards (and therefore Śāstra emphasizes abstention)'. The Rāmāyaṇa (Araṇyakāṇḍa 9.30) contains a statement similar to Svargārohaṇaparva 5. 62.

2610. धर्मो विश्वस्य जगतः प्रतिष्ठा। लोके धर्मिष्ठं प्रजा उपसर्पन्ति। धर्मेण पापमपनुदति धर्मे सर्वं प्रतिष्ठितं तस्माद्धर्मं परमं वदन्ति। तै. आ. X. 63, महानारायणोप०; धर्मे चार्थे च कामे च मोक्षे च भरतर्षभ। यदिहास्ति तदन्यत्र यन्नेहास्ति न तत्क्वचित्॥ आदिपर्व 62.53 = स्वर्गारोहणपर्व 5.50; vide also आदि° 62.23; धारणाद्धर्म इत्याहुर्धर्मो धारयते प्रजाः। उद्योग 89.67, 137.9; धर्म एव हतो हन्ति धर्मो रक्षति रक्षितः। तस्माद्धर्मो न हन्तव्यो मा नो धर्मो हतोऽवधीत्॥ मनु VIII.15. वनपर्व 313.128 is the same, except that the third pāda is तस्माद्धर्मं न त्यजामि; ऊर्ध्ववाहुर्विरौम्येष न च कश्चिच्छृणोति माम्। धर्मादर्थश्च कामश्च स किमर्थं न सेव्यते॥ न जातु कामान्न भयान्न लोभाद्धर्मं जह्याज्जीवितस्यापि हेतोः। नित्यो धर्मः सुखदुःखे त्वनित्ये जीवो नित्यो हेतुरस्य त्वनित्यः॥ स्वर्गारोहणपर्व 5, 62–63.

2611. न पूर्वाह्णमध्यन्दिनापराह्णानफलान् कुर्याद्यथाशक्ति धर्मार्थकामेभ्यः। तेषु तु धर्मोत्तरः स्यात्। गौ. ध. सू. IX. 46-47; धर्मार्थकामान् स्वे काले यथाशक्ति न हापयेत्॥ या. I.115; मिताक्षरा comments 'धर्मार्थकामान् स्वोचितकाले यथाशक्ति न परित्यजेत्। यथासम्भवं सेवेतेत्यर्थः।'; धर्मश्चार्थश्च कामश्च त्रितयं जीविते फलम्। एतत् प्रयमवाप्तव्यमधर्मपरिवर्जितम्॥ अनुशासनपर्व chap. 111. 18-19, ब्रह्मपुराण 217. 11.

When reforms are suggested in these days, conservative people put forward the plea that ours is 'sanātana-dharma'[2612] and so no changes should be introduced. But the words 'sanātana dharma' do not mean that Dharma always stands still or is immutable; all that those words mean is that our culture is very ancient and has a long tradition behind it but they do not mean that Dharma permits no change. As a matter of fact fundamental changes in conceptions, beliefs and practices have been made from ancient times to the medieval times by means of various devices. Attention may be drawn to a few. Veda was all in all in very ancient times but in the Upaniṣads this was changed, the Muṇḍaka I. 1. 5 designating the four Vedas as inferior knowledge (aparā vidyā) and the knowledge of the immutable brahman as the higher vidyā; in the Chān. Up. VII. 1.4, the four Vedas and several other branches of knowledge are called by Sanatkumāra (whom Nārada approached for instruction) mere name (nāma). Yajñas were the most important religious practice in the early Vedic period, but the Muṇḍaka Up. I. 2. 7 designates them as leaky boats and regards those who hold them as the best thing to be fools. Vide above pp. 1265–72 about changes in the views on anuloma marriages, on the topic of whose food may be partaken even by a brāhmaṇa, the abrogation of many Vedic practices by the doctrine of Kalivarjya (matters forbidden in Kali age) &c. Manu, Yāj., Viṣṇudharmasūtra, Viṣṇu and other purāṇas expressly provide that one should not observe but give up what was once Dharma, if it has come to be hateful to the people and if it would end in unhappiness (vide p. 1270 n. 2071 above). The Śāntiparva[2613] expressly states that what was adharma (in one age) may become dharma in another 2612. One of the earliest occurrences of the word सनातनधर्म is found in the Khanapur plates of Mādhavavarman (in E. I. Vol. 27, p. 312) edited by Dr. V. V. Mirashi, who assigns it to about the 6th century A. D., in the description of the donee as 'यजनयाजनाध्ययनाध्यापनदानप्रतिग्रहाया (च?) श्रुतिस्मृतिविहितसनातनधर्मैकनिरताय etc.'; The land granted was in Returaka (modern Retrem in the Satara District of the Mahārāṣṭra State). Another early reference to the phrase सनातनधर्म is in ब्रह्माण्डपुराण II. 33. 37–38 अद्रोहश्चाप्यलोभश्च तपो भूतदया दमः। ब्रह्मचर्यं तथा सत्यमनुक्रोशः क्षमा धृतिः। सनातनस्य धर्मस्य मूलमेतदुदाहृतम्॥. The words 'सनातनधर्म' are used in the sense of ancient practice no longer prevalent in Ādiparva 122.18 (Ch. ed.), and in the sense of 'duty recognised long ago' in रामायण, अयोध्याकाण्ड 19.26, 21. 49 etc.

---

2613. भवत्यधर्मो धर्मो हि धर्माधर्मावुभावपि। कारणाद्देशकालस्य देशकालः स तादृशः॥ शान्ति 78. 32.

and that dharma and adharma are both subject to the limitations of country and time. Kāma also was not neglected, as the Kāma-sūtra (particularly its chapter on 'nāgaraka-vṛtta' I. 4) will show. The extensive Nāṭyaśāstra of Bharata (containing about 5000 verses) is a witness to the aesthetic enjoyment of dance, music and drama in ancient India by thousands of ordinary men and women.

Hindu thought on the three goals of human life came to this 'do your duty, do not fall into temptations, perform duties for their own sake (Gītā II. 47, III. 19), do unto others as you would be done by (Gītā VI. 32, Anuśāsanaparva 113. 8–9, Śānti 259. 20. = Cr. ed. 251. 19), earn wealth but without conflict with dharma and without injury to others and lead a chaste sexual life and enjoy aesthetic pleasures. These summarise the teachings underlying the conceptions of the three puruṣārthas. There was hardly any real pessimism[2614] in the principal Dharmaśāstra works except perhaps here and there in the Mahābhārata. They consider life to be worth living, provided all actions are informed by the dictates of Dharma. Manu (XII. 88-89) provides that Karma (conduct or actions) prescribed by the Veda is of two kinds, viz. pravṛtta and nivṛtta, the former leading to happiness in this world and to svarga, and the latter to niḥśreyasa (mokṣa) and requiring complete absence of all hankerings preceded by realization of brahma. The Anuśāsana-parva (chap. 146. 76-80) divides Dharma into pravṛttilakṣaṇa (characterized by persistent activity) and nivṛttilakṣaṇa (characterised by abstention from worldly activities and desires), which latter is to be followed for mokṣa and lays down certain practical and salutary rules viz. one should constantly make gifts according to one's ability, constantly offer sacrifices and perform rites to secure one's prosperity. One should collect wealth following what is right and such wealth obtained righteously should be divided into three parts; one should secure both dharma and artha with one-third of the wealth acquired, one-third should be spent on Kāma (i. e. chaste sexual life and enjoyment of other pleasures not in conflict with dharma) and one-third he should increase. Manu (VII. 99 and 101) prescribes similar rules for the king. The same parvan (Anuśāsana chap. 144. 10–25 and 31–39) dwells at length upon those actions that lead men to heaven (the phrase ' te narāḥ svarga-gāminaḥ ' is repeated in each verse). These provisions are meant for all ordinary people. The Rāmāyaṇa [2615] quotes a popular verse that man is not condemned to never-ending misery but joy comes to a man even after a hundred years if he be alive.

2614. The Bible was very pessimistic, both Christ and Saint Paul regard the world as evil or at least spoiled. Christ calls upon people not to resist evil (vide Hobhouse 'Morals in evolution' Vol. II. p. 152).

The 4th Puruṣārtha Mokṣa can be obtained only by a few. It is not a bow which every man or any man can make strung. It was a very difficult path like a razor's edge (Kaṭha Up. III. 14), far more difficult than the path of devotion to a Personal God (Bhagavadgītā XII. 5). The Upaniṣadic doctrine of liberation comes to this that man's nature is really divine, that it is possible for a human being to know and become actually identified with the Godhead, that this should be the ultimate goal of man's life, that this can be achieved by one's own efforts, but the way to achieve this goal is most difficult and requires the aspirant to give up egotism, selfishness and worldly attachments. Besides, there is another difficulty. The conceptions about mokṣa differ in the different schools of thought like Nyāya Sāṅkhya, Vedānta. Even in the Vedānta the conception about Mokṣa on the part of the different ācāryas differs. Some declared that there were four stages in Mukti viz. Sālokya (place in Lord's world), Sāmīpya (proximity), Sārūpya (attaining same form as God) and Sāyujya (absorption). [2616] These matters cannot be gone into here.

2615. कल्याणी बत गाथेयं लौकिकी प्रतिभाति मे ।
एति जीवन्तमानन्दो नरं वर्षशतादपि ॥
रामायण सुन्दरकाण्ड 34.6, (M L. J. ed.)

The महाभाष्य quotes the third पाद् ' एति जीवन्तमानन्दः ' in two places, viz. on पा. I. 3.12 and III. 1.67 under वार्तिक 5, Kielhorn's edition, Vol, I. p. 277 and Vol. II. p. 59.

2616. The तै. सं. V. 7.5.7 has : एतासामेव देवतानां सायुज्यतां गच्छति. But this is entirely different from the idea of मोक्ष. The words सायुज्य, सारूप्य and सलोकता occur in ऐ. ब्रा. II. 24; सायुज्य and सलोकता occur in बृह. उ. I. 3. 22, सलोकता, सार्ष्टिता (same happiness) and सायुज्य occur in छा. उ. II. 20. 2. The सूतसंहिता (मुक्तिखण्ड chap. 3. 28) speaks of the same four stages of मोक्ष. सायुज्य is derived from सयुज् (yoked or joined together). The words सयुजः वाजान् (horses yoked together) occur in Ṛg. III. 30. 11 and सयुज (meaning सयुजौ) occurs in Ṛg. I. 164.20. The पुरुषार्थसुधानिधि of सायण (Madras Govt. Oriental Mss. Series, ed. by T. Chandrasekharan, 1955) in its मोक्षस्कन्ध states : मुक्तिर्नानाविधा प्रोक्ता सायुज्यादिप्रभेदतः । तत्र सायुज्यरूपाया मुक्तेः साक्षात्तु कारणम् । सम्यग्ज्ञानं न कर्मोक्तं नानयोश्च समुच्चयः । कर्मणैव हि सिध्यन्ति पुंसामन्याश्च मुक्तयः ॥ (chap. 11 Verses 2–3).

Dharma is divided into different classes from different standpoints. One classification is into śrauta (based on the Vedas) and Smārta (based on Smṛtis). There was another and a more comprehensive classification of Dharma into six classes viz. varṇadharma (duties and rights of varṇas), āśramadharma (rules about the āśramas), varṇāśramadharma (rules enjoined because the person belongs to a certain class and was also in a certain āśrama (e. g. the rule that a brāhmaṇa brahmacārī should carry a staff of palāśa tree), guṇadharma (rules for one who holds or occupies a certain position, as in the case of a king), naimittikadharma (rules that have to be observed only on certain occasions such as bath on an eclipse, expiation for a lapse and lastly sāmānyadharma (duties common to all (such as those described in pp. 10-11 of the H. of Dh. Vol. II). This leads on to the next important characteristic of Hindu culture and society, viz. varṇas and castes.

VI. Varṇa and caste. The subject of the origin of varṇa classification, the caste system and the duties, privileges and disabilities of the four varṇas have been dealt with at length in the History of Dharmaśāstra Vol. II. pp. 19–164. It has been shown that the word 'varṇa' (colour) has been applied to Āryas and dāsas in the Ṛgveda, that these two (āryas and dāsas) were opposite camps, that brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas are mentioned in the Ṛgveda, but the word varṇa has not been expressly connected with them. The words Vaiśya and Śūdra do not occur in the Ṛgveda except in the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 12) but even in that hymn the word 'varṇa' is not employed with reference to them. That hymn is held to be comparatively a late one by most modern scholars. It may be conceded that at the time when the Puruṣasūkta was composed the community was divided into four groups viz brāhmaṇas (thinkers, learned men, priests) kṣatriyas (rulers and warriors), vaiśyas (common people following agriculture and crafts) and śūdras (those that did menial work). Such a division of people into four groups is not unnatural and is found in many countries even now. In England there are aristocratic families, there is the middle class and the workers in factories &c. They are not necessarily based on birth alone, though largely so based. It has been shown above (p. 1265) that intermarriages between brāhmaṇas and the other varṇas were allowed up to the time of the Yājñavalkya Smṛti which expresses its dissent from its predecessors and prohibits a person of the three upper classes from marrying a śūdra woman. There is no evidence to show that intermarriage or interdining among the four varṇas was prohibited in the Vedic age. In the Vāj. S. 30. 6–13, Kāṭhaka S. XVII. 13, Tai. Br. III. 4. 2–3 numerous artisans and craftsmen such as takṣan, rathakāra, kulāla, karmāra, niṣāda, sūta and others are mentioned but it is extremely doubtful whether they had become petrified castes at the period of these works. Rathakāra and karmāra and sūta are mentioned in Atharvaveda III. 5. 6–7. It is probable that by the time of the Chān. Up. V. 10. 7 Cāṇḍālas had become untouchables (like dogs and hogs) and Paulkasa seems to be equated with Cāṇḍāla in Bṛ. Up. IV.3.22. Even in the times of Yājñavalkya and Parāśara (2nd to 6th century A. D.) a brāhmaṇa was permitted to take food at the house of such śūdras as his dāsa, cowherd, barber, a tenant of his land on the rent of half share of crops (vide above p. 1266). The varṇas were only four, there was no fifth varṇa (Manu X. 4 and Anuśāsanaparva, chap. 48. 30), though in modern times untouchables are often spoken of as pañcamas (against Smṛti usage). The word jāti in the sense of caste hardly ever occurs in Vedic literature but it occurs in the Nirukta (XII. 13) and in Pāṇini (V. 4. 9), who explains 'brāhmaṇajātīya' as meaning one who is a brāhmaṇa by caste'. Sometimes, Jāti and Varṇa are differentiated in Smṛtis (Yāj. II. 69, 260), but from ancient times the word Jāti is confounded with the word Varṇa. Manu (X. 31) uses the word Varṇa in the sense of mixed castes; conversely, the word Jāti is employed in the sense of 'Varṇa' in Manu (VIII. 177, IX. 85-86, X. 41).

A sort of caste system existed in several countries such as Persia, Rome and Japan, but it disappeared and had never attained the complexity of the Indian caste system.

There are now several thousand castes and sub-castes in India. How they arose is, according to the present author, an insoluble problem. Sherring in 'Hindu Tribes and Castes' (1881, vol. III. p. 231) held that caste was an invention (of the brāhmaṇas). How such a huge system could be invented and imposed upon millions of people by a small minority without physical or political power never occurred to the prejudiced Christian missionary of the third quarter of the 19th century.

It is well-known that at least from the 6th century B. C.

onwards India was being invaded by Persians, Kāmbojas,[2617] Greeks, Scythians (generally held to be the same as Śakas), and people like Pāradas, Pahlavas, Cīnas, Kirātas, Daradas (Dards) and Khaśas emigrated into India. Manu (X. 43–44), after mentioning these and Pauṇḍrakas, Oḍras (Orissa), Draviḍas, asserts that these were originally Kṣatriyas but had become Śūdras because the sacraments like Upanayana had ceased among them and because they lost contact with brāhmaṇas. Manu X. 45 shows that in his day there were mixed castes that spoke mleccha tongues and Arya languages but were treated as dasyus (śūdras). Gautama-dharmasūtra (IV. 14–17), Manu X. 5–40, Yāj. I. 91–95 and many other works dilate upon the rise of mixed castes from the marriages or unions of men and women of different varṇas and declare how further castes and sub-castes arise from the marriages and unions of men and women belonging to different classes and castes. This was called Varṇasaṅkara or simply saṅkara, about which Arjuna expressed concern (Gītā I. 41-42) and against which the Bhagavad-gītā (III. 24-25) inveighs bitterly. It was stated by Gautama (Dh. S. VIII. 3) that the prosperity (of the castes and sub-castes), protection and the non-mixture (of varṇas) depend on the king and learned brāhmaṇas. The Nasik Inscription of king Siri Pulumāyi (E. I. Vol. VIII. p. 60 about 130 A. D.) extols the king as having prevented the intermingling of varnas (Varṇasankara).

The mixture of castes (varnasaṅkara)[2618] had gone so far even in the early ages that in the Vanaparva (180. 31–33) Yudhiṣṭhira is made to say that 'It is difficult to ascertain the

---

2617. Atri-smrti VII. 2 (in prose, Ānan. collection) mentions some of these foreign tribes and peoples. Vide Anuśāsanaparva 33. 21–23 (Śakā yavana-kāmbojāh...kṣatriyajātayaḥ | vṛṣalatvam parigatā brāhmaṇānām adarśanāt &c.) and Anuśāsana 35. 17–18 also. Śaka and Yavana are included among Śūdras by the Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini II. 4. 10 (q. in H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 92. n. 200). Aśoka in his Rock Edicts V. and XIII refers to Yonas, Yonarāja and Kāmbojas as people on the borders of his empire.

A. M. T. Jackson says in 'Indian Antiquary' for 1910 p. 77 'the attractive power of Hindu civilization which has enabled it to assimilate and absorb into itself every foreign invader except the Moslem and European...India civilized the nomads of Central Asia, so that wild Turkman tribes have been transformed into some of the most famous Rajput royal races.'

2618. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 59–61 on Varṇasaṅkara.

caste of a person on account of the confusing mixture of Varṇas; all men raise progeny from all sorts of women; therefore, those who are wise regard character as the principal and desirable matter' (q. in H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 61 n. 149). The original scheme of varṇas was natural and based on the work that men put in for the community as a whole. It was not based on birth. The ideas underlying the original varṇa system made the nearest approach towards a society in which there was no attempt to secure a competitive equality but in which the interest of all groups were regarded as identical. In Vedic times there were only classes and not castes in the modern sense. Even in the smṛtis when many castes had arisen the greatest emphasis was laid on duties rather than on privileges and on high moral character and the value of the effort made by a man. It is therefore stated in the Gītā (IV. 13) that the system of four varṇas was created on the basis of quality (or on the basis of sattva, rajas and tamas) and actions and (in XVIII. 42–44) it specifies the qualities and actions required in the four varṇas as an ideal, viz. serenity of mind, self-control, austerity, purity, forbearance, straightforwardness, wisdom (spiritual knowledge), knowledge (of all kinds), faith (in God)–these are the natural actions (duties) for a brāhmaṇa; bravery, fury, energy, steadiness, capability, not running away in battle, charity and rulership-these are duties of a kṣatriya; agriculture, keeping herds of cows (and cattle), trade and commerce–these are the natural duties of the Vaiśya; work of the nature of service is the natural duty of the Śūdra. These words of Gītā cannot be used for supporting the present scheme of thousands of castes and sub-castes of water-tight character. If birth had been regarded as the sole or principal basis, the words in the Gītā[2619]

2619. It is remarkable that the late Lokamānya Tilak advocated about four months before his death (in the issue of the 'Kesari' of 16th March 1920) that anyone who spent his life in Indian freedom struggle must be treated as a brāhmaṇa to whatever caste or sub-caste-he might have belonged by birth, that caste should not be treated as a matter of birth but that we must begin to treat it as dependent on qualities and actions and he relies on our śāstras and quotes in support a Pali verse from the Suttanipāta: न जच्चा वसलो होति न जच्चा होति ब्राह्मणो। कम्मणा वसलो होति कम्मणा होति ब्राह्मणो॥ 'a man does not become a Vṛṣala, that is, Śūdra by caste (or birth) nor does he become a brāhmaṇa by birth; a man becomes a vṛṣala or a brāhmāṇa by his actions' (compare Mahāvagga, vāseṭṭhasutta, verse 57 in SBE Vol. X part 2 p. 115).

(Continued on next page)

(IV.13) should have been, ' Jāti-karmavibhāgaśaḥ ' (' or janma--karma') and not ' Guṇakarma '. It would be noticed that out of the nine Karmāṇi specified as natural to brāhmaṇas most are moral and spiritual and no emphasis is laid on the element of birth. At the time of the Mahābhārata there must have been a great deal of ferment, some revolt and criticism about the petrified caste system. The epic frequently refers to the theme of varnas and jātis. Vide for example, Vanaparva (chapter 180), Virāṭaparva 50. 4–7, Udyoga 23. 26, 40. 25–29, Śānti 188. 10-14, Anusāsana 143. A few passages may be set out here. Śānti 188. 10 says ' there is no (real) distinction between the varṇas, (since) the whole world is of Brahmā, since it was formerly created by Brahmā, and has had the system of varṇas on account of the various actions (of men)'; Śānti (189. 4 and 8) avers ' that man is known as brāhmana in whom are seen truthfulness, generosity, absence of hate, absence of wickedness, shame (restraint for avoiding wrong-doing), compassion and a life of austerity; if these signs are observed in a śūdra and are not found in a brāhmana, then the śūdra is not a śūdra (should not be treated as a śūdra) and the brāhmaṇa is not a brāhmaṇa. A similar passage occurs in Vanaparva 216. 14–15 (quoted above in note 1640 pp. 1005–6 and compared to Dhammapada 393, translated on p. 1005). When the wrangles between Vaiṣṇavas and others were at their highest the Bhāgavatapurāṇa (VII. 9. 10) avers that a cāṇḍāla who is a devotee of Viṣṇu is superior to a brāhmaṇa who is not a devotee of Viṣṇū. Apart from the specific qualities required to be possessed by the members of each of the four varṇas, all Dharmaśāstra works attach the highest importance to certain moral qualities and enjoin them on all men. Manu X. 63, Yāj. I. 22, Gaut. Dh. S. VIII. 23–25, Matsya 52. 9–10 (quoted above on p. 1023 n. 1652) prescribe for all Varṇas a brief code of morals, such as ahiṁsā, truthfulness, non-stealing (i. e. no wrongful taking of another's property), purity and restraint of the senses. The Mitākṣarā on Yāj. I. 22 explains that the word 'sarveṣām' therein states that these moral qualities if practised are the means of Dharma for all men from brāhmaṇas to cāṇḍālas. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 10–11 for different enumerations of dharmas common to all men. The Manusmṛti (I. 1) begins by saying that the great sages requested Manu to expound the dharmas of all varṇas and of the intermediate castes. This (viz. the Dharmas of varṇas, intermediate castes and āśramas) is the principal topic in most of the smṛtis.

---

(Continued from last page)

There is great misunderstanding about his opposition to those reformers who did not care for or engage in political agitation but spent their energies and time in inveighing against some social evils. He wanted to remove the evil of grinding poverty and political bondage of India due to the colonial policy of Britain for over 150 years and therefore he stressed the point that everyone must join in the fight for freedom and did not like the idea of some very intellectual men spending time and energy in crying themselves hoarse for only social reform. He thought that when India became free from the incubus of foreign rule, many social reforms would be introduced in no time. Events have shown that he was right, and the social reformers who maligned him were wrong. Our Constitution abolished untouchability at one stroke (Article 17), legislation has made a provision that to treat a man as untouchable in public is punishable (vide Act XXII of 1955 sections 3 and 4), legislation has removed all ban against intercaste marriages and several other reforms have been brought about. Vide ' Social Legislation and its role in Social Welfare ' published in 1956 on behalf of the Planning Commission. For Tilak's article, vide 'लोकमान्य टिळकांचे केसरींतिल लेख भाग ३, पृष्ठें ४५३-५८). British people were cautious and were generally opposed to progressive social reforms in Hindu Society. The High Courts administered Hindu Law as contained in the medieval digests (nibandhas) like the Dāyabhāga, the Mitākṣarā and the Vyavahāramayūkha and not the law found in ancient smṛtis, which allowed anuloma marriages; vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 448–452 and ' A Century of Social reform ' by S. Natarajan, Asia Publishing House, Bombay, particularly pp. 126–173.

A very high ideal was placed before brāhmaṇas (vide above pp 936–938). They were to study the Veda and its subsidiary lores as a duty (to be discharged), were to perform sacrifices and make gifts also and their proper means of livelihood were only three viz. teaching the Veda and Śāstras, officiating as priests in sacrifices and receiving religious and other gifts. How arduous learning the Veda was will be clear when it is remembered that a brāhmaṇa who was to be regarded as a very learned one had to memorize one Veda at least. Supposing he was a student of the Ṛgveda he had to commit to memory the ten thousand and odd verses of the Ṛgveda, also its pada-pāṭha, its krama-pāṭha, the Brāhmaṇa text (generally the Aitareya), the six Vedāṅgas (auxiliary works) viz. the Kalpasūtra (of Āśvalāyana generally), Vyākaraṇa (the Grammar of Pāṇini in about four thousand sūtras), the Nirukta (in at least 12 chapters), metrics, Śikṣā (Phonetics) and Jyotiṣa. The first three of these six Vedāṅgas are rather longish treatises and abstruse. These extensive texts were generally committed to memory without understanding the meaning and so entailed very great strain on the mind and memory. There were thousands of such brāhmaṇas in India up to the beginning of this century, and even now there are still hundreds of such men. They were to teach the Veda without demanding any fee (demanding a fee to teach Veda was and is regarded as sinful even to this day). They were allowed to receive a fee if the pupil or somebody on his behalf paid something at the end of studenthood. Not only did they transmit the Veda free, but there were in the present author's youth in Koṅkaṇa and Mahārāṣṭra many Vaidik brāhmaṇas who gave free board and lodging to several pupils (or arranged to feed them by turns at the houses of brāhmaṇa families in the village or town). All this has now almost stopped owing to rationing during the world wars and present high prices. So teaching hardly brought any regular and substantial amount of money (vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 108–110). As regards officiating as priests, that was a precarious and fitful source of income. Besides, in Ṛg. times at least, the scion of a royal family could be a purohita i. e. a priest (vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 109). It should be remembered that all brāhmaṇas were not priests; they could be so if they chose and if they were learned. Further, many learned brāhmaṇas refuse even now to act as priests in śrāddhas for pitṛs (at least for three years after the man's death). Pāṇini (V. 2. 71) provides for the formation of the word 'Brāhmaṇaka' meaning a province or country where 'brāhmaṇas followed the profession of arms' and Kauṭilya (IX. 2) also refers to armies of brāhmaṇās, kṣatriyas &c. The third source specially permitted to brāhmaṇas was the privilege of receiving religious gifts from a worthy or unblemished person (vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 110. 11). Brāhmaṇas could follow other occupations in distress, but even then there were great restrictions imposed on them by śāstras even when they took to other means of livelihood (vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 118–132).[2620] The ideal set before brāhmaṇas was one of poverty, of plain living and high thinking, of forsaking a very active pursuit of wealth, of insisting on the necessity and high value to themselves and the Aryan society of studying, preserving, propagating and augmenting the ancient literature and culture. Kings, rich persons and even 2620. It was, for example, provided by Vasiṣṭha (II. 27) and Manu X. 92 that a brāhmaṇa becomes a śūdra by selling milk for three days. In the present author's boyhood some poor brāhmaṇas had begun to sell milk and the result was that they were very much looked down upon by the villagers. There would be the temptation to add water to the milk to gain money.

---

ordinary men made gifts of lands and houses to learned brāhmaṇas (which were deemed the most meritorious gifts).[2621] The present author saw in his boyhood very learned Vaidika brāhmaṇas themselves ploughing their own lands, while repeating inaudibly the Veda (i. e. revising it, as otherwise it might slip from their memory) and knew a middle class Vaidika brāhmaṇa family that for seven generations had taught Veda to a number of pupils and provided them with free board and lodging; (out of these seven the present author personally knew three generations, the last of whom stopped a few years ago the Vaidika school owing to present high prices of food, decrease in gifts due to the increasing poverty of the people round about and their unconcern for Vedic studies). Even in the times of the early Upaniṣads, the brāhmaṇa's first duty was to learn and teach the Veda and to take all knowledge for his province. Ajātaśatru, king of Kāśī, exclaimed, when the brāhmaṇa Bālāki Gārgya approached him for knowledge of brahman, 'this is against the natural usual course that a brāhmaṇa should approach a kṣatriya to learn about brahman' (Bṛ. Up. II. 1. 15). That indicates that many brāhmaṇas must have endeavoured to act up to the old ideal of learning in olden times. They became the custodians of the vast literature that had accumulated and was growing every day and were expected to preserve that literature and propagate it. Though every brāhmaṇa could not have lived up to the high ideals set up for brāhmaṇas, a very large number must have made as near an approach to the ideal as possible It was the greatness of these latter that led to the glorification of the whole class. In most communities there is a group of the élite, which represents the ideals of the whole community, its essential tendencies and acts up to the ideals. Learning, great moral and spiritual attainments among individuals are rather elusive and impalpable, while birth in a certain family is a very obvious thing. Most people in ancient and medieval times followed the occupation of their forefathers. The kingly office was highly eulogised by Manu (VIII. 4-8), who propounded the theory that the king represented in his person eight deities (Indra, Agni, Varuṇa, the Sun, the Moon, Kubera, Yama and Vāyu) and that the king was a great divinity in human form. The office of the king also was hereditary.

2621. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II p. 113 n 241 for large gifts to brāhmaṇas, in the early centuries of the Christian era, of villages, cows and marriage expenses.

Except in a few cases the brāhmaṇas were never rulers. It was the kṣatriyas and śūdras that were rulers. Therefore, a generalisation was made that birth in a particular group or family was a more or less sure indication of the possession of certain qualities generally associated with the members of that group or family. The brāhmaṇas were teachers with no salary, officiated as priests when called and were given fees, but there was no assurance of a continuous and certain payment. They had no church organization[2622] (such as Archbishops, bishops, priests, deacons in the Anglican church) and monasteries for monks among Buddhists and in the Christian Church. The brāhmaṇas were not monks but house-holders who had to maintain a family and bring up children and to make their sons learned and of high moral and spiritual worth. There is no example in the whole world of a small minority of the population of a country, that had no military strength behind it, being revered for at least thirty centuries without any serious challenge not only by the common people but by nobles and kings. What was the basis of the reverence shown to brāhmaṇas as a class for at least three thousand years? They were believed to be religious, moral and spiritual leaders and the possessors and representatives of an idealistic culture ('ideational' in the language of Prof. Sorokin). The secret of the power of and regard for brāhmaṇas had been the fact that as a class they performed well three of their appointed tasks of study, teaching and comparative renunciation (in spite of the failings of some individual brāhmaṇas). The brāhmaṇas had no army to support them and they could not, by devoting themselves to physical sciences, find new sources of income or well-being for themselves or for the whole community.

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru in his Autobiography (p. 432) pays in passing a tribute to the Brāhmaṇa ideal as follows 'But the West also brings an antidote to the evils of this cut-throat civilization – the principles of socialism, co-operation and service to the community for the common good. This is not so unlike the old Brahmin ideal of service etc.' The ancient Indian culture exalted the mind and soul over the body and hence arose an extra-ordinary development of asceticism.

2622. The income of the See of the Archbishop of Canterbury, it is understood, has been fifteen thousand pounds a year (vide Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, ed. by F. L. Cross, London 1957, p. 232). Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II p. 138 for a sample of the actions of Popes and eulogies of the Nordic race by Spengler and others.

If in modern times the caste system has broken down and has become harmful and unpopular among all people, it may be scrapped and discarded (vide above p. 1270 note 2071 for provisions about this). But such a huge and all-pervading system cannot be destroyed in a short time nor by legislation. What those who desire to destroy altogether the caste system want is not clear. Do they want complete westernization of the whole of India ? To the present author this appears to be not only very difficult but almost impossible. Legislation may help a little, but it cannot eradicate within the foreseeable future the mental attitudes and outlook of millions of people. Cases have been reported where village kunbis and craftsmen threatened to beat untouchables that wanted to draw water from a village well in the presence of a magistrate. If this campaign against the whole caste system is carried on with force, there are sure to be widespread riots and disorders and the Independence of the country attained after two centuries of colonial rule may be jeopardized. Two matters must be carefully considered and strenuously worked for. Government must see to it that nationalism, the emotion of being one people, in spite of differences in some respects, must be instilled from childhood and among the masses. For that purpose free and compulsory education for all children on national lines must be achieved as quickly as possible. Merely inveighing against casteism by leaders would not do, when people often suspect them as guilty of other ' isms ' (such as nepotism). Universal primary and secondary education, growing number of inter-caste marriages, a growing sense of solidarity as to essentials of culture (though petty differences may exist) would be the first requisites in any scheme of the removal of castes. Besides, very large numbers of self-sacrificing men, of high moral character and devotion to duty would be required for eradicating the evils of the decayed caste system. Another matter also must be very carefully considered. What is going to be substituted in place of the old caste system ? People are afraid that a new caste system of ministers, bureaucrats, captains of industry, men in power and workers is going to be substituted without the saving grace of the ancient caste system.

It should not be forgotten that high spiritual life and mokṣa were not denied to the śūdra. It is true that the Pūrvamīmāṁsā denied to the śūdra the right to study the Veda and to perform Vedic sacrifices (VI. I. 26). But even in those ancient times one sage, Bādari, advocated that the śūdra could study the Veda and perform Vedic sacrifices (P. M. S. VI. 1. 27). Besides, it should be noted that the śūdra was not at all debarred from a spiritual life and could secure mokṣa by studying the Mahābhārata (which contains thousands of verses on Mokṣa), which Vyāsa compassionately composed for the benefit of women and śūdras and which calls itself (in Ādiparva chap. 62. 23) Dharmaśāstra, Arthaśāstra and Mokṣaśāstra, as declared by the Bhāgavata-purāṇa I. 4. 25. All that was decided was that a śūdra could not secure Mokṣa by the study of Veda. Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. I. 3. 38 points out that śūdras like Vidura (Ādiparva 63. 96–97 and 114, 106. 24-28, Udyogaparva 41. 5) and Dharma-vyādha (Vanaparva 207) possesed knowledge of brahmavidyā and that it is impossible to say that they were not able to secure Mokṣa. Vide above pp. 921–22 and note 1468a for the discussion of the relevant passages. It is noteworthy that even in early Vedic times the Rathakāra (a caste not belonging to any of the three higher classes) was allowed to set up Vedic fires and could repeat certain Vedic mantras for that purpose and the Niṣāda (also not belonging to any of the three varṇas, but being a śūdra) was allowed to perform an iṣṭi to Rudra with Vedic mantras. Vide pp. 1290–91 (for Rathakāra) and pp. 1295–96 (for Niṣāda) above. These facts show that Vedic sacrifices had penetrated into certain śūdra castes long before the sūtras and smṛtis The Bhāgavatapurāṇa (VII. 9. 10) was prepared to hold that a cāṇḍāla (by birth) if he becomes a devotee of Viṣṇu was superior to a brāhmaṇa who was not such a devotee.

The disappearance of the caste system, when it comes about, will not at all imply the disappearance or destruction of all that for which Hinduism has stood up during several millennia.

We should not be constantly harping on the caste system as the only or most basic cause of our downfall. The Moslems have no caste system and yet most of the Moslem countries in the world have been backward and under the thumb of Western powers. China, Japan and the countries in S. E. Asia had hardly anything like the caste system of our country, but the first two about a hundred years ago were very backward and many of the countries in S. E. Asia were within the Colonial Empire of Holland, a small country the population of which is even now only about eleven millions. Since 1818 when the British acquired the Deccan, for about 130 years what little royal power remained in India was distributed among about 600 princely States ruled by kṣatriyas and others and hardly a dozen brāhmaṇa States existed among those 600. What little trade and commerce existed or was allowed by the British to Indians was in the hands of Parsis, Bhatias, Banias, Marvadis, Jains and Lingayats and the brāhmaṇas had very little share in trade and commerce. It was the brāhmaṇa politicians like Tilak that insisted on Swadeshi. Agriculture, money lending and Zamindari were mostly in the hands of non-brāhmaṇas except in Bengal and contiguous territories where the Zamindari system supported by Lord Cornwallis prevailed. Our downfall for centuries was due to lack of certain virtues and idealogies among all our people, high or low. Let us, therefore, all Indians, stop blaming the caste system for our downfall and try to eradicate it or lessen its evils and cultivate virtues like duty for duty's sake, high endeavour, high moral character, nationalism, freedom and justice.

VI. Aśramas: Another important characteristic of our culture is the system of Āśramas, which have been in existence for certainly several centuries before the Christian era. The word Āśrama does not occur in the Vedic Saṁhitās or Brāhmaṇas. In Sv. Up. VI. 21 occurs the word 'atyāśramibhyaḥ' (to the best of ascetics) which indicates that the word 'āśrama' had then been known. A generic word comprehending several matters is coined long after the several words for the component parts have been current for centuries. The word śrāddha does not occur in any ancient Vedic passages, though the Piṇḍapitṛyajña (performed by an agnihotṛin on each Amāvāsyā), the Mahāpitṛyajña (performed in the cāturmāsya rite Sākamedha) and the Aṣṭakā rites (all of which are rites in honour of pitṛs) were known in early Vedic literature (vide H. of Dh. Vol. IV. pp. 349–50). Similarly, some of the āśramas were certainly known from the times of the Ṛgveda. The Āśramas[2623] long before the time of the sūtra literature at least have been four viz. brahmacarya (stage of studenthood), gārhasthya (householder stage), vānaprasthya (stage of forest hermit) or vaikhānasa (Gaut. III. 2), Sannyāsa (stage of ascetic life) or Mauna or Pārivrājya or Pravrajyā or Bhikṣu (Gaut. III. 2). Āśramas have been dealt with in H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 416–426, brahmacarya in H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 349–382, forest hermit (in pp. 919–929) and sannyāsa in pp.

2623. चत्वार आश्रमा गार्हस्थ्यमाचार्यकुलं मौनं वानप्रस्थ्यमिति। आप. ध. सू. II. 9, 21. 1 quoted by शङ्कराचार्य in भाष्य on V. S. III. 1. 47.

930–975 (of the same volume). The span of human life is said to be one hundred years or winters or autumns from the times of the Ṛgveda (Rg. VI. 4. 8; 10. 7, 12. 6, 17. 15, 24. 10 in all these hundred winters), VII. 101. 6, X. 161. 3 and 4 (autumns). As no one could say how long one might live it is not to be supposed that each stage was of 25 years; all that is meant is that a man may, if he lives long, pass through the four stages. The word brahmacārī occurs in Rg. X. 109. 9 and Tai, S. VI. 3. 10. 5 and brahmacarya in Tai. S. VI. 3. 10. 5 and Tai, Br. III. 10. 11. In Rg. VI. 53. 2 occurs the word 'gṛhapati' (lord of the house) meaning the same thing as gṛhastha. Indra is said to be the friend of munis (in Rg. VIII. 17. 14) and yatis are said to have praised Indra (Rg. VIII 6. 18). The Kaṭha Up. IV. 15 saying that the self of the Muni (knowing the reality) becomes one with the Supreme Self indicates that the reference is to a Sannyāsin who had realized the Supreme Spirit. The Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 22 saying that the Great Self is the Lord of the universe, that brāhmaṇas seek to know him by study of the Veda, by sacrifices and gifts, by austerities (tapas) and by fasting and that, after realizing that Supreme Self the man becomes a muni, that desiring this stage only the wandering (ascetics) leave home (take to that stage). Here those engaged in tapas are placed at an earlier stage than pravrajyā. Therefore, the Ch. Up. II. 23. 1, speaking about three branches of Dharma, should be taken as mentioning the three āśramas and the words 'one who is firmly established in brahman obtains immortality' should be taken as referring to the 4th Āśrama. As pointed out in H. of Dh. Vol. II. pp. 928–929 most of the rules laid down for forest hermits are the same as those for the sannyāsin and there was difference between the two in a few matters only. From Bṛ. Up. II. 4. 1 ff. and IV. 5. 2 ff. (where the word pravrajiṣyan is used) for udyāsyan (in II. 4. 1) it follows that Yājñavalkya became a sannyāsin (or parivrājaka) immediately after leaving the householder's life. Later on in the Kalivarjya acts the stage of being a forest hermit is included. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 420 n. 999 on Chān. Up. II. 23.1. The stage of householder (gṛhastha) was highly praised. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 424–425, 640–41, Vol. V. pp. 1026–27.

The stage of sannyāsa or yati was highly honoured, because it was deemed to lead to mokṣa. The result was that many persons quite unfit to lead the life prescribed for a real sannyāsin only entered the order and possessed all the outward signs of that stage such as wearing ochre-coloured garments, shaving the head, carrying three staffs and a water jar. They are condemned in the Mahābhārata, Śāntiparva 308. 47 (cr. ed. = 320. 47 Ch. ed.) quoted in H. of Dh. Vol. II p. 936 n 2151b and above p. 1369 n. 2241). Yāj. III. 58 provides that the sannyāsin should be good to all beings, quiescent, have three daṇḍas and a water jar and should enter a village for begging alms. Some interpreted the word tridaṇḍī as meaning ' carrying three staffs', while others like Manu XII. 10 and Dakṣa VII. 30 provide that a person is called tridaṇḍI who observes threefold restraint, viz. of speech, mind and body. The sannyāsin was so highly esteemed that for deciding doubtful points of dharma a single ascetic was allowed to do the work of a pariṣad and declare the proper decision (vide H. of Dh. Vol. II p. 969). Similarly, great emphasis was laid on inviting a Yati at a śrāddha dinner (vide H. of Dh. Vol. IV pp. 388, 399). The Bṛhaj-jātaka (chapter 15) deals with the question about the horoscopic indications for different kinds of ascetics being born on the conjunction of four or more powerful planets in the same sign of the zodiac in the horoscope and adds that according as Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, the Moon, Venus, Saturn, or the Sun is the most powerful of the four or more planets in one sign in a horoscope, the person whose nativity it is becomes respectively an ascetic of the types of Bauddha, Ājīvika,[2624] a bhikṣu (i. e. vedic ascetic), Vṛddha (a Kāpālika), a caraka, a nirgrantha (a Jain ascetic) or one subsisting on forest produce, fruits, roots &c.[2625] This shows that long before Varāhamihira (6th century A. D.) so many kinds of ascetics flourished or were common in India.

The varṇa system classified the whole community and was addressed to people in the mass ; the Āśrama theory addresses itself to the individuals in a community and maps out for them 2624. The ājīvikas were an ancient class of monks. They are mentioned in Aśoka's 7th Pillar Edict (E. I. Vol. II. pp. 270, 272) Daśaratha, grandson of Emperor Aśoka, made grants of caves to Ājivika monks. Vide C. I. I. Vol. I. p. 181. The founder of the order was Gośāla, once a disciple of Mahāvīra, who later left him. The Vāyupurāṇa (62.285) refers to them as ' adhārmika '. Vide ' History and the doctrines of the Ājīvikas ' by Prof. A. L. Basham (Luzac and Co. 1951). This is an exhaustive work on the Ājīvikas.

2625. एकस्थैश्चतुरादिभिर्बलयुतैर्जाताः पृथग्वीर्यगैः शाक्याजीविकभिक्षुबुद्धचरका निर्ग्रन्थवन्याशनाः । माहेयद्रुयुरक्षपाकरसितभाभाकरीनैः क्रमात् प्रव्रज्या बलिभिः समाः परजितै-स्तत्स्वामिभिः प्रच्युतिः ॥ बृहज्जातक 15.1. उत्पल quotes Prākrit verses on the same subject from Vaṅkālakācārya and several Āryās in Sanskrit from Satyācārya, a predecessor of Varāha.

how they should order their lives and what preparations are required for the several goals of human life. Deussen in the 'Philosophy of the Upanisads' (English translation of 1906, p. 397) says about the Āśrama theory that 'the entire history of mankind does not produce much that approaches in grandeur to this thought.'

VII. The doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma (transmigration or metempsychosis).

This is one of the most fundamental doctrines of the Hindu system of religion and philosophy and is unique in its own way, particularly in its long continuity and immense early literature. It has been dealt with above in a separate and extensive chapter (XXXV pp. 1530 ff). It is not, therefore, necessary to say anything more here.

VIII. Another important doctrine is that of ahiṁsā. So far as the Upanisads, Mahābhārata, Dharmaśāstras and Purāṇas are concerned the subject of ahiṁsā has been dealt with above in pp. 944-947 and in Vol, II. p. 10. A few matters are briefly mentioned here. The words kratu and yajña occur hundreds of times in the Rgveda. The difference sometimes made is this that the word yajña is very general (including the five daily religious duties laid down in Manu III. 70), while kratu is confined to solemn Vedic sacrifices like Somayāga. Pānini mentions the two separately (IV. 3. 68) and the Gītā IX. 16 (aham kraturaham yajñaḥ) also does the same. Animals were offered in some of these, though not in all. Gradually it came to be thought even in the Rgveda times that worshipping Agni with fuel sticks or with an oblation of cooked food or ghee or with Veda study or obeisances or with a solemn sacrifice is on the same level and the worshipper is rewarded with swift horses (dashing against enemies) and with highest glory and no trouble whether divine or due to men, reaches him (Rg. VIII. 19. 5-6). Some Brāhmaṇa texts are couched in the same strain. The Ait.[2626] Br. (VI. 9) remarks 'he who offers a cake performs a sacrifice equal to the offering of all sacrificial animals'. The Tai. Br. provides that the forest sacrificial animals, after a firebrand is carried around them, are let off for the sake of ahiṁsā. Dr. A. Schweitzer in his 'Indian thought and its development' (tr. into English by Mrs. Russell, 1936) tries hard to establish a contrast between the attitude of what he calls 'world and life negation' in Hindu thought and 'world and life affir-2626. सर्वेषां वा एष पशूनां मेधेन यजते यः पुरोडाशेन यजते। ऐ. ब्रा. VI. 9; पर्यग्निकृतानारण्यान्छुत्सृजन्त्यहिंसायै। तै. ब्रा. III. 9. 3. 3 (सायण explains स च परित्यागो हिंसाराहित्याय सम्पद्यते).

mation' characteristic of Christianity and as a side issue remarks (on p. 80) that 'the ahiṁsā commandment does not arise from a feeling of compassion but from a feeling of keeping a person undefiled'. The learned author ignores several things; firstly,[2627] not a word is said about purity (śauca) in the 2627. This is not the place to give a lengthy reply to Dr. Schweitzer's remarks. Dr. Schweitzer's compliment to Christ, Christianity and the West was criticized by Dr. Radhakrishnan in 'Eastern Religion and Western thought' (1939 pp. 76–110) and by Shri D. S. Sharma in 'Renaissance of Hinduism' pp. 618–634. On p. 2 Dr. Schweitzer boldly asserts that world and life affirmation unceasingly urges men to serve their fellows, society, the nation, mankind and indeed all that lives with their utmost will &c. One should like to know the Biblical passages where all this grand thought is explicitly stated. On p. 4 he contradicts himself when he says 'Christianity also brought European thought into relation with world and life negation.' The two great commandments of Jesus are first 'to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul' and the second is 'thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself' (vide Matthew 22.37 and 39 and Mark 12. 30–31). This is hardly anything like what Schweitzer says about Christianity's world and life affirmation. Not a word is said here about even loving all human beings, much less loving 'all that lives'. The world has had enough of the world and life affirmation of Christianity (or rather of Christian nations or people). Attention is invited to H. of Dh. Vol. II. p. 180, where Westermarck's remarks in his 'Origin and development of the moral ideas' (1912) Vol. I. p. 711 are cited on slavery. The world knows what during the last four or five hnndred years the colonial empires of Christian countries like England, France, Holland, Belgium, Portugal and Spain did in India, Africa, S. E. Asia, the Congo and America. On p. VII of his Preface he appears to contradict himself when he disagrees with the view of Schopenhauer and Deussen about Indian thought being completely governed by the ideal of world and life negation and admits the fact that 'world and life affirmation is present at the back of this thought (Indian thought) from the very dawn of its history, and life negation and world and life affirmation constitute its chief characteristic and determine its development'. Both books (Dr. Sweitzer's and Dr. Radhakrishnan's) are reviewed in 'Hibbert Journal' for 1953 pp. 234–241 and 355–365 by C. W. M. Gell who finds both works disappointing, holds that Schweitzer has misunderstood the Hindu ideal of supra-ethical man, that negation and affirmation have not been properly defined by him, that it was only very late in Christian history that the West began to work actively for improvement of social and economic conditions. Social service was not unknown in Ancient India. The very idea of 'pūrta' dharma is social service. Vide above pp. 947-949. The Purāṇas emphasize the importance of work for relieving distressed beings. For example, the Mārkaṇḍeya has the following very noble sentiment (15. 57) 'men would not obtain that happiness in heaven or in the world of Brahmā which arises from giving happiness to distressed men' (न स्वर्गे ब्रह्मलोके वा तत्सुखं प्राप्यते नरैः। यदार्तजन्तुनिर्वाणदानोत्थमिति मे मतिः॥). Vide also note 6 on pp. 3-4 of H. of Dh. vol. II.

Chāndogya and other passages about ahiṁsā. Secondly, the injunction about not giving pain to any being (in Chān. Up.) is immediately preceded by the words 'having concentrated all his senses on the Self'. That shows that one who knows and has come to realize that all is brahma should give no pain to others as all those also are brahma and not on the ground of purity or defilement. Further, in the Mahābhārata and Smṛtis some of which at least are not far removed in time from the Upaniṣads both ahiṁsā and śauca (purity) are separately mentioned along with other duties (dharmas) common to all varṇas. Gaut. (8. 23–24) lays down eight qualities of the soul for every dvija viz. compassion towards all beings, forbearance, freedom from jealousy, freedom from excessive harm (to himself), doing auspicious acts, absence of abjectness (or miserliness), absence of discontent'. The same eight are specified in the Matsya-purāṇa 52. 8–10, Atrismṛti 34–41. Manu V. 46 (= Viṣṇu Dh. S. 51. 69) provides 'he who does not desire to cage or kill or cause pain to living beings, thus desirous of doing good to all, secures highest (or never ending) happiness'. Śauca is external (of the body) and internal (of the mind). Manu V. 106 expressly says that he who is pure as to money matters is really pure and not one who washes himself with sand or water. Vide above pp. 1421-22 notes 2331 and 2333. It is worthy of note that the Śāntiparva (chapter 162. 4-5 = Cr. ed. 156. 4-5) contains an apotheosis of Satya as the ancient Dharma and brahman itself and then in verses 7–9 Satya is stated to appear in thirteen aspects such as tyāga (renunciation of attachment and pleasures), samatā (being the same to all), dama (restraint of senses), kṣamā (forbearance), hrī (being ashamed to boast of one's good deeds), anasūyā (absence of jealousy), dayā (compassion) and so on, ahiṁsā being the 13th aspect of Satya.

It was only in Jainism that thoroughgoing ahiṁsā was preached and practised. Buddha had no objection to eating flesh, provided the animal was not killed specially for doing him honour or treating him.

IX. The three paths, viz. Karmamārga, Bhaktimārga and Jñānamārga. These have already been dealt with above in pp. 964-967, 1462. The Bhagavadgītā expounds the further doctrine of what is called niṣkāma-karmayoga, which has been explained above on pp. 966–67. Doing one's duty without hankering for the fruit thereof is worship of God.

X. Adhikāra-bheda

It was recognised in India from very early times that in the matter of religious worship and philosophical doctrines, there are different grades among human beings. All are not competent to grasp and act upon abstruse metaphysical doctrines or to follow higher forms of worship. This has been brought out in several places before. Vide above p. 973 note 1593 and p. 1462. Abstruse metaphysical doctrines are likely to be misunderstood and therefore we find that there is an effort to keep such doctrines secret and frequent warnings are given in the Upaniṣads not to impart the knowledge of brahman to all and sundry and to keep it secret. Vide p. 1071–72 and Chān. Up. III. 11. 5 set out above on p. 1460, Śv. Up. VI. 22, Kaṭha Up. III. 17, Bṛ. Up. III. 2. 13 (Yājñavalkya and Ārtabhāga did not discuss brahman among people). The word Upaniṣad came to mean 'secret doctrine' (vide Tai. Up. II. 9 and III. 10). This tendency to keep abstruse doctrines secret obtained in other nations in antiquity (vide St. Mark 4. 11, 34–35). The Haṭhayogapradīpikā[2628] has similar provisions (vide p. 1460 above). Many modern writers condemn people that engage in image worship. The reasons advanced for image worship by Indian works are given in note 1593 p. 973 above. The worshipper of an image of Gaṇeśa or Kālī casts the image in water (a river, sea &c.) after a day or more (when the period of the festival is over). So it is not as if he worshipped the wooden or earthen object but he has an emotional idea for the time being that God is enthroned in that object. These common people, if questioned, will say 'God is everywhere, in you, in me and in the wooden image'. The Nṛsiṁhapurāṇa 62. 5 (quoted by Aparārka p. 140 on Yāj. I. 101) says that sages declare that the worship of Hari (God Viṣṇu) may be performed in six ways, viz. in water, in fire, in one's own heart, in the sun's orb, on an altar or in an image.[2629] The Viṣṇudharmottarapurāṇa appears to have been conscious that image worship came later in Kali age and was not prevalent

---

2628. हठविद्या परं गोप्या योगिना सिद्धिमिच्छता।
भवेद्वीर्यवती गुप्ता निर्वीर्या तु प्रकाशिता॥ हठयोगप्र० I. 11

2629. अप्स्वग्नौ हृदये सूर्ये स्थण्डिले प्रतिमासु च। षट्स्वेतेषु हरेः सम्यगर्चनं मुनिभिः स्मृतम्॥ अग्नौ क्रियावतां देवो ... योगिनां हृदये हरिः॥ नृसिंहपुराण 62. 5-6 (the 2nd quoted in note 1593 above). Vide स्मृतिचन्द्रिका (आह्निक p. 198 ed. by Mr. Gharpure) which quotes verses from the Smṛtis of Hārīta and Marīci to the same effect. Vide विष्णुधर्मोत्तरपुराण III. 93. 5–7 and 20.

in former ages (III. chap. 93. 5–7 and 20). The present author saw in several European Churches the images of the Madonna or the images or pictures of certain saints worshipped by Christian people that addressed prayers to the image of the Madonna or the pictures of saints for fulfilment of their desires. Therefore, he thinks that it would not be wrong for him to say that the religion of many Christians in Europe is image worship.[2630] The several darśanas (except that of Cārvāka) were looked upon generally as approximations to truth. There was no question of all of them being false and one alone as containing the truth.

(XI) Vast Sanskrit literature.

India produced a vast amount of Sanskrit literature of a most varied character for at least three thousand years. There is no country in the world that can exhibit continuous creation of several departments of literature for such a long period. Sanskrit literature penetrated to countries like Tibet, China, Java and others. Its literature influenced the Moslem world and European world by means of the decimal place value system, its fable literature and system of Vedānta. Vide Winternitz's ' Some problems of Indian Literature ' (the Readership Lectures in Calcutta University) pp. 59–81 for a brief but instructive treatment of the influence of Sanskrit Literature in the West. Its study by Europeans at the end of the 18th century and in the 19th century laid the foundation of several sciences, such as the science of language, of comparative religion, of thought and of mythology. There exist several Histories of Sanskrit Literature by several scholars such as Weber, Max Müller, Winternitz, Keith, M. Krishnamachariar, which will give an idea to any reader of the variety and vastness of Sanskrit literature.

2630. Vide ' Hinduism and Buddhism ' by Sir Charles Elliot, Vol. I. Intro. p. LXX, where a similar view is expressed by the learned writer who relies also on William James' ' Varieties of religious experience ' pp. 525–527. Sir Oliver Lodge in ' Man and the Universe ' (London, 1908) pp. 246–247) says " There are plenty of good reasons against idolatry among intellectual and ' chosen ' people but this (God was jealous of idol worship) is not one of them; nor is it to be supposed that the stock of a tree is ever really worshipped even when prostrated to. An idol, to ignorant and undeveloped people, is a symbol of something which they are really worshipping under a material form and embodiment, the sensuous presentation assists their infantile efforts towards abstract thought as material sacraments help people in a higher stage of religious development; but some of these helps should be outgrown. "

India has preserved for itself and for the world a vast literature in the best part of which the principal theme is to ask men never to cease in their efforts to control the senses and to reach higher and higher heights of morality and spirituality. H. H. Gowen in ' A History of Indian Literature ' (1931) observes (on p. 8) ' Indian literature has an intrinsic value which no remoteness avails to destroy. For sacredness, variety and continuity, scarcely any other may compare with it, certainly none surpasses it. As for sacredness no other scripture, not even our Bible, may compete with the Veda in its continuity or in the matter of general acceptance '. He dilates also on the variety and remarkable continuity of Indian literature. Classical Sanskrit first blossoned at least before 500 B. C. Pāṇini names at least ten predecessors and his sūtras IV. 3. 87 and 88 clearly indicate that before his time there was considerable non-vedic secular literature.

XII. Yoga : Yoga has been treated of above (pp. 1385–1462). In the whole world there exists hardly any well thought out and comprehensive system of psychical and moral discipline like Yoga. Mercea Eliade observes (on p. 359) in ' Yoga, Immortality and Freedom ' (tr. by Willard R. Trask, 1958) ' Yoga constitutes a characteristic dimension of the Indian mind, is marked by reaction against metaphysical speculations and the excesses of a fossilized ritualism '. Western minds having experienced a surfeit of economic prosperity, but worried by the tensions and crises of these times are turning more and more to Yoga and to Indian philosophy such as the Vedānta. In recent years numerous books are being published that deal with ' perennial philosophy ', Yoga (including Tibetan Yoga), meditation, concentration, mystical experience &c. Many of these books are written by honest people after reading a good deal of literature on these subjects but they are wanting in any personal yogic or mystic experience. There are some books that are written by persons who want to take advantage of the popular craze for Yoga and similar mystical practices for the sake of wealth and fame. In 'Vedanta for the Western World' edited by Christopher Isherwood (Allen and Unwin, London, 1948) the famous writer Mr. Aldous Huxley sounds a note of warning against the plethora of books on mysticism and Yoga in the market (p. 376).

XIII. Philosophy :

The central point of much of our philosophy is contained in Chāndogyopaniṣad VI.1, where Uddālaka inquires of his conceited son Śvetaketu "Have you asked for that instruction by which one hears what cannot be heard, by which one perceives what cannot be perceived, by which one knows what cannot be known;' and when Śvetaketu asked for that instruction, Uddālaka expounds to him (in VI. 1-16) the subject at length and winds up with the words 'tat-tvam-asi' (thou art that Self). An inquirer into philosophy will find in the various branches of Indian philosophy a vast mass of material, hardly surpassed by any other ancient country in the world. The word for philosophy is darśana and there is a famous work called 'Sarvadarśansaṅgraha' in which fifteen different points of view apart from advaita Vedānta are summarised. The principal orthodox darśanas are six—Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Nyāya, Vaiśeṣika. Pūrvamīmāṁsā and Uttaramīmāṁsā' (or Vedānta), which have been treated above and their relation to and influence on Dharmaśāstra has been dwelt upon. The chief marks of Indian philosophy are that it concentrates on the spiritual, that philosophy has to be lived and not merely discussed, that it seeks the Reality, that for real philosophy great moral preparation is necessary, that reason has to be extensively used in arriving at the truth, that tradition and authority have to be accepted and not neglected. Almost all darśanas (except that of Cārvāka) are concerned with Liberation (variously called Mokṣa, Kaivalya, Nirvāṇa, Amṛtatva, Niḥśreyasa, Apavarga) and all (except Cārvāka) are agreed on the doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma. It is not necessary to say more on Indian Philosophy in this Chapter.

XIV. Arts. Architecture, Sculpture, Painting :

Though the present author has travelled throughout India for over fifty years and seen most of the famous places rich in ancient architecture, sculpture and painting, he lays no claim to being a connoisseur in these matters and cannot give his own valuation of these relics of ancient Indian Art. The number of works on these is legion. A mere bibliography would not be of much use to the reader. Therefore, he will content himself with mentioning a few works on each of the above branches which he has read wholly or partly or which he consulted.

Among the most remarkable ancient monuments of India are the stūpa at Sāṇchī, the paintings in the Ajaṇṭā caves, the Kailāsa temple at Ellora, and the Koṇārka[2631] temple in Orissa.

Some of the Purāṇas contain information on the above topics. The Matsyapurāṇa (chap. 252. 2–4) names 18 expounders of Vāstuśāstra (architecture) such as Bhṛgu, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Viśvakarman, Maya, Nārada, Nagnajit, Viśālākṣa, Purandara, Brahmā, Kumāra, Nandīśa, Śaunaka, Garga, Vāsudeva, Aniruddha, Śukra and Bṛhaspati. Chapters 253–257 deal with the construction of mansions and houses, chap. 258–263 with images of several deities. The Vāyupurāṇa (8. 108 ff.) describes the founding of a capital. Agnipurāṇa, chapters 42, 104–106 deal with the building of mansions, houses and laying out cities. The Viṣṇudharmottara (third section) is called citrasūtra[2632] because dancing is held to be the primary art and painting rests on it. It is further said that painting is the best of arts (III. 33. 38) and the foremost of auspicious things in a house, that the rules that apply to painting are applicable to the making of images of metals, stone and wood (III. 43.31–32). Chapters 36–43 deal with painting, chapters 44–85 with the making of images of gods and goddesses and housebuilding is dilated upon in chap. 86 ff. The Bṛhat-saṁhitā (ed. by M. M. Sudhakar Dvivedi, 1895) of Varāhamihira (500–550 A.D.) deals with palaces, mansions and houses of king, crown prince and others; in chap. 52 (123 verses) with temples of several gods, in chap. 53 (31 verses) with images of gods, in chap. 57 (Rāma, Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Indra, Śiva, Buddha, Jina, the Sun,

---

2631. For Koṇārka, vide H. of Dh. Vol. IV of 769, Modern Review (Calcutta) for 1945 pp. 67–72 with seven illustrations by Mr. Pranakrushna Samal and 'A time in India' by Ross Smith pp. 198–201 on 'Konarka, its mithunas and several explantions about them.' The tower of the temple of the Sun 24 miles to the N. W. of Puri is 180 feet in height, the Maṇḍapa in front is 140 feet high. In 'Orissan Sculpture and Architecture' by O. C. Ganguly and A. Goswami (1956, Calcutta) out of 41 plates, plates 21-41 relate to the Sun temple of Koṇārka. For Sānchi, three big volumes with numerous plates have been published by the Govt. of India, the editors bein Sir John Marshall, A. Foucher and N. Majumdar.

2632. Vide the present author's 'History of Sanskrit Poetics' (1961) pp. 66–72 for an account of the Viṣṇudharmottara and its date (575–650 A. D.). Dr, Miss Stella Kramrisch has translated into English the chapters of the Viṣṇudharmottara bearing on painting and sculpture (Cal. Un. 1928). Varāha-mihira mentions several authors such as Garga and Manu on palaces (55, 31), Nagnajit (57. 4) and Vasiṣṭha (57. 8) on images.

Liṅga, Mother Goddesses, Yama), with images or statues of five kinds of men (chap. 68 verse 30) called Haṁsa, Śaśa, Rucaka, Bhadra and Mālavya and their bodily features.

There are several other works like the Yuktikalpataru of Bhoja (Calcutta ed. of 1917), the Abhilaṣitārthacintāmaṇi (also called Mānasollāsa)[2633] of king Someśvara, Śilparatna (T. S. S.), Mayamata (T. S. S.) on these subjects.

Paintings—The only famous ancient paintings are those in the caves of Ajanta, in the Bagh caves in the former Gwalior State and those in the caves at Sigiriya in Ceylon. For reasons of space it is not possible to quote the enthusiastic appreciations of Western writers on ancient Indian Art, particularly paintings and sculpture. The author would quote a few passages from Rene Grousset's[2634] works: 'India has given a mighty art or a complete Aesthetic equal in originality and power to the Greek and Chinese. It is marked by its naturalism in depicting animals'. The same writer says about Ajanta's immortal paintings 'they count among the most moving that have ever come within human vision'. 'In civilizations of the East' (tr. by Mrs. C. A. Phillips, London, 1932 with 249 illustrations) the same author (after citing paintings of the Jātakas of self-sacrifice) remarks 'these are but a few examples, the most poetic, tender and moving that could be imagined. No better example could be found of that purely Indian sentiment of universal brotherhood, that fervour of humanitarianism which extends even to animals and plants' (p. 79). For Ajanta, there is a fine edition by Dr. G. Yazdani, the text in two parts (1930 and 1933) and there are besides many coloured and monochrome plates with an Introduction by Lawrence Binyon. There is also another small work prepared for the use of Lord Reading on his visit to Ajanta in 1924 in which Dr. Yazdani gives ten colour plates and one monochrome plate (of a bull fight) with notes on some of the scenes in several caves and appreciations by Binyon, Rothenstein, Solomon and others. Another good book is 'my pilgrimage to Ajanta and Bagh' by Sri Mukul Chandra Dey, with Introduction by Lawrence Binyon (London, 1925)

2633. The third Viṁśati of Mānasollāsa deals with Vāstuśāstra, painting, images of gods and goddesses, planets &c. (vide part II of the work in G. O. S.).

2634. Vide 'The Sum of History' by Rene Grousset, translated by A. & H. Temple Patterson, Tower Bridge Publications, 1951, p. 105, p. 107 about Ajanta.

A third book on Ajanta is in Marathi written and published in 1929 by Balasaheb Pant Pratinidhi, Chief of Aundh State, with half-tone and coloured illustrations. Percy Brown on 'Indian Painting' deals with Buddhist, Hindu and Mahomedan Painting and covers a long period from 6th century A. D. to 19th Century A. D. He gives two illustrations of Sigiriya paintings opposite pp. 33, 69, which are remarkably similar to some paintings in caves 16 and 17 at Ajanta. In Ananda K. Coomaraswamy's 'History of Indian and Indonesian Art' illustrations No. 183 and No. 184 are respectively from Bagh and Sigiriya.

Many modern works deal with all three viz. architecture sculpture and painting or with two of them or with one only Some important works are mentioned here :

1. E. B. Havell's 'Indian Sculpture and Painting' (London, 1908) with 45 plates for sculpture and 8 for painting.
2. V. A. Smith's 'History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon' with 38 illustrations (including some of Moslem Art), Oxford, 1911.
3. A. Foucher's 'Beginnings of Buddhist Art' (1917), with plates.
4. Ananda K. Coomarswamy's 'History of Indian and Indonesian Art' (1927), with 400 illustrations on 128 plates.
5. 'Ellora' by Balasaheb Pant Pratinidhi, Chief of Aundh with 89 half-tone illustrations, published by D. B. Taraporevala and Sons, Bombay.
6. James Fergusson's 'History of Indian and Eastern Architecture', volumes I and II, London, 1910.
7. T. A. Gopinath Rao's 'Elements of Hindu Iconography,' Vol. I and II (Madras, 1914, 1916).
8. Dr. Stella Kramrisch on 'The Art of India' (sculpture, painting, architecture), London, Phaidon Press, 1954, with 156 plates and 7 coloured plates.
9. Dr. Stella Kramrisch's 'Indian Sculpture' (1933) with 116 illustrations.
10. Rene Grousset's 'The civilizations of the East' Vol. II (on India) with 249 illustrations.
11. A. V. T. Iyer's 'Indian Architecture' in three volumes (Madras).

12. Ananda K. Coomarswamy's 'Elements of Buddhist Iconography' (Harvard Un. Cambridge, U. S. A., 1935); also his 'Dance of Śiva' (frontispiece of Naṭarāja in cosmic dance), Foreword by Romain Rolland, 27 plates, (1924).
13. 'Indian Architecture' (Buddhist and Hindu), published by D. B. Taraporevala and Sons, Bombay, with 118 illustrations.
14. Benjamin Rowland's 'The Art and Architecture of India' (Buddhist, Hindu, Jain), Penguin Books, 1956; remarks that some sculptures are worthy of being placed in world culture and the Art presents synthesis of beautiful forms and deep spiritual expression.
15. Heinrich Zimmer's 'Myths and Symbols of Indian Art and Civilization' posthumously published by J. Campbell, 70 plates from 2nd century B. C. to 19th century A. D.
16. 'Immortal India' by Alfred Newrath, translated from German, published by D. B. Taraporewala and Sons, Bombay, with 12 coloured and 106 photographic reproductions, 1956.
17. H. Goetz's 'Five thousand years of Indian Art' Bombay, 1959; 72 plates (many coloured ones) and two maps; D. B. Taraporewala and Sons, Bombay.
18. Sir John Marshall's 'Buddhist Art of Gandhāra' Vol. I, Memoir of Archaeological Department of Pakistan, 1960, (111 Plates) and his work in three volumes on 'Taxila' Cambridge Un. Press 1951 for scholars, and his 'Guide to Taxila' (4th ed. of 1960) for tourists and general readers.

South Indian Architecture and Sculpture has some peculiarities of its own. Some works thereon may be mentioned here viz. 'Dravidian Architecture by G. J. Dubreuil (1917), 'Mahabalipuram' by C. Śivarāmamurty (Dept. of Archaeology) 7 full page plates; 'Art of Pallavas' text and notes by B. C. Ganguly and ed. by A. Goswami, 46 plates (1957).

Besides, on music also several works have been written : 'Music of Hindustan' (Oxford 1914) by A. H. Fox Strangway Alain Danielou's 'Northern Indian music' vol. I and II (London, 1949, 1954), H. A. Popley's 'the Music of India', (Calcutta, 1950), O. Goswami's 'The story of Indian Music (Bombay, 1957), G. H. Ranade's 'Hindustani Music and Outline of its Physics and Aesthetics' (Poona, 1951). But the present author unfortunately knows little about music.

Indian architectonic and iconographic symbolism spread to Java, Bali and other parts of Indonesia and many works have been written on this subject such as 'Barabudor' (Java) by Paul Mus, G. Gorer's 'Bali and Angkor', 'Towards Angkor' by Quaritch Wales (with a full Bibliography at end), W. F. Stutterheim's 'Indian influences in Balinese Art' (London, 1935).

A few more characteristics could have been mentioned; the present writer desists from adding them since the list is already a long one. It is not claimed that no other culture had or has these characteristics. What is claimed is that there is no other single culture in the world where all these can be found now or existed in the past and that some of these characteristics such as the noble Vedānta concept of man, lower animals and even inanimate things being one in Essence, the great tolerance throughout the ages for differing religious and philosophical views, the emphasis on satya and ahiṁsā are unique and not found elsewhere.

CHAPTER XXXVII

Future Trends

After the battle of Plassey in 1757 the civil government of the three large provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa came under British rule from 1765. From 1818 when the last Peshwa Bajirao II was defeated and became a pensioner, the British were in control over the whole of India except Punjab, which was subdued in 1845. The British left India in 1947. Therefore, they were rulers over a large part of India for 180 years, over the whole of it except Punjab for about 130 years and over Punjab just about 100 years. The impact of British occupation during these periods on Hindu society was tremendous in all spheres, physical, mental and moral. The changes effected during these years of British rule were of such magnitude that they far exceeded the changes that occurred in hundreds of years before the coming of the British. With the advent of British rule came a new system of Government on an all India basis, establishment of courts of justice on Western patterns, laws that applied to all Indians without distinction, modern individualistic liberty, Western pattern of living at least in towns and cities, an educational system placing all Indians on the same level, newspapers, better means of transport, study of modern science, English literature and arts &c.

The present author has no intention of writing anything on the all round changes that have taken place in India under British rule. All that he proposes to do in this chapter is to indicate briefly the effects that are likely to be produced on Hindu society, its ancient ideals and values in the near future, on account of science and modern ideas, the Constitution framed for Indian democracy, the idea of a secular State, socialistic pattern of society, economical planning, legislation, growth of population and means to check it.

But before he deals with the above subjects, it is necessary to give a rapid review of the state of things before Independence was achieved. Lord Ripon as Viceroy of India in 1882 started a scheme of local self-government by means of municipal corporations in the cities and district and local Boards in the rural areas. Thus after about 120 years from 1765 when British rule was first established in a large part of India, the British thought fit to associate the conquered people in managing some of their own (unimportant and petty) affairs. Colonialism on the part of the British had reached its peak by that time. The British imported raw materials like cotton from India, processed them in Manchester and exported the manufactured products back to India's immense market. At the instance of British manufacturers laws were passed in Britain forbidding the import of Indian silk and cotton goods. India was drained of wealth by that policy for over a hundred years and India became one of the poorest countries in the world. Dadabhai Naoroji in his 'Poverty and un-British rule in India' (London, 1901, 675 pages) demonstrated this very ably. The main elements of the colonial rule of Britain were these; complete political subjection existed; the main economic activity was in the hands of foreigners, it was foreign capital that was employed in India and substantial dividends or interest on the capital were guaranteed in some cases like the Railways by the British rulers of India payable from the taxes imposed on Indian people, the control of large enterprises was in foreign hands and directed towards securing foreign interests, the land and people were used as instruments of the purposes of Britain. India got peace and political unity at the cost of enormous poverty and distress and many of the economic problems that beset present day India have to be traced back to the disastrous colonial policies of Britain.

The army of the Government of India was for over a century entirely officered by the British. There were in the 20th century about 7000 officers (lieutenants, captains, majors, colonels) among whom not one Indian held the King's commission till after the first world war. Then a few were sent every year for training to England. The examination for entry in the Indian civil[2635] Service (the 'Steel frame' of the Indian 2635. A well known jibe in the author's youth was that an I. C. S. was neither Indian (almost all were British in those days) nor civil nor a servant (but he was the master of the destinies of poor India). Munro wrote in 1817 a memorandum to Lord Hastings from which two sentences may be quoted : 'there is perhaps no example of any conquest in which the natives have been so completely excluded from all share of the Government of their country as in British India...Foreign conquerors have treated the natives with violence and often wtih great cruelty, but none has treated them with so much scorn as we' pp. 273–74 of 'the Making of Indian Princes' (London, 1943) by Edward Thompson. Vide G. W. Forrest's 'Selections from the Minutes and other official writings of Elphinstone' (London, 1884) p 102 for reproach against British rule in India.

administration, as one great British Prime Minister was pleased to call it) was held in England (in spite of a Resolution of the House of Commons that the examination for appointment to the Indian Civil Service in 1893 should be held simultaneously in India and England). Only a few Indians in the last quarter of the 19th century could go to England and qualify for entry in that heaven-born service. District officers such as Collectors, District Judges, Police Superintendents, Medical officers (of the Indian Medical Service) were almost all British. Almost all Professors in colleges and the head masters of even some secondary schools were Englishmen. All the books to be used in schools were prescribed by the Head of the Department of Public Instruction in the several provinces, all of whom were Westerners. Even primary education was being given only to a small fraction of the children of school-going age, even in 1947 when the British left. The elements of colonial rule by Britain and the policies pursued by the British rulers are emphasized here solely as warnings to present warring elements in our country that if they pursue their quarrels to bitter ends the nation may again be plunged into a miserable state by invasions from powerful and hostile neighbours.

Morley (who was Secretary of State for India and who was believed by many Indians to be a man of liberal or even radical views) introduced separate communal electorates for Moslems in the reforms of 1909 and he was firmly of opinion that a Parliamentary system in India should not be established in the foreseeable[2636] future. It is unnecessary to refer in detail to Montagu's famous speech in 1917, characterizing the Indian Government as too wooden, too antediluvian for modern times, to his statement (the reverse of Morley's views) that 'the policy of the British Government is the gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to the progressive realiza-2636. Vide the volume of "Indian Speeches" by Viscount Morley (p. 92) where he says "If my existence, either officially or corporeally, were prolonged twenty times longer than either of them is likely to be, a Parliamentary system in India is not at all the goal to which I would for one moment aspire". Even so late as 1941 Sir G. Schuster in "India and Democracy" (MacMillan, 1941) strongly expressed the view that Parliamentary democracy of the Westminster pattern would not suit India and that Indians would have to work out a system of their own. He does not even indicate how, while the British ruled India, a democratic system could be evolved by Indians and in how many years.

---

tion of responsible Government in India as an integral part of the British Empire,' the failure of Dyarchy introduced by Montagu, the Rowlatt Acts, unrest in Punjab, General Dyer's proclamation declaring any assembly of four or more persons as unlawful, his shooting of men, women and children assembled in Jallianwallah Bagh for a meeting in defiance of the proclamation, when, even according to Government statistics, 300 people were killed and 1200 injured, Dyer's compulsory retirement and the presentation of a purse of thirty thousand pounds to him by his British admirers for saving the British Empire (as they then thought).

The introduction of education through English was espoused by Lord Macaulay in his 'Minute on Indian Education'. Why he insisted on the education of Indians through English is stated in the Minute as follows: 'We must at present do our best to form a class who may be interpreters between us and the millions whom we govern; a class of persons Indian in blood and colour, but English in taste, in opinion, in morals and intellect'.[2637] English education caused great wastage of effort in learning all subjects (including even Sanskrit) through English and led to a disproportionate pursuit of literary studies and neglect of scientific and technological subjects and created a wide gulf between the educated and the uneducated masses; it glorified Western culture and did not help Indians to study and appreciate their own culture. Educated Indians, particularly in the earlier period of English education in India, came to entertain an exaggerated respect for Western institutions and unduly disparaged their own social and religious systems.

The British Government's interest in Indian education (particularly higher education) was lukewarm. Three Universities (of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras) were first established in 1857 for the whole of India, but they were merely examining bodies. In the whole of the Bombay Presidency there was no Science Institute entirely maintained by Government till about 2637. Vide 'Speeches by Lord Macaulay' with Minute on Indian Education, edited by G. M. Young (Oxford Un. Press 1952). The minute is on pp. 344–361. On p. 349 he makes the following statement 'I have conversed both here and at home with men distinguished by their proficiency in the Eastern tongues. I have never found one among them who could deny that a single shelf of a good European Library was worth the whole native literature of India and Arabia.' Vide p. 359 of the above work for the above oft-quoted passage.

---

1920. An Indian could pass the M. A. examination in Philosophy without knowing anything about ancient Indian philosophy till only a few years ago. However, English education by Government and missionaries produced a result exactly opposite of what was expected by them. The missionaries miserably failed in securing the Indians (except a few among the lower castes and ādivāsis) for Christ and Government found that reading the classics of English literature and works of men like Burke, Spencer, Mill and others created among the educated emotions of nationalism and discontent with their own abject political status. Political agitation daily increased. Lokamanya Tilak was called 'the father of Indian unrest' by an English writer. He passed away in 1920. But his mantle fell on Mahatma Gandhi, who while agitating for political power and eventual freedom, adopted the technique of satyāgraha.

It is not necessary to go into the freedom struggle from 1919 to 1947 which culminated in the British leaving India but after dividing it into Pakistan and the present India. The partition of India into two parts based on merely communal considerations let loose the most hideous conflicts, massacres and flights of millions of refugees which India had ever witnessed during its long history. The giving up of a large empire with mutual consent and without war or bloodshed is a unique and unparalleled event in the whole history of the world. The message of the King of Great Britain read by Lord Mountbatten as Viceroy to the members of the Constituent Assembly was nobly and graciously worded "With this transfer of power by consent comes the fulfilment of a great democratic ideal to which the British and Indian people alike are firmly dedicated.' Dr. Rajendra Prasad's reply to the message of the King was couched in equally noble and just language 'While our achievement is in no small measure due to our sufferings and sacrifices, it is also the result of world forces and events, and last, though not least, it is the consummation and fulfilment of the historic traditions and democratic ideals of the British race" (vide 'Transfer of power in India" by Shri V. P. Menon, published by Orient Longmans, 1957, p. 415).

The Indian Independence Act[2637A] was passed by the British 2637 A. Vide 'Transfer of Power in India'; Appendix XI sets out the Indian Independence Act, 1947 at pp. 516–532 and Appendix XII gives Congress comments on the draft independence bill with Nehru's corrections signed by him on 3-7-47 (pp. 1–9).

Parliament and Royal assent was given on 18th July 1947. A Constituent Assembly had been set up by the cabinet mission (of three cabinet ministers, Pethick Lawrence, Secretary of State for India, Stafford Cripps and A. V. Alexander) and it held its first meeting in December 1946. It re-assembled in August 1947 as a sovereign body to frame a constitution for free India. Its work went on for over two years and the constitution consisting of 395 Articles and nine Schedules came into force on 26th January 1950 (except 15 Articles that came into force at once); vide Art. 394.

The Preamble to the Constitution of India declares that India is a sovereign democratic Republic. The extent of the Indian Republic even at present is vast. It was hardly ever under one Government, except possibly under Aśoka. In ancient times India had some gaṇarājyas or saṅgharājyas (oligarchic states, or republics as Jayaswal and some others prefer to call them). This question of the existence of oligarchies (or republics) in ancient India has been discussed at some length by the present author in Vol. III pp. 87–96 of the H. of Dh. He still adheres to the views there expressed. The Buddhist monks had a procedure for regulating the meetings of their saṅgha (as set out in the Mahāvagga IX. 3 in SBE Vol. XVII p. 264 ff and in Cullavagga IV. 9, SBE Vol. XX pp. 24–27 and pp. 53 ff) and Jayaswal conjectures that the same procedure was followed in oligarchies (or republics).

There are substantial achievements to the credit of present India and its leaders during the last 14 years after Independence. Some of them may be very succinctly stated here: (1) The production of a comprehensive democratic constitution guaranteeing freedom of speech and worship, freedom of the Press, protection of the rights of minorities, equality of all before the law, equality of status to women, independent judiciary; (2) Abolition of untouchability (Art. 17); (3) political integration of India without any violence, as the five hundred and odd States (except only three), that comprised nearly 1/3rd of the total land area of India and 1/4th of the population, patriotically accepted a merger of the States in the Indian Republic (Shri. V. P. Menon's 'Story of the Integration of States'); (4) Reorganization of India into 15 States and six Union Territories based mostly on linguistic unity and administrative convenience; (5) holding two elections on the basis of adult suffrage, viz. every person [2637b] (male or female) who is a citizen of India, is twenty-one years of age and not disqualified under the constitution or any other law, has a right to be registered as a voter at elections to the House of the people and to the Legislative Assemblies of States (Art. 326); (6) Socialistic pattern of society as the goal (Art. 38, 39); (7) Two five year plans have been carried out and a third Five Year Plan has been set on foot (under Schedule VII, list III, item 20). The creation of a democratic republic was something that India had not been acquainted with for at least twelve centuries (even if gaṇarājyas were held to be republics and not merely obligarchies). From Ṛgvedic times there was a hereditary monarchical form of rule. Vide Ṛg. VII. 33.3 and 5, VII. 83. 7–8, where the battle of ten kings (daśa rājānaḥ) with king Sudās is mentioned; vide also the story of Devāpi and Śantanu in Ṛg. X. 98 expanded in Nirukta II. 10–12.

Some criticism may be offered against the Constitution. In the first place, it is extremely bulky and goes into too many details and is a hotchpotch of provisions from several sources. Some provisions are derived from England, the directive principles of State policy are derived from the constitutions of Ireland and other countries of Europe, some are borrowed from the Government of India Act of 1935. Several of these need not have been put in a Constitution but should have been left to ordinary legislation. In spite of such a lengthy constitution there are many omissions. Nothing is expressly said about political parties, about industrial corporations, about relation of religions and the State. The Constitution makes a complete break with our traditional ideas. Dharmasūtras and Smṛtis begin with the dharmas (duties) of the people (varṇas and āśramas). Prime Minister Pandit Nehru himself says in his Azad Memorial Lectures on 'India to-day and to-morrow' (1959) p. 45 'All of us now talk of and demand rights and privileges, but the teaching of the old dharma was about duties and obligations. Rights follow duties discharged.' Unfortunately this thought finds no place in the Constitution.

One fact of the greatest importance in the life of India is the accession of the masses to power, not only political, but also 2637 b. Women had no votes in Great Britain till the first war and even now in Switzerland women have no votes (vide p. 31 of 'Switzerland in perspective' by George Soloveytchik (1954).

---

social, economical, intellectual and moral. The Constitution engenders a feeling among common people that they have rights and no obligations whatever and that the masses have the right to impose their will and to give the force of law and justice to their own ideas and norms formed in their own cottages and tea shops.

The Constitution of India has no chapter on the duties of the people to the country or to the people as a whole. Art. 19 confers the right to seven freedoms, one of which (c) is to form associations or unions and sub-article (4) enables the State to make laws imposing, in the interest of public order or morality, reasonable restrictions. The framers of the Constitution forgot to include what Britain had provided long before in 17 and 18 Geo. 5, Chapter 22, Article 1, part of which runs 'any strike is illegal if it is designed or calculated to coerce the Government directly or by inflicting hardship on the community'. The eyes of some of the framers of this constitution were opened by the strike of Government servants in the Railways, Posts and Telegraphs by which, if it had continued for even a fortnight, crores of people would have had to submit to incalculable hardships and the action of the strikers in essential services would have been like a rebellion by some lakhs of people against over forty crores of people. The right to strike by workers tacitly given in the constitution is in imitation of similar rights enjoyed in industrial countries like Britain only for the last few decades and the framers should have restricted the right to strikes between private employers and employees as an experiment in the first instance.

Another criticism is that there are too many amendments. From 1950 there have been ten amendments, while in the U. S. A. there have been only 22 amendments during a period of about 170 years. The very first amendment was made within less than a year and a half from the day the Constitution came into force. It affected about a dozen Articles, among which there were three Articles dealing with fundamental rights viz. 15, 19, 31. One fails to understand the meaning of the words 'fundamental rights' in a constitution which took over two years of deliberations, if they could be changed within a year and a half. The amendment made in Article 31 prohibits a person from challenging in a court of justice a law about the compensation to be paid to a person for compulsory acquisition of his property. This is a serious inroad on rights to private property and smacks of spoliation and arbitrariness. In the House of the People the quorum is only 50 and if 50 persons are present and a majority of them (say 26) decide that a certain amount of compensation should be paid for compulsory acquisition of several properties of a person and the compensation is felt to be ridiculously low he has no remedy in a court of law at all. Besides, the Welfare State is, if at all, foreshadowed in the Directive Principles of State Policy (Art. 38, 39 etc.), but these principles are not enforceable in a court of law and, therefore, they are inferior to fundamental rights, the breach of which can be examined by the High Court or Supreme Court, which is invested with the power of issuing writs. Parliament (Lokasabha) has over 500 members and the quorum is 50 and yet this small number is not often present and the Speaker has several times to reprimand the House of the People on this score.

Another criticism my be offered as to the inclusion of Universities in list II (of schedule 7, State List, No. 11) and not in the concurrent list. Vocational and technical training of labour is in the concurrent list (Item 25). Is not University education throughout India of as much importance as the training of labour ? Only items 63–66 (of list I, Union list) are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Central Government.[2638] There is hardly any weighty reason (except chance) why the Benares Hindu University, the Aligarh Muslim University, the Delhi University and Santiniketan should be treated as the exclusive concern of the Central Government and the other Universities be not placed even in the concurrent list.

The Constitution in its 8th Schedule recognizes fourteen languages as the national languages of India, while Article 343 (1) makes Hindi the official language of the Union, but sub-article 2 (of Article 343) provides that English will continue to be used for all official purposes for fifteen years and sub-article 3 provides that Parliament may continue even after 1965 the use of English for purposes specified by Parliament. Even such a small country as Switzerland has three official languages. The Constitution should have provided at least two Official languages for north India and two for South India, when even in 1950 the population of India was about 36 crores. This sweeping decision to make Hindi the only official language instead of helping emotional integration of Indians produced great strife. An official language is not the only means of emotional integration, nor even the chief one. The Govt. should begin with the children in the schools, should instil into their minds the fundamental cultural Unity of India, and that India has been looked upon as one by all foreign invaders, steps should be taken to make every Indian feel that he is the inheritor of the vast ancient wisdom and spiritual culture of India, that he must contribute to the conservation of that culture, and must add to its greatness in the future, and free and compulsory education for all children up to the age of 14 should have been achieved in ten years as foreshadowed in Art. 45.

---

2638. Vide 'Our fundamental rights' by D. N. Banerjee for an exhaustive and trenchant criticism of the change made in Art. 31 (2), the speeches of the Prime Minister and of Hon'ble Mr. G. B. Pant (pp. 316–336) Calcutta, 1960

A plan and programme to instil among all grown-up citizens the ideal of national integration must be prepared, insisting on our common past, common interests, common future and on elements like the wisdom and thought embodied in Sanskrit and the regional languages, the tolerance shown by our people through the ages.

The Constitution has also committed several mistakes in the allotment of subjects in the 7th Schedule as Union list, State List and Concurrent list. For example, the production, manufacture, possession, transport, purchase and sale of intoxicating liquors are put in the State List (item 8 in List II, State List) This has led to prohibition in some States, but also its absence in other States.

The above discussion is enough to show that the Constitution framed after more than two years' cogitation is unsatisfactory in several ways.

Ours is a democratic Republic. The most famous definition of democracy is Lincoln's viz. ' Government of the people by the people for the people'. All three must exist in a proper democracy. In the Greek city States such as Athens all adult citizens (except slaves that outnumbered citizens) could assemble and could directly participate in discussion and the framing of laws and regulations. But this is impossible when crores of people spread over a vast country are voters. Therefore, one part of Lincoln's definition becomes watered down. Crores of people cannot govern themselves, which is a physical impossibility. All they can do is to choose some men as their rulers. In former ages when monarchy was the prevailing form the ruler came to be so by succession or by conquest i. e. by breaking heads. Now, under democracy, the ruler or rulers are chosen by the mere counting of heads. As observed by Dr. Radhakrishnan in 'Kalkin or the future of civilization' (4th ed. of 1956) 'Democracy in actual working rarely permits a country to be governed by its ablest. The opinions of the mass prevail over those of the thinking few. We must strive for some better way for conducting human affairs than the lottery of the ballot-box' (pp. 20–22). René Guenon in 'Crisis of the modern world' (translated by Arthur Osborne, London, 1932) remarks 'the law is supposed to be made by the opinion of the majority, but what is overlooked is that this opinion is something that can very easily be guided or modified i. e. opinion can be manufactured. The majority on whatever question it may be called on to give its opinion is always composed of the incompetent, whose number is vastly greater than that of the men who can give an opinion based on a full knowledge of the subject' (p. 108).

These words of René Guenon refer to conditions in European countries in most of which there has been almost cent per cent literacy for some decades. Parliamentary democracy assumes that voters understand the policies and programmes of different parties and cast their votes accordingly. It presupposes some education, intelligence, respect for the rule of law, tolerance, a sense of brotherhood for at least one's countrymen, and a more or less homogeneous society. But when, as in India at present, the vast majority of voters are illiterate, the state of things becomes far worse. We can and must tolerate democracy in India as a first step towards better days, though at present it is a mere shell and is ridiculed by some unsympathetic foreigners.[2639] The census of 1961 discloses that literacy which was only 16.6 percent in 1951 is 23·7 percent in 1961. Dean Inge in 'Christian Ethics' (1930) remarks about politics in England where almost all voters are literate 'our politics are so corrupt that many would welcome a dictatorship.' (p. 385). About the U. S. A., a recent work 'Corruption in Washington' by Blair Bolles (Gollancz, London, 1960), which makes rather dismal reading, indicates the terrible moral predicament of the honest man in power caught between public responsibility and loyalty to his friends and associates. In our country also ministers and officials must be in a similar predicament, particularly when there exist numerous rules and regulations about permits and licenses galore.

2639. A. Koestler in 'Lotus and Robot' (London, 1960) remarks 'India is a democracy in name only, it would be more correct to call it Bapucracy' (p. 156).

The Directive Principles of state policy are contained in Articles 37 to 51 and it is provided in Article 37 that they shall not be enforceable by any court, but that they are fundamental in the governance of the country. Article 45 enacts that the State shall endeavour to provide within a period of ten years from the commencement of this constitution for free and compulsory education for all children until they complete the age of fourteen years. It is more than twelve years since the commencement of the Constitution. In spite of the fact that about 7000 crores of rupees were to be spent on grandiose schemes in the two Five Year Plans, this fundamental provision was not implemented. Even free and compulsory primary education of all children up to the age of eleven years (instead of 14 as envisaged in Article 45) is not accomplished and it is promised that in the Third Five Year Plan (which envisages an expenditure of over ten thousand crores of rupees) this may be accomplished. But, if the huge sums for the third plan be not forthcoming, the first casualty will be education. The education of the masses who are to be voters and indirectly rulers of the nation continues to be sadly neglected even after Independence.

It is remarkable that the directive principles of state policy mostly contain provisions on the economic system for raising people's standard of living (Art. 43, 47 &c.), i. e. it lays emphasis only on the material things for the people. It seems to be assumed that if material prosperity or benefits are assured for all, then there is nothing more to be done by the State. The present author feels that the Directive Principles should also have put equal or greater emphasis on moral and spiritual values and should have called upon the State to promote among the people high moral standards, self-discipline, co-operation, sense of responsibility, kindliness, high endeavour. Man is a many-sided being. The satisfaction of mere physical needs is not enough. Man has intellectual, spiritual, cultural and social aspirations also. The socio-economic pattern for the future must be based on the foundation of the best part of our traditions, the rule of dharma, the duties common to all as declared by Manu X. 63 and Yāj. I. 122. A secular state should not and does not mean a godless state or a state that has nothing to do with moral and spiritual values. Prime Minister Nehru himself emphasizes this, when he says ' whether religion is necessary or not, a certain faith in a worth-while ideal is essential to give substance to our lives and to hold us together. We have to have a sense of purpose beyond the material and physical demands of our daily lives' (in 'Today and tomorrow' p. 8). It may be stated that for most common men and women it is religion that sets worth-while ideals.

The third item in Lincoln's definition is ' for the people '. That is, the Government must look to the good of the people as a whole and not to that of any class or a community in the country. Modern democracy has come to mean parties and it has to work on decisions of the majority. It often happens that, there being several parties, no one party has an absolute majority over all other parties put together. It may often happen that one party secures 40% of the votes actually cast and the other parties (that differ in ideologies) secure, say 25, 20, 15, percent of the votes, then the first party with only 40 percent of the total votes cast rules, though it does not represent the majority of the whole country. The party system generally leads to a struggle for power and lowers the moral standards of the whole people, particularly when hardly one-fifth of the voters (both male and female) can read and write their own regional language. The present author does not hold that illiteracy necessarily means absence of intelligence. But, unless a man can read for himself and ponder over what he reads, he can hardly be a good judge of the pros and cons in relation to a measure or policy placed before the voters. Besides, the emphasis laid on standards of living without any direct reference to moral and spiritual values has already led to this result that in India the desire for material comforts and positions of power dominates almost every one and there is no corresponding urge or even idea to do one's best for producing goods. The laws are drafted in the English language. Most of the speakers in Parliament use English (a few only speak in Hindi) and complicated laws are said to have been passed by a majority or unanimously as the case may be. That country may be said to be the best governed which is least governed. There is a spate of legislation in the House of the People. In the seven years from 1950 to 56 nearly 450 laws were passed by the central legislature alone. Some of these laws vitally affect Hindus in their family relations and in other respects. A few examples only can be cited here. The Hindu Adoption Act went far beyond the ancient Hindu principles, which were two viz. that only a male could be adopted for purposes of spiritual benefit to the adopter and the person to be adopted should be in age and other matters like a son. Women could not adopt to themselves but a widow could adopt a son for the spiritual benefit of her husband. These principles have been thrown to the winds as will be seen from the criticisms of the present author above on pp. 1337-1338. But one thing must be mentioned. In some enactments affecting Hindu Law, customs have been abrogated: vide Hindu Marriage Act 25 of 1955, Section 4, Hindu Succession Act 30 of 1956, Section 4 (1). The Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act (78 of 1956) prescribes that the person to be adopted must not be more than 15 years of age (section 10 item IV) and that there should be a difference of 21 years between a male adopter and a female adoptee and between a female adopter and a male adoptee (sec. 11 items iii and iv). But the provision in Sec. 10 is made subject to a custom to the contrary. It passes one's understanding why custom was allowed to prevail over the law in this case. The Hindu Marriage Act, 25 of 1955, has made sweeping changes of which the vast majority of Hindus are blissfully ignorant. Before the Act a Hindu could in theory (and rarely in practice) have two or more wives living at the same time and even an anuloma marriage (i. e. the marriage of a male of a higher varṇa with a woman born in a lower varṇa) was held to be invalid by some High Courts in India such as those of Allahabad and Madras. Now under the present Hindu Marriage Act of 1955 the marriage is a monogamous marriage (section 5) and a person belonging to any caste may marry a woman of any caste how highsoever or lowsoever she may be by caste; and further marriages between spouses belonging to the Hindu, Sikh, Buddhist or Jaina religions are now declared valid. It was suggested, while the marriage Bill was in the Committee stage, that the provision as to monogamous marriages should become compulsory when a similar provision would be made applicable to Muslims (who under the Koranic law can have four wives at the same time). But this was brushed aside through fear of antagonizing Muslims. Other provisions about Buddhists, Jains and Sikhs being Hindus for the purposes of the Marriage Act, being a sweeping one at one stroke, is likely to be resented by almost all illiterate Hindus and likely to lead to tension and bitterness in many rural families and to break-up of the family as a central and compact unit in Hindu society. The orthodox people do not like such mixed marriages. It is not unlikely that the orthodox sections in the country may join hands with the ignorant masses and set back the hands of the clock, when some years hence the ranks of the towering personalities of the Gandhi era whom people want to humour have become thin.[2640]

One of the outstanding characteristics of Hindu society for several millennia has been the joint family system of the Mitākṣarā type which prevails in the whole of India (except in Bengal which is under the Dāyabhāga system). Its peculiarity is that all male members in the family form a coparcenary, that if any male of the family dies his interest devolves by survivorship on the remaining male members including his own male issue, if any, that females have no rights in the family property except marriage expenses and maintenance and no member of the joint family could transfer any part of the family property by will (not even the father) or by sale or mortgage except for certain recognised family necessities. This joint family system and the caste system were the bulwarks that kept together Hindu Society for centuries, inspite of foreign invasions and misrule. The Hindu Succession Act (30 of 1956) makes two sweeping changes in the Mitākṣarā joint family system. The explanation to Section 30 of the Act provides that any male Hindu may dispose of by will his interest in the coparcenary property. This is one drastic change. A similar drastic change was made by section 6, its proviso and explanation read together. Briefly it comes to this. If a Hindu coparcener of the Mitākṣarā system dies after the Succession Act comes into force, leaving him surviving no son, but a daughter or the daughter of a predeceased son or the son of a predeceased daughter or daughter of a predeceased daughter, his interest in the coparcenary property will not pass by survivorship to the other surviving male members of the coparcenary but to the above mentioned descendants of his and the interest that would pass to these descendants would be the share in the coparcenary property that would have been allotted to him if partition of the coparcenary property had taken place immediately before his death. Before this Act, the daughter or the other heirs mentioned above would have got nothing in the coparcenary property when any male member of the family died sonless. These two changes make of the joint family of the Mitākṣarā type a mere shell. It was suggested when the Bill was before Parliament that Parliament should provide that the joint family system of the Mitākṣarā type has been abrogated and that all members of the joint family after the passing of the Act would be only tenants-in-common. But this was not done. Why the Minister in charge or the members of Parliament felt squeamish about ending the coparcenary system of the Mitākṣarā is not clear to the present author. It looks like straining at a gnat while swallowing a camel. These and other changes in the old Hindu Law are possibly motivated by the desire to do justice to the rights of women. But in some cases this is done with a vengeance. For reasons of space only one example of this type is cited. Under Section 8 of the Hindu Succession Act and the Schedule of heirs in class I and class II, if a man dies possessed of property leaving only his mother and father (and no sons or wife or other persons) the mother will take the whole estate of her son absolutely to the entire exclusion of the father, since the mother is placed among heirs of class I., while the father is placed in class II and the rule in Sec. 8 (a and b) is that heirs put in class II succeed only if there is no heir in class I. Under Yāj. II. 135 the order of heirs to a man dying without male issue is first the widow, then daughter, then daughter's son or sons, then parents (pitarau, the dual is used). Some commentators held that the mother is to be preferred as heir to the father, others held that the father is to be preferred to the mother, while still others held that both parents should succeed together. In the Council of States (Rājyasabhā) the father was put in class I along with the mother, but in the House of the People the mother was put in class I and the father was put as heir in class II. Article 15 of the Constitution prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex, religion, race &c. What difference can be made between the mother and the father of a man as heirs except on the ground of sex ? Probably, the legislators wanted, in however small a way, to compensate women for past injustices to them. The Hindu Law of Succession of 1956 goes even beyond Muslim Law in that it recognizes twelve categories of persons (in class I of Schedule) as entitled to succeed simultaneously and take the property of the deceased. In a few cases it is possible that the heirs of class I taking the estate of a deceased person may be twenty or even more, if the latter leaves five sons and five daughters, besides some children of predeceased sons and daughters. There is probably no country in the world where so many persons are entitled to succeed simultaneously to a deceased person's estate. The result would be that there would be great fragmentation of property and constant wrangles and litigation. This amounts to distribution of poverty. Under the Hindu Law before 1956 women as heirs to males took as a general rule a limited estate (i. e. a life estate). For example, if a man died leaving his wife and a brother or a brother's son (but no children) his widow would take a limited estate i. e. on the widow's death, the estate would go to the brother (if alive) or to the latter's sons &c. Now (after 1956) the widow would take an absolute estate and she would be able to dispose of it as she pleased (by sale, gift or will). Vide Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act of 1956. Not only this, that section has retrospectively conferred an absolute estate on the widows who succeeded as limited owners before 1956. Suppose a person died in 1950, leaving a widow and a brother. The widow would take only a limited estate and she could not sell it or will it away ; if she died before 1956 the husband's brother would have succeeded to the estate. But suppose she is alive and in possession of her husband's estate when the Act of 1956 was passed. Her estate is at once enlarged. She can donate it to any one or leave it by her will to her own brother and entirely destroy the expectancy of the husband's brother to succeed to her husband's estate. This is equality of women with a vengeance The mass of people know nothing about this at present. But when many cases come before the courts and the common people come to know the present law whereby the expectancies of male members of her husband's family are set at naught by the widow transferring the property to persons that are strangers there is bound to be great trouble. Of all the revolutionary changes in India none will have more pervading influence and meaning than the drastic changes in the legal status of women made by the laws affecting Hindus passed from 1954 to 1956, which enforce monogamy, make polygamy punishable, which provide the minimum ages for the marriage of women and men at 15 and 18 respectively, which allow divorce to both sexes on the same basic rules, which confer rights of inheritance and absolute ownership on a daughter and her children, that allow the husband or the widow of a person, if the deceased had not already adopted a son and a daughter before his death, to adopt a son and a daughter.

2640. Vide what Mr. Frank Moraes says (on p. 85) in his biography of the Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (1956) about people being anxious to humour him.

Several States (e. g. Bombay by Act LXVII of 1948, sec. 5) have passed laws putting ceilings on the extent of the holding of lands up to 48 acres or 24 acres according as the land is ordinary or bagait (irrigated). This is felt by common people as a great injustice, when there is no ceiling on the wealth of big merchants and the like. It may be argued that these very rich people pay income-tax and other taxes. The agriculturists also say that they pay taxes and that inflation has made the price of bare necessities go up.

Before leaving the subject of legislation vitally affecting Hindu society, some remarks will have to be made about the mentality of several Congressmen who appear to have great faith in making men moral by legislation. Article 47 provides that it is among the primary duties of the State to raise the level of nutrition, the standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and that, in particular, the State shall endeavour to bring about prohibition of the consumption of intoxicating drinks and of drugs which are injurious to health. The Bombay State and a few other States in India embarked on a policy of total prohibition of intoxicating drinks. If there was to be a total prohibition of intoxicating drinks, it should have been an all India measure. Several States refused to have the prohibition law because there is loss of revenue in two ways, viz. the income from excise duties on liquors is lost and large sums of money have to be spent on establishments for preventing people from manufacturing illicit liquor. Art. 45 about free and compulsory education of children of school-going age (up to 14 years) was not strenuously observed by the Bombay State but it wanted to enforce Art. 47 at all costs. Besides, there being no prohibition on an all India basis, what is an offence under law in the Bombay State is not an offence in Delhi and some other States at all. That takes away the moral basis from the measure. Besides, prohibitionists forget human psychology. When something is prohibited or becomes rare, many feel a fascination in breaking the law or trying to possess what is rare. Illicit liquor produced and kept under the most unhygienic conditions is being sold on a large scale and persons knowing this dare not inform the police for fear of being stabbed or killed by distillers of illicit liquor.[2640a] A 2640a. L. P. Jacks in "Near the brink" remarks 'Social Reform might be defined as the process of creating the social problems of tomorrow by Acts of Parliament designed to solve the social problems of today' (p. 116) and on p. 118 he says that he never saw so many drunken people as during the years when prohibition was in force.

Minister's cook was found engaged in manufacturing illicit liquor. In the present author's opinion prohibition has turned out to be a dismal failure, it tends to corrupt the police, it reduces revenue much needed for development purposes, illicit distillation has become a cottage industry and boot-leggers have acquired a vested interst in prohibition. Why horse-racing and betting are not prohibited by law is inexplicable, except on the supposition that many people entertain that Government is afraid of displeasing rich people who indulge in it. Wine and gambling have been besetting sins from the times of the Ṛgveda. Vasiṣṭha pleads for forgiveness of sins from Varuṇa in Ṛgveda VII. 86.6 saying that 'it is not one's own power that leads one to commit sin, it is fate, wine, anger, dice (gambling) and thoughtlessness'. In Ṛg. X. 34 a gambler laments over his own frailty. Therefore, all that can be reasonably attempted is temperance and reducing the spread of the drinking habit; otherwise new and greater evils not contemplated in the ardour for suppression emerge. Vide p. 1338 above for the warning given against startling changes based on Mr. Aldous Huxley's words. Another faddist attempt at improving morals by legislation is the recent Act prohibiting dowries, which came into force on first July 1961. The giving or taking or abetting the giving or taking of dowry or demanding a dowry directly or indirectly from the parents or guardians of a bride or bridegroom is punishable with imprisonment extending to six months or with fine extending to five thousand rupees or with both. The definition of dowry punishable[2641] under the Act is rendered practically nugatory by the explanation that presents made at the time of a marriage to either party to the marriage in the form of cash, ornaments, clothes or other articles, shall not be deemed to be dowry within the meaning of the section, unless they are made as consideration for the marriage of the said parties. This, instead of relieving the parents of marriageable girls from the payment of a dowry, would give rise to blackmail on the part of busy bodies in the town or the village of the parties. If this latter does not happen the Act will ordinarily remain a dead letter.

2641. The Act defines 'dowry' as 'any property or valuable security given or agreed to be given either directly or indirectly (a) by one party to the marriage to the other party to the marriage or (b) by the parents of either party to a marriage or by any other person, to either party to the marriage or to any other person at or before or after the marriage as consideration for the marriage of the said parties, but does not include dower or Mahr in the case of persons to whom the Muslim Personal Law applies'.

Article 40 of the Constitution calls upon the State to organize village Panchayats and to endow them with the powers and authority necessary to enable them to function as units of self-government. In ancient and medieval times, village Panchayats played an important part. Under the British this system (which trained people in democratic functions on a small scale) was practically done away with. Now after about two hundred years the present Government wants to revive Panchayats. In the different States of India village Panchayat Acts have been passed. Until a large percentage of villagers become educated, self-reliant and men of character, the village Panchayats cannot function as the foundations of real democracy. It is very likely that either the dominant castes or the leading families or the bullies (guṇḍas) in the village will capture the village Panchayats and use them for their own benefit A recent book ' Panchayt-i-raj ' by Shri S. A. Dey (published by Asia Publishiug House, 1961) paints a very roseate picture of Panchayats functioning in the 550 thousand villages of India. It all depends on disinterested workers of high character; otherwise this project will meet the same fate that overtook Brayne's work in Gurgaon after Brayne left.

Some people took it into their heads to decide that agricultural land should belong to him who tilled it. Therefore, in Bombay and some other States legislation was enacted, first holding that he who tilled another's land for six years was to be regarded as a ' protected tenant ' (i. e. practically a permanent tenant); later on the owner was prohibited from selling the land to a non-agriculturist and ultimately(by Bombay Act. LXVII of 1948, sec. 32) the tenant was made the owner, being liable to pay to the original owner the price fixed by the Revenue authorities spread over twelve yearly instalments. Whatever may be the case in Zamindaris, in the Deccan and some South Indian States the Ryotwari system prevails and persons belonging to the lower middle class purchased lands at high prices (not getting more than three or four percent as rent on the money invested) as land was deemed a stable investment. The present author, having been a practising lawyer for forty-five years, knows personally thousands of village people. In many cases although four or five years have passed away, the Revenue authorities have not yet decided the prices of the lands over which ownership of erstwhile tenants has been declared. Most of the erstwhile tenants (now become owners) have not paid a pie for four years and the real owners have been robbed of the benefit to be derived from the price, if paid. Supposing Government was solicitous of increasing production by making tenants owners there is no reason why Government should not have recovered the price or instalments as a revenue demand. There is no judicial probe in the ordinary courts of law, the appeal lies only to the Govt. (that means to the Collector), no owner is entitled to engage a pleader (sec. 80 A) and very complicated provisions are made if the former tenant fails to pay each instalment. But the present state of things is sheer spoliation and looks like robbing Peter to pay Paul and is a sample of what democracy might mean to people of the lower middle class. There is no evidence that by these measures production of food grains has greatly increased. But Congressmen are complacent because they know that in the elections the vast majority of illiterate agriculturists who are to benefit by such legislation will cast their votes in favour of 'oxen' adopted as symbol by the Congress party. Many States have introduced by legislation ceilings in land holdings, viz. no man or family is to hold more then 48 acres of dry land and no more than 24 acres of irrigated land. Even agriculturists have now begun to grumble and to ask why no ceilings are placed on the accumulation of wealth, when they see rich people flaunting their wealth in cars eighteen or twenty feet in length, obstructing narrow roads and causing serious casualties.[2642] Most people complain that the poor are getting poorer and the rich richer under the policies of the present Government. Government is not able to hold the price line and agriculturists, workers in industries and the lower middle class are dissatisfied and there is great danger of communistic ideas spreading among the majority of the inhabitants of this ancient land, that once honoured sages. Prime Minister Nehru said on the Congress manifesto for the elections of 1962[2643] 'If the great majority of people in India for some reason or other become communists in the sense of thinking that way, it may be good or bad, I do not know, but I am quite convinced it would not be India, then it would be something else. I do not want that to happen, even though I want India to take up modern scientific techniques, scientific theories, economic theories, economic organizations. I accept all that to the extent it is good for India. It is for us to choose. I do not rule out any-thing but I rule out being uprooted from India'.

2642. A survey carried on by the Police authorities for some months in Greater Bombay (population 41 lakhs) this year disclosed that motor accidents on an average caused one death every day, 13 people were injured and several dozens of accidents occurred every day in which motor cars were involved but no man was killed or injured.

2643. Quoted in Prof. V. K R. V. Rao's paper in 'Changing India' p. 241 in the Volume of papers presented to Prof. D. R. Gadgil on his 61st birth-day.

What is ordinarily ment by 'Socialism' is collective farming, the abolition of the private ownership of the means of production and State Industrialization. Merely saying that the land should go to the tiller and carrying out that by legislation is simply robbing one person to benefit another. It is a long way off from that to socialist farming which would make the tiller a landless worker on the collective farm.

It is often said that ours is a 'Welfare State' and that what is aimed at is 'a socialistic pattern of society'. The Constitution does not employ these very words. But Art. 38 appears in substance to mean that India would be a Welfare State, as it provides 'The State shall strive to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting as effectively as it may a social order in which justice, social, economic, political, shall inform all the institutions of the national life.' In the report of the Planning Commission on the 2nd Five Year Plan (which was accepted by the Government) the meaning of 'socialistic pattern of society' is set out as follows :[2644]

The task before an underdeveloped country is not merely to get better results within the existing framework of economic and social institutions, but to mould and refashion these so that they contribute effectively to the realisation of wider and deeper social values. These values or basic objectives have recently been summed up in the phrase 'socialist pattern of society'. Essentially this means 'that the basic criterion for determining the lines of advance must not be private profit, but social gain and that the pattern of development and the structure of socio-economic relation should be so planned that they result not only in appreciable increase of national income and employment but also in greater equality in incomes and wealth.' 'Major decisions regarding production, distribution, consumption and investment must be made by agencies informed by social purpose. The benefits of economic development must accrue more and more to the relatively less privileged classes of society and there should be progressive reduction of the concentration of incomes, wealth and economic power. The problem is to create a milieu in which the small man who has so far had little opportunity of perceiving and participating in the immense possibilities of growth through organized effort is enabled to put in his best in the interest of a higher standard of life for himself and increased prosperity for the country'. It appears from this and from what follows that 'socialist pattern of society' is not to be regarded as some rigid or fixed pattern. It is not rooted in any doctrine or dogma.

---

2644. Vide p. 9 of a draft outline of the 2nd Five Year Plan pub. by the Planning Commission in February 1956.

A booklet published by Sriman Narayan for the All India Congress Committee (2nd ed. of 1956, New Delhi) embodies the notable speeches of the Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. He starts by saying that private enterprise is useful so far as our country is concerned, that we wish to encourage it, but the dominance which private enterprise had throughout the world during a certain period is no more and that for a planner it has now a secondary place. Later on (p. 2) he states that he uses the word 'socialistic picture of society' as meaning largely that the means of production should be socially owned or controlled for the benefit of society as a whole. On p. 12 he says (at Avadi Session) 'we have laid down that certain basic industries must necessarily be state-owned and there are other industries we should try to encourage the State to start. The plan is an integrated whole and in that integrated whole the public and private sector must also be integrated. They are not rival shows.' On p. 19 he says 'The national aim is a welfare state and a socialistic economy.' 'Finance is important, but not so much as people think.' 'What is important is trained personnel. The only thing we have to guard against is inflation. Inflation is avoided if there is production corresponding to the money thrown in'. (p. 20). 'Everyone in the country should have the primary things of life like food, clothing, housing, education, sanitation, medical help, employment, work' (p. 27). 'The objectives of India's Planning should be socialistic pattern of society. It cannot be achieved by mere legislation; but it is all a question of planning' (pp. 30–31). 'Both Congress and Parliament have said that we want a socialistic pattern of society. Why have we used this vague language? We have done so deliberately because we do not want to commit ourselves to any rigid formula' (p. 55). 'India wants a social revolution by peaceful means, peaceful methods, by mutual agreement, by working together. Hard work is the only way to progress.' Russia had to use force to do in 20 or 25 years what England did in 100 years (pp. 60–66).

These quotations taken from the speeches of the Prime Minister clearly establish that he does not want a totalitarian communism in India. He appears to favour a democratic socialistic pattern. But he himself admits that vague language about socialistic pattern has been deliberately used and that his idea is to build up in India by trial and error a sort of democratic socialism. But there is great danger in this. The present author is not aware of any large country in the world where a democratic socialistic pattern purposely clothed in vague language has been tried and succeeded. The language being vague and no defininite procedure being chalked out, a socialistic pattern would mean all things to all men and the socialistic pattern of society is vague enough to allow diverse interpretations.

Russia and China have been and are under totalitarian socialism. In Soviet Russia under Lenin and Stalin peasants, working men and intellectuals became statesmen and military commanders, the old economic principle of supply and demand was replaced by central control of all commercial relations, of all production and distribution among the large populations of Russia spread over vast areas, individualistic agriculture gave place to huge co-operative farms managed under the directives of the State, aristocracy and democracy were abolished and dictatorship of a party that monopolized all power emerged. Our leaders appear to have borrowed the ideas of co-operative farming and the State control of production and distribution of several commodities from the Russian example, but the present writer is afraid that without the coercive methods employed by dictators like Stalin, our experiments will not in a measurable period of time lead to the results desired and expected by our leaders.

Those interested in democratic socialism may profitably read Shri Ashok Mehta's work on it (published by Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, 1959).

What appears to the present author is that our country is to have a mixed economy, in which private and public enterprise are supposed to work together to narrow the disparity or gulf between a small minority of haves and a vast multitude of have-nots. For example, Atomic energy, Railways, iron and steel, aircraft, ship-building are among Government industries, while the private sector is to be concerned with the manufacture of textiles, cement, alluminium, machine tools, chemicals and pharmaceuticals &c.

The present writer does not think that he is competent enough to criticize the means and methods that are being adopted by the leaders of the country and to say whether they are enough to meet the high promises made and the hopes raised by certain Articles in the Constitution such as 39 (part a of which declares that the citizens have the right to an adequate means of livelihood), 41 (providing for securing the right to work, to education and to public assistance in cases of un-employment, old age, sickness and disablement), 43 (the State shall endeavour to secure to all workers, agricultural, industrial or otherwise, work, a living wage, decent standard of life and full enjoyment of leisure and social and cultural opportunities); vide Articles 45 and 47 already quoted above (on pp. 1669, 1675)

But he will say a few words. The mass of people cannot be kept at a high level of self-sacrifice, great ideals and hard work for long. A dynamic and revered leader like Buddha may succeed for a time in securing this. But, when he passes away, there is gradually a relapse into conditions worse than what they were before. For the vast majority of people anywhere private gain is the chief motive for hard work and not mere requests or sermons. If that motive is abolished, then the majority will not work hard at all, though a few individuals of high ideals and moral character may work as hard as before. Or there will have to be a dictatorship, coercion and fear of being liquidated. In the absence of these, production will be enormously reduced and there will be no improvement in standards of living. Russia and China are not under a Parliamentary democracy and they can therefore make people work without trammels, but in countries like U. K., U. S. A., even Japan the appeal of the motive of private gain is the chief factor. Even in Russia incentives have to be held out for extra work and it is admitted that even after forty years of totalitarian rule, there are great inequalities of income, since the wages of an Academician and an average worker are in the ratio of 62:1, and (apart from academicians) the wages of high-placed executives and common men are in the ratio of 20:1 and there are no ceilings on income.[2646] Shri Vinoba Bhave placed his target about Bhūmidāna at fifty million acres but he got only about five million acres, half of which are not arable. Now the emphasis has shifted to 'Sarvodaya'. Shri Jayaprakash Narayan, who was first a Marxist out and out, then joined the P. S. Party, is now advocating the principles of 'Sarvodaya' in[2647] 'Towards a new society' published by Mr. Prabhakar Padhye for the Congress for cultural freedom (New Delhi, 1958). Sarvodaya planning seems to be based on the assumption that a radical change in human behaviour and attitude to work and property will take place on a large scale without coercion. There is hardly any basis for any such assumption at present. The Prime Minister himself admits (vide p. 240 of Prof. V. K. R. V. Rao's paper in 'Changing India') that adequate motives and inducements have to be provided. The Indian Government more than any other purely democratic country in the world has extended the scope of public administration to embark on the production and distribution of economic goods while keeping at the same time full Parliamentary democracy. Gandhiji also called upon the millionaires to hold their vast fortunes in trusteeship. One should like to know the names of even a dozen millionaires in India that dealt with their wealth like trustees even in Gandhiji's lifetime.

Let us now turn to the third Five Year Plan.[2648] The vital 2646. Vide 'The Democratic alternative' (p. 16) by Miss M. A. Devaki, published in 1959 by the Indian Committee for Cultural Freedom, Bombay.

2647. Sarvodaya ideal is not different from the well-known verse 'सर्वेऽत्र सुखिनः सन्तु सर्वे सन्तु निरामयाः। सर्वे भद्राणि पश्यन्तु मा कश्चिद् दुःखमाप्नुयात्॥,' which means 'May all here (in this world) be happy, may all be free from diseases. May all see prosperity and may no one experience sorrow'.

2648. 'Third Five Year Plan', published by the Government of India, Planning Commission, 1961 (774 pages). While these pages were passing through the press the author came across a book called 'Planning in India' by Mr. V. T. Krishnamachari (Orient Longmans, 1961) who was a member of the Planning Commission from March 1950 and Deputy Chairman from February 1953 to June 1960. It is a valuable book based on official information and containing numerous tables and details. It requires to be carefully studied and invites criticism, but that cannot be done in this place now.

objectives of the planners are stated on p. 3. 'Rapid economic growth and expansion of employment, reduction of disparities in income and wealth, prevention of the concentration of economic power, and creation of the values and attitudes of a free and equal society. Where the bulk of the people live so close to the margin of poverty, the claims of social justice, the right to work, of equal opportunity and of a minimum level of living have great urgency'. On p. 48 the principal aims are further elaborated and it is stated on p. 49 that the first priority belongs to agriculture and therefore the total outlay provided is 1718 crores of rupees as against 950 crores in the Second Plan and fertilizers to the extent of 800,000 tons are provided for as against 110,000 tons in the 2nd Plan.

Our country's great handicap is population and food production. Statistics for the growth of population [2649] are '(in millions): 1901 (235.5), 1911 (249), 1921 (248.1), 1931 (275.5), 1941 (314.8), 1951 (356.9), 1961 (438). This indicates that by about 1966–1967 the population of our country may be about 480 millions. Article 39a (referred to on p. 1666) requires the State to direct its policy towards securing that every citizen has the right to an adequate means of livelihood. Our country has been an agricultural country from time immemorial, yet we have to import millions of tons of wheat and other grain for feeding our large population. The finance minister in his speech on the Budget for 1961–62 states (p. 79 para 36) that in May 1961 an agreement under P. L. 480 was signed by India's minister with the U. S. A. for the import in four years of 18 million tons of wheat, one million tons of rice and also certain quantities of maize, cotton, tobacco and soya bean oil. This is the biggest agricultural commodities agreement ever signed between two countries. There were four previous agreements commencing from August 1956 but they were all on a lesser scale. The fifth agreement of May 1960 was for agricultural commodities worth 1369.8 million dollars (= 655.8 crores of rupees). The average intake of food in India is below the nutritional standards laid down by scientists. Ours is one of the poorest countries in the world as the following table [2650] for national income per capita for 1957 will show:

2649. Vide Tata Industries 'Statistical Outline of India for 1959', Table 8 for population.

2650. Vide Tata Industries 'Statistical outline of India' 1959, Table No. 2. Vide 'Communist China today' by S. Chandrasekhara (p. 136), who shows that the present figures about China are not reliable owing to a change of policy in modern China.

Country	Rupees	Country	Rupees
India	289	Italy	1922
Australia	5114	Japan	1200
Burma	222	U. K.	4561
Canada	4946	U. S. A.	10124
Ceylon	553	W. Germany	3530

These figures show that in Ceylon the per capita income is double that of India, in Japan it is four times as much and in Germany over twelve times that of India. Both Germany and Japan were devastated by the 2nd World War and yet the people of both countries have in less than 15 years improved so much in production that both are giving substantial assistance to India. Our people and leaders should deeply ponder over this state of things and should strain every nerve in an all out effort to improve the country's lot instead of talking and mutual bickerings.

While these pages were passing through the Press, the author got a copy of 'India 's Food Crisis and steps to meet it'' which is a report (of 254 pages) made in 1959 by a Ford Foundation Team of thirteen American Technicians and agriculturist specialists at the invitation of two Indian Ministers of Food and Agriculture and Community Development and co-operation. It is a very important document, discusses seventy aspects of the problem and deserves close study by all Indians interested in India's welfare. It is issued by the Govt. of India. One or two striking matters can alone be referred to here. The report points out that the total population of India will be about 480 millions at the end of the Third Five Plan in 1966, that the target of 110 million tons of food grains by 1965–66 is reasonable and is necessary to provide food enough for the added millions and to provide for some dietary improvement and a safety margin for poor crops and other emergencies. The report recognises that India is making steady progress in food production, but the rate of production must be tripled to meet the Third Plan target. It gives the warning that if India's food production increases no faster than at present rates, the gap between supplies and target will be 28 million tons by 1965-66; this would be 25 per cent shortfall in terms of need and that no conceivable programme of imports or rationing would meet a crisis of this magnitude (pp. 3-4). The report suggests several emergency measures and measures to be carried on over a long period, which cannot be set out here. It stresses the need for research in agricultural economics. It recommends (p. 11) that the entire nation must be made aware of the impending food crisis and steps must be taken to meet it and warns that adequate supplies of food are essential to the survival of democracy. Two short-comings of the report may be pointed out. It does not tell us what funds would be required for research and for implementing the numerous other suggestions it makes. Besides, it says nothing about the birth rate in India and measures to curb the phenomenal rise in population.

According to U. N. Demographic Year book (August 1960) there are about 2900 million people in the world. More than half of the world's inhabitants live in four countries viz. China (669 millions), India (438 millions), Soviet Union (209 millions), U. S. A. (178 millions). Population growth depends upon the birth rate and the death rate. Owing to scientific discoveries, epidemics or such diseases as malaria, typhoid, cholera, influenza are either eliminated or brought under control and therefore the death rate tends to be lower and lower. It is the birth rate that has to be controlled. The following table[265] for comparative birth rate and death rate in 1957 for eight countries is interesting:

Country	Birth Rate per thousand.	Death rate per thousand.
India	24	12
Australia	23	9
Canada	28	8
Ceylon	37	10
France	19	12
Sweden	15	10
U. K.	17	12
U. S. A.	25	10

2651. Vide table 12 'Comparative vital statistics, 1957' in the Tata Industries' Statistical Outline of India, 1959'.

This table shows that the birth rate in our country is not very high or abnormal and the death rate is also similar to that of such progressive countries as France and U. K. Many Western countries have no definite population policy at Govt. level. But the case of our country is entirely different. Our country has already a huge population, most of which is on the margin of subsistence level. Supposing that by means of our two Five Year Plans the national income in the ten years (1951–1961) increased 30 percent, the growth of population in the same period would come to about 22 percent, so that most of the additional wealth produced would be eaten up by the new mouths that have to be fed and the standard of living of the average Indian would practically remain the same. Therefore, the main problem that faces the Government, the planners and the people is how to control the large growth of population. Population control will not solve all the problems of our country, but our other problems will not be solved without solving that problem. The Government of India and the Planners had no well thought policy about the control of population. Government appears to lay far more emphasis on industrialization and agricultural production than on population control. In the first Five Year Plan only 65 lakhs of rupees were allocated to the schemes of population control, in the 2nd Five Year Plan the allocation was raised to five crores. The Planning Commission has now realized the gravity of the problem of the enormous growth of Indian population, has provided 50 crores of rupees in the Third Plan for the various schemes of population control (vide pp. 676 ff. of Third Five Year Plan). In the whole world about 100 people are born every minute, about 6000 persons every hour, about 140,000 every day and about five crores every year. This problem of the phenomenal growth of population overshadows in urgency and importance almost every problem of the contemporary world, much more so of India. Very little is being done to control systematically the terrific growth of numbers. Sweden in the early 19th century was a poverty-stricken country, but now it is one of the progressive and prosperous countries of the world owing to hard work, co-operation, honesty, social and personal discipline. Birth control is a very difficult and delicate problem. Religious beliefs and prejudices have to be taken into consideration. In Rgvedic times the prayer to God Indra for a newly married bride had been 'O bountiful Indra! may ten sons be born of her and make her husband the eleventh (member of the family).' Later on some kindly soul took compassion on women and made the blessing to be 'of eight sons'. The Mahābhārata said that a sonless man does not reach blessed worlds (heaven &c). By the birth of a son the father was deemed to have discharged his debt to his ancestors and the water and piṇḍas (balls of cooked rice) offered by the son to his deceased father and other deceased ancestors were supposed to be of great efficacy for the peace of the departed souls. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 560-61, 799 and above p. 1626 This importance of a son or sons is believed to this day by almost all illiterate or educated people in India except a few men and women of advanced views. Educated brides sometimes request that the old mode of blessing for eight sons should not be followed. Therefore, in such cases the formula has to be changed to 'may you have as many sons as you desire'. The Smṛtis lay down that the husband has to cohabit with the wife after the first few days of her monthly illness and that he incurred the sin of embryo murder if he refused to do so without good cause. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. II pp. 570-71 and note 1327. The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (Chap. 14. 5-6) goes a little further and gives a story in which the husband who neglected this owing to his partiality for another charming wife had to undergo torments of hell. The present high prices of the necessaries of life induce many people to limit families by various devices. The Planning Commission is going to try various measures such as intensive education, provision of facilities and advice on the largest scale possible, providing family planning services at 1864 rural and 330 urban medical and health centres, numbers of sterilization centres, opening 6100 clinics in rural areas and 2100 in urban areas (in 2nd Plan only 549 urban and 1100 rural clinics), distribution of simple contraceptives, research programme for more effective contraceptives etc. The 3rd Plan reports that in the 2nd Plan period 125000 sterilization operations were carried out (p. 678 of Third Plan). The present author is not an expert in these matters and so will content himself by pointing out that sterilization and, particularly contraceptives, are double-edged weapons. Sterilization for males is easy and may become popular among well-to-do men for selfish reasons (such as not wanting children and not undertaking the task of bringing them up). Therefore, a rule would have to be made and rigorously enforced that no sterilization will be done unless the man has three children or more. Vide a very thoughtful work 'Fertility and Survival' by Alfred Sauvy tr. from French by hristine Brooke-Rose (1961). Birth control is practised in West Europe, North America, Japan exclusively by the well-to-do type of people. The same might happen in India. The most serious objection against contraceptives is that they will lead to immorality and encourage promiscuity in both sexes. Gandhiji in his 'Self-restraint versus self-indulgence' (3rd. ed., 1928) stated that so far as India is concerned there is no case for contraceptives (p. 3) and advised self-restraint. But he might have changed his opinion if he had been alive today. To advise poor people to practise self restraint, when most of them live in hovels of one room or two rooms, who are uneducated and have no ambitions and pass life in abject poverty, sounds to them as a huge joke. The well-to-do have many interests in life and several outlets for their energy but for the poor there are very few. It is interesting to note that the Prime Minister in his 'Autobiography' (1936) strongly criticizes Gandhiji's praise of poverty, suffering and ascetic life as utterly wrong, harmful and impossible of achievement (p. 510) and regards Gandhiji's attitude to sex as extraordinary (p. 512).

Dr. Radhakrishnan in 'Religion and Society' (published in 1947) concedes (p. 189) that the use of contraceptives cannot be altogether forbidden, quotes Dawson to the effect that birth control by abstention is either ineffective or, if effective, pernicious (p. 90), that objections to birth control by contraceptives are due to their abuse and that in the present conditions facilities for birth control must be available, especially to poorer classes (p. 191). Contraceptives would have to be harmless to use, cheap, easy to use and absolutely reliable. The author is not sure if there are contraceptives of this type. Japan, a small country of islands, was compelled by the rapid growth of population to legalise abortions. Vide 'Aggression and Population' by F. James Dawson (London, 1946) for a thoughtful book on how to check worldwide growth of population. A thoughtful and exhaustive work is 'Population and planned parenthood in India' by S. Chandrasekhar, Director of Indian Institute for population studies, Madras (revised Edition of 1961).

The total investment programme for the Third Plan comes to Rs. 10400 crores (p. 109), Rs. 6100 crores in the public sector and Rs. 4300 crores in the private sector. The public sector has to find Rs. 7500 crores in all (that is Rs. 6300 for investment plus 1200 crores for current outlays in personnel &c (p. 91).

Resources for the Third Plan (p. 100)

TABLE 3.

	CENTRE	STATES	TOTAL
1. Balance from current revenue	410	140	550
2. Contribution of Railways	100	...	100
3. Surpluses of other public enterprises	300	150	450
4. Loans from the public	475	325	800
5. Small Savings	213	387	600
6. Provident funds	183	82	265
7. Steel Equalisation Fund	105	...	105
8. Balance of miscellaneous capital receipts.	428	258	170
9. Total of 1 to 8	2214	826	3040
10. Additional Taxation	1100	610	1710
11. External Assistance	2200	...	2200
12. Deficit financing	524	26	550
Total ...	6038	1462	7500

Besides the States have resources for 3rd Plan amounting to 1416 crores.

The two five year plans have given our leaders a certain mastery over the situation and some confidence abut the future. But Mr. Nanda has to admit that the productivity and level of efficiency are very low. Foreign aid raises difficult questions as to how to match it with an adequate mobilization of domestic resources. The mass of people are poverty-stricken, have a low standard of living and therefore can save little. High prices, which is a concomitant of development plans in all countries, are making common people discontented.

Foreign assistance runs into thousands of crores of rupees, nearly half of which comes from U. S. A. The United States Information Service has prepared a detailed statement of assistance to India for ten years from June 1951 to 4th August 1961 and circulated it to many Indians from which some striking figures are quoted here. A statement brought up only to June 30 of 1961 gives slightly smaller numbers as compared with the statement given below which brings up the figures up to 4th August 1961, U. S. Government aid consists of grants and loans. Grants are gifts and do not involve any repayment. The grants in ten years total 1128.5 million dollars (537.4 crores of rupees). Loans involve repayment, some in dollars and some in rupees or dollars at the option of the Indian Government. Repayment in rupees does not involve the utilization of India's foreign exchange earnings or the export of goods from India. Eighty percent of U. S. loans to India up to Aug. 4, 1961 (2192.1 million dollars) are repayable in rupees i. e. that portion of the loans is not so inconvenient as the loans repayable in dollars are.

On p. 110 of Third Five Year Plan the foreign exchange requirements are put down at 2030 crores of Rs. for plan projects. But there are other general needs of the economy by way of raw materials, components, replacement machinery to be provided for. It is estimated that Rs. 3800 crores over the five years would be not too high. On p. 114 it is stated that the total assistance for the Third Plan assured by foreign countries is 2286 million dollars (Rs. 1089 crores) out of which the USA has agreed to provide 1045 million dollars (just under half of the total foreign assistance), West Germany 425 million dollars, U. K. 250 million dollars, Japan 80 million dollars, and small sums by Canada, France &c.

U. S. Aid from the Inception of the Aid Programme to India in June 1951, through August 4, 1961.

	DOLLARS (Millions)	RUPEES (Crores)
Aid under Indo-American technical co-operative programme	496.4	236.4
Public Law 480, Title I	2337.3	1113.0
Famine Relief grants to Indian Government	10.4	5.0
Agricultural commodities distributed through voluntary agencies (Public Law 480, Title III).	116.8	53.6
Development Loan Fund	513.4	244.5
Export-Import Bank	246.9	117.6
Wheat Loan of 1951	189.7	90.3
Total ...	3910.9	1862.6

BREAKDOWN

Grants to Indian Government for economic development (not repayable)	1128.5	537.4
Famine relief grants to Indian Government (not repayable)	10.4	5.3
Agricultultural commodities distributed through voluntary agencies (PL. 480, title III) (not repayable)	116.8	55.6
Loans repayable in dollars	436.6	307.9
Loans repayable in rupees or dollars	1755.6	836.0
Cooley fund for loans to private enterprises.	162.3	77.3
Amounts under PL-480 Title I reserved for US Govt. use.	300.8	143.1
Total ...	3910.9	1862.6

The preceding table shows that in the last ten years, India has become indebted to the USA in the huge sum of 2655 million dollars (some payable in dollars alone and the rest in rupees if India chose that way). In the Third Plan USA has agreed to provide India up to 1045 million dollars i. e. at the end of the 15 years from 1951 India may owe to U.S.A. 3700 million dollars, that is roughly about 1756 crores of rupees (at Rs. 4¾ per dollar). India will probably owe a larger amount to all the other lending countries taken together. The most serious question is how and in how many years India will repay the debts that run into astronomical figures. The explanatory memorandum accompanying the Central Budget for 1961-62 shows that India's public debt stood at Rs. 949 crores on 31st March 1939. On the 31st March 1962 it will reach the huge figure of 5554 crores. Adding the liability of Govt. to repay various deposits placed with Govt. under the Post Office Savings Bank, National Plan Savings, Provident Funds, Saving Deposit Certificates etc. which account for Rs. 1868 crores, India's obligations would really come to 7422 crores of Rs. (5554+1868), at the end of March 1962. Our interest yielding assets are only Rs. 5725 crores. If we add to this huge sum the debts our Govt. will owe to U. S. A. and other countries as shown in the above table, at the end of the third plan India would be indebted in the colossal figure of about Rs. 11000 crores.

While these pages were passing through the Press, the author received a statement from the USA Information Service in Bombay, which brings the figures up to 12th March 1962. It states that the American Economic assistance to India from June 1951 to 12th March 1962 totals 4118 million dollars (= 1960.9 crores of Rupees) as shown in the table below :

		DOLLARS (Million)	RUPEES (Crores)	PERCENTAGE OF TOTAL
1.	Grant (not repayable)	1,291.2	614.8	31.3
2.	Loans repayable in dollars.	608.2	289.6	14.8
3.	Local Currency repayments.	2,218	1,056.5	53.9
		4,118.0	1,960.9	100.0

It is not necessary to go into other details. The loans are repayable at different dates, some being repayable in forty years and some carrying a very low rate of interest. It may, however, be noted that out of about 4000 million dollars aid to India since Independence over half has been in the form of P. L. 480 Food for commodities. The Food Minister of India, Mr. S. K. Patil, assures us, however, that India would become completely self-sufficient in food by the end of the Third Five Year Plan and points out that during the last decade, foodgrain production in India rose from 50 to 80 million tons a year, an increase of 60 per cent. But it should not be forgotten that the population of India in the same ten years increased by about 22 per cent over the population in 1951.

The Welfare State theoretically aims at (Sarvodaya) prosperity for all (at least for the vast majority). Up to recent times, the main obligations of the State towards its people were the administration of the country, the defence of the country and its coast against aggression or invasion, maintenance of law and order, primary and higher education. The ambition of the framers of the Indian Constitution and our leaders is to create a welfare state, and to reconstruct the present social and economic order on a socialistic pattern by subjecting the country to a planned economy. Several vital industries are now reserved for the State and Government has assumed power to regulate production, to control distribution and to fix even the prices of some commodities absolutely necessary to all men in daily life. It has also established the State Trading Corporation. Taxation has become an ever-increasing instrument of economic policy for carrying out the plan projects. Apart from the income-Tax Act (XI of 1922 recently consolidated by Act 43 of 1961) our democratic Government passed one after another four Acts, viz. the Estate Duty Act (XXXIV of 1953), the Wealth Tax (XXVI of 1957), the Expenditure Tax (XXIX of 1957) and the Gift Tax (XVIII of 1958). There is no other country in the world that has all the above five taxes. Is India the only welfare country in the world ? There is a sense of uncertainty and fright in the middle classes and tax dodging in the rich or influential sections of the community. Reasons of space prevent the citing of illustrations of the arbitrary character of the recent four Acts. In all these Acts the opinions of the Govt. officers (viz. Gift Tax officer, expenditure tax officer, and wealth tax officer and higher officers) in an executive ladder under the same Acts on questions of fact (such as the value of a property) are final and cannot be questioned in any court of justice (i. e. in a subordinate judge's court or district judge's court or High Court). If a creditor releases a debtor from his debts (wholly or partly) the creditor will have to pay gift tax on the debt released if the gift tax officer is of opinion that he could have recovered the debt by means of legal steps. No man can make a gift of more than 100 rupees at one time to a private person or even a near relative (except to his wife) and if he makes several gifts to the same person in one year exceeding five hundred rupees he will have to pay gift tax. In all cases of questions of fact one appeal should have been allowed to a district court or where the amount concerned was more than ten thousand rupees to the High Court. It should be recognized by policy-makers that our people have great faith in the integrity of the High Courts and the district judges who are selected by the High Courts and whose promotion does not depend on the Executive. They have not much faith in the fairness and integrity of Appellate Commissioners and Tribunals that are appointed by the Ministers, when the dispute is between private persons and taxing authorities on behalf of Government. Writers on the constitutions of countries have for many years emphasized two leading features viz. the sovereignty of Parliament and the rule of law. Parliaments are cajoled into passing legislation whereby courts of justice are evaded or passed by and the will or caprice of executive officers becomes unfettered and supreme. This is what is called the 'New Despotism' by Lord Chief Justice Hewart of Great Britain.[2559] In the name of the Welfare State it seems that all power is being centralized in bureaucracy by our leaders.

Most common pepople in India have a very vague notion of what socialism means. They believe that socialism is based on Marxism.[2652] Marx holds that revolution is the weapon or means by which the workers are to seize power, that his theory is scientific and based on a study of facts. He himself declared that he was no 'Marxist' (vide 'Naked God' p. 3 by Howard Fast, New York, 1957 and 'New Class' by Milovan Djilas p. 4 London, 5th Impression, 1958). These words of his are explained by Dr. Radhakrishnan as meaning that he was not pledged to the acceptance of a doctrine, final, complete and oppressive (vide 'Religion and Society,' 1947, p. 25). This is not the place to discuss the premises and predictions of Marx, But a few words may be said here. Marx had predicted that communism would prevail first in the most developed and industrialized nations. What happened is quite the opposite of this. Communism occurred in countries like Russia and China that were relatively very much less developed and industrialized. Another of his predictions was that the system of private ownership would make the rich richer and the poor poorer, would 2652. Vide 'New Despotism' by Lord Chief Justice Hewart (Earnest Benn Ltd. London, 1929) p. 17 (a long passage from which is quoted by R. S. W. Pollard in 'Conscience and liberty' (Allen and Unwin, London, 1940). Vide also 'Bureaucracy triumphant' by C. K. Allen (London, 1931). All these taxing enactments have created a high ladder of officers appointed by the executive. For example, under the Wealth Tax Act there is first the Wealth Tax Officer who decides what tax is payable, then there is an appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner (Sec. 23), then there is a further appeal to the Appellate Tribunal (Sec. 24), then there can be a reference to the High Court on a point of law (Sec. 27-28) and finally an appeal to the Supreme Court (Sec. 29). This is sheer harassment and practical denial of justice. After a private person has run to three different officers or official bodies then only the High Court comes in, if at all, and that too on a point of law. It should be remembered that the wealth tax officer has often to determine the value of properties worth lakhs of rupees and on points of fact there are appeals only to the first officer's superiors and there is no provision for a probe of facts by a court or judicial officer independent of the executive. A similar procedure is provided in the Gift Tax, the Expenditure Tax and Estate Duty Tax.

---

breed ruinous depressions and in the end the angry proletariat would revolt, would overthrow the exploiting classes and establish a communist society. This second prophecy has not materialized in almost all highly industrialized nations. On the contrary, several democratic States have provided security against unemployment, sickness and old age and in some countries employers have admitted representatives of workers into the management of industries. The 'Communist Manifesto' is the official Bible in the U. S. S. R. A recent work 'The 'Anatomy of the Soviet man' by Claus Mehnert, translated from German by Maurice Rosenbaum (1961), appears to the present author to contain a balanced and fair estimate of the working of Communism in U. S. S. R. He points out that the desire to rise socially and amass wealth and power is as common to the Soviet Union as to the rest of the world (p. 84), that the New Class does not constitute a bourgeoisie in the West European sense, that it is a State bourgeoisie, all members work for the State and are dependent on it (p. 73), that social distinctions are greater in U. S. S. R. than in U. S. A. (p. 109), that the greatest disproportion prevails between the incomes of Academicians, artists and writers on the one hand and ordinary men and workers on the other. It appears to the present author that Communism has so far been the best means for the exploitation of the proletariat.

No great Indian leader of the present day has offered a lucid and considered statement of what the philosophical foundations of Indian socialism are or should be, nor has any leader placed before the people a clear and full picture of the Indian socialistic pattern of the future in all its aspects. In the Plan structures welfare seems to be identified with bread, physical and material comforts. Marx denied God and advocated the forcible liquidation of the exploiting classes. Our Constitution does not mention God (except in schedule III about oaths and affirmations of Ministers and M. P.'s) nor does it emphasize moral and spiritual values, though the founding fathers of the U.S.A. prescribe (in the Declaration of American Independence) "All men are created equal. They are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights; among them are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness". Of course it is wrong and unscientific to say that all men are created equal if literally construed (as even children of the same parents are not equal in height, strength and mental equipment). All that is meant is that all men are equal in the eye of the law or have the same rights before the law. Truth and non-violence are not mentioned in our Constitution, though these were the basic principles from Upaniṣad and Smṛti times (as in Chāndogya III. 17.4, Manu X. 63, Yāj. I. 122) and for Gandhiji by whom all Congressmen and their leaders swear. Lands of thousands of men of the middle class of small means were taken away from them by changing the fundamental right to property bestowed by Art. 31 (as originally enacted), by preventing recourse to law courts and by giving illusory hopes of some compensation not yet even determined after several years. This may not be liquidation of opponents, yet it is a cruel thing all the same in the name of democracy and Welfare State.[2653]

Borrowing in the country itself and from foreign countries has been resorted to on an increasing scale.

Table 3 above (p. 1689–90) will convey some idea of the vast amounts of debts our country owes and will owe to U. S. A. and other countries. How and in how many years the nation will be able to pay back these debts with interest is to ordinary men a source of grave anxiety and an insoluble problem. Among the sources for the plan are included Provident Funds, Post Office savings bank accounts, National Plan Certificates &c. These are really debts, though not demandable on any one date or year. Deficit financing which did not form part of the central budget in past years has now become a regular item. The budget of the central Govt. for 1961–62 exceeds 1023 crores. For 1962–63 the revenues are estimated at 1329.87 crores of 2653. Vide a book called 'Social Welfare in India' issued on behalf of the Planning Commission, Government of India, New Delhi, 1960. People are likely to make a confusion between 'Welfare State' and 'Social Welfare'. The latter phrase refers to more specialized work for the weak or more vulnerable sections of the population (such as women, children, physically handicapped persons like the deaf, dumb and blind, mentally retarded, scheduled castes and tribes and backward classes). A Welfare State wants to change the pattern of life of the whole community or country. Our Constitution in Article 15 (paragraphs 3 and 4) authorizes the State to make special provisions for women and children and for the advancement of backward classes, scheduled castes and scheduled tribes and Article 16 para 4 authorizes the State to make provision for the reservation of appointments or posts in favour of any backward class of citizens. Articles 338–342 deal with the appointment of a special officer for the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes and with the appointment by the President of India of a Commission to report on the administration of scheduled areas and scheduled tribes and for specification from time to time of the castes, races or tribes in a list of the scheduled castes and tribes.

---

rupees and the expenditure at 1381.65 crores of rupees and it is announced that a total deficit of about 150 crores would have to be met partly by additional taxation of 60 crores and 80 lakhs of rupees. It must be remembered that most of these taxes are indirect and the major part of the income from such taxes is due to levies on articles of everyday necessity to common people who are already groaning under high prices of absolutely necessary commodities. The Bombay Government's Budget for 1962–63 intended to tax the poor man's bidis and gur (jaggery). About 7000 crores were put in the State sector in the 1st and 2nd Plan projects and 7500 crores are proposed to be spent in the Public sector in the 3rd plan period. Thus at the end of the 3rd Plan (in 1965–66) Government will have spent about 15000 crores of rupees. Tremendous power will be concentrated in the hands of ministers and the official bureaucracy. It is not generally known how Government has dealt with or will deal with this vast amount, what projects have been undertaken, which of them are completed, the cost of the completed projects, yearly yield from the projects that are completed, steps that are being taken to repay debts and to what extent. There are fervent appeals made by leaders to common people to co-operate with Govt. but the Govt. does not seem to be anxious to take people into confidence by widely circulating through newspapers, press-notes or otherwise information on the above mentioned matters. The vast sums spent on projects have caused inflation. Besides, during the two five year Plans population increased by 77 millions. This accentuated the problem of unemployment and on p. 47 of the book above referred to it is admitted that at the end of 10 years the backlog of unemployment is estimated at nine millions.

Sir W. Beveridge in 'Pillars of Security' (1944) names five giants with which humanity has to struggle viz. want, disease, ignorance, squalor and idleness. (p. 43) The last, that is, unemployment, should be the first point of attack. Art. 41 of our Constitution confers the right to work, to education and to public assistance in case of unemployment, old age, sickness and in certain other cases. It is not easy to give full employment for all. The State must try to limit numbers and provide not merely for literary education but also for vocational and technical training on a very extensive scale. Industrialization is necessary but it is not an unmixed blessing. Discussion of these matters would require far more space than can be afforded in this chapter.

One last word before taking leave of the subjects of Democracy, Welfare State, Socialistic pattern, legislation, planning for social and economic reconstruction. In the new set-up public administrators have become the brains behind the production of economic goods. They have, however, to do in the new sphere work which is entirely different from their traditional work in the Government of former times. Production activity in modern days demands bringing together and co-ordinating various skills and complex tasks to which administrators in Govt. offices are often strangers. How far they will be able to accomplish the new tasks undertaken by them is a matter which admits of no certain answer. But the most perplexing and baffling question is : Can all-comprehensive national plans under which the State either owns or controls most aspects of economic activities in Agriculture, Industry and Trade be implemented democratically by Parliamentary control ? The present author is very much afraid that the combination of economic and political power in the hands of a few ministers, high ranking officials and politicians would be so overpowering as to reduce the present Parliament (based on universal adult suffrage, only 23 percent of the population being literate) to a mere shadow and may in some respects at least narrow the liberties of men almost as much as the totalitarian State does.

Let us now turn to the reform and reorganization of Hindu Society and religion. The Portuguese came to India towards the end of the 15th century and acquired some territory on the Western coast of India. But owing to religious intolerance and persecution by them not much impression was made by them on Hindu society. But the case was different with the British, who did not imitate the Portuguese in the matter of religion, but wanted trade, wealth and power. On account of the British rule established over a large part of India from 1765 A. D. Indians came in contact with modern English literature and modern science. The earliest Indian reformer in modern times was a Bengali, Raja Ram Mohan Roy (1772–1833). He founded the Brāhmo Samāja in 1828. Some of the great names in the effort to reorganize and reform Hindu society and religion are those of Devendranath Tagore (1817–1905), Keshub Chandra Sen (1838–1884), Ishvarachandra Vidyasagar, Dayānand (1824–1883) who founded the Āryasamāja in 1877 and who regarded only the Vedas as authoritative, Rāmakrishna Paramahamsa (1834–1886) and his great disciple Swami Vivekānanda (1863–1902), who founded the Ramkrishna Mission for propagating Vedānta and doing charity work among the poor and the needy, M. G. Ranade (1842–1901) who was closely connected with the Prārthanāsamāja of Bombay, Agarkar, Phule, Rabindranath Tagore (1861–1941), Gandhiji (1869–1948), Dr. Karve (who founded the Women's University in 1916). Those interested may usefully read 'A Century of Social Reform' by S. Natarajan (Asia Publishing House, Bombay), G. N. Farquhar's 'Modern religious movements in India' (Macmillan, 1917), W. T. de Bary's 'Sources of Indian Tradition', New York, 1958 (pp. 604–659).

There is a great ferment of ideas in India at present. Many of our countrymen, whether young or old, do not derive any inspiration from their religion. It is not the fault of religion, but the fault lies with us and our predecessors who did not and do not exhibit to us the core of our culture and religion, do not sift the essentials and separate them from the unessential accretions due to superstitions and wrong emphasis. Ordinary men of to-day feel bewildered by the disagreements between scientific knowledge and the traditional beliefs. The result is that traditional values and codes of conduct are disintegrating and various views are being bandied about. There are now several distinct thought-forms on matters religious or spiritual. One class calls itself sanātanis whose view is that the traditional codes of conduct and beliefs were established by the all-wise sages of old and therefore modern half-baked reformers have no right at all to introduce changes in them. There is another class (allied to these) of those who have studied such modern sciences as eugenics and biology, who oppose change on the ground that our traditions embodied in the caste system and the restrictive rules about marriage are most scientific and no change should be made in them and if made disaster will follow. There is another class of people who say 'why do you quarrel with us? Time will bring about all necessary changes'. There are other people who go to the other extreme and deny the existence of any divine or spiritual realities and values in the world. Some believe in the efficacy of laws to introduce desired changes. There are people who say 'take the essential values of Indian culture as foundation and build thereon a structure in keeping with the needs of the times'. Hinduism has always been growing and changing traditions (vide for examples above pp. 1267–72 and 1471). The changes, however, were not brought about by legislation but were the work of commentators and digest-writers, the result being a bewildering variety of laws, customs and usages, religious and spiritual views in different parts of India. India, being always divided into many kingdoms before the advent of the British, there did not exist any legislative authority that could pass laws for the whole of India. Ancient and medieval Dharmaśāstra writers held the view that the king had no authority to interfere with Śāstric rules governing varṇas and castes. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III pp. 98–101 for the proposition that there was almost total absence of legislative power in the king according to Dharmaśāstra writers. Changes in practices and beliefs, however, did take place, but it was learned commentators that by various devices tried to support changes that had already taken place (vide pp. 1267–1272 above). There are really three well-marked classes of people, viz. Sanātanis or no-changers, the iconoclasts and those who want a synthesis of the old and the new.

The question is what should be conserved or discarded from the old practices and what new ideals or values should be added and assimilated. Reasons of space forbid saying much about values here. Values are largely moulded by environment. Only a century or two ago, slavery or racial inequality and pride, sweating children of tender age in factories were accepted in Christian countries as morally neutral or at least not disreputable. But at present some of these, if not all, are generally condemned as immoral. In India also values have changed from time to time. At one time animal sacrifices were quite reputable and of high other-worldly value. Later in the Upaniṣad times Ahiṁsā came to the fore. But there are certain values of our culture that have endured for three thousand years, viz. the consciousness that the whole world is the manifestation of the Eternal Essence, restraint of senses, charity and kindness. Now we are in an age of democracy and the important values of democracy are justice, liberty, equality and fraternity. But unfortunately many of those who sing paeans of democracy in India hanker after power and are in the grip of selfishness and hatred. Lord Acton wrote "All power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely." Kauṭilya said more than two thousand years ago that power warps (intoxicates) the mind. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III p. 114 and n. 151 for quotations.

Many young men have in these days hardly anything which they believe as worth striving for whatever the cost may be, and hence they have nothing to practise as an ideal. We have to preserve a religious spirit among common men and women, while getting rid of superstitions and beliefs opposed to all science and common sense. It is not the age-old principles of Hindu religion that are at fault, it is modern Hindu society that has to be reorganized, particularly when ours is now a democratic republic; and our leaders must make supreme efforts for many years to preserve equality in the midst of very great economic inequality, liberty which is likely to be overwhelmed by mighty parties and social groups and democracy against demagogues on the one hand and plutocrats on the other.

We must not shut our eyes to the peculiar and formidable difficulties of our country.[2654] Even the present India (i. e. Bhārat) is a vast country. There are in present India adherents of eight great religious systems (Hindu, Buddhist, Jain, Sikh, Moslem, Parsi, Christianity and Judaism), besides some tribes following none of these, but their own primitive systems; there are different States based on 14 different languages (mentioned in the 8th schedule to the Constitution of India), besides six Union territories and about 200 recognized dialects. These are likely to produce movements towards complete provincial autonomy and cultural separation. There are great contrasts among the inhabitants, at one end the primitive tribes and the people who were untouchables and at the other end highly educated men and, in between the two, groups of illiterate people numbering at present about 77 per cent of the whole population. After centuries of conquests by alien people our country has gained independence. This opens for us a new vista of creative thinking and work. We need not give up the basic principles of Hinduism, but should reorientate them to meet new and more complex conditions and work out a changed social order. Everybody says that what is wanted is an emotional integration of Indians and some have suggested that the caste system should be destroyed. If the caste system were a tangible thing it could have been easily and quickly destroyed. But it is not tangible. Legislation cannot destroy it. Only a change of heart with appropriate remedies and vast efforts persistently made over a long period may accomplish this Herculean task and not glib talk by people that hardly ever practise in their lives what they preach. In the present author's opinion States purely on linguistic basis should not have been created at all, but once it was resolved to create them, that should have been strictly adhered to and clear definite principles should have been laid down by the Central Government about assigning border villages to one State or another. The Central Government leadership has been most vacillating in this respect. For exmple, there were at least five different proposals put forward on Bombay City alone viz. a bilingual state (in which Bombay City was merged), a city State for Bombay alone with separate states of Gujarat and Maharashtra, central administration for five years, a return to the bilingual formula, and lastly separate Maharashtra (including Bombay City, Berar and Marathwada) and a separate State of Gujarat, with about 200 villages taken over from the Khandesh and Thana districts that had been part of Maharashtra for over one hundred years.

---

2654 For a somewhat captious and depressing portrayal of our difficulties by an apparently unsympathetic and unhelpful critic, vide 'India, the most dangerous decades' by Selig S. Harrison (Oxford University Press, 1960). The trend of the whole book is mainly to drive home one point viz. that democracy will not live or be successful in India. The book, it is believed, is mainly intended for non-Indian readers. The author insists too much on the obscurantist tendencies of some Indian people in the matter of caste. If he felt real sympathy and real friendship for the new democracy in India, he should have emphasized the points that make for unity in India, viz. the absence of an organized Church (like Protestant or the Roman Catholic Church), that Hinduism is a personal religion, that Hindus can easily adapt themselves to the requirements of modern democracy as shown by the three elections held so far without any serious disturbances when there were millions upon millions of voters, men and women. If he really wanted to help the Indian people, he should have stressed matters that favour democracy and not constantly harped on North India and South India, on Hindi and anti-Hindi, many States and language difficulties.

The caste system, the joint family system and the laws of succession and inheritance that are peculiar to Hindus are really social matters and not religious matters at all. Our Constitution and recent legislation deal with all the three, holding that these are social matters. As shown above, the Constitution abolished untouchability, the Hindu Marriage Act has done away with all prohibitions against marriages between persons of different castes and a Hindu can have marriage relations with any Hindu (including Buddhist, Jain and Sikh) and can take any Hindu woman as spouse subject only to the rules of sapiṇḍa relationship and prohibited degrees for marriage. The Hindu Succession Act has practically done away with the joint family system as shown above, though it has not been expressly abrogated.

What is wanted is not mere declamations against the caste system and fervent appeals for emotional integration of all Indians but a comprehensive code or scheme of beliefs and day to day conduct. The present writer cannot enter here into a detailed code or scheme which might require a volume by itself but some concrete proposals if set out here may induce more competent writers to give better and more exhaustive patterns. Let there be churning of thoughts. It is possible that in the beginning one may meet with formidable and fearful difficulties as in the mythological churning of the ocean, but let us hope that, even after the emergence of frightful things, the final result would be blissful, as in the churning of the ocean poison emerged but the whole effort was crowned with the appearance of amṛta at the end.

We must not despair of solving our difficult problems. Despair means destruction and death. We must not lose courage by the condition of our country for the last few centuries. We should rather look to our achievements during about three thousand years and take to heart the following advice of ancient sages of the Dharmśāstras such as that of Manu. Manu says (IV.137)[2655] 'one should not despise oneself on account of previous failures; one should seek (make efforts for securing) prosperity till one's death and should not regard prosperity as unattainable.' To the same effect is Yāj. when he says 'One should never despise a learned brāhmaṇa, a serpent, a kṣatriya (a king) or oneself; one should desire to secure prosperity till one's death and should not touch (i. e. make public) another's weak points (misdeeds &c.)' We are over 43 crores of people, we are proud of the achievements of our forefathers. If we work hard in a concerted and intelligent effort for years with the sole object of bringing about the highest development of the country and without ambitions of securing individual profit or fame there is no reason why our country should not outstrip or at least equal other countries in the world. The Īśopaniṣad 2 (Vāj. S. 40.2) ordains for all common men 'one should wish to live for a hundred years, always doing here (in this world) actions (prescribed by the śāstra).' The Ait. Br. (chap. 33.3), in the story of Śunaḥśepa insists on men being always active and emphasizes that prosperity does not come to him who does not work hard (nānāśrāntāya śrīrastīti). So early as the Ṛgveda (IV. 33.11) it is emphasized that Gods do not befriend anyone who has not become tired by hard work (na ṛte śrāntasya sakhyāya devāḥ).

---

2655. नात्मानमवमन्येत पूर्वाभिरसमृद्धिभिः। आ मृत्योः श्रियमन्विच्छेन्नैनां मन्येत दुर्लभाम्॥ मनु. IV. 137; विप्राहिक्षत्रियात्मानो नावज्ञेयाः कदाचन। आ मृत्योः श्रियमाकाङ्क्षेत्क्षांचिन्मर्माणि सूदयेत्॥ या. I. 153.

In 1934 some persons under the guidance of Swāmī Kevalānanda Sarasvatī of Wai (Satara District) started a society which later came to be named 'Dharmanirṇaya-maṇḍala'[2656] (society for arriving at definite conclusions on matters of Dharma). The Swamī was a very learned man and a Sannyāsin, did not know English, but he held very modern views. There were fourteen original founder members of whom the present author is one. From 1934 to 1959 eleven sessions attended by hundreds of people were held at Thana, Poona (twice), Lonavla (thrice), Ahmednagar, Badalapur (Dist. Thana), Vardhā (in Berar), Akolā (in Berar), Wai and Bombay. At the different sessions resolutions were passed (in all 82) on several social and religious matters and a committee was appointed to prepare model prayogas (procedures) for Sandhyā, congregational (Sāmudāyika) prayer, upanayana, marriage, antyeṣṭi (funeral rites), śrāddha, remarriage (of widows), re-conversion to Hinduism &c. That Committee prepared under the guidance of Swāmī Kevalānanda such prayogas shorn of unnecessary details and with translations in Marathi, which can be had from Mr. Kokaje of Lonavla. Among the resolutions the following deserve special mention: usages have been changed from time to time by former learned men (śiṣṭas) and the learned men of the present day have the authority to introduce changes in usages as the present circumstances may require; that the untouchability of the people of certain castes be abolished (Art. 17 of the Constitution of India subsequently did this); that those sub-castes that have similar usages, saṁskāras and rules about food should merge and such merger is not against Dharmaśāstra; there is no objection to any Hindu sitting in the same row with other persons of different varṇas provided vegetarians are served vegetarian eatables; that Hindus including untouchables are entitled to study the Veda and have upanayana performed with Vedic mantras and priests conversant with the upanayana procedure should be ready to do so, if invited; if any one takes to another religion owing to force or fraud or of his free will and wants to revert to the Hindu fold he should be allowed to come in after proper expiation and after undergoing a simple vidhi[2657]; marriages of spouses of the same gotra and pravara should be allowed provided there is no bar on the ground of sapiṇḍa relationship (vide Hindu Marriage Act, 25 of 1955, sec. 5 items 4 and 5); that divorce be allowed among the castes in which it is not allowed at present on the ground of conversion to another religion of one of the spouses &c. (almost the same grounds as in sec. 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act of 1955); a Hindu widow succeeding as heir to her husband takes an absolute estate except when any of the following relatives of the husband are alive, viz. daughter, daughter's son, mother, father, brother, brother's son, paternal grand-parents, paternal first cousin (vide Hindu Succession Act, 30 of 1956 sec. 14 which goes further by omitting the near relatives specified above). Most of the decisions mentioned above were proclaimed from ten to twenty years before our Constitution came into operation.

2656. The original name was 'तत्त्वनिष्ठ-परिवर्तनवादिपरिषद्' (Assembly of people who favoured the making of changes based on some fundamental principles). Seven of the original fourteen members died subsequently viz. Svāmī Kevalānanda, Mahāmahopādhyāya Śrīdharaśāstri Pāṭhak (who became a Sannyāsin under the name Saṅkarānanda-bhāratī), Sadāśivaśāstri Bhide, Dr. K. L. Daftari, Mr. J. S. Karandikar (editor of the Poona 'Kesarī' newspaper), Mr. C. M. Saptarshi (Advocate, Ahmednagar) and Prajñāneśvarayati, Tarkatīrtha Raghunāthaśāstrī Kokaje of Lonavla (Dist. Poona) was the Secretary. Among the other original members are Mr. N. G. Chapekar (a nonagenarian, retired First Class Subjudge), a scholar of wide reading including Vedic literature, Dharmaśāstras, sociological studies and Tārkatīrtha Lakṣmaṇaśāstri Joshi of Wai, who knows English well, studied all Darśanas and Śāstras under Swāmī Kevalānanda and is a critical scholar.

Among the standing complaints against brāhmaṇas one has been that they debarred millions of people called 'Śūdras' from Vedic studies. Therefore, the Maṇḍala announced that all Hindus (including the so called untouchables) should observe the worship of the sun, repetition of the Gāyatrī-mantra (Ṛg. III. 62.10, Tai. S. I. 5. 6. 4, Vāj. S. III. 35) and reading or recital of the Bhagavadgītā (whole or part) every day, since these common observances would help in creating the sentiment of cultural equality among all Hindus. The procedure of morning and evening (sandhyā) worship is brief and is quoted below.[2658]

---

2657. Vide H. of Dh. Vol. IV pp. 828-830 where the 'Hindūkaraṇavidhi', prepared by the Dharmanirṇaya-maṇḍala for re-admission to Hinduism is set out in Sanskrit. This re-admission vidhi (in Sanskrit) has been translated into Marathi and Hindi.

In order to cultivate a sense of unity among all Hindus (including the so-called untouchables), the Maṇḍala prepared a congregational prayer (to be recited by all Hindus in a congregation once in a month) consisting of the following eleven passages culled from the Vedic literature, viz. Atharvaveda X. 8.1, Ṛg. X. 82.3, I. 164.16, Vāj. S. 25.21, Ṛg. X. 121. 10, Tai. Ār. 4.42.5, the Gāyatrimantra, Bṛ. Up. I. 3.28 (asato mā sad-gamaya, tamaso mā jyotir-gamaya, mṛtyor māmṛtam gamaya), Ṛg. X. 191.2–4. In many villages some people tried to introduce this congregational prayer, but after some time most people complained that they found it difficult to commit to memory and recite the Vedic passages and requested that similar congregational prayers be prepared in Hindi and therefore the Maṇḍala prepared a brief prayer of five verses in Hindi.

The above lines would only briefly illustrate how we would have to proceed if we want an emotional integration of all our countrymen, particularly on the social and religious plane. But we must not forget what the foundation of our culture and civilization has been throughout the past ages. Ancient sages laid the foundation by insisting upon this that there is and must be harmony between man's spirit and the spirit of the world and man's endeavour should be to realize in his actions and in his life this harmony and unity.[2659] The Upaniṣads teach that man gains by giving up (by renunciation) and exhorts man not to covet another's wealth (Īśopaniṣad I 'tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasya svid dhanam ').

2658. प्रातः स्नात्वा पूर्वाभिमुखः, सायं हस्तौ पादौ च प्रक्षाल्य पश्चिमाभिमुखः आसने उपविश्य आचम्य प्राणानायम्य श्रीपरमेश्वरप्रीत्यर्थं प्रातः सन्ध्योपासनं करिष्ये इति प्रातः सङ्कल्पं कुर्यात्। श्रीपरमेश्वरप्रीत्यर्थं सायंसन्ध्योपासनं करिष्ये इति सायम्। ततः अर्घ्यप्रदानम्। ओं भूर्भुवः स्वः। तत्सवितुर्वरेण्यं भर्गो देवस्य धीमहि। धियो यो नः प्रचोदयात्। श्रीसूर्याय इदमर्घ्यं दत्तं न मम इति त्यागः। इति त्रिवारम्। अथ प्रातरुत्थाय सायमासीनः अष्टोत्तरशतं दशवारं वा—ओं भूर्भुवः स्वः तत्सवितुर्वरेण्यं भर्गो देवस्य धीमहि। धियो यो नः प्रचोदयात्॥ इति मन्त्रस्य जपं कुर्यात्। तत उपस्थानम्। पूषन्नेकर्षे यम सूर्य प्राजापत्य व्यूह रश्मीन् समूह तेजः। यत्ते रूपं कल्याणतमं तत्ते पश्यामि। योऽसावसौ पुरुषः सोहमस्मि (ईशावास्योपनिषद् 16) इति। ततः कर्मसमाप्तिं सोदकं ब्रूयात्। अनेन सन्ध्योपासनाख्येन कर्मणा भगवान्परमेश्वरः प्रीयताम्। ओं तत्सत्। इति द्विराचामेत्।

Two lines referring to Gotra, Pravara, Veda, Śākhā and Sūtra and to making an obeisance to Guru are omitted.

2659. Many thoughtful men in the West have been influenced immensely by the advaita Vedānta and its emphasis on sound moral

(Continued on next page)

The Bhagavadgītā emphasized doing one's duty without hankering for the rewards thereof. Science cannot answer such fundamental questions as occur to every thoughtful person viz. what is the ultimate cause, is it brahman, what is our origin, by what are we sustained, what is our destiny (goal), being influenced by what do we persist in paths leading to pain and misery (Śv. Up. I. 1.). They are answered by the ancient[2660] Upaniṣads, but not by science so far.

The chief aim of Indian culture and civilization was not to attain military and political power over other countries and peoples; it neglected to organize Indians for offensive and defensive purposes, nor encouraged the starting of immense corporations for the acquisition of wealth. But in these days of keen competition between nations and peoples we must not only keep a vigilant eye on the eternal principles of our culture but also on the worldly happiness of our countrymen in the midst of the warring elements in the world. Our people often took and take to premature vairāgya (renunciation), while Western nations and men have been laying for the last few centuries great store by extreme activity. Now that our leaders are thinking of remodelling our society and spiritual life they must cultivate qualities whereby they at least will be sthitaprajña i. e. fully developed or ideal souls (Bhagavadgītā II. 55–68) or men of God (Gītā XIII. 13–18). Social reforms and politics have to be preached through our age-old religion and philosophy.[2661] If a large majority of our people and the leaders throw away or neglect preparation before one can realize the One Essence underlying the universe; vide 'What Vedānta means to me a Symposium edited by John Yale (Rider & Co., London, 1961), in which the views of 16 writers are set out. That of Aldous Huxley summarizes (pp. 19-20) the Upaniṣadic doctrine in the same words as on p. 1631 above. The same summary he gave in his novel 'Time must have a stop' 1945, p. 289.

---

(Continued from last page)

2660. ब्रह्मवादिनो वदन्ति। किं कारणं ब्रह्म कुतः स्म जाता जीवाम केन क्व च संप्रतिष्ठाः। अधिष्ठिताः केन सुखेतरेषु वर्तामहे ब्रह्मविदो व्यवस्थाम्। श्वेताश्व. उप. I. 1.; को न आत्मा, किं ब्रह्मेति। छा. उप. V, 11. 1.

2661. Our politicians seem at present to be treading the path humorously quoted from an American writer long before Independence by Prime Minister Nehru in his Autobiography 'Politics is the gentle art of getting votes from the poor and campaign funds from the rich by promising to protect each from the other' (p. 131). In the same work Panditji says that Gandhiji's reference to Rāmarājya as a golden age jarred on his ears and that his close associates half humorously said that when svarājya (Independence) came these fads must not be encouraged (pp. 72–73).

religion and spirituality altogether, the probability is that we shall lose both spiritual life and social betterment. This is not the place to say more on this point. Vide pp. 1478–79 above for the sound moral preparation required before one realizes the pervasion of everything by brahman and pp. 1623 ff. for the proposition that the One Principle is variously named by sages, which taken together lead to universal brotherhood, kindliness and tolerance. From time immemorial all religious cults in India (except Buddhism and Jainism) recognized that there was One Principle (or Deity of some kind) and in the immortality of the soul. The tremendous march of science and mastery over some of the forces of nature has gone to the heads of many modern men and made them conceited. Science can disclose to us at the most secondary causes; but it has to be silent as to the ultimate cause and the ultimate destiny of man. It cannot tell us what the purpose of life is, it cannot tell us anything about moral values. The present and the following generations have to be trained in an environment where spiritual life, love of truth, sense of and belief in the brotherhood of man or at least of our own countrymen, love of peace and sympathy for the oppressed would be held to be supreme virtues to be attempted by all people.

It is most difficult to suggest in a brief space a code of conduct for all the millions of India. But for men of limited education and busy life a few suggestions by way of illustrations may be set out. The idea of pollution by the touch of men belonging to certain castes must be given up and much more therefore the idea of pollution by the mere shadow of certain people.[2662] Swāmi Vivekānanda (Works Vol. V. p. 152) was so angered as to say "The religion of India is at present dont touchism". Reason and science must be resorted to for checking or abandoning dogmas based on ancient authority. The myths and legends of the Purāṇas on the origin of the universe, about eclipses and so forth that are not credible in the light of 2662. Vide H. of Dh of Vol. II p, 173–174 on the Smṛti rules about shadow (chāyā) showing gradual excess of exclusiveness in later times. मक्षिका विप्रुषश्छाया गौरश्वः सूर्यरश्मयः। रजो भूर्वायुरग्निश्च स्पर्शे नैष्यानि निर्दिशेत्॥ मनु V. 133, विष्णु 23.51.

---

Vide above p. 242 where it is established that long before the first half of the 6th century, Indian astronomers had arrived at the correct causes of solar and lunar eclipses but even up to this day educated men often act in such a way that it seems that they believe in the demon Rāhu being the cause of eclipses.

science should not be included in the religious creeds of these days and should be treated as mere myths and legends. Many Christians even in these days (and most Hindus and Moslems) believe in a heaven above and a hell or hells below. But Śabara[2663] (in the first centuries of the Christian era) holds that heaven is not a place (vide pp. 1211-1215 above). Therefore, heaven and hell as described in ancient Sanskrit works cannot be made an article of faith for modern men. It is often said that myths may be represented as facts to simple people for the sake of beneficial results (e. g. for inducing them to perform sacrifices or to observe rules of morality &c.). But this is not proper as there are dangers in this. In these days of growing popular education, when the myth becomes exposed, the men who once believed it not only give up that myth but also might give up everything contained in ancient works as unbelievable. Space does not permit any elaborate cataloguing of what should be given up and what striven for in these days. Values, aims and institutions that were accepted by almost all people only a few decades ago are now challenged and new patterns are in process of being moulded. The chief catalytic agencies are modern science and Western thought and literature. The old structure of beliefs is tottering and laxity in morals has made great headway. But whatever happens, we must so regulate society that the family as a social unit[2664] is preserved and safeguarded, every child of whatever class or race must have equal opportunities of education, man's daily work must be held to be divine work and worship, great inequalities of wealth and possessions must be eliminated.

Swāmī Vivekānanda uttered the following exhortation long ago "The ignorant Indian, the poor and destitute Indian, the Brahman Indian, the Pariah Indian is my brother." "Repeat and pray day and night 'O Lord of Gaurī! make me a man'" quoted in "Sources of Indian Tradition" by W. T. de Bary and others (New York, 1958) p. 659. Vide Atharvaveda XII. 1.45 for universal brotherhood of all men whose mother is the Earth.

2663. Vide above pp. 1224-25 for criticism of Śabara's view that Veda invented stories that never happened.

2664. In 'This I believe' (philosophies of 100 thoughtful men and women in all walks of life) edited by E. P. Morgan (London, 1953), Sir Charles Darwin (author of 'New conception of matter and the next million years' and grandson of the author of 'the Origin of species') emphasizes 'the importance of family as the continuing unit of human life' (p. 30).

This volume (the last in the History of Dharmaśāstra) may be brought to a close with a quotation from the Kaṭhopaniṣad[2665] and another from Rabindranath Tagore's Gītāñjali :

'Get up, awake and having secured highly gifted (teachers) understand (the Truth); the sharp edge of a razor is difficult to pass over; thus the wise say that the path (to Realization) of Self) is hard' (Kaṭhopaniṣad);

Where the mind is without fear and the head is held high;

Where knowledge is free;

Where the world has not been broken up into fragments by narrow domestic walls;

Where words come out from the depths of truth;

Where tireless striving stretches its arms toward perfection;

Where the clear stream of reason has not lost its way into the dreary desert sand of dead habit;

Where the mind is led forward by thee into ever-widening thought and action—

Into that heaven of freedom, my Father, let my country awake.

2665. उत्तिष्ठत जाग्रत प्राप्य वरान्निबोधत। क्षुरस्य धारा निशिता दुरत्यया दुर्गं पथस्तत्कवयो वदन्ति॥ कठोप. III. 14.

EPILOGUE

Many friends and well-wishers of the author and some readers of the volumes of the History of Dharmaśāstra have often (personally and by correspondence) pressed him to furnish some biographical details about himself, about the circumstances in which he launched on this undertaking, about the preparations he made, about the time and labour that this undertaking cost him and also what money it brought to him (a few asked even this).

To write an autobiography is a most difficult and delicate matter. In an autobiography one has often to use the words 'I', 'Me', 'My' etc. and the writer is liable to be charged with egotism. If he is very frank about his own failings and faults, he may be accused of exhibitionism. I do not propose to say much about my parents or my ancestors or about my marriage and family life or my likes and dislikes. I had my own share of anxieties, troubles and sorrows, but I shall not say much about them, since the blessings that were showered on me far outweighed the anxieties and sorrows. A brief account of some aspects of my long life may, I hope, be of some interest and help to those who have to face problems similar to those that I had to face.

I was born on 7th May 1880 in a village called Peḍhem or Paraśurāma [because it has a large and famous temple of Paraśurāma, an avatāra of Viṣṇu and the patron saint of several brāhmaṇa sub-castes (such as the Citpāvana)] near Chiplun in the Ratnagiri District at my maternal uncle's house. My father belonged to a priestly family in a village called Murḍem near Khed in the Ratnagiri District. My father had learnt by heart a great deal of the Ṛgveda and was being trained for priesthood till the age of 18. He did not like the profession of a priest and left for Poona to learn English along with a friend of his boyhood, the late Shankar Balkrishna Dixit, who later on became famous for his Marathi work on Indian Astronomy which was admired by Dr. Thibaut. Mr. Dixit and my father passed the Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University in 1873. My father studied for the Pleader's examination held in those days by the Bombay High Court, passed it and began to practise as a Taluka lawyer at Dapoli in the Ratnagiri District from 1878. Besides Vedic lore, my father studied the principal Upaniṣads and the Gītā and had many of the former by heart. He practised as a lawyer for about forty years, then retired and passed away in 1925. We were nine children, six brothers and three sisters. I was the eldest of the sons and one sister was older than myself. In my early boyhood my father taught me some elements of astrology and advised me to commit to memory the verses of Amarakośa (of which I had 400 by heart before I was 12 years of age). In 1891 I joined the S. P. G. Mission's English High School at Dapoli and passed the Bombay University's Matriculation Examination in 1897 and stood high among the successful candidates. While at school, I began to suffer from hyper-acidity, consequent acute stomach pains and vomiting at the age of 16 and had to leave school for nearly a year. At the time when I passed the Matriculation there was an epidemic of Bubonic Plague in Bombay and Poona, where there was high mortality. My father was not willing to send me (whose health was already delicate) to those places where alone College education could then be had. So he asked me to study law under him. I studied it for two weeks, but being repelled soon by the dry study of law, I wrote a letter to Dr. Machichan, who was then Principal of the Wilson College in Bombay (and reputed to be very kind), conducted by the Scottish Mission, asking him whether I could be enrolled as a student in absentia. He asked me to send Rs. 36/–, a term's fee, get myself registered as a student and stated that as the epidemic was at its height the University might condone absence. The Bombay University later on did so. I did not attend College in the first term. The epidemic abated, I joined College in June and appeared for the first year's examination of the Bombay University in November 1898 (which was then called the Previous Exam.) and was awarded a scholarship of Rs. 175 and a prize of Rs. 100 for being the first among the students whose second language was Sanskrit. This was the first lucky accident in my life. Life is a mysterious business. It is full of lucky incidents or chances and one must be able to take advantage of them by one's own efforts. There have been many such incidents and disinterested friendships in my life and I have hardly ever had an enemy to my knowledge in the whole of my rather long life. The ailment of my boyhood pursued me at college, pursues me even now and has become worse, but I did not allow myself to be much disturbed by it, controlled my diet and led a regular and strict life. At the second year's examination in Arts (called Intermediate) I was awarded a scholarship of Rs. 180

(lump sum) for standing first among students taking Sanskrit as a second language. Two years afterwards I appeared for the B. A. examination in 1901 and was awarded the Bhau Daji Prize for proficiency in Sanskrit and stood first among the students of the Wilson College. An idea about how delicate I was in 1901 when I was 21 years old may be had from the fact that, though I was 5 feet 4 inches in height, I weighed only 98 pounds. After the B. A. examination I was a Dakṣiṇā Fellow at the Wilson College for two years and lectured to the first two years' classes at the Wilson College on Sanskrit about three hours a week. In 1902, I passed the First LL. B. examination in the First class and in 1903 the M. A. examination and was awarded the Zala Vedānta Prize of Rs. 400. The peculiarity of this prize is that the paper set is in Sanskrit, the answers are to be written in Sanskrit in three hours, the chief examiner was to be a Śāstri who was proficient in Śāṅkara Vedānta and had studied it under the old traditional methods. As my father had yet to spend for the education of several sons he asked me either to enter the Education Department as a High School teacher or to become a lawyer in a subordinate court. I did not like the latter idea and applied to the Director of Public Instruction, Poona, for appointment as a teacher in a Govt. High School. Here again Dr. Machichan helped me by recommending me highly to the D. P. I. I was appointed a teacher in the Govt. High School at Ratnagiri in August 1904 on a salary of Rs. 60 per month raised to Rs. 65 per month after a few months (having been an M. A. with five scholarships and prizes in Sanskrit). I was at the Ratnagiri Govt. High School for three years. I appeared for the S. T. C. (Secondary Teacher's Certificate) Examination held by the Department in 1905 and stood first in the whole of the Bombay Presidency (including Sind in those days). In the same year I submitted an essay on 'Aryan Manners and Morals as depicted in the Epics' for the V. N. Mandlik Gold Medal of the Bombay University and was awarded a prize of books worth Rs. 150. For this essay I read both the Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyaṇa. Till now I have read the Mahābhārata thrice and I have yet got the notebooks of extensive extracts, particularly from the Mahābhārata. In the next year I appeared for a Departmental Examination for Honours in Teaching and secured first class in 'Logic in relation to teaching'. The same year (1906) I submitted a paper on 'the History of Alaṅkāra Literature' for the V. N. Mandlik Gold Medal again and was awarded the medal. At the end of this year I lost my younger brother by T. B. I was transferred at my own request to the Elphinstone High School in Bombay as 5th assistant on Rs. 75 in April 1907. There were over 40 teachers in that High School and about 750 students from the 4th to the 7th standard. I was made Head Sanskrit teacher (there were three teachers of Sanskrit and 12 classes in Sanskrit). Towards the end of 1907 the post of Assistant to the Professor of Sanskrit at the Poona Deccan College (on Rs. 125 p. m.) fell vacant and I applied for the post. But I was not appointed and another person who was an M. A. in Sanskrit, but had won no prize, scholarship or medal in Sanskrit at any examination from the Matriculation to the M. A. and who was 9th Assistant in the Elphinstone High School (where I was 5th assistant) was appointed to the post, because he was a favourite student of the D. P. I. when the latter was Principal of the Deccan College. I sent a protest through the Principal of the High School. I was informed that a competent authority in Sanskrit had recommended that the person chosen was superior to me in Sanskrit and when I requested the D. P. I. to let me know the name of the competent authority I was informed that my letter was an impertinent one and deserved no reply. This added insult to injury. This happened in December 1907. I decided to appear for the 2nd LL. B. examination in November 1908 and then to leave Govt. service. My supersession created a great deal of criticism in the Department and almost all persons sympathised with me and helped me in various ways. I appeared for the 2nd LL. B. examination in November 1908 and passed it. This created an impression in the Education Department that I meant serious business. Therefore, as a sop to my injured feelings, I was appointed to act as Professor of Sanskrit at the Elphinstone College from February to April 1909 in place of Prof. S. R. Bhandarkar who had been deputed on some Govt. work. I reverted to the High School at the end of April 1909 and began to cast about where to practise as a lawyer. I was not inclined to practise as a lawyer in subordinate courts and decided that, if I left service, I would practise on the Appellate side of the High court, where it is a battle of wits and of hard work and one had not to do what a lawyer practising in the subordinate courts had to do. At that time, the late Mr. Daji Abaji Khare was almost at the top of the Appellate side Bar (called Vakils of the High Court). He had some large estates at Dapoli (my native place) and knew my father and myself. I approached him for advice. He told me that I must have with me at least two thousand rupees in cash, if I wanted to practise in the High Court and to stick to it. I had then not a pie with me and my father who was already sixty years old and had to educate other sons, declined to help. In less than two years from June 1909 I brought out two school books and one annotated book in Sanskrit (the Sāhityadarpaṇa) for College students and was also appointed an examiner in Sanskrit at the Previous and Intermediate Arts Examinations. I thus collected two thousand rupees, resigned from Govt. service at the end of June 1911 and applied for a Sanad (after paying Rs. 500 as fee for enrolment as a Vakil of the High Court of Bombay) with a certificate of good moral character from Mr. Khare and was enrolled as a Vakil of the High Court on 5th July 1911 when I was in my 32nd year.

Work was slow in coming and the first two years were rather bleak. Having not much to do, I appeared for the LL. M. examination in Hindu and Mahomedan law in 1912 and passed it. From 1911 to about 1918 I brought out every year some book or books such as the Kādambarī of Bāṇa in three parts with ample notes, the Harṣacarita in two parts, and the Uttararāmacarita. I also conducted a private law class for coaching students for the High Court Vakil's examination (in which 60 percent marks were required for passing). This brought in a steady income of about Rs. 100 per month for four years from 1913 to 1917 and, what was more important, this task of teaching single-handed the vast field of law made me proficient in all complicated legal topics. In the meantime, in 1913 I was appointed Wilson Philological Lecturer to deliver six lectures on Sanskrit, Prakrit and allied languages for a lump sum of Rs. 750. In 1913 I became an ordinary member of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society and a life member (by paying a lump sum of Rs. 500) in January 1915. At the beginning of 1915 I was appointed by the Bombay University a Springer Research Scholar for two years on a salary of Rs. 100 per month, the subject of research being 'Ancient Geography of Mahārāṣṭra' (part published in JBBRAS, Vol. XXIV for 1917, pp. 613-657). In 1916 I worked as Honorary Professor of Sanskrit at the Wilson College, when Prof. S. R. Bhandarkar, who was permanent Professor, fell ill, and I lectured for three hours a week to B. A. classes on the most difficult part of Rāmānuja's Bhāṣya on Vedāntasūtra.

In 1917 June I was appointed as a Professor of Law in the Govt.

Law College at Bombay. This was again a case of an unexpected event. The Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court had recommended for a vacancy in the law college two names from among the Vakils on the Appellate side Bar of the High Court, one a very senior gentleman and myself who had less than six years' practice. The senior gentleman for some reason (not given out) refused at the last moment and on 20th June, the day on which the Law College was to open, I received a wire in the Vakil's room from Government stating that Govt. proposed to appoint me as a Professor of Law from that day and that if I agreed I should see the Principal. This was a comfortable job, the salary being Rs. 350 a month and the duties light viz. three or four hours per week in the evening from 5-45 p.m. to 6-45 p. m. I was Professor of Law for six years (1917-1923). Hardly any Vakil with less than six years' practice on the Appellate Side of the High Court had been appointed before me as Professor of Law.

I had undertaken about 1911 an edition of the Vyavahāramayūkha with explanatory notes on the advice of Prof. S. R. Bhandarkar who was one of the General Editors of the Bombay Govt.'s Sanskrit Series. But, owing to fluctuations in my own fortunes, I had neglected the work and had almost decided to give up the undertaking altogether. The Bombay Govt.'s Sanskrit Series came to be transferred by Govt. to the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute that had been started in Poona in 1917. The authorities of the Institute pressed me to carry out my undertaking. I agreed and began to read the vast Dharmaśāstra Literature for that purpose. The edition of the Vyavahāramayūkha of Nīlakaṇṭha (text based on three printed editions and eight mss., an Introduction of 47 pages and exhaustive notes) was published in 1926 by the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona. In the brief Preface to that edition of 1926, I announced that I had undertaken to write the History of Dharmaśātra Literature.

Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar had expressed a desire to donate his large library of thousands of books to some Institute that would properly house them, take care of them and make it a centre of Sanskrit studies. Dr. Belvalkar, Dr. Gune and several others supported the idea and about thirty people including myself contributed Rs. 500 each for the purchase of a big vacant plot of 30 acres in Poona and, after setting aside nearly half of the purchased plot for the Institute to be named after Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar, distributed the rest among the original contributors as plot-holders. The public and Govt. supported the Institute and the famous Tatas donated money to construct a suitable building. The first project undertaken was the publication of the critical edition of the Mahābhārata. Govt. made grants, transferred the Bombay Sanskrit Series to the Institute, the Chief of Aundh promised a lakh of rupees for the Mahābhārata edition with pictures and later the Nizam of Hyderabad contributed a large sum for building a guest-house for scholars from India and abroad.

The first volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra, which was published in 1930, deals with the chronology and relative importance of famous and less known writers and works and covers 760 pages. As I regarded myself as one of the original founders of the B. O. R. I. and as I was a successful lawyer on the Appellate side of the High Court, I offered the volume to that Institute for publication without any agreement about payment. The Preface to the first volume makes it clear that I intended to finish the whole history in two volumes and that even at that time I suffered from a painful complaint (duodenal ulcer) which has dogged my footsteps throughout up to this day. The second volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra covering 1368 pages (including about 300 pages on Śrauta ritual, not included in the original plan) was published in June 1941 (i. e. eleven years after the publication of the first volume), when I was already 61 years old and pursued by an implacable ailment. The third volume containing 1088 pages was published in October 1946 and deals with only three topics 'Rājadharma, Vyavahāra, and Sadācāra' (customs and customary law). On account of the 2nd world war there was paper shortage and the finances of B. O. R. I. were at a low ebb. I had therefore to advance three thousand rupees to the B. O. R. I. and had to purchase paper worth several hundred rupees for expediting the printing, in view of the fact that I was in my 67th year and that my physical condition was causing anxiety. The 4th volume is spread over 926 pages, was published in October 1953 (when I was in my 74th year) and deals with Pātaka (sins), Prāyaścitta (expiation), Karmavipāka (fruition of evil deeds), Antyeṣṭi (rites on death), Aśauca (impurity on death and birth), Śuddhi (purification), Śrāddha, Tīrthayātrā (pilgrimages to sacred places).

The (fifth and) last volume deals with numerous topics, as the Table of Contents will show. The first part of 718 pages dealing with Vrata (sacred vows, observances and festivals) and Kāla was separately published in 1958 (as I had then an attack of heart trouble, and it was thought that I might not survive, being more than 78 years old at that time). The second part now printed deals with Śāntis, Purāṇas in relation to Dharmaśāstra, causes of the disappearance of Buddhism from India, Tantras and Dharmaśāstra, Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Tarka and Dharmaśāstra, Pūrvamīmāṁsā and Dharmaśāstra, Cosmology, doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma, dominant characteristics of our Indian culture and civilization and future trends. This volume has been in the press for over five years and has involved an enormous amount of varied reading and writing for over eight years from 1953.

In describing how and in how many years the H. of Dh. developed, I have not said anything about the environment in which I had to work. From about 1918 I began to have good work as a lawyer. I not only conducted cases in the Bombay High Court, but I appeared before the District Courts of the mofussil in several districts such as Khandesh, Nagar, Poona, Sholapur, Satara, and Ratnagiri. I owe a great deal to my college friends, to my students that passed the High Court Vakil's examination after attending my private law class and to Mr. M. K. Athavle of Sangli and Mr. C. M. Saptarishi of Ahmednager for sending me much legal work.

I took part in many of the intellectual activities in Bombay and Poona. I was a member of the Senate of the Bombay University from 1919 to 1928, I have been throughout a member of the Regulating Council of the Bhandarkar Institute and of its other bodies. I was closely connected for over 40 years with the Marathi Granthasaṅgrahālaya of Bombay in various capacities and with the Brāhmaṇasabhā of Bombay in many capacities as Chairman of the Managing Committee, a Trustee for 21 years and Adviser from 1918 to this day.

I had argued gratis several cases for some societies and individuals. Mr. Javdekar, lawyer of Dhulia, espoused the cause of people who had grievances against the Indian Railways. I conducted many such railway cases and cases of poor and helpless people. One of these latter was that of a poor untonsured brāhmaṇa widow who had been prevented by the priests in the temple of Vithoba at Pandharpur from offering worship to the image by placing her head at the feet of the image (because she was untonsured) as all Hindus, male or female, of all castes were allowed to do. I had to go to Pandharpur thrice at my own expense and spent in all seven days in court. The court decided in favour of the widow. The case is referred to in the History of Dharmaśāstra, vol. II p. 593 and the arguments are set out on pp. 587–593 of the volume.

Another case that I conducted gratis is that of the Deccan College, Poona. This College was started by Govt. but a Parsi Baronet, Sir Jamsetji, made in the early sixties of the 19th century a munificent donation of about two lakhs with the stipulation that it was to be maintained as an educational Institution for ever on the lines already laid down. The British Govt. on the suggestion of an Indian Minister wanted to close the College and made a contract for sale of the site and buildings for a Parsi Public School. Some of the Old Boys of the College such as Prof. S. G. Sathe and Dr. Belvalkar consulted me what to do, though I was not an old boy of the Deccan College. I first suggested that a member of the Bombay Legislative Council should ask a question whether the Deccan College was not an Institution held in trust by Govt. The Govt. replied that it was a trust property, but that Govt. would approach the District Court of Poona for permission to sell it for the purpose of a public school. Govt. applied to the District Court at Poona for permission to sell it for the purpose of a public school. I appeared for the old Boys' Association and requested that the Association should be made a party to Govt's application. The Court allowed the application. I had agreed not to charge any fees. I suggested that Mr. M. R. Jayakar, who had a great regard for me and was a very successful advocate in Bombay (who later became a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England), should be briefed in the matter. The Association said that they had not money enough to pay Mr. Jayakar's heavy fees. I requested Mr. Jayakar not to charge any fees. He complied with my request and the whole case took about 15 working days in court, besides many days of preparation. Mr. Jayakar, having once agreed to work without fees, put his heart and soul in the matter and the District Court in a long judgement of about ninety typed pages held that the Deccan College was a trust and could not be sold. Govt. went in appeal to the High Court of Bombay, but by that time a popular Ministry with the late Mr. B. G. Kher as Chief Minister had come to power and compromised the matter by agreeing to conduct the Deccan College as a Research Institute for Vedic studies and classical Sanskrit, Ancient Indian History etc. The Association made Mr. Jayakar and myself Honorary members of the Old Boys' Association. I have been on the Managing Council of the Deccan College Research Institute since 1938 to this day.

In 1944 I was appointed by the Bombay University Sir Lallubhai Shah Lecturer and delivered four lectures on Hindu customs and modern laws. The lectures have been published in book form by the University.

In 1927 at the time of the Gaṇapati festival in Bombay, a mela (party of worshippers) of the Mahar caste (held untouchable) approached the authorities of the Brāhmaṇasabhā for permission to come for darśan of the image installed by the Sabhā and stated that they would be content if they were allowed to come as near the image as Parsis, Christians and Moslems would be allowed to do. I was then Chairman of the Managing Committee and called a meeting of the Committee to decide whether the request should be granted. In the Committee the voting was exactly half for and half against. I had to give a casting vote for granting permission, since I was of the opinion that the request was a very modest one and in view of the changing times should be acceded to. A suit was filed in the Bombay High Court by certain orthodox people against the Brāhmaṇasabhā, against myself as Chairman of the Managing Committee and the Secretary for a temporary injunction restraining us from bringing the Mahar Mela inside the building where the image was and for a declaration that the Sabhā through its office-bearers had no right to do what had not been previously done. It must be said to the credit of the members of the Sabhā that in a meeting of the general body of members my action was supported by a very large majority. Tnere was great excitement and it was feared that violence might result. The High Court refused to grant a temporary injunction and later the suit was withdrawn by the members seeking legal relief. Our Constitution has abolished untouchability but that was in 1950 and this excitement arose in 1927.

I have been a member of the Managing Committee of the Bombay Asiatic Society for about 45 years, a Vice-President and one of the editors of the Journal of the Society for many years. I contributed many long articles to the Journal of the Society and to the Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute. In 1946 at my request Dr. B. C. Law, a great scholar, whom I had never seen but who had become an admirer of my books, donated Rs. three thousand (for purchase of books for the Society) and donated five thousand rupees for founding a medal called P. V. Kane Gold Medal to be awarded once every three years to a scholar who had done substantial research in subjects in which I was interested.

On 7th May 1941, in honour of my 61st birthday 'A volume of studies in Indology' was presented to me edited by Dr. S. M. Katre and Prof. P. K. Gode and published by Dr. N. G. Sardesai of the Oriental Book Agency, Poona. My friends and admirers had formed a Committee with Dr. V. S. Sukthankar as Chairman and invited papers. Many contributions came in, of which 74 are contained in that work, mostly written by Indian scholars (a few by scholars from abroad also).

In 1942 the British Govt. conferred on me the title of Mahāmahopādhyāya and the Allahabad University conferred on me the Honorary Degree of D. Litt. In 1946 I was asked to preside over the All India Oriental Conference held at Nagpur. In 1947 Mr. B. G. Kher, then Chief Minister of the Bombay State, pressed me to become Vice-Chancellor of the Bombay University for two years and I agreed after some hesitation owing to my age (about 68). There was no salary attached to the post nor was there any sumptuary allowance nor any other allowance. In the years 1947 to 1949 I had three matters on my hands, my legal practice, the History of Dharmaśāstra and the work as Vice-Chancellor (which was heavy in those days, sometimes three hours a day). Mr. Kher pressed me to remain Vice-Chancellor for three years more, offered to make it a salaried post of 2000 Rs. per month and requested me to give up practice as Advocate. The then Governor of Bombay, Sir Maharaj Singh, as Chancellor, also pressed me, but for various reasons (the foremost being that the work on the History of Dharmaśāstra would make slow progress if I spent five or more hours a day in the University) I declined. The Session of the All India Oriental Conference was held in Bombay in 1949. I was Chairman of the Reception Committee. On my request the Śākuntala of Kālidāsa was performed in Sanskrit with songs, the director being Mr. K.C.M.

Bhatavdekar who is a fine-looking and tall man, an excellent actor, a good Sanskritist and a singer. It was a great success. Emboldened by this success I suggested that other Sanskrit dramas should be put up on the stage. Mr. Bhatawdekar and Mr. P. P. Joshi, two enthusiastic workers of the Sanskritic Samiti (Cultural Committee) of the Brāhmaṇasabhā at Bombay, worked hard and at different times and in different places (Delhi, Bombay, Ujjain, Poona) put up on the stage ten Sanskrit dramas, Śākuntala, Mṛcchakaṭika, Ratnāvali, Veṇīsaṁhāra, Uttararāmacarita, Mudrārākṣasa, Vikramorvaśīya, Mālavikāgnimitra, Svapnavāsavadattā and Saṅgīta Saubhadra (translated into Sanskrit by Mr. S. B. Velankar, Indian Postal Service, from the original Marathi by Anna Kirloskar). These performances became very popular. The sale of tickets yielded 150,000 Rs. out of which about thirty thousand were saved after meeting all expenses as a fund to fall back upon when they performed one of these plays at different places.

The International Congress of Orientalists was held in Paris in 1948. The Indian Govt. sent a delegation of three, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan as leader and Dr. S. K. Chatterji and myself as two members. In 1951 the International Congress met in Istanbul and the Indian Govt. sent a delegation consisting of myself (as leader), Dr. R. C. Majumdar and Prof. Siddiqui. At this conference I sponsored a resolution that the Unesco should make a substantial grant to the project of a Sanskrit Dictionary on Historical Principles undertaken by the Deccan College and it was unanimously passed by the Conference and subsequently Unesco made a grant of 5000 dollars to the Deccan College. In 1954 the Session of the International Congress of Orientalists was held at Cambridge to which the Govt of India sent a delegation consisting of myself (as leader), Dr. S. K. Chatterji and Dr. R. N. Dandekar. From Cambridge I went at my own expense to U. S. A. and visited the Library of the Congress in Washington for two days, the University of Princeton, Harvard University and the University of Rochester, where my younger son was studying for the Ph. D. degree in Atomic and Nuclear Physics. The Governing Body of the London School of Oriental and African studies of the London University was pleased to nominate me as an Honorary Fellow, I being the only Indian among the present 25 Honorary Fellows of the School. In December 1953 I presided over the session of the Indian History Congress at Waltair.

In November 1953 the President of India was pleased to nominate me as a member of Parliament i. e. of the Rājyasabhā (Council of States) and when my term expired on 1-4-58 I was again nominated for six years. While in Parliament I worked on several committees such as the Committees for considering the Hindu Adoption Act, the Hindu Marriage Act, the Hindu Succession Act. I pressed on the Govt. that they should start a Central Institute of Indian Studies. This has been now accepted in principle and a committee has been appointed to suggest a constitution and other matters. I have also been a member of the Central Sanskrit Board. On 15th August 1958 the President of India was pleased to grant me a certificate of merit and an annuity of Rs. 1500 a year. In August 1959 the President was pleased to nominate me as National Professor of Indology for five years on a substantial salary, the only condition being that I should carry on research as I have been doing. I resigned from Parliament in September 1959, because as I held an office of profit under Govt., I had to do so according to law. In 1960 the University of Poona conferred on me the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Letters.

From the beginning of 1955 I did not take any fresh legal work and by March 1956 I got all my cases disposed off. Since April 1956 I have systematically refused all pressure to accept briefs. Since April 1956 I have devoted my time to Parliamentary work (till September 1959 only) and to the last volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra.

I had substantial legal work from 1919 to about 1949. For the benefit of those who made inquiries and of those who desire to pursue literary studies while working as lawyers, I shall briefly state how I saved time for literary work. The High Court worked for five days in the week. I always utilized all holidays for literary work, Saturday and Sunday have always been my busiest days. There were always two Benches (sometimes three Benches also) on the Appellate side of the High Court. Often ten appeals were placed on the board for each Bench every day, since the practice of the Court has been that if an Advocate had two matters, one in each of the different courts and he was engaged in one court, his case in the other court was kept back till he became free. So when an advocate had even one appeal in one court and that too very low down in the list, even then he had to be present in court from the beginning, since appeals lower down on the Board might be taken up by the Court if the lawyers therein were available. Most lawyers when free spent their time in chitchat in the Advocates' room. I spent such time in the Library for preparing my briefs that were likely to be taken up in the next few weeks. I hardly ever read my briefs at home. Therefore, I could devote every day some hours in the morning and evening to my work on Sanskrit studies. I always worked for eight or nine hours a day and sometimes ten to twelve hours from 1911 to 1948, except when I was not in Bombay. I have never slept or even taken a nap by day from 1904 to 1958; even when I went to see a drama at night and came home at 2 A.M. I awoke at 6 A.M. and slept a little earlier on the following night. After the mild heart trouble in 1958, I tried sleeping a little by day, but not being used to such a thing I gave it up in a few months. For fifty years I have been taking morning walk for about one hour on the Chowpati sea face in Bombay and at the Hanging Gardens since 1912, but stopped going to the Hanging Gardens from about 1956.

That I had duodenal ulcer was discovered by x-ray therapy about 1925. Some doctors advised an operation. Others opposed it. I consulted the then most eminent surgeon in Bombay, Dr. G. V. Deshmukh, and he advised me not to go in for it. Again in 1937 when I undertook a trip in European countries for three months, I consulted in Vienna an eminent German doctor who advised me to continue my dietetic methods and not to undergo an operation, when I was nearly 58 and the disease was of very long standing.

A few words about my method of collecting materials for my History of Dharmaśāstra. I have about a hundred note-books, some of them subjectwise and some with pages marked from A to Z, in which I noted important pages and passages extracted from the works read. For example, I have a big oblong notebook (leather bound) of about 500 pages devoted to Purāṇas only.

As regards the writing of the History of Dharmaśāstra my method was as follows: I wrote in my own hand a first draft, collected a hundred pages or so and then carefully read those pages. Sometimes I tore off several pages and prepared a new draft. I cannot type well, having had no time to cultivate the habit of using a typewriter. Then I got the matter typewritten by an excellent typist, Mr. G. R. Barve, who was my neighbour and who could decipher my bad writing tolerably well and paid him his usual charges. I sent to the Press only the handwritten original of the first volume. It was from the 2nd volume onwards that I got one or two copies typewritten (two when there was danger of bombing Bombay in 1942) and sometime afterwards I read the typed copy myself and put in the diacritical marks. This was sent to the Press in Poona I examined three (rarely four) proofs of all forms myself, but the press had directions to send a copy of the third page proof to a good Sanskrit scholar in Poona who was to read it and make corrections (not in the matter but only as to diacritical marks, spelling, stops etc.) and to send the corrected proof to me and I incorporated his corrections (if accepted by me) in my own copy of the third proof, which was sent to the Press as the final proof. The Indexes to all the five volumes were prepared by me. The Indexes to volumes I-IV alone come to 289 pages. The total printed pages of all works written and printed by me and of the numerous papers that I contributed to the Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, the Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute and to other Journals would come to at least twenty thousand pages. To the typewriters of vol. II to V, I paid about 2500 rupees out of my own pocket and about 600 rupees to the correctors of the page proofs (of volume II to V). I went to places that had collections of Sanskrit Mss. such as Poona (very often), Baroda, Benares (several times), Madras (several times), Tanjore and Ujjain at my own expense for reading several mss. and getting copies made of a few of them. In our country, there are no large libraries like those in Europe and U. S. A. So I had to spend money on securing micro-films of certain articles in foreign journals and copies of certain Mss. I have no accounts of the travelling charges but about making copies of some mss. and microfilms I can say that they came to about 200 rupees. The Press was in Poona and I was in Bombay and the proofs (along with the original copy at the time of the despatch of the first proof) had to be sent by post for about 35 years (sometimes one form, sometimes two and rarely three at a time). Besides, the original ms. had always to be sent in small packets (of from 50 to 100 handwritten or typed pages) by registered bookpost. No accounts are kept of this but probably Rs. 400 would be a very modest estimate. The honorarium paid (and to be paid) to me for all the five volumes is given in the table below :

For the information of those who have already inquired or might inquire hereafter about the cost of this undertaking viz., History of Dharmaśāstra, a table is appended:—

Volumes	Year of publication	Cost of Printing, paper, binding	Honorarium
		Rs. as.	Rs. as.
I	1930	4814 - 12	2433 - 0
II
pts. 1 and 2	1941	8828 - 12	4239 - 0
III	1946	8605 - 13	2256 - 0
IV	1953	11092 - 9	2873 - 0
V
part I	1958	25,000 - 0	7000 - 0
part II	1962	(Approximately)	(Approximately) the II part is to be hereafter published
		58341 - 13	18802 - 0
		18802 - 0
		77,143 - 13

3900 copies of volumes II–V are unbound as follows:—

	Copies unbound
Vol. II parts 1 and 2	1000
Volume III	800
Volume IV	1000
Volume V pt. 1	1100
	3900 copies

The charges for binding these 3900 copies at Rs. 2/- (per copy) would be Rs. 7,800 (3900 x 2).

Thus the cost of the whole series would be Rs. 84,943–13–0 (77,143–13 + 7,800). It must be mentioned that the Executive Board of the B. O. R. I. paid me Rs. three per page as to Volumes I, II and IV and only Rs. two per page for vol. III and propose to pay me Rs. four per page for Vol. V, leaving me to bear all expenses for typewritten copy, for correction of one proof by a third person, all postage, travelling expenses and for copies of mss. and microfilms.

The usual method in India as regards Histories or Encylopædias in several volumes (running into thousands of pages) is to appoint a Director or Chief Editor (on a salary of Rs. 1500 per month), an Assistant Editor (on a salary of Rs. 600 or Rs. 750 per month) and to pay contributors at Rs. five or so per page, beside an office and a staff of clerks and typists. The Director's salary on the usual scale for one year alone would come to Rs. 18,000. The payments made and to be made to me for writing a work of over six thousand pages spread over 37 years come practically to one year's salary for a Chief Editor (or rather less by Rs. 3700 which were spent for typewriting, correction, and copies etc. as stated above). I do not like this distasteful task. I had, however, to write about this matter because I wanted to dispel the queer notions about my profits that some people appear to entertain and made inquiries. It is owing to one individual's sacrifice that all the volumes (containing over 6000 pages) can be sold by the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute for only Rs. 180. If the usual method had been followed, these 6000 pages would have had to be priced at Rs. 400 or more.

I could not arrange or plan my life. I had to oscillate between education, literature and law, between Government service and an independent profession like that of law. I have, however, lived a very active, full and varied life for over sixty years. Thinking over the vast Sanskrit literature and the labour and time that I had to spend on one branch of it, I am inclined to close this Epilogue with two lines from Browning's poem " The last ride together "

' Look at the end of the work, contrast
The petty done, the undone vast.'

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS AND THANKS

During the last thirty-seven years from 1925 to this day I have received from hundreds of friends and others, institutions and books, assistance of various kinds. Now that this undertaking is drawing to a close, I should like to mention with gratitude all of them that I can remember. In the Prefaces to the several volumes of this History I have acknowledged the help received from individuals in writing the separate volumes. Here at the end of the whole work,

I shall try to mention in one place the Institutions, the series of books and individuals to whom I have been indebted.

INSTITUTIONS

Among Institutions the first place must be assigned to the Library of the Bombay Asiatic Society (formerly called Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society). It was in this Library that I passed several hours almost every day (except on holidays), when I was in Bombay. It has also a large collection of Sanskrit Mss. The materials for the first four volumes were collected mainly in the rooms of this Library. I owe a deep debt of gratitude to this Library and to all persons in the service of the Library from the highest to the lowest. I must next mention the Library of the Bombay University, which was also of great use to me. The Library of the Bombay Asiatic Society is a circulating Library with a large membership, but the Bombay University Library permits only the members of the Senate to have books issued to them for reading at home. I could secure books urgently needed by me from this Library, when I could not get them from the Asiatic Society's Library (because some members had taken them). Besides, it possesses a large number of Sanskrit Mss. I tender my thanks to the Bombay University and its Library, to the staff of the Library and particularly to Mr. D. N. Marshall, the present Librarian. Since November 1953 when I was nominated a member of Parliament (Rājyasabhā) by the President of India, two more Libraries became available to me. One was the Library of Parliament which contains a large number of books on many subjects including Sanskrit Literature, Ancient Indian History, and the Library of the Archaeological Department in New Delhi. I thank the staff of the Parliament Library. Dr. A. Ghosh, Director-General of the Archaeological Survey of India, made special arrangements for seating me in the Archaeological Library and made me a corresponding member. Dr. Chabbra, Joint Director of that Department, also was very kind and helpful. I am under great obligations to these high Officers. When at the end of 1953, I went to the Library of the Archaeological Department, the Librarian was a young man, Shri L. G. Parab, a double M. A. of the Bombay University, a B. T. and holder of a diploma in Librarianship. He is a very industrious and enthusiastic young Librarian, who made great efforts to keep the Library full of Sanskrit books, full of books both on ancient and medieval history of India and of other countries, and of books on all archaeological studies, such as architecture, iconography and painting, kept the Library uptodate and took a keen interest in my work and a great deal of trouble to accommodate me in various ways (too many to mention) from 1954 to the present day. Much of the material for this lengthy 5th volume was collected in the Archaeological Library and a good deal of the text also was written there. I am under a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. Parab and also thank all his assistants, particularly Messrs. Kapur and Mr. A. S. Dhavle and his Jamadar, Bhagavat Sahai.

Then I must mention certain Series of books and certain Presses that have printed and published a large number of books, such as the Ānandāśrama series (Poona), the Bibliotheca Indica Series the Bombay Sanskrit Series, the Kāvyamālā and the Nirṇayasāgar Press, Calcutta Oriental Series, Chowkhamba S. Series, Cultural Heritage of India, volumes I–IV (Calcutta), the Gujarati Press and its Sanskrit Series, the Gaikwad Oriental Series (Baroda), Haridas Sanskrit Series (Benaras), Harvard Oriental Series, Kashi Sanskrit Series, Jivanand Vidyasāgar's numerous publications, Prājñapāṭhaśālā Maṇḍala's volumes of Dharmakośa and Mīmāṁsā-kośa (Wai), Kashmir Sanskrit Series, the Manikyachandra Digambar Jain Series, Jain Grantha-mala Series, Pali Texts Society's Series, Prince of Wales Sarasvatībhavana Series of texts and Studies, Pandit S. D. Satavalekar's Series of Vedic Saṁhitās, Sacred Books of the East Series (50 valumes including the valuable Index Volume), St. Petersburg Dictionary by Bohthlingk and Roth, the Vaidika Saṁśodhana-maṇḍal's volume of 18 Upaniṣads with valuable footnotes and Index (Poona), Trivandrum S. Series, Vedic Index (in two volumes) of Macdonell and Keith, Vijianagram S. Series.

Among periodicals I must mention, the Epigraphia Indica, the Indian Antiquary and those indexed under the word 'Journal'.

I am highly obliged to many scholars who contributed appreciative and encouraging reviews in several journals and newspapers. The first and third volumes received the largest number of reviews. I shall mention only a few for each volume. The first was reviewed in the Bombay Law Reporter, volume 32 (Journal pp. 94–95), in J. A. O. S. for 1931 volume 61 pp. 80–84 by Prof. Hopkins, in JRAS. for 1932 pp. 158–161 by Prof. S. V. Fitzgerald, I. H. Q.

for 1932, pp. 805–807 by Amareshwar Thakur, J. of Oriental Research, Madras, for 1931 pp. 231–233 by Prof. Kuppuswami Sastri, by the 'Kesari' of Poona in three issues dated 7th, 10th, 14th March 1931 (in Marathi); Volume II was reviewed by Prof. K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar in very eulogistic terms in Adyar Library Bulletin for 1944 pp. 75–86, in J. R. A. S. for 1942 pp. 106–107 by Prof. Brough; Vol. III was reviewed in "Indian Culture" by Dr. B. C. Law, Volume XIII for 1947 pp. 119–23, in Journal Asiatique for 1948, vol. 236 pp. 149–150 by Prof. L. Renou' and also in his book "Sanskrit et Culture" (Paris, 1950) pp. 126–136, in J. A. O. S. Vol. 67 pp. 232–234 by Dr. Ludwik Sternbach, in M. L. J. Vol. 93 for 1947 (Journal pp. 33–38), in newspaper "Hindu" of 25. 5. 1947 (Madras) by Prof. K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, in Bom. Law Reporter for January 1947 (Journal pp. 13–15), in the "Bombay Chronicle" of 9–2–1947 by Mr. Prabhu and in the 'Times of India' of 13. 6. 1947, by Mr. N. C. Kelkar in "Kesari" of 2nd and 5th December 1947, in 'Prabhāt' (a Marathi newspaper) in seven issues in March and May 1947 by Shri N. G. Chapekar; Volume IV was reviewed at some length by Prof. Hans Losch of Bonn in Z. D. M. G. Volume 107 pp. 217–221, and in 56 Bom. L. R. (1954 pp. 34–35 Journal), in the Journal of the Ganganath Jha Research Institute, volume X pp. 168–172, in J. A. O. S. Vol. 74, pp. 271–273 by Dr. Sternbach, in the Bulletin of the London School of Oriental and African Studies, Volume 17, part 3 for October 1955 pp. 620–21 and in the "Kesari" of 26th September 1954 by Mr. J. S. Karandikar; Volume V part I was reviewed in J. A. O. S. for 1959 by Dr. Sternbach, in J. R. A. S. 1960 pp. 193–194 by Dr. Derrett. Volumes I to IV were reviewed by Prof. V. I. Kalyanov in the Quarterly Journal of the Indo-Soviet Cultural Society, volume VII No. 4 pp. 7–10 (1960). The number of Individual authors whose works I read or whom I consulted in 37 years may run into thousands. Authors and works referred to only once or twice are not collected here, but they have been mentioned in the several separate Indices to the five volumes. Only very eminent writers or authors who wrote several valuable works and papers or were personally consulted are named below.

Abhyankar, Vasudevasastri (M. M. Pandit); Prof. K. V. Abhyankar (son of the preceding); Aiyangar (Krishna), (Prof.) K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Dr. Krishnaswamy Aiyangar, Dr.

A. S. Altekar, Arthur Avalon (Sir. John Woodroffe), Mr. M. B. Arte, Srī Aurobindo, Prof. P. V. Bapat, Shri. N. C. Bapat, Prof. A. L. Basham, Mr. Y. A. Bhat, Dr. S. K. Belvalkar, Pandit Bhagavad-datta, Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, Prof. G. H. Bhatt, Mr. (and now Dr.) Bhabatosh Bhattacharya, Dr. Benoyatosh Bhattacharya, M. Bloomfield, G. Bühler, A. Burnell, Dr. Caland, Prof. Chinta-haran Chakravarti, M. M. Cakravarty, Mr. N. G. Chapekar, Mr. M. A. Chinnaswami Sastry, H. T. Colebrooke, A. Coomaraswamy, E. B. Cowell, Dr. K. L. Daftari, Dr. R. N. Dandekar, Dr. Matilal Das, Prof. Das Gupta, Datar Chintaman Sastri, T. W. Rhys Davids, Prof. S. K. De, Paul Deussen, Dr. (Miss) Indu Dike, Mr. D. B. Diskalkar, Mr. P. C. Divanji, Shri R. R. Diwakar, Pandit K. S. Dravid (Sāmaveda expert), Prof. P. E. Dumont, Will Durant, M. N. Dutt, Prof. Edgerton, Julius Eggeling, V. Fausböll, Prof. Filliozat, J. F. Fleet, A. A. Führer, Dr. D. Gaastra, Dr. G. S. Gai, Pandit T. Ganapati Sastri, R. Garbe, G. T. Garrat, Dr. U. N. Ghoshal, Dr. G. S. Ghurye, Prof. P. K. Gode, Prof. N. A. Gore, M. M. Gopinath Kaviraj, G. Gorer, H. H. Gowen, R. T. Griffith, F. Hall, Martin Haug, Dr. R. C. Hazra, A. Hillebrandt, Prof. M. Hiriyanna, Dr. R. Hoernle, Prof. Hopkins, R. E. Hume, Col. G. A. Jacob, H. Jacobi, W. James, K. P. Jayaswal, Dr. Ganganath Jha, Julius Jolly, Dr. B. S. Joshi, Tarkatīrtha Lakṣmaṇa Sāstri Joshi, Mr. S. N, Joshi (Poona), Pandit Kamalkrishna Smrititirtha, Mr. S. L. Katre Dr. S. M. Katre, A. B. Keith, H. Kern, Mr. Kesavan (National Library, Calcutta), Dr. S. V. Ketkar, Swami Kevalānanda, Mr. G. H. Khare, Pandit Balacharya Khuperkar, F. Kielhorn, W. Kirfel, Tarkatīrtha Raghunath Shastri Kokje, Sten Konow, Prof Kunhan Raja, Prof. Kuppuswami Sastri, Shri Kuvalayānanda, Dr. B. C. Law, Sylvain Levi, H. Lüders, A. A. Macdonell, MacTaggart, Dr. R. C. Majumdar, V. N. Mandlik, Prof. Mangal Deva Shastri, Sir R. P. Masani, F. Max-Müller, Dr. V. V. Mirashi, Rajendralal Mitra, Dr. M. M. Umesha Mishra, Dr. R. K. Mukerji, Mr. Y. M. Mulay, Prof. Neugebauer, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, K. L. Ogale, Hermann Oldenberg, Pandit J. S. Pade, Shankar Pandurang Pandit, Prof. A. M. Paramasivanandan, Prof. V. G. Paranjape, Peter Peterson, A. S. Pringle-Pattison, Mr. P. M. Purandare, Dr. A. D. Pusalker, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, Ranga-charya Raddi Shastri, Dr. V. Raghavan, V. K. Rajwade, Prof. R. D. Ranade, Prof. P. T. Raju, Prof. L. Renou, R. Roth, Mr. R. S. Sarma. Prof. G. Sarton, Miss Kunda Sathe (now Mrs.

Savkar), P. P. S. Sastri, Pandit Aiyanath Sastri, Dr. Dakshinaranjan Shastri, M. M. Sridhar Sastri Pathak, Satyavrata Sāmaśrami, Mr. S. N. Savadi, Pandit Srījiva Nyāyatīrtha, Pandit V. A. Ramswami Sastri, Pandit S. D. Satavalekar, R. Sham Sastri, V. A. Smith, Prof. P. A. Sorokin, Dr. Sternbach, Pandit Sudhakar Dwivedi, Dr. V. S. Sukthankar, Dr. A. Schweitzer, W. W. Tarn, C. H. Tawney, R. H. Tawney, K. T. Telang, G. Thibaut, K. P. Trivedi, Prof. A. N. Upadhye, Prof. H. D. Velankar, Swami Vivekānanda, Prof. A. R. Wadia, A. Weber, H. G. Wells, W. D. Whitney, Monier Williams, H. H. Wilson, M. Winternitz, R. C. Zaehner, H. Zimmer.

I beg to be pardoned if, through loss of memory, I have omitted the names of persons to whom I have been indebted for advice, guidance or information.

INDEX (to vol. V)

a. = author; Acc. = According; M = mentioned by or in; Q. = quoted by or in (Important and rare words are put in Italics)

Abbreviations, su di and va di or ba di explained, 670.

Abhayagaṇa, mantras so called 796n.

Abhaya, mantras in Atharva-veda, 769n.

Abhayamudrā, defined and illustrated, 1131n.

Abhaya-śānti, described, 761.

Abhihitānvayavādinaḥ, followers of Kumārila were so called, 1297.

Abhijit, m. as 28th nakṣatra after Uttarāṣāḍhā and before Śravaṇa, 497–98; m. in Tai. Br., Mai. S. and Atharvaveda, though not m. in Tai. S. and Kāṭhaka S. 520; myth about its disappearance, 497n; said to be younger sister of Rohiṇī, 497n.

Abhinaya-darpaṇa, contains certain postures of hands such as Śaṅkha, Cakra, Pāśa, which are names of Tāntrik mudrās 1129n.

Abhinavagupta (literary activity between 980–1020 AD.) is said in Śaṅkaradigvijaya to have practised black magic against Śaṅkarācārya, 1010n; a. of Abhinavabhāratī, 1376–77.

Abhiniveśa, explained (in Yoga) 1417.

Ābhīras, described as dasyus, as attackers of Arjuna and as carrying away Vṛṣṇi women, 969n; inscription of Ā. king Īśvarasena in Nasik cave 968n; Matsyapurāṇa speaks of ten Ā. kings, 969n.

Abhiṣeka, procedure of, in tantra cult, 1118; resembles Christian Baptism 1118; sprinkling of disciple by guru with water to the accompaniment of 21 mantras, is the main part, 1118; at the end guru gives a name to disciple ending in Ānandanātha, 1119.

Abhyankar, Prof. K. V., view of, that precession of equinoxes was known in Ancient India, 520n.

Abhyudaya, meaning of, 1037n

Abhyuditeṣṭi, 66, 1340.

Ācārādarśa of Śrīdatta, 640n.

Achelis, Miss Elizabeth, 718n.

Acta Orientalia, 490n, 1133-34.

Actions, (vide acts, guṇabhūta, pradhāna, śeṣa); enjoined by the Veda are either primary or principal such as prayājas and guṇabhūta (subsidiary) such as pounding of grains of rice and etc., or as kratvartha and puruṣārtha 53, 1306; non-difference or difference among acts is ascertained by six means viz. śabdāntara, abhyāsa, saṅkhya, prakaraṇa (context), saṁjñā (names as in Jyotiḥ, Viśvajyotiḥ etc. which are names of different acts), 1306-7.

Acton : vide under 'conjecture'.

Acts, religious, are of three classes, nitya, naimittika and kāmya, 53.

Acyutarāya Modak of Nasik, a. of 'Avaidika-dhikktri', severely handled the cult of Makāras 1080; a. of Prārabdha-dhvānta-saṁhṛti, 1600–1604.

Adbhuta, meaning of, in Ṛgveda, in Gṛhyasūtras and in Śāntis 741–742 ; sometimes used as synonymous with Utpāta 742 ; due to the wrong-doings of men that anger deities 742.

Adbhuta-brāhmaṇa, is part of Ṣaḍ-viṁśa-brāhmaṇa (i. e. V. 1–10), contains Śāntis for utpātas, 734-741 and partly agrees with Āśv. Gṛ. pariśiṣṭa.

Adbhutasāgara of Ballālasena, a huge work concerned mostly with rare natural phenomena viz. halo, rainbow, hurricanes, digdāha, comets, meteors, red rain, shower of fish etc. 763 ; 526, 530n, 531, 587n and 637 (quoting Garga), 712n, 734 (on Śāntis), 735, 741n, 742n, 743n, 745n, 746n, 761, 767–69, 773, 775–776 (on dreams), 777n, 779n, (quotes same four verses from Matsya and Viṣṇudharmottara), 780n, 788n, 790, 792 (quotes Vasantarāja), 806, 870n, 877–8.

Addhātayaḥ, (in Ṛg. X. 85·16), meaning of 1600n.

Adhikamāsa or Adhimāsa : (vide Intercalary month) : 257, 489, 671.

Adhikāra and Adhikārin (qualifications or title of a person to do a certain act) : (vide pratinidhi) : Adhikārin 1318 ; everyone belonging to the three upper classes has a right to perform Vedic sacrifices 1318 ; many rules of PMS (Chap. VI) deal with pratinidhi (substitute) 1319–20 ; one who has incurable defect (such as blindness from birth) has no right to perform Yāga but one who has some curable bodily defect would have the right when the defect is removed 1718 ; sixth chap. (with eight pādas) of P. M. Sūtra deals with various aspects of the question of A., 1317–1321 ; when a Vedic text provides 'one desirous of securing heaven should offer a Yāga,' heaven is made the principal factor, Yāga becomes subsidiary matter and the qualification (adhikāra) of the performer is laid down by the word Svargakāma, 1317.

Adhikaraṇa (often called nyāya, i. e. conclusion on topics for discussion) : has five constituents acc. to most, some make them six 1182.

Adhikaraṇakaumudī of Rāmakṛṣṇa, 1182n.

Adhikaraṇakaumudī of Devanātha, 1283n.

Adhisīma (or-soma) Kṛṣṇa, 6th (or 5th) in descent from Arjuna, during whose reign Purāṇas were narrated to sages 847–48.

Adhrigu-praiṣa, 724 : recited by Hotṛ priest in Paśubandha 1326 ; twelve adhikaraṇas on A. in P. M. S. and some of the unfamiliar words therein are explained by PMS and ūha of certain words therein 1326.

Adhvara-mīmāṁsā-kutūhalavṛtti of Vāsudeva Dīkṣita, 1163n.

Ādiparva, 90n, 126, 130, 466, 488n, 539, 622n, 687n, 819n, 821, 840, 854n (has the verse 'gurorapyavaliptasya'), 863n (on sūta and māgadha), 908, 914 (has the famous verse about itihāsa and purāṇa), 915n, 945, 1178, 1219, 1281n (Subhadrā was daughter of Vasudeva), 1561, 1598n, 1627n, 1629.

Ādipurāṇa : Prof. Hazra places it between 1203–1525 A. D., 887. note on 887 ; Vāyu mentions an Ādika among 18 Purāṇas, 887 ; writers make confusion between Ādi and Āditya, 887.

Aditi, no agreement among scholars as to nature of 7 ; was born of Dakṣa and was also his mother in Ṛgveda 1488.

Ādityapurāṇa, 51n ; Aparārka and Sm. C. (as printed) quote verses from both Ādi and Āditya 887–889 ; note on 887–88 ; m. by Matsya as Upapurāṇa 887.

Advayasiddhi of Laksmīṅkara, (729 AD) ; proposes that one should offer worship to one's own body wherein all gods reside, 1071.

Advayavajrasaṅgraha : 1066n (Śūnyatā is Vajra).

Āgamasāra, 1080n.

Agastya (star Canopus) ; Ṛgveda I. 179.6 adopted in Agnipurāṇa as mantra for arghya to, 920 ; story of A., Indra and Maruts, 740–741 ; Vedic sage 10.

Agastyasaṁhitā, 84, 1135n ; on Rāmanavamī 84–5, 88.

Aghamarṣaṇa hymn (Ṛg. X 190. 1–3) highly praised as remover of consequences of sins 1592n.

Agni : Prognostications derived from flames of sacred A. in rites, 797 ; styled 'Vratapā' and 'Vratapati' in the Veda 22–3.

Agnipurāṇa, 28, 31, 33n, 38, 40, 42, 47n, 48n, 49, 55, 75n, 92, 117, 152, 204n, 225, 226n, 616, 622, 627n, 660, 672–3, 692, 694n, 705, 706n, 734 (chapters of, on Śāntis), 745 (examples of three kinds of utpātas), 747 (three best śāntis are Amṛta, Abhaya and Saumya), 753 (on Grahayajña, copies Yāj.), 754, 774, 801 and 803 (Gajaśānti), 804 (Aśvaśānti), 805, 815, 861, 869n (speaks of Viṣṇupurāṇa of 23,000 verses), 916, 919–20, 923, 924n, 935, 948, 956 (names of 25 works on Pāñcarātra), 967 (gives summary of Gītā in 58 verses), 974, 1033n, 1051, 1105n, 1106 (mantras of tāntrik type), 1110, 1114, 1118 (on dīkṣā), 1128, 1132–33, 1289, 1455, 1526n ; contains several hundred verses that are identical with Yāj. Smṛti, 815 ; note on 887 ; one Agnipurāṇa discarded by Ballālasena 869 ; present Agni (in Ānan. ed.) is not the original Purāṇa) 887.

Āgnimāruta, a śastra 721.
Agnyādhāna, laid down by Tai. Br. and Śat. Br. 130 ; proper nakṣatras and seasons for, 506–507, 523
Agravala, Dr. V. S. 1527n.
Āgrayaṇa or Navasasyeṣṭi 206–207 ; Divali festival cannot be traced to, 206–207.
Ahalyākāmadhenu, 30n, 103n, 144, 149, 168, 190n.
Ahan — vide under 'day'.
Ahi, means in the Ṛgveda 'serpent' and also 'a demon' 126.
Ahiṁsā, (vide under Buddhists, Buddhism, Purāṇas, sacrifices); 944–47 ; Devala quoted by Kalpataru says hiṁsā is of ten kinds, 1420; Dharmaśāstras and Purāṇas put great emphasis on A. 1028; emphasized in Upaniṣads like the Chāndogya, Dharmasūtras, Mahābhārata, 944–45 ; emphasized in the Purāṇas and sometimes unqualified a. 945–47 ; examples of Vedic sacrifices (including animal sacrifices) performed durig some centuries before and after Christian era 1028–29 ; hiṁsā in fighting was allowed to Kṣatriyas by Manu and Yāj., but if one wanted to be a yogin he had to give it up, 1420 ; is door of Dharma or highest Dharma and that neither dāna nor tapas is equal to a. 946 ; is one of the yamas, acc. to Kūrma, Yogasūtra and Yāj. 946n ; Kūrmapurāṇa and others stated that killing sanctioned by Veda is not hiṁsā 948 ; some purāṇas sanction the killing of a person (such as a tyrant or desperado) by whose death many will live in peace, 947 ; stated to be sanātanadharma by Matsya and Brahmāṇḍa 946 ; Upaniṣads commended qualified A. 947.
Ahirbudhnya-saṁhitā, 996 (mentions 39 avatāras), 1110n (for places fit for puraścaraṇa), 1114 (full of mantra lore), 1119 (procedure of Mahābhiṣeka as one remedy for all diseases; for destroying all enemies and for attaining all desired objects; 1135n, 1359n, 1367n (on divisions of Kapila's tantra), 1391 (on two Yogasaṁhitās).
Ahmedabad, horoscope of the foundation of, 555–56n.
Āhnika-cintāmaṇi, 34n.
Aihole, inscription, 649.
Aitareya-āraṇyaka, 731.
Aitareyabrāhmaṇa, 25, 26, 63n, 65, 126, 235, 489, 492, 498n, 507, 510, 511n, 671, 691n, 721, 721n, 725–27, 789n, 860n, 915, 934 (food is life), 957 (Viṣṇu as highest), 968 (story of Śunaḥśepa and Viśvāmitra's curse on his own sons), 992, 1097 (on rūpasamṛddha). 1116 (mentions the main items in Vedic śikṣā), 1255n, 1276n (thirteen verses are repeated at the time of producing fire by attrition and are rūpasamṛddha), 1296n (on niṣādas, selagas as robbing a rich man); 1276n (paper on 'justification of rūpasamṛddha verses in Ait, Br. in 'Our Heritage' Vol. V part 2, 1386n, 1493, 1497–98, 1525n, 1631n.

Aitareya Upaniṣad, 918, 1362, 1471, 1499, 1501–2, 1541 (quotes Ṛg. IV. 27. 1), 1586 87.

Aiyangar, Prof. K. V. Rangaswami, 30, 42n, 870, 885; several verses from Purāṇas and other works that eluded him, identified, 905n, 906n, 908n, 929n, 947n, 1448n, 1458n.

Aiyangar, Presentation Volume, 1016n.

Ajāmila, a sinner who had abandoned his brāhmaṇa wife and kept a mistress, became a saint, 969, 972; story of, is liable to be misunderstood and may create complacent belief and attitude in a sinner 973.

Ajapā-japa, 1416n.

Ajātaśatru and Gārgya Bālāki, dialogue of 1579–80.

Ajavīthi, meaning of, in Yāj., Viṣṇupurāṇa, Matsya and Vāyu Purāṇas 826 and n.

Ajñāna (same as avidyā), explained in Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa 1417n.

Ājyabhāga (oblations), 733.

Ākhyāna, distinguished from upākhyāna 858n.

Akṣayya-tṛtīyā, details of vrata on, 88–89; one of the most auspicious tithis in the year, 89; referred to in Viṣṇudharmasūtra, 88; third tithi of Vaiśākha bright half is so called 88.

Alberuni, a. of a work on 'India' composed in 1030 A.D.; 516n, 517, 656 (on Harṣa era), 659, 685, 691 (names 14 Manus), 699, 701, 830–1 (furnishes two lists of Purāṇas), 885–6 (mixes up Purāṇas and Upapurāṇas in his list and gives details about contents of some Purāṇas), 1019 (collected with the help of Hindu Pandits vast materials).

Ālekhana, mentioned in P. M. S., is quoted at least 16 times in Āp. Śr. Sūtra, his views being frequently in conflict with Āśmarathya's, 1174.

Alexander, Prof. S, a. of 'Space, Time and Deity' 475.

Algebra, Hindu knowledge of, superior to that of Greeks, acc. to Colebrooke 518.

Allen, D C., a. of 'Star-crossed Renaissance' 543n, 550n.

Allen, a. of Catalogue of Gupta coins, 186, 901.

Allen, on Sāvitrīvrata, 94.

Altekar, Dr. A. S., on Gupta gold coins of Bayana hoard, 186, 651n, 845; paper of, on 'Srāmaṇeraṭīkā' on Ācārasāra, 1023n; paper of, on 'Sanskrit Literature in Tibet' 1041.

Alwar literature, mentions fivefold nature of God, 954a.

Amānta reckoning, 659.

Amarakośa, 29, 84, 117, 477, 668n, 742 (utpāta and upasarga are synonyms), 743, 803n (names of dig-gajas), 838 (defines Purāṇa); date of, acc. to MaxMüller, Hoernle and Mr. Oak, 840n; commentary of Kṣīrasvāmin on, 840n, 850n; 869n, 948 (defines 'iṣṭa and pūrta'), 1113n, 1132, 1210 (Buddha is sarvajña), 1293n, 1378, 1422 (defines Yama and Niyama), 1514.

Amāvāsyā, addres ed as a deity in Atharvaveda 64; Ait. Br. on 64; derivation of word in Atharvaveda and Śat. Br., 64, 259; of two kinds, Sinīvālī and Kuhū m by Tai. S. and Śat. Br. 62–63.

Ambedkar, Dr. B. R., a. of 'the Buddha and his Dhamma' 942n.

Ambikā, sister of Śiva in Tai. S. but wife of Śiva in Tai. Ā. 185; why called Kauśikī 185n.

Ambuvācī 260.

Aṁhaspati or Aṁhasaspati, 13th additional month was so called 671, 672.

Āmikṣā, offered to Viśve-devas, is got by putting curds in heated milk 1307.

Amoghavarṣa, vide under China 1040.

Amṛtasiddhiyoga (fortunate conjunction), defined 707.

Anadhyāya (not to study Veda at certain times or on certain days), applicable only to actual study but not to the employment of Vedic mantras in sacrifices, 1154.

Anājñāta, meaning of, 739n.

Ānandagiri, a. of Śaṅkaravijaya, 1136n; a. of com. on Bṛhadāraṇyakopaniṣad-bhāṣya-vārtika 1183n.

Ānandatīrtha, see under Madhva.

Anantacaturdaśī-vrata, 151–153; Ananta is one of the forms of Kṛṣṇa 152; brief description of, from Agnipurāṇa 150; celebrated on 14th of Bhādrapada-śukla 151; consists mainly in the worship of Hari as Ananta and in wearing on the right hand of men and left hand of women a holy strap of thread dyed with saffron, made of cotton or silk 151–152; description of, in Hemādri 152; description of, in Vratārka 153; doraka dyed with saffron and 14 knots 151; not mentioned in K. K. V. (on vrata), 151; salt forbidden in this vrata 153; varying views of eminent writers about the exact time and tithi for this when third is mixed with another tithi.

Anaphā, an astrological Yoga, meaning of, 584.

Anaximander, a Greek, believed the earth to be cylindrical 512.

Andhra kings in Matsya and Vāyu Purāṇas, 842.

Andhūkabhaṭṭa, m. by Malamāsatattva and flourished about 1035 A. D, 58.

Aṅga and Aṅgin: vide under Śeṣa Śeṣin; Prokṣaṇa, an aṅga of rice grains that are aṅgin 1208; other examples of, 1308ff.

Aṅganyāsa (nyāsa on parts of the body) illustrated as 'om hṛdayāya namaḥ', 1120–22.

Aṅgas, six of Veda, 478.

Aṅgahāras (movements of limbs depended on karaṇas which depended upon different postures of hands and feet) 1128–29; it is likely that Mudrās are based on them; illustrations of 108 a. are given in G. O. S. ed. of Nāṭyaśāstra, 1128n.

Aṅgavidyā (palmistry and śakuna from throbbing of limbs, dreams etc.), 801n; mentioned by Kāśikā and Manu, 527n, 801n.

Aṅgavijjā (Aṅgavidyā), a prakrit work, 801n.

Aṅgiras, 48, 51n, 106n, 775 (about dreams), 810n.

Animal Sacrifice: Manu (V. 41–44) allows the killing of animals in Madhuparka, sacrifices to gods and in rites for pitṛs (Manes) and that in such sacrifices allowed by the Veda there is no hiṁsā, 1262; offering of bull or cow in Madhuparka was allowed acc. to Ait. Br., but later prohibited as Kalivarjya, 1269n; Yāj. (I. 258–260) provides the periods of time for which pitṛs are gratified by the offering of sacrificial food (such as rice or sesame), various kinds of fish and the flesh of several animals, but the Mit. states that, in spite of Yāj., in its day brāhmaṇas should offer only food fit for muni (rice etc.), flesh by kṣatriyas and vaiśyas and honey by śūdras, 1269.

Aniruddhabhaṭṭa, a. of Hāralatā and Pitṛdayitā and guru of Ballālasena, 870n.

Annakūṭa, vide under Govardhanapūjā.

Anniversary of birth, see Vardhāpanavidhi.

Annals of Bhandarkar Oriental Institute; 3, 72n, 75n, 78n, 79n, 90n, 91n, 110n, 114n, 116n, 125n, 132n, 144n, 165n, 194, 212n, 213n, 220n, 650n, 685, 816, 834n, 836, 844, 865, 978, 1041, 1115 (on a modern Siddha Śivayogin), 1149, 1159n (on Bhavadāsa), 1172n (on Gītā 13.4), 1186 (present author's paper on 'Brief sketch of the PMS), 1198, 1200 (present author's paper 'Pūrvamīmāṁsā'), 1301n, 1404n, 1406, 1408n, 1590 (Śaṅkhadharmasūtra).

Antarābhavadeha, 1600.

Ant-hill, made in a house is evil omen and house is to be abandoned acc. to Gṛhya-sūtras 730.

Anthony, H. D, a. of 'Science and its background' (on who introduced the date of creation in Anglican Church) 1506n.

Antiquity, journal so called, 482n.

Antyajas (lowest in Hindu social grade), seven in some smṛtis, 810n.

Anubandhas (indispensable elements), in each śāstra are four 1179.

Anudeyī meaning of, in Ṛg. 1542n.

Anukramaṇī of the Ṛgveda 129, 692, 728n.

Anumati (Paurṇamāsī mixed with 14th tithi) treated as a deity in Ṛgveda, spoken in the same breath with Varuṇa, Soma, Bṛhaspati 63.

Anuṣaṅga, a principle about sentences, viz. extension of a word or clause from one sentence to another or other sentences, provided all the sentences are of the same type or form 1304; illustrations of, 1304–6, 1339.

Anuśāsana-parva, 27, 44, 55n, 81n, 98, 101, 127, 129, 207, 500, 660, 742n, 780n, 821, 853n, 876n, 908, 915, 931, 933, 937, 939n, 945, 949 (on parks), 1248n, 1257 (quotes gāthās from Yama's Dharmaśāstra), 1385, 1416, 1528, 1570, 1628, 1630, 1634, 1636.

Anuśaya, meaning of, 1563n.

Anusmṛti, a new aṅga of Yoga, acc. to Guhyasamāja-tantra 1068n.

Anuvāda, explained as a text which contains something which has already been ascertained by other means 1240; examples discussed 1240-41; the word occurs in Nirukta 1239n; strict definition of, 1241n.

Anuvādya, same as Uddeśya or Uddiśyamāna, 1286 and n.

Ānvitābhidhānavādinaḥ 1297.

Apāmārga, a plant used in incantations and medicine 196n.

Aparājitagaṇa (mantras) 796n.

Aparājitādevī : procedure of the worship of, on Vijayādaśamī 188, 190; procedure of worship of, by a king 191–192.

Aparārka, 41n, 53n, 75, 183n, 223n, 606n-609n, 639n, 640n, 699, 706n, 749n, 813n, 820n, 824, 833n, 837 (sparingly quotes only nine Upapurāṇas), 875-76n, 897, 920n, 922 (says Narasiṁha-purāṇa to be followed in Devapūjā etc.), 923n, 948n, 949n, 954n, 955, 973n, 974n, 993n, 1024, 1032, 1076, 1093 (quotes Devīpurāṇa), 1096n, 1121n (quotes Narasiṁha-purāṇa and nyāsa of Puruṣasūkta verses on parts of the body), 1122, 1184n, 1231, 1248-9 (two well-known verses on paryudāsa and pratiṣedha), 1262 (quotes Bhaviṣyapurāṇa on five categories of smṛti contents), 1265n, 1266n, 1273n, 1292, 1295, 1320, 1381, 1407, 1409, 1418n, 1419n, 1432, 1440n, 1444n, 1446n, 1448, 1450n, 1455, 1592n, 1597.

Aparigraha, not accepting from another anything beyond what is necessary for preserving the body 1420 and n.

Āpastamba, 220.

Āpastamba-dharma-sūtra, 24, 27, 29, 36, 46, 100n, 103, 244, 478, 607, 701 (mentions Chandoviciti as Vedāṅga), 799, 817 (names Bhaviṣyapurāṇa and has verses from a Purāṇa), 853, 935, 937, 1017 (forbids gambling halls and samājas to house-holders), 1154 (employs Mīmāṁsā terms and principles), 1230, 1232n, 1246n (forbids eating of Kalañja), 1250, 1251 (example of Vyavasthita-vikalpa), 1256, 1257n, 1259, 1268 (on equal shares to all sons), 1280 (some great men guilty of violation of Dharma), 1390 (knows Yoga), 1436, 1560 (on Karma doctrine), 1592, 1628.

Āpastamba-gṛhyasūtra, 497n, 524n, 534–35, 605 (time for caula), 610, 733 (śānti for unusual appearances), 802n (view of com. Tātparyadarśana), 1257 (P. M. S. VI. 8. 23 contains the very words that Ā. employs).

Āpastamba-śrautasūtra, 26n, 53n, 1032, 1037, 1114n, 1174 and n, 1183n, 1290, 1322n, 1326, 1330n, 1332n, 1471.

Āpastambīya-mantrapāṭha, 633.

Apavarga (meaning 'liberation'), occurs in Y. S., Raghuvaṁśa, Maitrī Up. and Nyāyasūtra 1515.

Appayya Dīkṣita, a. of Kalpataruparimala 1150; a. of Vidhirasāyana, 1199 (conflict about his date), 1219n; a. of Madhvatantramukhamardana, 1519n.

Appolonius of Tyana, life of, by Philostratus, states that A. received seven rings from Iarchus, an Indian king, which A. was to wear on each week day, 600, 688.

Apratiratha anuvāka 786n.

Apsaras, wife of Gandharva, 495n

Apte, Prof. V. M., on derivation and meaning of vrata, 2, 4, 6, 8, 9n, 10–19.

Apūrva (invisible, mysterious or subtle potency), idea of, explained, being one of the fundamental doctrines of PMS. 1210–11, 1231; proved by Arthāpatti and not by any other pramāṇa 1210; resides in the man (the agent) or an invisible effect arises from the sacrifice, 1210; V. S., Śaṅkarācārya oppose this doctrine and hold that reward is given by God, 210–11; why called A. 1211–12.

Arabs, admit that they borrowed astronomy from the Siddhānta 508.

Ārādupakāraka, are acts or rites prescribed without being meant to do something about substances and are directly the aṅgas of the principal rite, for example Prayājas, Āghāras and Ājyabhāgas in Darśapūrṇamāsa, 1354.

Arberry, a. of 'Asiatic Jones' 1594.

Archaeological survey of India, 174n, 485, 993n.

Archaeological survey of Western India, 131, 997n.

Archaeological survey of India, Memoirs, 1131n (Memoir 66 for illustrations of Abhayamudrā).

Ardhodaya-yoga, 261, 706.

Argument from silence, not very strong ordinarily, 1157n.

Aristotle, believed stars to be divine and endowed with independent volition, 546n.

Arjuna, 1502n; came to country of Nāgas and made Ulūpī, a Nāga princess, his wife 126–127; fight with Babhruvāhana at Maṇipura, in which he was killed but was restored to life with Sañjīvana jewel 127.

Arjunamiśra, commentator of Mahābhārata 1367n.

Arnold, Edwin, a. of 'Light of Asia', pays a very eloquent tribute to Buddha, 1021.

Arnold, Matthew, 1615 (on culture).

Arthakarma, the giving of the staff to the Maitrā-varuṇa priest after Soma is purchased is A. 1231–32.

Arthapañcaka, of Nārāyaṇa, on the five heads of Rāmānuja's doctrines, 964n.

Arthasaṅgraha, 1228, 1241n, 1309n.

Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya, 476 (units of time), 487, 527, 571n, 616 (on yātrā), 647, 659n, 662n, 663, 819n, 862 (on Sūta of the Purāṇas), 863, 905, 1032 (on tantrayukti), 1628; condemns the intense desire to find out auspicious nakṣatra and tithi and extreme reliance on them, but did not ignore prognostications altogether, 528; employs regnal year and not era 647.

Arthavādādhikaraṇa, 927n.

Arthavādas (vide Anuvāda, Guṇavāda) 1238–1244; all A. are not commendatory, some remove doubts also as about śarkarā 1240; are the second great division of Vedic texts and are dealt with in P. M. Sūtra I. 2, 1238; are scattered over the several chapters of P. M. Sūtra 1283; are the śeṣa (auxiliary) of vidhis in the Brāhmaṇa texts 1263; constitute the largest part of the Veda, particularly of Brāhmaṇa texts 1243; examples of, cited 1238-39; four kinds of viz nindā, praśaṁsā, parakṛti purākalpa, according to Mimāṁsā paribhāṣā, Vāyupurāṇa, Nyāyasūtra and examples, 1241–42; Smṛtis abound in A. illustrated, 1242–43; some Vedic passages contain words like 'hi' (meaning 'because'), the conclusion being that such passages (called 'hetuvan nigadas') are also commendatory 1239-1240; three kinds of A. viz. guṇavāda, anuvāda, bhūtārthavāda, exemplified 1240–41.

Aruṇaketukacayana, 24.

Aruṇānyāya, 1294–95 (explained), 1340.

Aruṇodaya, (last half quarter of night), 260.

Āryabhaṭa, 484, 676, 679; born in 476 A. D. 649, 1477; view of, that earth revolved round itself and that stars did not revolve round earth 1477.

Āryabhaṭīya, work of Āryabhaṭa, 649n, 676n, 679, 80 (mentions Thursday), 684, 696n, 1477; edited by W. E. Clark, 1477.

Āryamañjuśrīmūlakalpa, names and defines 108 Mudrās 1129; says combinations of mantras and mudrās bring success in all actions and that no tithi, nakṣatra, nor fast required 1129.

Āryāsaptaśatī of Utpala, 602 (deals with predictions based on time of question asked).

Āṣāḍha, most important tithi in, is Ekādaśī, 95.

Āsana or Āsanas (vide under Gheraṇḍasaṁhitā, Haṭhayoga, Inscriptions, Śivasaṁhitā) 1424–1431; an aṅga of Yoga and defined as what is stable and comfortable in Y. S. (i. e. bodily posture) and in Gītā means seat covered with Kuśa grass, deer-skin and garment, 1424; handbook on, published by Śrī Kuvalayānanda, with 78 figures 1425; is first aṅga in Haṭhayoga, of which there are 84, most important being Siddhāsana 1426–28; names of 84 āsanas 1428; Padmāsana mentioned by Dakṣasmṛti and by Śaṅkara 1425n, 1426; photographs (108) of Ā. in Dr. Goswami's work, 1394: sixteen figures of Ā. in Dr. Behanan's work and more figures in other works 1425–26; ten Ā. named by Yogabhāṣya 1425–26; Yāj. Smṛti (III. 198) seems to have Padmāsana in view 1425 and n.

Asaṅga, a. of Mahāyānasūtrālaṅkāra, ed. by Levi 1050n; great teacher of Yogācāra 1050n; Tibetan tradition that A. introduced Tantricism in India examined 1033n; view of Dr. Bhattacharya that A. is the a. of Guhyasamājatantra criticized 1050n.

Aśānta, meaning of, in Tai. S. 723n.

Asat, meaning of, in Ṛg. X. 72. 2, Chān. Up. III. 19. 1, Bṛ. Up. I. 4. 7, Tai. Up. II. 7, 1488n.

Āśauca (days of impurity on birth or death), does not affect king in doing regal duties nor any one who is engaged in vrata or sacrifice, marriage etc. occurring after any one of these is begun 48.

Asceticism, not prescribed for all by śāstras 1628.

Ascetics, forbidden by Manu to secure alms by fore-telling results of portents or bodily movements 527; had to give up all property and beg for livelihood 944; many kinds of m. in Bṛhaj-jātaka 1645.

Asiatic Researches, volumes of 253, 498.

Āśleṣā, vide Gomukhaprasava-śānti; Śānti for birth of a son or daughter on certain parts of Ā. 771–72; serpent, presiding deity of Ā. 771n.

Āśmarathya, quoted by both P. M. S and V. S. and is quoted at least 16 times by Āp. Śr. sūtra, his views being often in conflict with Ālekhana's 1174..

Asmitā (in Yoga) defined, 1409n, 1417.

Aśoka, 493; Ahiṁsā of A. was qualified 1015; appointed officers called Mahāmātras to look after Buddhist Saṅgha, Brāhmaṇas, Ājīvikas and all other sects 1012; 12th Rock edict of, requires honour to be shown to all beliefs and sects 1012, 1481; edict 13 of, shows that he sent missionaries to five kings of the Near East about 258 B. C.; edicts 2 and 5 refer to Yavanas (Yona) 1634n; emphasized moral endeavour, disliked sacrifices, believed in gods and desired that people should strive for heaven 1016n; employs regnal years in his edicts 647; forbids festival meetings (samāja) 1017; his regulations about not killing birds and animals and about the sale of fish must have caused great hardships to poor people, 1015n; in later life appears to gloat over the fact that gods worshipped as divinities in Jambudvīpa had been rendered false 1015-17; Revenue settlement officers called Lājukas were given by A. powers of life and death 1015; Rock edicts 4 and 5 mention 'Kalpa' 686; Rupnath Rock Inscription words about gods have been differently interpreted by different scholars 1016-17; was not trained in Pali books and never mentions in all edicts fundamental tenets of early Buddhism such as four noble truths, noble eightfold path 1016n.

Aśokāvadāna, charges Puṣyamitra (called Maurya by it) with persecution of Buddhists, but Rhys Davids reserves judgement on this point 1009n, 1010.

Āśramas, each has its peculiar signs as characteristics (liṅga) 868n; Hindu scheme of, highly praised by Deussen 1026n; theory of, highly eulogized by Deussen 1646; word not found in Veda, but only in Śv. Up. though some āśramas were well known even in Vedic times 1643-44.

Āśramavāsika-parva, 616.

Aṣṭakā (8th tithi after full Moon in any month, particularly in Māgha) 65.

Aṣṭakavarga, astrological theory about seven planets and Lagna 591.

Astobha, meaning of, 1182 and n.

Astrologer, an established officer in Italy and later in French court, 543n; came to be looked upon in India as all important for the king 543; professional A. (for money) was looked upon as an unworthy Brāhmaṇa till about 500 B.C, 543.

Astrology (vide under Āthar-vaṇa Jyotiṣa, auspicious days, Babylonians, bhāvas i.e. houses in horoscopes, Greeks, Mahābhārata, planets, predictions, Ptolemy, Rāmāyaṇa, Utpala, Varāhamihira); among Assyrians A. was concerned with the interpretation of celestial phenomena 521, 548; Āthar-vaṇa Jyotiṣa divided nakṣatras into nine classes (each of three nakṣatras) and sets out what should be undertaken on each of nine classes 532–34, 579; based on Nakṣatras had been well developed in India before Ptolemy 558-61, 579, 597n; belief in A. was common throughout Europe and among Greeks after Alexander 548; believers in A. should now rest content with the simple rules of Gṛhyasūtras and Manu as regards Upanayana and marriage 639; birth of a boy on Jyeṣṭhā or Vicṛt (Mūla) held in Atharvaveda to be evil for the boy or parents 524; criticism of the main doctrines of Indian A. including dṛṣṭi, 635–638; dilemma for those who believe in A. 639; firm hold of A. on Indian mind for two thousand years or more and even in modern times 626–27; general A. (not horoscopic) like that in Reports of Babylonian priests prevalent in India, centuries before Christ 570; generally ignored by modern Western philosophers and scientists 630; high claims about importance and utility of A. made by Varāhamihira and others 546–48; horoscopic A. is later than natural A. 521; in Varāhamihira is not borrowed from Greeks 585; in ancient times the words 'astronomy' and 'astrology' were synonyms 483, 521; Indians who knew Nakṣatra a. centuries before Christ probably adopted it to rāśis on seeing zodiacal signs in Babylonian monuments about the time that the Greeks derived it 598–600; influence of, in England shown by several English words, 552–53; Kauṭilya knew general A. but not horoscopic 569–70; knowledge of A. found in Vedic works 521–525; long list of Varāhamihira's predecessors in A. 591–94; most important matters in Indian A. are rāśis, the planets and the twelve bhāvas 635: prejudice in ancient India against astrologers and star-gazers 527; Ptolemy's arguments in support of, 553–54; serious consequences of belief that planets caused persons to do certain things, 634; some predictions came true 631–32; spread from Greece to Rome about 2nd century B. C. 549; two circumstances that tended to weaken the influence of A. in Europe 551; was comparatively more scientific than hepatoscopy 522n; was cultivated by the side of astronomy in European Universities 551; works on Indian A. gradually disappeared owing to the excellent works of Varāhamihira 601; works on A. recommended that a child born on Āśleṣā or Mūla nakṣatra or on gaṇḍānta should be abandoned 632–33; world wars provided a powerful fillip in modern times for spread of A. 531.

Astronomers, Indian, of medieval times believed that all planets including the Sun and Moon were together at sunrise on Sunday of Caitra Śukla pratipad at beginning of Kaliyuga and of Kalpa 649; three schools of, (1) of Sūryasiddhānta, (2) of Brahmasiddhānta, (3) of Āryasiddhānta 649; two main points on which the schools of A. in india differ viz. (1) length of yeer, (2) the number of revolutions of the Sun, Moon and the planets in a Mahāyuga 711.

Astronomy (see 'Astrology', Greeks, 'Siddhāntas'), both a. and astrology are equally ancient and acted and reacted on each other 483; Cambridge Ancient History holds that whole science of a. is due to astrology, while Prof. Neugebauer and Mr. Doig hold that there is no evidence for this 483; discussion of Greek influence on Indian a. is of little interest, since most of the Greek material was well-known in Mesopotamia in the middle of the 2nd Millenium B. C, 518n; extensive Sanskrit Literature on Hindu A. perished 521, 531; in China, assumptions of antiquity of astronomy, should not be accepted at face value 509; Indian A. held by Dixit to be independent and based on Indian observations 484; Indian A. cannot be said to have been directly based on Ptolemy owing to serious discrepancies in essential matters and no direct evidence of being based on Hipparchus or other Greek writers 520-21; knowledge of, in Homer's and Hesiod's works not better than that of Vedic Indians 513; Sanskrit literature on a. and astrology falls into three slightly overlapping periods 484; study of constellations by monks was allowed by Buddha, though foretelling the future was condemned by him 527; works on Hindu A. recommended for reading 484-85.

Āsuri, acc. to Sāṅkhya-kārikā, Yogasūtrabhāṣya and Śāntiparva received Sāṅkhya system from Kapilamuni and expounded it to Pañcaśikha, 1356, 1372-73; an Ā. occurs in Vaṁśas in Bṛ. Up, as pupil of Bhāradvāja 1373; no quotation from him cited by any Sāṅkhya writer 1374.

Asutosh Mukerji (Sir), Silver Jubilee Volume 843.

Aśvaghoṣa, a. of Saundarananda 941; a. of Buddhacarita 1378.

Āśvalāyana-gṛhya-pariśiṣṭa 734.

Āsvalāyana-gṛhya-sūtra 26, 35n, 36, 126, 224n, 526n, 534, 536, 605, 609, 729n, 780n, 787n, 790, 802, 1161, 1228n, 1317n; com. of Gārgya Nārāyaṇa on, 1317n.

Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra, 18n, 26n, 123n, 724n, 731n, 816.

Aśvamedha (vide under Rājasūya) sacrifices lasted for a year in which there were 36 cycles of ten days, on each day of which the sacrificer was to listen to different branches of literature and legends 866; sacrifices performed by Puṣyamitra, Bhavanāga, Pravarasena I, Samudragupta and other kings 1028-29; supposed to remove the consequences of all sins, 1589n.

Āśvamedhikaparva, 127, 467, 683, 744, 945 (on ahiṁsā), 994, 1371, 1401, 1446, 1519, 1537n, 1571.

Aśvapati Kaikeya, boast of, in Chān. Up. 943, 1584n; expounds Vaiśvānara-vidyā to Uddālaka Āruṇi, 1578-79.

Aśvattha, name of Śravaṇa nakṣatra in Kāṭhaka and Pāṇini, 500.

Aśvattha tree, is called Bodhisattva in Padmapurāṇa 893.

Āśvayujī, one of the seven Pākayajnas m. by Gaut. performed on full Moon of Āśvina, 206.

Aśvins, different views as to what they stand for in Ṛgveda, 7; spoken of as wearing blue lotuses in Ṛgveda 35.

Ātatāyin, killing an Ā. brāhmaṇa is not brahma-hatyā 817n.

Ātharvaṇa-jyotiṣa 80, 532–34, 539, 541, 604; date of, difficult to decide 534; furnishes a scheme of nakṣatra astrology somewhat different from Vaikhānasa-smṛti and Yogayātrā 532–34; mentions week-days but not rāśis 534.

Ātharvaṇa-nakṣatra-kalpa, first part of Atharvapariśiṣṭas 499.

Atharva-pariśiṣṭa, 589n (on graha-yuddha), 734, 735n, 741 (67th pariśiṣṭa), 742 (on Utpāta-lakṣaṇa), 743, 745, 754, 759n, 761, 767, 770, 774, 779n, 780, 792-93, 795n, 796n, 798, 802n.

Atharvaśiras, Upaniṣad 786n, 918n.

Atharvaveda, 12n, 20, 22, 23n, 25n, 35, 62n, 63–65, 126, 194, 196n, 463, 486n, 487, 489, 494n, 495n, 496–98, 500, 524, 526n, 528, 538n, 563, 596n, 671, 702, 719n, 720–21, 726n, 727n, 729n, 730n, 732 (verses of, used in Śāntis on dreams), 734, 739–40, 745 (on Utpātas), 769 (abhaya-mantras), 771n, 796, 802n, 816, 985 (two interpretations of X. 8. 9), 1032, 1035 (magic spells in), 1036–37 (spells for softening the heart and for destroying worms), 1116 (on dīkṣā), 1153, 1181, 1213 (on joys of heaven), 1217n, 1259n (aṣṭakāmantra 'Yām janāḥ' etc.), 1291, 1360, 1387, 1433, 1471, 1489 (repeats 15 verses of Puruṣasūkta), 1493–95 (hymns on Creator and creation), 1498, 1500, 1526n, 1533, 1554 (Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa), 1622, 1625–26 (relied upon in V. S.), 1633, five Kalpas of A. are Nakṣatra, Vaitāna, Saṁhitā, Āṅgirasa and Śānti 735n.

Atheists, Bhagavadgītā describes their destiny 979–80.

Atideśa (process or method by which the details prescribed in connection with one sacrifice are tranferred to another rite) 1321–24; vide under Vidhyādi and Vidhyanta; may be provided by vacana (Vedic text) or by name, 1322–23; prakṛti (model or Archetype) is the name given to the sacrifice from which details are transferred and vikṛti is the name given to the sacrifice to which details are transferred 1322; 7th Chap. of P. M. sūtras deals with general question of the extension of details to Aindrāgna and other sacrifices, while the 8th Chap. deals with specific cases of A. 1321, 1323–24; Smṛtis and digests frequently resort to principle of A. 1322–23.

Atirudra, eleven times of Mahārudra 814.

Atithi (guest), flesh of an ox or goat, offered to king or brāhmaṇa coming as an A., according to Śat. Br., Vasiṣṭha, Yāj. 1267.

Ātivāhika (intermediate body between dead body and the future body for soul), 1600 and n.

Ātman (vide Brahman), resides in the earth and elements, is inside them; rules them and is the soul of all human beings, 1499; description of, in Br. Up. 1499.

Atomic theory; Democritus (who died in 370 B. C. in Greece) started it, 1486; in Kaṇāda, who does not expressly say anything about who started it, 1486; later Nyāya-vaiśeṣika writers combined two theories by saying that, when God desires to create, activity is produced in the atoms and creation starts, as stated in Tarkadīpikā, 1486.

Ātreya, on astrology, q. by Madanaratna, 736n, 789.

Ātreya, Dr., thesis, on 'Philosophy of Yogavāsiṣṭha' 1408n.

Ātreya, views of, quoted in P. M. S. and V. S. and called Muni by Śabara 1173-74.

Atri, writer of a work on Utpātas and pupil of Garga, 591, 766.

Atri, author of a Smṛti, 29n, 250, 810n, 948n, 949, 979, 1023n, 1419, 1442n, 1634n (mentions foreign tribes).

Atris, performed Saptadaśastoma three days before Viṣuvat and smote svarbhānu, 242; found out the sun afflicted with darkness by Svarbhānu (i.e. totally eclipsed) 982n.

Augustine, saint, called astrology a delusion 558; believed that religions outside the Bible as interpreted by him and others was the work of the devil 1608.

Aurangzeb, issued firmans for the destruction of famous temples at Somnath, Mathurā, Benaras, 1019.

Aurobindo, vide (Vedic Interpretation), a. of 'Hymns to the Mystic fire' 985; a. of 'On the Veda' (published in 1956) dealing with over 60 hymns and 283 pages are devoted to the elaboration of his theory that behind the ritual explanations there is always the true and still hidden secret of the Veda, 986; a. of 'The problem of rebirth', 1605; does not compare the several hundred passages in which the word ṛta occurs and translates ṛta as truth and 'truth consciousness' and 'ṛta-cit' also in the same way 986; his theory that many whhle hymns of the Veda bear on their face a mystic meaning and that the ṛṣis for the sake of secrecy resorted to double meanings, criticized 986-89, 991; he concedes that there are some keywords in the Ṛgveda such as ṛtu, kratu, śravas, ketu (most of which occur hundreds of times) and that elaborate work would have to be done to fix their meanings, but he does not himself undertake that task and fixes the meaning of ṛta from three passages only 988; A. and his disciple Kapali Sastry differ about the poetic character of the mantras 987n; makes a very wide generalization with very little basis 991; A.'s translation of 'ṛtacit' is shown to be wrong 988–89; explanation why Shri Aurobindo (who is called Mahāyogi by his disciples and admirers) was not mentioned in dealing with Yoga and Dharmaśāstra, 1462-63; faults that he finds with the old systems of Yoga stated and criticized 1465–66; his sādhanā was not founded on books, but upon personal experiences that crowded upon him and he constantly heard the voice of Vivekānanda for a fortnight in the jail 1465; life of A. written by Shri R. R. Diwakar (wherein he speaks of him as 'Mahāyogi') published in 1953, 1466n; life of A. by G. H. Langley (1949), 1466n; lived as a recluse from 1926 to his passing away on 5th December 1950 and gave darśana to people only on four days in the year, 1463 and n; long statement on 15th August 1947 (Independence day) in which he referred to the several dreams of his youth which he thought were on their way to fruition 1463–64; recent work 'Integral Philosophy of Aurobindo' containing 30 papers by Indian and Western scholars (1960), 1467; A. sets his heart on the unity of the human race to be achieved by inner oneness and purpose and not by an external association of interests, but his own efforts (in that direction, except by writings) are not discernible 1464–65; writings of, are many and voluminous, his magnum opus being 'Life divine', which is not easy to understand for men of ordinary intelligence 1466–67.

Auśanasa-smṛti 819.

Auspicious days, reference to, occurs even in the Ṛgveda 522; Soma sacrifice did not require auspicious day or nakṣatra 523.

Auspicious muhūrta, for constructing a house 540.

Auspicious nakṣatras, for caula, puṁsavana, marriage, 535; for wearing new garments or ornaments for the first time 626.

Auspicious objects, see Vasantarājaśākuna, 778; to be touched when leaving house after bath and homa on business 905.

Auspicious times, for all rites for gods 536; times for caula, upanayana, godāna, and marriage according to gṛhyasūtras 224, 535; A. times prescribed by Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad for rites to be performed by individuals 524, 534; A. nakṣatras and seasons prescribed for solemn Vedic sacrifices by Brāhmaṇa texts and Kalpasūtras, gṛhya and dharma sūtras 534; year for caula, 535.

Avalon, Arthur (Sir John Woodroffe, which see), 178n, 1033n, 1048n, (a. of 'Principles of Tantra), 1060 (a. of 'Serpent Power), 1048n, 1129n, 1131n; published many of the Hindu and Buddhist Tantras, 1050, 1105.

Avama-dina, explained 263.

Avantivarman, king of Kashmir 1075.

Āvāpa (decentralisation or scattering); example is Darśa-pūrṇamāsa, which are really two sets of sacrifices, 1332.

Avatāras (vide 'Bhāgavata', 'Buddha', 'Reincarnation'), 992–998; Agnipurāṇa describes the characteristics of the images of ten a. 996; all ten avatāras of Viṣṇu had become recognized throughout India at least before 10th century A. D. 996; are dwelt upon at great length in Purāṇas 992; Buddhists in the Mahāyāna teachings made Buddha go through many a. as Bodhisattva 993; conception of, may be traced to the Śat. Br. 992; conception of a. increased Dharmaśāstra material and gave rise to numerous vratas and festivals called Jayantīs 992, 998; derivation and meaning of the word 992; in modern times some persons pose or are made to pose as avatāras by their admirers 993; Indian theory of a. is connected with the theory of yugas 993; Kumārila (7th century A. D.) did not regard Buddha as avatāra of Viṣṇu 997; Lakṣmī follows Viṣṇu in all avatāras 996; Locus classicus on a. is Bhagavadgītā IV. 7–8, 993; none of the ten avatāras except Kṛṣṇa and possibly Rāma is expressly named in Bhagavadgītā 994; of Viṣṇu due to a curse of Bhṛgu 995n; one Pak Subuh who hails from Indonesia is suggested by Mr. J. G. Bennett as an avatāra for whom mankind is waiting 993; reference to Buddha as avatāra in Bhāgavata 995n; references from Purāṇas to each of ten a. 998; ten a. of Viṣṇu in medieval and modern times named in Matsya and Varāha Purāṇas 993; thirtynine a. of Vâsudeva in Ahirbudhnya-saṁhitā 996; thirty-three a. discussed by Dr. Katre 997; tithis of the appearance of, 262, 998n; Ṭoḍarānanda probably contains longest account of ten a. 998; twelve a. noted in Matsya and Padma 994; twenty-two a. of Viṣṇu in Bhāgavata 903n; Vāmana and Kṛṣṇa a. known centuries before Mahābhāṣya 997; Varāha avatāra m. in Gupta Inscription in the first year of Toramāṇa (about 500 to 510 A. D.) 997n; Vāyu-purāṇa mentions 28 a. of Maheśvara, last being Nakulī 996; verses on a. similar to those in Gītā from Harivaṁśa, Vāyu, etc. 993n; worship of avatāras from Narasiṁha to Kalkin yields different rewards, acc. to Varāhapurāṇa 263, 996.

Aveṣṭi, is a sacrifice performed as part of the Rājasūya-yajña that could be performed only by a kṣatriya, 1332; it is also an independent yāga that may be performed by any one belonging to the three varṇas 1332; Nirṇayasindhu relies upon this difference in Aveṣṭi for its conclusions about Devī-pūjā on different tithis 1332; word 'rājan' in 'Rājasūya' is held by PMS and Śabara to mean a kṣatriya only, while some late Dharmaśāstra works hold that the word 'rājan' may secondarily mean even a Vaiśya who becomes a ruler 1333, 1340.

Avidyā (nescience), consists (Y. S. II. 5) in regarding non-eternal as eternal, impure as pure, painful as pleasurable, non-self as self 1417.

Aviyoga-vrata, in which food was to be distributed to helpless people, to the blind and deaf 38-40.

Ayācita, is a substitute method for an absolute fast on ekādaśī 100-103.

Ayana, meaning of, in Ṛgveda, 491.

Ayanāṁśa (vide under 'calendar'), meaning of 711.

Ayodhyā, capital of Kosala 531.

Ayodhyākāṇḍa (of Rāmāyaṇa), 775 (dreams in).

Āyuṣyagaṇa (from Atharvaveda) 802n.

Āyuṣyamantras, 759 and n, 796n.

Āyuṣyasūkta, 758n, 802n (different views as to what is Ā.).

Ayutahoma (in which ten thousand oblations are offered); a kind of Navagrahaśānti 749-752; to be performed at marriages, establishment of images etc. 949.

Babylon: (see 'Chaldeans', 'signs of Zodiac'): apostrophized as the daughter of Chaldeans 548; intercourse between India (Punjab) and B. from 3rd Millenium B. C., 598-600; latitude of 542; peacocks, rice and Indian sandalwood under their Tamil names were known to Hebrew chronicles of Genesis and Kings 598; ratio of longest day to shortest, varied in ancient Babylon, 542-43; reports made by astrologers of B. to the king about the portents due to position of Sun, Moon and planets, 521, 548, 741n; upright stones placed in fields with inscriptions bearing curses and figures of zodiacal signs, 595.

Babylonians: B. and Assyrians based astrology on three assumptions 546; B. and Greeks had no generally believed doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma, 546; difference between B. astrology and Greek astrology 550-51; nakṣatras not integrated with religious systems in, 509; called Capricorn goat-fish 565n; imagined there were three ages of the world, gold, silver and copper 689n; no cuneiform tablet yet discovered where all the 27 or 28 nakṣatras are arranged in an orderly series 509; observations by B. of planets from 2nd millenium B. C., 570.

Bachhofer, Ludwig, 655 (criticizes Dr. Tarn).

Bacon, view of, that stars rather incline than compel, 551.

Bādarāyaṇa, predecessor of Varāha-mihira, quoted by Utpala, 561, 591; mentions Yavanendra 591.

Bādarāyaṇa: between Jaimini and B., Sāmavidhāna Br inserts two names and so B. is thus two generations later than J. 1161n; B. came to be confounded with Vyāsa, Pārāśarya but it is difficult to say when and why this confusion arose, 1169, 1171–73; held by Rāmānuja to be author of V. S. and also of Mahābhārata 1165; illustrations how V. S. deals with references to B. 1168; is A. of V. S., acc. to Śaṅkarācārya, 1162n, 1164–65; is different from Veda-vyāsa, acc. to Śaṅkarācārya 1166; no satisfactory reason offered why B. is mentioned only nine times in V. S. if all the five hundred fifty-five sūtras were composed by him, 1165; that several individuals separated by a century or more could have borne the name Bādarāyaṇa or Jaimini follows from Āp. Śr. S. and Pravaramañjarī, 1174; would be a grandson or a remoter male descendant of Badara 1169.

Bādarī, mentioned by both P. M. S. and V. S. four times each, would be son of Badara and P. M. S. mentions both Bādarāyaṇa and Jaimini five times each, 1169, 1173, 1193; differs from Jaimini by holding that Śūdras are entitled to perform Vedic sacrifices and on the interpretation of the word 'śeṣa' 1173, 1253, 1642; P. M. S. and V. S. both had before them a work of B. dealing with both P. M. matters and Vedānta 1173–4; trace of Bhartṛmitra's atheistic views none in B. nor of doctrines akin to Prabhākara's 1193.

Bagchi, Dr. P. C., a. of 'Studies in Tantras' 1034, 1039, 1048n, 1049, 1050n, 1064n (that words 'mother', 'sister' etc. in some Tantras with regard to coitus have esoteric sense); a. of paper on 'Cult of Buddhist Siddhācāryas' in 'Heritage of India' Vol. IV, pp. 273–79; a. of 'India and China' 1618n.

Bādha, 1327–28; Tantravārtika collects about three dozen cases of bādha in general, not dependent on conflict of Śruti, liṅga etc. or not falling under bādha as defined by Śabara for 10th chap, 1329.

Bādhva and Bāṣkali, story of, 1505.

Bahulā, 4th tithi of Bhādrapada dark half, 355.

Bahvṛcopaniṣad, 1045n.

Baijavāpa-gṛhya, 748.

Bakapañcaka, five days from Kārtika bright half eleventh tithi are so-called, on which all have to abstain from flesh-eating, 355.

Bakhshali MS. employs decimal notation 702.

Balābalādhikaraṇa, is PMS III. 3. 14; Dharmaśāstra works employ it, 1311.

Bālāki Gārgya was taught by Ajātaśatru, king of Kāśī 1639.

Bālakrīḍā, com. of Viśvarūpa on Yāj. Smṛti, 825, 826n, 1155n.

Bālambhaṭṭa, com. of, on Mitākṣarā (latter half of 18th century, A. D.), states that Vāyavīyapurāṇa is also called Śaiva, 831.

Bali, island of, in S. E. Asia, is still Hindu with four varṇas, 1618.

Balipratipadā, 201–207; see Govardhanapūjā; Bali addressed as future Indra 201; B. is also called Dyūtapratipadā, 203; Balirājya extends over three days from 14th in Divali, 204; cows, bulls and calves worshipped on this day, 204; Kārtika-śukla-pratipadā is so-called 201; gifts made on bath on this day become inexhaustible and please Viṣṇu 202; king to offer worship to Bali with his ministers and his brothers, 201; king should arrange for dramatic spectacles about kṣatriyas, 201; Mantra addressed to Bali 201n; most important item on this day is the worship of Bali 201–202; Lakṣmī becomes stable by illuminations on this day, 204; long list of observances on this day, 204; Mārgapālī on, described, 205; Naivedya to Bali included wine and meat 201; ordinary people also should establish in their houses image of Bali with white rice grains and worship it with flowers and fruits, 201; people even now engage in gambling on this day in some places, 203; procedure of the worship of Bali, 201; proper time for worship of Bali, when pratipadā is mixed with Amāvāsyā or dvitīyā 202; Śiva was defeated on this day in dice-play by Pārvatī, so gambling recommended on this day, 203; story of Bali, narrated in several Purāṇas is ancient, long prior to Mahābhāṣya 202–203, 997; Vāmana thrust Bali into nether regions, gave him overlordship of Pātāla and made him the future Indra, 202, 203.

Ballālasena, king of Bengal, a. of 'Adbhutasāgara', 'Dānasāgara' and also three other works not yet recovered: (vide Purāṇas, Upapurāṇas) 867 and 870; discarded Devīpurāṇa 869; Aniruddhabhaṭṭa was his guru 870n; composed Vratasāgara, Pratiṣṭhāsāgara and Ācārasāgara before Dānasāgara 870n; evinces in remarks on Purāṇas in Dānasāgara a bold critical faculty rare in medieval Sanskrit writers, 867; genealogy of, 870n; names numerous authorities and eight Upapurāṇas 867; states that Bhāgavata, Brahmāṇḍa and Nāradīya contained nothing on Dāna, 868.

Bāṇa, a. of Kādambarī, 39, 821–22, 1384; a. of Harṣacarita, 629, 705, 821–22, 955n.

Bannerjee N. G., theory of, about origin of Durgāpūjā as military rite, 187.

Bapat, Prof. P. V. writer of '2500 years of Buddhism' 1003, 1010–41 (view of, that Tibetan Tantricism is earlier than Hindu, criticized).
Bārhaspatya, cycle of 60 years (vide Saṁvatsara); phalas of each of the 60 years, 660–62.
Bārhaspatyasaṁhitā, 544n, 742n.
Bārhaspatya-sūtra (ed. by F. W. Thomas) 1039.
Barth, a. of 'Religions of India' (in French) tr. by J. Wood, 952n, 1003, 1007n, 1011, 1577
Barua, Dr. B. M,, a. of 'Gaya and Buddha Gaya' 598.
Basham, Prof. A. L., a. of 'History and doctrines of Ājīvikas' 1645n.
Bath, not to be taken at night as a rule except on eclipses, in marriages, on a birth and death, pilgrimage, Saṅkrānti, 218, 244; on Mahācaitrī and other eleven full moon days at certain holy places yields great rewards, 79.
Bauddhas, of Vijñānavādi school rely on Bṛ, Up. IV. 5. 13 as supporting them, acc. to Śabara 1218; heterodox hypotheses of B.acc. to Kumārila sprang from the arthavāda passages of the Upaniṣads and serve the purpose of inducing people to give up extreme attachment to sensual plesures and are useful in their own way, 1262.
Baudhāyana 99
Baudhāyana-dharmasūtra, 538, 681, 930, 934, 1257n, 1258 (on five different practices of the North and of the South), 1416n, 1436, 1441.
Baudhāyana-gṛhya-sūtra, 534, 535n, 610, 733n, 790.
Baudhāyanagṛhyaśeṣa-sūtra 749, 758 (on Ugrarathaśānti), 784, 787n, 790–1, 804, 814 (describes Rudrābhiṣeka)
Baudhāyana-śrautasūtra 505n, 519n, 722n, 727–8.
Baudouin, M. Charles, a. of 'Suggestion and auto-suggestion,' refers to Pratyāhāra and Dhāraṇā, 1447.
Baveru-Jātaka, shows trade by sea between India and Babylon 599.
Beal, a. of 'Buddhist Records of the Western World' 262, 1009 (on Śaśāṅka)
Bees, making honeycomb in a house, śānti for, 730.
Behanan, Dr. on 'Yoga, a scientific evaluation,' 1384, 1393, 1425, 1456.
Behaviourism–vide under J. B. Watson.
Behistun Inscription of Darius (522–486 B. C.), gives Pars as the name of a country, 850n.
Bell, Sir Charles, on 'Tibet, past and present' 1040.
Dr. Belvalkar, two propositions of, in Gopal Basu Mallik lectures on Vedānta viz. that Brahmasūtras were separately composed for the Chāndogya Up., the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Up., and other Upaniṣads for each and that the Śārīrakasūtra of Jaimini was bodily incorporated in the extant Brahma-sūtra, strongly criticized, 1175–76; paper of, on Māṭharavṛtti, 1354.

Bennett J. G. a. of 'Subud' (1958), puts forward Pak Subuh as avatāra 993.

Bergh, Prof. Van Pen, a. of 'Universe in space and time,' 571n.

Bergson, author of 'Time and Free Will', 475, 1575.

Bernard, Theos, a. of 'Haṭhayoga, the report of a personal experience', 1428n.

Berthelot, Alfred, a. of 'Transmigration of souls', translated by H. G. Chaytor, 1601.

Berossus, 189n, 690.

Besnagar Column Vaiṣṇava Inscription (2nd century B. C); of Heliodora, Yavana ambassador to an Indian king, 516n, 963.

Bhadrabāhu, Kalpasūtra of, 777 (on dreams).

Bhagavadgītā: (vide under 'Gīta, path, tolerance): 103, 127, 172, 467, 660, 692n, 695, 702n, 743, 869n, 918n, 929, 938, 958n, 960–62, 964–66, 970, 973, 978–79, 992, 994, 1006n, 1024, 1055n, 1066n, 1087, 1113, 1171–73, 1210, 1216n, 1357n, 1359–60, 1361n, 1364n, 1367n, 1373, 1378, 1379n, 1385, 1388n, 1401, 1431–2, 1434n, 1448, 1450, 1458, 1461 (frequent emphasis on secrecy, 1462 (path of Yoga and advaita Vedānta is most difficult and unattainable by most persons), 1465, 1478, 1508, 1511, 1557, 1563–4, 1567, 1569, 1598, 1600, 1628, 1630–31, 1635, 1648; difference between B. and Nārāyaṇīya section 961–62; is styled Yogaśāstra and each chapter of it is also styled 'Yoga', 1426–27; mentioned in Śāntiparva, 653, 656; puts Japa-yajña as the highest among Yajñas, 172; Padmapurāṇa devotes 1005 verses to māhātmya of B. 967; proclaims that doing one's work without an eye to the fruits thereof is worship and even the greatest sinner and persons of the lowest castes and mlecchas can reach the highest goal by bhakti of Kṛṣṇa, 968; Purāṇas follow with great emphasis the Gītā doctrine of Niṣkāmakarmayoga, 967–968; summaries of, in Agni and Garuḍa Purāṇas 967; tantras like Mahānirvāṇa employ Bh. IV. 24 as a mantra when offering wine 1059, 1087.

Bhagavat: both Saṅkarṣaṇa and Vāsudeva spoken of as B. in Inscriptions 964; connotation of the word B., 963; rarely applied to Śiva also, as in Mahābhāṣya 963; usually applied to Vāsudeva in ancient times, 963, though in a secondary sense to persons with special qualities such as knowledge of Vidyā and Avidyā 963; word B. is ancient, 963.

Bhāgavata-purāṇa 112, 129, 131, 139n, 147, 197n, 474 (on Kāla), 477 (elaborate scheme of units of time), 649n, 680n, 687n, 791n, 865, 839 (ten topics of Purāṇas), 845n (period between Parīkṣit and Nanda), 852, 857n, 861, 880, 903n, 920–21, 924, 950, 959n, 960 (three kinds of bhakti), 965 (on nine modes of bhakti), 966, 968, 970 (tolerance of worship of other gods), 972, 974, 979, 995, 1032, 1093 (worship of Viṣṇu is Vaidikī, Tāntrikī and Miśrā), 1120, 1169, 1280, 1373, 1384, 1440n, 1455, 1490n, 1637, 1642; date very controversial, ranging from 5th cen A. D. to 10th, 898–99 ; lengthy eulogy of Bh. in Padma 972; many medieval digests hardly ever rely upon Bhāgavata for Kṛṣṇajanmāṣṭamī 131 ; note on, 898-99; none of the early works on Dharmaśāstra, such as Mit., Kalpataru, draw upon it, 898 ; not quoted by Rāmānuja in bhāṣya on V. S. 957 ; numerous commentaries on, over 40 being listed, 957n ; papers on, brought together by Dr. Pusalker in 'Studies in Epics and Purāṇas', 898 ; regarded as the most important or sole authority by Vaiṣṇava teachers like Vallabha and Caitanya 957 ; Śrīdhara, commentator of, 845n, 866n ; very exaggerated praise of Bh. 972.

Bhāgavata (vide 'Mahābhāgavata') : means one who worships 'Bhagavat' (Vāsudeva), 963 ; Akrūra is styled Mahābhāgavata in some Purāṇas, 964 ; low stage reached by Bhāgavatas, acc. to Atri, 979–80.

Bhāguri, on Śakunas, a predecessor of Varāhamihira, 591, 622.

Bhakti, (loving faith in God and surrender to him) pp. 950–980 ; (vide under Kṛṣṇa, Nārāyaṇīya, Pañcarātra, saints, Sāttvata, Viṣṇu) ; ācāryas of bh. acc. to Nāradabhaktisūtra, 960n ; derivation and meaning of the word 'Bhakti' acc. to Śāṇḍilya and others 958–959 ; distinction between prapatti and bh. 960 ; doctrine of bh. had great appeal to all sections of Hindus and weaned them away from Buddhism 970 ; doctrine of 'Prapatti' based on the word 'prapadye' in Śv. Up. 952 ; doctrine that God's grace alone saves dovotee is found in Kaṭha and Muṇḍaka Upaniṣads 952 ; doing one's duties of the station in life without an eye to the rewards is worship (arcana) 967 ; eleven modes of, acc. to Nāradabhaktisūtra, 965 ; four classes of men take to the path of bhakti, of whom the 4th (jñānin) is very dear to God, 966 ; Gītā makes no express distinction between bh. and prapatti, but its final advice in XVIII, 65–66 comes close to prapatti, 960 ; Indra is addressed as sakhā and father in the Ṛgveda and is said to have given a young wife to old Kakṣīvat and become the wife of Vṛṣaṇaśva, 950–51 ; is difficult in Kali, acc. to Vallabhācārya 975n; is not an action and is also different from jñāna (knowledge), acc. to Śāṇḍilya, 960; list of important works on 657–58; Nārāyaṇīya section in Śāntiparva and Gītā are among the original sources of Bhakti cult, 952; Namaskāra (adoration or homage), apotheosis of, in the Ṛgveda, 952; names of the exemplars of the highest kind of bhakti and of middling kind, acc. to Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa, 960n; nine modes of, all of which need not be practised at the same time 965–66; of the dāsya type in Bhāgavata, 966; origin and vicissitudes of the cult of bh. acc. to Bhāgavata and Padma, 979; path of, said to be easier than that of knowledge in the Gītā, 965; peculiar cult of the bh. of Rāma and Sītā, 980; prapatti, five elements of, and relation to bhakti, 960; Purāṇas emphasize that even cāṇḍālas, mlecchas, Hūṇas, yavanas, become pure by bhakti of God, 968; Purāṇas lay very great emphasis on bh. 950; remembering the name of God (Kṛṣṇa and the like) with devotion is the highest expiation for sin, acc. to Viṣṇupurāṇa and Śāṇḍilya, 966; sakhya type of Bh. is that of Arjuna, 966; schools of Bh. formulated by Rāmānuja, Madhva, Caitanya, and Vallabha 971; sources of the cult of bhakti other than Śāntiparva are Gītā, Bhāgavata and Viṣṇupurāṇa, 956; Sāttvata or Pañcarātra proclaimed the path of bhakti 953; stories in Ṛgveda hymns about Indra's and Varuṇa's deeds for devotees (sometimes called 'friends') resemble medieval stories about Rāma and Śabarī and about Viṭhobā of Pandharpur for Dāmājī 950–52; striking development of bh. of erotic mysticism of Vallabha and Caitanya 980; Tāntrik works like Rudrayāmala take over the nine modes of bhakti, 965n; theory of Gītā that B. led on to prasāda (grace or favour) of God which enabled devotee to secure mokṣa, 961; two interpretations of Śāṇḍilya's definition of B. 958–59; various sub-divisions of B. in Purāṇas 960; various theories of Barth, Hopkins, Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar and others as to what Kṛṣṇa represented and how he was identified with Viṣṇu, 957; word 'Bhakti' does not occur in the principal ancient Upaniṣads, but occurs in Śvetāśvatara Up. 952; words 'Bhakti' and 'Bhakta' occur dozens of times in the Gītā, 956.

Bhakticandrikā, com. on Śāṇḍilya-bhaktisūtra 956n, 959.

Bhaktiprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya) 965n; explains at great length nine modes of bhakti, 965n, 998n, 1122.

Bhāmatī (commentary of Vācaspati on Śaṅkarācārya's bhāṣya on V. S.), 1153n, 1182n, 1183n, 1211, 1241n, 1250, 1293n (on the word 'rājan' among Āndhras), 1296 (on Brahmaloka in Chān. Up. VIII. 3. 2), 1298n, 1309n (on the Aindrī verse), 1310n, 1373–74, 1378, 1391, 1576n.

Bhandarkar, Dr. R. G., a. of 'Vaiṣṇavism, Śaivism etc.' 131, 472, 478n, 1048n, 1577.

Bhandarkar (R. G) Presentation Volume (or Commemorative essays) 650n, 643.

Bhandarkar, D. R, 'list of Inscriptions' by, 665, 978n.

Bhāradvāja-gṛhyasūtra, 535.

Bhāradvāja, on śakunas 591, 621–22; on Vyatīpāta and Vaidhṛti 707.

Bhāradvāja (Puṇḍola), disciple of Buddha, story of his rising in the air, 1037–38.

Bharata (Nāṭyaśāstra of), 1128.

Bharata, son of Duṣyanta (or Duṣpanta); Ait. Br. (39. 9) states that B. was crowned by Aindra Mahābhiṣeka and Śat. Br. speaks of Bharata, son of Śakuntalā and has some verses identical with those in Ait. Br. 1525–26n: Kālidāsa probably did not know that Bharatavarṣa was named after Śakuntala's son, 1525n.

Bhāratakaumudī, work in honour of Prof. R. K. Mukerji, 64n, 699n.

Bharatas, ancient tribe of people frequently mentioned in the Ṛgveda, 1525.

Bharatavarṣa: different views about the identity of the Bharata after whom it was so called, 1525–26 and 1614 (Śakuntalā's son); limits of, 1525–1527; m. in Khāravela's Inscription 1614; nine divisions of (some of which are called dvīpas) mentioned in several Purāṇas, 1000 yojanas from North to South and boundaries of, 1526 (and n); originally it appears B. was what is now modern India, but later B. was made to denote India as well as Greater India, 1526–27; Śabara shows that the language of cultured people was one i. e. Sanskrit from the Himālaya to Cape Comorin, 1527, Śabara, Mahābhārata, Purāṇas and Bṛhatsaṁhitā show that ancient Indian people identified their culture with B. i. e. with the country and not with race, 1527.

Bhārata War, date of, 648–649.

Bhāratīya Vidyā, Journal, 645.

Bhārgava, writer on astrology 766n.

Bhārgavārcanadīpikā, 90n.

Bhartṛhari, philosophical grammarian, author of Vākyapadīya, 475, 1396.

Bhartṛmitra (between 400–600 A. D.), an interpreter who made P. M. atheistic, 1198, 1205n; his work was called Tattvaśuddhi, acc. to Umbeka 1198.

Bhāskara, commentator on Brahmasūtras, 1155n.

Bhāskarācārya (born in 1114 A. D.), 697n, 702 (uses pūrṇa in the sense of zero); a. of Grahagaṇita, 649n; a. of Siddhāntaśiromaṇi, 697n.

Bhāskararāya, a. of com. Setubandha on Vāmakeśvaratantra 1045; called Bhāsurānandanātha after dīkṣā 1071, 1126; holds that Ṛg. V. 47. 1 refers to Kādividyā, 1045; hyperbolic praise of, 1071.
Bhāṣya, defined 1182.
Bhatt, Prof. G. H. 957n.
Bhattācārya B., paper of, on 'Ten Avatāras' 263.
Bhattāchārya (Prof. Golokendranath), 125n.
Bhattacharya, Prof. T. 497n, 668n.
Bhattacharya, Mr. Bhabatosh, editor of Dānasāgara in B. I. series in 4 parts, 867, 870; a. of paper on 'Yogi-Yājñavalkyasmṛti and its utilization in Bengal digests', 407.
Bhattacharya Dr. B., a. of Intro. to 'Buddhist Esoterism' 1033n, 1050n, 1069n (Dhyānibuddhas, their śaktis, kulas etc), 1075, 1115 (on Siddhas of Vajrayāna); a. of Intro. to Sādhanamālā, 1038, 1039, 1042, 1050n; a of Intro. to 'Guhyasamājatantra', 1042, 1050n, 1069n, 1071n (wrong translation of a verse), 1077n; a. of 'Buddhist Iconography', 1131n; a. of paper on importance of Niṣpannayogāvali, 1133n.
Bhattacharya, D. C.; a. of paper on the tāntrik work of Vidyāpati, 1676n.
Bhattacharya, Prof. Duragāmohan, 1625–26.
Bhattacharya, Prof. H. D., paper of, on 'Vicissitudes of Karma doctrine', 1605.
Bhattacharya Sri Siddhesvara, 1383 (on Bhāgavata).
Bhattacharya S. P. 1408n.
Bhāṭṭadīpikā 1230n.
Bhattasali, N. K., a. of 'Iconography of Buddhist and Brahmanical sculptures in Dacca Museum', 1131n (for mudrās).
Bhāva (or Bhāvas, acc. to context): (vide under Thibaut): differences between Varāhamihira and Firmicus as to matters indicated by B. 540; names of twelve B. 578–79; naming and arrangement of B. follows hardly any rational basis, 636–37; system of B. known to Ptolemy, though he paid little attention to it 533; system of B. known to many writers before Varāhamihira, some of whom like Garga and Parāśara are assigned to 50 B. C. by Kern 579; table of twelve B. with synonyms, seven only of which correspond with Greek words and some others convey the matters judged from them 578; terms that apply to a group of Bh. 578; terms Karma and Mṛtyu occur in both Nakṣatra and rāśi astrology 531; terms (at least five) such as Janma and Sampat that occur in Ātharvaṇajyotiṣa correspond in name and import with tanu, dhana and other terms used in Varāha's works 533n; what was to be predicted from each of twelve B. 578–79.
Bhavabhūti: fifth in ascent from him performed Vājapeya (about first half of 7th century A. D.) 629.

Bhavadāsa, (between 100–200 A. D.), Śabara's predecessor on Jaimini, named by Ślokavārtika 1159n, 1160, 1197.

Bhavadevabhaṭṭa, m. by Raghunandana 919; a. of 'Prāyaścittaprakaraṇa' 1242, 1296.

Bhāvā Gaṇeśa, a. of com. Tattvayāthārthyadīpana on Sāṅkhya and on Yogasūtra, 1382, 1394, 1412n.

Bhāvanā, doctrine of B. is the very heart of vidhis 1235; meaning of, 1235; śābdībhāvanā gives rise to ārthībhāvanā 1236; two kinds of, viz. śābdī (word force) and ārthī (result producing force), 1235–36; three elements in each of the two bhāvanās described, 1236.

Bhavanāga, of Bhāraśiva lineage, performer of ten Aśvamedhas 1028.

Bhavanātha (between 1050–1150 A. D.), a. of Nayaviveka 1199.

Bhavānī, known to Pāṇini, as wife of Bhava (i. e. Rudra) 185n.

Bhāvanopaniṣad (on Tantra) is a late work 1051, 1218.

Bhaviṣyatpurāṇa, named by Āp. Dh. S. 817; by Matsya and Varāha Purāṇas 818; contained dynastic names acc. to Matsya and Vāyu, 851.

Bhaviṣyapurāṇa, 32, 38–40, 43–45, 54, 57, 70, 77n, 78n, 79n, 82, 90, 92, 96, 102, 110, 113, 115n, 119n, 124, 132n, 137–8, 148–158, 161n, 164n, 178n, 181n, 184n, 199, 200n, 204n, 212n, 220n, 572n, 660, 683n, 734 (on śāntis), 748–9, 779n, 810n, 851, 868 (part discarded by Ballālasena because tainted with heretical doctrines), 869, 924, 926n, 1096n, 1105, 1106, 1152n, 1262 (divides smṛti contents into five categories); divided into four parvans of which only the first viz. Brāhma can claim an early date, the Pratisargaparvan being a modern fabrication 896–7; note on 896–898; not earlier than 6th or 7th cen. A. D. 898; was revised by Śāmba, acc. to Varāhapurāṇa, 898.

Bhaviṣyottara Purāṇa; 40, 43, 89, 93n, 94, 97n, 108n, 119n, 122, 124n, 128, 131, 132n, 135, 137n, 142, 149–50, 153, 157n, 194, 210, 218, 238, 240, 753–4, 869; held not authoritative by Ballālasena, 869: not later than 1000 A. D. 897.

Bhikṣu, casts off all desires and practises begging, 1169; Gaut. provides that a bhikṣu should beg for food and Bṛ. Up. also states that those who realize brahman give up desires and practise begging 1169; represents Sannyāsa order, 1169.

Bhikṣusūtra, mentioned by Pāṇini as composed by Pārāśarya, might refer to Pañcaśikha's work who was described as Pārāśarya and Bhikṣu in Mahābhārata 1169n.

Bhīma, fight of, with Duryodhana 767.

Bhīmaparākrama, a work of king

Bhoja, 62n, 710, 762.
Bhīṣma, though unmarried, performed Aśvamedha 1280.
Bhīṣmaparva 129, 532n, 743–44, 769 (images of gods trembling), 774 (portentous births), 900n, 1470n, 1528.
Bhoja, king of Dhārā (1st half of 11th century A. D.); composed (or got composed) numerous works, such as Bhūpālakṛtyasamuccaya, Bhujabala, Rājamārtaṇḍa (on astrology), 58, 884 (four works of, on Dharmaśāstra and astrology); a. of com. Rājamārtaṇḍa on Yogasūtra 1377, 1394.
Bhojaka : 779n (to whom one's dream was to be declared);
Bhojakaṭa : m. in Brahmapurāṇa as capital of Rukmin of Vidarbha and in Fleet's 'Gupta Inscriptions' 588 and n.
Bhrātṛ–dvitīyā, same as Yamadvitīyā, 207–210 ; an independent festival tacked on to Divali 209 ; hardly any religious ceremony observed in these days 208 ; on 2nd of bright half of Kārtika 207 ; procedure on, 207, 208 ; worship of Yama, Yamunā and Citragupta and some other details found in medieval digests are now dropped 208.
Bhṛgu (writer on astrology and astronomy) 591, 664n.
Bhṛgu–saṁhitā (on astrology), criticism against claims of possessing it, 634–635.
Bhujabala or Bhujabalanibandha ; 42n, 61n, 62, 71n, 110n, 240n, 243n, 249n, 547, 555n, 560, 572, 890 (quotes Devīpurāṇa); Bhūpāla means Bhūpālakṛtyasamuccaya of Bhoja, 70.
Bhūtaśuddhi, in Mahānirvāṇatantra, 1095n.
Bhūtārthavāda or Bhūtārthānuvāda ; examples of, 1241 and n ; explained by Śabara and Śaṅkarācārya (on V. S. I. 3. 33) who calls it Vidyamānavāda 1241n.
Bhuvanakośa or Bhuvana–vinyāsa, described in Brahmapurāṇa, Kūrma, Matsya, Vāyu (has 1000 verses), 1527.
Bible, says that Jesus did not expound all things to all people but only to his disciples, 1461n; is intolerant and pessimistic 1624n, 1630n.
Bījanighaṇṭu, 1058n (a list of Tāntrik Mantras), 1097.
Bilva, tree, twig of, to be brought in the house on a certain day and tithi in Durgāpūjā, 181.
Biot, 510.
Birds, cries of Kapiñjala, Kapota, owl and others indicative of coming good or evil in the Ṛgveda 729–30, 804–5.
Birds and animals, when on the right side of one going on a journey indicate auspicious results, 526.
Birth, on certain nakṣatras like Āśleṣā and Mūla inauspicious, 605.
Bland, N., on Mahomedan interpretations of dreams 781.
Bloch, Jules, edited and translated in French Aśoka Inscriptions, 1016n.

Bloomfield, 740n; a. of 'Religion of the Veda' 1491; edited Kauśika-sūtra, 770n.

Bodhāyana: acc. to Prapañcahṛdaya, B. composed a commentary on both PMS and VS, while Rāmānuja says he composed a bhāṣya on Brahmasūtra, 1186n, 1197.

Bodh Gaya 1018.

Body (human), has nine openings (mouth, nostrils, eyes etc.) 702n, 1364n.

Bogozkeui: vide under 'Mitanni'; Inscription of, about 1400 B. C. regarding treaties between the king of Hittites and king of Mitanni that had gods Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa and Nāsatya in their pantheon 598–99; archives of, contained a treatise on horse training by one Kikkuli of Mitanni, which discusses technical terms akin to Sanskrit 599.

Bollinger and Negelein, editors of Ātharvaṇa-nakṣatra kalpa, 499.

Bombay Gazetteer 653.

Bose, D. N., a. of 'Tantras, their philosophy and occult secrets,' 1081 (explains five makāras esoterically), 1149n.

Bouche-Leclercq, a. of 'Astrologie Grecque' (1899): 548, 550, 552, 565n, 566n, 571, 581–3, 585.

Brahman, (vide under Creation); defined in Tai. Up. II. 1, 1424n; described as 'neti neti' (not this, not this) in Br. Up. II. 3. 6, IV. 2. 4–22, IV. 5. 15, III. 7. 26, 1504; distinction made in Upaniṣad texts between saguṇa br. that was for prayer and worship and nirguṇa brahma 1498; it is impossible to define what br. is, we can only say what it is not 1505; is said to be endowed with all powers in VS. and by Śaṅkarācārya, 1045; passages of Upaniṣads referring to nirguṇa br. cited, are Br. Up. III. 9. 26, IV. 4. 19 and 22, IV. 5. 15, Chān. Up. VII. 24. 1, Śv. Up. VI. 19, Kaṭha IV. 10–11; para br. is conceived as beyond space, time and causality 1505n; real truth (pāramārthika satya) about br. is that it is one, that everything in the world (men, animals, matter) is br. 1498–99; śāstras (Vedānta texts) are sources of the correct knowledge of br. and that they are agreed that their purport is to establish that br. 1484–85; seeker after br. reaches it by the practice of truthfulness, tapas, samyag-jñāna and brahmacarya, acc. to Muṇḍaka, 1423; story of Bādhva conveying idea of br. to Bāṣkali by remaining silent 1505; Tai. Br. describes br. as the tree from which heaven and earth were chiselled out 1489n; when it is said that the world is non-different from brahman, it is not meant that they are identical, but the meaning is that the individual selves and the world are not entirely different from brahman 1510.

Brahmā (see 'Viṣṇu'); day of Br. equal to Kalpa 688, 690; figure to which the life of br.

in human years extends is colossal 690; fifty years of life of Br. are gone and the present is Vārāhakalpa and Vaivasvata Manvantara 690; is supposed to have created world on first tithi of Caitra bright half 82; seven sons of, 1372; some held that life of Brahmā was 108 years, 690, 697.

Brahmacārī, word occurs in Ṛgveda, 7.

Brahmacarya, (vide under 'Mahatma Gandhi'); is very strict for Yogin (viz. he is not even to look at, talk to or touch women 1420n; when a householder may be called an observer of B. 1421.

Brahmacarya, also means periods of study from 48 to 3 years for a Vedic student prescribed by Gautama, Āp., Manu etc. 1252.

Brahmagupta (astronomer born in 598 A. D.) 484, 515n, 680n, 696–7; criticized the Jaina view about there being two suns and two moons, 511n; condemned 'Romakasiddhānta' as outside the pale of smṛtis,' 515n.

Brāhmaṇa or Brāhmaṇas (vide under gifts, pātra, priests); all brāhmaṇas were not priests, are not priests in modern times and all temple priests are not always brāhmaṇas 936; every b. was not a proper recipient for gifts in ancient Indian times 937; difference of view on killing an ātatāyin b. 817n; gifts (religious) to be made acc. to śāstras, Manu and other Smṛtis only to pātra (deserving) br. who has learning, character and tapas, 937; gifts made to brāhmaṇa not learned in Veda or who is avaricious or deceitful were deemed fruitless by Manu and to lead donor to hell 938; had no power to raise taxes like tithes nor was there a regularly paid hierarchy of priests and bishops as in England, 937; high ideal placed before br. of plain living, of giving up active pursuit of riches, of devotion to study, pp. 936–38, 1637; how importance of birth as a brāhmaṇa arose 1639–40; lores to be studied by a learned brāhmaṇa, acc. to Gautama Dh. S. 818; maintaining themselves by practising astrology were unfit for being invited to perform rites for gods or for śrāddha dinner acc. to Manu 527; Manu and others provided that in rites for pitṛs the learning and character of b. should be carefully scrutinized, but Purāṇas did away with this, particularly at Gayā 930–32; of Mathurā are like gods, says Varāhapurāṇa 932; Mahābhārata emphasizes that good character makes a brāhmaṇa 100n; milk is vrata of, 18; most Br. studied only one Veda or a part of it, 1182; only br. were entitled to drink Soma beverage in Vedic sacrifices 853; performed solemn Vedic sacrifices like Vājapeya 1029; reasons or basis of the veneration paid to brāhmaṇas for over three thousand years, 1640; result of threatening or striking or injuring (with blood from wound) a brāhmaṇa declared in Tai. S., which is interpreted in two ways by different writers, 1544–45; substantial sources of income were only three, viz. teaching, officiating as priests at sacrifices of others and receiving gifts made voluntarily which were fitful, variable and precarious, 937, 1638–39; to learn vidyā from a kṣatriya was unnatural or unusual in Upaniṣad times, 864; to be fed in all vratas, 39; tribute paid in passing to the ancient brāhmana ideal by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru 1640; vast Vedic and classical literature was cultivated, preserved and propagated mostly by brāhmaṇas with arduous labour and the Ṛgveda was preserved by them with unparalleled care, 936, 1637–38; were asked to study Veda and subsidiary lores without any eye to motives of profit as a duty and to understand it, to teach the Veda without demanding a fee beforehand, to perform sacrifices and to make gifts, 937; who is not a Vaiṣṇava is declared as a heretic by Padmapurāṇa and Vṛddha-Hārīta 976; Yāj. provides that even a learned br. should refuse gifts and that the king should donate to learned brāhmaṇas, land, houses and marriage expenses or br. should approach a king or rich person for their 'Yogakṣema' 936.

Brāhmaṇa or Brāhmaṇas (texts, acc. to context), all those parts of the Veda which are not or cannot be called mantras constitute B. 1222–23; are primary sources of information about sacrifices, ritual, priests etc. 1223; contain oldest prose found in any Indo-European language 1223; contain numerous myths and legends, 1223; contents can be divided into two classes viz. vidhis (hortatory) and arthavādas (explanatory or laudatory) 1223; often mention contests between Gods and Asuras and abound in etymologies 1223; order (krama) of rites as expressed in mantras is to be preferred to the order contained in Br. texts 1316; principal purpose and aim of Br. of the Veda is to prescribe the rituals of sacrifices, to narrate myths and legends about sacrifices and to state rewards of sacrifices, 1497; ten characteristics of B. acc. to Vṛttikāra 1223n.

Brāhmaṇaka, a country where brāhmaṇas followed profession of arms, acc. to Pāṇini 1638.

Brahmaṇaspati, as the creator of Gods in Ṛg. X. 72. 2, 1485.

Brahmāṇḍa-Purāṇa (vide note on pp. 895-96); 90n, 117, 119, 133, 147, 149, 184n, 541, 649n, 652n, 687, 690n, 693, 734, 735n (on Kalpas of Atharvaveda), 748, 817, 822, 824n, 840n, 841

(many verses identical with those of Vāyu), 845n (on period between Parikṣit and Nanda), 850n, 851–2, 853n, 854–56, 861–3, 903n, 920 (Saptārcis mantra), 939n, 946–7, 960 (three kinds of bhakti), 976–77, 994 (list of Avatāras–different from usual one), 1042 (Lalitāmāhātmya of), 1102, 1187n (has verses that are also found quoted by Śabara), 1223n, 1372n, 1383, 1390n, 1470n, 1521, 1526, 1528, 1574, 1629n (for word 'sanātana-dharma), compiled or revised about 320–335 A. D. 854; probably composed near the source of the Godāvarī, 895; divided into four pādas besides Lalitopākhyāna 845; is fond of etymologies, 890; one of the oldest of Purāṇas, has hundreds of verses in common with Vāyu 896; Skanda says there was first only one Purāṇa, viz. Brahmāṇḍa, 895.

Brahmapurāṇa 43, 45, 82, 90, 106n, 118–9, 169n, 201n, 202–3n, 221, 243, 588n, 660, 682, 686n, 687, 691, 693, 695, 754, 763n, 824n, 833, 851, 857, 862n, 903n, 915–16, 919, 929, 931, 935, 947n, 950, 962n, 964, 968, 971, 994n, 1046n, 1096n, 1120, 1121 (on nyāsa), 1127n, 1132, 1213, 1383 (on Sāṅkhya), 1431n, 1438n, 1521 (on creation), 1526n, 1527–8, 1582, 1590, 1628n; chapters 10–175 containing 4640 verses deal with tīrthas, 894; composed between 10th and 12th A. D. acc. to Prof. Hazra, 894; has 10000 verses acc. to Nāradīya and 25000 acc. to Agni, but the printed one has about 14000 verses, 833; one recension of B. discarded by Ballālasena, 869, 894; Note on, 893–94; present B. probably compiled in some part through which the Godāvarī flows 894; that printed in Ānan. Press appears to be a late compilation and numerous quotations in Jīmūtavāhana, Aparārka, Ballālasena are not found in it, 893.

Brahmārpaṇa, meaning of, 1412n.

Brahmasāvitrīvrata, 92, 94n.

Brahmasiddhānta 66n.

Brāhmasphuṭa-siddhānta, 511n, 515n, 649n, 658, 676, 680n, 696n.

Brahmasūtra-vide Vedāntasūtra; Gītā had before it several works, called Brahmasūtra, 1173–4.

Brahmavaivarta-purāṇa (note on, 894–95); 34, 95n, 97n, 104n, 106, 114, 119n, 125, 129, 132n, 134n, 135n, 138, 148, 213n, 774; printed in Ānan. Press, Poona, in four kāṇḍas, viz. Brāhma, Prakṛti, Gaṇapati and Kṛṣṇajanma; several verses q. in Sm. C, Hemādri as from it are not found in the printed one 895.

Brandon, S. G. F., a. of 'Time and mankind' 475.

Breasted, a. of 'Ancient Times' 521n.

Bṛhadāraṇyakopaniṣad, 24, 62, 103, 126, 464, 475, 491, 525, 534, 559, 670, 732n (on dreams), 771n, 772n, 864n, 866, 918, 944–5 (emphasis on dayā), 972 (on last thought), 1043 (explains Ṛg. VI. 47. 18), 1063n (on 72000 nāḍīs), 1097 (eulogy of Gāyatrī), 1131 (maṇḍala of the Sun), 1169, 1202, 1295, 1358n, 1364n (derivation of Puruṣa), 1370 (Yājñavalkya expounds brahman to Janaka and answers angry brāhmaṇas in his court), 1373 (vaṁśas), 1387-88, 1403n, 1404–5, 1417n, 1433 (prāṇa as symbol of brahman), 1435, 1448, 1451n, 1459n, 1460, 1468 ('mantavyaḥ' implies tarka), 1471, 1478, 1481, 1486, 1488n, 1499, 1501, 1504, 1507–8n, 1512–3, 1535 (frequently has the words 'apa punarmṛtyum jayati'), 1541 (I. 4. 10 quotes Ṛg. IV. 26. 1), 1545, 1547–50, 1554–9, 1566–7, 1575–76 (Free will and Determinism), 1577–80, 1585, 1587, 1602–4, 1626–27 (noblest prayer in), 1631n (sāyujya and salokatā occur), 1633–34, 1644 (on āśramas).

Bṛhadāraṇyakopaniṣad-bhāṣya-vārtika, 1602n.

Bṛhad-dharma-purāṇa, 896.

Bṛhad-devatā, 60n, 486n.

Bṛhad-yama, 238.

Bṛhajjātaka of Varāhamihira, 479, 545n, 547–48, 559, 561n, 562, 564, 567n, 568–75, 577, 580, 582–85, 586n, 587n, 589–91, 597, 601n, 618, 624n, 638, 657n, 711n, 1645; rising times of zodiacal signs in B. are same as those in the Babylonian system, acc. to Prof. Neugebauer 597.

Bṛhaj-jābālopaniṣad, 1076n.

Bṛhad-yoga (or -gi) yājñavalkya 31n, 42, 860n, 1152n (reads 'Purāṇa-tarka-mīmāṁsā' in Yāj. I), 1217 (on samuccaya of jñāna and karma), 1391, 1404, 1416n, 1419n, 1438n, 1439n, 1440 (same three verses as in Manu), 1442n; cited as Yoga (or Yogi) Yājñavalkya in medieval digests, 1404; not later than 7th Cent. A.D. but is not the Yogaśāstra m. in Yāj. Smṛti (III. 110), 1408; reproduces in verse Yogasūtra I. 24 and 28–29 as Śruti 1412n; verses cited by Aparārka and Smṛticandrikā as from Yoga-Yāj. are found in this but not in Yoga-Yāj. ed. by Mr. Diwanji, 1407; Viśvarūpa appears to quote a half verse from it 1407.

Bṛhad-yogayātrā of Varāhamihira, 70n, 529n, 533, 540, 545n, 558n, 591–94, 617, 622, 627n, 749, 753 (follows Yāj. about Grahayajña), 755, 774, 776, 778, 799, 800n, 801, 804–5, 808, 878.

Bṛhan-nandikeśvara-purāṇa, 156.

Bṛhan-nāradīya purāṇa, 892; is a sectarian Vaiṣṇava work, different from the Nārada-purāṇa, 892.

Bṛhaspati, Smṛti writer; fragments of, collected by Prof. Ayyangar, 42n, 117n, 145n, 876n, 1032, 1265–66, 1302–03 (conflict of interpretation about reunion among medieval digests); asisgned to Manusmṛti a pre-eminent position, 1265.

Bṛhaspati, a. of a work on Rājanīti 1001, 1033.

Bṛhaspati, planet Jupiter, 494n (presiding deity of Puṣya), 572 (indicative of life, happiness and knowledge).

Bṛhaspati, verses of, quoted under Cārvākadarśana by Sarvadarśanasaṅgraha, closely resemble verses from Viṣṇu and Padma Purāṇas, 974n.

Bṛhatī, com. of Prabhākara on Śabara's bhāṣya 1179n, 1189; com. on B. is Ṛju-vimalā of Śālikanātha, 1179n, 1189.

Bṛhat-saṁhitā of Varāhamihira, 69–70, 150n, 187, 191n, 193, 216n, 242n, 465n, 476 (on units of time from kṣaṇa to kalpa), 477, 516 (praise of Yavana astrology), 517n, 519, 520, 526 (birds' flights indicate good or bad acts of person going on journey in his former lives), 530, 531n, 540–41, 543n, 547n, 559–60, 561n, 564, 574n, 584, 589n, 591–94 (names of predecessors), 607n, 608–09, 611, 613n, 616, 622, 624, 637n, 650–55, 658, 660, 662, 680, 683n, 704, 708, 711n, 734 (45th chap. of, on Śāntis), 745–47, 763 (causes of earthquakes), 764 (premonitory signs of earthquakes), 765 (criticizes vṛddha-Garga and Parāśara), 767n, 768n (quotes 12 verses of Ṛṣiputra), 769, 773–74, 783n, 793 (Puṣyasnāna), 794n, 795n, 797, 801, 804–05, 826, 877 (verses that are also found in Matsya and Viṣṇudharmottara), 878, 996 (Buddha image described), 1024 (mentions mantra 'Yāntu Devagaṇāḥ' used even now), 1046n (rules about images of Durgā), 1132 (on Maṇḍala), 1528 (names of countries in Bharatavarṣa).

Bṛhaṭ-ṭīkā of Kumārilabhaṭṭa, referred to by Nyāyaratnākara and verses from it q. by Nyāyasudhā and Jaiminīyasūtrārthasaṅgraha, 1188.

Bridges, Robert, a. of 'Testament of beauty' (on what is reasonable), 1477.

Briggs, W. G. a. of 'Gorakhnath and the Kanphatas', 1429.

British Imperialists and hypocritical talk of 'White man's burden' 1619.

British rulers of India were generally opposed to progressive social reform in India 1636n.

Bromage, Bernard, a. of 'Tibetan yoga', 1394.

Brown G. W., a. of paper in 'Studies in honour of Bloomfield', 1434, 1531; conjectures that even words 'Yoga, Sāṅkhya and Upaniṣad' are coined from some Dravidian words now lost, 1531.

Brunton, Paul, a. of 'A search in Secret India', 1393.

Buddha (vide under Bhāradvāja, dhamma, Edwin Arnold, Hīnayāna, nirvāṇa, śūdras, taṇhā, Upaniṣads), came to be regarded by Hindus as avatāra before 1000 A. D., but some Purāṇas and Kumārila in 7th century A. D. did not regard him so, 934, 914, 993, 1025; Ceylon tradition about Parinirvāṇa of, 356; characteristics of Buddha image, acc. to Bṛ. S. 996; claims that he only follows an ancient path, 1005; did not clearly define what he meant by nirvāṇa 941, 1008; did not think much of worship or prayer, 1007-08; expounded the four Noble Truths (or axioms, viz. Duḥkha, the cause of it viz. taṇhā, suppression of duḥkha and Noble Eightfold Path to suppression, 939-40; Kumārila quoting Purāṇas condemns B. as one that caused confusion as to Dharma, 824; life of B. has a noble grandeur and human appeal 1021; main matters of controversy between B. and Hindus of his day, 1007; Nārada-purāṇa holds that one entering B. temple cannot be purified by any expiation 892; Nirvāṇa era 656; Noble Eightfold path described, 939n, 1005; original teaching of B. was swamped by Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna, 1070; Parinirvāṇa of B in 483 B. C. or 477 B. C., 1070; philosophical schools 63 in times of B. mentioned by Mahāvagga 913n; preached in his first sermon the avoidance of two extremes, 939; B. rejected permanent ego and yet accepted doctrine of rebirth 941, 1004, 1577; spent forty-five years for suffering humanity 941; taught that Salvation may be attained even in this very life, 942n, 1008; taught that it was unnecessary to be definite about God's existence and similar matters, 1007; teaching of B. held out the same promise of liberation to all men and was most attractive to śūdras and women, 925, 929-30; three early and central conceptions were Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha 941; was a great reformer of the Hinduism of his times and laid sole stress on moral effort, satya, and ahiṃsā, 939-40, 1004; was against admission of women in the Saṅgha (Order), but yielded to persistent requests of Ānanda and prophesied that his pure dharma would flourish owing to this only for five hundred years instead of for a thousand years, 1025-26, 1069-70.

Buddhacarita of Aśvaghoṣa; mentions Kapila and 25 tattvas, 1378; speaks of Jaigīṣavya and Janaka, 1375, 1392, 1409n.

Buddhism (vide under Buddha, Hindus, India, Mahāyāna, Śūdras, Vajrayāna); became a medley of dogmas and was rent by dissensions 1021; causes of the disappearance of, discussed, final blow being given by Bakhtiyar Khilji, 1003, 1030; changes in doctrines and ideals of B. were great before the Christian era and for some centuries afterwards 940–41; daśaśīlas prescribed for all priests and pañcaśīlas for all Buddhists and both these were derived from Upaniṣads and Dharmasūtras 943–44; decline of Buddhism had set in about first half of 7th Century A. D., 1003, 1021, 1023–24; found no place for God 940; Mādhyamaka and Yogācāra schools of, 1066; Mahāyāna and Hīnayāna, differences in doctrines of, 942–43; observance of high moral ideals of Buddha's preaching were found irksome even in Buddha's own life and gradually monasteries of monks and nuns became centres of idleness, pleasures and immorality, 1022–23; three ratnas (jewels) of B. are Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha, which were compared to glass beads by Nīlapaṭadarśana, a later depraved cult of B. 1073; Vivekānanda's severe criticism against later phases of B. 1030; Tāntrik B. repudiates Buddha and introduced into the religion makāras and exciting food 1066, 1069n; was a revolt against the sacrificial system, against the Veda and its authority and not against caste, 939; weaning away Hindus from B. was due to bhakti cult propagated by Purāṇas, 970; when B. flourished large bodies of monks were fed by people and when it disappeared large companies of brāhmaṇas came to be fed 932; works and papers on both Mahāyāna and Hīnayāna B. and on causes of disappearance of Buddhism 942n, 1003.

Buddhist (or Buddhists, acc. to context): (see under ahiṁsā, Buddhism, Siddha): goal of nirvāṇa (particularly under Mahāyāna) could be reached after many births 1065; hardly any B. are strict vegetarians in these days in any country, while millions of Hindus are strict vegetarians, 947; monks of B. were tired of the strict mode of life and long waiting for the goal 1065; persecution (alleged) of B. by Puṣyamitra, by kings Śaśāṅka and Sudhanvan, by Kumārila and Śaṅkarācārya examined by Rhys Davids who disbelieves most of it and others also do the same, 1008–1011; Tantras have the same ideas about potency of mantras as Hindu T. have, 1103–1104, 1115; Tantras like Guhyasamāja (that was Vajrayāna) provided an easy method by which liberation and Buddhahood could be secured in a short time and in one life and averred that Bodhisattvas and Buddhas enjoyed all pleasures as they pleased, 1065–66n; several councils of Buddhists were held to settle the Saṅgīti (standardized scripture) 1021.

Buddhist-saṅgha (Order): purposes for which people joined Saṅgha are set out in 'Questions of Milinda' 1023–24.

Buddhist texts : claimed to be smṛtis, which follows from Manu XII. 95n; no pali texts can be placed earlier than the council held under Aśoka (about 250 B. C.); have ideas similar to Savitarka and Savicāra Samādhi, 1411n; such as Dhammapada and Suttanipāta speak of the truly virtuous man as brāhmaṇa 1005.

Bühler, a. of 'Indian Paleography', 701, 817n, 873, 900.

Bulletin of Deccan College Research Institute 2, 844, 883.

Bulletin of London School of Oriental and African studies, 654n, 740n.

Burgelin, Pierre, author of 'L' Homme et Le Temps' 475.

Burgess, 498, 521, 531, 997n, 1129–30 (mentions nine Buddhist mudrās slightly differing from Waddell's); differs from Whitney 512.

Caitanya : founded a school of Bhakti 971.

Caitra : (vide under 'Month', 'Pratipadvrata', 'Year'); bright half, 9th tithi of C, has Rāmanavamīvrata, 84.

Cajori : a. of 'History of elementary Mathematics' 482n, 483n, 518, 699n.

Cakra, vide under 'Yantra'.

Cakrabheda, a work enumerating different cakras in worship of Durgā 1137n.

Cakrapūjā (worship in a circle of men and women), a revolting tantra rite described 1089–90; secrecy enjoined by most tantras about what happens at C. but Mahānirvāṇa-tantra says Śiva ruled that in Kali age the worship should be open, one's own wife was to be the Śakti and none else, 1089n, 1090.

Cakras (subtle centres in the human body) : vide under nāḍīs) : are six, spoken of as lotuses (padma) viz. Ādhāra or Mūlādhāra, Svādhiṣṭhāna, Maṇipūra, Anāhata, Viśuddha, Ājñā; and there is the Brahmarandhra figured as the pericarp of the Sahasrāra (thousand-petalled lotus) within the crown of the head, 1061–2 and n, 1137–38; are often identified with the five elements and the mind, 1062n; often identified with the nerve plexuses of modern physiology, but that appears to be wrong 1062; Avalon in tr. of Ṣaṭcakranirūpaṇa (plates I to VII) illustrates the six cakras and sahasrāra together with their colours etc 1061n; speculations about C. are based on the Upaniṣads that the heart is like a lotus and on the Nāḍīs 1063n; work of C. W. Leadbeater on 'Cakras' with illustrations 1061n.

Caland, Dr. 238n, 740n, 1434–35.

Calendar or Calendars (acc. to context); (see 'Gregorian, Metonic cycle, pañcāṅga, siddhānta, tithi, week-day, year); about thirty c. in use by different communities in India 641–3, 658; absolutely necessary for every Hindu, as he has to repeat many details, such as month, tithi, weekday in every religious rite, 650n; different eras used in India 641–642; European C. also is defective and unsatisfactory 643–644; in Ancient Egypt 490 and n; in Ṛg. times, there were probably two calendars, one purely sacrificial (of 360 days), the other where a month was added to bring year in line with visible astronomical data, 490; many C. in South India, 642; meaning of word 'calendar' 641; C. Reform Committee, appointed by Govt. of India, with Dr. Meghnad Saha as President, to examine existing pañcāṅgas and for submitting proposals for an accurate and uniform calendar for the whole of India, 711, 713–174; requirements and contents of modern C. used for religious and civil purpose 645; several year beginnings in different parts of India 641; some C. based on Nautical Almanac and so called dṛk or dṛk-pratyaya 642; starting point of Hindu calendar-makers based on Sūryasiddhānta is at present more than 23 degrees to the east of the correct vernal equinox point, the difference being called Ayanāṁśa 711; works for readers interested in Calendar Reform 714n.

Calendar Reform Committee Report of 1953; 648–49, 657n, 665, 711, 713–14; contains a long list of Hindu festivals but hardly any original authorities are cited 253; main recommendations of, for civil and religious calendar 714–17.

Cambridge History of India, Vol. I: 844, 849.

Cambridge Medieval History 933n.

Campāṣaṣṭhī 299.

Cāmuṇḍā, human victims were offered to, 186.

Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa, demons killed by Devī 156.

Cāṇḍālas had become untouchables long before Chān. Up. 1633.

Caṇḍikā, temple of, Guggulu burnt in 39.

Caṇḍīpāṭha 171–173.

Cannon, Dr. Alexander, a. of 'Invisible Influence' 1092, 1112n, 1453n.

Canterbury, income of the See of the Archbishop of, has been 15000 £. a year 1640n.

Caraka-Saṁhitā: com. of Cakrapāṇi on 1396; on Kāla 474; on prognostications about a patient from messenger's condition or physician's actions when messenger arrives 812; refers to Sāṅkhyas and Yogins and some Sāṅkhya doctrines 1378–79.

Caraṇavyūha 735n.

Carrell, Alexis, a. of 'Man the unknown' 1092.

Cārvākadarśana, arguments of, against sacrifices and śrāddhas 975.

Cāṣa bird, with something in its beak flying to the right of a man, a good omen 526.
Cases (In Law Reports)
Beni Prasad Vs. Hardai Bibi. I. L. R. 14 All. 67 (Fi. B.), 1240n.
Collector of Madura Vs. Mootoo Ramlinga, 12 M. I. A. 397 at 436, 1278n.
Dattatreya Vs. Govind, I. L. R. 40. Bom. 429, 1301n.
Murarji Vs. Nenbai, I. L. R. 17 Bom. 351, 437.
Radha Mohan Vs. Hardai Bibi, L. R. 26. I. A. 153, 1240n.
Ramchandra Vs. Vinayak L. R. 41 I. A. 290, 1290n.
Umaid Bahadur Vs. Udaichand I. L. R 6 Cal 119, 1290n.
Vithal Vs. Prahlada I. L. R. 29 Bom. 373, 1292n.
Caste system, vide under Varṇa (pp. 1632-43); no benefit by constantly harping on c. as main cause of India's downfall for centuries, when Moslems, Chinese, Japanese, Indonesian that had hardly any caste system like India's have been backward for centuries 1642-43.
Catalogue of Deccan College Mss. Vol. XVI on Tantra 1049n.
Cato, warned farmers against consulting Chaldean astrologer 550.
Cāturmāsyas, four names of 487; were Vedic sacrifices (seasonal) in which performer had to keep certain observances 123.
Cāturmāsya vrata 122-23; may be begun even when Jupiter or Venus is 'invisible' 122; performer had to give up all vegetables in four months or in Śrāvaṇa and curds, milk and pulse in the other months 122; procedure of, 122; rewards of not partaking of certain things 122-23; women mostly observe it now 122.
Catus-sama, 38.
Caula or Cūḍākarma (tonsure of a child): auspicious and inauspicious nakṣatras for and tithis also 606; proper time for, 605-606; varying views about time for 605.
Chaudhuri, Sashibhushan, a. of paper on 'nine dvīpas of Bharatavarṣa, 1524n.
Cave temples of India, work on, of Fergusson and Burgess 178, 997n.
Chakravarti, Prof. Chintaharan, Papers of, on Tantra 1149.
Chakravartin, Dr. P. C., a. of 'Doctrine of Śakti in Indian Literature' 1048n.
Chaldeans, astronomers and dream-interpreters in high favour with Babylonians 781; held that five planets controlled the destinies of men and identified Babylonian deities with them, 548, 683; temples where singing and worship of five planets on successive days prevailed 683.
Chanda, Ramprasad, on 'Puṣyamitra and Śuṅga Empire' 1009n.
Chāndogya-pariśiṣṭa, 79.
Chāndogyopaniṣad: 24, 129, 223, 227n, 464, 525n, 526n (nakṣatra-vidyā), 569, 572, 670, 731, 779n, 860n, 866, 943, 944 (emphasis on ahiṁsā), 948 (Iṣṭāpūrta), 959, 972 (last thought); 1006, 1055n, 1063n (on heart as lotus and 101 arteries), 1072 (on guru), 1079, 1153, 1168 (interpretation of II. 23. 1 'trayo dharmaskandhāḥ'), 1205n, 1213 (joys of heaven), 1222n (on stobhas), 1251n, 1296 (meaning of 'brahmaloka' in VIII. 3. 2), 1359, 1361n, 1387, 1403n, 1416, 1417n, 1422n, 1423, 1430, 1432, 1433, 1435, 1445 (VIII. 15 has the idea of pratyāhāra of Y. S., though not the word), 1446n, 1448 (uses the word 'dhyāna'), 1455n, 1460, 1471, 1478, 1484, 1485n, 1486, 1488n, 1490, 1499, 1501, 1504, 1507, 1513, 1543, 1546n, 1549-50, 1554, 1555-8 (on Karma and punarjanma), 1562-3, 1566-7, 1578-9, 1580-82, 1585, 1587, 1602n, 1603-4, 1611, 1627 (four mortal sins), 1631 (salokatā, sārṣṭitā and sāyujya), 1633 (on cāṇḍālas), 1644 (on āśramas), 1648.

Chandoviciti 701.

Chandrasekhara S. a of 'Communist China today' (1961) 1474n, 1684n.

Change (or Changes): (vide Kalivarjya, dharma, mīmāṁsā, smṛtis); in religious rites and usages could be made and were made if common people came to condemn or hate them, even if a few orthodox people may be opposed to change, 1267-71, 1469; change is the one absolute in the long history of our religious or social ideas 1271; examples of fundamental changes in conceptions, beliefs and practices made from ancient times to medieval times by various devices, 1265-7, 1629; people should be free to introduce or recognize such changes in practices as are required or have already taken place in changed circumstances and this course sanctioned even by Manu and Yāj. and by eminent medieval works like the Mitākṣarā 1272; should not be merely for the sake of change or for the whims of some leader 1272.

Charpentier, Prof. J. on meaning and etymology of pūjā 37.

Chatre, K. L., efforts of, to introduce modern calculations in Hindu almanacs 712.

Chatterji, Dr. S. K. on 'Sinīvālī', criticized 64.

Chaudhary Radhakrishna, 978.

Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929):
fixed 14 years (later raised to 15 by the Hindu Marriage Act 25 of 1955) as minimum age for girls' marriages and is partly responsible for giving rise to the modern problem of spinsters in Hindu Society, 1338.

China: (vide under Bagchi): Tantra doctrines gained currc-ncy in C. under the influence of Amoghavarṣa, who translated many works into Chinese between 746–771 A. D., 1040; debt of China to India, papers on, 1618n.

Chinnaswami M. M.: edited Appayya-dīkṣita's work in 60 verses with Appayya's com. called Madhvamata-vidhvaṁsana, 1219.

Chintamani, Prof. T. R. 152n, 1161 (agrees with Prof. Nilakanta Sastri that there were three Jaiminis).

Choudhuri, Prof. N. N. 1033n (view of, that Indian Tantricism has its origin in Bon religion, criticized).

Christianity, doctrines of original sin, of damnation of unbaptized infants, of predestination appear strange to non-christians 1594; A. Robertson asserts that Christian morals have never been practised and tha a society would not last for a month if run on the lines of the Sermon on the Mount and Prof. Whitehead and W. R. Mathews appear to agree with him 1481n; Christian people of Europe and America during the last four centuries achieved great wealth and prosperity by throwing to the winds the Sermon on the Mount, by imposing slavery on millions, but after the two world wars they have begun to preach the necessity of benevolence, kindness, restraint, which virtues were emphasized for all men by Br. Up. V. 2 1–3; idea of Karma and Reincarnation prevailed among Jews and Christians till 551 A. D., 1546n; on what happens after death 1550n; writers like Robertson and H. T. A. Fausset hold that Western man is very little sustained or guided by the doctrines of orthodox Christianity and that European civilization is dissolving 1477n; what was Christian in Ch. largely disappeared from 1700 A. D. acc. to C. H. Tawney 1481n.

Christians, vide under 'Syrian'.

Cicero, did not believe in astrology, 550.

Cirajīvin persons, eight named 208n.

Civilization, various definitions of 1614–16; (vide under culture, Spengler, Toynbee, De Beus); two types of integrated cultures, acc. to Sorokin, 1615n.

Civilizations, only two, viz. Indian and Chinese, have continued for about 4000 years 1617–18.

Clark, W. E. on 'Hindu Arabic Numerals' 699n.

Cleostratus, acc. to Pliny, formed the Zodiac 566.

Cognitions: according to PMS, all cognitions are intrinsically valid in themselves (svataḥ-pramāṇa), but their invalidity may be established extraneously (parataḥ) 1212; according to Prabhākara every experience as such is valid, 1202.

Coins, of Kaniṣka and Chandra gupta (of Gupta dynasty), 186, 901.

Colebrooke, essays of, 498, 518 (on Hindu algebra), 582n, 699n, 1220.
Colonial policy, British, elements and results of 1659–60.
Colson, F. H., a. of 'the Week' 550, 677–78.
Communism (vide under 'Chandrasekhara', 'Lyon' and 'Wolfe'): 1473–74; is really a form of worship i. e. worship of man or such men as Lenin and Stalin in place of the worship of God, 1473; catchwords and slogans of, 1473; in return for physical well-being, common people under C. bargain away several freedoms, such as thinking for themselves, freedom of expression etc. 1473; no secret is made by communists that they want to bring the whole world under C. 1473; universal exhibition of portraits of great Soviet leaders (some of whom were recently declared by successor leaders to be no better than murderers) proclaims the necessity of worship even in a godless society 1474.
Conjectures, bold, should not be made; but if made, should be announced and treated as such 1531; danger that C. of past famous scholars are regarded as established conclusions by later writers 1531; warning of Acton 'guard against the prestige of great names, no trusting without testing' should always be remembered, 1531.
Constellation, same, is given different names 566.
Constitution of India, referred to 1614; criticized 1664–1667.
Coomaraswamy A.; a. of 'Hinduism and Buddhism' 1007; a. of 'Buddha and Gospel of Buddha' 1131n (for Bhūmi-sparśa mudrā); 1656 (other works)
Copernicus: denounced by Luther 512.
Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum: Vol. I Aśoka Inscriptions, ed. by Hultzsch, 600n 668n, 686n, 1015, 1017, 1645n,; Vol. II Kharoṣṭhī Inscriptions ed. by Sten Konow, 668n; Vol III (Gupta Inscriptions) ed. by J. F. Fleet, 669–70, 680n, 683n; Vol. IV Kalacūri Ins. (by Prof. Mirashi), 220, 246 (grants on solar and lunar eclipses), 248, 670, 1425n.
Cosmography (see under Upaniṣads, Purāṇas): Kirfel's systematic work on C. of ancient India is based on Purāṇa material and also on Buddhist and Jaina material, 1523n; Paurāṇika C. had been established long before 4th century A. D. 1529.
Purāṇas devote thousands of verses to the description of the divisions of the earth called dvīpas and varṣas, mountains, oceans, rivers, countries etc; and Dharmaśāstra works quote them 1523.
Cosmology : 1483–1529 (vide under 'Atomic theory;' 'Creation', 'God', 'Heaven and Earth', 'pralaya'): all Dharmaśāstra writers are agreed on the existence of God and rarely adduce arguments for that purpose, 1483; argument from design was present to the mind of the propounders of Vedānta 1485; Christian theologians have put forward various arguments for the existence of God, summarised by William James, which are mainly four 1483 and n; comparison of ancient Egyptian, Babylonian, Hebrew, Greek and Indian ideas on C. in 'Apes and Men' by H. Peak, 1502n; Grousset's observation on Indisn scheme of creation and dissolution of the universe compared to Ionian ideas 1503-4; Gerald Heard's remarks about the helpfulness of Sanskrit cosmology as compared with Hebrew and Christian dogmas 1504; originally there was no atomic theory in C., but from 4th B. C. in Greece and from Kaṇāda, the founder of the Vaiśeṣika system in India, it began to prevail 1486; principal questions in C. are two and the whole conception of C. has been revolutionized by developments in Geology, Biology, Physics and Astronomy during about one hundred years, 1502n. whether in the Upaniṣads or later works C. is based on geocentric theory 1515; works on Vedic C. 1485-86n.

Coster, Geraldine, a. of 'Yoga and Western Psychology' 1394, 1427, 1455.

Countries, m. in the Upaniṣads 1522-23; m. in Purāṇas 1527-28; m. by Pāṇini 1528n; m. in Bhīṣmaparva and nakṣatra-kūrmādhyāya of Bṛhat-saṃhitā 1527-28; Ptolemy's treatment of, 555.

Cows, honoured on certain tithis called Yugādi, Yugāntya etc. 293-94; praise of 204n; worship of, on Balipratipadā, 204.

Cow or Bull, offered in several rites in the Vedic age, as shown in H. of Dh. vol. III pp. 939-40, 1268-69; flesh-eating came gradually to be looked down upon and so cow sacrifices became most abhorrent and were prohibited 1269.

Cowell, E. B., translated Śāṇḍilya-bhaktisūtra, 957-58.

Cowper, English Poet, believed that earthquakes were caused by God as punishment for men's sins, 764.

Craig, Catherine Taylor, a. of 'Fabric of Dreams' 782.

Cramer, F. C., a. of 'Astrology in Roman Law and Politics' 597.

Creation (and dissolution) of world or universe: (vide under 'God', 'asat', 'man', 'sattā' (reality), 'Nāsadīyasūkta', Upaniṣads): 1491; Atharvaveda has several hymns on C, but they are verbose and wanting in depth, 1493-95; Atharvaveda puts forward Skambha (identified with rajāpati) as Creator, also Kāma and Kāla 1493–95; C. is put in Upaniṣads in the distant and dim past, while in Biblical chronology it is put at 4004 B. C. following James Ussher, Arch bishop of Armagh, in 17th century 1506n; description of state before C. in Ṛg. X. 129; none in reality, acc. to PMS and Śloka-vārtika, 1209–10, 1483n; Mahābhārata, particularly Śāntiparvan, frequently states theories of C. 1517–18; purpose of the description of creation and dissolution in the Smṛtis, epics, Purāṇas, etc. is, acc. to Kumārila, to show the distinction between the powers of daiva and human effort, 1261–62; Purāṇas devote thousands of verses to C. 1519–22; statements in the Upaniṣads about creation are not to be taken, acc. to Śaṅkara, literally, they are meant to lead on to the knowledge of brahman and non-difference from brahman 1485, 1506; Sāṅkhya scheme of guṇas, tanmātrās etc. brought in describing creation by Nārāyaṇa or Hiraṇyagarbha, as in Matsya, Viṣṇu, Mārkaṇḍeya 1519–22; several theories on C. in Manusmṛti, two of which have some Sāṅkhya doctrines, 1515–17; several hymns on C. in Ṛg. (X. 72, X. 81–82, X. 90, X. 121, X. 129) examined and it is shown that the Creator is called by various names, 1488–91; several references in Ṛg. to the creation or support of heaven and earth by different gods, 1492; statements about Cr. and dissolution of the universe in the Upaniṣads are valid only on the practical or empirical plane but from the highest metaphysical point of the Vedānta, there is no Cr. nor dissolution, the individual soul is not really in bondage 1506; Tai. Br. passages on creation and Prajāpati as creator 1496–97; Upaniṣads like Tai. (III. 1) and Chān. (III. 14) state that the creation, preservation and absorption of all bhūtas is due to brahman 1484, 1500; various statements about C. in Śat. Br. 1495–96; Vedāntasūtra relies on Upaniṣads that brahman is the creator, sustainer and destroyer, 1484; Yāj. Smṛti 1519.

Creator: (vide under 'brahman', God, 'Nāsadīyasūkta') : in Ṛgveda different Gods (such as Indra, Mitra, Prajāpati, Varuṇa) are referred to as creators of heaven and earth, 1491–93; Kauṣītaki Br. mentions Prajāpati as the creator and identifies him wiih Yajña, 1497; no name given to Cr. in Nāsadīya Sūkta, but Cr. is only mentioned as 'Tadekam' (that one) as in Upaniṣads 1490–91; Tai. S. names Prajāpati several times as creator of gods, asuras, people and as performing tapas for that purpose, 1493.

Cūḍāmaṇi, a work on astrology mentioned by Sārāvali and Vasantarāja 805n.

Cūḍāmaṇi, a Yoga, 249.
Cullavagga, 1037, 1069–70, 1663.
Cultural Heritage of India, Vol. IV, papers on Tantra, 1150, Culture, definitions of, 1614–1616; and civilization sometimes used as synonyms 1614; difference between 1616.
Cunningham : a of 'ancient Geography of India' 1528n; a. of Archaeological Survey Reports, 1046n; on 'Bhilsa Topes' 1026; on 'Indian Eras' 648, 655, 661, 685.
Customs, vide under 'usages' and 'change'.
Cyavana, a writer on Astrology 591.
Daftari, Dr. K. L.; criticized about views on Manu and Saptarṣis 693; works of 644, 714n.
Dagdhayoga (an inauspicious conjunction) defined 707.
Daiva (luck) : meaning of, acc. to Yāj. Smṛti 544n; meaning of, acc. to Vasantarāja 807; three views on importance of D. and human effort, 545.
Dakṣa-smṛti, 1409 (Yoga defined), 1425n (Padmāsana), 1448 (six verses from), 1459, 1645.
Dakṣiṇā (fees in a Vedic sacrifice), 1329–31; great divergence of views about the D. to be given 1329n; is to be given by the sacrificer (yajamāna) who is to engage priests to perform rites in a sacrifice and is not given for an unseen purpose 1329; items (various) which may constitute D. in different yāgas set out by Tāṇḍya Br. to be distributed by the yajamāna himself acc. to the method of unequal distribution set out in PMS, 1329; Madanaratna provides that to Paśubandha the unequal distribution does not apply 1330; Manu mentions this method of unequal distribution in the Veda and extends its principle to men working jointly on joint undertakings such as house construction, 1330; Medieval Dharmaśāstra works follow the Pūrvapakṣa view of equal distribution (X. 3. 53) as an equitable rule in the case of liability of several sureties and other matters, 1330–31.
Dakṣiṇāmūrti-saṁhitā 1060n (on Cakras), 1066n.
Dāmāji, devotee of God Viṭhoba of Pandharpur, 951.
Damanakāropaṇa (worship of various deities with Damanaka plant) 311.
Dānasāgara (written in 1169 A.D.) by Ballālasena, king of Bengal : (vide under Ballālasena) : 220, 312, 830, 833n, 837, 867–71; discards certain Purāṇas and Upapurāṇas, 868; mentions 1375 dānas in all, 867–868; does not cite Kṛtyakalpataru 870; one of the early digests 870, 935.
Dānas (see under gifts) 312, 759 (ten dānas).
Daniel, a book in the Old Testament : refers to Chaldeans and astrologers 548, 781.

Daniel, Thomas, painted in 1780 A. D. the scene of the Visarjana of Durgā 176n.
Danielou, Allain, a. of 'Yoga, the method of re-integration' 1394; figures and names of āsanas in, 1426, 1428; for Mantra-yoga, Layayoga etc. 1427.
Darius the 2nd, about 418 B. C., 595; the first D. (522–486 B. C.) employs the word Hidu (for Hindu) the people to the west and east of river Sindhu 1613.
Darśana or Darśanas (philosophic points of view) : are many, as Sarvadarśanasaṅgraha shows 1182n ; famous and orthodox d. are six 1182n, 1652.
Darśan, of great men (like Gandhiji and Aurobindo) explained by Sheean, 1463n.
Darwin 1502n.
Das, S. R., paper of, on 'Study of Vrata rites in Bengal' in 'Man in India' (1952) Vol. 32 pp 207–245, 60.
Das, Sudhendu Kumar on 'Śakti or Divine Power', 1048n.
Daśagītikā (of Āryabhaṭa) 680, 704n.
Daśaharā – vrata, on 10th of bright half of Jeyṣṭha 90–91 ; so–called because it removes ten sins 90–91.
Daśanirṇaya of Hārīta Veṇkaṭa-nātha 59, 136 ; contains conclusions on ten vratas of which Jayantīnirṇaya is one 138.
Dasarā– (vide under Aparājitā and Vijayādaśamī) ; Durbars and processions held in Baroda and Mysore on this day 192–193 ; speculations about origin of, 194 ; worship of weapons of war and implements of trade on 193 ; word derived, 194n.
Daśaślokī 118n.
Dasgupta, Dr. S. B., a. of 'Introduction to Tāntrika Buddhism' 1066n.
Das Gupta, Prof. : a. of 'Indian Philosophy' in 5 volumes, 844, 898 (on Bhāgavata in Vol. IV), 1205n (Vol. II on Lokāyata), 1383, 1393 (on 'Yoga Philosophy'), 1395 (on identity of two Patañjalis), 1397.
Daśāvatāracarita of Kṣemendra (composed in 1066 A. D.), 990, 1074.
Datta, Bibhutibhushan, a. of 'The science of the Śulba' (a study in early Hindu Geometry) 1132n.
Dattakamīmāṁsā, 1336 (widow cannot adopt a son).
Dattātreya (or Datta) : described in Mārkaṇḍeya as avatāra of Viṣṇu, given to drinking, fond of female company and staying near a water reservoir on Sahya mountain and called Avadhūta, 903 ; instructs Alarka in Yoga, 903 ; propounded ānvīkṣikī (adhyātmavidyā) to Alarka and Prahlāda 903n ; story of his conferring boons on Kārtvīrya occurs in several Purāṇas 903n.
Dattātreya Tantra 1051.
Davids – (vide under Rhys Davids.)

Davidson, M. on 'Freewill and Determinism' 1575.
'Dawn of Astronomy', a work of Sir Norman Lockyer 512.
Day:(vide 'Babylon', Babylonia, 'tithi': begins at sunrise with Indian writers 676, 682; civil d. is interval between two consecutive sunrises, 675; civil d. begins at midnight in modern times 676; differences about the beginning of d. 675–676; difference between tithi and d. 675; divided into eight parts by Kauṭilya, Dakṣa and Kātyāyanasmṛti 675; five parts of, in Śatapatha and by others, 101, 675; fifteen muhūrtas of d. and night each, 675; Kauṭilya knew only a day divided into thirty muhūrtas or 60 nāḍīs and mentions no horas or hours 684; longest and shortest day of 36 and 24 ghaṭikās respectively, acc. to Vedāṅga-Jyotiṣa 538n; three parts of, mentioned in Ṛgveda 675; two meanings of, (1) from sunrise to sunrise and (2) from sunrise to sunset 675; two systems of dividing d. into 60 ghaṭikās and 24 hours, 682–683; various views about divisions of d. into 2, 3, 4, 5, 8 or 15 parts, 267.
Dāyabhāga, (a work) 1032n, 1233, 1281–82, 1292 (on meaning of 'mātā'), 1302–3, 1309, 1316n, 1320.
Dāyatattva 1184, 1291.
De, Dr. S. K., 1038; a. of Vaiṣṇava faith and movement in Bengal' 112–3, 120, 980.
De Beus, a. of 'Future of the West', disagrees with Spengler and Toynbee, 1617.
De Felicitation volume, paper in, by present writer on Pūrvamīmāṁsā 1160.
Death: (vide atheism, heaven, punarjanma): ancient Indian doctrine about what happens after death preferred by some western writers to Biblical ideas 1594-95; last thought at death supposed to lead to an appropriate future life 972-3; signs of approaching d. 731n; three possibilities as to what happens after d. of body, discussed 1550–51; Upaniṣads like Chān. and Bṛ. contain germs of that idea (of last thought) but Gītā clarifies the position 972–3.
Debts: a brāhmaṇa (this includes the three varṇas) is born with three debts to sages, gods and ancestors and discharges them respectively by brahmacarya (i.e. Veda study), sacrifices and birth of son, 1318n, 1626; Mahābhārata added a 4th debt, viz. to be good to all men 1626.
Decimal numeration system in India goes back thousands of years, 699.
Decimal place value notation 699–701; invented by Indians, 483n, 518; one of the most fertile inventions of man 699–70; was introduced in the 12th century in Europe by the Arabs who borrowed it from India, 483n, 699 and n (for authorities).

Demetrius, Greek king, 827n.
Democracy or Democracies: in modern D. rational discussion of problems or measures comes last and vital questions are often decided by party loyalties or personality cults or by lust for power, 1472.
Democritus (died about 370 B. C.) adumbrated the atomic theory in Greece 1486.
Descartes, 1478.
Desmond, Shaw, a. of 'Re-incarnation for every man', states that re-incarnation doctrine was taught in the Christian Church till 551 A. D.; 1546n.
Deussen, Paul (vide under Upaniṣads, Vedānta); a. of 'Philosophy of Upaniṣads'; 1026n (high praise for āśrama system), 1486n, 1491 (on Nāsadīya hymn), 1500 (tribute to Upaniṣad sages), 1541, 1548 (high eulogy of Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 5-7), 1552-53 (holds that Ṛg. I. 164. 12 has nothing to do with Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa, criticized), 1553-54 (criticized as to meaning of Ṛg. X. 88. 15), 1577 (theory that Kṣatriyas were the original cherishers of Vedānta thoughts, criticized as contradicting himself and as wrong), 1580-82 (criticized for holding Sanatkumāra as kṣatriya and Nārada as brāhmaṇa; 1585 criticized for wrong translation of Ṛg. (IV. 26. 1, 'aham Manurabhavam' etc.); 1604, 1625 (explains the implication of the illustration of rivers merging into sea), 1627, 1646 (on āśramas), 1647n Deuteronomy 677.
Devala, writer on astrology 591, 622.
Devala, a of Smṛti, 31, 41, 51, 55, 65n, 78n, 79, 81, 96, 97n, 100n, 103n, 116, 182, 202n, 204n, 214n, 215n, 249n, 480, 650, 1242, 1266 (allowed brāhmaṇa to eat food from certain śūdras).
Devala, author of a Dharmasūtra 1431-32; explains the words prāṇa and apāna as 'Śaṅkarācārya' does on Bṛ. Up. I. 5. 3., 1435; mentioned by Śaṅkarācārya 1353, 1435; quotations from D. in Aparārka and Kṛtyakalpataru on Sāṅkhya and Yoga, 1380-81, 1409, 1435, 1439n, 1445 and n, 1447-48, 1453, 1458; states falsehood to be of two kinds 1421n.
Devalaka (brāhmaṇa): meaning of 936; unfit for being invited at a Śrāddha 936.
Devamitra Dharmapāla, a. of 'Life and teaching of Buddha', 1003, 1009n.
Devāpi and Śantanu, story of, 1203.
Devapratiṣṭhātattva 1106, 1122.
Devapūjā: (vide under 'pūjā'): 34-37; procedure of Narasiṁhapurāṇa to be followed in, acc. to Aparārka 1024; sixteen upacāras (items of worship) in, 34; Upacāras may be increased up to 36, or reduced to five 34.

Devasthali, Prof. G. V., a. of 'Mīmāṁsā, the Vākyaśāstra of ancient India' 1201.

Devasvāmin, writer on astrology, 591.

Devatā, of a nakṣatra or tithi, is often employed in the texts to indicate the nakṣatra or tithi itself 558.

Devatā : Discussion of question. what is meant by D. with reference to which an offering is cast into fire leads to startling results in P. M. S 1207-09 ; D. is a subordinate element in a sacrifice and havis is principal matter and in a conflict between the two decision rests on havis (in PMS) 1207 ; D. is a matter of words (says Śabara) and when an offering is directed by Veda to be made to Agni, one cannot use a synonym like Pāvaka, 1207-8 ; Jaimini and Nirukta agree as to the nature and function of D. in a sacrifice, 1276 ; phala (reward) is conferred by the sacrifice and not by D. (like Agni etc.) 1208 ; several opinions on who the Devatās are, to whom a hymn is addressed or an havis is offered 1208 ; though some Vedic passages speak of the body of D. and that it drinks and is lord of heaven and earth, they are (merely) laudatory 1208.

Devatā : Veṅkaṭanātha or Veṅkaṭadeśika (1269-1369 A. D.) a. of 'Seśvara-mīmāṁsā', criticizes both Bhāṭṭa and Prābhākara schools and brings in God as the dispenser of rewards of sacrifices 1209.

Devavrata, a purifying text, viz. Ṛg. VIII. 95. 7

Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa Paths- (vide under Paths) : described in Bṛ. Up. VI. 2 and Chān. Up. V. 10 and brought in relation to the doctrine of transmigration described in Br. Up. IV. 4. 5-7 and III. 3. 13, 1551-58 ; men that have to go by D. and P. paths 1551-58, 1563 ; mentioned in Ṛg. X. 2 7 and X. 18. 1, 1553.

Devayātrotsava, tithis on which Yātrā festivals of several gods are to be celebrated 316, 317.

Deveśvara : m. by Kṛtyaratnākara on the definition of 'vrata' 30.

Devībhāgavata, 176n, 178, 829n (states that Matsya is first out of 18 Purāṇas), 830 (mnemonic verse containing first letters of 18 Purāṇas), 890 (note on), 916, 918n, 921, 924, 974n, 994n, 1033n (verse 'gururbrahmā' etc), 1039n, 1062n (on cakras and sahasrāra), 1064, 1072, 1076n, 1121 (states nyāsa should be part of Sandhyā worship), 1127 (Khecarīmudrā), 1130 (on mudrās).

Devīmāhātmya (in Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa, also called Saptaśatī, Caṇḍī) : 155, 176n : Chapters of, arranged in three parts 155n ; has only about 573 to 590 verses, though called Sapta-śatī, 155n; oldest known ms. of, is dated 998 A. D. 155n; one of the chief works of Śāktas 1041; some verses of, are called Kavaca, argala and kīlaka, that are outside the D. 155n; verses of, are treated like a Vedic hymn or verse with ṛṣi, metre, devatā and viniyoga 155n.

evī-Pūjā: (vide under Durgā-pūjā).

Devī-Purāṇa, 50n, 54, 61n, 76n, 156, 170-1, 174, 176, 179n, 180-81, 184-5, 212n-214, 215n, 244, 572n, 1093 (q. by Aparārka), 1108; devotes considerable space to Durgā-pūjā 156; discarded by Ballālasena for several reasons 869; note on 889-90.

Dhamma, three meanings of the word in Buddhism 941.

Dhamma-cakka-ppavattana-sutta 939n.

Dhammapada, verses on who should be called brāhmaṇa 1005n, 1637.

Dhāraṇā: Aṅga (6th) of Yoga, 1446-7; M. in Śāntiparva, 1400-1; meaning of, 1446.

Dhāraṇīs (Talismanic sentences among Buddhists), 1104n.

Dharma: (vide under 'change', Pūrvamīmāṁsā, Satya, Smṛti): differs in each Yuga, 1266; investigation of D. has four aspects, viz. its nature, the pramāṇas of it (such as Veda, Smṛti etc.), the means (sādhana) of knowing it, the fruit or reward, 1179n; Jaimini holds that śabda (i. e. Veda.) alone is the pramāṇa for Dharma and no other, 1183, 1185, 1265; Mahābhārata says that Dharma is the one followed by the great mass of people, 1071; Mahābhārata and Manu often refer to the high value of D. and make artha and Kāma subservient to D. 1627-28; Manu provides that as to matters not specifically provided for in Veda and Smṛtis, whatever learned brāhmaṇas declare to be the D. is undoubtedly so, 1278; meaning of Dharma in P. M. S. 1. 1. 1. is 'Vedārtha' acc. to Prabhākara school and 'Codanā' acc. to Kumārila (i. e. a religious act, a yāga) 1179n, 1184; D. is one of the puruṣārthas that has been a far-reaching one from Upaniṣad times and concerns principles which men should observe in their lives and social relations, 1627; P. M. Sūtra I. 1. 2 defines Dharma as an act conducive to a man's highest good, that is characterized by an exhortative (Vedic) text, 1183; practice of black magic is adharma, as it is sinful and condemned, though it be referred to in the Veda, 1183; Śabara holds, on account of Ṛg. X. 90. 16, that Veda expressly declares that Dharma means 'Yāga' 1184.

Dharma, three important words in the Ṛgveda are ṛta., vrata and dharma, that were transformed into other meanings later on, 21; is not immutable, but liable to change and is subject to country and time 1629; roots of (Dharmamūla), four or five, acc. to Dharmasūtras (ancient) and Yāj. 1256, 1264; several classifications, one into śrauta (based on Veda) and smārta (based on smṛtis), another into six (named and illustrated) 1632; Sages (ancient) had an intuitive perception of D. 1098; Sources of (fourteen), acc. to Yāj. 1152; why so called 1627.

Dharmacakra Mudrā (illustrated), 1131n.

Dharman, meaning of, 20.

Dharmas, common to all varṇas and castes enjoined 1637, 1648.

Dharmaśāstra (or Dharmaśāstras acc. to context): (vide under 'Sadācāra', Smṛtis): digests (nibandhas) on, that are printed, are not earlier than 1100 A. D. such as Mitākṣarā, Kalpataru, Aparārka, 883-4; general tendency of medieval writers on, is to heap details on what were originally simple ceremonies, 605; influence of Purāṇas on 913–1002; later digests on D. adopt prāṇapratiṣṭhā mantra evolved by Śāradātilaka, a tāntrik work, 1106; medieval works on D. make a distinction between Smṛtis based on Veda and those based on perceptible motives, 1262; mentioned by śānti and Anuśāsana parvans 1256-7; profoundly influenced by Jātaka and Śākhā, 480; refused to follow mīmāṁsā rules in regard to vratas, 133, 1272n; smṛtis were called D. by Manu (II. 10), 1257; Tai. Up. provides the usage of learned brāhmaṇas of high character as source of decision in case of doubt, 1257; were known to P. M. Sūtra, 1257; works on Dh. such as Pārijāta, Prakāśa, Kāmadhenu that were earlier than 1100 A. D. are not yet available even in mss 884-5; works (medieval) on D. say that certain Smṛti texts applied to former Yugas, 1272n; works on Dh. rely on Tantra works for initiation into mantras, 1118; works on D. make use of the technical term pratipattikarma 1231-32; works on D. must have been composed before 500 B. C., 1265, 1267; writers on D., conflicts of interpretation among, exemplified 1315–1316.

Dharmas, eight, common to all men of all dh. 1648

Dharmasindhu, 30, 71n–73n, 74' 84, 90, 99n, 104, 105n, 107, 112n, 113, 134-5, 139n, 142n, 146n, 188, 189n, 190–92n; 197–8, 200, 201, 204–5, 217, 232, 233n, 234n, 241, 243n, 609n, 612n, 614, 624, 672–3, 736n, 748, 755–6n, 761n, 766n, 772n, 773n, 780n, 781–82, 1117, 1121n (nyāsa and mudrā are avaidika).

Dharmasūtras: of Gautama and Āpastamba disclose familiarity with Mīmāṁsā terms and principles, 1154–55.

Dharmavyādha, 721n, 1642 (a śūdra was endowed with brahmajñāna).
Dhātupāṭha, 10.
Dhaumya, 154n.
Dhere, R. C., a. of 'Life of Goraksanath' etc. (in Marathi) 1429n.
Dhṛtarāṣṭra, though congenitally blind, performed Vedic sacrifices 1280–81.
Dhūpa (incense), various names of, 323.
Dhyāna (7th aṅga of yoga), 1447–49 ; meaning of 1447–8 ; two kinds of viz saguṇa or sākāra and nirguṇa or nirā kāra, 1449 ; Upaniṣads insist upon dhyāna, 448.
Dhyānbindūpaniṣad, 1389n, 1419n, 1426n.
Dhyāna-yoga : m. by Śv. Up. and Gītā 1448 ; m. by Manu (VI. 73) and Yāj. III. 64), 1447.
Dīghanikāya 939n, 943n, 944n, 1007n.
Dickinson, Lowes, 1594, 1604.
Dīkṣā, 1116, 1119 : Bhāgavatapurāṇa says that Tāntrikī d. is for śūdras and Vaidikī and miśrā for other varṇas, 1093 ; derivation of the word, 1117 ; details of d. given in Śāradātilaka were on the decline in Raghunandana's day, 1118 ; four kinds of, 1119 ; on receiving Tāntrik d. from a guru, both śūdra and brāhmaṇa become alike, 1112 ; procedure of, to be undergone by one learning the Tāntrik way, 1054 ; proper times for d. such as eclipses, and if an eclipse be available, other matters such as tithi, nakṣatra, vāra, need not be considered 1117 ; some tantras treat d. elaborately, 1117 ; some tanras provide that in d. guru should instruct disciple about cakras, 1118 ; symbolized a new birth for a sacrificer in Vedic times, 1116 ; Vedic d. observances after, 1217n.
Dīkṣāprakāśikā of Viṣṇubhaṭṭa, composed in śaka 1719 (1797 A. D.), 1117.
Dīkṣātattva of Raghunandana 1118 ; guru for giving dīkṣā should be of the same sect as the disciple, but a Kaula is a good guru for all, 1118.
Dikshit S. B. a. of work on 'Hindu Astronomy' in Marathi, 484, 498, 507n, 513, 515n, 644, 679n Dikshit S. K. 650n.
Dikshitar, Prof. V. R. Ramchandra, 1016n (wrong in saying thet Aśoka was a Hindu because be believed in Svarga) ; a. of 'Purāṇa Index' in three vol. 844, 867, 883 ; a of 'studies in Vāyu and Matsya', 883 ; a. of 'some aspects of Vāyupurāṇa' 907 ; remarks of, on date of Viṣṇupurāṇa, criticized 867.
Dina (day) ; word d. frequently used in Ṛgveda in compounds like 'Sudina' 675.
Dinakṣaya, explained, 711.
Dio, a Roman who wrote Roman

History between 200–222 A. D., 677n.
Diodorus Siculus 550.
Dion Cassius 677.
Dīpakalikā, com. on Yāj. Smṛti by Śūlapāṇi, 1404.
Dīrghatamas, son of Mamatā 486.
Disciple : among requirements about Tāntrik d. is the one that he must keep secret the mantra and pūjā imparted by guru, 1071; Tantras call upon d. to revolve in his mind the identity of guru, deity and mantra 1072.
Diseases and bodily defects, deemed to be due to the sins of past lives 756n.
Divākīrtya Day, 511.
Divākīrtya Sāman, 511n.
Divali Festival; 194–210; (see under Narakāsura, Lakṣmī-pūjana, Bali Pratipadā, Bhrātṛdvitīyā); Apāmārga to be whirled over one's head on 14th, 196; Amāvāsyā in D. important day 199; called Dīpāvalī or Dīpālikā and also Sukharātri, Sukha-suptikā and Yakṣarātri 194–195; festival comprises five items spread over five days with illuminations and crackers from 13th of dark half of Āśvina 195; Kārtika-śukla first is one of three most auspicious days in the year 201; Kārtika-śukla first if it has Svātīnakṣatra is most commended 201; lights in temples of Viṣṇu, Śiva and other gods, in monasteries, rooms for implements, on caityas, stables, 196; not a festival in honour of a single god as Navarātra is, 194; oil bath necessary on all three days from 14th, 199; of lights, and fireworks, is most joyful of festivals and observed throughout India, though the observances differ in detail from age to age and from country to country 194; on evenings of 14th dark half and Amāvāsyā men with firebrands show the way to pitṛs 198; origin of, not certain 207; rites on Amāvāsyā in, 199; rites performed on the 14th of dark half of Āśvina (or Kārtika according to pūrṇimānta reckoning), 196, 198; second tithi of Kārtika-śukla is called Bhrātṛdvitīyā 207; tarpaṇa on 14th of Yama with seven names or 14 names, 196 and n; three days, viz. 14th, Amāvāsyā and Kārtika śukla first constitute Kaumudī festival 195, 206; usage of eating 14 kinds of vegetables on 14th in Divali 198.
Divanji, P. C., editor of 'Yogayājñavalkya' 1404.
Divination– (vide Future, Hepatascopy, Astrology, Upaśruti): by using Purāṇas, Rāmāyaṇa and works of Tulsidas at random 811–2; is either voluntary or involuntary 522n; instances of voluntary d. 522n; involuntary d. depends on all kinds of phenomena, such as aspects of the sun and planets, lightning, dreams flight and cries of birds 522n; method of asking a maiden to cast dūrvā grass inside a purāṇa like Skanda or Rāmāyaṇa and apply the words discovered to matter in hand 811; seat of life and the soul was supposed to be the liver in the western countries such as Rome and among Romans, heart and lungs of animals sacrificed were examined, 522n; temple priests in Babylon and Assyria made extensive collections of omens and portents, but the interpretations were almost exclusively concerned with general welfare or the king 522n.

Divyatattva 1106.

Doig, Mr. Peter, 483.

Dolotsava 317.

Doṣas (disturbances or faults): 317; five in Śāntiparva 1400n; in Āp. Dh. S. (a larger number) 1390, 1400n.

Doubt is a frequent and legitimate attitude of the mind as recognized in Bṛ. Up. 1478; Descartes held that only one truth is beyond doubt, viz. 'I think, therefore, I am' 1478.

Drāhyāyaṇaśrautasūtra, 726n.

Draviṇodas, is either Indra or Agni, 159n.

Dravyavardhana, king of Ujjayinī, based his work on śakunas on Bhāradvāja, 591.

Dream or Dreams: all ancient countries and peoples used dreams for knowing future 781–82; are only indicative and not causative acc. to Vedāntasūtra, Śaṅkara, Jyotistattva, 779–80; associated with good luck or ill-luck in Vedic literature, 728–729; declaring a bad d. to another and sleeping after is commended 779; depend on men's constitution as choleric, windy etc. 780; fourteen very auspicious dreams m. in Jaina Kalpasūtra 777–78; if several dreams one after another, the last alone is indicative of consequences, 779; indicating approaching death 731; modern works about dreams 782; numerous d. mentioned in Rāmāyaṇa 775; objects, auspicious or inauspicious, seen on starting on a journey are also so if seen in d. 778; of Nushirwan, Sassanian king, interpreted by Buzurmihr, 781; of riding on an elephant held lucky and of riding on an ass unlucky, 775; on seeing auspicious D. one should not sleep 779; texts to be recited on seeing a bad dream, 780n; thoughts on, in, Upaniṣads 731, 732n; three kinds of people in modern times about dreams 782; times when dreams seen in different watches of the night bear fruit 778–779; vast literature on matters relating to D. and Śāntis for them 774–75; which white or dark objects seen in D. are auspicious or otherwise 780; wise men should not be afraid of d acc. to Aṅgiras, 775.

Dreṣkāṇa, 581–83; antiquity of system of, in Egypt, at least from 2800 B. C. 581; Bṛhajjātaka has one chapter (27) of 36 verses on descriptions by Yavanas of 36 presiding deities of, 582: Egyptian stars so called cannot be identified with known constellations except Sirius and its neighbours 582n; Greek decans had gone out of use about Ptolemy's time 583; lords of each third part of each rāśi, 581; meaning of, viz. 1/3rd part of each rāśi of 30 degrees, 581; origin of the word from Greek and idea of, originated with Egyptians, 581; Sārāvalī (chap 49) differs from Bṛhajjātaka about descriptions of dreṣkaṇas 583; Varāhamihira on Dreṣkāna probably follows some Sanskrit work by a Yavana author on D. and not Ptolemy nor Firmicus nor Manilius 582n, 583.

Droṇaparva, 90n, 129, 539, 703n, 743, 764, 767, 803n, 945 (on ahiṁsā).

Duḥkha, three kinds of, exemplified, 150n.

Dukes, Sir Paul, a. of 'the Yoga of Health, Youth and joy', 1428n.

Dumont, Prof. Paul Emile, 506, 599n, 1434–35.

Durant, Will, author of 'Life of Greece' 516n, 550.

Durgā, antiquity of pūjā of, 185–86; Arjuna's and Yudhiṣṭhira's praise of D. in Bhīṣmaparva and Virāṭaparva, 85, 1046n; killed Śumbha and Niśumbha 186; on coins 186; names of D. in Mahābhārata 185; names of, in Kālidāsa, 1046n.

Durgābhaktitaraṅgiṇī of Vidyāpati, 155–6, 159–61n, 163n, 165n, 167n, 169n–171n, 174n, 175, 178n–182n, 183, 184n.

Durgāpūjāprayogatattva of Raghunandana 155.

Durgārcanapaddhati of Raghunandana, 158n-161n, 162, 163n, 164, 166–7, 168n, 173, 174n–176n, 178n, 179 and n, 183.

Durgotsava, 154–187; (vide under Durgā, Saptaśatī): also called Navarātra, 154; all men and women of all castes and even those beyond the pale of the caste system such as Mlecchas have adhikāra for, 157; animals that may be sacrificed in honour of Durgā, 164; animals are offered principally on the 9th tithi, 168; but no female of any species is to be sacrificed, 164; Bhadrakālī, described as having 16 arms in Kālikāpurāṇa 163n; bilva twig to be brought and Durgā is to be invoked to abide in it, 160–61; bodhana (rousing from sleep) of Devī on different days 158–59, 181; brief statement of what is to be done from the 2nd to the 5th tithi of Āśvina or to the 9th, 159; Caṇḍīgāyatrī in, 179n; celebrated all over India from 1st to 9th tithi of Āśvina-śukla in some form or other, but it is celebrated in a grand way in Bengal, Bihar and Kāmarūpa, 154; contemplation on form of Devī 162; description of Durgotsava from 1st day to 10th, 159-177; description of the form of Devī, long and finely worded, in Matsya and Kālikā-purāṇas, 162–63; Devī (Durgā) got different weapons from several gods, 155; Devī may be worshipped in her shrine, on mountain Vindhya, in all places, towns and villages, forests, in a liṅga, in a book, in water etc., 157, 178; Durgā is said to go to sleep on 8th of Āṣāḍha-śukla and hence some works provide for rousing her (bodhana) on different dates, 158.

Durgāṣṭamīvrata in Kalpataru and Hemādri 185; elaborate ritual about offering the blood and head of a bali, prescribed in Durgārcanapaddhati, rites and mantras differing according to the bali offered, 166ff; establishment of the image of Durgā on a seat, the bundle of nine plants to its right and placing the bilva twig near the image and performance of prāṇapratiṣṭhā 162; even now many high caste people of Bengal including brāhmaṇas offer goats and rarely buffaloes to Durgā, though some brāhmaṇa families offer only fruits and vegetables in lieu of animals, 168; family members, and guests sit together after each day's pūjā in Navarātra and persons present partake of prasāda, 157, 173; ghaṭa (a jar with a peculiar shape) is to be established and filled with water, twigs of mango and other auspicious plants to be placed thereon and worship of Durgā thereon, on 7th tithi with 16, 10 or 5 upacāras, 159, 162–3, 183; goats and buffaloes alone sacrificed usually in D. 165; Guggulu incense, favourite of Durgā, 164, 1047; homa is performed after pūjā in fire called 'Balada', with a mantra preceded by 'om' and followed by svāhā, 173; horses honoured in, by kings and those who possess them, 184; if an animal was killed as bali, what was offered was only the blood or head, 165; if brāhmaṇa offered his own blood to Devī, he would be guilty of suicide and go to hell, 165; in place of wine one should offer cocoanut water in a vessel of bell metal or honey in a copper vessel, 165; in Navarātra the performer has to listen to the recitation of the Vedas and from the 1st tithi to the 9th he should mutter Caṇḍīpāṭha or engage a person to do so, 171; it was believed in the Vedic times and also by Manusmṛti that animals killed in sacrifices to gods and pitṛs went to heaven and those who offered them did not incur sin, 168; image of Durgā with four or ten arms to be made from certain substances only or a picture is to be used, 178;

image of Durgā with lion and Mahiṣāsura and images of Lakṣmī and Gaṇeśa and of Sarasvatī and Kārtikeya to be shown on her two sides 177-78; is nitya as well as a Kāmya rite, 156; Jāpaka was to be engaged for reciting the mūlamantra a hundred thousand times, besides the reader of Śatacaṇḍī, 173; Kālikāpurāṇa details the different periods of time for which Durgā becomes gratified by the offering of the blood of different animals, 167; Mahānavamī rites (of 9th day) described, 154, 174-6; Mahāṣṭamī rites (on 8th day) described, including a fast to be observed by one having no son, 168-71; Mantra of Durgā to be repeated after saṅkalpa for japa and homa is either the Jayantīmantra or the mantra of nine syllables 159, 171; naivedya of various kinds to be offered to Durgā, 164n; offering of devotee's own blood and the flesh of a he-buffalo and goats pleases Durgā most, 185; offering of wine in D. relates to ages other than Kali, says Prāyaścittatattva, 158; prāṇapratiṣṭhā of images of Durgā, Gaṇeśa and other deities, 162; principal items in Durgāpūjā are snapana (bath), pūjā, offering of bali and homa, 179; reciting of Devīmāhātmya in, also rewards of so doing, 172-3; revelry and abuse indulged in, on last day of Durgāpūjā, 177; revulsion of feeling against killing animals arose and Kālikāpurāṇa provides substitution of Kūṣmāṇḍa (pumpkin), sugarcane stalks etc. 164-68; sandhi (a short period viz. last ghaṭikā of the mahāṣṭamī and the first part of Mahānavamī), pūjā of Durgā on, with Yoginīs, is deemed to be the holiest of pūjās, 174; saṅkalpa, different forms of, 158-160; saṅkalpa, at time of giving dakṣiṇā, 175n; saptaśatī is the best of stavas (lauds) 172; several alternatives for the beginning and duration of D. suggested by Tithi-tattva, most of which find support in Kālikā and other Purāṇas, 154; some works provide that D. must be celebrated in Śarad (Āśvina) and also in Vasanta (Caitra), 154; Svastika used in D., explained, 160n; threefold character of Caṇḍikā, 158; three times for Durgāpūjā, the principal one being at night and varying views, 180-83; tilaka mark with blood of the bali made on forehead of devotee, 167; tithi more important than nakṣatra in D. 182-83; twigs of nine plants bound together in a sheaf with a separate mantra for each plant and worship of sheaf, 161, 181; Upacāras 16 in D. are slightly different from the 16 offered to other gods, 164n; Veda recitation in D. 171; voluminous literature on D., 155-56; worship of maidens in D., 170; worship much influenced by Śākta doctrines and practices, 186; worship of Yoginīs, said to be 8, 64 or a crore, along with pūjā of Durgā, 174 and n.

Durgotsavapaddhati of Udayasiṁha, 155, 187.

Durgotsavaviveka of Śūlapāṇi, 155.

Durudharā, a Yoga, meaning of, 584.

Duryodhana, 767.

Duty (see Yamas): doctrine of Gītā and the Purāṇas like Viṣṇu that the work of performing one's d., in the society in which one is born or which one has undertaken, is worship and enables a person, whether a brāhmaṇa or a śūdra to reach the same higher worlds 929–30; most difficult to give an objective definition of duties, but they can be defined on the subjective side, 1421; object of emphasizing duties is to make men rise above low desires 1421.

Dvādaśī, called Trispṛśā, which touches three civil days 119; eight kinds of, 119; Jayā, Vijayā, Jayantī and Pāpanāśinī D. have respectively Punarvasu, Śravaṇa, Rohiṇī and Puṣya nakṣatras, 119.

Dvaitanirṇayasiddhāntasaṅgraha 171, 182n; 184; speaks of five different mantras, any one of which may be used for japa and homa in honour of Devī 171.

Dvāparayuga, varying views about its end 687n.

Dvīpa (continent, also island): vide under Jambudvīpa, mountains, oceans, rivers, countries, varṣa; each d. divided into 7 varṣas (9 in some purāṇas), has seven main mountains, seven principal rivers each, 1524; Matsya states that there are thousands of dvīpas but names only seven, 1523-24; said to be eighteen in Vāyupurāṇa and Raghuvaṁśa 1523n; word occurs in Ṛg. in the plural and Pāṇini derives the word (VI. 3.97) and mentions dvīpas along the sea coast (IV 3.10), 1523, 1525n; Yogabhāṣya names seven D. 1529.

Dvivedi, Dr. Hazariprasad, a. of 'Nath Sampradāya' (1950), 1429n; Earth: legend that e. was donated to Kāśyapa by Paraśurāma 89n; three motions of, 645n.

Earth, legend of gift. of, to Kāśyapa 89n; three motions of 645n.

Earthquakes: described as having happened at time of the Bhārata war 764; four theories about causes of, acc. to predecessors of Bṛ. S. 763; novel cause of earthquakes acc. to Brahmapurāṇa 763; regarded as punishments caused by God for men's sins not only by ancient and medieval Indians, but by English poets like Cowper and great men like Gandhiji 764.

Easter, 662.

Eclipses (solar and lunar): (vide under gifts,): 241-250; bath with hot water only allowed to children, old men and persons that are ill 243; common people and even some educated men hold old beliefs and believe even now that Rāhu causes e. 242, 765; consequences (astrological) of e 250; extensive literature on 241; fast recommended on day of eclipse and some also recommended it on the day previous 249; first duty of a man on seeing e. is to bathe and to give up all food cooked before e. 243; great importance of, from very ancient times 241; holiest bath is in the Ganges or Godāvarī or at Prayāga, then in any of the big rivers six connected with Himavat and six south of Vindhya 243, 244; householder having a son not to fast on e. 249; in 1953 (20th June) four lakhs of people took a bath at Kurukṣetra and Sanyahet, 244; if one does not bathe at time of e. or sun's entrance into rāśi he would have, it is said, leprosy 243; moon e. a lakh of times more meritorious than an ordinary day and sun e. ten times more than moon e. 243; obligatory japa of Gāyatrī in e. 247; one should bathe when e. begins, perform homa, worship gods and perform śrāddha, while e. is in progress, make gifts when e. is about to end, take a bath again when e. ends 246 ff.; order of the several religious acts to be done on e. 246–247; persons born on nakṣatra of e. suffer troubles, unless they perform a śānti 250; persons impure owing to birth or death in family have to bathe in e. 244; poor people clamour for gifts on, 246; prājāpatya expiation for eating food during e. 246; puṇyakāla (holy period) in e. lasts only so long as it is or can be visible to the eye and for 16 kalās on both sides of it, 247; Rāhu is not the cause of, 242; real causes of, were known to Indian astronomers several centuries before Varāhamihira, 242; results of lunar e. and solar e. in the same month 250; rules about taking food before, during and after e. 249-250; śāntis for rāśi or nakṣatra of a person being affected by eclipse, 766; solar e. on Sunday and lunar e. on Monday is called Cūḍāmaṇi and yields crore of times of merit 249; some people in these days take a bath on e. and make gifts, but hardly anything more is done 247; special merit (puṇya) on bath in certain rivers when e. in certain months 244; śrāddha, bath, gifts and tapas in e. yield inexhaustible rewards or merit, 245; total eclipse of the sun referred to in Ṛgveda which appears to have occurred three days before the autumnal equinox, 241–2; Varāhamihira makes an effort to square Śruti, Smṛti and popular belief and real astronomical doctrines 242–243; views differ as to whether one in āśauca can make gift or perform śrāddha or puraścaraṇa 244; views differ as to whether religious rites are to be performed only when e. is actually seen or even when e. is astronomically known to be on in the locality, even though not seen owing to clouds 247-248; when auspicious and inauspicious and to whom 765.

Eddington A., a. of 'The Expanding Universe' 1502n;

Edgerton, Prof. 67, 1199 (edited Mīmāṁsā-nyāyaprakāśa of Āpadeva), 1250n, 1434n, 1514n (criticized for his view about mere brahma knowledge being enough for attaining mokṣa); 1615 (on meaning of culture).

Egypt (see 'horoscopes'), : Ancient, had two calendars 490; knew nothing about the Zodiac before Alexandrian age, 549, 565; marriage with one's sister in, 554.

Einstein, believed in Spinoza's idea of God and held that the main conflict between science and religion lies in the concept of a personal God, 1487n.

Eisler, Robert, a. of 'The Royal art of Astrology', 552, 581n.

Ekabhakta, 100; proper time for 100; restriction of, as an alternative to Ekādaśīvrata 107; it is an independent vrata also, apart from being an alternative to Ekādaśī 101.

Ekādaśī (vide under 'Pāraṇā'): daśamī, observances for 115-116; dvādaśī, observances on 117; fast on e. mixed with daśamī is condemned by Nāradīya and others 114; four kinds of vedhas of E. by Daśamī 114; if there is Ekādaśī on two days, householders should fast on the earlier and Sannyāsins on the later 115; is exception to the general definition of sampūrṇā tithi 113; is sampūrṇā when it exists for two muhūrtas prior to sunrise of the day on which it exists for 60 ghaṭikās and fast to be observed on that day 113; names of the 24 ekādaśīs of twelve lunar months and two more in the intercalary month when it occurs 108n; order is introduced in conflicting texts on Ekādaśī by Kālanirṇaya and Nirṇayasindhu 115; question on what tithi fast should be observed when Ekādaśī is mixed with tenth or twelfth tithi would have to be decided in different ways for Vaiṣṇavas and Smārtas and is complicated 113; Smārtas (i. e. all those who do not profess to be Vaiṣṇavas) have not to follow strict rules of vedha laid down for Vaiṣṇavas 115; some difference in the names of Ekādaśīs and some reasons for this 109; two ekādaśīs called Śayanī (also called Mahaikādaśī) and Prabodhinī, on Āṣāḍha bright half and Kārtika bright half respectively 99, 109; two kinds of, viz. sampūrṇā and viddhā or khaṇḍā 113.

Ekādaśinī, 813; means reciting the Rudra mantras (Tai.S. IV. 5. 1. 11) eleven times; Śāntiratna of Kamalākara identifies it with Laghurudra, 813n; Ekādaśinī and Laghurudra are very much in vogue even now 814.

Ekādaśīvrata (vide under Cāturmāsya, dvādaśī, fast, jāgara, pāraṇā, Vaiṣṇava, vratas) 95-121; a person above 8 years of age and less than 80 years of whatever caste and āśrama has adhikāra for fasting on E. 97, 99; brief mention of items that constitute E. 119-20; difference (main) between mere fast on E. and Ekādaśīvrata is that in the former there is no Saṅkalpa 104; early description of E. procedure from Nāradīya 104-5; even Śaivas and devotees of the Sun may observe E. 1045; exceptional cases where texts allow fast on Ekādaśī mixed with daśamī but only to Smārtas 115; explanation of Ekabhakta, nakta, ayācita 100; extends from the 10th tithi to pāraṇā 115; extremely exaggerated praise of the efficacy of fasting is indulged in by many purāṇas, 98-99; fast on E. is of two kinds viz. adhering to the prohibition about taking food, the other is in the nature of a vrata and persons who should enter on one of these 103-104; great rewards promised on observance of E. 93; is both nitya and kāmya 96, 104; is obligatory on householders on 11th of bright half, while in both fortnights is obligatory on others 96-97; main matters in E. are fast, worship of Viṣṇu image, Jāgara at night with songs, pāraṇā on 12th, certain restrictions as to conduct 105, 106 and n; Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa provides four methods of observing E. viz. ekabhakta, nakta, ayācita, complete fast and dāna, the first three being allowed only if one is unable to observe complete fast 99-100; no homa in 106; pāraṇā or pāraṇa 107, 118; Padmapurāṇa devotes over a thousand verses on names and legends about E., 108n; person unable to fast owing to illness should make his son or others to fast on his behalf 100; person performing E. should miss four meals in three days 106; person even in mourning has to observe E. 115; procedure of, from Brāhmavaivartapurāṇa and Dharmasindhu 106-108: pronouncing mantra (om namo Nārāyaṇāya) three times after saṅkalpa 108; separate observances prescribed for daśamī, ekādaśī, and dvādaśī, though somewhat overlapping 115; Saṅkalpa, form of, in 107; Saṅkalpa for Śaivas 108; restrictions as to food, physical and mental activities to be observed from Saṅkalpa to Pāraṇā, and on fast day 115; 116; some purāṇas prohibit only taking of food on 11th tithi, while others prescribe an elaborate procedure 95; ten observances common to all vratas (including E.) 41, 115; time for Saṅkalpa when E. is mixed up with 10th tithi at different parts of the day 106-107; Vaiṣṇavas and Smārtas both observe Ekādaśīvrata 112-13; Vaiṣṇavas have to observe fast on all Ekādaśīs, 97, 104; voluminous literature on 95; widow to be treated on the same footing as a Yati or a Vaiṣṇava 97, 115; worship of Hari with flowers etc. 108.

Ekādaśītattva of Raghunandana 29n, 30, 34n, 48n, 77, 95-97n, 99n-101n, 106n, 113n, 115, 116n, 119n, 120n, 1096, 1106 (Mahāśvetā mantra), 1108, 1190n, 1228, 1250n (eight faults in vikalpa pointed out) 1254.

Ekādaśīviveka of Śūlapāṇi 95.

Ekāmra, a work from Orissa; note on, 888.

Ēkavākyatā: when several sentences, each conveying its own sense, are brought together, one being principal and the others auxiliary, they form one syntactical whole, called a Mahāvākya 1298; word occurs in Vedāntasūtra, 1298, 1341.

Elements, five great (called mahābhūtāni) and their five qualities referred to in Upaniṣads, sometimes only three viz. tejas, water, anna (earth) are mentioned (as in Chān. Up. VI. 2. 3-4); only four postulated in Greece by Empedocles (about 490 B. C.) and a fifth, ether, was added by Plato and Aristotle, 1502n; spring from and are absorbed in brahman, the dissolution being in the reverse order of creation 1503.

Elephants (vide under 'prognostications'): king's victory depends on 801; names of e. of eight quarters 803n.

Eliade, Mercea, a. of 'Yoga, immortality and freedom', 1394 1651.

Elliot, Sir Charles, a. of 'Hinduism and Buddhism' 1650n.

Elliott H. M., a. of 'History of India' in several volumes, 1018, 1025.

Ellora caves: in a cave Śiva and Pārvatī are shown as playing with dice 203; described by Balasaheb Pant Pratinidhi of Aundh 203, 1655.

Empedocles (born about 490 B.C. in Greece): vide under 'Elements'; held the doctrine of Punarjanma 1530.

Epigraphia Indica, Vol. I. m. on 246 (grant on Full Moon for endowing a maṭha to teach Bhāskarācārya's works), 348, 644, 650n, 656, 1006n, 1029; Vol. II. on 644; Vol. III. on 245, 407; Vol. IV. on 1006n, 1029; Vol. V. on 1011n; Vol. VI. on 630n, 649 (Aihole Inscription), 662, 1029; Vol. VII. on 89, 212n, 213n, 245, 348, 655, 964, 1006n; Vol. VIII. on 404, 599n, 650n, 669n, 670, 968n, 1013, 1029;

Vol. IX. on 245, 1014, 1029; Vol. X. on 284, 386, 648; Vol. XI. on 1014; Vol. XII. on 213n, 274, 644, 876n; Vol. XIV. on 213n, 245, 644, 883; Vol. XV. on 644, 669, 1013, 1028, 1192; Vol. XVI. on 131, 644, 654n, 670, 964n, 1014; Vol. XVII. on 644 669, 670; Vol. XVIII. on 1013; Vol XIX. on 246, 665, 668n, 669; Vol. XX. on 648, 656, 669, 678n, 1012–13, 1028, 1614n; Vol. XXI. on 668n, 978n, 1425n; Vol. XXII. on 131, 665; Vol. XXIII. on 651n, 687; Vol. XXIV. on 356, 669n; Vol. XXVII. on 671, 945n, 1629n; Vol. XXVIII. on 883 (Purāṇas studied in 578 A. D.); Vol. XXIX. on 651n, 652n, 654n, 659.

Equinox: cannot be accurately ascertained without scientific apparatus 511n.

Era (or eras acc. to context): (Vide under Śaka, Vikrama, Kṛta years); Chālukya Vikrama era started in 1076–77 A. D., 253; five eras named by Alberuni 648; Laukika or Saptarṣi e. in Kashmir 655–656; most ancient civilizations used e. late in their career and used regnal years instead of eras 647; several eras that were once in vogue are not now employed, such as Vardhamāna era, Buddhanirvāṇa, Gupta, Cedi, Harṣa, 656; six eras in Kaliyuga according to Jyotirvidābharaṇa 647; use of, in India not more than about two thousand years old 647; Vardhamāna e. 656; variety of e. used in India 648; Vikrama era under that name occurs only from the 8th century A. D. 653; writers and works on Indian e. 648.

Europeans: ignorant of decimal place value notation and symbol for zero, which were introduced to them by Arabs who borrowed them from India, 482; slavishly followed Ptolemy's Almagest for 1400 years, 512.

European scholars: many were obsessed by two notions, viz, (1) much in India that resembled what prevailed in the West must have been borrowed from West and the (2) Indians who were governed by foreign invaders for centuries must not have been good at anything 141; many of the striking theories of, are now consigned to oblivion, 141; nurtured on the literature of Greeks and Romans and on the vaunted superiority of Greeks in philosophy, Mathematics and Arts generally assumed borrowing from Greeks by Indians, 281; rules of common sense that should be followed by E. S. stated 141; that wrote on India indulged in very disparaging remarks about Indians not only as to astronomy but generally 511–512; theories of, about Indian Astronomy and Astrology, not acceptable for several reasons 481.

Evans-Wentz W. Y.; a. of 'Tibetan book of the Dead', of 'Tibetan Yoga and secret doctrine' and of 'The Tibetan Book of the Great Liberation' 1393-4.
Evolution : theory of, is supposed to have shattered the argument from design for proving existence of God, 1483n.
Expiations : different views viz. expiations would remove effects of sins deliberately committed or were restricted only to acts inadvertently done 1589.
Faddegon, B. on '13th month in ancient Hindu chronology' 490n.
Fa Hian (1st quarter of 5th century A. D.), found Buddhism flourishing in India, 1003.
Farnell L. R., a. of 'Greece and Babylon' 599n.
Farquhar J. N , a. of 'Outlines of the religious Literature of India' 1089n.
Farrington, Prof, on 'Science and Politics in the Ancient World', 550n.
Fast (vide under 'Ekādaśīvrata') : a householder having a son was not to fast on Sunday and on certain other days 220; as prāyaścitta 97; brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas not to observe fast for more than three days and others for more than two days 55; idea of efficacy of fasting undertaken cheerfully is common to several religions, 103; none of the holy rivers like the Ganges and none of the tīrthas like Kāśī is equal to fast in honour of Makarasaṅkrānti 220; observed by Haihayas, Turks, Yavanas and Śakas for reaching status of brāhmaṇas, 54; underlying idea of fast is spiritual viz. that the Supreme Spirit is to be realized by fast together with study of Veda, sacrifices, gifts 103; woman pregnant or recently delivered should observe only nakta instead of a fast, 52.
Fausset, Hugh T. Anson, a. of "The Flame and the Light" 1477n.
Fergusson, J. a. of 'Tree and Serpent Worship' 127; a. of 'History of Indian and eastern Architecture'; 1655.
Filliozat, Prof. J. 189, 698, 699n.
Fires : different names of, in different rites set out in Tithitattva 173; different seasons for setting up Vedic f. in the case of the three classes 1290; three mounds for Vedic fires were Gārhapatya Āhavanīya and Dakṣiṇāgni; they were respectively circular, squre and semi-circular in shape and all were to have same area, 1132n.
Firmicus Maternus (middle of 4th century A. D.), inspired Indian astrology, says Thibaut, which is wrong, 579–580, 582n.
Five year Plans 1664.
Fleet, editor of 'Gupta Inscriptions', 494n, 679n, 704n; holds that the list of nakṣatras beginning with Kṛttikā was entirely due to ritual and astrology and has no basis in fact but assigns no reason why priests later changed the beginning to Aśvinī, 528.

Flesh-Eating; (vide under 'ahiṁsā' and 'Buddhists'): flesh of five-nailed animals not to be eaten except of five specified ones, acc. to Gaut , Manu, Yāj., Rāmāyaṇa 1156.

Flowers : fit or unfit to be offered to deities in worship 38; results of offering various flowers in worship 38.

Food : One should not speak ill of food, one should prepare much food, secure much food by some method or other 24; prescribed for Dīkṣitas of different varṇas 25.

Forenoon : for gods, says Śat. Br., 72.

Foreign Tribes and people : m. in Śāntiparva, chap. 224, (cr. ed.) and Manusmṛti, 1518.

Fortnight (pakṣa) mentioned very early 670.

Fotheringham, Prof. J. K. 566, 644, 646, 647n, 676n, 682.

Foucher, A, a. of 'Beginnings of Budhist Art' 1655.

Frankfort, a. of 'Cylindrical seals', 521n, 596n.

Frazer, J. G., a. of 'Golden Bough' 94.

Free Will (or Freedom of will), how far consistent with doctrine of Karma, 1574–1576; works on, 1575.

Freud, a. of 'Interpretation of dreams' 782; his theory of 'libido' and œdipus complex, 1414n.

Future : Carakasaṁhitā provides how to draw forecasts about a patients's possibility of survival from the condition of the messenger or from what the physician was doing when messenger arrived 812.

Future trends (in India) 1658–1711.

Gadādharapaddhati (Kālasāra) 241.

Gāgābhaṭṭa or Viśveśvarabhaṭṭa, a. of Bhāṭṭacintāmaṇi, 1200.

Gadgil, Prof. D. R. volume of papers presented to, 1678n.

Gajacchāyā, explained 673n.

Gajendramokṣa, story of, in Bhāgavata, Padma, Vāmana and Viṣṇudharmottara Purāṇas, 779n, 780n.

Galagraha, meaning of, 608.

Galatians, epistle of Paul to, 1546n.

Galileo, condemned by Churchmen to imprisonment for life at 70 for espousing the Copernican theory, 483, 1477; and Kepler practised astrology or countenanced it, 551.

Gaṇḍānta, astrological term, explained 605.

Gandharva, meaning of, 494n, 495n.

Gandhāṣṭaka (eight fragrant substances) 292.

Gandhi (Mahātmā) : a. of 'self-restraint versus self-indulgence', Appendix of which reproduces W. L. Hare's article on importance of brahmacarya, 1423; belief of, that the earthquake in Bihar was sent by God as punishment for untouchability 764n; life of, by D. G. Tendulkar in eight volumes, 764n; opinion of G. that no case for contraceptives is made out, criticized by Pandit Nehru and the present author, 1689; prediction about the time of the death of, by Louis de Wohl turned out to be untrue 552.

Gaṇapatipūjā—vide Vināyaka-śānti.

Gaṇapatyatharvaśīrṣa 148.

Gāndhārī, lost her 100 sons because she observed fast on Ekādaśī mixed with Daśamī 1243.

Gandhiji, praise by, of poverty, suffering and ascetic life criticized by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru as utterly wrong, harmful and impossible of achievement and Gandhiji's attitude to sex as extraordinary in 'Autobiography' pp. 510 and 512, 1689.

Gaṇeśa or Gaṇapati : Gāyatrī (Paurāṇika) of, set out, 1105n; is worshipped before undertaking a vrata 32, 748; most popular god among people, the god of wisdom, bestower of success and destroyer of obstacles 748; Mūlamantra is 'gam svāhā' 1105.

Gaṇapatipūjā – vide Vināyaka-śānti.

Gaṇeśacaturthī – vrata 145-149; also called Varadacaturthī in S. M. 145; antiquity of Gaṇeśa worship, 148-149; explanations about Gaṇeśa's elephant-head and mouse as conveyance are phantastic 149; form of Gaṇeśa to be contemplated upon, in, 146; if one sees the moon on night of 4th of Bhādrapada śukla he may be falsely accused of theft and should repeat the verse 'simhaḥ prasenam' over some water, drink the water and listen to story of Syamantaka jewel, 146, 148; identified with brahma in Gaṇapatyatharvaśīrṣa 149; if 4th of Bhādrapada-śukla falls on a Sunday or Tuesday it is called 'Great' (Mahatī) 146 and also sukhā if on Tuesday 148; in modern times a clay image of Gaṇeśa, beautifully painted, is worshipped 146; image of Gaṇeśa is immersed in water after a procession 148; legends about Gaṇeśa in Brahma-vaivarta 148; mantra is Ṛg. II. 23. 1 ('Gaṇānām tvā' &c. addressed to Brahmaṇaspati) 146; not observed in Bengal nor in Gujarat, 145; procedure of 146; procedure of, is different in Narasiṁhapurāṇa 149; proper time for performance is mid-day 145; ten names of Gaṇeśa 146; tithi 4th on which Gaṇeśa is worshipped is called Śivā 148; twenty-one dūrvā tendrils and 21 modakas are offered in, 146; when Gaṇeśa, is worshipped on Māgha-śukla 4, that tithi is called Śāntā, 148; when caturthī is mixed with 3rd or 5th tithi, then Caturthī mixed with 3rd is to be preferred, if it exists at midday, 146; worship of Gaṇeśa in modern times lasts two, five, or seven days or till Anantacaturdaśī, according to usages and tastes of people 148.

Gaṇeśapurāṇa, note on, 889.
Ganges, festival of, celebrated in turns over large rivers like Godāvarī, Kṛṣṇā, Narmadā 91.
Ganguly O. C. on 'Orissan Sculpture and Architecture' 1653n.
Garbe, a. of 'Die Sāṅkhya Philosophie' 1312n; edited Āp. Śr. S. 1174; edited Sāṅkhyapravacanabhāṣya 1354, 1371; on Vodhu 1372n.
Garga (vide Vṛddhagarga): 71, 78n, 250, 479n, 578–9, 591–592, 594, 607, 637n (on grahayuddha), 622, 633n, 742, 743n, 745, 747, 766, 767n, 772, 774; a famous ancient writer on astronomy and astrology from whom Utpala on Bṛ. S. quotes about 300 verses, 591–92; assigned to 50 B C. by Kern, 579, 592n; author of Mayūra-citraka, acc. to Utpala 591; dialogue of G. and Bhārgava about child's birth on Mūla-nakṣatra 597n; instructor of Atri, 591, 746n; known to Viṣṇupurāṇa as an ancient sage that knew all about omens 743n.
Garga-gotra, known to Pāṇini, 642n.
Gargasrotas, holy place on Sarasvatī visited by Baiarāma 520n, 742n.
Garge Dr. D. V., a. of 'Citations in Śābarabhāṣya', 1200–1201; 1218 (on Śabara's contributions to exegesis), Vedic and non-Vedic), 1275n.
Gārgi, sixty verses of, quoted by Utpala, 92n.
Gārgī, called Vācaknavī, in Bṛ. Up., a pert woman, showing no respect to Yājñavalkya 1405.
Gārgya, 61, 73n, 77n, 621, 772.
Gārgya Bālāki, learnt Brahmavidyā from Ajātaśatru 1579–80.
Gārgya Nārāyaṇa, com. of Āśv. Gṛhyasūtra, 1317n.
Garments, auspicious times for wearing, new, 626.
Garuḍapurāṇa, 39, 42n, 43, 49n, 70, 75n, 99, 100n, 113–14, 115n, 116n, 118n, 134n, 136n, 178, 225–26n, 230, 266n, 815, 819, 834n, 869 (discarded by Ballālasena), 820n, 967 (summary of Gītā in 28 verses), 1243, 1438n, 1446n; contains many verses identical with Yāj. Smṛti, 815, 889, 1590; has a verse almost identical with an introductory verse of Harṣacarita, 1101; has several monosyllabic unmeaning mantras like hrām, 1105; present G. contains a summary of Parāśarasmṛti 889; provides that aṅganyāsa is part of worship, japa, homa, 1120.
Gāthāsaptaśatī 655, 681 (mentions Tuesday).
Gauḍapāda, a. of com. on Sāṅkhyakārikā 1354–55, 1382n; comments on only 69 verses of Sāṅkhyakārikā 1356n.
Gautama, a writer on astrology 592.
Gautama-dharma-sūtra, 17n, 27, 103, 159n, 206, 543, 668n, 741, 818, 862n, 863, 925, 944–45, 1023, 1154, 1156n, 1169, 1190n, 1233, 1251n, 1252, 1256, 1257n, 1278, 1293n, 1416n, 1436, 1469, 1544n–45, 1589, 1592–93n, 1595, 1628, 1637, 1643.

Gavām-ayana, a sattra, 511n.

Gāyadānr, festival in Bihar, Orissa and other places on Balipratipadā 205.

Gāyatrī (Ṛg. III. 62–10), eulogy of, in Bṛ. Up. 1097; eulogy of, in Viṣṇudharmottara which employs it also for black magic 877n, 1099n; to be preceded by 'om' and vyāhṛtis and followed by 'Śiras', 1099n, 1442n; syllables of G. to be reversed when employing it for black magic, 877n, 1099n; used for nyāsa of its letters on parts of body, 1120.

Geldner, 498n, 538n.

Gell, C. W. M, in Hibbert Journal, 1953, reviews Dr. Schweitzer's and Dr. Radhakrishnan's works 1647n.

Genesis (Bible) 575, 677, 1506.

Geography, of ancient India, works on, 1528n.

Getty, A. a. of 'Gods of Northern Buddhism' 1133.

Ghaṭī, word known long before Mahābhāṣya 684.

Ghaṭitaguṇavicāra, explained 614.

Gheraṇḍasaṁhitā, on Haṭhayoga 1427n; mentions 25 mudrās and Khecarīmudrā 1127; states there are 84 āsanas, 1426.

Ghosh, Dr. Manmohan, a. of 'contributions to the History of the Indian Drama' 1130; shows that in bas-reliefs of Bayon (Angkor Thom) certain gestures in Cambodian dance and drama are similar to those in Bharata-nāṭya-śāstra 1130.

Ghosh, N. N. 1614n.

Ghosh, Pratāpcandra, a. of an English work on Durgāpūjā 156, 160n, 173, 184, 186; theory of, on origin of Durgāpūjā 186.

Ghosundi, Inscription, 131, 963–64.

Ghṛtasūkta, 758n, 802n.

Ghurye, Dr. G. S., 845, 1152n (on Vidyās), 1615n (on Culture and Society).

Gifts (vide under Brāhmaṇas), 934–36; of food praised in Ṛg. Ait. and Tai. Br., Manu, and Purāṇas like Agni, Brahma, 934; of food to cripples, the blind, children, old men, the poor, highly praised in Padmapurāṇa 934–35; of food to brahmacārins and yatis enjoined by Kūrma and Padma 935; of food in Vaiśvadeva and Balikarma on the ground by householders to persons that had lost caste or had loathsome diseases, to cāṇḍālas, dogs, crows and even insects 935; of land to deserving brāhmaṇas recommended by Mahābhārata and in inscriptions on eclipses, ayana and viṣuva days 245–6; in Inscriptions 245–46; made to unworthy persons declared as tāmasa by the Gītā 938; results of g. made on nakṣatras from Kṛttikā to Bharaṇī 500; rule that gifts to brāhmaṇas were to be made by day and not by night, the exceptions being the same as in the case of bath etc. 218; special gifts required to be made on Makarasaṅkrānti, such as sesame, garments 219; sūtras and early smṛtis before the spread of Buddhism, emphasized that religious gifts were to be made only to learned and well-conducted brāhmaṇas 937; universal kindness and charity in giving food to poor, disabled men and to students has prevailed to the present day in India, though recent high prices and rationing have undermined this spirit 935–36; why Purāṇas make incessant appeals for gifts to brāhmaṇas 938.

Gītā, vide Bhagavadgītā.

Gītagovinda, of Jayadeva, court poet of Lakṣmaṇasena, regards Buddha as avatāra 824, 996.

Glanville S. R K., on 'the legacy of Egypt', 490n, 565n, 581n, 700n.

Gnā, in Ṛg. means 'wife' and is an Indo-European word, 1044.

Goals of human life are four, 1510 (vide Puruṣārtha).

Gobhila, Karmapradīpa of, 758n

Gobhilagṛhyasūtra, 27, 67, 69, 78, 480, 494n, 535.

Gobhilasmṛti, 53n, 218, 640n, 758n, 1266n.

Gocara, meaning of, 589--90.

God (vide under creation, Einstein, Ṛgveda, Vāk, cosmology; arguments for the existence of G. (vide under cosmology); Bhagavadgītā (XIII. 13–17) contains one of the best descriptions of God as transcendant and immanent 1462; divergence about the names, nature and attributes of 1486–87; evidence for existence of G. lies in inner personal experience, acc. to W. James, 1483n; idea of the grace of G. occurs in Kaṭha and Śvetāśvatara Up. 961; idea of God's omniscience, omnipresence must be abandoned, acc. to H. G. Wells 1483–84n; is one acc. to Mahābhārata and some Purāṇas and higher Indian thought 118; is immanent in the Universe, acc. to Tai. Up., Chān Up., Bṛ. Up. 1486; is a pure mathematician, acc. to Jeans 1486n; is supposed to take different forms for the benefit of worshippers, 118; is transcendant and rules the universe 1486; most striking characteristic of Hindu religion, from Vedic times is that G. is one, though called by various names 1623; nature and attributes of G. on which most are agreed 1487; no place for G. in Sāṅkhya system, while in Yogasūtra G. has a secondary one 1402–3; Ontological srgument for proving existence of G. 1483n; some sages at least in Ṛgveda times had arrived at the conclusion that there was only one Principle or Spirit, though called by various names, 1492; spirit of bargaining with God in some Vedic texts illustrated 1217n; supreme G. is called Vāsudeva in Gītā, 961; three main arguments for existence of G. 1484n; two difficult questions about belief in G. set out 1487; views (four) on the relation of God and world, acc. to Viscount Samuel 1487n.

God and creation of the universe (vide under Creation); Prakaraṇapañcikā denies a creator of the whole universe, 1207; Ślokavārtika of Kumārila says that it is difficult to prove that God created the world or dharma and adharma and the means of attaining these, words and senses and yet performs obeisance to Śiva at the beginning of it 1207.
God, Gods (vide under 'Images', 'Īśvara'), : Ādityas, Agni, Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, are called kings (rājan) and universal sovereign in the Veda 8; all g. and goddesses supposed to go to sleep on different tithis, 110–11; asked by worshippers to partake of apūpa, honey, milk, puroḍāśa etc. in the Veda 35; poor men reach G. by vratas, 44–45; Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtra, Śabara, Kumārila discard the idea that Veda is the word of God or that rewards of religious acts are due to the favour of God, 1209; Vedic G. have the epithet 'Vṛṣa' (bull, powerful) or 'Vṛṣabha' applied to them, to their chariots, weapons etc. 19; wives of gods Indra, Varuṇa, Agni and Maruts mentioned in Ṛg. are Indrāṇī, Varuṇānī, Agnayī and Rodasī, but they play a very subordinate part in Ṛg., 1044; worship of gods and of Viṣṇu is of three kinds, Vaidikī, Tāntrikī and Miśrā (mixed), acc. to Bhāgavata and Agni Purāṇas 1093; worship of God may be performed in an image, in water, fire, one's own heart, in sun's orb or on an altar 1649.
Godāna, same as Keśānta, 536n.
Gode, Prof P. K. 195.
Godhūli or Gorajas, muhūrta, defined, 613–14.
Goethe (1749–1832 A. D.); begins his memoirs with the positions of planets at his birth 551.
Goetz H., a. of 'Five thousand Years of Indian Art' (Bom.), 1656.
Gokarṇa, 90n.
Golden age in dim past, belief in, 686.
Gomatīvidyā, 204n.
Gomukhaprasavaśānti, 771n–72n.
Gopatha-brāhmaṇa, 816n.
Gopinatha Kaviraja, M. M. 1062n (on cakras), 1063 (in J. G. J. R. I.), 1187 (paper on Govt. Mss. in Govt. Sanskrit Library at Benaras), 1355.
Gopinath Rao, T. A., a. of 'Elements of Hindu Iconography' 1655.
Gorakhnath, pupil of Matsyendranātha, 1429n; works on, 1429n.
Gorakṣaśataka (on Yoga) 1389n, 1419, 1426n–27, 1432; verses of, are found in some Yoga Upaniṣads 1389n; ed. by Shri Kuvalayānanda, 1429, 1438n, 1441, 1451 (on final stage of Samādhi), 1458n.

Gorer G., a. of 'Bali and Angkor', 1657.
Gosava, Vedic sacrifice, 219.
Goswami, Prof. S. S, a. of 'Haṭhayoga' 1394 (with 108 photographs of Āsanas), 1426.
Gough, a. of 'Philosophy of the Upaniṣads' 1531; holds the view that Hindus borrowed doctrine of punarjanma from the indigenes 1531.
Govadha (offering of the flesh of a bull); Kalpataru remarks that this is not permitted in Kali age, though allowed in former ages and Mit. says it should not be practised as it has become hateful to people 1270n.
Govardhana, a city founded by Rāma on the northern part of Sahya, acc. to Brahmāṇḍa, 895.
Govardhanapūjā on Balipratipadā, 204–205; also called Annakūṭa, 205.
Govindacandra, king of Kanoj, granted a village after a bath in the Ganges on Akṣayya-tṛtīyā 89.
Govinda Das, 1395.
Govindānanda, commentator of Prāyaścittaviveka of Śūlapāṇi, explains Holākānyāya 1282.
Gowen, H. H, a. of 'History of Indian Literature': high eulogy of Sanskrit Literature by, 1651.
Grahagaṇita 665.
Grahalāghava of Gaṇeśa, composed in 1520 A. D., 642.
Grahaṇa, vide under 'eclipse'.
Grahayajña (vide Navagraha-śānti), 750, 753.
Grahayuddha, explained, 587n, 589, 637; Parāśara and Garga refer to it, 637.
Grammar (Vyākaraṇa), dealt with in P. M. S. (I. 3. 24–29), 1275; Kumārila in prima facie case agaist G. criticises Pāṇini, Vārtikakāra and Mahābhāṣya, 1275; eight, m. in Bhaviṣya-purāṇa 897; purposes of the study of, acc. to Patañjali, among which Ūha, a technical Mīmāṁsā term, is one 1158.
Grants: on Jupiter's entrance into Vṛṣabha-rāśi 212n; on Sun's entrance into Rāśis, 212-213n.
Grassmann 498n.
Greek and Latin equivalents of Sanskrit words for 'rāśis', planets etc. 585.
Greeks, (see under Herodotus, astronomical knowlodge, Ionia); all Greeks gradually came to be called Ionians 516; G. astronomers got from Babylonians the names of the constellations on the ecliptic 522n, 549; ambassadors of Greece such as Megasthenes to Candragupta and Deimachus to Bindusāra (Candragupta's son) 599; borrowed sexagesimal system of sun dials and twelve parts of day from Babylonians 482n; Berossus (about 280-261 B.C.) first introduced astrology among Greeks 549; debt of, to Babylonians much greater than had been imagined, 482; debt owed by Greeks to Egypt 482; developed geometry because they could not employ ordinary arithmetical methods owing to dependence on the abacus, 482; even eminent G. were surrounded by superstitions 513; Homer's poems and the works of Hesiod are oldest surviving writings of the Greeks 513; inferior to Babylonians in several respects, 482; inspiration for horoscopic astrology was received by G. from Babylon 594; mind of, was little in advance of the predecessors of the Vedic priests in science 512–13; no trace of astrology in writings of early Greeks 549; no extant literature of G. is earlier than 900 B. C. 513; scholars are far from insight into astronomy of Greeks before Ptolemy 518n; settled in India after Alexander's invasion, learnt Sanskrit, some wrote works in Sanskrit and became worshippers of Viṣṇu, 516, 585; tried to peep into future before the advent of astrology by oracles, dreams and inspection of entrails and liver of sacrificed animals 549; vaunted superiority of, in Arts, Philosophy and Mathematics has now been reduced owing to discoveries in Mesopotamia and other countries, 482, 700 and n; were completely captivated by astrology derived from Mesopotamia 549.

Greek words (on astrology), lis of, supposed to be used in Sanskrit works like the Bṛhatsaṁhitā and Bṛhajjātaka by Weber and others are 37 but some like Kulīra, Trikoṇa are not so held by Kern (vide under Jīva) 584; some 22 Greek words have indigenous Sanskrit synonyms 584; were used by Varāhamihira and others because they were employed in ancient Sanskrit works on astrology written by Greeks in India 585.

Gregorian calendar,: changes made by, 643; is unbalanced and inconvenient even now 718n; not followed in England till 1750 A. D, 643.

Gregory J. C. paper of, in 'Nature', Vol. 153 on Ancient Astrology, 549n, 552, 631n.

Gṛhastharatnākara of Caṇḍeśvara 876n.

Gṛhyapariśiṣṭa 75n–76n.

Gṛhya and Dharma sūtras took their knowledge of astronomy from astronomical works 480.

Gṛhyasūtras 223, 1323n; many G. have passages on Śāntis similar to those in Kauśikasūtra 738n.

Grierson G. A. 633n.

Grousset, Rene, a. of 'The sum of History' tr. by A. and H. Temple Patterson 1003, 1499n, 1503–4, 1654 (his appreciation of Indian Art and paintings); a. of 'In the footsteps of Buddha' 1009, 1039–40; a. of 'Civilization of the East', Vol. II on 'India, Further India and Malaya' 1618n, 1654–55.

Growse, 141.
Guenon Rene a. of 'Crisis of modern world' 1668 (defects of democracy).
Grunwedel, Prof, a. of 'Buddhist Art in India' 1131n.
Guenther, Dr. H. V. 1150, a of 'Yuganaddha' (the Tāntrik view of life); 1066n (explains away what is meant by intercourse with cāṇḍāla women etc.); relies on Buddhist Tantras only and tries to prove that Buddhist Tāntrikas endeavour to restore life in its entirety which is neither an indulgence in passions nor a rejection of nor escape from them 1067; views of, briefly stated and criticized 1067–68.
Guest, practice of offering a cow or bull to some worthy guests prevailed in ancient times, but forbidden later, 1270n.
Guggulu (incense), burnt in Caṇḍikā temple 39: favourite dhūpa of Devī 164n.
Guhya, meaning of, in Tantras, 1052 and n.
Guhyasamājatantra (probably of 6th century A. D.): (vide under Asaṅga, siddhis); 1040 (contains late elements), 1050, 1053, 1065–66, 1133, 1141 etc.; makes provision for endowing Sādhaka with miraculous powers such as killing enemy with magical rites, causing rainfall in a drought 1070; mentions the six magical cruel rites 1070; puts forward a quick and short method for realizing Buddhahood and for attainment of Siddhis through Yoga 1068-70; Siddhis are sāmānya (ordinary, such as becoming invisible) and Uttama (best viz. attaining Buddhahood) 1068; sets forth six aṅgas of Yoga (omitting the first three of Patañjali and adding Anusmṛti), 1068; teaching of G. is that if psychical powers and siddhis are to be developed females must be associated with those who undertake Yoga practices 1069.
Guṇa (means subordinate matter or detail) 1207.
Guṇakarma (or Guṇabhūta), explained (such as pounding rice grains or wiping ladle) and contrasted with pradhāna 1237, 1306.
Guṇas, in Sāṅkhya are three, sattva, rajas, tamas and their characteristics and are both substances and qualities 1357, 1372n; in Gītā 1357n; why so called 1357n.
Guṇavāda, a kind of arthavāda, defined and illustrated 1240–41.
Gupta, dynasty, referred to in a general way in only four Mahāpurāṇas in rather corrupt passages without specifying names of kings 843; rule of G. dynasty began about 320 A. D. 843.
Gupta Inscriptions, edited by Fleet, 110 (Gangadhar stone Ins. of Kṛta year 480 i. e. 423–24 A. D.), 263, 651n, 652n, 661, 667n, 669–70, 680, 687, 843, 856n, 964, 997, 1013, 1028, 1046 (mentions Mātṛs and awakening of Viṣṇu in Kārtika); era of, 656.

Gupte, B. A., work of, on 'Hindu holidays and ceremonials' 60, 200n; on Sāvitrīvrata origins, in I. A. vol. 35, 94; on Diwali, 207; on Śivarātri origin 235; on Holikā, criticized 241.
Guru, vide under Prabhākara.
Guru, vide under 'disciple'; Buddhist tantras like Jñānasiddhi contain grand eulogies of g, identify him with Buddha and call him omniscient 1071; is higher than all men and is to be served with devotion by disciples for attaining siddhis 1055; Jñānasiddhi and Kulārṇava warn against false gurus 1071; necessity of a g. for the acquisition of esoteric philosophy stressed by Upaniṣad passages 1072; position of, in Tantra, is not very different from that in Vedic literature or Purāṇas 1033n; pupil after undergoing dīkṣā in Tantra worship and receiving the mantra has to follow orders of g. 1054-55; qualifications of Tantrik g. acc. to Śāradātilaka, 1071; respect for g. sometimes reached extreme and disgusting lengths among tāntrik writers as stated by Tārābhaktisudhārṇava, 1072n; saves a man if Śiva is angry, but none can save the pupil if g. is angered 1101; theory of efficacy of mantras led to importance of guru about whom extravagant claims were made, 1454.
Gurney, O. R, a. of a work on 'Hittites' 683
Gurvāditya, astrological position, condemned for all rites 612.
Guyot Felix, a. of 'Yoga, the science of health', 1393.
Haarh, Erik, a. of paper on 'Contributions to the study of Maṇḍala and Mudrā' 1133.
Hall, Fitz-Edward, editor of Sāṅkhyapravacana-bhāṣya, 1354, 1371n, 1372 (on legends about Kapila); editor of Subandhu's 'Vāsavadattā' 1048.
Haṁsanyāsa, described by Rāghavabhaṭṭa 1120n.
Haṁsavilāsa 1077n.
Haradatta, com., of, on Āp. Dh. S. 1230, 1246n (explains Kalañja), 1251 (illustrates Vyavasthitavikalpa), 1256; com. of Āp. Gṛhya 735n, 611; com. on Gautama 668n, 1230.
Haraprasad Śastri, a. of Cat. (in several volumes) of Mss. in Bengal Asiatic Society, 437; a. of Cat. of Nepal Palm-leaf Mss. 909-10, 1033n, 1338n, 1049n; a of paper on causes of the disappearance of Buddhism 1003.
Hard work, the incentive of private gain, is motive for 1682.
Hardy, Prof. a of 'Ramanujan' 1573.
Hare W. L., article of, on 'Generation and Regeneration' in 'Open Court' (1926) included by Gandhiji as Appendix in his work 1423.
Haribhaktivilāsa of Gopālabhaṭṭa 113, 120.

Hariścandra, story of, in Ait. Br., Sabhāparva, Brahmapurāṇa 915.

Hārīta, Dharmasūtra of, q. by Aparārka on Yāj. I. 154, 1422n, 1432.

Hārīta, Smṛti of, 33, 42 (in prose), 116n (prose), 151, 257, 864-65n.

Haritālikāvrata, 144-45; brief procedure of, 144; for women alone, 144; not found in Hemādri on vrata or in Kṛtya-kalpa-taru 144; not prevalent in Bengal or Gujarat 145; observed on 3rd of Bhādrapada bright half 144; Rājamārtaṇḍa has four verses on it, 144; saṅkalpa in 144n; to be performed on 3rd mixed with 4th tithi (and not with 2nd) provided 3rd exists at least for two ghaṭikās from sunrise 145; various mantras repeated in 145n; very much in vogue among Mahārāṣṭra women 144; why it is so-called is difficult to explain 145.

Harivaṁśa 129, 133, 135n, 147n, 693, 695, 993n (on avatāras), 1028 (on Puṣyamitra), 1623.

Harṣa, king of Kashmir, horoscope of 630.

Harṣacarita of Bāṇa, 655, 705, 821-22, 997n, 1047, 1132 (on Maṇḍala in colours), 1384.

Harṣavardhana, emperor, 1047, distributed his wealth at Prayāga once in five years 262; birth of 705; horoscope of, examined 629; era of (started in 606 A. D.) 656; prohibited use of animal food, says Yuan Chwang, 1017.

Harshe, Dr. R. G., paper of, on mss. on dreams 782n.

Hastings, editor of E. R. E. 676n.

Hastyāyurveda, 803-04.

Haṭhavādika, explained, 1570n.

Hāthigumpha, inscription of Khāravela 1614.

Hauer Dr, on Munis, 1386n, 1387 (on Vrātyas), 1393 (two works of, on Yoga), 1397.

Haviṣya (sacrificial substances that may be eaten in vratas) 462, 1110n.

Haṭhayoga (vide under Khecarī-mudrā' and 'Vajrolīmudrā'); deals with processes called Dhauti, basti, nauli, neti, trāṭaka, kapālabhāti, on which Patañjali is silent, 1428 and n; photographs of the processes called Dhauti 1438n; technique of H. claims three results 1428; to be kept secret and not to be exposed to all 1460. works (modern) on H. 1428n.

Haṭhayogapradīpikā of Svātmārāma, 1127 (on Mudrās and Vajrolī), 1426-27, 1432 (proper food for Yogin), 1443, 1450, 1451n, 1460, 1649 (on secrecy); com. Jyotsnā by Brahmānanda 1427; English translation of, 1427n; main aim of āsana and prāṇāyāma is to awaken the kuṇḍalinī, while Pātañjala Yoga does dot dilate upon this 1429; names about 35 Mahāsiddhas from Ādinātha (Śiva), Matsyendranātha, Gorakṣanātha and others 1115n, 1429n; proper name is Haṭhapradīpikā 1427; ten mudrās named by 1428n, 1429; Yamas of, are ten, of which taking a light meal is the principal 1429.

Hazra, Prof. R. C. 1149; a of 'Studies in Purānic Records on Hindu rites and customs', 816n, 834, 844, 886 (paper on Upapurāṇas) and of 'studies in Upapurāṇas' Vol. I) 867, 870; admits that among the Upapurāṇas are works of late date and yet asserts that the age of Upapurāṇas began from the Gupta period, 836; bestowed much labour and thought on Purāṇas in general and individual Purāṇas 864; dates of the formation of U. given by Prof. H. entirety wrong for reasons pointed out 836-37; dates assigned by Prof. H. to Sāmba, Narasiṁha, Viṣṇudharma and Viṣṇudharmottara not acceptable 871-72; has developed a tendency to assign more ancient dates to Purāṇas and Upapurāṇas than the evidence warrants 864; does not explain what he means by non-tāntrik character 876n; paper on 'Aśvamedha as common source of origin of Purāṇa and Mahābhārata' criticized 865-67; papers published in several journals on Purāṇas and Upapurāṇas, 844; puts a wrong interpretation on Śaṅkarācārya's bhāṣya on Chān. Up. III. 4. 1-2 about Pāriplavarātris 866; remark of Prof. H. that Upapurāṇas were known to Yāj, criticized 835n; sees reference to Purāṇas when in fact none exists and where Purāṇa (in Hārīta quoted by Mitākṣarā) means Śrāddha of a particular kind 864-65; sees too much meaning in simple words and phrases and does not observe caution in his conclusions 815; theory of, that if a work is free from Tāntrik elements it should be regarded as belonging to 3rd or 4th cen. A. D. is a slippery one and wrong 874; view of, that the Viṣṇudharmottara does not refer to the works of Varāhamihira shown to be wrong 778.

Heard, Gerald, a. of 'Is God evident' 1547 (on Vedānta).

Heart, 1073 (note 1717) spoken of as lotus in the Upaniṣads, 1446n.

Heath, T. L., a. of 'Greek Astronomy' and of 'Aristarchus of Samos' 482, 513-14, 520n, 566n, 676, 689n.

Heaven (svarga), 1212-1215 (vide under Gods): and earth, six hymns addressed to as divinities in Ṛg, 1492-93; and earth are called father and mother in Ṛg. 1548n; distance between h. and earth as put in the Ait Br., 1493; ideas about h. held by Jaimini, Śabara and Kumārila differ from those in the Veda and Purāṇas 1212; in Ṛg. h. was deemed to be a place where souls of valiant men and great donors and wise men went 1213; in Atharvaveda heaven was deemed to possess damsels, edible plants and flowers, streams of ghee, honey and wine, milk, curds, lotus ponds, 1213; is defined as 'mental happiness' (prīti) by Śabara, 1214, 1312n; joys of h. were 100 times greater than those on earth 1213; old verse defines svarga as 'a state of happiness unmixed with pain' 1214; poets like Kālidāsa describe how the soul of one killed in battle arrives instantly in H. 1213; Purāṇas like Brahma, Mārkaṇḍeya, Padma, graphically describe H. as having all pleasures and no sorrow 1213; rewards of acts must be held to differ in their duration 1214; Śabara and Kumārila state that popular ideas about h. are invalid, that Mahābhārata and Purāṇas being the works of human authors need not be considered and Vedic descriptions are merely arthavādas 1214; Śabara states that the words of Veda provide that reward of rites will follow, either in this life or in later existences, 1215; Upaniṣads like Chān. (VIII. 5.3) and Kauṣītaki dilate upon the joys of heaven such as hundreds of Apsarases with garlands 1213; Viṣṇupurāṇa says h. is what produces mental happiness, Naraka is the opposite, that merit and sin are named Svarga and Naraka 1214; was declared to be reward for all sacrifices for which no express reward is provided by Veda 1214.

Heliodora, a Bhāgavata and Greek ambassador from king Antalikita to an Indian king 131.

Hemacandra, Jaina ācārya, condemns prāṇāyāmas 1441.

Hemādri, 1623; on Vrata 31n, 37-40, 42n, 44-47, 49n, 51n, 54, 55n, 61n, 82, 84-86, 88-90, 92, 94n, 100n, 101, 105n-107, 114-7, 119, 124, 127-8, 132n, 142n, 147n, 148-9, 150n, 151, 153n-4n, 156n-7n, 160n, 165n, 168, 170-1, 178, 183n-5, 188-9, 191, 195 6n, 199, 207, 221, 239n, 572n, 597n, 745n-46, 769, 788n, 792-3, 795n, 801, 803-4, 810n, 834n, 835, 860n, 868n, 923n, 926n, 930n, 954n, 1096n, 1106n, 1130 (speaks of some mudrās), 1289, 1307; on Kāla 69n, 73n, 75n, 78n-9n, 89, 95-97, 99n, 100, 102, 104n, 106, 110n, 111, 113, 115-20n, 125, 132n, 133, 137n-8n, 147n. 201n-3n, 211-16, 216, 218, 219-20n, 222-23, 227, 229-30 234n, 238, 241, 243n-50n, 473n, 477, 480n, 608, 609n, 623, 657, 663n-5n, 671n, 672-74; on śrāddha 640n, 693, 706, 920, 931n, 978n; on Dāna 830.

Hensler, Eric de, a. of a French work on 'Transmigration' 1605

Hepatoscopy, meaning and illustrations of, 521n; not developed in India 522n; theory underlying it 522n.

Heraclitus, view of, that a new sun was born and died every day, 511, 690.

Heretical sects in Purāṇas, 978; one should not even talk with Pañcarātras and Pāśupatas and should not feed at Śrāddhas Bauddha mendicants, Nirgranthas etc. 978.

Heretics: in 1401 English Parliament passed the Statute for the burning of H., which was not repealed till the Stuarts came back 476.

Heritage of India, paper on 'Tantras as a way of realization' in Vol. IV, 1085.

Herodotus, 482 (Greeks borrowed from Babylonians two kinds of sun-dials and division of day into 12 parts); refers to peculiar practice of Egyptians to regard each month and day as sacred to some god 549; states some Greeks had made the doctrine of punarjanma their own and that Egyptians were the first to teach it 1530; states that India constituted the 20th province of Persian empire and paid tribute 1613.

Hesiod, furnishes the earliest evidence for lucky and unlucky days in Greece 523.

Hevajratantra, edited and translated by Dr. D. L. Snellgrove, 1147.

Hickey J. C., a. of 'Introducing the Universe' 499, 565n–66.

Himavat mountain (Himālaya): alone m. by Pāṇini among seven principal mountains though he knew others also, 1525n; Atharvaveda knows it and remarks that all rivers start from Himavat and join Sindhu (ocean), 1526n–27; snow-capped mountains known to Ṛgveda 1527.

Hindi, making Hindi the only official language of India, criticized 1666–67.

Hindu astronomy, discussion of the theory of Greek influence on, 514–21.

Hindu culture and civilization, fundamental characteristics of 1623–1657.

Hindu, word, used by Darius and Xerxes in inscriptions 1613; few elements that bound Hindus together and causes that militated against their unity set out 1621–22.

Hinduism (vide under 'Buddhism' and 'Buddha'); had to meet challenge of Moslem invasions and domination from 11th century A. D. onwards; higher thought in H. held that there was only one God 118; in stemming the tide of Buddhism, the brāhmaṇas and other leaders of H. had to make compromises of a far-reaching character, such as giving up of Vedic animal sacrifices, Paurāṇika Mantras and procedure came to be used along with Vedic Mantras in Śrāddha, in Devapūjā and in establishing images, 1024–25; modern fashion to make comparison between present practices and shortcomings of H. and the original doctrine of Buddha and to disparage the former, but a comparison to be fair should be made between the later phases of Buddhism and later phases and practices of H. 1029.

Hinduism, the pursuit of purely secular or wordly happiness is incompatible with the precepts and ideals of Hinduism 1475.

Hindu law (vide under Dowry, Women): Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act (No. 78 of 1956) has made radical and far-reaching changes and overrules all texts, rules, customs and usages, except in so far as they may have been expressly saved by the Act, 1336, 1670-71; of all the revolutionary changes occurring in India the most pervading influence will be that of the several laws affecting Hindus made from 1954 to 1956, 1674; on adoption severely criticized as a misnomer and travesty of ancient Hindu Law 1337-8; Hindu Law of inheritance declared the impotent, the outcast and his son, and several others as unfit for a share (on partition), and only entitled to maintenance, but the Hindu Succession Act (32 of 1956) has swept away all these disqualifications 1319; under old H. L. girls were to be married before puberty and Manu IX. 90 provides that if relations don't get her married she should wait for three years and then may herself choose her partner 1338.

Hindu Marriage Act 25 of 1955, 1671 (makes sweeping changes of which most Hindus are ignorant).

Hindu Marriage Act makes vast changes 1706

Hindu Marriage, recent Act against dowry, criticized as useless 1676.

Hindu society, one of the outstanding characteristics of, is the joint family system of Mitākṣarā type prevalent in whole of India (except Bengal); drastic changes made by Hindu Succession Act of 1956 without abrogating it 1672–74.

Hindu Society and Religion; Reform and reorganization of, discussed, 1699–1710.

Hindu Succession Act 30 of 1956, criticized 1673–74.

Hipparchus (about 140 B. C.): Ptolemy based his work on the work of, 514n, 682.

Hiraṇyagarbha, praised as creator and identified with Prajāpati and Śāntiparva says that he is announced in Yogasūtras as author 1371, 1391, 1489–90.

Hiraṇyakeśigṛhya, 622.

Hiriyanna, Prof. M., a. of 'Outlines of Indian Philosophy' pp. 298-325 (on P. M. S.), 1200.

History of Dharmaśāstra : Vol. I, on pp 20, 815–16, 834n, 854, 889, 894, 1152n, 1199; vol. II on pp. 18, 25, 27–8, 31n–33n, 34, 37, 43, 87n, 101n, 123, 126, 148, 185, 191, 206, 210, 218n–9n, 267, 276, 293, 312, 393, 419, 421, 511n, 536–37n, 554n, 614, 622, 674n–5n, 724, 737n, 748, 759n, 773n, 778–9n, 790, 802n, 853n, 935, 945, 969n 973n, 991–2, 1006n, 1027, 1029n, 1031, 1079–80n, 1096n–97, 1099n, 1114n, 1116, 1123, 1125, 1205n, 1217n–18, 1233n, 1244n, 1269, (for Madhuparka), 1269n (for Sautrāmaṇī), 1272 (Upanayana for women), 1279 (marrying a maternal uncle's daughter and gift or sale of horses), 1288, 1292, 1294n, 1304n, 1306 (distinction between yāga, homa, and dāna), 1313n, 1317, 1319, 1321, 1323n, 1325n–26, 1328n–29n, 1331n, 1413n, 1422, 1458, 1471–2, 1511, 1527, 1536n, 1545, 1570, 1577, 1592, 1598, 1614, 1624, 1626–28, 1632, 1634n–36n, 1638n–1640, 1643, 1647n, 1688; Vol. III. — (on pp.) 184, 237n, 335, 448, 486, 532, 543n, 545, 620n, 640, 648n, 686–7, 691n, 693, 701, 783n, 812n, 849, 856n, 969n, 1080, 1152n, 1184, 1190n, 1205n, 1239n, 1257n, 1259n (on Manu II. 7) 1258, 1260, and n, 1262, 1263n, 1264n, 1266n, 1269, 1273n, 1278–9, 1280 (discussion on valid customs and usages), 1281 (Kumārila's explanations of transgressions by great men of antiquity), 1294n, 1296, 1301n, 1309, 1319–20, 1336 (adoption by Hindu widow), 1420-1, 1469n–70, 1472, 1474, 1543n, 1626–27, 1663, 1701; Vol IV– 3, 20, 28, 40n–41, 52–3, 64–5n, 89n, 91n, 97–8, 103, 105, 204n, 205n, 246n, 267, 272, 292, 371, 375, 386, 416, 430–31, 462, 640, 671, 673n–4n, 675, 681, 706, 731n, 756n, 786n, 796n, 825, 865n, 894–5, 915–16n, 920, 932–3, 988 (meaning of ṛta), 1110n, 1212, 1231, 1273n, 1317, 1320, 1334, 1365n, 1416, 1422, 1458, 1528, 1531–2 1576n, 1589, 1592, 1598, 1643, 1645, 1653 (n), 1706 (Hindūkaraṇavidhi).

History of Sanskrit Poetics by P. V. Kane, 769n, 780, 997n, 1653n.

Hittites, 599n comparative grammar of H. language; Sayce draws attention to the fact that H. numerals are Sanskrit 599n; technical Sanskrit words in horse-breeding, royal names and Vedic gods about 1400 B. C. among H. 683.

Hobhouse, L. T. a. of 'Morals in evolution'; 1594, 1606, 1630n.

Hoens, D. J. work of, on Śāntis, is extensive but deals with Śāntis in Saṁhitās, Brāhmaṇas and Śrautasūtras only 735.

Hoernle, Dr. 499, 840n (on date of Amarakośa).

Hogben, on 'Mathematics in Antiquity' 482n.

Hogg, A. G., a. of 'Karma and Redemption' 1570n, 1604.

Holākādhikaraṇa–Jai. I. 3. 15–23 are so called because the first example in Śabara's bhāṣya is Holākā 237n, 1281; frequently m. by writers on Dharmaśāstra 1281–82.

Holikā 237–241 (vide under Śabara), also called 'Hutāśani' and 'Phālgunikā' 238; ancient festival on Phālguna Full Moon of unmixed gaiety and frolic throughout India, though all parts do not observe it in the same way 237; derivation of the word from the word 'Homa' 239n; element of bonfire is present everywhere except in Bengal, where swinging of Kṛṣṇa image is done 237; Dolayātrā in Bengal in place of bonfire 239-240; history of holākā from ancient times 238; legend as to why boys become boisterous and kindle Holākā 238-39; number of days for this festival varies 237; obeisance to ashes with Mantra on the day after Phālguna full moon 239; obscene sex references in 241; only religious element is worship of Kṛṣṇa in Bengal and in some other provinces a priest is engaged to perform pūjā before bonfire 237; origin of, explained from natural phenomena 240; ribald songs and music, sprinkling of coloured water or powder are accretions 240-241; sounds made by beating mouths with the back of the hand 237, 241; spring festival in origin 240; sprinkling of friends with coloured water from bamboo or metal syringes or with red powder is indulged in now even by persons in high places 237; worship of Kāma, god of love 239.

Homa, 802 and n; cannot be performed by women and śūdras with Vedic mantras but could be performed for them through a priest 32, 40, 52; distinction between homa, yāga, and dāna, 33; distinguished from devapūjā 33; fire in which h. is to be made 50; in a vrata was in honour of the deity of the vrata or was vyāhṛtihoma 33; number of āhutis to be offered in 50.

Honey making and queen bee, illustration of, in Praśna Up. II 4 and in Yogabhāṣya, 1444n Hroke S. H., a. of 'Babylonian and Assyrian religion' 522n.

Hopkins E. W., paper of, on 'Yoga technique in the Great Epic' 1393, 1577 (against Deussen's theory); 1604 (on modifications of karma doctrine).

Horā, a branch of Jātaka 479; also means 'lagna' and also half a 'rāśi' 546; early Sanskrit texts do not employ the word h. in the sense of 24th part of day 571n; had three sub-sections, Jātaka (horoscopic astrology), Yātrā of Yātrika (prognostications on a king's march for invasion or for starting on a journey), Vivāha (examining horoscopes of parties to a marriage) 479-80; lords of the two horās of a day 580-81; meaning and derivation of, 545, 571n, 580; prognostications from birth on each of the two horās of a day 580; three meanings of, in Sanskrit astrology 571.

Horace, ode of, to Maecenas 550.

Horāśāstra, means astrology based on horoscopes of individuals 545.

Horizon, Bṛhajjātaka employs the word 'harija' for it 584n.

Horoscope (vide astrology, Ahmedabad, bhāva): ancient and medieval Indian h. took no account of Uranus, Neptune, Pluto and Satellites of Jupiter 637; correctly cast from looking at a man, his eyes and hands by Mahadkar Jyotishi 631; is cast not only for individuals but also for companies, ships, animals, foundations of buildings, cities and countries 555; oldest h. found in Mesopotamia and not in Egypt nor in Greece, 596–67; oldest Greek h. from Egypt range from 4 B. C. to 500 A. D. 597; possibility that h. might lead to a more or less correct statement about a person's features but little about the vicissitudes of his life, 632; principle that h was merely like a map or plan was often given up by Varāhamihira and others 547–48, 634; Ptolemy insists that h. is not the sole basis for judging a person's future, but country of birth, race, customs, upbringing have also to be considered 553–4; some horoscopes of avatāras like Rāma and of other famous ancient persons examined 627–629; twelve houses in h., their names and synonyms 577-8; Utpala and Rājamārtaṇḍa also require as Ptolemy does, the consideration of country, caste, family and customs of a person whose h. is to be explained 554n, 555; was linked with the doctrine of Karma and Punarjanma by Varāhamihira and other Indian astrologers 545; word horoscope coined late in Greece 597.

Horses, honoured in Durgotsava 184; Nīrājana of, m. in Raghuvaṁśa and Bṛhatsaṁhitā as Śānti 187; prognostications from movements, prancing, neighing of, 804; sale of, expressly forbidden by Manu X. 89 and impliedly by Tai. S., but gifts of H. highly praised in Ṛg. 1257n.

Hospital, establishment of, with physicians proficient in eight aṅgas of Āyurveda m. in Nandipurāṇa q. by Kalpataru and Aparārka, 891.

Hours, European, derived from Babylon and Egypt 678.

House, astrological requirements in construction of 623; auspicious times and nakṣatras for construction of, were provided in gṛhyasūtras 622–23; construction of, called Śālākarma 622; first entrance (gṛhapraveśa) into a newly built h. required the same astrological times as for construction of h. 624; many of the astrological requirements are observed even now in construction of a house and first entrance in a newly built h. 624; works on construction of, 623.

Householder–vide under 'gifts': high eulogy of stage of, in Dharmaśāstras, epics and by poets, 27; is to engage after daily bath, in Japa of parts of three Vedas, of Atharvaveda, of Purāṇas with Itihāsa and Upaniṣads 865; to perform five yajñas daily 935.

Hrozny: puts date of Mitanni records at 1360 B C. 599n.

Hultzsch, edited 'Aśoka Inscriptions' 1012n, 1017.

Humphreys, Christmas, a. of 'Karma and Rebirth', 1605.

Hūṇas, vide under Mihirakula and Toramāṇa, 61n, 856.

Huxley Aldous: a of 'Ends and Means' gives advice to social reformers against making unnecessary or startling changes 1338, 1676; warning by, against the plethora of books on Yoga, 1651.

Images (vide under Portent): Grant of a village on the establishment of Viṣṇu image in 6th century A. D. 625; of gods were made for sale and for worship before Pāṇini, 36; of gods described as dancing, trembling and weeping as a portent 769; Purāṇas say that i. are necessary for concentrating the mind 973n; rules about auspicious times for establishment of i., 624–5; rules about making images of Sun, Mātṛs and others in Br S. and Purāṇas 683n, 1046; Śānti for i. of gods that fall down, weep, dance, laugh or sing 737n, 769n, 770; reasons advanced for image worship are acquieseed in by some western scholars also 1649–50n.

Incense (dhūpa); results of burning various kinds of dhūpa 39; varieties of incense 39.

Incentives for hard work are required even in Russia 1682.

India, (vide under 'monuments'): Achievements of, after Independence in 1947, 1663–64; downfall of, was due to lack of certain virtues, such as general high character, nationalism, freedom, justice, high endeavour and not merely to caste system, 1643; even when Buddhism flourished, the people of India as a whole were always Hindu 1606; intercourse between Babylon and I. from 3rd millenium B. C. 598–600, 683; Northwest of, was centre of Sanskrit culture at least six centuries B. C. 542; people of, were and are ready to agree that there may be alternative approaches to the mystery of life and salvation of the soul 1012; Rhys Davids holds that I. never indulged in persecution approaching in any way to persecution of reforming Christians by orthodox Christians etc. 1011; Varāhamihira divided India into nine parts, each of which held to be governed by three nakṣatras and the Mārkaṇḍeya also agrees 530; works and papers on ancient Geography of, 1528n; proper word for I. is Bharatavarṣa or Bhārata 1614; no political unity for the whole of India (except perhaps under Aśoka) at any time nor of one nationality for all Hindus till the British rule began, 1621; is now a sovereign democratic Republic 1663; mixed economy of public and private enterprise in I. 1682; poor per capita income of India, 1685; problem of phenomenal growth of population 1687–88; some of the causes of political downfall of India 1622–23; was invaded by Persians, Greeks, Scythians and Huns but they and other tribes like Pāradas, Cīnas, kirātas that emigrated into I. were absorbed 1640; Yavanas and Kambojas referred to in Aśoka's ediots 1640; assistance to, by U. S. A., 1693; Budget of Govt. of I. envisages vast expenditure 1689–90; no political authority that could legislate for whole of India before the British and consequent variety of laws and usages in 1701; peculiar and formidable difficulties of modern I. 1702; public debt of, at various periods 1692; rapid enactment of several tax laws, and their procedure and effects, 1694–95; States, based on purely linguistic basis undesirable 1703; vacillating policy of Central Govt. as to Bombay city criticized 1703; vast debt owed to U. S. A. and other countries 1689–90, 1693; what is wanted for integration is a comprehensive code or system of beliefs and day to day conduct 1703.

Indian, brought to Baghdad a treatise on Arithmetic and astronomy and introduced Indian numerals which were passed on to Europe in 12th Cent. A. D. by Arabs 483n.

Indian Antiquary (Journal): 94, 112, 130–31, 140–42, 149, 155, 205, 207, 213, 245–246, 253, 262, 264, 275, 279, 419, 420, 437, 485, 493, 507n, 508, 510, 515n, 625, 631 (grant of 1793 A. D. containing predictions of matters that came to be true), 633n, 641n, 651n, 652n, 653, 656, 661–2, 670, 685, 701, 702n, 766n, 812, 817n, 873, 910, 964n, 1010n, 1013–4, 1016, 1018, 1025, 1129, 1161, 1182n, 1219, 1395, 1524n, 1528n, 1634n

Indian Art, architecture, sculpture and painting; 1652–7; works on, 1655–56

'Indian Culture' a journal, 493n, 657n, 844.

Indian Ephemeris by Pillai: Vol. I, has a long list of festivals but it mentions no original authorities 253.

Indian Civilization (vide under debts, puruṣārthas, varṇa and caste): wrong view of Toynbee (in Vol. IX) that Indian C. was born about 1375 B. C. and broke down about 725 B. C. and Hindu civilization began about 775 A. D. and broke down about 1175 A. D., which he himself corrects in his Reconsiderations (Vol. XI), 1617; absorbed foreign invaders like Persians, Scythians, Huns and spread its religion, art, literature to many countries of S. E. Asia by mostly peaceful methods 1617–8.

Indian Culture, is based on great spiritual values and exalted mind and soul over the body 1619, 1640; large number of works and papers on spread of, to further India or greater India, 1618n; developed the idea of three religious debts owed to sages, gods and ancestors 1626; unbroken tradition and continuity from Vedic times, 1622; questions that require to be asked and answered by Indians are about the prevention of recurring invasions of foreigners and about inability to form one dominion for the whole of India till British rule began 1620–21.

Indian culture, chief aims of, in former times 1708.

India's great handicap is population and food production 1684; India, one of the poorest countries in the world 1685.

India's food crisis and the steps to meet it dealt with in Ford Foundation Report, discussed, 1685–86

Indian General Clauses Act (X of 1897), Sec. 13 lays down that the singular includes the plural and words of masculine gender include females, unless the subject or context is repugnant 1187n.

Indian Historical Quarterly 30, 126n, 155n, 187, 485, 516, 614, 656, 668n, 696, 699n, 714n, 812 (Pargiter criticized), 844, 883, 957n, 978n, 1003, 1007, 1033n. 1046n, 1075n, 1140, 1158n, 1159n, 1160 (Inscription of Rājarāja in 999 A. D in which Mimāṁsāśāstra is said to have 20 Chap.), 1176 (problem of 'Taduktam' sūtras), 1186n, 1187 (paper on 'Vṛttikāras of Pūrvamīmāṁsā-sūtra), 1355, 1395, 1397 (Prof. Renou criticized) 1408n, 1527n.

Indian Independence Act of 1947, 1662.

Indians (except gymnosophists) did not go to Greece and did not return to India to spread Greek astrology 585.

Indians should not despair or lose courage, but must work hard to secure prosperity for all 1704.

Indica Antiqua (in honour of Dr. Vogel) 67.

Indische Studien 563n, 589n, 617n.

Indra and Prajāpati 1497–8; exploits of, 12; paramour of Ahalyā (night), 1280; relation to Yatis, in Ṛgveda 1386; said to be a killer of 'ahi' 126.

Indradhvajotthāna 274; described at length in H. of Dh. II. pp. 825–26.

Indulgences (granting forgiveness of sins and a certificate of entry in Paradise) were put on sale by highest dignitaries of Christian Church in the hands of licensed traders 933n.

Ingalls, Prof. on 'Materials for the study of Navyanyāya' 470n.

Inge, W. R. a. of 'Christian Mysticism' 1463n; a. of 'Christian Ethics' 1668.

Intercalary Month (adhimāsa): (vide malamāsa, saṁsarpa); as opposed to nija, śuddha or prākṛta 664; called Saṁsarpa or Aṁhaspatya in Tai. S. and M. S. and Aṁhasaspati in Vāj. S. 489; condemned from ancient times, 671; explanation as to why it occurs 662–663; how and when inserted in times of Ṛg. and Tai. S. not known but one whole month was added even in Ṛg. times 490; known to Ṛg., the other Saṁhitās and the Brāhmaṇas 489; one I. M. once in 2½ years provided in Kauṭilīya and another after 2½ years more 506n; Mahābhārata adds two I. M. in 5 years, 506 n; names for I. M. in Sanskrit are many and their explanations 671; people following luni-solar calendars like the Babylonians, Chaldeans and Indians had to resort to the device of, 662; said to be of 35 days in Śat. Br. 489n; two intercalary months in five years acc. to Vedāṅga Jyotiṣa and others 663; various works specify different periods after which I. M. occurs 663.

Invakā, means Mṛgaśīrṣa, 535.

Inquisition: instances of the intolerance and barbarities of, 1019–1020; method of its work 1020; Rule W. H. a. of History of, 933; state of Hindus in Goa when Inquisition existed 1020; three centuries of I. resulted in condemnation of 375, 000 people of whom at least one-tenth were burnt 1019; was established in Goa in 1560 and it continued its inhuman work for 250 years more, 1020; works on the brabarities of 933n.

Inscriptions: Aihole I. 1029; Aśoka I. 686n; details about season, month etc. how given in i. before and after Christian era 669–670; from Kambuja (Cambodia) 1048n; Junagadh Inscription of Rudradāman 670; Nasik cave Inscriptions 968n; of Campā and Cambodia 883 (6th century provision for reading of Bhārata, Rāmāyaṇa and Purāṇas); Somanath Pattan Inscriptions of 1264, A. D. is a a remarkable one 1018; Yogaśāstra, Yoga techniques and āsanas mentioned in, 1425n.

Ionia (of which Yavaṇa is a Sanskrit equivalent): original location of, 516n.

Isaiah (Old Testament) 548.

Īsānasaṁhitā 228–9.

Īśopaniṣad 1478, 1704, 1707.

Iṣṭāpūrta: (vide under 'Pūrta'): occurs in Ṛgveda once and means merit acquired by sacrifices and by works of public utility 947; occurs in Upaniṣads Manu and purāṇas 947–9.

Iṣu-yāga, a magic rite referred to in P. M. S. VII. 1. 13–16, to which details are transferred from Śyena-yāga 1322.

Īśvara, in Yoga system is not creator but has a limited role 1412–13.

Īśvarapraṇidhāna, two meanings of, in Vyāsabhāṣya 1412n, 1414.

Itihāsa-purāṇa, meaning of, acc. to com. on Śat. Br. 815; in Atharvaveda, Śat. Br. and Śrauta-sūtras and Kautilya, 816, 819; m. in Tai. Ār, Chān. up and Bṛ. Up. 675; reading of, prescribed for all dvija householders by Dakṣa, 819; Upaniṣads speak of them as fifth Veda 817.

Itikartavyatā – means procedure of sacrifices, 1283n; Kalpa is the same as i. 1283n; word occurs in P. M. S. III. 3. 11.

I-Tsing: his 'Records of Western world' tr. by Dr. Takakusu 942n, 1003, 1198n (refers to Jayāditya, author of Kāśikā) Iyengar, Dr. S. K., a. of 'Manimekalai in its historic setting', 1186n.

Jābāla, a. of Smṛti 213n 216.

Jābāli, a. of Smṛti 247, 248n.

Jābālopaniṣad 944, 1251 (gives several options about the time when to become a sannyāsin), 1514, 1607.

Jacks L. P., a. of 'Near the Brink' 1609; 1675n 'on social reform').

Jackson, A. M. T. 1640n (attractive and absorbing power of Hinduism).

Jacob, Colonel, a. of 'Laukikanyāyāñjali' 1339.

Jacobi, H. 579, 1395, 1397–98 (on dates of philosophical sūtras); Festgabe H. Jacobi, 812, 883; on date of Ṛgveda 510, 513; papers of, on Indian astronomy in E. I. 644.

Jagdish Lal, editor of Yogayātrā 627n.

Jāgara, 26 items of, in Ekādaśīvrata 106n.

Jaigīṣavya, m. as Sāṅkhya-yoga teacher in Śāntiparva 1374, 75 (dialogues of J. and Asita Devala), 1391–92 (a great Yoga teacher in Śalya and Śānti parvans), 1398, 1444 (Yogabhāṣya on Y. S. II. 54 follows J.).

Jaimini (vide under Bādarāyaṇa, Mīmāṁsā, Pūrvamīmāṁsā, Vyāsa): a. of Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtra 24n-5n, 28, 33–34, 53, 73n, 77, 86, 96, 132, 139, 212n, 224, 823–4, 926n-7n, 1032, 1097 and n, 1107, 1114n, 1154–55, 1158, 1207, 1222n, 1231, 1250 (the word 'nityānuvāda' occurs frequently in), 1527, 1544–45; commentator Upavarṣa on, 735n, 821; pupil of Vyāsa, acc to Sāmavidhāna Brāhmaṇa, 1161; received Sāmaveda from Vyāsa, 1161; Sabhā and Śānti parvans and Purāṇas on 1161; sūtras of V. S. in which J. is named, 1162.

Jaimini, a. of a Smṛti, 249n.

Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa 1117.

Jaiminīya Gṛhyasūtra 733 (adbhutaśānti), 1177.
Jaiminīya-nyāya-mālā-vistāra of Mādhavācārya 237n, 1185, 1189 (summarises in verse and prose 1000 adhikaraṇas).
Jaiminīya Śrauta-sūtra 1177.
Jaiminīya-sūtrārthasaṅgraha of Ṛṣiputra Parameśvara 1159n, 1188n Jaina Kalpasūtra of Bhadrabāhu 777.
Jainas, doctrine of 'Saptabhaṅgīnaya' m. in Viṣṇupurāṇa 974n; had mudrās 1130; view of there being two suns and moons criticized by Pañcasiddhāntikā and Brahmagupta 511 and n.
Jainism, practised thorough-going ahiṁsā 1648.
Jalāśayotsargatattva 1273n
Jamadagni, a. of a Smṛti 118n.
Jambudvīpa, m. in Aśoka's Rupnath Rock Inscription 1523, 1614.
James, E. O., a. of 'the cult of the Mother Goddess' 1046n.
James, William, a. of 'Varieties of religious experience' and of 'Pragmatism' 1212, 1475, 1483, 1486, 1650n.
Janaka, king of Mithilā, a pupil of Pañcaśikha acc. to Śāntiparva, 1365–70; had reached a position of unconcern about worldly goods and power 1367n, 1369; dialogue between J. and Sulabhā and her scathing remarks against J. 1368–70; learned from Pañcaśikha the whole doctrine of mokṣa as based on Upaniṣad passages acc. to Śāntiparva, 1369–70; learnt from Yājñavalkya the doctrine of brahman acc. to Bṛ. Up. 1370, 1377–79; offered to become slave of Yājñavalkya 1580.
Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣit, 648n; quarrel of, with brāhmaṇas, 827 and n.
Janasthāna, on Godāvarī, said to be sacrificial ground of Janaka dynasty, 894.
Janma-maraṇavicāra, of Bhaṭṭa Vāmadeva, on doctrine of Karma 1599–1600.
Janmāṣṭamī, vide Kṛṣṇajanmāṣṭamī.
Japa of Om in Smṛtis and Māṇḍūkyopaniṣad 1413 and n.
Japan, compelled by growth of population to legalize abortion 1689.
Jastrow, Morris, a. of 'Religion of Babylon and Assyria' 522n.
Jātaka, a branch of horā (judicial astrology), based on horoscope 479, 545; often identified with horāśāstra 546.
Jātakālaṅkāra of Gaṇeśa, composed in 1613 A. D., 558.
Jātakarma (rites on a child's birth); auspicious times for, 605.
Jātakas, Buddhist birth stories 599n.
Jāti (caste): word does not occur in Vedic literature, but occurs in Nirukta, Pāṇini, Mahābhārata 1433; vide under 'varṇa'.
Jawaharlal Nehru, a. of 'Autobiography' 1640n, 1689; about a man having a worth-while ideal, 1670.

Jaya, applied to Mahābhārata at first but later to several other works also 301, 870–1.

Jayākhya-saṁhitā, 1105n–6, 1111, 1120 (on nyāsa), 1123, 1125, 1131n.

Jayamaṅgalā, commentary on Vātsyāyana's Kāmasūtra 195n, 238, 1131n.

Jayamaṅgalā, com. on Sāṅkhya-kārikā, names many teachers between Pañcaśikha and Īsvara-Kṛṣṇa, 1355.

Jayanta-bhaṭṭa, a. of Nyāya-mañjarī 469.

Jayantī, 8th of dark half of Śrāvaṇa with Rohiṇī nakṣatra is different from Janmāṣṭamī-vrata, acc. to Hemādri and some others 133.

Jayantīnirṇaya, of Hārīta Veṅkatanātha (part of Daśanirṇayī), 132n, 133, 138, 139n.

Jayaprakāśa Narayan and Sarvodaya ideal 1683.

Jayaswal, K. P. (a. of ' History of India ' 1013): 651n, 679n (on origin of week-days), 826 (published the historical portion of Yugapurāṇa), 827–28, 883 (papers on Purāṇas), 1008n (on explanation of Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa), 1013, 1140 (a. of ' Imperial History of India ', which deals with parts of Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa); 1614n (on Hathigumpha Ins.); 1663 (holds that ancient India had republics).

Jayātithis are 3rd, 8th and 13th, 230, 302.

Jeans, a. of ' Mysterious Universe' 1486n, 1574n.

Jehangir, killed Guru Arjun of the Sikhs for his religious activities 1019 ; memoirs of, tr. by A. Rogers and ed. by H. Beveridge 1019.

Jesuits : acted on the principle of ' the end justifies the means, ' which latter included incitements to assassination and war 1476–77.

Jewels : (vide Pañcaratnas) : 219, 337, 759 ; nine, acc. to Vratarāja 387.

Jews, persecution of, 1019 ; murder of five million J. by Germans in the 2nd World War constiutes the greatest crime in world history 1480n.

Jha, Mahāmahopādhyāya Ganganath, a. of ' Pūrvamīmāṁsā in its sources ' 1157n, 1191n (wrong in saying that Maṇḍana wrote a. com. on Tantravārtika) ; translation of word ' kesarin ' criticized 1257 ; translated into English Tantravārtika and notices eight commentaries on it in Introduction 1188, 1261 ; translated the bhāṣya of Śabara and Ślokavārtika into English, 1200 ; wrote introduction to Bhāvanāviveka of Maṇḍana 1194 ; a. of ' Prābhākara school of Pūrvamīmāṁsā ' 1200, 1254 (obscure as to meaning of ' ārādupakāraka ' and ' Sannipatyopakāraka ') ; translated Yogasūtra 1394.

Jitendriya, defined by Manu (II. 98) 1424n.

Jīva, the word for ' Individual soul ' occurs in Ṛg. I. 164. 30, Jīva, meaning Jupiter in Sanskrit, how derived, 572; derivation of J. from Zeus not correct 585.

Jīvanmukti, defined in Pārānandasūtra 1055.
Jīvanmuktiviveka, 1604.
Jīvaśarman, author on Astrology quoted by Utpala for Anaphā, Sunaphā etc. 592.
Jñāna, path of, leads to Mokṣa 964-65.
Jñānārṇavatantra, 1062n (for details about cakras), 1101 (wonderful power of mantras), 1117 (on Dīkṣā), 1118, 1125-6 (on Mudrās), 1127, 1131n, 1133.
Jñānasiddhi of Indrabhūti (of about 717 A. D.); 1050, 1064 (yogin may secure liberation by those very actions by which ordinary men suffer torture in Hell), 1065n, 1066n (symbolical meaning of vajra and coitus with Cāṇḍālī or Dombikā), 1071 (on gurus and warning against false gurus), 1119 on abhiṣeka in Tantra, 1142 (date etc.).
Job, Book of, in Old Testament 1546n.
John St. (for idea of Karma) 1546.
Jones, Abel, a. of 'In search of truth' 1484 n.
Jones F. W., a. of 'Design and purpose' 1484n.
Jones, Sir William; published list of Hindu festival days based on the Tithitattva 253; translated Manusmṛti and rendered Manu I. 108 (ācāraḥ paramo dharmaḥ) as 'immemorial usage is transcendental law' 1278.
Johnston, E. H., on 'Sāṅkhya' 1353.
Joint family system, practically abrogated 1672.
Joshua (Old Testament) 512.
Journal Asiatique; 942n, 1023, 1073, 1075n.
Journal of American Oriental Society 94, 482n, 485, 512, 597, 599n, 655, 732n, 845, 1393, 1398 (Jacobi's paper), 1434n (controversy on meaning of Prāṇa), 1514n, 1615, Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal 186n, 485, 499, 699n, 883, 1149.
Journal of Benares Hindu University 650n, 1190.
Journal, Bhāratīya Vidyā 1275n, 1456.
Journal of Bihar and Orissa Research Society 437, 514n, 517n, 521, 826-27, 843-44, (Dr. Banerjee Sastri criticizing Pargiter and others), 883.
Journal of Bihar Research Society 1009n, 1383.
Journal of Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society 131n, 245, 516n, 576, 591, 592n, 670, 978n, 1179 (papers on 'Gleanings from Śabara and Tantravārtika' and 'Tantravārtika and Dharmaśāstra'), 1187n, 1195, 1404, 1406, 1625 (Deussen's address on Vedānta).
Journal of Bombay Asiatic Society 564.

Journal of Bombay University 651n, 978n, 1013.
Journal of Cuneiform Studies 597.
Journal of Ganganath Jha Research Institute 195, 497n, 646n, 668n, 1076n, 1133n, 1407, 1601.
Journal of Hellenistic Studies 549n, 566n, 582n, 595n, 646.
Journal of Indian History 629n, 651n-2n, 656n, 843, 1187, 1198, 1376, 1411n.
Journal of Near Eastern Studies 483n, 490n, 517n, 520n, 543, 549n, 566n, 582n, 595n
Journal of Oriental Institute, Baroda, 84n, 628n, 1124, 1130.
Journal of Oriental Research, Madras, 655, 690, 710, 844, 884, 1032, 1046n, 1152n, 1161.
Journal of Pali Texts Society 1003, 1009.
Journal of Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain 494n, 498, 508, 516, 563n, 598n, 647n-9, 656, 679n, 704n, 883, 1017n, 1046n, 1048n, 1092n, 1104n, 1375, 1398, 1530
Journal of Venkateswara Oriental Institute 841n, 1395.
Journal of United Provinces Historical Society 1527n.
Jung, C. G., a. of Psychological commentary in Evans Wentz's book, 1394; once a disciple of Freud diverged from his views on libido, 1414n.
Jupiter, bālya and vṛddhatva of, explained 61; description of, in Bṛhajjātaka 574; importance of, in settling marriage 615; length of J.'s revolution round the sun 657n, 658; when in sign Leo, to be avoided for all religious acts within certain limits of India 62; ruler of silver and also gold in certain situations 575.
Juvenal, strongly inveighed against ladies who had great confidence in Chaldean astrology 550.
Jwalaprasad 1398.
Jyeṣṭha: Daśaharā on 10th of bright half of, 90-91; Sāvitrīvrata on J. Full moon for women whose husbands are living 91.
Jyeṣṭhā Nakṣatra is called Rohiṇī in Tai. S. and Tai. Br. and Jyeṣṭhaghnī in Atharvaveda 500.
Jyotirvidābharaṇa, a fabricated work, mentions six starters of eras 647.
Jyotiṣa (see under Vedāṅga Jyotiṣa): also called Gaṇita in Vedāṅga Jyotiṣa 478; had become one of the six aṅgas (auxiliary lores) of Veda several centuries before Christ, 477-78; had 64 aṅgas, acc. to Anuśāsanaparva 742; he who knows J. knows sacrifices 478; included in later times three branches (skandhas) viz. Tantra (movements of planets by Mathematics), Horā or jātaka (astrology) and Śākhā (divination, omen etc.) 478-479; in case of conflict between J. and Dharmaśāstra the latter was to prevail 480–481 ; J. lore of Veda several centuries before Christ 477–78 ; said to be eye of Veda in Śikṣā or at the head of all vedāṅgas 478 ; third branch of J. was called Śākhā and also Saṁhitā 479 ; two branches of J. viz. Horā and Śākhā exerted great influence on Dharmaśāstra 480 ; Varāhamihira composed a work on the three branches of J. 479 ; Vedāṅga (of the Ṛgveda and Yajurveda) was concerned with only astronomical matters 478.

Jyotiṣa work embodying all three branches of, was called Saṁhitā 479.

Jyotiṣa-ratna-mālā of Śrīpati 557, 559–60.

Jyotistattva 610n–1n, 613n, 623–4, 626, 660, 734 (on Śāntis), 745n, 778–80, 792 (on Pallīpatana).

Kabir (Moslem weaver and disciple of Rāmānanda 1400–1470 A. D.) 969n ; his teachings 969.

Kādambari of Bāṇa and his son 39, 821–22, 1040, 1047, 1124n, 1205, 1384, 1423 (in hermitages of sages natural antipathies between animals disappear).

Kādividyā (a form of Tantra) 1045n.

Kaivalya : does not occur in the principal or older Upaniṣads but the word Kevala occurs in Śv. Up. IV. 18 and VI. 11 1415.

Kalā, as a unit of time variously defined 117.

Kāla, as the first principle in Atharvaveda 1495.

Kāla (vide under Kalpa, Manvantara, pralaya, Rudra, measures of Time, yuga); Aśvamedhikaparva has an elaborate metaphorical description of wheel of K. 467 ; Bhagavad-gītā identifies K. with Kṛṣṇa 467 ; derived from root ' Kal ' in Bhagavadgītā, 467n ; included among nine dravyas by Vaiśeṣika-sūtra 468 ; in the case of religious rites K. is not a mere detail, but is the nimitta (occasion) on the happening of which an act has to be performed and what is done at a time other than the prescribed one is as good as not done 73 ; Mahābhārata frequently refers to theme of Kāla 466–67 ; mukhya and gauṇa 100, 102 ; not included in the 25 tattvas of Sāṅkhya, but m. in relation to Karaṇas 468 ; Omkāra is said to be beyond the three divisions of K. by Māṇḍūkya Up. 465 ; Pāṇini uses the word K. for ' time ' in general or proper time or divisions of time 467 ; Patañjali's important theory about K. that it does not exist except as a convenient name or word for the manner of measuring changes and comparing them 468 ; produced by Him who is intelligent and omniscient, acc-to Śv. Up., 465 ; produces and destroys beings and is invincible, acc. to Ādiparva 466–467 ; Purāṇas on K. hold that time is without beginning or end, is all-embracing and is identified with God 473-4 ; Śāntiparva on the formidable influence of K. on all including even Indra and other gods 467 ; Śāntiparva speaks of Kāla as 20th guṇa and to be the source and end of all beings 467 ; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa uses it in sense of time or 'proper' time 464 ; Śvetāśvataropaniṣad uses the word Kāla in sense of cause or source of creation 465 ; units of K. 486 ff ; Upaniṣads use the word K. in the sense of 'end' or 'proper time' or 'appointed time' 464–465 ; Vanaparva identifies Kṛṣṇa with K., Brahmā, Rudra etc, 467 ; views on time being non-existent as a separate entity or as being directly apprehended or as merely inferred 469–70 ; word occurs in Ṛg. only once 463 ; word used in two senses even by early Vedic times viz. time in general and as identified with Supreme Being 464 ; Yogasūtrabhāṣya has a brief but interesting and abstract disquisition on K. 471–72.

Kāladarśa 75n, 78.

Kalañjādhikaraṇa Nyāya 77.

Kālanirṇaya 54n, 73n, 75, 77n–8n, 85, 95–97n, 99n, 100n, 105n–107, 112–3, 115–7n, 120n, 121n, 129n, 132–5, 138n, 145n, 146n, 151n, 153, 188, 202n, 211n, 215n, 220n, 227n–230, 232n, 241, 243n–5n, 249n. 659, 666n, 671n, 672, 705.

Kālanirṇaya-kārikā 145n, 657n, 661n, 662n, 665n, 674, 705.

Kālamādhava 67n–8n.

Kālatattvavivecana 73n, 77n, 86, 96, 121n, 135, 154n, 157n 158, 163, 176, 180–82, 188, 195–196n, 203, 204n, 232, 240, 672n.

Kālaviveka of Jīmūtavāhana 41n, 58, 61n, 75n, 76n, 78n–9n, 81n, 83n, 95, 97n–100n, 105n, 106n, 110n, 111–2, 116n, 117n, 119n, 124n, 125, 126n, 133, 154n, 165n, 176n–178n, 180–1n, 194, 200n, 207n, 212n, 214n, 216n, 220n, 222n, 238n, 241, 243n, 244–5n, 246n, 248–9n, 662n, 671n–74n, 706n, 766n ; mentions seven predecessors that wrote on Kāla 58.

Kalaśa, king of Kashmīr (1063–1069 A. D.) was led into lax sexual morals by his guru Pramadakaṇṭha, guilty of incest with his own daughter 1075n.

Kalaśa, jar used on auspicious occasions like marriage, coronation 280.

Kālasiddhāntadarśinī of Sri Haranchandra Bhattacarya, exhaustive work on Kāla 475.

Kalhaṇa, author of Rājataraṅgiṇī 630, 649 1075 ; vide under Rājataraṅgiṇī.

Kālī, mentioned in Mahābhārata 185 ; one of the dhyānas of, described, 1041n ; (vide under Devī, Śāktas, Śakti).

Kālidāsa 1046n ; generally held to have flourished about 350–450 A. D., 186 ; refers to Viṣṇu's sleep for four months 110 ; refers to Vratas 46 ; refers to Nīrājana Śānti 193 ; traditions about K., Vikrama and nine jewels 901, 1461 (uses Yoga technical words), 1571 (on Karma doctrine); throbbing of hero's right arm and of the right eye of the heroine foreshadow future 905, 1027, 1152 ; uses Sāṅkhya terms 1384 ;

Kālikāpurāṇa 34, 39–40, 154, 156, 158n–60n, 162, 164 (on 16 Upacāras of Devī, on animals to be offered), 165–167, 169n, 171n, 173 ; 174 (Yoginīs named and numerous balis to Devī), 175n, 176n, 177 Śābarotsava in Durgā-pūjā), 178n, 180 (pūjā of Devī three times in the day), 185, 187 (nīrājana), 219, 793, 830, 1032–33, 1093 (many chapters on mantras, mudrās, nyāsa etc.), 1120 (mātṛkānyāsa), 1121, 1124n, 1287 (three verses q. by Kalpataru) 1332 ; devotes considerable space to Durgā and her worship, 156 ; describes mudrās like Dhenu, Yoni, and states there are 108 mudrās, 55 for general worship and 53 for special occasions 1127–28 ; Note on 888 ; three separate recensions of, acc. to Dr. V. Raghavan 888 ; to be placed before 1000 A. D., 888.

Kalivarjya (actions forbidden in the Kali i. e. present age) 1267–1272 : (vide under niyoga, uddhāravibhāga, veda, sattrās, sautrāmaṇī, killing animals) ; is a fiction invented to accommodate the changes in people's ideas and practices 1269–70 ; K. actions (55) in number) were set out and discussed in Vol. III of H. of Dh. pp. 926–967, 1267 ; long before 9th century Dharmaśāstra writers had condemned Govadha (in Madhuparka), the practice of niyoga and the assignment of a larger share to the eldest son at a partition among brothers 1267–68 ; some striking actions forbidden for Kali but enjoined or practised in Vedic times (apart from Niyoga and Uddhāravibhaga) set out, 1268–69 ; what authority could sages at the beginning of Kali have to prohibit what Veda enjoined or allowed is not made clear anywhere 1269, 1664.

Kālī : (vide under Devī, Śakti, Śāktas) ; one of the Dhyānas of, described 1041n.

Kalīvilāsatantra 178n, 181n, 1089n, 1093 (allows adultery to Śāktas if semen is not allowed to fall), 1107 (prescribes as mantra the reversed three letters of 'om Durge' as 'rgedu om' ; 1117 (best time for dīkṣā).

Kaliyuga, 1107 : also, called Tiṣya, 687 ; dismal description of what will happen in 693; contrasted with other Yugas and its special merit stated 928; era, one of the earliest reference to, is in Āryabhaṭīya 649; huge figures of years of, suggested by figures in Śat. Br. 690; Inscriptions dated in K. era 649, 650n; in Yugapurāṇa 827–28; Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas exist in K, though some learned writers hold the opposite view as to Kali age, 32; started acc. to tradition in 3102 B. C. 638n; started acc. to Bṛhatsaṁhitā 2426 years prior to Śaka era, 649; views about beginning of, differ 648–649.

Kalkipurāṇa, note on 888.

Kallaṭa, a siddha of the time of Avanti-varman of Kashmir 1075.

Kālottara 1117.

Kalpa or Kalpas–(vide Yuga and Manvantara) : ancient Upaniṣads have no elaborate theory of K. 1567; are immense periods of time 686, 688, 1567; are numberless 824; m. in Aśoka's edicts 686; thirty-three named in Vāyupurāṇa and by Hemādri 693.

Kalpādi are tithis on which the Kalpas are deemed to have begun 280.

Kalpasūtras: Jaimini (I. 3 11–14) has a separate adhikaraṇa on them 1274; Kumārila distinguishes between Kalpa (ritual of Vedic sacrifices) and Kalpa-sūtras and names eight of the last, 1274 and n; Śabara mentions three K. by name 1274; various interpretations by Kumārila of P. M. Sutras I. 3. 11–14, 1274–75.

Kalpataru : vide Kṛtyakalpataru.

Kalyāṇavarman, a. of Sārāvali 546.

Kāma, as the First Principal or Essence in Atharvaveda 1494–95; was not neglected, as Gītā identifies Kṛṣṇa with K. not in conflict with dharma, 1630.

Kāmadhenu of Gopāla, friend of Lakṣmīdhara, but older 249, 884.

Kāmakalāvilāsa of Puṇyānanda 1126, 1136–38n.

Kamalākara : a. of Nirṇayasindhu and Śūdrakamalākara 925–26; a. of Śāntiratna 813n.

Kamarūpīya-nibandha, q. by Tithitattva 174n.

Kamalaśīla, a. of Com. on Tattva-saṅgraha, pupil of Śāntarakṣita, a. of Tattvasaṅgraha, 1194, 1212n (quotes a verse of Ślokavārtika), 1376.

Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana 195, 238, 1630.

Kaṁsa, killing of, known long before the Mahābhāṣya 997.

Kāṇḍānusamaya method, explained 1316–17, 1342; followed acc. to Mit. as to Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas in the matter of Upacāras, 1317; referred to in P. M. S. V. 2. 7–9, 1317.

Kane Festschrift 838n, 893.

Kaniṣka 186, 654 (deemed by some to be founder of Śaka era), 669.

Kant. a. of 'Critique of pure reason' 475.

Kāpālikas on Śrīparvata 1048.

Kapali Sastry : a. of 'Ṛgbhāṣya-bhūmikā' in English 981, 985; bitterly attacks Sāyaṇa but admits that Sāyaṇa is not only useful but indispensable to Vedic students 989; inaccuracies of renderings of Ṛgveda verses and words by K. pointed out 981, 988–89; on 'Veda and Tantra' 1150; rendering of 'Kavayaḥ satyaśrutaḥ' occurring only thrice in Ṛg. shown to be entirely wrong, 990.

Kapila, a muni (see under Brahmā, Tarpaṇa) : as avatāra of Viṣṇu and chief of Siddhas in Bhāgavata, 1373; K., Āsuri, Voḍhu and Pañcaśikha as four of the seven sons of Brahmā 1372; first promulgator of Sāṅkhya, acc. to Sāṅkhya-kārikā and Vanaparva, expounded it to Āsuri 1356–7, 1372; mentioned in Śv. Up. V. 2 is claimed by Sāṅkhyas to be their founder, while Śaṅkarācārya says that there is another K. called Vāsudeva 1362; mentioned in Nārāyaṇīya section as propounder of Sāṅkhya 1365; one of ten Āṅgirasas in Ṛgveda, 1372; styled Ādividvān and Paramarṣi in a quotation from Pañcaśikha 1374 and n.

Kapila, called Vāsudeva, reduced to ashes the sons of Sagara, acc. to Vanaparva and Viṣṇupurāṇa, 1362.

Kapilāṣaṣṭhī Yoga 279, 706.

Kapota bird, messenger of ill-luck in Ṛgveda, 729.

Kāraka, astrological meaning of, 590.

Karamalkar S. M., a. of a Marathi work on Calendar, 714n.

Karmarkar Prof. R. D., 1172n.

Karambelkar Dr., a. of paper on Matsyendranātha, 1046n;

Karaṇa (see Viṣṭi); Bṛhatsaṁhitā states what should or should not be done on the several K. 708; carakaraṇas occur eight times in a month 708; derivation of word K. 708; fifth astrological item (or aṅga) in a pañcāṅga 707; four sthira karaṇas with presiding deities 707; K. means half of a tithi and there are 60 karaṇas in a lunar month 707; names are strange and inexplicable 708; Nāradapurāṇa mentions both kinds of K. 708; scheme of, is fanciful 710; seven Karaṇas of cara kind with presiding deities 707; sthira K. occur only once in a month 707–708.

Karaṇa, works so called for preparing pañcāṅgas 643.

Karaṇakalpalatā, a work of Dr. K. L. Daftari 644, 664n, 713 (basis of what is popularly called Tilak Pañcāṅga), 714n.

Karandikar, Mr. J. S.: a. of Gītātattvamañjarī (in Marathi); relies on Ṛg. X. 14. 8, X, 16. 3 and 5, X. 135. 6 for his view that the doctrine of Transmigration is as old as Ṛgveda 1542; view of, examined and held to be wrong 1542–44.

Karanyāsa : Padmapurāṇa provides for it with mantra (Om namo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya)

1121.
Karka and Karkin–occur in Atharvaveda 563.
Karma and Punarjanma 1530–1612 : (vide under Christianity, Empedocles, Heaven, Herodotus, Plato, Pythagoras, Prof. Ranade, 'reincarnation,' Vedānta, Upaniṣads) : antecedent supposition to belief in K. and P. are four 1532 ; Āp. Dh. S. and Gautama on 1560 ; belief had arisen in times of Śat. Br. that one who does evil deeds in one life has to suffer for them in a later life from that being which he harmed 1534 ; belief that punishment by the king for a bad deed relieved the doer of the sin 1598 ; Brāhmaṇa works (such as Śat. XII. 9. 1. 1) give details about the rewards of good works and the retribution for evil deeds 1533–4 ; Br. Up. IV. 4. 5–7 is the leading and the oldest Upaniṣad passage on K. and P. and so is Br. Up. III. 3. 13, 1547–48 ; confession of sins was in certain cases held to purify a person as in Varuṇapraghāsa Cāturmāsya and necessary in prāyaścittas for some sins 1592–3 ; clear statement of the doctrine of K. and P. is absent from the Ṛgveda though it refers to two births of Vasiṣṭha, 1536–7 ; difficulty of reconciling the doctrine of K. with the system of Śrāddhas for ancestors 1598 ; doctrine of Karma leads on to doctrine of punarjanma 1561 ; doctrine of, extends the inexorable physical law of causality to the mental and moral sphere 1561; doctrine of, has attracted many minds from the West and there is now a voluminous literature on it in the West, 1530 ; doctrine of, modified doctrine of Heaven and Hell 1532 ; doctrine of Karma, instead of being a gospel of hope and an urge to effort, became in the minds of many Indians confused with fatalism 1566 ; doctrine of K. permeated the whole of society, poets and others 1571 ; doctrine of K, not pessimistic or fatalist if rightly understood but emphasizes all-out effort in this life 1573 ; doctrine of, received almost unanimous support from all darśanas (except Cārvāka) that severely criticize each other's doctrines 1532; doctrine of, touched upon by the Bhagavadgītā in many passages 1569 ; doctrine of, a unique characteristic of Hindu culture, 1530, 1646 ; effects of evil deeds done by a man can be got rid of only by expiations, or by suffering them in another life or by realization of Absolute brahman 1560–61 ; efforts made by a man on the path of Yoga are not altogether lost, but become steps on the path of perfection 1569 ; four kinds of, viz. kṛṣṇa, śukla etc. 1572 ; idea of K. was prevalent among Jewish people in the time of Jesus (vide St. John IX. 2) 1546; idea of punarmṛtyu in Śat. Br. and Tai. Br., Bṛ. Up. and Kauṣ. Br. 1534–35; influenced Indian thought from at least Upaniṣad times and all Hindus, Buddhists and Jains 1530; is an endeavour to answer the question, what happens to men after death of body 1530; law of Karma, laid down by Upaniṣads, was inexorable that fruits of all actions, good or bad, must be experienced, but some exceptions were made, the first being that actions done after a person has realized brahman but before the body falls do not produce results 1587; little is said in the Ṛgveda about the fate of evil-doers 1533; McTaggart, L. P. Jacks, Wordsworth and some other Western writers favour the doctrine of K. 1609; Mahābhārata in some passages avers that the consequences of the evil deeds of a man are suffered by the man's son or grandsons (and not by himself), 1598; Manu prescribes Japa of certain Vedic hymns for removal of even mortal sins and highly praises Aghamarṣaṇa hymn, 1593; men guilty of grave sins may, acc. to Chān. Up, Kaṭha Up., Manusmṛti become beasts, or even tree trunks but theosophists and some modern men say that once the state of a human body is reached there is no regression to a lower stage 1611–12; objections against doctrine of K. stated and replied 1609–1611; objection that doctrine of K. leaves no scope for Free will, dealt with 1574–75; once prāyaścittas were admitted as removing effects of sins, other ways were prescribed in early times for the same purpose such as Japa (recitation of holy texts), homa, tapas, fast, gifts, pilgrimages 1592; passages in Manu, Yāj. and other Smṛtis that a guest when not properly honoured gives his demerit to the householder and takes away latter's all puṇya or stating that if a witness deposes falsely all his merit in many lives will go to the party who lost that suit are mere arthavādas 1596–98; popular idea of last thought at death leading to a new birth appropriate to it is an interference with the law of K. 1598–99; Prāṇāyāma, practice of, for removal of effects of sins, 1593; Purāṇas emphasize the importance of good or evil deeds, that one has to reap the fruits of one's actions, that Karma does not come to end even after many lives unless the results thereof are undergone 1576-77; Purāṇas went so far as to prescribe mere remembrance of the name of Kṛṣṇa or Nārāyaṇa, particularly for śūdras and pratiloma castes, for removal of effects of sins 1592; Rāmāyaṇa, on doctrine of K. 1576; Ṛgveda contains some prayers for wealth and heroic sons, but it was immortality and joys of heaven that were most valued 1533; Śatapatha Br. had arrived at the idea that man's will governs what he will reach after death 1535; Śatapatha Br. has a passage on the powers conferred in yonder world by sacrifices performed in this life such as Darśapūrṇamāsa, Cāturmāsya, 1535-36; some features of our present life can be more satisfactorily explained on the theory of Karma than on any other 1572-73; strict doctrine of K. would require than one man's good or bad Karma cannot be transferred to another, but in Ṛg. fear is expressed that one may have to suffer for others' deeds and modifications were introduced such as the king getting 1/6 in the merit or demerit of his subjects 1595-96; three classes of Karma, sañcita, prārabdha and kriyamāṇa (or 'sañcīyamāna') explained 1574; three regular treatises in Sanskrit on K. mentioned and described 1599-1604; Vedāntasūtra on K. and P. 1558-60; very few regular treatises in Sanskrit on the law of K. 1599; word Karma in some passages of Ṛg. means 'exploits', 'valiant deeds' and in some 'religious works' such as sacrifices and gifts, 1532-33; works and conduct done in this life fashion a man's future life and that the present existence of a man depends on his actions and conduct in a past life or lives — this is the gist of the grand passages of Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 5-7 and III. 3. 13, which are illumined by the illustrations of the caterpillar and the snake's slough, 1546-48; works in English on K. 1604-05.

Karmapradīpa of Gobhila 50.

Karmaśabda, means 'dhātus' (verbal forms such as 'yajati', juhoti), 1236.

Karmāśaya (in Y. S.) means 'Dharmādharmau' 1917n.

Karṇaparva, 90n, 129, 569, 744, 821, 839 (on Yavanas).

Karpūramañjarī of Rājaśekhara (about 900 A. D.), a prākrit play in which the caricature of a character called Bhairavānanda occurs 1073-74.

Karṣa, a weight equal to 16 māṣas of eighty raktikās 219n.

Kārtavīrya, vide under 'Dattātreya'.

Kārtika, giving up meat-eating in, very meritorious 283.

Kāśakṛtsna, a teacher in V. S. 1157.

Kāśakṛtsnī means a woman that studies the Mīmāṃsā expounded by Kāśakṛtsni, 1157 and n.

Kāśikā, com. on Pāṇini's 'Aṣṭādhyāyī' by Vāmana and Jayāditya; 27, 499n, 525, 670, 708, 1153n, 1198n, 1205n (mentions Laukāyatika), 1389n; from I-tsing's remarks it appears that Jayāditya died about 661 A. D., 1198n.

Kāśikā, com. on Ślokavārtika 1184n.
Kaśyapa, a ṛṣi in Ṛgveda 463n.
Kāśyapa, a writer on astrology, from whom Utpala quotes about 300 verses, some of which show knowledge of rāśis, 592, 746.
Kāśyapasaṁhitā, 710n.
Kāṭhakagṛhya 238, 663.
Kāṭhaka-saṁhitā, 63n, 126, 498–9, 507n, 523, 671, 684n, 691n, 698, 730n, 1079 (brāhmaṇa did not drink wine), 1153, 1297, 1385n, 1386n, 1633.
Kathāvatthu, shows Andhaka school of Buddhism was disposed to permit copulation for a specific purpose to monks 1023.
Kaṭhopaniṣad, 915 (Naciketas story), 917 (on vidyā and avidyā), 939n (giving up tṛṣṇā), 952, 961, 1063n (on 101 nāḍīs of the heart, one of which penetrates the crown of the head), 1072, 1360, 1362, 1387, 1388n, 1389, 1400n, 1430, 1435, 1451n, 1455n, 1471, 1478, 1502 (five guṇas, śabda etc. of five elements mentioned), 1504, 1507n, 1508n, 1592–3, 1546n (verse quoted in), 1555 (fate of some people after death), 1563n, 1564, 1585n, 1600, 1611, 1625 (illustration of pure water poured into pure water), 1631 (path of mokṣa more difficult than that of bhakti), 1649.
Katre, Dr. S. M. paper of, on 33 avatāras 997.
Kātyāyana, a. of Vārtikas on Pāṇini, 516n.
Kātyāyana, Smṛti of, 54, 96, 99, 105n, 675, 1032.
Kātyāyanaśrautasūtra. 18n, 724, 732, 738n, 1155 (closely corresponds with Jaimini's sūtras in several cases), 1224n, 1297n, 1321.
Kaula, is not one who drinks wine etc. but who has undergone abhiṣeka, 1118.
Kauladharma (practices): (vide Kuladharma) 1052, 1076 (in Aparārka's day it was practised secretly).
Kaulajñānanirṇaya 1083 (on the rousing of Kuṇḍalinī).
Kaularahasya (ms. copied in 1734 A. D.) shows how common people literally understood the cult of the makāras, 1087 and n.
Kaulas (some) offered worship to a young woman's private parts, 1138n.
Kaulaśāstras, taught that bhoga need not be given up, but should be sublimated and substitute a Yoga of enjoyment for one of abstinence 1077.
Kaulāvalīnirṇaya of Jñānānandagiri, 1050n, 1052n; enumerates numerous tantras including Yāmalas, 1050n, 1056n (extravagant praise of women), 1059 (about wine cups), 1076, 1081n (substitutes for makāras), 1082–3, 1085n, 1093, 1106, 1109–10, 1126n, 1135n.
Kaumudī festival (vide Divāli): 195.

Kaumudījāgara and Yakṣarātri included under krīḍā 195n.

Kauśikasūtra (of the Atharvaveda), 524, 535, 610, 724n, 729n–30n, 732n, 734–35 (Keśava's paddhati on), 738n; 739–40n, 769–70n, 773, 785n, 802n (on Āyuṣya mantras); Kaṇḍikās 93–136 of chapter 13 deal with 42 adbhutas and the Śāntis therefor 735; mantras m. in K. on Śāntis appear to have formed an independent collection and Atharvaveda mantras play a secondary role 735–36; Śāntis in K. are spoken of as prāyaścittas 736.

Kauṣītaka 66.

Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa 223n, 489, 491, 659, 1248, 1313n, 1497 (Prajāpati as creator), 1535.

Kauṣītaki-gṛhyasūtra 730.

Kauṣītaki Upaniṣad, 464n–65, 525n, 538, 864n, 866, 1213 (joys of heaven), 1386n, 1388n, 1468n, 1486, 1507n, 1513, 1553–55, 1558–9, 1563, 1579n, 1580 (Ajātaśatru and Bālāki Gārgya), 1587n.

Kauṭilya, a. of Arthaśāstra: 476, 505n, 527–8, 538, 569–70, 658–9, 675, 819, 862, 1001n, 1205 (includes 'Lokāyata' under Ānvīkṣikī), 1628, 1638, (speaks of armies of brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas).

Kautsa, views of, that Vedic mantras are anarthaka) (have no sense or serve no purpose) and was attacked by Nirukta 1275–76.

Kautuka (nine things as constituents) to be tied on kaṅkaṇa in marriage 291.

Kāvyādarśa (of Daṇḍin), contains a verse in the Sarvatobhadra form, 1134.

Kāvyamīmāṁsā of Rājaśekhara 1183.

Kayānīya-Ṛgveda IV. 31. 1 and Sāmaveda No. 169.

Kaye G. R.-claims that he has proved that India is not the originator of the decimal place value notation 699n; doubts whether Kṛttikās are Pleiades, but does not suggest any other identification 493, 585.

Keay, F. E, a. of 'Kabir and his followers' 969n.

Keith, Prof. A. B., 1397 (on Patañjali); 719, 1200 (a. of 'Kārmamīmāṁsā'), 1254 (inverts meaning of Ārādupakāraka and Sannipatyopakāraka), 1395, 1434; a. of 'Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upaniṣads' 1213, 1486n, 1491, 1604, 1627 (remark of, about ethical content of Upaniṣads being valueless, criticized); a. of 'Sāṅkhya system' 1354, 1371, 1373, 1376; a. of translation of Tai. S. in H O. S. 1545.

Kemadruma, Yoga, meaning of, 584

Kendra and Greek 'Kentron' differ in meaning 585.

Khecarīmudrā (in Haṭhayoga), descriptions of, different in different works 1127.

Khilasūkta 729n.

Kenopaniṣad, 1044.

Kern H., assigned Garga to 50.

B. C. 592n, 680–71; a. of 'Manual of Buddhism' 941, 944, 970n, 1003; editor of Bṛhatsaṁhitā of Varāhamihira 69n, 187, 193, 516n, 579, 584, 592n; edited Saddharmapuṇḍarīka with Bunyiu Nanjui 1107; published part of Yogayātrā in volumes of 'Indische Studien' 617n; published part of Yogapurāṇa 826; rebuked Weber for holding Pauliśa-Siddhānta as borrowed from Paulus merely on similarity of name 516n; shows that Saddharma-puṇḍarīka (tr. by him in SBE) contains passages closely agreeing with Gītā 970.

Keśava, a. of Paddhati on Kauśika-sūtra 735n.

Ketkar V. B., a. of 'Indian and foreign chronology' 661, 664, 680n.

Khaṇḍadeva, a. of Bhāṭṭakaustubha and Bhāṭṭarahasya (1600–1665 A. D.), 1199.

Khāravela, Jain king of Kaliṅga, performed Rājasūya 1028.

Khañjarīṭa (wagtail) or Khanjana bird; eating of flesh of, forbidden by Manu and Yāj. 193; prognostications from movements of 193.

Khaśa tribe 969.

Khosrove, horoscope of the accession of king, on 18–8–531 A. D., 556n.

Khuddakapāṭha 943n.

Kidinnu, said to have discovered precession of equinoxes 514n

Kielhorn, editor of Mahābhāṣya 130, 408n, 1631n; published list of Hindu festive days based on Dharmasindhu 253.

Kikaṭa, a country in which non-Aryans resided, acc. to Yāska and acc. to Kumārila, K. means 'closefisted' 1256n.

Kings (vide under Maṅgala, Āndhra, Puṣyasnāna, Sātavāhana, officials); nakṣatras on which the king should not get himself shaved 533n; not affected by āśauca while performing royal duties 48; not to donate the whole kingdom in Viśvajit sacrifice, 1313; office of, hereditary 1664; procedure of coronation of K. with Paurāṇika mantras prescribed in Agni and Viṣṇudharmottara and in medieval digests like Nītimayūkha 923; Puṣyasnāna for, had Paurānik mantras 1024; rise and fall of, depended on planets acc. to Yāj. 544; set free prisoners when the king's nakṣatra was affected by evil aspects 531n; should perform all religious acts as directed by the purohita 543, 742; sign of success is the ease or satisfaction of the king's mind 778; starting on expedition should see, hear and touch maṅgala objects and listen to recitations of Veda, Dharmaśāstra, epics 621, 778; time table for king's daily routine acc. to Kauṭilya 819; when the nakṣatra of the king's coronation or of his caste or the nakṣatra of his country is affected by evil planets or aspects what is to be the forecast 530; when eclipse inauspicious to king, 765; 1639 (office of king hereditary and king deemed to be a divinity).

Kirātas, assigned to caves in Vāj. S. 969n; worship of Durgā by 158.
Kirātārjunīya 892n, 911, 1134 (example of Sarvatobhadra citrabandha), 1195 (quoted by Prabhākara).
Kirfel W., a. of 'Purāṇa pañcalakṣaṇa' 841, 843, 852; a. of 'Die cosmographie der Inder' 843, 1523; gives chapter concordance of Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇas 841n; gives a table of chapters that are common to both Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa, 841n; Introduction to 'Purāṇa pañcalakṣaṇa' translated into English, published in Vol. VII and VIII of Journal of Venkatesvara Institute of Tirupati 841n; most of his conclusions except one are tentatively acceptable 852; view of, that the five matters 'sarga' etc. were the only elements of ancient Purāṇas not acceptable 852.
Kleen, Miss Tyra de, work of, is of fundamental importance 1523n; on Mudrās practised by Bauddha and Śaiva priests, called pedandas, in Bali 1125.
Kleśa, technical word in Yoga 1364n; five in Yogasūtra II. 3, 1364n.
Knowledge, spiritual and scholastic, to be kept secret 1460-61 (vide under Upaniṣad).
Kolhatkar K. K., a. of 'Pātañjala-Yogadarśana' (in Marathi), 1393, 1399 (criticized).
Koestler, A., : a. of 'The Lotus and the Robot' 1394, 1453n (disbelieves levitation); labels Indian Democracy as Bapucracy 1668n.
Kollam (or Paraśurāma) era in Malabar, 656 (deemed to have started in 1176 B. C.).
Koṇārka temple, vide 1653n, for description and works on Kosala, country, situated on Śarayū, with Ayodhyā as capital 531n.
Koṭihoma 290, 752, 754, (king's duty to perform); one kind of navagrahaśānti in which the oblations, fees and rewards are one hundred times of Lakṣahoma, the other procedure being the same 752; continues for a year, acc. to Matsya 753; procedure of, 754; to be begun in Caitra or Kārtika, if no urgency 761.
Krama (order in which the several component parts or acts of a sacrifice are to come one after another) 1313-1317; fifth chap. of P. M. S. deals with this, 1313; for determining the sequence of component parts in a sacrifice six means are specified 1313 14; illustrations (from Veda) about sequence being determined by the six means 1314-1316; illustrations of arthakrama being held stronger than pāṭhakrama in Dharmaśāstra works 1314.
Kramadīpikā of Keśava, a Vaiṣṇava Tantra 1051.

Kramrisch, Dr. Stella, 1653n (translated passages of Viṣṇudharmottara on painting and sculpture); a. of 'Indian sculpture' 1655.

Kratu, meaning of, in Ṛgveda and Upaniṣads 1546n.

Kratvartha 1232 34; distinction between K. and Puruṣārtha taken over into Dharmaśāstra, examples cited 1234-5; general rule that all aṅgas (auxiliary rites) are K. and there is a great difference between the results of not doing the two matters properly or omitting them and test for deciding whether some matter is K. or puruṣārtha pointed out, 1234-35.

Kroeber, A. L., a. of 'Style and civilization', disagrees with Spengler and Toynbee 1617.

Kṛṣṇa (vide under Kṛṣṇajanmāṣṭamīvrata): K. and Arjuna are described as drunk with wine and married their maternal uncle's daughters 1281; identifies himself with Vāsuki and Ananta (a nāga) 127; killed Narakāsura and married 16000 women imprisoned by the latter 197-198; story of suspicion about K. killing Prasenajit for syamantaka jewel 147.

Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana, a perpetual student, raised sons on the widows of his uterine brother Vicitravīrya by niyoga, 1280.

Kṛṣṇajanmāṣṭamīvrata 128-143; (see under Vāsudeva and Megasthenes): acc. to Jayantinirṇaya, tithi is principal matter in Janmāṣṭamīvrata, while in Jayantīvrata nakṣatra Rohiṇī is the principal matter 133; antiquity of Kṛṣṇa or Vāsudeva worship 129-131, 953; Besnagar Ins. of Greek Heliodorus refers to Vāsudeva as Devadeva 131; celebrated on the 8th of dark half of Śrāvaṇa and on 8th of Bhādrapada dark half acc. to some 128-129; conclusions of Tithitattva about the exact times of, 134; current in Northern and Central India from about 500 B. C., if not earlier, 131; description of Kṛṣṇa's birth in Bhāgavata is commonplace and vague 131; eighth tithi may be with Rohiṇī or without it and several possible combinations of tithi, nakṣatra, time and week day are set out, 134; exact time and tithi of Janmāṣṭamī celebration is much discussed in medieval works 134; Ghosundi Inscription of 2nd or 1st century B. C. mentions the worship of Saṅkarṣaṇa and Vāsudeva 131; is Nitya as well as Kāmya 133; Jain tradition about Kṛṣṇa 129; Jayantī and Janmāṣṭamī distinguished, 132; Jayantī fast occurring on Wednesday or Monday yields far greater results than in other cases 135; Kṛṣṇa, a Vedic poet, in Ṛg. invokes Aśvins 129; Kṛṣṇa Āṅgirasa, author of Ṛg. VIII. 86-87, 129; Kṛṣṇa is depicted in Mahābhārata as a composite personality viz. as a prince, friend of the Pāṇḍavas, a great warrior, statesman and philosopher and also as Avatāra of Viṣṇu 129–130; life of, among cowherds in Bhāgavata, and Viṣṇu and other Purāṇas 129; Kṛṣṇa was one of the Vṛṣṇis, stories and dramatic representations about his killing Kaṁsa and imprisoning Bali existed before the Mahābhāṣya 130; Kṛṣṇa cult, various phases of, acc. to Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar, 131; Kṛṣṇa's birth on Rohiṇī nakṣatra, of which Prajāpati is the Lord, 131n; account of birth of K. from Bhaviṣyottara together with astrological aspects 131–132; K. belonged to the Candravaṁśa and Budha in legend and astrology is son of the Moon and so Monday and Wednesday on 8th of Śrāvaṇa were deemed to yield great results 135n; Mahābhārata on Kṛṣṇa 129, 953; main items in K. vrata are fast, worship of Kṛṣṇa, jāgara, listening to and repeating hymns and stories of exploits of Kṛṣṇa and pāraṇā 135; principal items in K. vrata, views differ on, 137–38; most important vrata and utsava celebrated throughout India 128; most sublime praises of Kṛṣṇa in Mahābhārata by Yudhiṣṭhira, Draupadī and Bhīṣma, 129; nakṣatra of Kṛṣṇa's birth was Abhijit acc. to Harivaṁśa 133; numerous verses on the māhātmya of, in Agni, Mat ya and Padma Purāṇas 129; names one hundred and eight of Kṛṣṇa set out in Brahmāṇḍa 977n; pāraṇā in K. in some cases may be at night, particularly for Vaiṣṇavas 139; passed away thirty-six years after Bhārata war, 687n; people called Vāsudevaka and Ārjunaka before Pāṇini's times 130; principal time for celebration of K. is midnight of 8th of Śrāvaṇa dark half (of Bhādrapada if month is pūrṇimānta), 134; procedure of K. vrata 135–137; procedure in Dharmasindhu employs Puruṣasūkta in K. vrata, while some other works mention no vedic mantra 137; question whether Janmāṣṭamīvrata and Jayantīvrata are identical or different vratas is decided differently by different authors 132–133; reference to Kṛṣṇa Devakīputra in Chān. Up. receiving instruction from Ghora-Āṅgirasa 129; special rules about pāraṇā of Janmāṣṭamī and Jayantī fast 138–139; the K. festival is not found in Kṛtyakalpataru on Vrata, but a brief reference is made to it in Naiyatakālika section of that work 139–40; usage in some territories like Mahārāṣṭra of 'Gopāla-kālā', 139; Weber's theory that the ritual of K. festival was transferred to India from outside based on three points, examined and shown to be baseless 140–143.

Krishnamachari, V. T., a. of 'Planning in India' 1683n.
Kṛta, implies the number 'four' in Tai. Br. 701.
Kṛta era, 651–53; generally identified with Mālava-gaṇa era and Vikrama era 651–52; Inscriptions in Kṛta years found so far are nine, 651 and n; interpretation of, 651.
Kṛta-yuga, described in Gupta Inscriptions as a cycle of great virtue 687; Dharma perfect and four-footed in K. and declined by one foot in successive yugas 688n; Manusmṛti (IX. 301) puts for ward the view that the four ages are not watertight specific periods of time, but the king or ruling power can produce the conditions of Kṛta 696.
Kṛttikās: are many, acc. to Śatapatha Br. 507; do not swerve from the east, while other nakṣatras do so 507; referred to as Bahulā by Pāṇini 499, 740n, and a man born on Bahulā may be called Bāhula; said to be seven in Mai. Saṁ. 507n; seven names of, from Tai. Br. 499; spoken of as wives of the ṛkṣas 498n; substances, persons and craftsmen governed by K. 560.
Kṛtyakalpataru (1110–30 A. D.), 30, 39–40, 44n, 47n, 55, 70, 101–3, 115n–6n, 119n, 124, 139, 149, 929n, 1381 (quoting Devaladharma-sūtra), 1407, 1409n, 1417n–18n, 1431n, 1438n, 1440n, 1444n, 1446n–48n, 1449, 1450n, 1455, 1457n; the editor of Kṛtyak. did not identify many verses quoted in it, e. g. on p. 1448 (eight verses from Śaṅkhasmṛti and six from Dakṣasmṛti), 1458 (four verses from Śāntiparva); on Brahmacārikāṇḍa 820n, 870–71, 897, 926n, 1262 (on five categories of smṛti contents); on Gṛhasthakāṇḍa 926n, 947n; on Mokṣa 1112n, 1217 (quotes Devala on Siddhis); on Niyatakāla or Naiyatakālika 82, 117n, 157n, 184n, 214n–216n, 219, 244, 247–49n, 897, 1246n, 1270n; on Rājadharma 737n, 754, 793n, 897; on Śāntis 734–35, 752 3 (quotes Matsya), 754, 788n, 798n; on Śrāddha 527, 897; on Vrata 185, 211 (whole of Chap. 98 of Matsya q. on pp. 432–435), 868n, 890n, 897, 1096n, 1105 (mūlamantra of the Sun), 1106 (Mahāśvetā mantra); on Vyavahāra 1287.
Kṛtyaratnākara 30, 32n, 37–40, 42n, 57, 59, 71n, 79n, 81n, 82, 89n, 92, 93n, 101–2, 110n, 111–2, 114, 116n, 125, 140, 152n, 154n, 156–7n, 174n, 177n, 180n, 184n, 193, 203n, 207n, 213n–216n, 221n, 222n, 241, 246n–249n, 481, 660, 662, 871n, 923n, 926n, 962, 1243; begins with Vāra-vratas 57.
Kṛtyatattva 88n, 91, 93, 110n, 111–2, 122 123n–25n, 134, 138, 139n, 195n, 198n, 199, 201–2, 207n, 208n, 228n, 241.

Kṣatriyas, destruction of, by Paraśurāma 89n.

Kṣayamāsa 662, 664 ; references to some past K. 665 ; when occurs 664 ; which month out of twelve can or cannot be K. 664-665.

Kṣemaka, last king of the Aila Dynasty (acc. to Vāyu) is described in Narasiṁhapurāṇa as grandson of Udayana and Vāsavadattā and son of Naravāhana 891-92.

Kṣemendra, a. of Daśāvatāracarita, composed in 1066 A. D., 824.

Kṣetra, 24 tattvas are so called in Śāntiparva, 1365.

Kṣetrajña, the soul is so called in Śāntiparva, 1365.

Kṣīrasvāmin, com. of Amarakośa 668n, 1001n, 1422n.

Kubera-hṛdaya 796.

Kubjikāmata Tantra, 1033.

Kuhū (amāvāsyā mixed with the first tithi of next fortnight treated as divinity and invoked for wealth and sons) 62 ; suggested derivation of, 63.

Kulacūḍāmaṇitantra 1038n, 1109.

Kuladharma or Kulamārga : all have adhikāra for this, acc. to Mahānirvāṇa, while some declare that only those who have subdued their senses have adhikāra 1077 ; combines both bhoga and yoga, is superior to all other doctrines and that under it what is sin (acc. to ordinary people) becomes meritorious, 1083 ; declared to be superior to all sacrifices, pilgrimages and vratas 1052 ; enlightens him whose mind is purified by mantras of Śaiva and Durgā worship 1083 ; meaning of K. or Kauladharma 1052-53; worship performed with five makāras is called Kulācāra, 1053.

Kulārṇava Tantra 35n, 975, 1031 (Śiva declared to Pārvatī), 1052 (even Cāṇḍāla knowing Kauladharma superior to a brāhmaṇa, master of four Vedas, but ignorant of Kuladharma), 1056 (eulogy of women), 1064, 1071 (on false gurus), 1072, 1076 (how Kaulas behaved outwardly), 1081-83, 1084n (on the verse pītvā pītvā etc.), 1086n, 1088n, 1089n, 1101 (guru's greatness), 1102, 1108 (five constituents of puraścaraṇa), 1110-11, 1117 (on Dīkṣā and its derivation), 1120 (on nyāsa), 1123, 1126n, 1135, 1141 (for date); appears to be in two minds, in one breath recommending drinking of wine and eating flesh and also waxing eloquent over the highest Vedānta and fastens esoteric meanings on the makāras, 1083-84.

Kullūka, commentator of Manusmṛti, 468n, 887, 1032n, 1234, 1265n 1330 (on equal division of 36 years' brahmacarya on three Vedas), 1424n

Kumāragupta, a Gupta emperor styled Vikramāditya on his coins 901.

Kumārasambhava 186, 539, 620n, 905, 910, 1384, 1623
Kumārilabhaṭṭa : (vide under Bṛhaṭ-ṭīkā, Ślokavārtika, Smṛti, Tantravārtika) ; a of Ślokarvārtika 1179 ; a. of Tantravārtika, in which he summarises the contents of Purāṇas, 823–24 ; a. of Bṛhat-ṭikā, 1185n, 1188, 1247n ; a. of Ṭup-ṭikā 1188 ; differs from Śabara and criticizes Śabāra's bhāṣya many times as being improper or fit to be discarded and as absurd 1294, 1335 ; does not apply epithets like Bhagavān or Ācārya to Jaimini and once criticizes Jaimini as having composed sūtras of little substance 1162 ; flourished about 650–700 A. D. 1191, 1198 ; divergence of views about the chronological position of K. and Prabhākara 1190 ; mentions Vindhyavāsin 1376 ; points of difference between K. and Prabhākara are many, 1190n ; relies on Manu for the usefulness of tarka 1475 ; states that Buddha's doctrine attracted śūdras and those that had lost caste 926 ; tradition that Prabhākara was a pupil of K. 1191 ; two more works (apart from the three published ones) of K. are Madhyamaṭīkā and Bṛhaṭṭīkā 1188 ; waged only a polemic war against Buddhists and persecution of them by K. is held not proved by Rhys Davids 1009–10 ; was prepared to accept usefulness of Buddha's teaching up to a limited extent 1009n, 1262.
Kumbhaparva (once in 12 years) 186, 287, 539, 620n.
Kumbhīpāka, a hell so-called 85.
Kuṇḍalinī (vide Cakras, mantras, nādīs) ; danger of trying to rouse K, except under expert guidance 1061, 1429–30 ; identified by Dr. Rele with Vagus nerve but Woodroffe differs 1443 ; is Śakti coiled like a snake in the ādhāra or mūlādhāra cakra (at the base of the spine) which when roused by Yogic practices passes through six cakras, reaches the crown of the head that has (sahasrāra) lotus and then the Kuṇḍalinī returns to its original position 1061n–62, 1098, 1137–8 ; Dr. Rele's work on 'Mysterious Kundalini' 1393, 1443 (criticized by Shri Kuvalayānanda) ; Rudrayāmala on K. and cakras 1034n, 1061n ; Rudrayāmala sets out 1008 names of K. all beginning with the letter 'ka' 1062n ; Śakti or Devī assumes the form of K., it is a form of śabda-brahma, all mantras are forms of Śakti or Devī, appears as sounds (akṣaras) which become when written letters of the alphabet (called mātṛkā) which are 50 from 'a' to 'kṣa' 1099.
Kuṇḍapāyinām-ayana. deals with Agnihotra for a month different from daily Agnihotra, 1307, 1342.
Kunhan Raja, Prof. C., Introduction of, to Umbeka's com. called Tātparyaṭīkā on Ślokavārtika, 1194, 1200; view of, that there is no proof of Bhaṭṭapāda being guru of Umbeka. criticized 1194n; wrong in his interpretation of words like 'anupāsita-guravaḥ' in Umbeka's com. on Ślokavārtika 1195–96.

Kunhan Raja, Presentation Volume, 919.

Kuppuswami, M. M. Prof. 1186n-88n, 1195 (paper on Maṇḍana and Sureśvara equation in the Vedānta).

Kūrmapurāṇa, 103n–4n, 116, 121, 143, 202, 249n, 473 (on Kāla), 682, 687, 690n, 691, 694, 825n, 857n, 865n, 870, 915, 921, 930n, 935 (incorporates Upaniṣad passages), 946 (on Ahiṁsā), 967, 974n, 977n, 1024, 1042, 1270n (similar to Yāj. I. 156), 1373, 1383, 1403n, 1412n, 1421n, 1431n, 1438, 1445, 1446n, 1455; 1524, 1528, 1582; extent of, is 17000 or 18000 acc. to many Purāṇas 813; note on 888–889.

Kūṣmāṇḍa mantrās 796, 1024.

Kūṭas in marriage, eight, named and explained, 614–615.

Kuvalayānanda, Swami, of Lonavla (vide under Dr. Behanan): ed. of Bṛhad-yoga-Yājñavalkya-smṛti 1404: a. of paper on 'the real Yogayājñavalkya-smṛti' 1407; handbook of, on 'āsanas' 1425–26; handbook of, on 'prāṇāyāma' 1428n, 1441–1443 (describes eight kinds of Prāṇāyāma); on Vivekānanda's lectures on Rājayoga 1443-44; suggests correction in Yogabhāṣya as to the bhūmis of citta (mind) in Yogasūtra III. 11, 1409; treats Dr. Rele's work on 'Mysterious Kundalini' as of doubtful scientific value 1443.

L'Astrologie Grecque', a work of Bouche Leclercq (vide under Bouche Leclercq).

Laghu-Hārīta 676n.

Laghu-Jātaka of Varāhamihira 533n, 545n, 547, 554n, 561n, 568, 574–5n, 577, 580, 585, 589, 594.

Laghurudra, 813; is same as Ekādaśinī, acc. to Kamalākara and some others, but in popular practice it is eleven times of 'Ekādaśinī', 813 14.

Laghu-Śātātapa 706n,

Laghu-Viṣṇu 30, 48.

Laghu-Vyāsa 914n.

Lahiri, N. C. 657n.

Lakāras, ten (for tenses and moods) in Pāṇini 1235, 1236n, all of which begin with letter 'la' (as in laṭ for 'present tense' etc).

Lakṣahoma, a Śānti, 397, 749, 752, 761; eulogy of, 754; not to be performed by one with little wealth 752–4.

Lakṣaṇā, a function of words that gives rise to secondary sense 293; difference between Lakṣaṇā and Gauṇī Vṛtti drawn by Tantravārtika 1293n.

Lakṣmī, com. on Kālanirṇayakārikā, 672.

Lakṣmīdhara, 30; vide Kṛtyakalpataru.

Lakṣmīdharā, com. on Saundarya-laharī, 1136n.
Lakṣmīpūjana, on amāvāsyā in Divāḷi 199–200; in Bengal Kālī worshipped on this amāvāsyā, 200; it is a day specially meant for traders and merchants 200; night of this day is called sukhasuptikā 200.
Lākula or Lakulīśa Pāśupata 978n; Lakulī flourished about 1st century A. D. 978n; Liṅga and Vāyu Purāṇas mention Lakulin as founder of a Śaiva sect and Kāyārohaṇa (modern Karavan in Dabhoi Taluka) as its sacred place 978n.
Lalitāsahasranāma, Bhāskarācārya's com. on, is called Saubhāgyabhāskara, 1083 and n.
Lalitopākhyāna, is at the end of the Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa 895, 1042, 1072n; most verses in chap. 42 are same as in Mudrānighaṇṭu pp. 55–57, 1128.
Lalla, 61n, 182, 612n.
Lama Anagarika Govinda, a. of a recent work 'Foundations of Tibetan Mysticism' 1104n; on Mantra 'om Maṇi padme hūṃ', criticized 1104n.
Land-laws; affecting the holding of lands by non-agriculturists, compulsory sale to erstwhile tenants, law placing ceilings on holding lands, most important 1674–75; criticized as not Socialistic, but spoliation, 1677–8.
Lassen 142.
Last Thought, vide under 'Death'.
Lāṭadeva, is said to have commented upon Pauliśa and Romaka Siddhāntas, 514n.
Latāsādhana, meaning of, in tantra works, 1081.
Laugākṣi 73n.
Laugākṣi Bhāskara, a. of Arthasaṅgraha, tr. by Thibaut 1199.
Laukika-nyāya, the word occurs in Śabara's bhāṣya 1255.
Law, Dr. B. C, Presentation Volume 1002; a. of paper on 'Prince Jeta's grove in Ancient India' 1411n.
Lea Henry C, a. of 'Superstition and force' 1019–20 (on methods of Inquisition).
Leadbeater; C. W., a. of 'the Cakras' (Adyar, 1927), 1148.
Lecky, a. of 'History of the rise and influence of rationalism in Europe' 1576 (cites instances of extirpation).
Legislation, spate of 1670ff.
Leuba, James H., a. of 'Psychology of religious mysticism' (1929), 1463n.
Levi S. (about Hinduism in the Island of Bali at present), 1614, 1616, 1618 (edited Sanskrit Texts from Bali in G. O. S.).
Levitation (Laghimā) vouched for by Dr. A. Cannon 1112n, 1453; vouched by E. Wood, but not believed by A. Koestler 1452–53n.
Lewis, a. of 'Historical Survey of the Astronomy of the ancients', 546, 550n.
Lewis, Windham, a. of 'Time and Western Man' 475.

Liang Chi Chao, Prof, a. of 'Paper on China's debt to India' 1039.
Liberation (Mukti or Mokṣa): (vide under Mokṣa) 1514 1652.
Liebich, Prof. B. 1397.
Līlāvatī, of Bhāskarācārya, 598n.
Limitation Act, Indian 715n.
Lincoln, definition of democracy by, 1667.
Liṅga, emblem of Śiva; ratnas (precious stones) should be placed on, at Makarasāṅkrānti or gold or ghee of cow's milk 219.
Liṅga, technical sense is 'suggestive or indicative power of a word or words' 1309.
Liṅgapurāṇa 41n, 45, 52, 101, 115n, 160n, 179, 181, 235, 236n, 238, 946n, 978n, (on Lakulī), 1030n (Guru's position), 1072 (states Guru is Śiva), 1096n, (mantra 'namaḥ śivāya'), 1117 (treatment of Dīkṣā), 1419n–21n, 1431n, 1436n (ten prāṇas), 1438, 1446 (echoes yogasūtra), 1450n, (on Samādhi), 1455; not drawn upon by Ballālasena as its treatment of dānas is the same as that of Matsya 868; note on, 903; one recension of L. was discarded by Ballālasena 869, 903.
Lipsāsūtra, is Jaī. IV. 1. 2 in which the word 'lipsā' (meaning 'the desire to obtain') occurs, 1232n.
Liptā, sixtieth part of a degree 584.
List (exhaustive) of vratas and utsavas, 255–462.
Lodge, Sir Oliver, a. of 'Man and the Universe', 1650n (on image worship)
Lohābhisārika (vide under Nīrājana): a rite about horses performed from 1st to 9th tithis of Āśvina, 184, 400.
Lokapālas (guardians of worlds or the directions) 766n; names of eight L. 766n.
Lokas (worlds), three or seven, denoted by the vyāhṛtis (bhūḥ, bhuvaḥ etc.), 1528 and n; Kūrma-purāṇa mentions L. from 'mahaḥ' to 'satya' 1528n; Mahendra-loka, Prājāpatya-loka, Jana, Tapas and Satya lokas mentioned in Yogabhāṣya 1529.
Lokāyata or Laukāyatika: 1205n-1206, 1472n; Kauṭilya includes it under Ānvīksiki, along with Sāṅkhya-yoga 1205; meaning of, changed from time to time 1205; Pāṇini (in Ukthādigaṇa IV. 2. 60) appears to have known the word 1205, 1472n; Ruben Dr. on 'Lokāyata' 1205n; Śaṅkarācārya (on V S. III. 3. 54) states that L. do not admit any principle other than the four elements and no soul apart from the body 1250n.
'Lokāyata', study of ancient Indian Materialism by Devaprasad Chattopadhyaya (New Delhi, 1959), 206n.
Lokāyatikas referred to as 'eke' in V. S. (III. 3. 53), 1175.
Lopāmudrā 10, 1124 (in Ṛg. I.

179. 4).
Lotus leaf, not affected by water fallen or sprinkled on it, 1005-6, 1367n, 1585n, 1587.
Luck—vide under 'daiva'.
Luders, Prof., on Ṛṣyaśṛṅga story 893.
Ludwig (on Ṛg. X. 55. 3) 494n.
Luke (Gospel of) 677.
Luther, though a rebel against Pope's authority, denounced Copernicus as a fool 512.
Lyon E., a. of 'Assignment in Utopia' (1937) for horrors in Russia before 1934, 1474n.
Macaulay's Minute on 'Indian Education', its aim and results 1661-62.
Macdonell, a. of 'Vedic Mythology', sometimes indulges in facile assumptions 209, 1213, 1486n, 1577 (does not agree with Deussen about Kṣatriyas being original cherishers of Vedānta thoughts).
Macdougall, a. of 'An outline of abnormal psychology' 1414n.
Maclean, C. V, on 'Babylonian Astrology' etc. 546n, 571n, 589n.
Macnicol, M., a. of 'Indian Theism' 1570n, 1593-94 (criticized for view that there was no place for repentance in doctrine of Karma).
Madanapārijāta, 30n, 47n-8n, 71n, 73n, 196n, 672, 1192 (North Indian work of about 1360-1390 A. D. quotes a half verse of Prabhākara), 1273n; 1299 (on Vākyabheda).
Madanaratna, 61, 133, 244, 734 (on Śāntis), 735 (list of matters dealt with in Śāntika section), 736, 755, 756n, 765n, 769, 771n, 772, 785, 788-89, 1303, 1304n, 1305 (on vyavahāra), 1316n (prefers as heir to deceased son the father and not mother), 1330; eulogizes on vyavahāra, Bhavanātha 1189, 1233.
Mādhava, an early writer (before 500 A.D.), criticizing Sāṅkhya, 1359.
Mādhavācārya, 1160, a. of Kālanirṇaya, 67n, 151, 202, 227, 659; a of com. on Sūtasaṁhitā, 911; a. of Jaiminīyanyāyamālāvistāra 1199.
Madhvācārya alias Ānandatīrtha (vide under 'Tolerance'): a. of 'Mahābhārata-tātparyanirṇaya' 1218; claims to be third avatāra of Vāyu, the other two being Hanūmat and Bhīmasena 1219; endeavours to interpret Ṛg. I. 141. 1-3 as referring to these three avatāras and the word madhvaḥ thought enough to claim that Madhva was referred to in Ṛg. I. 141. 3, 1219; thirty works which Madhva cites are said by Shri Venkatasubbiah to occur nowhere else 1219; was very severely handled by Appayyadīkṣita in the latter's Madhvatantra-mukhamardana and charged with fabricating Vedic and other texts 1219.
Madhyāhna, explained 100.
Madness, believed to be influenced by the Moon 552 and n.
Madya, is called Tīrthavāri in some tantra works 1081; means real wine as well as a substitute like cocoanut water or bhāng or that intoxicating knowledge that comes of Yoga practices 1082; symbolic or esoteric meaning of 1083.

Maga or Śākadvīpīya brāhmaṇas 264.

Maga-vyakti, a work by Krishnadas Mishra 264.

Māgadha (vide under 'Sūta'), 862-864; a pratiloma caste due to union of a Vaiśya male with a Kṣatriya female 862.

Magic: Ṛgveda people afraid of black magic 1035; spells in Atharvaveda 1035; stories in Pali that Buddha's disciples cultivated m. powers 1037; m. words in Ṛgveda 1035, 1037; regarded by Manu as sinful 1079; Purāṇas also were affected by rites of black m. 1114.

Magicians, frequently m. in Ṛgveda and described as 'Adeva,' 'anṛtadeva', 'śiśnadeva' (lecherous) 1035; were called 'Yātudhāna', 'rakṣas' and 'piśācī' (female evil spirit) 1035-36.

Mahābhāgavata defined in Padma 964.

Mahābhārata, 27, 44-5, 81, 89, 91, 109, 118, 126, 129, 245, 506n, 531, 544, 569, 682, 687, 769, 775; and Sāṅkhya 1363-1371; called Jaya by itself and other works 840, 871; claims that it is superior to all Vedas 915; contains no passage giving the position of planets in relation to rāśis 532; critical edition of, at Poona 838; date of 849; describes itself as Dharmaśāstra, Arthaśāstra, Kāmaśāstra and Kārṣṇaveda 819; dilates upon all four puruṣārthas and should be listened to by one desiring Mokṣa 921n; discussion in, on daiva and puruṣakāra 544-5; emphasizes often that there is only one God and that there is no difference between Śiva and Viṣṇu 118; enjoins (in Bhīṣma 5. 12) that incomprehensible matters should not be tried to be solved by Tarka 1470; many passages in M. where planets in relation to Nakṣatras are stated to forebode misfortune to people in general or to individuals 532; Nīlakaṇṭha, commentator of, 937n, 1214; stated to contain the substance of the Veda and a better means of the education of the common people including Śūdras, women etc. 924-25; words 'ahiṃsā paramo dharmaḥ' occur frequently in M. 945; 1626 (spiritual or religious debts), 1642, 1688 (about sonless man).

Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali (about 150 B. C.): (vide under Patañjali), 36, 103, 203, 468n, 469, 542n, 658n-68n, 684n, 698 (on numerals), 820 (derives 'Paurāṇika'), 937n, 963, 985, 1032, 1156 (full of Pūrva-mīmāṃsā matters), 1157 (mentions Kāśakṛtsni), 1158, 1203 (on Veda), 1221n (divisions of the four Vedas), 1224n (śabdapramāṇakā vayam), 1236n (on prakṛti and pratyaya), 1246n ('na' means 'sadṛśa' in some cases), 1252 (śāstra is meant to give definite rules), 1290 (primary meaning to be preferred to secondary), 1321 (on Sattra for one thousand years), 1331n, 1388n, 1395 (date of), 1398 (employs an ungrammatical form in Aviravikanyāya); mentions several men and incidents connected with Kṛṣṇa such as killing Kaṁsa 130n; paper by present author on 'Mahābhāṣya and the bhāṣya of Śabara' 1275n; quoted several times by Śabara who refers to its author as Ācārya and 'abhiyukta' 1275n; remarks that Vedas and their meaning are eternal but the arrangement of words is not eternal and hence arise different Vedic texts like Kāṭhaka, Kālāpaka etc. 1203; 1631n, 1640n (M. included Śakas and yavanas among śūdras); ed. by Kielhorn 1631n.

Mahādānas, sixteen, of which Gosahasra was one 219n.

Mahākālahṛdaya, a mantra, japa of 1047.

Mahānārāyaṇopaniṣad, 466, 475n–6, 1627n.

Mahānirvāṇatantra (18th century A. D.), 1033n, 1052n–53, 1555n, 1062, 1074n, 1077n, 1080, 1086–8, 1089n, 1092, 1095, 1099, 1100–01, 1102n, 1107, 1108n, 1112, 1114 (on dīkṣā), 1118, 1120 (on nyāsa), 1126n, 1133; a typical Hindu Tantra, summarised 1057-60; states that God is one and to be described as sat, cit, and ānanda is beyond guṇas and to be known from Vedānta texts and yet prescribes the five makāras for worship 1057; allows only five cups of wine to a householder sādhaka etc. 1059; waxes eloquent over duties of varṇas and āśramas, duties of the king and servants, provides for marriages within the varṇa and dinner only with savarṇa persons, deals with saṁskāras and śrāddha, prāyaścitta and vyavahāra 1059–60.

Mahāniśā, variously defined 117n.

Mahāparinibbāna-sutta, 686, 1022 (story of the criticism of Buddha by Subhadda, a barber), 1070 (Buddha was strict and asked monks not to see or talk to bhikkhunīs).

Mahārauhiṇa (a Sāman chant) 796n.

Mahārudra, repeating Laghurudra eleven times 813.

Mahāśānti 730n; acc to Kauśikasūtra should comprise Vāstōṣpati hymn and certain Atharvaveda texts 730n; means Vināyakaśānti and Navagrahaśānti, acc. to commentary on Śāṅkhāyana Gṛ. Sūtra 730n; performed to remove evil effects of several adbhutas and utpātas, on fall of meteors by day 761–763, 767.

Mahāśivarātrivrata 225–236: conflict of views as to what is the chief matter in M., whether fast alone or three viz. fast, worship and jāgara 227 ; exaggerated praise of 229 ; fourteenth tithi of dark half of Māgha (or Phālguna in Pūrṇimānta reckoning) is called M., the other 14th tithis in the dark half of other months being simply Śivarātris 225 ; fourteenth of Māgha dark half falling on Sunday or Tuesday is most commendable 232 ; Kālanirṇaya's propositions about the proper day and time for M. when 14th is mixed with 13th tithi or Amāvāsyā, 230 ; proper times for performing M. acc. to Hemādri and Īśānasaṁhitā, 229-230 ; several Purāṇas contain details of M. and its Māhātmya 225 ; story of a wicked Kirāta named Caṇḍa in Skandapurāṇa 226-227 ; story of Sundarasenaka, a niṣāda chief, 226 ; worship of Śiva with bilva leaves and jāgara whole night saves devotee from hell and leads to mokṣa 225 ; worship of Śivaliṅga at night with certain mantras destroys all sins 229.

Mahāśvetā, a Mantra, japa of which on a Sunday with fast deemed to yield all desires 1106.

Mahāvagga 939n, 1038 (story of Mendaka's family possessing miraculous powers), 1663 (procedure of saṅgha meetings)

Mahāvallipuram, has a tableau (of 7th century A. D.) of the strife of Devī and Mahiṣāsura 178.

Mahāvīra, sacrificial vessel in Pravargya rite 728.

Mahāvrata, sexual intercourse in, was symbolic and indulged in by strangers to the sacrifice 1080.

Mahāvyāhṛtis, 796n, 1528n.

Mahāvyatīpāta, defined 706 ; gifts on this most highly commended 706.

Mahāyāna Buddhism, books on 941n-2n ; differences of ideals between M. and Hīnayāna 942-43 ; its doctrine of Bodhisattvas is not consistent with the Gospel preached by Buddha in the first sermon at Benaras 942.

Mahāyāna-sūtrālaṅkāra of Asaṅga, mentions five points of difference between M. and Hīnayāna 942n ; took over the doctrine of bhakti 970.

Maheśvara Tantra 1051 (names of Vaiṣṇava tantras), 1144.

Mahīdhara, commentator of Vāj. S. 1037.

Mahiṣāsura, killed by Durgā, 155n, 184-85, 1047.

Mahmud of Gazni : plundered Kathiawar and Gujarat several times and desecrated temples 1018.

Mahodayaparva 262.

Maithuna, a makāra, in Tāntrik worship referred to as pañcamatattva (fifth substance) 1081 ; esoteric meaning of 1082.

Maitrāyaṇī-Saṁhitā 727n, 750, 1220n (barhir-devasadanam dāmi), 1222, 1224n 1288n (vasantāya kapiñjalāñ-ālabhate), 1295n, 1305n, 1309n, 1327, 1328n.

Maitrāyaṇī-Upaniṣad 569 (mentions Śani, Rāhu and Ketu), 1419n (six aṅgas only of Yoga), 1430, 1460, 1468.

Maitreyī, wife of Yājñavalkya in Bṛ. Up. 1405

Maitrī Upaniṣad: has a long disquisition on time 465-66, 1063n (on Suṣumnā Nāḍī), 1507n.

Majjhimanikāya (ed. by Trenkner) 1007n, 1022, 1411n.

Majumdar, Prof. B. C. 843, 883 (origin and character of Purāṇa Literature), 1046n (two hymns to Durgā in Mahābhārata are interpolations).

Majumdar R. C. 978n, 1014n (a. of 'History of Bengal'), 1048n (on 'Inscriptions from Kambuja'), a. of 'Ancient Indian Colonies,' 1618n.

Majumdar, Surendranath a. of paper on 'Bibliography of Ancient Geography of India' 1528n.

Makāras, five, of Tāntrik cult explained in esoteric senses and also unobjectionable substitutes allowed for the Paśu (lowest kind of Śākta worshipper) 1081 and n; substitutes for makāras 1081n; many tantra works like Kulārṇava, Pārānandasūtra employ the words madya, matsya and māṁsa in the ordinary sense 1086.

Makṣā, meaning of, 738n.

Makarasaṅkrānti (vide Saṅkrānti): 211-225; bath with ordinary water (not heated) obligatory on, 212; falls at present on 14th January in the Hindu almanacs based on Sanskrit works while the correct date is 21st December preceding 222, 712; fast for three days or one day in honour of M. 220; gifts are made even now on M. mostly by women 222; great merit results from bath in Ganges on, 212; Hemādri states that the proper day of M. was in his day 12 days before the popular day of M. and gifts (religious) should be made 12 days before the latter, 712n; it now falls in Pauṣa but the day changes in terms of the Gregorian calendar 211, 712; it was an important religious festival, but now more a social observance than religious 211, 221; meaning of the word 211; origin of the festival on m. 223; procedure observed on, 211-212; prognostications drawn from the supposed directions of the deified M. coming, going etc. 225; puṇyakāla (holy time) on day of M. 212; sesame to be employed on M. in water for bath, and should be eaten and are very much in evidence even now 219, 221; twelve rāśis and their western names 211 and n (and all twelve saṅkrāntis are holy); was supposed (as a divinity) to ride some vehicle and an Upavāhana (ancillary vehicle), to wear a garment of some colour, to carry a weapon, to apply a tilaka of some substance 224–225; was supposed to be either young, middle-aged or old, to have certain postures (sitting, standing etc.), to come from one direction, to go to another and cast a glance at a third 225.

Malamāsa, (intercalary month) 671; acts and rites not to be performed in 673; acts to be done only in M. 674; kāmya rite not to be performed in, unless it is begun before M. starts 673; obligatory acts and acts prescribed on definite occasions are to be performed even in M. such as daily sandhyā 673; rites that could be done in M. as well as in Śuddha month 674; Śrāddha in M. 674–75.

Malamāsatattva 58, 490n, 492, 498–9, 500, 507n, 592n, 664, 671n, 672–73n, 674, 761n, 835n, 1240, 1266n.

Mālatīmādhava, 1047n; mentions human sacrifices in temple of Caṇḍikā or Cāmuṇḍā 186, 1048.

Mālavagaṇa years, inscriptions dated in, 652 and n.

Mālavikāgnimitra, 531n, 1028 (Puṣyamitra.)

Malignant spirit, known to Ṛgveda 60n

Malimluca–same as Malamāsa 671–672; explained and derived 671–72.

Mālinīvijayavārtika (a work of Kashmir Tantrism) of Abhinavagupta 1050.

Mallinātha, 1426n, 1531 (his motto 'nāmūlam likhyate kiñcit').

Māṁsa (flesh), esoteric meaning of, in Tantra 1082; etymology of, in Manu and Viṣṇu Dh. S, 1533.

Man, psychical powers of are vast and unknown 1091–92; man acc. to Christian doctrine is conceived and born in sin, while acc. to Vedānta, human soul is divine 1506n; length of life of, 100 years, acc. to Ṛg., Vāj. S., Atharvaveda, 1545.

Manasāpūjā, in Bengal and South India 125; procedure of 125; Saṅkalpa in 125n.

Manasāvrata on Jyeṣṭha bright half, 10th tithi, 126.

Mānasollāsa of Cālukya king Someśvara (1126–1138 A. D.) 805 (has verses on 'śakunas'); 809 (on upaśruti), 810n. 1654 (on Vāstuśāstra and paintings) and n.

Mānavagṛhya-sūtra, 729n–30n, 738n, 748.

Maṇḍalas : an item in Tāntrik worship which is also a feature of orthodox Hindu practices in medieval and modern times 1131–34; M. and Cakra said to be synonymous by Jñānārṇavatantra 1133; Buddhist tantras like Mañjuśrimūlakalpa describe M. 1133; drawn with powders of five colours, acc. to Matsyapurāṇa and also figures of a lotus with 8 or 12 petals drawn with saffron, or red sandalwood paste or in various colours 1132; eight maṇḍalas, Sarvatobhadra and others, referred to in Agnipurāṇa 1132; four characteristic items in Maṇḍala rites specified, 1133; in Puṣyasnāna a Maṇḍala with different coloured powders was to be drawn 1132; meaning of the word in Tai. S., Śat. Br. and Bṛ. Up. is 'circular form' and 'orb of the Sun,' and later any figure or diagram (generally circular) drawn on an altar 1131–32; means 'circle' in Śulba sūtras and reference to the squaring of a circle (maṇḍala) 1132; references in several purāṇas to invocation of the Sun on the figure of a lotus and also of Nārāyaṇa, and to images or paintings of Lakṣmī and Nārāyaṇa and to Maṇḍalas called Sarvatobhadra etc. 1132; several Maṇḍalas–described in Jñānārṇava, Śāradātilaka and other tantras 1132; several M drawn in Ṛgveda–brahmakarma–samuccaya (Nirn. ed.) 1134; Smṛtikaustubha mentions several names of M. 1134; twenty-six M. described in 26 chapters of Niṣpannayogāvali 1133.

Maṇḍanamiśra (between about 680–720 A D.); explains a verse of Tantravārtika. acc. to Śāstradīpikā but there is no evidence that he wrote a com. on Tantravārtika 1191 and n; is later than Kumārila and flourished about 680–710 A. D. 1191, 1193–94; his Bhāvanāviveka quotes Tantravārtika 1191n; works of, on P. M. are Vidhiviveka, Bhāvanāviveka (commented upon by Umbeka), Vibhramaviveka and Mīmāṁsānukramaṇī 1191; no evidence that he was a disciple of Kumārila but in Bhāvanāviveka and Vidhiviveka he quotes verses from Tantravārtika and Ślokavārtika and also a passage from Prābhākara's Bṛhatī 1193, 1198.

Mandlik, a. of 'Hindu Law': wrong statement by, about Vedic passages that have a word like 'hi' showing reason 1239n.

Māndhātā, king was ordered by Indra to see that Yavanas, Cīnas, Śabaras, Śakas obeyed parents, performed rites laid down by Veda, made gifts to brāhmaṇas 54.

Māṇḍavya, writer on Astrology, predecessor of Varāhamihira 592.

Māṇḍūkyopaniṣad 465, 1413n.

Maṅgala: auspicious sounds to be heard and objects to be seen when starting on an expedition 621; what are M. things 366, 621.

Maṅgala, tradition about beginning of any work with M. laid down by Manu 1207.

Maṅgalāṣṭaka, eight substances to be distributed to women when invited in a ceremony or vrata like Saubhāgyasundarī 367.

Manilius, not followed by Bṛhajjātaka as to Dreṣkāṇas 582n.

Maṇittha; two Greeks of that name, one a contemporary of Berossus and the other an author of an astrological poem, 592n.

Maṇittha, probably an Indian, a. of work on Āyurdāya 592; refers to Horāśāstra of Parāśara 592n.

Manjuśrī-mūlakalpa 1040 (has late elements), 1140.

Mankad, Prof. D. K., 686-7 (on ten meanings of the word 'Yuga'); on Manvantara and 40 years being the unit for a king's reign 696, 844n, 845; on 'Yugapurāṇa' 826-27; theories of, about Śuṅgas and Sāmaveda singing being of Chinese origin, criticized 844n.

Mansur, king (754-775 A. D.) in whose reign an Indian astronomer visited his court 699n.

Mantra (or Mantras, acc. to context); (vide under 'Aurobindo, Brāhmaṇa texts, Kapaly Sastri, Nigada, Śāradātilaka Tantra, Veda, Vedic Interpretation): are employed in sacrifices for bringing to mind the act that is being done 1097, 1220, 1244; are the 3rd out of the five classes of Vedic texts 1244; bīja m. like hrīm, śrīm, are said to make visible the form of the devatā in Tāntrik worship 1099; Buddhist Tantras (some) state that certain m. can confer even Buddhahood 1104; called 'Abhaya' 769n; difficult to define what a Vedic Mantra is and hence it is held that those Vedic verses or passages are m. that are recognized as such by the learned, 1096, 1098, 1220, 1223; difference between M. and prayer, 1100; difference between Vedic M. and Tāntrik M. 1107; differing interpretations of Ṛg. IV. 58. 3 (catvāri śṛṅgā etc.) by Nirukta and others, 985; examples of short mantras of 5, 6, 8, 12, 13 syllables from Smṛtis and Purāṇas as efficacious for securing all objects, 1096 and n; for killing an enemy in Agnipurāṇa, 1102; four classes of Vedic M. viz ṛk, yajus, sāman and nigada 1097, 1221; great controversies about meaning and purpore of Vedic M. illustrated, 984-5; great importance attached to recitation of M. and many educated men even of these days believe in their great efficacy 172; has three senses, acc to Ahirbudhnyasaṃhitā, sthūla, sūkṣma and highest, 1115; have no efficacy if learnt from books but are efficacious when learnt from a qualified guru 1100, 1112; have to be repeated thousands of times to secure full results, 1103-4; M. in all tantras are m. of the great Devī 1102; Kutsa's view that M. have no sense or serve no purpose refuted in the Nirukta, 1097; list of hymns and verses of Ṛgveda that are cosmological, philosophical, or speculative 983–4; most famous Buddhist M. 'Om Maṇipadme hūm' discussed and results supposed to be derived from it, 1104n, 1454; most sacred Vedic M. is Gāyatrī (Ṛg. III. 62. 10) called Vedamātā in Atharvaveda 1097; no difference of meaning in the words used in Veda and the same words in ordinary life acc. to Jaimini and Śabara, 1097; numberless mantras in Tantra 1102; M. of Rāma worship 87n; Paurāṇik Mantras like 'dātāro no' and 'yāntu devagaṇāḥ' came to be used even in Śrāddha by Yāj. and others, probably to meet Buddha's appeal to masses 1024; peculiar pattern of M. prescribed for worship of a deity 788n; Ṛgveda I. 164. 39 is explained in four ways and Ṛg. I 164. 54 in six ways by Sāyaṇa 984–5; repetition of Vedic and Tāntrik M. is called 'puraścaraṇa' 1107; 'sac-cid-ekam brahma' is the best of mantras acc. to Mahānirvāṇatantra and perfection in it leads to mokṣa 1112; several Vedic mantras with two meanings are cited in the Nirukta 984; some Vedic M. are hortatory 1214; some Buddhist M. embody Mahāyāna doctrines with the addition of syllables like om, phaṭ, svāhā 1105; synonyms of the word Mantra are stoma, brahma, gīr, dhīti, mati, manīṣā, vacas, vacasyā and are used hundreds of times in the Veda and in several places a Vedic prayer is said to be new 983; Tāntrik M. are treated like Vedic M. with sage, metre, deity and viniyoga, 1103; Tāra or Tāraka M. is om 1115; theory about sounds of M. being Śakti, 1100; three classes of Tāntrk M., masculine, feminine, neuter, 1101n, 1103; two theories about M. 1155; varieties of M. called astra, hṛdaya, kavaca, netra, rakṣā are mentioned in Tāntrik texts 1102; verses of Ṛgveda show that a host of mantras already existed and were inspired by the Lord of Prayers 981–983; Vedic M. were relegated to a secondary role by the Pūrvamīmāṁsā system 1214; Vedic M. were supposed even in Ṛg. to have great potency, that they induced God to come to the sacrifice and to bestow on sacrificer and worshipper valiant sons, wealth and protection 1098; word 'Mantra' derived and explained 1102; word Mantra occurs about 25 times in the Ṛgveda and 'Mantrakṛt' only once 980; word Mantra is not described as new in the Ṛg while the words 'Sukīrti' and 'Sūkta' that occur only four or five times are spoken of as new or fresh 983.

Mantramahārṇava-tantra 1136.

Mantramahodadhi 1062n, 1110, 1113, 1136.

Mantranyāsa: illustrated by Bhāgavata, Brahma and Nāradīyapurāṇas as to mantras like 'om namo Nārāyaṇāya' 1120.

Manu, is used sometimes in the sense of Mantra, both being derived from root 'man' to think 1060; 'Om sac-cidekam brahma' is 'Brahmamanu' 1060n; described in Ṛgveda as father of humanity and as prescribing the proper path for men 690n; Sāvarnya M. in Ṛgveda 691; story of M. and the deluge, 691n; story of M. and his son Nābhānediṣṭha 691n.

Manusmṛti 24n, 27-29n, 30, 33, 41, 49, 51-2, 67n, 72, 100, 166, 168, 193, 210, 241, 248, 476 (units of time), 517n, 527, 536n, 538-39, 605n, 607, 616, 687-88, 693, 696, 743, 757, 766n, 776n, 782n, 789n, 800, 801n, 820, 825, 862, 868n, 914 (on Śiṣṭabrāhmaṇas), 930-32, 934-8, 945 (virtues necessary for all varṇas), 946n (on Yama and Niyama), 948, 1023-4, 1027, 1042, 1079, 1086 (quoted by Kulārṇava), 1096, 1154n, 1156n, 1178, 1190n, 1202-3 (appears to suggest that Veda is self-existent), 1207n, 1214n, 1230-34, 1241n, 1242-43 and n (many Arthavādas in), 1250 (in III. 267 gives several options expressly), 1251-52, 1256n-58n, 1264, 1278, 1288, 1293n, 1296, 1367n, 1378n, 1415n, 1420, 1440-1, 1457 (on duties of Sannyāsins), 1469, 1478, 1515-17, 1533-34, 1545, 1561, 1564-65 (uses word saṁsāra frequently), 1576n, 1589, 1591, 1593 (on repentance), 1596-7, 1608, 1611; frequently echoes the very words of the Veda 1265n; mentions many Sāṅkhya tenets 1379, 1413n, 1422, 1424n, 1436n, 1516; practice of M. of stating opposite views on the same point one after another, 1266, 1517, 1619 (limits sadācāra to only certain parts of India, excluding Madhya-deśa and Āryāvarta), 1627n, 1628, 1630, 1633 (varṇa and jāti confounded), 1637, 1638 (brāhmaṇa selling milk for more than three days became a śūdra), 1638n, 1639 (king was a divinity in human form), 1645-6, 1669 (duties common to all men); some verses are identical with those in Śāntiparva, Vanaparva and some Purāṇas 688n, 1266n, 1516n, 1578; some verses of, almost identical with verses in Āp. Dh. S. 817; some verses of, almost the same in Matsyapurāṇa 1520n; some verses identical with Parāśarasmṛti 1266n; three theories about creation in 1515-17; very eminent position assigned to M. by Bṛhaspati 1265; whatever Manusmṛti proclaims as dharma was already declared so in the Veda acc. to M. II 7, on which commentators differ 1258n.

Manus: each Manu during his time created the world and protected it 692; names of all fourteen M. in Nāradapurāṇa 691; names of seven only in Manusmṛti 691-2; past six M., 7th (the present one) Vaivasvata and 7 future ones 688, 691; variation in the names of the future seven M., 691.

Manvādi-tithis: on which each Manvantara was supposed to start 371.

Manvantara (vide 'Yuga'): each M. had a separate set of sages, gods, kings, smṛtis 691; extent of 688, 690n, 697; fourteen M. constitute Kalpa 689; Prof. Mankad's novel theory about M. 696; said to be numberless by Manusmṛti 688; sense of, 690n; some purāṇas say that in each M. Manu and seven sages are devoted to Dharma and promulgate Vedas by orders of Brahmā 692; some writers like Dr. Daftari hold that in ancient India existed a public Institution called Manu and Saptarṣis 693.

Marduk, Babylonian God 546.

Mārgapālī, on Balipratipadā, described 205–6.

Mārgas, vide Paths.

Marīci, Smṛti of 33, 216.

Mark (new Testament) 677, 1461n, 1647n, 1649.

Mārkaṇḍeya 75n, 100, 147n, 188n; supposed to be one of the eight immortals (cirajīvinaḥ) invoked on Yamadvitīyā 208.

Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa: (vide under Dattātreya); 51, 154n, 177, 185n, 243n, 530n (countries under different Nakṣatras); 538n, 561n, 687, 692 (on Manus), 731n, 734 (chapters on Śāntis), 945n (on ātma-guṇas), 948 (meaning of Iṣṭa and Pūrta), 949 (on great merit of relieving the distressed), 967, 1027n (on householder stage), 1213 (on heaven), 1383n, 1438, 1440n, 1444n, 1446 (speaks of ten Dhāraṇās), 1455, 1457, 1522 (chap 5 uses Sāṅkhya technique), 1527, 1576n (on doctrine of Karma), 1590; chapters (78-90 of Venk. ed, 81–93 of B.I. ed) are called Devīmāhātmya or Saptaśatī, deemed a later addition, 155n, 819n, 901–902; contains Gītā doctrine of Niṣkāma-karma 903; note on 901–903; one of the early Purāṇas and may be assigned to 4th to 6th century A D., 903; one verse from Devīmāhātmya (viz. 'Sarvamaṅgala-maṅgalye' etc.) q in inscription of 289 of Gupta era (608 A. D.) 902; places proper for Yoga practice and to be avoided for it 1431; refers to the words 'Lagna' and 'Horā' 903; three parts of, viz. chap. 1–42 (in Venk. ed.), 43 to end and Devīmāhātmya 902; translated by Pargiter 883; verses of, identical with those of Viṣṇupurāṇa 1522n, 1647n, 1688.

Marriage, (vide Candrabala, child marriage Restraint Act, Gorajas, Gurvāditya, Kūṭas, Siṁhastha, Tārābala); anuloma marriages allowed by most Smṛtis but medieval writers changed all that by Kali-varjya 1265-67; auspicious ages for the marriage of maidens and of bridegrooms 611; auspicious times, months and nakṣatras for, 535-36, 609-10; auspicious nakṣatras for M., different views on, 610-11; calculation on tallying the horoscopes of both bride and bridegroom in regard to eight matters, called 'ghaṭita-guṇa-vicāra' or 'vadhū-vara-melaka-vicāra' 614; Candrabala and Tārābala in M. 615; comparative astrological strength of tithi, week-day, nakṣatra, Sun, Moon in m. 616; great importance of Jupiter in M. 615; importance of gaṇa and nāḍī among brāhmaṇas even now, 614; intricate astrological rules for, 609-616; Jupiter, auspicious and inauspicious positions of, in m 612; Moon, importance of the auspicious position of, in m. 615; not disapproved in siṁhastha Guru when performed north of the Ganges and South of the Godāvarī 613; proper lagna rāśis at time of m. 612; Rājamārtaṇḍa devotes 150 verses to astrological requirements of m. 610; Ṛgveda X. 85 is marriage hymn, 497n; rule of 'godhūli' or gorajas muhūrta in m. 613; rules about siṁhastha Guru observed even now 613; rules about the sameness of rāśi or nakṣatra of bride and bridegroom in m. 614-615; Śaiva marriage acc. to Mahānirvāṇatantra in which no question of caste arises 1060; Śānti for inauspiciousness of Jupiter 612; tithis proper and inauspicious for m. 611; usages of countries to be followed about month proper for m. 610; Venus, position of, in m. 612; week days proper for m. 611; when a maiden is very grown-up, no waiting for an auspicious time but one should consider only the lagna and the moon's position at m. 611; Yama and Yamī dialogue (Ṛg. X. 10) wrongly considered by some Western scholars as referring to marriage of brother and sister 209; ban against intercaste marriages removed by legislation 1636n.; futile legislation as to dowry in m. 1676.

Mars, statements about position of, in Mahābhārata are irreconcilable 532.

Marshall, Sir John, editor of three volumes on Sanchi 1653 n; a. of 'Taxila' (three vol.), and Guide to Taxila 1656

Martin E. W. editor of 'In Search of Faith', a symposium by several writers 1487n, 1550n.

Marx: meaning of 'I am not a marxist' 1695.

Maskarin, means (a wandering ascetic), acc. to Pāṇini and Mahābhāṣya 1388n.

Māṭharavṛtti, com. on Sāṅkhya-kārikā not later than 450 A. D., 1354; furnishes names of Sāṅkhya teachers between Pañcaśikha and Īśvarakṛṣṇa 1355 ; on the name Ṣaṣṭitantra 1373n.

Matthew, Gospel of, 103, 677, 1546n–47n.
Mathews W. R. a. of 'Christ' (1939) 1481n.
Mātrā, what is, in Prāṇāyāma 1437–38 ; Purāṇas like Mārkaṇḍeya, Kūrma. give different mātrās for different kinds of Prāṇāyāma 1438 and n.
Mātṛs (Mother Goddesses) 1046 (in Gupta Inscriptions) ; generally said to be eight, but 16, 32, 64 are also mentioned, 169 and n ; referred to in Kumārasambhava and Bṛhatsaṁhitā 186, 1046.
Mātṛkā-nyāsa (Mātṛkā means alphabet), dealt with in Kālikāpurāṇa 1120.
Matsya (fish), esoteric meaning of, in some Tantra works 1082.
Matsyāśī (lit. eater of fish), esoteric meaning of, 1084n.
Mātṛdatta, commentator of Hiraṇyakeśi-gṛhya, 525n.
Mātṛkānighaṇṭu (a Tāntrik list of om and letters of the alphabet) 1058n.
Matsyapu āṇa : 40, 45, 49, 52, 57, 64n, 88, 91–2n, 96, 100, 111n, 116, 119n, 122, 147, 162, 202, 210–212, 520n, 540, 545n–6n, 616n (on Yātrā), 622n (on auspicious persons and things) ; 624–5, 627, 649n, 652n, 660, 681–83n, 687n, 692–3, 695, 734 (on Śāntis), 742–43, 745–46 (numerous Śāntis), 747 (eighteen Śāntis), 749–54, 761, 766n, 769–70, 774, 776–7 (on dreams), 778, 793n, 795n, 798–800, 805, 813n, 817n, 822, 824, 827n, 830n (gives contents of Vāyu), 833–35, 839 (characteristics in addition to five) ; 842 (full list of Āndhra kings), 845n (period between Parīkṣit and Nanda), 846–48, 850–52, 854, 868, 874n, 877n, 880, 896 (contents of Bhaviṣya), 903n, 915–16, 919, 922 ('Om Namo Nārāyaṇāya' is Mūlamantra), 931, 945n, 946, 969n (ten Ābhīra kings), 974, 993 (ten avatāras), 995n (Viṣṇu cursed by Bhṛgu), 1023n–24, 1090n, 1096n, 1114 (description of black magic rite), 1121n (nyāsa with mantras) 1132, 1231, 1372, 1377n–78, 1383 (on Sāṅkhya), 1455, 1470n, 1523n, 1527–28, 1574, 1590 (on rebirths for sins), 1637, 1653 (on writers about Vāstuśāstra) ; Aparārka quotes 400 verses from it and Kalpataru about 2000, 899 ; chief among Purāṇas acc. to Vāmana 833–34, 899 ; date of, about middle or end of 3rd century A. D. 852, 854, 900 ; glorifies both Viṣṇu and Śiva 899 ; has verses that also occur in Yāj. Smṛti, Manusmṛti and Mahābhārata 749n, 899, 1520 ; one of the ancient Purāṇas and has perhaps the largest number of Smṛti chapters and the best preserved 899 ; Padmapurāṇa has hundreds of verses identical with those of M. 893 ; Śaṅkarācārya appears to quote verse (from it) 900 ; story of Purūravas and Urvaśī in Matsya (Chap. 24) and drama Vikramorvaśīya agree closely 900–901, though there are one or two points of difference.

Matsyendranātha, called Luipa in Tibet 1046n, 1075n.

Mattavilāsaprahasana of Pallava king Mahendravikramavarman 1074n.

Mauryas, being greedy of gold, manufactured images of gods for sale 36.

Mausalaparva 147, 743, 775 (dreams), 969n (on Ābhīras).

Maxims (some Nyāyas), generally of Mīmāṁsā — vide pp. 1339–1351); about nindā (condemnation) being meant to prescribe the opposite of what is condemned 96, 1243; Anyāyaścānekārthatvam, explained 1292, 1339; Aruṇādhikaraṇa or Aruṇānyāya 1294–5, 1340; 'dṛṣṭe satyadṛṣṭakalpanā anyāyyā — if a seen result or purpose can be found for an act, it is improper to assign an unseen reward for it, 1190n, 1260 and n, 1344; grahaikatvanyāya, explained 1285–86, 1343; hetuvan-nigadādhikaraṇa, 1239n, 1351; Holākādhikaraṇa 237–238, 1281–82, 1351; Kapiñjalanyāya, explained 1288n–1289, 1341; 'Nāsti vacanasyātibhāraḥ,' there is nothing too heavy (impossible to prescribe) for a sacred text' 512, 1245; Niṣādasthapati-nyāya 1295–96, 1345; prādhānyena vyapadeśa bhavanti 491; rātri-sattranyāya 1257, 1349; Rathakārādhikaraṇa 1290–91, 1349; Sāmarthyādhikaraṇa 1291, 1350; Saṁyoga-pṛthaktva, explained and applied 86, 96, 228, 1350; Sarvaśākhāpratyaya-nyāya 640, 1273 (explained) or śākhāntarādhikaraṇanyāya 1349–50; Sthālīpulākanyāya 1255n, 1351; Udbhid-nyāya 1245, 1341; yāvad-vacanam vācanikam 1177, 1348.

Max-Müller, his date (hypothetical) for the Vedic period, 497, 513, 882; his date for Amarakośa 840n; remarks against his dating for Veda 508; a. of 'Six Systems of Indian Philosophy' 1200, 1491; wrong translation by, 1579n, 1583n.

Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 1284–86.

Maya, astrological writer m. by Varāhamihira 542.

Maya, king of Yavanas, to whom Jyotiṣa was imparted by the Sun-god 592.

Māyā 1509; Bādarāyaṇa (V. S. II. 2. 29) and Śaṅkara are agreed that the ordinary physical world is different from dreams; Śaṅkarācārya employs the word Māyā to express the idea of mystery as to how the finite arises from the Infinite 1510; proper language for most men is not to speak about the world as Māyā (illusion) 1509; Upaniṣad passages like Kaṭha II. 4. 2, Praśna I. 16, Chān. VIII. 3. 1–2 and Bṛ Up. I. 3. 28 may suggest the doctrine of M., 1509; word M.

used in V. S. III. 3. 3 has been differently interpreted by ācāryas 1509; word occurs in Ṛg. in connection with Indra about his Śakti or Śaktis 1043.

Mayamata 1654.

Māyāmoha or Mahāmoha, produced from Viṣṇu's body, who deluded the Asuras and raised atheistic objections against offering animals in sacrifices, about feeding brāhmaṇas in śrāddha, acc. to Viṣṇu and Padma Purāṇas 974–75.

Mayūkhamālikā, com. on Śāstradīpikā 1236n, 1294n.

Mayūracitraka, astrological work attributed to Garga by Utpala 591.

McTaggart, a. of 'Some Dogmas of Religion' 1605.

McCrindle, a. of 'Ancient India as described by Megasthenes and Arrian' 849.

Measures: of corn, pala, prasṛti, kuḍava, prastha, droṇa, khārī 810n, 1294 (meaning in Śāstra of these words is to be taken, not the one among mlecchas); Pāṇini mentions āḍhaka and khārī 810n; Śabara mentions kuḍava, āḍhaka, droṇa and khārī 810n; of time, different views on 476–477; of weight like pala (320 raktikās), karṣa etc. 789n.

Medhājanana, a mantra 35.

Medhātithi, a of bhāṣya on Manusmṛti, 28, 696, 868n, 946n, 1214, 1226n, 1227 (Manu V. 40 is merely an arthavāda), 1229n, 1230 (on Manu III. 45, long note on niyama and pari-saṅkhyā), 1241n, 1252, 1258n (quotes his own work Smṛti-viveka), 1273n, 1286, 1312n–3n, 1321, 1376n, 1469n.

Medicine, founder of, is Kṛṣṇātreya acc. to Śāntiparvan and not Caraka nor Patañjali 1396; muhūrta for beginning to take m. 626; views differ as to first propounder of medical science 1396.

Megasthenes, account of number of kings and the total of their reigns given by, 849; reference by, to Heracles, Soursenoi, Methora 953.

Meghadūta 668, 1563n, 1571.

Mehta, Ashoka, a. of 'Democratic Socialism' 1681.

Meissner, a. of 'Babylonien and Assyrien', 570n, 595 (Zodiacal signs), 596.

Men. Br. Up. (V. 2. 3) inculcates on all m. the virtues of self-restraint, charity and compassion 1627.

Menander, Greek king of 2nd century B. C., 669.

Menon, V. P., a of 'Transfer of power in India' 1464n, 1662; a. of 'Story of the Integration of States' 1663.

Meru, mountain on which the gods reside 824n.

Meru Tantra 1135n–36.

Mesopotamia (vide under 'Horoscope', 'Zodiac'), influence of, supposed by Prof. Neugebauer on Indian writers about longest and shortest day 542; place value notation in, took 60 as the basic number 518n; put by Prof. Neugebauer and a few others in place of the Greeks as originators of science etc. 700n.

Meteors, beliefs about e. g. falling on grave occasions and śāntis for such falls, 766–67.

Meton, Greek engineer; took length of year from Nabu 514n.

Metonic cycle 646, 662.

Mihirakula, ruthless Hūna invader of India 656, 1109.

Miletus, richest city in Greek world in 6th century B. C. 516n.

Mīmāṁsā (vide under Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtra, change, dharma, maxims, smṛtis, Veda, vākya, Kumārila, itikartavyatā, Śabara) : differences between M. rules of interpretation and interpretation of Statutes pointed out 1283–4 ; does not lead in many cases to certain conclusions, as M. writers like Śabara, Kumārila and Prabhākara differ among themselves 1271 ; first rule of M. is that no part of the Veda (not even a word) can be treated as anarthaka 1284 ; fundamental difference between Veda and Smṛtis pointed out 1272–3 ; in Yāj. I. 3 M. means probably the work of Jaimini in 12 chapters, 1160 ; many writers like Mādhavācārya speak of two mīmāṁsās, Pūrva (12 chap of Jaimini) and Uttara (four chapters forming the Vedāntasūtra) 1160 ; meaning of the word M., long before the Upaniṣads 1154 ; not concerned with legislation by the king or a sovereign popular assembly, 1283 ; 'M. Jurisprudence' by Shri Nataraja Ayyar 1201 ; main purpose is to regulate the procedure, the various auxiliary and principal matters in Vedic sacrifices 1283 ; of Kāśakṛtsni mentioned by Mahābhāṣya 1157 ; promises to convey correct knowledge of Dharma and the Veda itself is the means of arriving at that knowledge 1283 ; purpose of, explained by Tantravārtika 1261 ; restricted sense of word M before Yāj. viz 'investigation into Dharma and arriving at conclusions on doubtful matters' 1154 ; result of the importance of vidhis and assignment of a very subordinate role to arthavādas and mantras 1285 ; rules and principles of M in relation to Dharmaśāstra 1283–1338 ; rules of, apply only to rites and names of tithis like Jayantī, acc. to S. M. and Puruṣārtha-Cintāmaṇi, and hardly had anything to do with people's practices 133, 1272 ; rules of interpretation fall into different classes from different stand-points such as general and special, about words and sentences, rules of procedure to be followed when several texts are in conflict, 1285, 1289 ; rules distinguishing between vidhi, niyama and parisaṅkhyā are general 1285 ; rule that Lakṣaṇā (secondary sense) of a word in a sentence is preferable to the fault of vākya-bheda 1301, 1303; rule that the singular includes the plural is a general one and so is the rule that a word importing a male includes a female 1285; rule that a doubt about the exact meaning of a part of a passage may be removed by relying on the remaining part of the passage 1240, 1285; rule about understanding words in the Veda and in Jai. in the same sense as in popular usage as far as possible 1289; rule that words are to be taken in the primary and not in a secondary sense 1289–90; rule that the same word must not be used in two senses in the same sentence, 1292–93; rule that where words like yava, varāha, and vetasa have two meanings the meaning that the Veda, Śāstra or usage of siṣṭas attributes to them must be followed 1293–94; rule that words of foreign origin like pika, nema, tāmarasa and sata that are in vogue in Sanskrit are to be understood in the sense they bear in the foreign language 1294; rules about interpretation of sentences 1297–1306; though M. rules have been of considerable help to Dharmaśāstra writers, it should not be supposed that the application of M. rules is easy or always enables scholars to arrive at certain and definite conclusions 1334–36; was very critical about smṛtis and usages 1272; word M. has great antiquity 1152–53.

Mīmāṁsābālaprakāśa of Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa (between 1550–1620 A. D.) 1195, 1221, 1225n, 1240n–41, 1252.

Mīmāṁsakas : (vide under Colebrooke): are strongly opposed to holding that any part of the Veda is useless or meaningless or non-eternal 1255; Colebrooke said that disquisitions on Mīmāṁsā bear a certain resemblance to juridical questions, that the logic of the Mīmāṁsā is the logic of the law 1220; made a sweeping generalization that the whole Veda is meant for sacrifices but, though they went too far, they had some grounds for their theory, 991; the word 'Mīmāṁsaka' occurs in Mahābhāṣya 1156, Mīmāṁsākaustubha of Khaṇḍadeva, denies that Subhadrā was the daughter of Vasudeva (though the Ādiparva expressly states that she was so) 1281n.

Mīmāṁsā-Kośa of svāmi Kevalānanda-sarasvatī in eight volumes (five already published), an encyclopedic work, 1290.

Mīmāṁsānyāyaprakāśa of Āpadeva (between 1610–1680 A. D.) 1199, 1226n, 1228n, 1235n (on bhāvanā), 1237n, 1245n–47n, 1250 (enumerates eight faults of Vikalpa), 1254n (on Sannipatyopakāraka and ārādupakāraka), 1295n, 1315n-16n

Mīmāṁsā-paribhāṣā of Kṛṣṇayajvan 1237n, 1241, 1254n.

Mīmāṁsāsāra-saṅgraha of Śaṅkarabhaṭṭa (summarises in 250 verses 1000 adhikaraṇas of P. M. S.), 1189n.
Mīmāṁsāśāstra : declared to have had 20 chapters by Rāmānuja and Prapañcahṛdaya and in Inscription of Rājarāja 1159-60 ; Kṛtakoṭibhāṣya of, by Baudhāyana 1159 ; com. of Upavarṣa 1159 ; com. of Devasvāmin and Bhavadāsa 1159-60 ; twenty chapters of, are constituted acc. to some as the twelve chapters ascribed to Jaimini, plus four of Saṅkarṣakāṇḍa and four of Vedāntasūtra 1160.
Minakshi, Dr., a. of ' Administration and social life under Pallavas' 1012n.
Mīnarāja, a. of Vṛddhayavanajātaka, which see) 564.
Mind : pure m. superior to all auspicious or inauspicious times, 627.
Mirashi, Prof. V. V. 945n, 1629n.
Mishra, Dr. Umesha, a. of ' Critical Bibliography of Mīmāṁsā ' and editor of the Vijñānadīpikā of Padmapāda 1157n, 1599.
Miśra-dhānya, explained 732n.
Mitākṣarā of Vijñāneśvara : 29, 102n, 246, 538n, 749n. 750n, 753, 757, 864-5, 896-7, 1063n (on Nāḍīs), 1181n, 1184n, 1192 (refers to views of Guru on Lipsāsūtra), 1233, 1234 (on Yāj. I. 53 about marriages that are void), 1248 (Yāj. I. 129-166 contains many paryudāsas), 1251 (allows option following Jābālopaniṣad about time of becoming a Sannyāsin), 1252 and n, 1264, 1269, 1270 (discards Vedic usages if hateful to people), 1273n-74, 1288, 1292, 1302-3 (on Bṛhaspati about re-union), 1305, 1308-9, 1315-16n (prefers mother to the father as heir), 1317, 1326 (ūha), 1328-29, 1336 (differences on vital doctrines of Hindu Law between Mit. and Dāyabhāga), 1421, 1438, 1468, 1597, 1637, Mitanni (vide under Bogozkewi, Babylon, Hittite) : names of kings and nobles from M., Nuzi and Syrian documents betray Indo-European origin, 599.
Mitra, Dr. R. C , a. of ' Decline of Buddhism in India ' 1003, 1010n, 1011.
Mitra, Dr. Rajendralal, translated into English Yogasūtra 1394.
Mitramiśra, a. of Vīramitrodaya (beginning of 17th century A. D.) 835n.
Mlecchas, had authority to perform vratas according to some 54.
Modern Review, journal 1033, 1653n (on Koṇārka temple).
Modi, Prof. P. M., on ' problem of taduktam sūtras ' 1176n.
Mohaparājaya, a drama by Yaśaḥpāla, composed between 1072-1075 A. D., introduces Kaula practices 1076.
Mokṣa (vide under Mukti, puruṣārtha, Sannyāsin, Upaniṣad) 1215-17, 1511-14; acc.

to Kumārila and Prakaraṇa-pañcikā M. consists in not having to assume a body again, the idea being that the aspirant should not do forbidden acts or those that are Kāmya, he should perform obligatory and naimittaka rites for avoiding the taint or sin that would accrue by non-performance 1216; Devala-dharmasūtra provides that bondage is due to ahaṁkāra and mamatva and liberation consists in being free from these 1458; doctrine of Bhagavad-gītā and some purāṇas that actions done after surrendering the fruits to God do not bind a man but lead to M. 967; is in a way opposed to first three goals, which become the preparation for it 1511; is secured by real knowledge and not by merely giving up wealth 1369; Kumārila asserts that the Upaniṣad exhortations to know the Ātman are merely arthavādas 1216; Manusmṛti on niḥśreyasa (i. e. Mokṣa) being due to ātmavidyā 1459; Manu condemns thinking about Mokṣa before discharging one's debts (duties) 1511; merely possessing signs of asceticism, viz. ochre-coloured clothes, shaving head etc. do not lead to M. 1369; P. M. S., Śabara and Prabhākara do not deal with topic of M. 1215; some Smṛtis like the Bṛhad-Yogiyājñavalkya provide that the mere knowledge of the Self is a sign of indolence and that both knowledge and actions are necessary for Mokṣa 1216-17; four stages of, in Viṣṇupurāṇa 959n; Upaniṣads emphasize that mere knowledge of brahman does not at once lead to Mokṣa, but there are three stages, knowledge, cultivation of restraint of senses, quiescence of mind, meditation and then only realization of non-difference of himself from brahma follows 1511-1513; was not possible for all and sundry, but only for a select few 1511; 1631 (it is like a razor's edge), words m., mukti, kaivalya, niḥśreyasa, apavarga, amṛta, nirvāna held to be synonyms by Amarakośa and discussion about the occurrence of these in Upaniṣads, Gītā and other works 1414-15, 1652; conceptions about mokṣa differ in different darśanas and even in vedānta, 1631

Monks: Buddhist M. were not to possess property, yet they had a craving for wealth and supposed that by means of certain mantras Kubera (lord of wealth) would confer on them everlasting riches 1115; Buddhist M. believed that by mantras they would make some of the Hindu Gods their servants, they would be surrounded by heavenly damsels and they would acquire proficiency in śāstras without study etc. 1116.

Montagu's characterization of Indian Govt. and about British policy 1660-61.

Month (or months acc. to context) : (vide Intercalary M., kṣaya M., Malamāsa); Caitra, Vaiśākha and other M. came to be identified with ancient Madhu, Mādhava etc. 668; Cāndra M, 657; ended with Full Moon in ancient times 659, 668, 669, four kinds of, 657, 666; Greek names of months used in a few inscriptions in India 668; intercalary month 646; M. in which the year began in ancient and medieval times was different at different times and in different parts 82, 658; nākṣatra m. not required in Dharmaśāstra but in Jyotiṣa 666; names of twelve M. are very ancient 667-668; names of M. derived from Nakṣatras occur in Brāhmaṇa literature 667; names of, in South India 671; M. of different lengths for different purposes in Arthaśāstra 490, 658; of two kinds pūrṇimānta or amānta 68; one human M. held to be equal to ahorātra of pitṛs 656n; Pāṇini and Vārtika-kāra appear to speak about a month ending on Full Moon 68, 667; subject of, most complicated 662; śuddha, nija or prākṛta M. as opposed to adhikamāsa 664; word for M. is mās or māsa 495.

Monuments, of India; the most remarkable ancient monuments are the stūpa of Sanchi, the paintings in Ajanta and Bagh caves, the Kailas temple at Ellora and Koṇārka in Orissa 1652-53.

Moon, though it presents the same face to the earth has other side also, acc. to Nyāyamañjarī 470; called mās in Ṛg., 495; legend of his marrying 27 daughters (nakṣatras) of Prajāpati, his fondness for Rohiṇī and therefore suffering from Rājayakṣman 507; reference to M. as becoming free from the mouth of Rāhu in Chān. Up. 569; waxing M. held auspicious by Greeks and Indians 532n; when powerful astrologically 587-588.

Moraes, Mr. Frank, a. of biography of Pandit Nehru, 1172n.

Moral code, highest importance attached to a brief moral code (of ahiṁsā, satya etc.) by all Dharmaśāstra works that enjoined men of all varṇas and castes to observe them 1637.

Moret, Alexander, on 'Nile and Egyptian civilization' 566n.

Morgan, E. P. edited 'This I believe' (1953), 1470n, 1710n.

Morgan, Prof. K. W., a. of 'The path of the Buddha' 942n, 1003.

Morley, Lord, views of, on introducing democracy in India 1660.

Morning, the first fifth part of a day, equal to about three ghaṭikās 81.

Moslem kings, examples of the intolerance of, (like Emperors Jehangir and Aurangzeb) 1019.

Motor accidents, incidence of, in Bombay city 1678n.
Mouni Sadhu, a. of 'Concentration' 1394.
Mountains (vide Himavat); Ṛg-veda mentions mountains in the plural (of 'parvata') 1527 ; seven M. of Bharatavarṣa called Kulaparvatas acc. to Viṣṇu, Brahma, Brahmāṇḍa 430, 1525 and n ; myth of wings of M. cut off by Indra 763–764.
Mṛcchakaṭika, 46, 186.
Mṛgāra Anuvāka 786.
Mṛtyuñjaya, mantra is 'Tryambaka Mantra' (Ṛg. VII. 59. 12), 792, 814 ; also called Mṛtasañjīvani, prescribed for purifying the mind 1100.
Mṛtyusūkta 758n.
Mṛtyuyoga (Inauspicious conjunction) defined 707.
Mudrā, 1123–1131 ; a characteristic item in Tantrik worship 1123 ; derivation of the word M. differs in different works 1123–24 ; has several meanings in Tantraśāstra, 1057, 1081, 1123 ; means the Śakti (woman) associated with a sādhaka in Śākta worship 1084, 1123 ; means also a posture in Yogic practices in which the whole body plays a part and the symbolic or mystic intertwining of fingers and hands as part of worship 1124
Mudrās : (vide under Jains, purāṇas, Viṣṇudharmottara, Yoga): great divergence among Tantras, Purāṇas and Yoga works on the number, names and definitions of M. 1125–1131 ; appropriate mudrās (finger and hand poses) are to be employed in worship, in japa, in meditation and in all rites performed for securing some desired object 1124 ; fine eulogy of, in Viṣṇudharmottara 1129 ; eight M. in the worship of Viṣṇu mentioned by Brahma and Nāradīya purāṇas, 1127n ; M. in Hindu and Buddhist Tantras were probably based on those in Nāṭya 1129 ; largest number of M. in dancing are contained in in Viṣṇudharmottara-purāṇa, 1128–29 ; Mudrās and Nyāsa held to be non-vedic by later works like Dharmasindhu in Mahārāṣṭra at least 1131 ;
Mudranighaṇṭu : names and defines nine Mudrās (āvāhanī and others) that may be employed in the worship of any god, then enumerates 19 M. appropriate to Viṣṇu worship, ten appropriate to Śiva worship, seven to Gaṇeśa worship, one to the Sun (called Padma) and Mudrās of Śakti, Agni, Tripurā and other deities, 1125 and n ; Śāradātilaka names and defines only nine Mudrās, while Viṣṇu Saṁhitā states that Mudrās are numberless but names and defines about thirty and Jayākhyasaṁhitā has about 58 Mudrās 1125–27 ; some Dharmaśāstra works from 13th century onwards dilate at some length on Mudrās, such as Hemādri, Smṛticandrikā 1130–31 ; Some Purāṇas like Brāhma, Nāradīya, Kālikā, Viṣṇu-dharmottara describe many mudrās 1127-28; Tāntrika works provide that Mudrās should be practised secretly under cover of a garment and not in presence of many people 1125-26; Yoga works describe various Mudrās, e. g. Haṭhayogapradīpikā describes ten, Gheraṇḍasaṁhitā 25, Śivasaṁhitā ten as the best 1127.

Mudrālakṣaṇa, a work on Mudrās appropriate to Viṣṇu and other gods 1125n, 1128.

Mudrānighaṇṭu (glossary of Mudrā names) 1124-25, 1129n, (vide under Lalitopākhyāna) 1129n.

Mudrāvidhi, a Jain work, lists 114 Mudrās.

Mudrāvicāra, a Jain work, lists 73 Mudrās.

Muhūrta: (vide under Upanayana, marriage, week day): 537 ff; called Brāhma 538, 539; called Jaya 539; called Kutapa 540; called Maitra 539; called Yeṣṭiha in Kauṣītaki Up. 538; concurrence of four elements, viz. tithi, nakṣatra, Karaṇa and M. required for success in a rite or act 604, 616; Coronation of the king, m. for 616; derivation of the word 537n; difference in the length of a M. of day and of night according to the seasons 538, 541; equal to two nāḍis or ghaṭis 684; fifteen M. in the day and also in the night in the Śat. Br. and other ancient works 537-8, 684; for religious rites 604ff; for secular matters such as purchase of merchandise, animals, for oil bath 626; known by the names of the deities presiding over M. 540; Literature on, is extensive 556-558; loud declaration by brāhmaṇas enough in case of urgency 604; meanings of 537, 543; meaning 'time fit for performance of auspicious acts' 543; names of, set out in Bṛhadyogayātrā (not in Bṛhatsaṁhitā) 540; names of fifteen m. by day and of night acc. to Vāyupurāṇa 540; names of m. differed in the Brāhmaṇas and Smṛtis 538; names of m. acc. to Ātharvaṇa jyotiṣa and Muhūrtadarśana 539; names of the deities, presiding over the 30 m of day and night 541; new garments, M for wearing for first time 626; no need to consider auspiciousness of days, of Jupiter and Venus in times of distress 604; M. (word) occurs twice in Ṛgveda 537; the Muhūrtamuktāvali provides for an auspicious time for thieving 558; performance of auspicious rite in the month of Jyeṣṭha for the eldest boy or girl not allowed 607; position of Jupiter to be considered for, 608; Purity of mind superior to all m. acc. to Matsya, Varāhamihira, Ratnamālā 627; rules (general) about auspicious conditions for all undertakings 605; seven auspicious M. out of 15 M. of the day 539; simple rule in Āśv. gṛ. for M. in Upanayana, caula, marriage 536, 609–10; stages in the naming of muhūrtas, three, 540; understanding of M. in the sense of auspicious time requires some knowledge of planets, nakṣatras, rāśis, bhāvas (places in horoscope), 543ff; what should be done on the 15 m. of the day acc. to Ātharvaṇa-jyotiṣa 541.

Muhūrta-cintāmaṇi: 189n, 533n, 544n, 556–57, 559–60, 585, 589, 607n, 608n, 609, 611n, 614, 616–17, 619–20, 621n, 622, 624; com. Pīyūṣadhārā on, 644n, 556, 608n, 616n, 618n, 622n–4, 710n.

Muhūrtadarśana, also called Vidyāmādhavīya, 539, 556, 623, 666n. 705.

Muhūrtadīpaka of Nāgadeva, 557.

Muhūrta-gaṇapati of Gaṇapati Raval 556.

Muhūrtakalpadruma of Viṭṭhala (times and places for dīkṣā) 556, 1117.

Muhūrtamālā by Raghunātha 557, 701n (list of words that stand for numerals from one to 49).

Muhūrtamārtaṇḍa of Nārāyaṇa 557, 614, 616, 622, 666n; subjects dealt with in 557–8. 626.

Muhūrtamuktāvali 557.

Muhūrtatattva of Gaṇeśa, 556.

Mukerji, D. N. 651n (on kṛta years in Inscriptions).

Mukerji R. C. a. of 'Ancient Indian fasts and feasts' 60, 128, 149, 173, 205, 235.

Mukti (vide under Mokṣa); Kulārṇava-tantra states that M. does not result from study of Śāstras or Veda, but only from correct knowledge imparted by a guru and that two words viz. 'this is mine' and 'nothing is mine' respectively lead to bondage or liberation and then imports Kaula doctrines 1083; four kinds of, named and explained 1631n.

Muktikā Upaniṣad 1564.

Mūla, Nakṣatra called Vicṛtau, in Tai. S. 500.

Mūlakarma, meaning of 1079–80.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad: 475 (names six aṅgas of Veda), 917 (on parā and aparā vidyā), 921 (passages of, borrowed in Purāṇas), 948, 952, 1055n, 1086 (q. by Tantra works), 1360, 1387–89, 1416, 1430, 1448 (on dhyāna), 1471 1507, 1512, 1538 (verse 'dvā suparṇā' which occurs also in Ṛg. I. 164.20 and Śv. Up. IV. 6) 1546n, 1552n, 1563, 1566, 1585n, 1604, 1607; 1625 (illustration of rivers flowing into the ocean).

Muni: (in the Ṛgveda) Munis called Vātaraśana were said to have been befriended by Indra 1386.

Munitz, Milton K., a of 'Theories of the Universe' (omits Indian material) 1486n.

Munshi, K. M., Jubilee volume presented to, 782n.

Murārimiśra, founder of a third school of Mīmāṁsā (between 1150–1220 A. D.), 1199.

Murzban M. M., a. of 'Parsis in India' 264.
Mus, Paul a. of 'Barabudor' (Java) 1657.
Music, works on Indian, 1656–57.
Mysticism 1463; Dean Inge in 'Christain mysticism' cites (in Appendix) 26 definitions of the word 1463n; definition of, by J. H. Leuba, 1463n; Prof. R. C. Zaehner defines it as 'realization of unity' in 'Mysticism, sacred and profane' (1957), 1463.
Nābhānediṣṭha, son of Manu, story of, 691n.
Nabunessar (747 B. C.), dated observations continuously recorded in Mesopotamia from reign of, 514.
Naciketas, story of, in Kaṭhopaniṣad and Anuśāsana-parva 915, 1535; story of, in Tai. Br., slightly different from that in Kaṭhopaniṣad 1535.
Nāḍī, equal to half muhūrta 684; several meanings of, 684n; word occurs in Ṛgveda 684.
Nāḍīs are ten in human body, three main ones being 'Iḍā' (on left side), Piṅgalā (on right side) and Suṣumnā (middle of spinal chord) and this is based on Upaniṣad passages 1063n, 1430.
Nadīs (rivers); are so called only when they are 1008 dhanus in length 431; are deemed to be impure (rajasvalā) when the sun is in the middle of Cancer and Lion signs and become unfit for bath 431.
Nāgapañcamī, 124-127; how observed in the Deccan 125; observed in different ways in all parts of India 124; on 5th of Śrāvaṇa bright half 124; on 5th of Śrāvaṇa dark half in Saurāṣṭra 125; pañcamī mixed with 6th to be preferred 126; procedure of worship of images of nāgas 124–125; some hold that it is one of 3½ most auspicious days in the year instead of Akṣayya-tṛtīyā 124.
Nāgarakhaṇḍa 227, 229, 693.
Nāgas-eight named in Bhaviṣyottara, but twelve in some Purāṇas, one of whom to be worshipped in each month 124n; figure in the Mahābhārata 126; legend about Kadrū, mother of n. 124n; Purāṇas full of stories about 127; when and how worship of N. arose in India is a difficult problem 126.
Nāgojibhaṭṭa, com. of Saptaśatī 154n, 155n; a. of com. on Yogasūtra in Haridas S. Series.
Nahuṣa, made approaches to Śacī and became an ajagara 1280.
Naiṣkarmyasiddhi (ed. by Col. Jacob) 1175n; a work of Sureśvara 1174, 1216n; com. Candrikā on, 1216n; states that Jaimini composed a Śārīrakasūtra, the first two sūtras of which were the same as those of V. S, 1174–75.
Naivedya, derivation of the word 35n.
Nakṣatras (vide astrology, king, Nakṣatra-snāna, Puṣyasnāna); All men are concerned with six n. and the king with nine, 529; n. are 27 or 28 (when Abhijit is added) 529, 497; arguments against the theories of Biot, Weber and others that Indian system of n. was borrowed from the Chinese, Babylonians or Arabs 71, 506–510; auspicious n. for marriage, acc. to Baud. Gṛ. Sūtra 497n, 523; characteristics of persons born on each of the 27 n. acc to Bṛhajjātaka 559–560; classified as puṇya (beneficent) and pāpa and male and female in Tai. Br., Upaniṣads and Bṛ. S. 524–5, 559; complete lists of n. in Tai. S., Tai. Br., Kāṭhaka Saṁ., Mait. Saṁ. and Atharvaveda 498; countries governed by n. acc. to Bṛ. S. 14th chap. 14, 530; deemed parts (or limbs) of Time looked upon as a Puruṣa 560–61; different n. associated with eight kinds of dvādaśīs 119; different n. were called male in different ages 525n; divided into three classes viz. auspicious, inauspicious and neutral 544n; enumerated from Kṛttikā to Bharaṇī in Vedic literature, Vedāṅgajyotiṣa and Yāj. 498; enumerated from Aśvinī to Revati in works from 3rd or 4th century A. D. and in modern times 498; European equivalents of n. in Colebrooke, Burgess and Dikshit 498; fit for Agnyādhāna, acc. to Śat. Br. 566; n. from Kṛttikā to Viśākhā are called Deva N. and from Anurādhā to Bharaṇi, Yama n., 505, 524; held to be temples in which gods reside 545–46; homa to 27n. from Aśvinī 326; information and legends about n. in Vedic texts 507; Iṣṭi to 28 n. from Kṛttikā to Bharaṇī 505; list of n. in Vedic Saṁhitās with names of deities, gender, number of stars in each 501–504; Maghā and Mūla among n. to be avoided by husband for sexual intercourse, 544n; Nakṣatreṣṭi in Tai. Br. (III. 1) dealt with, 505; names of n., their sequence, deities fixed from before the Tai. S. 509; names of, are mostly significant 509; n. to be avoided in auspicious rites and particularly in marriage 615; only a few n. mentioned in Old Testament and by ancient Greek writers like Homer and Hesiod 506; notes on n. from Ātharvaṇa-nakṣatrakalpa and other works 499–500; pāpanakṣatras m. by Kauśikasūtra 535; ploughing on Anurādhā n. mentioned in Tai. Br. 524; prejudice against star-gazers and astrologers in Vedic times 526–7; presiding deities of n. in Bṛ. S, Atharvaṇa-nakṣatrakalpa and Viṣṇudharmottara differ slightly among themselves 499n; prime importance of n in the basic Vedic rite of consecrating sacred fires 506; provinces of India governed by nine groups of n. 560; Puronuvākyā and Yājyā verses for each Nakṣatra in Nakṣatreṣṭi 505; Ṛgveda expressly names Aghā, Arjunī and Tiṣya among n. and in a veiled way probably Mṛgaśiras, Punarvasu, Puṣya, Śatabhiṣak and Revatī 497–98, 523; rule that whatever nakṣatra or tithi has a certain deity as ruler, the sleeping, turning from one side to another and awakening takes place on that nakṣatra and tithi 111; secret name derived from nakṣatra of birth to be used by sacrificer 505; serious discussions about n. in many works 495; seven classes of n. as dhruva, mṛdu etc. 215–216; special names of 4th, 10th, 16th, 20th and and 23rd nakṣatra from that of birth 329–30; substances governed by each of 27 n., 560; Svātī n., marriage on, led to love among spouses 524: synonyms of, in Rājamārtaṇḍa 560; three senses of the word 'nakṣatra' 495–6; two derivations of the word nakṣatra, 510; what actions are beneficial on different classes of n. 510; what n. are said to be Ugra 275; when n. are said to be affected 531; why Vedic list of n. starts from Kṛttikā and why from Aśvinī in classical literature is explicable on astronomical grounds only 507–8; word nakṣatra is applied to the sun also in the Ṛgveda 516; word nakṣatra occurs frequently in the Ṛgveda and other Saṃhitās 495.

Nakṣatrasnāna 792–793; Brāhmaṇa who undergoes Puṣyasnāna thrice with certain additions becomes famous like a king 798; ceremonial bath and worship of nakṣatras and their presiding deities, the mantras employed 792; n. meant for all 798; substances to be added to water for each n. and benefits therefrom 793.

Nakṣatravidyā, m. in Chāndogya Up. 526.

Nakta an alternative to rigidly observed Ekādaśī and is superior to Yācita 101; rules for observing nakta 101–102; views as to exact time called nakta 102.

Naktavrata, is independent of the alternative to fast 103.

Nakula in Kūrmapurāṇa stands for Lakula (which see).

Nalada flowers, for decking the corpse of an āhitāgni 731n.

Nāmadheya (vide Śyena): is the 4th class of Vedic texts bearing on dharma 1244–45; examples of names of Vedic rites such as Udbhid, Citrā, Balabhid, Abhijit, Viśvajit, 1245.

Nāmakaraṇa (naming a child), rules about proper times for 605.

Nanaghat cave Inscription of about 200 B. C, 131.

Nanda-(or Nandi) purāṇa; is part of Skanda, acc. to Nityācārapradīpa 880n; note on 890–91; one of the earliest Upapurāṇas composed in 8th or 9th century A. D. 891.

Nandā, sub-division of tithis 180n, 327.

Nandīpurāṇa (vide Nandapurāṇa).

Nārada, a Devarṣi in Gītā and one of the sons of Brahmā in Purāṇas 1581–82.
Names, great in the reform of Hindu society and relegion in modern times, 1699–1700.
Nanjio Bunyiu, a. of catalogue of Tripiṭaka 1040.
Nārada, a. of a work on Jyotiṣa 97, 99, 592, 622n, 790n, Nārada-saṁhitā 195n, 197n, 199n, 656.
Nārada, brought doctrine of bhakti from Śvetadvīpa 962.
Nārada, an author on music in Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa and as the propounder of Gāndharva acc. to Nāṭyaśāstra 896.
Nārada-bhaktisūtra 956, 960, 965n.
Nārada Pāñcarātra 956.
Nārada Tantra-describes mudrās appropriate to Viṣṇu worship such as Śaṅkha, Cakra 1125n.
Nāradīya Purāṇa : (vide Bṛhan Nāradīya), 41, 70, 72n–73n, 79–81n, 88, 95, 98–9, 101, 104–5 113n, 114–5, 117n, 119, 138, 529n, 604, 681, 691, 708, 857n, 920, 927, 1096n, 1102 (for kavaca-mantra), 1127n (on mudrās), 1576n (doctrine of Karma ; note on 892–93 ; (compiled between 700–1000 A. D.)
Nāradasmṛti 1266, 1286, 1333 (apostate from Sannyāsa becomes a slave of the king), 1582, 1597.
Narahari, Dr. H. G., on an account and date of Prārabdha-dhvānta saṁhṛti 1601.
Narain Prof. A. K., a. of 'Indo Greeks' : 827, 829 (on difficult passages of Yugapurāṇa), 963 (on Besnagara column Inscription).
Naraka (Hell) ; Medhātithi states that n. means extreme pain or suffering 1214 ; seven, acc. to V. S., Śaṅkarācārya, Viṣṇupurāṇa, Yogabhāṣya 825, 1529 ; twenty one acc. to Manu, Yāj., Viṣṇu Dh. S. 825, 1214n.
Narakacaturdaśī 197 ; also called Bhūtacaturdaśī 198.
Narakāsura, killed by Kṛṣṇa and lights lighted with four wicks in memory of 197.
Narasiṁha (or Nṛsiṁha) Purāṇa, 55, 149, 691, 754, 915, 922, 926, 971, 974, 978–982, 1024, 1096n, 1455, 1649 ; Aparārka quotes it 9 times and only about 30 verses, half of which deal with Sannyāsa ; composed solely for the glorification of Narasiṁha identified with Nārāyaṇa 978 ; chap. 36 enumerate eleven avatāras (including Buddha and Balarāma) and chap. 37–54 narrate stories of all avatāras except Buddha ; Hazra (Prof.) bases his remarks upon several mss. besides the only printed edition pub. by Gopal Narayan & Co. (in 1911) 878–880 ; Hazra concedes that N. was revised several times, that Hemādri had a more extensive N. before him 881 ; Hazra holds that present N. is to be placed between 400–500 A. D. 879 ; listening to stories of ten avatāras (excluding Buddha) takes the devotee to Viṣṇu 879; Matsya states that N. contained 18000 verses, while printed N contains only about 3400 verses, hence the latter is only a substitute 880; present N. may be assigned to 9th century A. D. 892; note on 891-92; on usefulness of images of gods 973n, 1121n; Tulasī story in N. indicates lateness 882; whole Purāṇa is suspect and no certain conclusion about its date can be drawn 882.

Nārāyaṇa, com. of Āśv. Gṛ. S. 802n.

Nārāyaṇa, etymologies of the word in Manu, Śāntiparva and some Purāṇas 1516 and n.

Nārāyaṇī, name applied to Devī 176n.

Nārāyaṇīya (a section of Śāntiparva): deals with Kṛṣṇa worship 953, 957, 1365; difference between N. and Gītā 961-962.

Nārāyaṇopaniṣad 1045.

Nāsadīya-sūkta 1490-91: a unique hymn; Śatapatha Br. on it 1490n, some passages are still obscure 1490; translated and explained 1491; translations and remarks by Western Scholars 1491.

Nāstika, is primarily one, acc. to Kumārila, who does not believe in the existence of the individual soul 1206n; the Kāśikā on Pāṇ. IV. 4. 60 holds that it means one who does not believe in the Hereafter 1206n.

Natarajan, S., a of 'A century of Social Reform' 1636n, 1700.

Nāṭyaśāstra (of Bharata), 896n, 1037n, 1129n (mentions Garuḍa which is a mudrā in Mudrānighaṇṭu), 1129, 1630.

Nāṭyaveda, Vararuci as proficient in 900n.

Nautical almanac 676, 682, 711.

Navagrahaśānti (vide Ayutahoma, Grahayajña, Lakṣahoma and Koṭihoma, sacrifice, planets): 749-756; all religious rites to be performed after N. 749; becomes elaborate in Bhaviṣyottara and medieval works 753; colours and presiding deities of Navagrahas 751; mantras for the nine grahas from Yāj., Matsya, and Vaikhānasa-Smārtasūtra and Bṛhad-yogayātrā slightly differ 750-51, 755n, 919; model of all Śānti homas in all medieval digests 749; procedure of, in Yāj. and Matsya 750-752; procedure different for each graha in Madanaratna 755; purposes for which N. was to be performed 749; supposition that each of nine grahas has a separate gotra and country of birth 753; three kinds of, viz. Ayutahoma, Lakṣahoma and Koṭihoma acc. to Matsya 749; verses of Matsyapurāṇa describing how the figures of nine grahas were to be drawn or painted 753; Yāj. does not even refer to Ayutahoma and the two others 753n.

Navagrahayāga (vide Grahapūjā) 296-7.

Navānna-bhakṣaṇa (partaking of grains from fresh crops) 330–1.

Navarātra, twice, in Caitra and Āśvina 179, 186 (vide under Durgāpūjā).
Navarātrapradīpa of Vināyaka alias Nanda-paṇḍita 155–156.
Nawrath, E. A., a. of 'Immortal India' (Bombay, 1956).
Nayaviveka of Bhavadeva or Bhavanātha, a work of Prābhākara school, 1189; referred to by Smṛti-candrikā, Vīramitrodaya on Vyavahāra and Vyavahāramayūkha, 1192, 1233.
Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, 595; ordered Chaldeans to find out the dream he had forgotten and to interpret it 781.
Nehru Pandit, Prime minister, tribute to ancient Brāhmaṇa ideal 1640; to old teaching of Dharma, 1664; about Gandhiji's ideas on self-restraint 1670 (on necessity of a worth while ideal); 1678–79, speeches of, collected by Sriman Narayan for the A. I. C. C. (1956) on socialistic pattern 1680–81; admits that adequate incentives must be offered 1683; Criticizes Gandhiji's attitude to sex and praise of poverty and ascetic life 1619; Autobiography by, 1689, 1708n (on Politics).
Nepal, gambling in, on large scale on Balipratipadā, 203.
Neugebauer Prof. Otto; a. of 'Exact Sciences in Antiquity' and several papers; 481, 483, 490n, 514n, 517–18, 520n, 521, 542 (criticized), 549n, 566n, 571n (criticized), 582n, 597, 631n, 650n, 676n, 699n, 709n, 741n.
New Indian Antiquary (a journal), 1408n, 1601.
Newton, laws of motion expounded by, are now held to be approximations, 1503n.
Nigada, examples of 1222; is Yajus, but is loudly uttered, while Yajus is recited in a low voice 1097, 1222.
Nighaṇṭu 10, 35–36n, 855, 1044, 1600n.
Night, no bath or making gifts or śrāddha at n., except on expressly stated occasions 79, 244; Ṛgveda X. 127 is hymn to n. employed as Śānti 730.
Niḥśreyasa, meaning of, 1037n, 1515n; occurs in Pāṇini V. 4-77 and Kauṣ. Up, 1468n; stated to be goal of the study of Nyāya and Vaiśeṣika Sūtras 1468; Mahābhāṣya explains it 1515n.
Nīlakaṇṭha, com. of, on Mahābhārata 1570n.
Nīlamatapurāṇa 200.
Nīlapaṭadarśana, work of Tāntrik Vajrayāna Buddhist sect, in which the three jewels are Kāma, courtezan and wine, while the three jewels of devout Buddhists are Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha 1073.
Nimeṣa, time required for pronouncing a short syllable 476.
Nimitta (see under 'utpāta'); auspicious nimittas very few as compared with inauspicious ones 744; distinguished from utpāta 743; long lists of inauspicious nimittas 743-744; meaning of, 743; Manu mentions n. and utpāta in same verse 743.

Nimitta, a work attributed to Digambara Jain Bhadrabāhu 743n, 805n; contents of, 805n; later than Varāhamihira and not concerned with Dharmaśāstra and does not dilate on Śānt'is, 805n.

Nīrājana, a Śānti 335, 759, 783; of horses and elephants 184; of king and soldiers 193; on the king's march for invasion 187; procedure of and mantras in 193.

Niravasita, meaning of 926n.

Nirayaṇa, meaning of 712.

Nirgrantha, naked Jain monk 978n.

Nirṇayāmṛta, 69n-71n, 89n, 93, 100n, 101, 134, 146n, 154n, 195n, 196n, 230, 663

Nirṇayasindhu (written in 1612 A. D.), 31-33n, 41n-43, 47n-50n, 51-53n, 54, 61n, 62n, 70-71n, 72n, 73n, 75, 84-86, 88, 90-2, 96n, 97n, 104, 109, 112, 113, 115, 119, 121n, 123n, 127, 133-34, 142n, 144-45n; 146n, 151n, 153n-4n, 157n, 161n-2n, 169, 171, 173, 178n, 179, 180, 182-4n, 188-90, 195, 196n-199n, 201n, 203n-5n, 207n-8n, 218n-9n, 221, 223n, 228n, 240-1, 243n-4; 246n-7n, 607n-8n, 610n, 612n, 613-4, 626, 633n, 660, 664n-5n, 672-74, 710n, 762, 765n-6n, 773, 788n, 925, 926n, 1106, 1117 (times for dīkṣā), 1289, 1307, 1332.

Nirukta, (vide 'Vedic interpretation' and 'Yāska'); 984, 985 (two interpretations of several Ṛgveda Mantras), 987, 991 (discussion whether Vedic Mantras have meanings), 1033n, 1044 (explains Ṛg. I. 164. 11), 1097 1102, 1156n, 1181, 1203, 1237n, 1238n, 1240n, 1256n, 1275-76 (PMS agrees with many conclusions of N), 1364n, 1460n, 1536n, 1540n, 1578-79 (on Vaiśvānara), 1587n, 1633 (word jāti occurs), 1664 (story of Devāpi and Śantanu).

Nirvāṇa 1008n, 1023; not clearly defined by Buddha 941; really indescribable just as brahman is described as 'neti' 1008n; Saundarananda on, 940n-41; N. as synonym of Mokṣa does not occur in principal Upaniṣads, but in Gītā, 1515.

Niṣāda 554n, 1296; could offer an iṣṭi to Rudra, with a Vedic mantra though he did not belong to any of higher varṇas 1642.

Niṣādasthapati, meaning of, 1296.

Niṣedha: vide Pratiṣedha.

Niṣpannayogāvali of Abhayākaragupta, Buddhist Tāntrik work, 1050, 1133, 1143.

Niṣṭyā, called Svātī in other texts 500.

Nītimayūkha 923.

Nityā is Śakti, that is non-different from Śiva 1091n.

Nityācārapaddhati of Vidyākara 924n, 1110n.

Nityācāra-pradīpa of Narasiṁha Vājapeyin; enumerates 18 Purāṇas and refers to Narasimha P., 880n.

Nityānuvāda, explained and illustrated 1250 ; the word occurs frequently in Jaimini 1250.

Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava (part of Vāmakeśvara Tantra) : 1050n, 1058n, 1091, 1136 ; names 64 tantras including eight Yāmalas 1050 ; names and defines Trikhaṇḍā and other mudrās 1126-27.

Nityotsava (a Tāntrik work of Umānandanātha, pupil of Bhāsurānandanātha) : praises his guru hyperbolically 1071 ; 1117 (on dīkṣā), 1136 (on Yantras).

Niyamas : are called tapas by Āp. Dh. S. and Amarakośa 29 ; five named by Yogasūtra 29n, 1421n , but Yuktidīpikā differs; many enumerated by Vāyu-purāṇa 29n ; ten Niyamas-m. by Yāj. 29n ; N. of Y. S II. 32 are of a positive character (viz. be pure, be contented etc.), 1422.

Niyama-vidhis, are classified into three, viz. those concerned with pratinidhis, with pratipatti and those concerned with matters other than these two, with illustrations 1231-32 ; taking food facing the east is an example of a n. not concerned with pratinidhi nor pratipatti 1232.

Niyoga, practice of, allowed as well as condemned by the extant Manusmṛti 1266 ; Ṛg X. 40. 2 refers to it and Gautama and others and even Yāj. states the procedure and conditions of it, 1268 and n.

Noushirwan, Sassanian king (531-579 A. D.) ; dream of, interpreted by Buzurmihir (probably Varāhamihira) 781.

Nṛpa (word) represents number 16, 703n.

Nṛsiṁhācārya 228n.

Nṛsiṁha-purāṇa, vide Narasiṁha-

Number, 18 prominent in Mahābhārata 842.

Numerals, Indian (vide decimal system and place value systems) : their antiquity and method of writing them 697-704 ; Āryabhaṭa mentions ten orders of n from one to vṛnda, each ten times of the the preceding from place (sthāna) to place 698 ; Āryabhaṭa's method of giving numerical values to letters from k to m 704 ; denoted by complete words suggesting numbers 701 ; eighteen orders of numbers from one to parārdha, mentioned by Vāyu and Viṣṇu Purāṇas and Līlāvatī 698 ; from one to ten, hundred, thousand and ten thousand, several times occur in Ṛg. 697 ; Greeks appear to have had no single word for million 698 ; larger numbers are sometimes mentioned in the Ṛgveda before smaller numbers 697 ; list of the word for 18 orders of n. 699 ; list of Sanskrit words suggesting numbers from one onwards 702-703 ; method of using a group of words for the place of units, tens etc. acc. to 'aṅkānām vāmato gatiḥ' 704 ; names for astronomical numbers of years settled in times of Vedic Saṁhitās at least 1000 years B. C. 697–8; names of Vedic metres such as Aṣṭi, Atyaṣṭi suggest numerals 16, 17 etc. 703n; Pāṇini mentions paṅkti (ten), viṁśati up to navati and śata 698; several methods of writing n., 701–702; Tai. S. mentions bricks from one, one hundred, thousand, ayuta, niyuta, prayuta, arbuda, nyarbuda, samudra, madhya, anta and parārdha 697–698; Varāhamihira employs words suggesting numerals even in the place value system 701, 703.

Nyāsa (mystical sanctification of several parts or limbs of the body with Vedic, Tāntrik or other mantras); (vide under aṅganyāsa, haṁsanyāsa, mantranyāsa, mātṛkānyāsa, praṇavanyāsa); 87, 168, 1120–1123; N. is an important item in the Tāntrik ritual 1120; N. compared by Woodroffe with the Christian method of making the sign of the cross 1123; expressly provided by Devībhāgavata as part of Sandhyā worship 1121; in modern times some orthodox people perform two kinds of n. viz. Antarmātṛkā and Bahirmātṛkā, 1122; is avaidika and should not be performed acc. to Dharmasindhu and Saṁskāraratnamālā, 1121n; of different names of Viṣṇu, viz. Govinda, Trivikrama etc. on fingers of right hand, the palm etc. 1121–22; n. of several portions of Gāyatrī, of single letters of Gāyatrī on one's limbs 1122; n. of letters of alphabet from 'a' to 'kṣa', acc. to Mahānirvāṇa, Śāradā. and Rāghavabhaṭṭa on several limbs 1122; several varieties of n. described in tantra works and Purāṇas 1120–21; several works, some tantras and Purāṇas also, dilate upon n. 1120; sixteen verses of Puruṣasūkta for n. on several limbs in Viṣṇu worship 1122; N. was taken over from Tantra works in the Purāṇas and medieval Dharmaśāstra works for the rites of orthodox people some centuries before Yogayājñavalkya and Aparārka 1122.

Nyāya (system of logic); for its necessity in the interpretation of the Veda, Kumārila relies on Manu 1261.

Nyāya, a source of Dharma 1152; also means the adhikaraṇas of Jaimini, expounding the points of Dharma 1155n.

Nyāya-kusumāñjali of Udayana. 1624.

Nyāyamañjarī of Jayantabhaṭṭa 469–470.

Nyāyapariśuddhi of Veṅkaṭanātha 1158.

Nyāyaratnākara (of Pārthasārathi-miśra), a com. on Ślokavārtika; 1159n, 1179n, 1183n, 1188, 1205n, 1207, 1210 (creation and dissolution of world is arthavāda), 1212 (on four possible views on prāmāṇya and aprāmāṇya of cognitions), 1216, 1225n, 1376n, 1600.

Nyāyaratnamālā 1321n (divides all texts into Upadeśa and Atideśa), 1324n.
Nyāyasudhā or Rāṇaka of Someśvara, a com. on Tantravārtika 1188, 1247n (quotes a verse as from Kumārila's Bṛhaṭṭīkā), 1297n.
Nyāyasūtra : 469, 1324n (defines ūha), 1468 ; goal of study of, is niḥśreyasa (Mokṣa) 1468.
Nyāyavārtika 469n.
Nyāyavid, meaning of, 1153n.
Oceans-said in the purāṇas to be seven surrounding the dvīpas 440-441, 1524 ; said to be four, 445 (under Sāgaravrata).
O ' Connor, N. J., a of ' How Buddhism left India ' 1003.
Officials, to be maintained by king and their salaries 819.
Oldenberg 494n.
Old Testament 676-7 ; references to astrologers, stargazers and prognosticators of Babylon 548.
O Leary, De Lacy, author of ' Arabic thought and its place in world History ' 483n.
Olmstead 646.
Om, a sacred syllable, the symbol of brahma and may be called a bīja in Tantra language, 1097 ; importance of Om borrowed from Upaniṣads by Yogasūtra 1417 ; is called Praṇava 1097n ; is called Tāra in Tantra works, 1099n ; eulogy of om in Yogasūtra, 1413 and n ; identified with brahman in Tai. Up. 1416.
Oman R. C., a. of ' The Mystics, ascetics and saints of India ' 1427.
Oppenheim A. Leo, a. of ' Interpretation of dreams in ancient Near East ' 810n.
Oppert, G. editor of ' Śukranītisāra ' 1036.
Orion, work of Lokamānya Tilak, 498-9n, 510.
Option-see Vikalpa.
Orissa Historical Research Journal 174n.
Osborne, Arthur, work of, on ' Raman Maharshi ' 1479n.
Owl, hooting of, 729.
Padapāṭha of the Ṛgveda 22n, 861 (ascribed to Śākalya).
Padārthanirūpaṇa, a work of Raghunātha 470.
Padārthānusamaya method 1317, 1345 ; is reverse of Kāṇḍānusamaya and is set out in P. M. S. V. 2. 1-3.
Padmapāda, a. of Vijñāna-dīpikā 1574n.
Padmapurāṇa 32, 37, 40, 42-45, 56-7, 97-8, 103, 108n, 112n, 125, 135, 147, 195, 196n-97, 201n, 202, 204n-07n, 210, 225, 227, 561n, 672, 751, 770r, 779n, 805, 811 (on Upaśruti-like divination), 817n, 824n, 841 (chapters identical with those of Matsya), 856-57n, 862-63n, 876n, 915-16, 922-25, 930-32, 934-5, 945-6, 948, 960, 964, 966n, 968, 971-72, 974n, 976 (condemns Advaita and Mīmāṁsā), 1024, 1121 (on nyāsa), 1136, 1207 and 1209 (avers that Mīmāṁsā), is nirīśvara), 1213 (description of heaven), 1383, 1385, 1470n, 1528, 1570n, 1576 (on doctrine of Karma) ; note on, 893 ; thousands of verses common to Matsya and Padma, the latter being the borrower 893 ; two recensions of 893.

Paiṅgi-rahasya Brāhmaṇa 1360 (q. by Śaṅkarācārya).

Paiṅgya, 66

Paintings : famous ancient paintings in India are those at Ajanta and in Bagh caves 1654-55; works on Ajanta p. by Dr. Yazdani, Mukula-chandra Dey and Balasaheb Pant, chief of Aundh State 1654-55

Paitāmaha-siddhānta (astronomical work) ; (vide Pitāmaha-siddhānta below) : probably composed about 80 A. D. 488, 517 ; states that Yuga was constituted of five years and employed Śaka 2 for its epoch, 488 and n.

Paiṭhīnasi, a smṛti 54, 72n, 785n.

Pākayajñas (vide under 'Yajña') : 1233n.

Pākistan, came into existence in 1947 and there is now hardly any Hindu or Sikh to be found in West P. 1464n.

Pakṣa (fortnight) ; rites for gods and for prosperity to be performed in bright p. and for pitṛs and magic in dark p. 385 ; word p. occurs in Tai. Br. and Upaniṣads 670.

Pakṣati, meaning of 671.

Pala, a measure of corn equal to 16th of prastha, 810n

Palāśī (lit. eater of pala i e. flesh) esoteric meaning of, 1084n.

Pallavas (twigs with leaves) also called Pañcabhaṅga : five auspicious p. are those of mango, aśvattha, vaṭa, plakṣa, and udumbara 336, 339, 759.

Pallī (house lizard) ; (vide under 'Vasantarāja-śākuna'): fall of p. on right side of a male and left side of a woman is auspicious 792 ; Śānti on fall or contact of p. on a limb, or on p. creeping up a person's limb 792.

Palmistry : certain lines on the hand of a woman were deemed to indicate death of the husband even in the times of Pāṇini and the Kāśikā 525.

Pañcabhaṅga-dala (leaves of five trees) : (vide 'Pallavas' above) 336.

Pañcajanāḥ, meaning of 126.

Pañcamakāraśodhanavidhi (a Śākta work) 1053n, 1087n (describes the sanctification of makāras with Vedic mantras).

Pañcāṅga (calendar) ; (see week day, Yoga) : five important parts in P. are tithi, weekday, nakṣatra, Yoga and Karaṇa 666 ; fourth aṅga of p. is Yoga 704 ; generally prepared for each year 666 ; must be prepared for every town or place more than 15 or 20 miles away from Bombay or Madras or Calcutta where p. are at present prepared, if accuracy as to tithi, nakṣatra is required 713 ; numerous p. in use now in India 641 ; necessity of p. for all Hindus, 650 ; samples of pages from a Pañcāṅga of śaka 1878 (1956 A. D.) and from another 223 years earlier facing pp. 666–667 ; varieties of, in South India, such as Vāḷya and Siddhāntacandra 642.

Pañcāgnividyā : (described in Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 2ff and Chān. V. 3. 2ff) : is an upāsanā 1548–58, 1562–3 ; is concerned with only one aspect of transmigration viz. the path of those who practise a life of sacrifices, works of public utility and alms-giving and follow Pitṛyāṇa path 1584.

Pañcapādikā (of Padmapāda) : (severely criticizes the view that the Viṣayavākya of P. M. Sūtra I. 1. 1 is 'aṣṭavarṣam... tam-adhyāpayīta) : 1182n, 1190.

Pāñcaratnas (five jewels) are gold, diamond, sapphire, ruby and pearl acc. to one view or are gold, silver, pearl, coral and rājāvarta acc. to another view 219, 337.

Pāñcarātra (vide Śvetadvīpa); Bāṇa mentions Bhāgavatas and Pāñcarātras separately in Harṣacarita 955n; doctrine is only one of several bhakti schools 962; Droṇaparva puts forward four forms (mūrtis) of Supreme Person different from those in Śāntiparva 956; general view of most medieval writers on Dharmaśāstra was that Pāñcarātra and Pāśupata śāstras are authoritative only so far as they are not opposed to the Veda 962; identified with Sāttvata in Śāntiparva 953, 955n ; is called 'Ekāntadharma' 953, 1390n ; is called Sāttvatatantra 1032n ; is said to be one of five lores, its promulgator being Bhagavat Vāsudeva himself 954 ; Nārada's name is concerned with Pāñcarātra in Śāntiparva 956 ; peculiar doctrine of P. is that of vyūhas (forms) of the Supreme Person called Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha, each of the latter springing from the preceding, 953 ; P. doctrine refuted in Vedāntasūtra II. 2. 42–45 acc. to Śaṅkarācārya 953, 955, what is refuted being the doctrine of Saṅkarṣaṇa springing from Vāsudeva and so on 955 ; P. Saṁhitās m. by Rāmānuja in bhāṣya on V. S. are Pauṣkara, Sāttvata and Parama 957n ; Śāntiparva speaks of one, two, three or four vyūhas 962 ; Śāṇḍilya was supposed in Śaṅkarācārya's times to have promulgated the Bhāgavata or Pāñcarātra Śāstra 955 ; several guesses about why the system is so called 954n ; several Pāñcarātra-saṁhitās published so far are later than the Gītā 956 ; twenty-five works on P. mentioned by Agnipurāṇa and Maheśvaratantra 956–57 ; Vyūhas, doctrine of, 953, 962 ; worship of Vāsudeva is older than Pāṇini 962.

Pañcaśikha, 1373–74 ; composed

Ṣaṣṭitantra 1356n; date of, not later than first century B. C. 1356; and Janaka, king of Mithilā, his pupil, acc. to Mahābhārata 1365–1371; described as the foremost pupil of Āsuri and known as Kāpileya in the Mahābhārata, 1365–71; described in some chapters of Śāntiparva as an advaitin grafting some doctrines of later Sāṅkhya for explaining creation etc. 1367; dialogue between P. and Janaka about rising superior to old age and death 1358; expounded to Janaka, Sāṅkhya, Yoga and Rājanīti, called threefold mokṣa 1368–1369; gotra of, was Pārāśarya and he was a bhikṣu 1368; identity of P. and Vārṣagaṇya extremely doubtful, 1374–75; literal meaning of the name 1369n; passages ascribed to P. are brought together by Hall and Garbe 1371n; P. of the Mahābhārata is not identical with the Pañcaśikha of Ṣaṣṭitantra and his views are different from the Sāṅkhya, 1370–71; differs from official Sāṅkhya 1370–71; quotations attributed to P. are mostly in prose 1373n; views described as Sāṅkhya in some chapters of Śāntiparva bring the peculiar Sāṅkhya doctrines in line with the idea of Vāsudeva or highest Self 1371.

Pañcasrotas, a holy place 1365.

Pañcasiddhāntikā of Varāhamihira 213n, 479 (was a karaṇa), 511n, 514n–5, 519n, 644 (tr. by Thibaut and Dwivedi), 653n–4, 663n, 676, 680, 702n, 703n.

Panchayats, village, starting of; dangers in the present stage 1677.

Pāṇḍavas, though five, had the same wife Draupadī 1286.

Pandit M. P., a. of 'Lights on Tantra' 1150; criticized 1150.

Panikkar, Sardar K. M. a. of 'India and China' 1040.

Pāṇini, 5, 10, 27, 36, 67, 68n, 130, 150n, 185n, 203, 467, 487n, 492n, 499, 500, 510, 516n, 525, 541–42, 561n, 592n, 667, 670–1, 684, 703n, 708, 720n, 738n, 740n, 742n, 820, 850, 926n, 962–3n, 1032, 1128 (knew Naṭasūtras of Śilālin and Kṛśāśva), 1153 (explains 'Mīmāṁsate'), 1157–58, 1167 (mentions Kāśyapa to show respect), 1168–1169, 1198n (charge that Pāṇini violates his own rules), 1203 (distinguishes between the author of a work and expositor or transmitter of it), 1307n, 1310n, 1361n, 1368n, 1378, 1388n, 1389, 1397 (does not observe his own rules), 1439n, 1488n, 1524n, 1546n, 1582n; called Śālāturīya by Bhāmaha and other medieval writers 542; date of, 1169; hailed from Northwest India 542; in P.'s times there were mendicant ascetics (bhikṣus) who studied the Bhikṣusūtra of Pārāśarya and that of Karmanda and were called 'Pārāśarino bhikṣavaḥ' 1168–69, 1368n; names of countries and places expressly mentioned by P. 1528n; papers on geographical details in, 1527n; teaches formation of words like Takṣaśila 542; was acquainted with the whole of India from the extreme northwest of India to Kaliṅga (Orissa), Aśmaka (country near Ajantā and Paiṭhan) and modern Kutch 1528n, 1614 (Sindhu as the name of a country), 1633 (word jāti occurs), 1638 (on Brāhmaṇaka), 1646, 1651 (names at least ten predecessors and shows that before him there was considerable secular literature).

Pāṇinīya śikṣā 1096n.

Parakṛti or Parakriyā, meaning of, 1223n.

Paramārtha, translated Sāṅkhyakārikā into Chinese, 1353, 1382n.

Paramarṣi, defined in Vāyu and Brāhmāṇḍa Purāṇas) 1390.

Paramasaṁhitā, 954n.

Pāraṇa (vide Udyāpana); in some cases performed by merely sipping water 121n; derivation of, 120n; last rite in a vrata is P. 120; should be done on 12th tithi in Ekādaśīvrata, but not on 13th, 120; word P. occurs in Śākuntala and Raghuvaṁśa 120.

Pārānandasūtra (a Tāntrik work): 1051n (states that it contains the cream of Veda viz. Kauladharma), 1053–56 (philosophy and brief contents of), 1073n (mentions names of teachers ending in 'Ānanda', speaks of three mārgas (paths) viz. Dakṣiṇa, Vāma, Uttara, 1054–56; speaks of jīvanmukti and quotes Upaniṣads 1055; 1084n (well known verse 'pītvā pītvā' etc. esoterically explained), 1086.

Parāśara, astronomer and astrologer 531, 587n, 593, 613, 637n (m. by Bṛ. S. on Grahayuddha), 745, 765.

Parāśara-Mādhavīya, com. on Parāśarasmṛti; 42n, 868n, 1166 (in some passages Bādarāyaṇa and in some others Vyāsa is said to be the a. of V. S.), 1182n, 1227–28, 1288n (on Kapiñjalanyāya), 1306n, 1311, 1312n, 1314, 1323, 1333 (on aveṣṭyadhikaraṇa).

Parāśara-smṛti 52, 147n, 218, 897 (m. by Bhaviṣyapurāṇa), 1266 and n, 1306n (bath, sandhyā etc. are different acts), 1314, 1322; was to prevail in Kaliyuga, but it allows a brāhmaṇa to eat food at the house of certain śūdras, permits remarriage of widows in certain circumstances, 1266, 1608.

Pārāśarya, a. of Bhikṣusūtra, acc. to Pāṇini, 1368n.

Pāraśavas, in Vāyupurāṇa stand for Parśus i. e. ancient Persians that appear to be m. by Pāṇini 850n, 851.

Pāraskara-gṛhya-sūtra 27, 126, 524, 535, 622, 740n.

Paraśurāma, exploits of, described in Mahābhārata and Purāṇas 89n, 90n; horoscope of, furnished by Nirṇayasindhu examined 628–629; loss of power of, when he met Rāma 89n; made Western sea recede 89n; resided on Mahendra mountain 89n.

Paraśurāma Jayantī 89-90; on 3rd of Vaiśākha bright half 89; temples of Paraśurāma 90; time of celebration 89–90.

Paraśurāma – Kalpasūtra 1049, 1054 (on tantra and about secrecy), 1063 (on 36 tattvas), 1074n (provides that after dīkṣā guru to give a name to disciple ending in Ānanda-nātha), 1077, 1084n, 1101; commentary of Rāmeśvara on 1077, 1084.

Paraśurāmapratāpa 106n; mentions 26 items in Jāgara 106n.

Pargiter, F E. (vide under Parīkṣit): 688, 851, 862n (translation of a passage of Kautilya criticized): a. of 'Purāṇa texts of the dynasties of the Kali age', 842n, 843, 914; attaches no importance to what Brahmāṇḍa, Matsya and Vāyu state that they mention the principal kings of three lines, 846; constructs history from earliest times to Bhārata war, which he holds to have taken place about 950 B. C.; brushes aside the duration between Parīkṣit and Nandas, 846; criticism of the methods and views of Pargiter 845–852; holds that there were two traditions, one Brahmanic and the other Kṣatriya represented in the Purāṇas, 845; holds dozens of times that brāhmaṇas had no historic sense, 845, 856; holds that extant Purāṇas are Sanskritizations of Prākrit works 845; is wrong in identifying the Bhaviṣyat-purāṇa m. by Āpastamba with extant Bhaviṣya-purāṇa 851; Kirfel disagrees with Pargiter about two separate traditions (brāhmaṇa and kṣatriya) and about Purāṇas being Sanskritizations of Prākrit works 849; P. and Kirfel take no proper notice of what Megasthenes says about a list of 153 kings covering a period of 6451 years, 849; theory of P, about brāhmaṇas having deliberately suppressed all information about him who compiled and arranged the Veda, criticized 858–861; thinks that Hinduism secured its revival and the downfall of Buddhism largely through the Paurāṇika literature 914n; view of P. blaming brāhmaṇas for absence of reference in P. to Guptas and their successors, criticized 856-57.

Paribhāṣāprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya of Mitramiśra) 835n, 921n, 923n, 954n. 955, 1262.

Pārijāta, an early medieval work 962.

Pāriplava (narration of, in Rājasūya) derivation of the word in Śāṅ. Śrauta-sūtra 816n; Hotṛ priest recited Itihāsa and Purāṇa separately on two days 816, 866–67.

Pariṣad : how to constitute a p.

for deciding difficult matters of dharma 1158.

Parisaṅkhyā, defined and illustrated 1229; it is liable to three faults, acc. to Śabara 1230; the word does not occur in Mahābhāṣya, though employed by Jaimini 1156–57, 1230.

Parsis; vide 'Parsis in India' by M. M. Marzban 264.

Pārthasārathimiśra, a. of four works on P. M. Śāstra, Nyāyaratnākara, Tantraratna, Śāstradīpikā, Nyāya-ratna-mālā, 1188–89, 1199, 1317n; flourished between 900–1100 A. D., 1199.

Parvan Days: Homas for worship of the sun and for Śāntis to be performed on, 757; what are P. 221.

Paryudāsa (proviso or exception), explained and exemplified from Vedic and Dharmaśāstra works (as on pp. 1248–1250 and Yāj. I. 129-166).

Pāśā, 12th tithi is so called 341.

Pāśupata Śāstras, doctrines of, written in books of palm leaves in Bāṇa's days, 1047; various kinds of, m. in Padma, Kūrma and Devībhāgavata and condemned, 974n, 977–8.

Pāśupata-sūtra of Nakulīśa (i. e. Lakulīśa), 978n.

Pātālas (nether regions), generally understood as seven, but the names somewhat differ in Purāṇas 1528.

Pāṭaliputra, also called Puṣpapura, founded by Udāyi, son of Śiśunāga 827.

Patañjali: (vide under Mahābhāṣya): 67, 68n, 130, 467 (quotes verse that occurs in Mahābhārata), 541-2, 720n; a. of Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini 963; deemed by medieval writers to be an avatāra of Śeṣa and to have composed works on Grammar, medicine and Yoga 1396; points of difference between P. and modern psychologists like Freud 1414–15; question of identity of the author of Yogasūtra and of Mahābhāṣya discussed by several authors 1397–99.

Paths (Mārgas); (vide under 'bhakti', jñāna, Karma); bhakti and Jñāna described and distinguished 964–65, 1369, 1648.

Paths, called Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa, 1548 and n; 1551, 1557 (vide Bṛ. Up. VI. 2 and under Devayāna).

Patil, Dr. D. R.; paper of, on 'Gupta Inscriptions and Purāṇic tradition' 844, 883; a. of 'Cultural History from Vāyupurāṇa' 907.

Pātimokkha: containing 227 articles was to be read twice a month in an assembly of at least four Buddhist monks and confession of breaches had to be made to them 1026.

Pātra brāhmaṇa, defined 937–38.

Paulus Alexandrinus 515n.

Pauliśasiddhānta (see under Lāṭadeva); not later than 400 A. D. according to Thibaut 514n; one of the five ancient astronomical siddhāntas 514n; quoted by Utpala 477; said to be accurate by Varāha 514n; P. restricted itself mostly to astronomical matters 517n, 593; Thibaut admits that it cannot be proved that P. is related to the work of Greek astrologer Paulus 517; Weber held that it was borrowed from Paulus Alexandrinus (4th A. D.)

Paulkasa, equated with Cāṇḍāla in Br. Up. 1633.

Paurṇamāsī, 348; derivation of 667; two kinds of, Anumati and Rākā, both m. in Tai. S. and Śat. Br. 62-3; word P. occurs frequently in Atharvaveda 65.

Pauṣṭika rites, what are 349; distinguished from Śāntika rites 349.

Pāvamāna hymn 759.

Pavitrāṇi (holy texts), by repeating which a man expiates sins, cited by Dharmasūtras of Gautama, Baudhāyana, Vasiṣṭha and Viṣṇu 1416n.

Pavitrāropaṇa (offering the sacred Upavīta to Gods) 111, 339-40.

Payne E. A., a. of 'the Śaktas', 1038-9, 1048n, 1092.

People: millions on millions of common p. are influenced to keep to the path of virtue and right by the fear of God, of public opinion, fear of punishment by the State and by the prickings of their conscience 1474; Vanaparva holds that what the majority of people practise is the dharma in the midst of conflicting śrutis, smṛtis and learned men 1469; three classes of people viz. those who believe and worship a personal god with ritual and sacrifices, those who pray, seek God and come to realize that God is both immanent and transcendant, those few people, the great Masters and sages who lose the sense of ego and are ripe for entering into union with the One 1508-9; p. in several lands had conceit that they were far superior to others and had a mission to propagate like the British imperialists 1619.

Perry W. J., a. of 'Children of the Sun', holds that archaic civilization of India and China did not first develop there but in Egypt, 482n.

Persecution in India (vide under Buddhism, Galileo, Inquisition, Tolerance, Toleration Act, heretics); sporadic cases of religious P. exemplified 1011n; followers of Judaism, Christianity and Islam did not hesitate for centuries to inculcate their doctrines by terrible persecutions and bloody wars and this spirit shocks people brought up in Hinduism or Buddhism 1474; harsh laws were in force in England a little over a hundred years ago against Roman Catholics and non conformists 1476n.

Persians, practice of marrying mother among ancient, 554.

Person, characteristics of, born when the Moon is in the rāśis from Aries onwards 569.

Persons, eight mythological long-lived persons, images of, to be worshipped on Yamadvitīyā 208.
Pessimism : no real pessimism in principal Dharmaśāstra works 1630.
Philologists : some p. deriving word 'sinīvālī' by the combinatin of 'sin' (moon), a Babylonian word, and Dravidian 'vel' (white light), criticized 64.
Philosophy, most men want to rely on something deemed higher than themselves such as Revelation and God, 1472; one of the oldest problems of P. is, Faith and Reason and there has been a constant struggle between these two, 1472; Time is first among the great problems of P. 463; central point of much of Indian P. is contained in Chān. Up. VI. 1, 1651–52.
Philostratus (1st quarter of 3rd century A. D.), a. of 'Life of Apolonius of Tyana,' 600, 681.
Pillai, Swamikannu, a. of 'Indian Ephemeris' 505n, 628 (discusses Rāma's horoscope), 646n, 648 (on eras), 708.
Piṇḍaśodhana: meaning is Bhūtaśuddhi in Tantra works 1095n.
Piṅgala, a. of Vedāṅga on Metres; mentions Śūnya for zero and is m. by Śabara 700–701; probably his work is the same as Chandovicīti m. by Āp. Dh. S. 701.
Pitāmaha 69n, 78n, 1323 (on balance ordeal).
Pitāmaha-siddhānta (on astronomy) 654, 663; q. by Utpala 477, 488; one of the five siddhāntas and said to be far from accurate, 514n; 592 (regarded Tuesday as inauspicious).
Pitṛs, path to the world of, described in Yāj., Viṣṇu, Vāyu, Matsya and other Purāṇas 826.
Pitṛyāṇa path (vide under Devayāna and Bṛ. Up. VI. 2. 2), 1548n.
Plan, Third five year, and its objectives 1683-84; total investment programme of, comes to 10400 crores of rupees, nearly half of which is to be raised by additional taxation, external assistance and deficit financing 1689–90.
Planets (vide 'Astrology', 'Astronomy', Babylonian, grahayuddha, Moon, Navagrahaśānti, Śānti, Saturn, Sun): ancient Vedic literature says hardly anything about astrological significance of P. 569; are concerned with or govern specially certain matters 590; are either friends or enemies of each other, but not indifferent, acc. to Yavanas 586; arrangement or order of P. in Yāj. and Purāṇas 678–79; arrangement of P. different in different countries and times 571n; as rulers of eight directions 574; bala (strength) of P. four kinds of 587; classification of P. as beneficent or malefic 635–36; classification of P. as masculine, feminine and neuter 575, 635-36; cult of P. not current in Vedic times 294; daśās and antardaśās of, 590-591; differentiated as sāttvika, rājasa and tāmasa 574; different kinds of gifts for unfavourable P., 755; doctrine of dṛṣṭi of, 589, 637; evil influences of, removed by śāntis 608; identified with Babylonian gods 522: importance of Venus and Jupiter in settling marriage 610, 612; Jupiter, known to Ṛgveda 294, 569; Kautilya on astrological significance of, 569-570; Mahābhārata knew influence of, on nakṣatras, but not on rāśis 569; methods of nullifying evil influence of 608; natural powerfulness of, 577; nine P, names of, with synonyms 570; nine conditions of P. 588; no convincing explanation as to why certain rāśis are svagṛha or uccā of P. 636; purpose of the classification of P. as to colour or as lords of directions 574; Sanskrit synonyms of, contain some Greek words 571n, 572; stories of ancient kings and heroes that suffered from unfavourable aspects of P. 755; supposed gotras and country of origin of, 753; tables showing rāśis as svagṛha (house) and ucca (exaltation) of, showing parts of human body, jewels and metals governed by several P., showing some characteristics of P. such as colour, whether beneficent or malefic etc. 573-576; three kinds of conjunctions of, 583n; three P. added in modern times, 571; Venus probably referred to as Vena in Ṛg 569; view that Hindu arrangement of P. is of Greek origin criticized, 571n; wearing certain precious stones and metals deemed to reduce evil influence of, 608; word P. derived from a Greek word 570

Plans, five year 1679n.

Plato, beliefs of, that the earth was a cube, in punarjanma, that arts and sciences declined from perfection 512, 688n, 1530; held in his Timaeus that dreams are prophetic 781; in his exubernat imagination constructed the physical world on the pattern of geometrical figures familiar to him 1502n; on Being and Becoming 1505; philosophy and cosmology of, were looked upon as acme of wisdom up to 19th century, but modern scientists (says sarton) regard Plato's theories as monuments of unwisdom 1502n.

Pliny 566.

Politics (Rājanīti), four upāyas in, 617; six aṅgas of, 117.

Pollard, Robert S. W.; a. of 'Conscience and Liberty' 1476n.

Pollution by touch or by shadow, idea of, must be given up 1709.

Poona Orientalist, a journal, 520n, 647n, 686, 842n, 1145.

Pongal (Tamil word), festival corresponding to Makara-saṅkrānti of Northern and Western India 222, Population, huge in India, most of which is on the margin of subsistence level, 1687; Government of India and the planners have no well thought out plan for control of p. and very little is being done to control systematically the terrific growth of p. 1687.

Portent: (vide under Utpāta); of images of gods, described as dancing, laughing, trembling and weeping in the Mahābhārata, Purāṇas, Bṛ. S., 769–770; on birth of two or more children at the same delivery to a woman or monstrosities or strange births to cows, mares etc. 773–774.

Poussin, Prof. Valleè, 1039.

Prabhākara: (vide under Kumārila): called 'Our Guru' by Śālikanātha, 1189–90; a. of com. called Bṛhatī on P. M. Sūtra 1189; flourished between 675–725 A. D., 1198; inscriptions and other evidence establish that P. held an eminent position in Karṇāṭaka and Maratha countries in 11th century A. D. 1192; held the view that no word was significant in isolation but became significant when joined with a word or words in a sentence 1296; Jaiminīya-nyāya-mālā-vistāra cites 15 points of difference between P. and Kumārila 1189; later than Kumārila, though no substantial evidence (except tradition) for holding that P. was a pupil of Kumārila 1192; quotes Kirātārjunīya 1195.

Prābhākara School, 1179n; works of 1189.

Prabodhacandrodaya, a drama, mentions several writers and works on PMS including Mahodadhi and Māhāvratī, 1189–90.

Pracetas 77n.

Practices (vide under 'changes'); even Vedic p. have been discarded from time to time by the weight of the opinion of the masses 1267–9, 1470; when popular p. and opinions should be followed 1470.

Pradhan, Prof. S. N., a. of 'Chronology of Ancient India', regards Paurāṇik accounts as practically worthless 847.

Pradhāna actions, as contrasted with guṇa-bhūta, explained, 1237.

Pradoṣa, period of three or six ghaṭikās after sunset 102, 188n, 230.

Prahlāda, attained highest bliss through the grace of God 961: great devotee of Viṣṇu and grandfather of Bali, 202.

Prajāpati and his incest 235, 498n, 507, 1280; desiring to propagate, practised tapas and created the three worlds 1498; identified with Saṁvatsara 65; jumped into the sky as a deer pursued by Rudra 498n; myth in Ait. Br. as to how P. came to be called Ka 1497–98;

Myth about creation of Agni by P. and appeasing Agni with Śamī plant in Tai. Br. 725; Nakṣatras as daughters of P. married to king Soma 507; rarely mentioned in the Ṛg. becomes the most prominent god in the Brāhmaṇa texts 1407; some nakṣatras described as parts of the body of P. 561.

Prajāpativratas, 24, 93–96, 1234; observances by a sacrificer while the sacrifice lasts such as 'he should not see the rising or setting sun' are declared to be puruṣārtha 1234.

Prajñopāyaviniścayasiddhi of Ānaṅgavajra (about 705 A. D.) 1050, 1064; says that a yogin who desires union with mother, sister, daughter would obtain siddhi quickly, 1065n–67 meaning of Prajñā and Upāya, 1071, 1123.

Prakaraṇa-pañcikā of Śālikanātha; 1202n, 1205 (on word and sense), 1214n (on svarga), 1216n (on mokṣa); it is a work of the Prabhākara school 1189; admits that adhyayana-vidhi put forward by Prabhākara is only inferred from Manu 1190n; quotes several verses from Ślokavārtika 1191; states that there is no proof that a yāga (sacrifice) is the means of pleasing the deity 1209.

Pralaya (dissolution of the world); (vide 'Cosmogony' and 'Cosmology'); of four kinds, according to Purāṇas, 693-94, 1503; prākṛtika pr. based on Sāṅkhya, 694–695; recurrent absorptions of all beings and elements at the advent of Brahmā's night and reappearing at day 695, 1503; terrible and harrowing descriptions of naimittika pralaya from Kūrmapurāṇa and Vanaparva, 694; works like Harivaṁśa and Purāṇas say that at the end of Kalpa the sage Mārkaṇḍeya alone remains, lies in the side of Viṣṇu and comes out of Viṣṇu's mouth 695.

Pramāṇas (means of knowledge) (vide cognition): are six acc. to Kumārila, while Prabhākara rejects the 6th i. e. abhāva 1185, 1212.

Pramāṇavārtika, bhāṣya on, by Prajñākaragupta (700 A. D.) 472.

Prāṇa: Atharvaveda on Prāṇa as Prajāpati 1495; controversy about meaning (in ancient times) of prāṇa and apāna 1434; five āhutis in agnihotra to prāṇa, apāna, vyāna, samāna and udāna in Upaniṣads, 1433; P. in Upaniṣads becomes the vital force of all beings, the representative of brahman 1433; P. means thoracic breath and apāna means abdominal breath 1434; some difference in the operation of the five prāṇas made at least a thousand years before Christ 1433.

Prāṇatoṣiṇī, a Tāntrik compilation, 1075n (on qualifications of a female guru and requiring that disciples were to worship guru and his predecessors).

Praṇava, means om 1416.
Praṇavanyāsa, illustrated, 1120.
Prāṇāyāma (vide under Kumbhaka, mātrā, pūraka, recaka); 1432–44; called sagarbha or sabīja and agarbha or abīja 1442–43; condemned by Hemacandra 1441; definition of P. in Yogasūtra and bhāṣya shows that main element in P. is Kumbhaka 1437; derivation of the word 'prāṇa' 1432; deśa, kāla and saṅkhyā in relation to P. explained 1437–38; eight kinds of P. named in Haṭhayogpradīpikā 1443; five prāṇas named in Tai. S. 1433; for ekāgratā P. is the means 1437; germ of the theory of the importance of P. in Bṛ. Up. 433; great eulogy of P. in Manu (as highest tapas) and Smṛtis 1440–41, 1443; japa of om, Gāyatrī and Vyāhṛtis in P. prescribed by Smṛtis and medieval works, though Y. S. and bhāṣya silent on this 1439; japa for P. in Sandhyāvandana set out 1442n; Kumbhaka, why so called 1439n; Kumbhaka performed after pūraka, if not learnt under an expert, may cause harm to heart etc., 1441; literally P. means 'restraint or pause of prāṇa' 1432; practice of P. leads to dwindling of Kleśas, makes Yogin's mind fit for dhāraṇā and free from sins, acc. to Manu and others 1220n, 1440–41; Prāṇa and Asu in Ṛgveda mean 'breath' 1432; Purāṇas and others added five more prāṇas 1436; recaka, pūraka, kumbhaka (terms) used by Devala Dharmasūtra, but not by Y. S. and its bhāṣya which employ 'śvāsa', 'praśvāsa' and 'gativicchedaḥ' 1438–39; Recaka and others illustrated in Kuvalayānanda's handbook on P. 1442n; simplest mode of practising P. described 1440; sūtras on Dharma shows that P. had been regarded as a sort of penance for removing taint attached to sins or misadventures 1436; synonyms of, 1432; three kinds of viz. mild, moderate and keen when pause is kept for 36, 72 and 108 mātrās respectively 1437; three views on duration of pūraka, kumbhaka, recaka 1438; value of P. for physical health and for spiritual purposes 1444; word P. not found in principal Up. but occurs frequently in Dharmasūtras 1436.
Praṇītā water, explained 802.
Prapañcahṛdaya, 1159n, 1197 (attributes to Bodhāyana a com. called Kṛtakoṭī on both Mīmāṁsās).
Prapañcasāra tantra, 34n, 1070, 1072, 1099–1102, 1105–6, 1112 (enumerates eight siddhis), 1117, 1120, 1133, 1139; ascribed to Śaṅkarācārya and mentions all avatāras except Buddha, 995–96, 1105; doubts about its being Śaṅkarācārya's work 1105; sets out a mantra for six cruel rites 1105; com. on, ascribed to Padmapāda 1105.

Prārabdha-Dhvānta-Saṁhṛti, of Acyutarāya Modaka (composed in 1819 A. D.), on Prārabdhakarma (past actions that produce the present body); described 1600–1604; main object of the work is to combat the idea that all human acts from conception to death are governed by past deeds alone, 1601.

Prasaṅga, occurs when something done in one place is helpful in another place also, just like a lamp 1333; twelfth chap. of P. M. S. deals with prasaṅga, vikalpa and the like 1333; Prāyaścittaviveka relies on this doctrine 1333–34

Praśāsana, means 'Government or domination' 1583n.

Praśastapāda, bhāṣyakāra of Vaiśeṣikasūtra, 468n, 469, 472, 476 (units of time from kṣaṇa to pralaya).

Praśna-upaniṣad, 126, 731, 732n, 918, 948, 1361–2, 1387, 1417 (on om) 1430, 1433–35; 1444–45, 1478, 1502, 1514, 1532 (on Devayāna and Pitṛyāṇa paths), 1559, 1585n, 1607, 1625.

Prastara, first handful of Darbha grass cut for religious purposes 1241n.

Prasthāna, technical meaning is starting on an auspicious conjunction for journey or invasion but returning to one's place after going a short distance and actually proceeding after a few days thereafter 620–21.

Pratikūla, meaning of 748n.

Pratinidhi (substitute or representative); first rule that, if a substance prescribed for preparing an offering perishes or is lost in an obligatory rite or a kāmya rite after it is begun, another substance (such as nīvāras for rice grain may be substituted 1319; no p. allowed for a mantra, deity, vedic fire, for kriyās like Prayājas or for the Yajamāna (except in Sattras) 53, 1320–21; substitute for wife of sacrificer (if she be dead) was image of her made of gold or or kuśas 53; what is expressly forbidden for use in Vedic sacrifices such as māṣās cannot be substitutes for mudga 1320, 1347 (māṣamudganyāya); when a vedic text expressly prescribes a substitute for a substance (as Pūtikas for Soma plant) only that substance can be substituted and not another more similar, 1319; when a substitute has to be employed, the subsidiary acts of sprinkling with water, pounding etc. are to be performed on the substitute and the appropriate change in wording by adaptation should be made, 1319–20.

Pratipadvrata 82–84; in intercalary month of Caitra beginning of year is on first tithi of that month 83; pratipad of Caitra observed in Deccan with some pomp and religious rites as the beginning of the year 82; pratipad of Caitra is in popular belief, one of the 3½ auspicious days of the year, 84; rites of the beginning of year in Caitra described in Brahmapurāṇa and other works 82–83; rule is that the tithi to be observed as beginning is the one mixed with amāvāsyā, when it is viddhā 83; views differ as to the pratipad on which religious rites are to be performed when there is an intercalary month 83–84; why called pratipad 83.

Pratipatti or Pratipattikarma (vide Arthakarma): examples are casting into water all utensils and things smeared with soma at the time of the final purification bath, cremating a sacrificer when dead with his yajñapātras, which is P. of the implements 1231–32; means final disposal of some materials employed in a sacrifice 1231; occurs in several sūtras of Jaimini 1231; works on Dharmaśāstras rely on pratipatti, as in case of piṇḍas to be given to a brāhmāṇa or to be eaten by a cow or goat 1231.

Pratiṣedha (or niṣedha, prohibition); (vide under 'na'; fifth (and last) class of Vedic texts 1246; a sentence in which 'na' is employed is either a pratiṣedha or paryudāsa or an arthavāda and these three have to be clearly distinguished 1249; a true prohibition would occur when something is first prescribed and then prohibited, the stock example being that of ṣoḍaśin cup, 1249; distinguished from Paryudāsa, 1247–48; Pāṇini devotes several sūtras to 'na' and expressly states that pratiṣedha is one of the meanings 1246; particle 'na' sometimes changed to 'a' or to 'an' indicates pratiṣedha and other senses also 1246; result or reward of following pratiṣedha is cessation of harm (anartha-nivṛtti) 1247; Vidhi and P. are different in their import in five points 1247; where two texts are quite irreconcilable there is option 1249.

Pratiṣṭhā (establishment of an image) 1024; Paurāṇika procedure to be followed in 1024.

Pratyāhāra, 5th aṅga of Yoga 1444–5; derivation of the word 1444n; in Yogasūtra and in Āśvamedhikaparva 1401; means withdrawal of senses from sense objects on account of restraint of mind 1444; several definitions of 1444–5.

Pravāhaṇa Jaivali, a rājanya, put five questions to Śvetaketu and then answered them 1548–49.

Pravaramañjarī 1174.

Pravarasena, Vākāṭaka emperor, performed four Aśvamedhas, 1028.

Pravargya, Śānti in, from Vāj S. and Tai. A. 724, 727.

Prayājas; are five oblations of clarified butter ancillary to Darśa-pūrṇamāsa and are kratvartha while Darśapūrṇamāsa is puruṣārtha 1233n.

Prāyaścittas (vide under expiations); different views whether results of wrong acts intentionally done could be removed by, 1588–89 ; for killing a man who is only a brāhmaṇa by caste 897 ; were called vratas by Manu and others 27.

Prāyaścitta-mayūkha 52.

Prāyaścittaprakaraṇa of Bhavadeva 1242, 1296.

Prāyaścittatattva 158, 1320 (on māṣa-mudga-nyāya), 1592n.

Prāyaścitta-viveka, 1233–34, 1542n.

Prāyaścitti (averting evil effects of a mishap to sacrificial milk or materials 727.

Prayogapārijāta 633.

Prayojaka (motivating force) and prayojya : are topics of 4th chap. of P. M. S along with kratvartha and puruṣārtha 1311 ; Kratu is the prayojaka of Prayājas that are declared as kratvartha 1311 ; p. is that for the sake of which a man is led to perform something by a Vedic exhortatory text 1311.

Precession of Equinoxes, suspected by Hemādri and Aparārka, but they did not know its cause nor the rate of precession 223 ; practically discovered by Kidinnu, 514n ; present rate of, held to be 50.2 vikalās every year 712.

Predictions, were based also on dreams, flight and cries of birds, signs on livers of the sheep killed in sacrifices to gods in Babylon and Rome, 521.

Pringle-Pattison, a. of 'Idea of God' 1506n ; a. of 'Idea of immortality' 1609.

Priolkar Prof. A. K., a. of 'The printing Press in India' 1020n.

Prisoners (see under King) 531.

Proceedings of All India O. Conference 1186n.

Proceedings of American Philosophical Society 490n, 506, 514n, 522n.

Prognostications (see 'birds,' 'cāṣa', throbbing, horses); were drawn in Vedic times and up to Pāṇini mainly from nakṣatras, days and bodily marks 525 ; drawn even in Ṛgveda from cries of certain birds 526 ; drawn from tusks and movements of elephants 801.

Prohibition of intoxicating drinks in only a few states of India, criticized 1675–76.

Pṛthvīcandrodaya 31n, 42n, 47n, 121n, 1289.

Ptolemy (vide under horoscope); author of Syntaxis (or Almagest) and of Tetrabiblos, 471, 551, 568, 573n ; difference between P. and Bṛhajjātaka on classification, colours and other matters about Rāśis 568 ; divided the day into sixty parts in the Almagest and also in hours in his manual tables 682 ; has no word which corresponds exactly with Kulīra 563 ; his Almagest was astronomical Bible in Europe for about 1400 years 482, 512 ; his arguments in favour of Astrology 553–4 ; his Tetrabiblos remained supreme for 1400 years and has even now great authority for believers in Astrology 551; held geocentric theory and so had to adopt theory of eccentric orbits and epicycles and yet could predict eclipses correctly, 633–34; is concerned in Tetrabiblos with rāśis (signs of the Zodiac) and rarely, if at all, with nakṣatras 561; in his 'Geography of India' (about 150 A. D.) refers to Ptolemaios, king of Baithan (Paithan) as ruler in his day 842-43; much of Greek literature on astronomy and astrology disappeared owing to works of P. 481, 514; speaks of male and female signs and of sthira and dvidehu as Bṛhajjataka does 568; several discrepancies in essential matters between Ptolemy's work and Hindu astronomical works 520, 530; two points in which Varāhamihira differs from P. viz. he does not mention the countries governed by rāśis but by nakṣatras and Varāha confines himself to parts of Bhāratavarṣa, while P. deals with all countries then known, 530; wrote about 150 A. D. and based his Almagest on the observations of Hipparchus 514.

Pūjā: derivation of the word 35–37; distinction between homa and p. not much 37; upacāras in, had vedic origin 35–36; word P. not borrowed from Dravidians 37.

Pūjāprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya) 37, 157, 170n, 1095n, 1122 (dwells upon several nyāsas); 1124n, 1128n (prescribes that āvāhana in Viṣṇu worship should be made with 'Sahasraśīrṣā,' (Ṛg. X. 90. 1, and 14 mudrās should be shown); 1120–31 (defines in all 32 mudrās).

Pulaha, quoted as a smṛti writer 517n.

Pulastya, quoted as a smṛti writer many times by Aparārka and Smṛticandrikā 517n; should be followed, acc. to Mit. as to what should be offered in śrāddha, and not Yāj. 1269.

Pulindas, associated with Āndhras in Aśoka's 13th Rock Edict, 850n.

Puliśa: Alberuni says that P. held that the day of Viṣṇu is equal to whole life of Brahmā 691; Thibaut wrong in holding that the name Puliśa has decidedly a non-Indian appearance 517.

Pulkasa, a degraded caste 969n.

Puṁsavana, auspicious times for, prescribed in Gṛhyasūtras 534–35.

Punarvasu, nakṣatra, 499, 535 (literally means 'fresh wealth' or 'new growth').

Purākalpa, meaning of 1223.

Purāṇas (vide under Alberuni, Bhāgavata, bhakti, brāhmaṇas, Buddha and Buddhism, images, itihāsa-purāṇa, mahāpurāṇa, Matsyapurāṇa, Pargiter, Pāriplava, pūrta, Saurapurāṇa, Śūdra, Upapurāṇa, Vāyupurāṇa, Viṣṇu, Viṣṇupurāṇa, Vyāsa): 815-1002; are far more reliable than most of the Upapurāṇas 836-37; are used for divining the future 811; caution required before recognizing P. as reliable representatives for ascertaining the general state of Indian society and beliefs 538; classification of P. as encyclopaedic, historical, sectarian etc. 842; connect different gods with the conferring of health, wealth, knowledge, mukti 119; contain at least 25 thousand verses on Vratas 57; contain verses, gāthās and anuvaṃśaślokas sung by Paurāṇikas 854; contents of all P. noted by Agni, Matsya, Nāradīya and Skanda 834; contents and characteristic features of P. mentioned by Śaṅkarācārya 824-25; contents of P. in the days of Āp. Dh. S. 818; dates of P. and Upapurāṇas are at most tentative until critical editions are prepared 872; deemed to be composed by Vyāsa, son of Parāśara and Satyavatī at end of Dvāpara age 849; derivation of the word Purāṇa in Nirukta, Vāyu, Padma and Brahmāṇḍa and change in meaning 855-56; devote much space to legends about Paraśurāma 90n; Devībhāgavata and Bhāgavata P. say that Mahābhārata and P. were composed by Vyāsa for women and Śūdras 921-22; Dharmasūtra of Āp. twice quotes two verses from a Purāṇa and names a Bhaviṣyatpurāṇa 817; differences as to names of 18 P. and great differences as to their extent and contents 830; divided into three groups, sāttvika, rājasa and tāmasa and their main objects 815, 839; do contain ancient legends and traditions, but very much tampered with 838; early Sanskrit writers like Śabara, Bāṇa, Kumārila, Śaṅkarācārya and others show that in their times P. existed, the contents of which were just like those of the extant P. 821-26; emphasize that for the proper understanding of the Veda knowledge of Itihāsa and P. essential 914; even early Purāṇas like Matsya were influenced by black magic rites 1114; examples of identical chapters and verses in several purāṇas 803, 841, 929, 1522n, 1523n 2479; existence of some P. containing accounts of creation, dissolution and Smṛti material before 500 B. C. indicated by Āp. Dh. S. 818; explain at great length creation and dissolution of the elements about which Upaniṣads drop brief hints 914; extant P. contain far more topics than the five topics of creation etc. and some P. barely touch the five and exhaustively deal with entirely different topics 841; extent of all P. together said to be originally four lakhs of Ślokas acc. to Matsya and Padma 829n; extent of P. was acc. to Bhaviṣya 12000 verses but later Skanda was inflated to one lakh verses and Bhaviṣya to 50,000 verses, 833; extol vratas, pilgrimages and bhakti as superior to Vedic sacrifices 43-45, 916; extravagant praise of themselves by P. 915-916, 929; extravagant praise in P. of the remembrance of Viṣṇu's or Hari's name 971; first Purāṇa is said to be Brāhma in Viṣṇu and Brahma purāṇas, while Devī-bhāgavata says it is Matsya 829n; five characteristics of, acc. to several purāṇas, are sarga (creation), pratisarga (creation after dissolution), Vaṁśa (dynasties of Gods, patriarchs and kings), manvantaras (vast cycles of time), Vaṁśānucarita (deeds and history of descendants of dynasties) 839; from about the 6th or 7th century A. D. the Purāṇas began to incorporate the special ceremonial of Śāktas and a few Purāṇas like Devīpurāṇa, Kālikā, Mārkaṇḍeya (Devi-māhātmya) provide for the employment of Makāras in Devī worship 1095; guru's position in P. 1033n; gradually P. procedure either came to supersede Vedic procedure or got mixed up with the latter in some matters such as Devapūjā, consecration of temples and images etc. 922-924; Hazra's view that the text of the extant P. which are the results of innumerable changes, modifications and interpolations made at different times and by different sects is scarcely reliable and can be used only with great caution is quite correct, 872, Gautama Dh. S. refers to study of P. by learned brāhmaṇas 818; Hindu rites in medieval and modern times were deemed to give rewards promiesd in Veda, Smṛti and Purāṇas 913; history of Adhisīmakṛṣṇa, his contemporaries and their descendants described in a prophetic vein in P. 850; importance of Introductory remarks of Dānasāgara on P, 867-871; influence of P. on Dharmaśāstra digests on succession and inheritance etc. 840; influence of P. on Dharmaśāstra 913-1002; institute comparison between yajñas and pilgrimages 933; introduced striking changes in ideals, religious rites and practices 928-929; Itihāsa-Purāṇa lumped together in Upaniṣads as the 5th Veda 840; Itihāsa distinguished from Purāṇa 840; Kirfel wrong in holding that the five topics (sarga etc.) alone were the constituent parts of very ancient Purāṇas 841; Kirfel and Pargiter have not clearly noticed the fact that P. divide future kings into two groups, one of Aila, Aikṣvāka and Māgadha lines up to the last scions of these and the other of later Kings in the Pradyota, Śuṅga, Āndhra and others 850; Kumārilabhaṭṭa on the contents of P. 823-24; lay emphasis on bhakti, on ahiṁsā, on pūrtadharma 947-50; list of 18 Purāṇas completed long before 1000 A. D. 831; list of 18 principal Purāṇas together with the number of ślokas in each acc. to different works 831-832; M. as a compound word (itihāsapurānam) or as two words (itihāsaḥ purānam) in Tai. Ā, Chan. Up. and Bṛ. Up. 815; list of works, papers and translations of p 883; m. by the extapt Mahābhārata in numerous places 821; m. by Kauṭilya and Manusmṛti 819-20; m. by Kauṭilya and Yāj. Smṛti as one of the fourteen branches of knowledge and for japa 820; Mahābhārata quotes hundreds of verses called Ānuvaṁśa and gāthās, many of which deal with Paurāṇika matters and have a Paurāṇika ring 853-54; Mahāpurāṇa (word) applied to the 18 P. in Viṣṇu and Bhāgavata 830n; mantra 'om namo Nārāyaṇāya' confers all objects, frees from sins and leads to mokṣa, acc. to Narasiṁha and Vāmana 922, 971; Matsyapurāna sets out other characteristics of P. 839; Mit. prescribes a smārta mantra in śrāddha which occurs in Garuda and Skanda P. and some digests prescribe Vedic and Paurāṇika mantras even for brāhmaṇas in religious rites 920; modern works and papers dealing with several questions relating to Purāṇas set out 843-845; Nāradīya Purāṇa describes the relation between Veda, Smṛti and Purāṇas and provides that he who calls P. as arthavādas goes to hell 927; myths and legends of Purāṇas on creation of universe, about eclipses etc. must in modern times held as mere myths 1709-10; no Mahāpurāṇa composed after the 9th century A. D. but additional matter was unscrupulously added in several Purāṇas, the worst example being that of Bhaviṣya (part III) which contains stories of Adam and Eve, Taimur, Akbar, Caitanya, Nadirshah 855; not restricted to religious matters or to five characteristics but some of them deal exhaustively with rājanīti, 1000-1001; number of P. is traditionally eighteen called Mahāpurāṇas and enumerated in many Purāṇas, though some Purāṇas say originally there was only one, 829-830; on doctrine of Karma 1576-77; on rebirth for sins 1590; one important topic is 'avatāras' 922ff; only pursue an attitude to Veda and sacrifices that is found in such Upaniṣads as Muṇḍaka and Kaṭha 817; order in which P. are enumerated is not uniform, most putting Brahma as first, while Vāyu and Devībhāgavata put Matsya as first and Skanda puts Brahmāṇḍa as first 833;

Padmapurāṇa says that some vratas are superior to a hundred Vedic sacrifices 934; placed before all people (including śūdras) easy ways whereby they could secure spiritual life and bliss in the Hereafter 930; played a substantial role in bringing about the decline and disappearance of Buddhism from India in various ways 913–914; points of distinction between Upapurāṇas and the 18 Mahāpurāṇas 836–37; printed P. and mss. thereof, give four different periods of time viz. 1015, 1050, 1115 and 1500 from the birth of Parīkṣit to the crowning of Nanda, which Pargiter discards 845–46; proclaim often that saṁsāra is full of misery and is impermanent 1555; put emphasis on profuse expense in śrāddhas and inveigh against stinginess 931; quote anuvaṁśa ślokas or gāthās about such ancient kings as Kārtavīrya, Sumitra and Kṣemaka, last scions of Aila and Aikṣvāka dynasties, but none about later dynasties of Śuṅgas or Āndhras 851; reading of or listening to recitation of P. believed to remove sins 915–16; reasons why many conclusions drawn from the current printed editions and mss. of Purāṇas must be held to be merely tentative 837–38; reasons why extant Purāṇas do not narrate traditions about Gupta dynasty and those that succeeded it 856; references to pages of the four vol. of H. of Dh. on dāna, śrāddha, tīrtha and vrata 998–999; said to be the heart of dharma, while Veda and Smṛti are eyes 924; sectarian bigotry of some Purāṇas exemplified 976–977; seven P. contain historical material viz. ancient dynasties up to Bhārata war and from Bhārata war to the downfall of Āndhras and the rise of Guptas, such as Vāyu, Viṣṇu, Brahmāṇḍa, Bhāgavata. 842; several among the extant P. were composed or completed in the period from the 5th to the 9th century A. D., 854–55; several P. contain a much smaller number of ślokas than are assigned to them by authorities as in the case of Viṣṇupurāṇa and Kūrma 832–33; several P. such as Matsya, Vāyu, Viṣṇu and Bhaviṣya contain much Dharmaśāstra material 815; several P. describe the eight aṅgas of Yoga 1455; several P. like Agni, Matsya and Viṣṇudharmottara are encyclopoedias and illustrate India's life, character, achievements and shortcomings 925; several P. such as Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa give a different version of the transmission of P. 861–62; some like Bhāgavata, Kūrma, Mārkaṇḍeya, Viṣṇu espouse the Gītā doctrine of niṣkāma-karmayoga 967; some Purāṇas like Garuḍa describe nyāsas 1120; some P. like Devībhāgavata, Kālikā, Viṣṇudharmottara describe at length mudrās, 1127–28; some P. deal at length with śāntis 734–35; some P. deal with units of time 476; some P. emphasize that God is one, that no difference should be made between Śiva and Viṣṇu 1189-90; some P. like Viṣṇu and Bhāgavata are full of eulogies of the theory and practice of Bhakti and illustrative stories 971-73; some P. make Rudra declare the supremacy of Viṣṇu, denounce Śaiva siddhāntas and that Śiva promulgated non-vedic views at the request of Viṣṇu, while Agni, Bhāgavata, Matsya and Vāyu, appear to say that Viṣṇu himself deluded people 974-75; some P. held that Saptarṣi constellation was in Maghā nakṣatra when Yudhiṣṭhira was king and that they stay in one nakṣatra for a century 520n; some P. transfer with slight variations Upaniṣad passages in their texts 921; some P. name minor works called Upa-purāṇas, but Matsya and Kūrma expressly state that they arose from the 18 Purāṇas and were composed as summaries after studying the Purāṇas 815, 835; sometimes P. describe themselves as Itihāsa and the Mahābhārata is called Purāṇa rarely 840; sometimes Purāṇas put forward very modern ideas such as saying that social service and removal of distress is highest dharma 949; P. are sources of Dharma and Vidyās acc. to Yāj. but there is no evidence as to the number Yāj. knew 835n; stages in the evolution of P. are four or five 853–855; stories that occur in the Veda and Upaniṣads such as of Hariścandra, Purūravas and Urvaśī are elaborated in Purāṇas 914–15; strike the keynote that great rewards can be had by little effort as by dānas, vratas, pilgrimages 45, 928, 930; Tai. Ār. speaks of itihāsas and purānas in the plural and so knew at least three Purāṇas 817, 853; task before P. was twofold, viz. to undermine the power and prestige of Buddhism, and other non-Vedic systems and to wean away large sections of the masses from the attractive features of Buddhism and therefore promise the same rewards as Buddhism held forth by a restatement of Hindu religion, philosophy and practices 913, 929–30; ten topics of, according to Bhāgavata 839; topics of tīrtha, dāna, śrāddha and vrata cover about one lakh of verses in the extant P. 841; total number of ślokas in 18 Purāṇas according to most Purāṇas is 400600, 832; transformation in ideas, ideals and practices of Indian people due to P. in the first centuries of Christian era 815; treat Vedas as authoritative and prescribe the use of Vedic mantras in many rites, 918–919; two separate Purāṇa versions called Āgneya, Brāhma, Liṅga and Viṣṇu known to Ballālasena in latter half of 12th cen. A. D. 870; Vāyupurāṇa named as first among 18 P. by Matsya, Agni, Nāradīya, while several of the other P. substitute Śiva for Vāyu but Vāyu is one of the 18 Mahāpurāṇas and not Śivapurāṇa 830; Vāyupurāṇa and Śiva P. both included among 18 P. by Ballālasena 870; Vedārthasaṅgraha of Rāmānujācārya states that all Purāṇas should be so interpreted as not to be in conflict with Viṣṇupurāṇa 957n; Vedic mantras occurring in Purāṇas were not to be read or listened to by śūdras 925; Viṣṇupurāṇa alone of all extant P. closely agrees with the definition given by Amarakośa but it also contains several other topics 841; wax eloquent as to great efficacy of vratas, śrāddha, pilgrimages, fasts, gifts, repetition of the name of God, bhakti 52, 930, 933–34; P. were affected by the theory of the power of mantras 1105; word Purāṇa occurs over a dozen times in Ṛg and means 'ancient, old' 855; Yāj. Smṛti holds Purāṇa as one of the sources of Vidyā and Dharma 854; Purāṇas give information on Architecture, sculpture and painting, 1653–54.

Purāṇasamuccaya, q. by Hemādri 188n; by Nirṇayasindhu 998n.

Puraścaraṇa (of a mantra); 1107–1112; (vide under 'Mantra'); five are minimum constituents of P. viz. pūjā, japa, tarpaṇa, homa, dinner to brāhmaṇas, 1107n–9; mantra to be repeated 1008, 108 or 10 or 108, 28 or 8 times; if any one of five constituents cannot be carried out, japa of mantra twice as many times as prescribed or dinner to brāhmaṇas may be substituted, 1109; in P. mantra is to be repeated 8000 times, if no express direction about number, 1110; meaning of, 1107–8; places where P. is to be practised 1110; signs that indicate perfection in mantra, 1111; terrible way to secure perfection in mantra in a single night by going to cemetery, securing the corpse of a cāṇḍāla, or one killed with a sword, or of a young warrior, wash it, worship it and Durgā–this being called Śavasādhanavidhi, 1109; various modes of P. 1107–9; way of, suggested by Rāghavabhaṭṭa 1109.

Pure: everything is pure to the p. and it is the hankering that is blamable, acc. to some Śākta works 1093.

Pūrṇāhuti, explained 347, 1224n.

Pūrṇapātra 183.

Pūrṇā–tithi 189n.

Purohita: (vide under 'king'); of king, to perform Śānti rites for prosperity, and magic rites 742; qualifications of p. of king 528, 543, 741-2.

Purohitaswami, a. of 'Aphorisms of Yoga' 1393, 1429-30 (on rousing Kuṇḍalinī), 1442n.

Pūrtadharma: (vide under Iṣṭā-pūrta and Purāṇas): means works of public utility, such as wells, tanks, parks, temples etc. 947-949; Amarakośa defines it 948; pūrta dharma secures mokṣa 949.

Puruṣa: derivation of the word in three ways, 1364n; in Sāṅkhya 1357-58; in the eye as Ātman, in the Chān. Up. 1446.

Purūravas and Urvaśī, story of, in Ṛgveda and Viṣṇupurāṇa 915.

Puruṣaparīkṣā, a work of Vidyāpati, 1076.

Puruṣakāra and Daiva, discussed 545.

Puruṣārthas (goals of human life); (vide mokṣa, sannyāsa): are four, Dharma (actions prescribed by Śāstra, doing one's duties), Artha (economics, politics, civics), Kāma (enjoyment of pleasures and aesthetics) and Mokṣa (liberation), the last being the highest to be attained only by a few, 921n, 1510-11, 1626-32; Bhagavadgītā demands a life dedicated to active work and regards doing one's duty as worship 1511; enjoyment of sexual life and pleasures not in conflict with Dharma is not condemned by Manu and other śāstras and in the Gītā (VII. 11) Kṛṣṇa identifies himself with Kāma not in conflict with Dharma 1511; Mahābhārata is the śāstra of all p. acc. to Mārkaṇḍeya 819n; Manu states conclusion that there are three p. for all men and condemns premature Sannyāsa resorted to before fulfilling one's duties (one's three debts) 1511; Ṛgveda contains prayers for health, happiness and a life of hundred years 1510-11.

Puruṣārtha-vidhi: (see Kratvarthā): defined in P. M. S. IV. 1. 2, 1232; rules about the acquisition of wealth are P. 192, 1233; is what a man undertakes for securing the reward of happiness 1232; principal sacrifices like Darśapūrṇamāsa are included under P. 1232.

Puruṣārtha-cintāmaṇi 17n, 68n, 71n, 78n, 83n, 90-1, 100n-102, 127, 135, 146, 154n, 179, 182-3, 188-190n, 191n, 192, 197n, 199n, 204n, 207n, 227, 230 232, 229n, 240, 481n, 672, 740n.

Puruṣārthasudhānidhi, of Sāyaṇa 1631n.

Puruṣasūkta-held to be a late hymn by modern scholars, 1632.

Puruṣottamamāsa: Intercalary month 671; why so called 672.

Puruṣottamatattva 1132.

Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtras and Dharmaśāstra 1152-1351; (vide under anuvāda, bādha, Bādarāyaṇa, Bhagavadgītā, bhāvanā, dharma, dīkṣā, God, Jaimini, Krama, Kumārila, mantra, maxims, mīmāṁsā, niyama, parisaṅkhyā, Śabara, Śāstra, sūtra, svarga, ūha, Veda, Vedāntasūtra, vidhi, Vṛttikāra, words); 33, 67n, 237, 536 (auspicious times for all rites in honour of gods), 989–90; adhikārin of P. M. S. is one who has studied the Veda from guru 1180; approximate date of, between 400–200 B. C. 1157n, 1197; authors mentioned by both P. M. S. and V. S. 1173; authors mentioned by P. M. S. alone and not mentioned by V. S. 1173; Brahmasūtra expressly mentioned in Gītā (13. 4) is not the present V. S. but probably another work or other works of Bādari, Auḍolomi and Kāśakṛtsna, 1171–74; called 'Prathamatantra' by Śaṅkarācārya, 1032; chronological order of Kumārila, Prabhākara, Maṇḍana, Umbeka, Śālikanātha, all writers on Mīmāṁsā, between 650–750 A. D. 1190–95; close correspondence between Āp. Dh. S. and P. M. S., 1155; close correspondence between Jaimini's Sūtra and Kātyāyanaśrautasūtra exemplified 1155–56; Codanā (word) in the Mīmāṁsā sense employed by Vārtikakāra and Mahābhāṣya 1158; conclusions about Vyāsa, Jaimini, Bādarāyaṇa, Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtra and Vedāntasūtra tentatively presented 1177–78; controversies about Vṛttikāra, Upavarṣa and Bodhāyana, 1186n–1187n; declared by Padmapurāṇa as unmeaning on account of its atheistic teaching, 976; date of P. M. S, acc. to Jacobi and Keith, about 200 A. D. 1157; dates (approximate) of several writers on P. M. S. in Sanskrit 1197–1200; descriptions of creation and dissolution of the world are not to be literally understood, the universe as a whole has no beginning and no end, descriptions are meant to illustrate power of daiva and human effort and to urge men to perform their duties enjoined by Veda 1209–10; dharma is the proper subject of P. M. S. acc. to Śāstradīpikā and not 'Vedārtha' 1180; Dharmasūtras like these of Gautama and Āp. disclose familiarity with technical terms and principles of P. 1154–55; doctrines of early and principal writers on P. are rather startling, they have hardly any place for God or the deities, and their theory about Yajña smacks of a businesslike system 1217; P. M. S does not state how much of the Veda has to be studied before one enters upon the understanding of the meaning 1180; earliest extant com. is that of Śabara 1187; emphasizes the distinction between an author of a book and its expositor or transmitter 1203n; employs the word Smṛti in the sense of Dharmaśāstra, 1257; examination of views of Bādarāyaṇa cited five times and conclusions therefrom, 1170; first six chapters consider the procedure of rites like Darśapūrṇamāsa, the details of which are expressly laid down in the Veda while the following six consider the modifications (vikṛtis) and details that have to be added or omitted 1321; four anubandhas of, 1179n; fundamental and characteristic doctrines (nine in all) of P. M. S. 1202–1207; guruperamparās in Sāmavidhāna Br., Nyāyaratnākara and Yuktisnehaprapūraṇī slightly differ 1161n; ideas of P. about creation and dissolution of the world are opposed to those of Mahābhārata and Gītā, 1210; if there be only one Jaimini (and not two) no satisfactory explanation why the author of P. M. S. should name himself only five times in about 2700 sūtras, 1166–67; insists on certain moral rules (such as not speaking falsely) and other rules of conduct such as giving up flesh, sexual intercourse for one engaged in Darśapūrṇamāsa and other sacrifices 1217n; Kumārila shows scant respect for Jaimini, charges him with composing some sūtras without much substance and remarks that Jaimini's sūtra is improper 1335; list of works and papers in English on Pūrvamīmāṁsā 1200–1201; looked upon by medieval writers as the most important of vidyāsthānas 1159; many verses quoted by Śabara on P. M. and other matters 1187; most extensive of all Darśanas, containing about 2700 sūtras and over 900 adhikaraṇas, 1182; names nine authors on Mīmāṁsā, besides Jaimini himself 1157n; names other writers only 27 times while V. S. having only about 1/5th of the sūtras in P. M. S. quotes other writers 32 times, 1160–61; number of adhikaraṇas put at 915 or 1000 by different authors, 1160, 1189n; numerous commentaries on P. M. S. 1186–87; one of the characteristic doctrines of P. M. S. is svataḥprāmāṇya, 1212; Padmapurāṇa asserts that Jaimini composed a vast but useless Śāstra by expounding the view that there was no god 1207, 1209; PMS is not as much concerned about mokṣa or man's destiny after death as other darśanas are 1217; PMS, Śabara, Kumārila make substantial contributions to the exegesis of Vedic texts 1217–18; postulates that apūrva yields the rewards of sacrifices and not God, 1211; question whether Jaimini and Bādarāyaṇa were contemporaries and if not, what their relation was, discussed, 1161 ff; questions of identity and relationship among Kumārila, Prabhākara, Maṇḍana, Umbeka, Śālikanātha, Sureśvara, set out with some discussion 1193–95; relation of dharma to the Veda and the P. M. S. is clearly and briefly brought out by Kumārila 1185; relies upon popular usages, apart from Veda and Smṛtis in many sūtras 1255; requires that men of the three varṇas should not only study the Veda but they must also understand its meaning 1180; Śabara and Kumārila differ about the subject matters of certain adhikaraṇas 1335; Śabara gives a summary of the first chap. of P. M. S. and at the beginning of each of the other chapters gives a summary of the preceding chapter 1186; Śabara proposes two (even three or four) explanations of several sūtras and adhikaraṇas 1334–35; Śabara holds two or more sūtras as forming one adhikaraṇa and alternatively treats one of them as a separate adhikaraṇa 1334; Śabara omits II. 4. 17 and six sūtras after III. 4. 9, 1162n, 1334; Śabara says that the Yājñikas do not declare that rewards result from the mere memorization of the Veda, 1180; Sastri, Prof. K. A. Nilakanta, holds that Jaimini mentioned in P. M. S. VI. 3. 4 is different from the Jaimini mentioned four times more in other sūtras and this view criticized 1162–64; some sūtras are repeated 30 and 24 times 1182; subjects of the twelve chapters of P. M. S., acc. to Jaiminīya-nyāyamālā-vistāra, 1185–86; subjects of the four pādas of the first chapter are vidhi, arthavāda (including mantras), Smṛtis (including customs and usages) and names of rites such as 'udbhid' 1186; table of outstanding works and writers on P. M. S. with tentative dates 1197–1200; various readings in, 1334; tenth chapter is longest, the 3rd comes next and 10th deals with bādha and samuccaya, 1326 27; Vārtikas of Kātyāyana and the Mahābhāṣya establish that Mīmāmsā terms had been elaborated long before them 1156–1158; very rarely refers to other ācāryas by the word 'eke' and V. S. also does so rarely, its references in the words 'eke', 'ekeṣām' and 'anye' being made to Vedic recensions or Upaniṣads 1173; word 'Nyāya-vid' is applied to writers on P. M. 1155n; words 'codanā', 'upadeśa' and 'vidhi' are synonyms acc. to Śabara and 'codana' means a sentence that urges men to do some act 1183–85; works and writers from Jaimini onwards rely on smṛtis and Dharmaśāstra 1178; writers on P. M. are called by Bālakrīḍā of Viśvarūpa simply 'nyāyavidaḥ' or 'nyāyavido yājñikāḥ' 1155n.

Pūrvaprajñā (in Bṛ. Up. IV. 4. 2) meaning of, 1602n.

Pusalker, Dr. A. D., a. of 'Studies in the Epics and Purāṇas of India' and of 'Progress of 'Indic studies' in Silver Jubilee Vol. of B. O. R. I., 830n, 844, 886, 910.

Puṣya, a nakṣatra, also called 'Sidhya' 499n, 525; most powerful among nakṣatras 794.

Puṣyamitra, called Senānī in Purāṇas, Harṣacarita and Ayodhyā inscription 1008n, 1028; alleged persecution of Buddhists by, discussed 1008-1010.

Puṣyasnāna (or Bārhaspatya-snāna): (vide Nakṣatrasnāna) 793-797; all utpātas destroyed by Śānti in P. 793; Bṛhaspati is presiding deity of Puṣya 798; clay collected from several places such as mountain top and king's head and other limbs rubbed with it in P., 797-798; leaves of 15 plants to be cast in jars filled with water 795; Maṇḍala drawn with powders of different colours in, 1132; many Purāṇik mantras along with Vedic ones prescribed by the Matsya, Bṛ. S. and Hemādri 795-96; part of lakṣahoma, acc. to Matsya 798; release of prisoners jailed for offences at the end of, 797; procedure of P. employed in the case of king's elephants and horses to free them from diseases, 797; proper time, procedure and duration for performing P. acc. to Viṣṇudharmottara 798-799; reward and results of P. 799.

Puṣyavrata, m. in Āp. Dh. S. 346, 799.

Pythagoras (Greek philosopher) believed in punarjanma and there are controversies as to whether he borrowed from India, 1530.

'Questions of Milinda' 910n; has passages closely agreeing with Gītā 970, 972, 1023n.

Rabindranath Tagore, poet and reformer, a. of Gītānjali 1700, 1711.

Radhakrishnan, Dr S.: a. of Indian 'Philosophy' 1200, 1209, 1393, 1491, 1605; a. af 'Source book of Indian Philosophy' 1394, (jointly with C. A. Moore); a. of 'India and China' 1122; a. of 'Religion and Society' 1618n, 1689, 1695; a of 'The Brahmasūtras', pp. 194-207 of Introduction on 'Karma and Punarjanma', 1605; a. of 'Idealist view of life' 1612; a. of 'Eastern Religions and Western thought' 1647 (Schweitzer Criticized); a. of 'Kalkin or future of civilization' 1668 (defects of modern Democracy).

Rāghavabhaṭṭa, commentator of Śāradātilaka, 1101n, 1112n, 1123 (on mudrā), 1124; has an elaborate note on puraścaraṇa, 1108-1110; holds that Prapañcasāra is Śaṅkarācārya's own work 1105; quotes Śulbasūtra 1132; quotes numerous passages on nyāsa, 1120, 1122; states that Tantra cult is based on Upaniṣads like Rāmapūrvatāpanīya 1045.

Raghavan, Dr. V. 1163n, 1369, 1408n.

Raghunandana, a. of several Tattvas 30, 46, 90n, 158, 175, 178, 186–7, 198, 545, 753, 835n, 919, 1042n, 1118, 1132–33, 1238 (illustrates 'rātrisattra-nyāya'), 1240, 1391.
Raghunātha, a. of 'Padārtha-niruūpaṇa' 470.
Raghuvaṁśa 193, 500, 531n, 537, 539, 628, 744n, 797n, 905n, 997, 1027, 1152n, 1213, 1384, 1426 (mentions Vīrāsana), 1461 (references to Yoga technique), 1571.
Rāhu (ascending node or the point where the orbit of the moon intersects the eclipse in passing northwards 574; and Ketu m. in Mahābhārata 569; demon R. represented as serpent in Śāntis on eclipses 766; mantra repeated in Śānti for R. 766n; story of the part of R. at churning of ocean 766n.
Rāhula Sāṅkṛtyāyana, 472n, 942n, 1022–23 (paper on Vajrayāna and the 84 siddhas), 1073 (paper of, about Vajra-yāna and Mantrayāna' in Journal Asiatique), 1075n (gives list of 84 siddhas from Luipā to Bhalipā with details.
Rainfall, in the four months from Pauṣa, inauspicious for seven days for vrata and yātrā after it stops 620.
Rājadharma-kaustubha 923, 1333.
Rājamārtaṇḍa of Bhoja, com. on Yogasūtra 1439n, 1444n, 1449n.
Rājamārtaṇḍa of Bhoja (on astrology and dharmaśāstra topics) 46, 61n, 68, 72n, 75n, 78, 79n, 83n, 90n–91, 114n, 116, 125, 132n, 144, 181, 191n, 194, 212n–3n, 220, 529n, 547, 555, 560, 571, 604, 606–7 (70 verses on Upanayana), 608n–9n, 610, 612n, 613–4, 615n, 616–7, 619–620n, 621n, 623, 624–6, 672, 710, 885; mentions only 24 vratas 46, 58; quoted by V. K. K. 110n.
Rājanītiprakāśa 622, 737n, 806, 923.
Rājanītiratnākara 176, 616.
Rājanya, meaning of, 1549n.
Rajas, meaning of 1540.
Rājasūya (sacrifice) performed by Puṣyamitra and Khāravela 1028.
Rājataraṅgiṇī (middle of 12th century A. D.); 630, 649, 655, 669, 737n. 1074–75 (has several reference to Tāntrikas and their doings).
Rājavārtika (quoted by Vācas-pati) 1359n, Rajendralal Mitra, Dr 141.
Raji, story of his depriving Indra of share in sacrifices and Bṛhaspati deluding the sons of R. by composing a work on Jinadharma 974.
Rākā (Paurṇamāsī mixed with pratipad), worshipped in Ṛg. for a rich and famous son 63.
Rakṣābandhana, on Full Moon of Śrāvaṇa, 127–128.
Rākṣoghna hymns 813.
Ram Mohan Roy, founder of Brāhmo Samāj, 1699.
Rāma, (vide under Rāmāyaṇa): astrological details about birth of Rāma 84–85; became Lord of the world by vratas in Tretā 55; episode in the Epic 838n; given as a synonym of Haladhara and of Daśaratha's son by Amarakośa 84; kept golden image of Sītā by his side when he performed Aśvamedha 53n, 1281; killed Rāvaṇa on Durgādevi's inspiration acc. to Kālikā 160n; no name so holy and so constantly on Hindu lips as Rāma's 88; story of his ascent to heaven followed by subjects in his capital 959.

Rāmalīlā, celebrations in North India on first ten days of Āśvina-śukla 193.

Rāmanavamī Vrata 84-88; Kṛtyakalpataru does not deal with it 84; procedure of R. prescribed in medieval works 86-87; procedure of R. in modern times 88; whether R. is nitya or kāmya 85-86.

Ramaṇa Maharshi (1879-1950), sage of Arunachal 1479n; work on, by Arthur Osborne 1479n.

Rāmānuja; a. of Bhāṣya on Vedāntasūtra 956n, 1158; a. of Vedārthasaṅgraha 957; born in 1127 A. D., does not quote the Bhāgavatapurāṇa at all in bhāṣya on V. S., while quoting over a hundred verses from Viṣṇupurāṇa 95; five heads of the doctrines of the school of, 964n: holds that whole of Pañcarātra has Vedic authority 954-55.

Rāmānujācārya, a. of Tantrarahasya and Nāyakaratna (com. on Nyāyaratnamālā) 1210; flourished about 1500-1575 A. D., 1200.

Rāmapūrvatāpanīya Upaniṣad 1103, 1135.

Rāmārcanacandrikā of Ānandavanayati 84.

Ramaswami (Sastry), Pandit V. A 1186n, 1187n.

Rāmāyaṇa: dreams frequently mentioned in, as indicating future catastrophies 775; flesh of five five-nailed animals may be eaten 1156n; horoscope of Rāma in Bālakāṇḍa of, examined 84-85, 627-28; omens described in 743; several passages in, contain references to planets in relation to nakṣatras indicating misfortunes to people in general or to individuals 531; solar eclipse at an unusual time 744, 1628 (three puruṣāsthas), 1629n, 1631.

Rāmeśvara, commentator of Paraśurāmakalpasūtra 1077.

Ramakrishna Paramahamsa, guru of Vivekānanda 1699-1700.

Ramakrishna Mission 1699-1700.

Ranade, M. G. and Prārthanāsamāja 1700.

Ranade, Prof. R. D. a. of 'Constructive survey of the Upanishadic philosophy' 1537-41; holds view that from certain mantras of Ṛg. it can be said that an approach to the idea of Transmigration was being made by Vedic sages 1537ff; views and interpretations of the Ṛg. passages by Prof. Ranade held to be wrong 1537-42.

Rao, Prof. V. K. R. V. paper of, in 'Changing India', 1678n, 1683.

Rashdall a. of 'Theory of Good and Evil', 1575.

Rāśis (signs of Zodiac): (vide under Constellation, dreṣkāṇa, horā, Mahābhārata, Nārāyaṇa, person, Rudra, Zodiac); are twelve, each extending over 2¼ nakṣatras from Aśvinī onwards in order 561; are identified from Meṣa onwards with the limbs of the Kālapuruṣa or of Nārāyaṇa 564n; as lords of the quarters (diśās) and usefulness thereof 568; classifications of r, as male or female, movable and fixed, due to fancy and ideas of symmetry and sequence 635; Chinese names of rāśis are different such as rat, ox, tiger etc. 566, 635; colours of the twelve r. acc. to Bṛhaj-jātaka 568; description of the appearance of r. in Bṛhaj-jātaka, in the Yavanajātaka q. by Utpala and in Vāmanapurāṇa 564; descriptions of seven r. show that they are figures of animals and five are like human beings 564–5; many scholars deny that there is similarity between the majority of the twelve signs in zodiac and the natural appearance of the objects signified by them 565; mentioned by Vṛddha-Garga and Kāśyapa 592; no Greek word corresponding to Mīna (Pisces) mentioned by Bṛhaj-jātaka in some editions 562n; names of signs among Babylonians, Assyrians and Chaldeans cited by several scholars do not tally 565n; names of r. are purely imaginary 565, 635; no proof that the rāśi system was borrowed by India from the Greeks 594; principles of astronomy based on r. probably established in India in the three centuries before Christ 638; purpose of identification of r. with limbs of Kālapuruṣa 561; purpose and astrological indications of the classifications of r. acc. to Utpala 568; Sārāvali mentions no Greek word for Mīna 563n; six items in relation to the r. occupied by a planet called Ṣaḍvarga 583; table of r. as svagṛha, ucca and nīca of the planets 576; table of r. with English and Latin equivalents and synonyms 562; things supposed to be under the influence of the several r. 564; what r. are powerful by day, at night and in twilight 569; when are r. powerful 577.

Rāṣṭrabhṛt Anuvāka 786.

Ratana-sutta 943.

Rathakāra, in Tai. Br. means a man of that caste, not one who manufactures chariots (the etymological sense) and he can repeat the Vedic mantra 'ṛbhūṇām tvā' etc.' though not entitled to Upanayana 1290, 1642.

Rāthantara sāman, 726; means only the music and not the

ṛk. set to music, 1222.

Rationalism : (vide under doubt, God, people, Hinduism, persecution, science, tradition, utilitarianism): accepts the postulates which science finds convenient and useful but science works within narrow limits, it is not concerned with morals or spirituality or values of life 1475 ; in Europe emphasis on rationalism arose as the Christian churches, particularly Roman Catholic, were extremely intolerant of the slightest departure from religious views held at particular times 1576–77 ; there are subconscious and non-rational impulses, beliefs and intuitions in men that are held by men to be truer or of a higher order than what is on the rationalistic level 1475 ; thoughtful men in Europe during 18th and 19th centuries had boundless faith in r. and progress, but this faith is now greatly weakened 1478.

Rationalists (vide 'Communism and Communists') ; r. arrive at different conclusions on the same matter in different ages and even in the same age what appears reasonable to one group is held unreasonable by another group 1477 ; argue that they should not have to prove negative propositions (such as there is no God) but theists must prove the positive proposition of God's existence etc. 1473 ; it should not be supposed that ancient and medieval India had no rationalists or atheists, in fact there were several r. such as the Lokāyatas and rationalistic critics of sacrifices, Śrāddhas etc. 974 (note 1596), 1472 ; Bentham and the two Mills put forward the theory of utilitarianism 1479 ; many r. hold that there is no proof of the existence of God or any higher Intelligence than man's, deny individual soul and immortality, and argue that in all religions there is some truth with a great deal of error 1472 ; problem of evil in the world is, acc. to r., a great stumbling block in accepting God as good, kind, omnipotent and all-knowing, 1473 ; r. and utilitarians are not agreed upon any definite principles of conduct for common men and women 1480 ; r. substitute blocks of humanity or the leaders of such blocks for authority and worship, the likely result being that humanity would soon be wiped out 1474 ; warning of Gītā against unsettling the minds of ignorant persons 1480.

Ratnamālā 62, 69, 70n, 604n, 605, 607n, 608–10, 615–19, 620n–25, 627, 657n, 682n, 704–5, 707n, 793 (on Puṣya).

Ratnāvali 46.

Rātri-word r. not so frequent in Ṛg. as the word 'ahan' 675.

Rātrīsūkta, a Khilasūkta after Ṛg. X 127, 232 and n.

Raudra Gaṇa, mantras addressed to Rudrā in Śāntis 770.

Rāvaṇa, dreams of Trijāṭā about, 775.
Rawlinson, a. of 'Five monarchies of the ancient world' 514n, 595n.
Rayachaudhuri Dr. H. C.: 650n (on Vikramāditya), 883 (on discrepancies between Purāṇa accounts and inscriptions).
Rāyaspoṣa verses 796n.
Ṛbhus: controversies about what they stand for 982; legend that R. slept for twelve days, explained 498–99.
Reality, is of three kinds, (1) Pāramārthikī (Absolute or highest), the province of Parā vidyā; (2) Vyāvahārikī (empirical), the province of aparā vidyā; (3) Prātibhasikī (which pertains to dream states in which pleasure and pain may be experienced while the dream lasts), 1506.
Rebirths: for sins, authorities on, collected in one place 1590; for persons guilty of mortal sins after undergoing hell tortures specified by Manu and Yāj. and rebirth for lesser sins 1590–91; for those guilty of thefts of certain articles have some understandable logic behind them 1491.
Re-incarnation (Punarjanma) 1530–1612; great difference between the Hindu theory of avatāras and Christian doctrine of r. 992.
Rele, Dr. V. G., a. of 'Mysterious Kuṇḍalinī' 1148, 1393, 1443 (criticized by Shri Kuvalayānanda).
Religion or (religions): as believed at present by most men can hardly be a panacea for the ills of the world 1480; many eminent men attribute the present difficulties to the two world wars and are busy in inviting all men back to r., but the crux of the problem is what religious tenets and practices are to be inculcated among men in the present age 1480–81; most r. postulate three fundamental entities, God, individual soul and external world 1506; virtues preached at different times as most important have been different (such as monachism, charity, humility, social service, heroism) 1481; whether religion is necessary or not some worth-while ideal is necessary, acc. to Pandit Nehru 1670; and modern Indians with several attitudes towards re. form, 1700–1701.
Religious Rites: calendar required for finding out proper times for, 641; must be performed at the correct time (i.e. season, tithi etc.) acc. to Śāstra 713; rule that, if one able to carry out main provisions of R. resorts to alternatives provided for those who are unable, he does not secure the other-worldly rewards of that rite 100.
Renou, Prof. L., 493n, 505n (a. of 'L' Inde Classique'), 1006n (on 'Religions of Ancient India'), 1397-98 (against identity of two Patañjalis).

Representative (vide under 'Pratinidhi'), not allowed in certain cases 53.
Republics in ancient India, acc. to Jayaswal 1663.
Revatī, the Yogatārā of nakṣatra R. corresponds to Zeta Piscium of modern astronomers 712.
Rhys Davids, 542, 940, 1033 (a. of 'Buddhist India').
(Mrs.) Rhys Davids: 1007 (on 'Relation between Buddhism and' Brahmanism) says Buddha agreed with Upaniṣad teachings about high moral endeavour).
Ṛgveda (vide God, Veda): 2-22, 35-6, 60n, 62-3, 87, 112, 126, 129, 137, 146, 150-151, 153, 159, 168, 171, 179n, 183, 205, 209, 219n, 223, 233, 241, 463, 488-9, 491-93, 495-98, 506, 537-38, 579, 582, 596, 671, 675, 684, 686-7, 690n, 691-92, 697, 703n, 719-24, 726n-28n, 729-31, 733, 737n-39n, 740-41, 750, 756, 758, 761-63, 771n, 772-3, 780n, 781, 785-9, 790n, 791, 796, 802, 814, 859, 916-17, 919-20, 934, 947, 950-51, 970, 980-985, 987-91, 997, 1031, 1035-36 (mystic words and spells in), 1043-44, 1045 (Ṛg. V. 47. 4 deemed to refer to Kādividyā), 1052n, (Ṛg. verses q. in Kulārṇavatantra), 1058, 1059 (Ṛg. IV. 40. 5 ('Haṁsaḥ' etc.) to be recited over wine and other tattvas in Tāntrik worship), 1078, 1086 (verses of, q. by Mahānirvāṇatantra), 1098, 1100 (Vedic Mantras employed in T. works exemplified), 1121n, 1131 (orb of Sun is called wheel), 1156n, 1181, 1184, 1203-4 (references that are held historical), 1213 (who went to heaven and what joys were there), 1218 (Madhvācārya claims that he is referred to in Ṛg. text I. 141. 1-3), 1221n, 1223, 1227n, 1244 (mantras full of faith in God and beatitude), 1255-56, 1257n, 1265n, 1268 and n, 1276n, 1309n, 1311n, 1316, 1321, 1362, 1372, 1382n, 1385-86, 1471 (quoted often by Upaniṣads), 1478 (some doubters about Indra), 1487-1493, 1497-98, 1516 Ṛg. IX. 62. 1 explained in Tāṇḍya), 1517, 1527-8, 1532-33 (passages where word Karman occurs), 1536-37 (Ṛg. VII. 33. 10-14 about Vasiṣṭha's two births explained), 1537-44, 1546n, 1548n, 1553-54, 1568n (interpretation of Ṛg. X. 190. 3), 1576n, 1578 (Vaiśvānara), 1595, 1600 and n, 1613-4 (river Sindhu), 1619-20 (meaning of 'Kṛṇvanto Viśvam Āryam'), 1622, 1631n, 1644 (indications of at least three Āśramas)', 1646 (shift towards oblation of cooked food or ghee as equal to animal sacrifices); 1676 (Vasiṣṭha's prayer that sins due to wine and gambling may be forgiven); prayer to bestow ten songs on newly married bride) (X. 85. 16 explained), 1610n R. (X. 117. 6) differentiates between ṛk verses, Yajus texts and Sāman chants 859; hardly 1/3 of over ten thousand Mantras of Ṛgveda are employed in the Vedic rites 1223; has two arrangements, viz. one into Maṇḍalas and Sūktas and the other into aṣṭakas adhyāyas and vargas, while Tai. S. and Atharvaveda are arranged into Kāṇḍas 859; padapāṭha or kramapāṭha of R. is not eternal but is man-made and the former is ascribed to Śākalya who is criticized by the Nirukta 861; ṛṣis of, had arrived at idea that there is only one Supreme Being addressed under different names 1487; verses of, occur in other Vedic saṁhitās 22; war of ten kings against Sudās 1644.

Ṛgvedi, Mr., work of, on 'History of Aryan festivals' in Marathi 60.

Ṛg-vidhāna 728n-29n.

Ṛkprātiśākhya 703n.

Rivara J. H. de Cunha, a of paper on 'Historical essay on the Konkani language' 1020.

Rivers: Āpayā, Dṛṣadvatī and Sarasvatī m. as holy rivers for establishing Agni in Ṛg, 523; eighteen or 19 rivers are mentioned in order from Ganges in the east to Kubhā (Kabul river), Gomatī and Krumu (Kurram) in the west 1528; many rivers m. in Anuśāsana-parva 1528; several Purāṇas mention rivers as flowing from the principal mountains 1528; seven Sindhus mentioned in Ṛg. 1528; six rivers mentioned as very holy and connected with Himavat and six more south of Vindhya 243.

Robertson, Archibald, a. of 'Rationalism in theory and practice' 1476n, 1481n, 1616 (on meaning of word civilization'

Rodasī, wife of Rudra, acc. to Yāska and connected with Maruts in Ṛg, 1044.

Rohiṇī, nakṣatra, moon said to be fond of, 507.

Romaka is probably Alexandria in Āryabhaṭa's work, 676n.

Romaka-siddhānta 680; (vide under Śrīṣeṇa); Dikṣit contends that the R. summarised in Pañcasiddhāntikā is different from the work of Śrīṣeṇa and was composed before 150 A. D. 515n; length of year, acc. to R. agrees with Hipparchus and Ptolemy 515; no calendars in India based on it 515n; Thibaut on, 515n; probably composed in Sanskrit by a Greek settled in India, 515n; Thibaut on, 515.

Roman Church: prepared an Index of forbidden books (the edition of 1949 contains 5000 titles) and another Index of books permitted but some passages from which were to be expurgated 1576.

Roth Cecil, a. of 'Short History of the Jews' (for persecution of the Jews) 1019.

Roland, Benjamin, a. of 'The Art and Architecture of India' 1656.

Royce, J., a. of 'the world and the individual,' expounds Chān. Up. III. 14 and VI. 2–15 and Bṛ. Up. 1500; quotes from a mystic work 'who knows Him is silent' 1505.

Ṛṣabha, a predecessor of Varāhamihira 622.

Ṛṣipañcamī-vrata: (vide 'Seven sages') : 149–151; meant for all, but now practised mostly by women 149; number seven important in, 151; object was to remove all sins and troubles of three kinds and ridding women of contacts during monthly illness 950; performed on 5th of Bhādrapada bright half 149–151 (mixed with 4th and not with 6th tithi); performer not to eat anything in this vrata produced on land ploughed by oxen or watered by the labour of oxen 150; procedure of 149–150; Saṅkalpa in 150n; seven sages and Arundhatī worshipped in, 150–51; worship of sages is performed with Ṛgveda mantras 150–51.

Ṛṣiputra, a. of a work on astrology, 593 (Bṛ. S. quotes 15 verses of his), 767, 768n, 778n (Bṛ. S. summarises its views).

Ṛta, meaning of, acc. to Prof. Apte, is 'belt of Zodiac' 3; three meanings of, 320; wheel of, in Ṛg. 488–489, 1627; (ṛta gave place to satya later).

Ṛtavya hymns are Ṛg. II. 36 and 37, 492.

Ruben, Prof, on 'Purāṇic line of Heroes' 883.

Rudra (see under 'Śāstras'); deemed by Padmapurāṇa to have assumed the form of Kāla with rāśis as his limbs 561n; is supposed to have deluded people and asuras by composing false śāstras at the bidding of Viṣṇu, 974.

Rudra (see under Ekādaśinī, Laghurudra, Mahārudra, Atirudra) : 1024; name of Rudrādhāya, viz. eleven anuvākas in Tai. S IV. 5. 1–11, beginning with 'namas-te Rudra manyave'; reciting them once being called 'āvartana' and reciting eleven times is called 'Ekādaśinī, 759, 813 and n; word r. is harsh name 721n; worship by R. takes three forms viz. japa, homa and abhiṣeka (sprinkling a person with holy water over which Rudra mantras have been repeated), 814.

Rudradhara, a. of 'Śuddhiviveka' 52, 1296 (held Śūdra cannot adopt a son).

Rudragaṇa (mantras) 796n.

Rudragāyatrī 108n.

Rudrayāmala, a Tāntrik work; 736n, 965n, 1034, 1061n (on cakras and Sahasrāracakra); 1088n (a Vīra Sādhaka could associate with another's wife as Śakti in worship), 1101, 1144–45.

Rudriya (servant of Rudra), substituted for Rudra in Ait.

Br. for averting Rudra's wrath 721n.

Rukmāṅgada and Mohinī story of, in Nāradīya-purāṇa 892; proclamation of, about the observance of Ekādaśī 892.

Rūpasaṁṛddha, meaning of, 789n, 1097, 1276n.

Russell, Bertrand, a. of 'Impact of Science on Society' 765n; remarks of. on Milton's use of popular beliefs about eclipses 765.

Russlle, Lord, of Liverpool; a. of 'Scourge of the Svastika', wher ein he cites the confession of Höss that not less than three million people were put to death at Auschwitz, 1480n.

Russia: great inequalities of income in, even after 40 years of totalitarian rule between the salaries of Academicians and high placed executives on one hand and of common men on the other 1682–83.

Rutter, Owen, a. of 'Scales of Karma' 1594, 1605.

Śabara, a. of bhāṣya on Pūrva-mīmāṁsā-sūtra (vide under Kumārila, Vṛttikāra); vrata defined, 28; 33–4, 73n, 86n, 96n, 237, 607, 701n, 821, 985, 992n, 1032 (meaning of Tantra), 1097–98 (mantras are 'arthaprakāśaka'), 1114n, 1154n–56n, 1158, 1167 (Jaimini mentions Bādarāyaṇa in P. M. S. I. 1. 5 and XI. 1. 65), 1178 (quotes a Smṛti verse almost identical with Manu), 1180, 1183, 1186–87 (mentions vṛttikāra with respect) 1197, 1202–05, 1208, 1209n. 1211n (on Apūrva), 1212n, 1213 (popular views about heaven), 1214 (mental happiness is svarga), 1220–21 (on mantras, their classifications and definitions), 1222, 1224 ('śabda-pramāṇakā vayam'), 1225n (defines vidhi), 1226 (what signifies a vidhi), 1227n, 1231n, 1236n, 1237, 1241, 1249n, 1254n, 1255, 1257–60, 1283n, 1286n, 1289–90; 1292, 1294, 1295n, 1297n–1300n, 1304n, 1305n–1308, 1310–1312n, 1317n–18n, 1321n, 1322, 1324n, 1325–1326n, 1329n, 1331n cites a verse defining 'tantra'), 1332n–35, 1512n (on affix 'tvā'), 1527, 1544n, 1626; at least one thousand quotations on Śabara's bhāṣya are taken from Tai. S. and Br. 1218; bhāṣya of, is earliest extant com. on P. M. S. 1187; bhāṣya of, quotes about three thousand quotations of which several hundreds have not been identified 1218; Bṛhatī, is com. of Prabhākara on, 1189; difference between S. and Kumārila as to the subject matter of P. M. Sūtras, 1262–63), 1335; flourished between 200–400 A. D. 1197; frequently quotes the very words of the Nirukta or pointedly refers to them, 1276 and n; gives three interpretations of P. M. S. IV. 1. 2, out of which one relates to acquisition of wealth 1233; gives far-fetched explanations of the words 'Savitṛ,' 'Aśvins' and 'Pūṣan' when the Mantra 'devasya tvā' (Tai. S. II. 4. 6. 1) is to be addressed by ūha to a deity other than Agni, 1325 and n; mentions Holākā festival as prevalent in Eastern parts of Bhārata 237; numerous commentaries on bhāṣya of 1187–88; omits some sūtras, acc. to Kumārila 1162n, 1188, 1227n; no commentary on Śabara's bhāṣya, composed before Kumārila now available 1188; quotes several verses on P. M. matters and also on other topics 1187; stories of events that never occurred are mentioned in the Veda for praise (says Ś.) 1224; styled vṛttikāra sometimes by Kumārila himself 1197.

Śābarotsava, in Durgāpūja 176–77.

Sabatini, Rafael, work of, on 'Spanish Inquisition' 933n.

Sabbāsavasutta 943.

Śabdakalpadruma 760.

Sabbath 677; Jews observed Saturday as S. (and not Sunday) 677; observed on different week days by various peoples 677.

Sabhāparva 27n, 90n, 130, 488n, 539, 698 (names for numerals from ayuta to parārdha), 743 (omens), 744 (eclipse), 745 (three kinds of utpātas), 971n (story of Śiśupāla), 1161 (pupils of Vyāsa).

Sabine, W. H. W. a. of 'Second sight in daily life' developes a novel theory on dreams 782.

Sacī : word Ś occurs in the sense of 'Śakti' about 50 times in Ṛg. and does not mean wife of Indra 1043.

Sacred books of the East (series) 527, 777, 939n–40n, 943, 970n, 972, 978n, 1022–23n, 1026, 1037n, 1038, 1042, 1070, 1107, 1153, 1579n, 1583n, 1613n, 1627, 1663.

Sacrifice (see under Yajña, wife, Dakṣiṇā); disposal of implements of S. 1232; even the Ṛgveda discloses that a complicated sacrificial ritual existed in its times 991; provides that husband and wife should perform a S. in co-operation, but where the Veda expressly provides that certain matters are to be performed by the male sacrificer it is the male alone that can perform them 1287; results of paucity or absence of food, or mantras, proper fees, are disastrous in different ways 753; svarga is the reward of all sacrifices (such as Viśvajit) for which the Veda does not expressly declare a reward 1312; ten implements required in S. enumerated in Tai. S., each of which is to be employed for the purpose prescribed by Veda 1292, 1331n, wrangling about food or fees causes misfortune to sacrificer 753.

Sadācāra (usages or practices of śiṣṭas); (vide 'śiṣṭa', Smṛtis, Kalivarjya): intricate questions about the relative force of Śruti, Smṛti and Sadācāra arise 1264 ; Kumārila's position is that those usages alone are authoritative that are not opposed to express Vedic texts, that are practised by śiṣṭas under the belief that they are part of Dharma (right conduct) and for which no visible motive such as pleasure, acquisition of wealth or satisfaction of desires can be predicated and that it does not follow that all actions of śiṣṭas are to be accepted as dharma, that Manu's advice to follow one's ancestors' path means a path of good people 1264, 1280 ; some great men, acc. to Gautama, Āp. Dh. S., Bhāgavatapurāṇa (X. 33. 30), were guilty of violations of dharma and excesses, and twelve examples are cited by Kumārila who explains them away or says that they were not thought to be dharma by those persons themselves 1280.

Ṣaḍaṅganyāsa, exemplified by Dharmasindhu and declared to be avaidika 1121n.

Ṣaḍaśītimukha, 213n ; m. in inscriptions 213n ; puṇyakāla is 60 ghaṭikās 215.

Ṣaḍāvrata (or annadānamāhātmya) 437.

Sad-dharma-puṇḍarīkasūtra (a standard work of Mahāyāna), agrees closely with Gītā 970 ; contains many dhāraṇis (spells) 1104n.

Sādhanamālā (a composite Vajrayāna work of 3rd century A. D. to 12th) : 1038-39, 1050, 1070 (six cruel magic acts), 1104, 1116n, 1146 ; asserts that there is nothing that cannot be attained by mantras if proper procedure be followed 1104.

Ṣaḍviṃśa-Brāhmaṇa 734 (śāntis), 1114n (Śyenayāga details), 1245.

Sagara, sons of, were reduced to ashes by Kapila 1362.

Saha, Dr. Meghnad ; 713-4, President of Calendar Reform Committee and author of the C. R. C. Report 714n ; Report of, has exahaustive alphabetical list of Hindu festivals, but no details except month, fortnight and tithi are given 253, 644, 648-49.

Sahasrabhojanavidhi (procedure of giving dinner to one thousand brāhmaṇas at one time) 445.

Sāhityadarpaṇa, 1297n-98 ; present author's notes on, referred to 1297.

Saints : (vide Kabir) : in medieval times in India there were women S. like Mirabai and Aṇḍal, untouchables as saints, viz. Chokhāmeḷā and Raidas, Mahomedan saints like Kabir 969 ; names of saints and mystics in all parts of India from 13th to 17th century A. D. that agreed on certain fundamentals viz. unity of God, need of self-purification, condemnation of pride of caste and of ritual, and surrender to God for salvation, 969-970.

Śaiva- (see under 'Śāstras') ;

Siddhāntas were composed at Viṣṇu's bidding by Śiva for deluding people and asuras 974–975.

Śāka (vegetable) has ten forms 423.

Śaka era : 649 (began when 3179 years of Kali had expired), 679n ; in medieval times came to be called Śālivāhana 655 ; Inscriptions of Kṣatrapa kings bearing the number of the year are held to be in Śaka era. 654 ; Śakas in Yugapurāṇa 828 ; most astronomical works in Sanskrit employ Śaka era from about 500 A. D , 653 ; origin of the name Śaka era is a most difficult and unsolved problem 653ff ; origin of the name Śālivāhana 655 ; some modern writers like Burgess and Dr. Saha hold that this era was started by calculation and taken backwards, 649.

Śaka and Yavana and other foreign tribes held to be originally Kṣatriyas by Manu and others 1634n.

Śakadhūma, meaning of, 740n ; Charpentier on 740n.

Śaka-Kuṣāṇa, paper by Prof. Basham 654n.

Śākalya, a. of the padapāṭha of the Ṛgveda 861.

Śāketa, m. in Yugapurāṇa 827–28.

Śakra-dhvajotthāpana : (vide 'Indradhvajotthāpāna) ; m. by Sarasvatīkaṇṭhābharaṇa of Bhoja 42.

Śākta or Śāktas (vide Lalitāmāhātmya) : all women are fit for intercourse to S. worshipper except the wives of his guru or the wives of Vīra kind of worshippers 1093 ; are mentioned among six darśanas by Vāyupurāṇa 1042 ; belief of, that female jackal is a messenger of Kālī and is auspicious 808 ; Bengal and Assam, chief strongholds of Śākta cult 1076 ; chief characteristics of the cult of 1041–2 ; cult of S. promises men both bhoga and yoga 1092n ; cult of, prevalent long before 8th century A. D. in India, especially in Bengal and Assam 1041 ; eight kṣetras of 1039 ; great aim of Śākta is to realise his identity with yantra, mantra, guru and devī 1138 ; have no higher means of happiness and liberation than the fifth tattva 1093 ; list of works on Ś. doctrines in English 1048n ; principal work of Ś. is Devīmāhātmya 1041 ; Purāṇas that eulogise Devī 1042 ; several Upaniṣads relied upon as the basis of Ś. cult by Rāghavabhaṭṭa and Bhāskar erāya, but those upaniṣada are later writings 1045 ; Ṛg. V. 47. 4 is fancifully interpreted by Ś. as referring to their views 1218 ; Śāktavidyas are said to be Kādi, Hādi or Sādi 1045n ; sect mark of Ś. and Śaivas was tripuṇḍra 1076n ; special form of worship which sometimes assumed debased or revolting forms 1042 ; wine was not prohibited only when it was taken for pleasure 1094; word Śākta means 'one who is a devotee of Śakti' (cosmic power or energy) 1041.

Śāktapramoda, 1041n.

Śakti (vide under Devī, Durgā, Kālī, Kuṇḍalinī, cakras, five Makāras); conceived to be the primordial source governing all activity in the universe, 1141; different names of Ś. or Kālī in Purāṇas like Matsya, Kūrma, Brahma, 1041–42; doctrine of Vedānta that brahma is endowed with all powers might have suggested all engrossing power of Ś. 1045n; ideas associated with Ś. and Śacī in Ṛg. are those of creation, protection, valour and bounty 1043; is all pervading, most subtle, is the Kundalinī coiled like a snake and manifests herself in the form of the fifty letters of the alphabet from a to kṣa 1061; name Bhadrakālī occurs in Śāṅ. gṛ. and Manu 1042; Kaulāvalī-nirṇaya asserts that if a man, after partaking of bhāng, engages in meditation, he directly sees the deity, 1082; praise of Devī spoken of as primordial Śakti, that all gods including Śiva himself derive their powers from her 1058; Ṛgveda speaks of the Ś. of the great gods, but they are Śaktis of the gods and not separate creative principles 1043; śāstras opposed to Veda like Kāpāla, Bhairava, Yāmala, Vāma, Arhata were propagated by Devī for deluding the world 1042; sometimes the word 'Māyā' is used with Indra, instead of Śakti 1043; when worshipped with offerings of wine, flesh and edibles becomes pleased 1042, 1058; word Ś occurs about a dozen times in Ṛgveda, five times with Indra, twice with pitṛs, once with Aśvins 1043; worshipped generally under the name Devī 1041; worship of, necessarily requires wine and other makāras acc. to several Tantra works 1082.

Śakti (vide under 'women'): means the 'woman associated with a sādhaka in Yogic practices and in the worship of Śakti 1052n, 1085; young courtesan is Ś. incarnate and brahma 1056.

Śaktisaṅgama-tantra, 263, 1052n, 1053 ('kula' means upāsaka of Kālī), 1054, 1056, 1064–65, 1080 (offers symbolic explanations of five Makāras), 1105n, (on Trailokyamohana mantra), 1109n, 1117 (proper times for dīkṣā).

Śakunas (vide birds, divination, nimitta, Vasantarāja-śakuna): are declared by Varāhamihira to be indicative of the actions of persons in their former lives and by Vasantarāja 538, 806; authors and works on 622; Bhāguri, Bharadvāja and Dravyavardhana on, 591; extensive literature on, 805–6; hooting of owl on top of a house at night portends sorrow and death of owner's son 808; words Śakuna and Śakuni mean 'bird' in Ṛgveda, gradually came to mean premonitions conveyed by cries and movements of birds and then any prognosticatory sign 804-805; some animals and birds are useless for prognostications at certain seasons 808-809; Upaśruti as method 809-810.

Śākuntala of Kālidāsa: 46, 120, 517, 687, 800, 1027, 1046n (Śiva as 'parigataśaktiḥ'), 1071, 1596.

Śālākarma (construction of a house); vide under 'house'.

Śālihotra, q. by Hemādri on Aśvaśānti 804.

Śālikanātha, a. of com. Ṛjuvimalā on Bṛhatī and of Prakaraṇapañcikā 1189; flourished between 710-770 A. D, 1198; reason for the view that Ś. was a direct pupil of Prabhākara 1190, 1193.

Śālivāhana, era (vide Śaka era): these words occur in Inscriptions of 13th and 14th century A. D., 655.

Salokat's a kind of mukti 1631n.

Śalyaparva 90n, 520n, 687n, 742n, 743-44, 764, 767, 787n, 1219, 1391.

Śam: adhrigu-praiṣa, bearing of on root śam, 724; undeclinable 'śam' occurs about 160 times in the Ṛgveda 719-720; joined to 'yoḥ' in a compound or with 'ca' between the two, meaning 'happiness and welfare or 'health' and wealth' 719; sometimes used as a noun 720.

Samādhi 1449n-1451; derivation of, 1449n; two kinds of S. viz. Samprajñāta or Sabīja and Asamprajñāta or nirbīja 1450-51; there is a blending of subject and object, the individual soul and paramātman 1450; sabīja a. of four stages, 1450-51; the word Samādhi, was known to V. S., Maitrāyaṇī Up. and Gītā, 1390, 1450.

Samāja (festive meeting), m. by Āp. Dh. S. and Aśoka 1017.

Sāman: meaning of, 1221; means a sāmaveda chant 1543; means also 'reconciliation' 1543; parts (five) of each S. 1544.

Samāsasaṁhitā, of Varāhamihira, quoted by Utpala 742n.

Sāmaveda 721n, 733n, 734, 1221 (has not one thousand Śākhās, but gītis), 1543 (all verses of, except about 75, are taken from the Ṛgveda).

Samayamayūkha 66n, 83, 111, 129n, 133-35, 136n-37n, 145-46n, 154n, 170n, 180-81n, 182, 184, 189n, 198n, 215n, 218, 227n-8n, 232n, 243n-4n.

Samayapradīpa 29, 40n, 41, 50, 52, 75n, 81n, 125.

Samayaprakāśa, 91n, 97n, 99n, 248, 663, 664n-5n, 672-674n, 675n.

Sāmavidhāna-brāhmaṇa 733-4, 790, 1161.

Sāmba, an Upapurāṇa m. by Matsya, Alberuni and Dānasāgara 873, 910; date of, discussed 872-3; Prof. Hazra himself finds that more than half of it belongs to period 950–1500 A. D., 873; no evidence that the half of S. which Prof. Hazra puts down between 500-800 A. D. is earlier than 800 A. D. or even 950 A. D., 873.

Sāmba, son of Kṛṣṇa, revised Bhaviṣyat-purāṇa and established images of the Sun in four places, acc. to Varāhapurāṇa, 818n, 898.

Saṁhitā or Śākhā (natural astrology), a branch of Jyotiṣa, subjects of, 479.

Śami and Śamī : occur in some Ṛgveda verses 723; Sāyaṇa explains as 'Karman' (religious rite, action) 723–4.

Śamī : (vide under Śānti) : cult of, is ancient 194; plant or branch, connected with appeasing terrible aspects 724; was supposed to destroy sins and appease the wrath of gods when worshipped 192, 725; worshipped on Vijayādaśamī 190.

Sāmidhenī verses generally 15, 726; spoken of, as thunderbolt 726–7.

Sāmrājyalakṣmī-pīṭhikā, observances in 18n.

Saṁsāra (cycle of births and deaths), 1563–65; Kāma as the root of s. as it gives rise to volition (kratu) which leads to deeds; 1548; Manu frequently employs it 1564–65; word occurs in Kaṭhopaniṣad and Śv. Up. 1564.

Saṁsarpa : (vide intercalary month) : 671–2; distinguished from Aṁhaspati 672.

Saṁskāra (in P. M. S.) is what when performed makes a substance fit for some purpose 1308n.

Saṁskārakaustubha 1290.

Saṁskāraprakāśa 614, 1244n–5n.

Saṁskāraratnamālā, 614, 1121n, (holds nyāsa is avaidika).

Samuccaya (or abhyuccaya, addition or combination) 1328–29; Mit. on Yāj. III. 243 furnishes examples of S. in the matter of expiations from Dharmaśāstra 1328–29.

Samudragupta, greatest of the Gupta emperors 843; performed Aśvamedha that had long been in abeyance, 1028.

Samuel, Viscount 148?n, 1575n.

Samuel, 194 (Bible).

Saṁvartaka (terrible) fires or clouds at time of Pralaya, 686n.

Saṁvatsara : identified with Prajāpati in Śat. Br. 65; years of Bārhaspatya type were so called 660–61; names of, were supposed to indicate different consequences for each 662.

Sāṁvatsarikasattra, observances in, 18n.

Saṁyuttanikāya 1005n.

Sanātanadharma : the word occurs in Matsya-purāṇa and in Khanapur plates of Mādhavavarman (6th century A. D.) 945n, 1629n; meaning of, 1629 and n.

Sanatkumāra and Nārada, story of, in Chān. Up. VII. 26. 2, where the former is called Skanda, both being semi-divine, the former being a mind-born son of Brahmā.

Sānchi: sculptures on eastern gateway of 127, 1653n (works on the stūpa at).

Sandhyā, is period of three ghaṭikās before and after sunrise 438.

Sandhyā (morning and evening worship): nyāsa included in S. by some works 1121-22; worship of the Sun daily in the evening is to be done with some mantras addressed to Varuṇa (in Ṛg. I. 25) acc. to Parāśaramādhavīya and modern Mahārāṣṭra practice, 1311n.

Śāṇḍilya, vide under Pāñcarātra 955n.

Śāṇḍilya-bhakti-sūtra 952n, 966-7, 958n, 959, 965n, 966, 968 (path of bhakti open to all including cāṇḍālas); com. on by Svapneśvara 956-59, 965-6n.

Saṅgha, elective procedure in 1663.

Śanipradoṣa-vrata 421.

Sanjana J. E.: a. of 'Dogma of re-incarnation'; criticized 1605-1608, 1611; asserts that a man who believes in re-incarnation is not a true Zoroastrian, which is criticized 1605-6; employs offensive language about those who differ from him, particularly about Theosophists, 1606-7; his interpretation of Manu VI. 63 is wrong 1565; is guilty of serious mistakes 1607-8.

Saṅkalpa, necessary in every religious rite; contents of, 650; formula of, in vrata, 81; in a fast or vrata to be made in the morning 202.

Śaṅkarācārya (vide Abhinavagupta, Devala, Śrīharṣa Tārānāth): 731n-2n, 779n, 821, 824-26, 860n, 866 (Prof. Hazra misunderstands what Ś. says), 900n, 906n, 944n, 955 (on Pāñcarātra), 963n, 1032-1045, 1153 (on V. S. I. 1. 1.), 1155n, 1158, 1160 (Pūrvamīmāṁsā and Vedānta-sūtras as one śāstra), 1154-65, 1172 (on Gītā 13. 4), 1202, 1205, 1211 and n. (on Apūrva), 1218, 1241n, 1250 (quotes sūtra in which the words paryudāsa, pratiṣedha and vikalpa occurs), 1251n, 1254-5 (Agnihotra as ārādupakāraka in acquiring knowledge of brahma), 1289-90, 1292n, 1297n, 1300, 1307n, 1359n, 1360-62, 1365, 1388 (position as to Yoga), 1389n, 1390, 1400n, 1426, 1432, 1434-35 (on Chān. Up. I. 3. 3, misunderstood by Caland, Dumont and others), 1435 (Ś. on Bṛ. Up. I. 5. 3 and on Praśna), 1446, 1468, 1469-70, 1484n, 1485, 1488n, (explains 'asat'), 1499n, 1500, 1504-5, 1507-8, 1516n, 1517, 1541-42, 1546n, 1548, 1552n, 1554, 1561n, 1563n-64n, 1566-68, 1576n, 1579n, 1588, 1591, 1607; doctrine of Māyā declared by Padmapurāṇa as Bauddha in disguise, 976; holds that Bādarāyaṇa a. of V. S. is different from Vedavyāsa, a. of Mahābhārata, 1166; horoscope of, in com. on Saundaryalaharī examined 629; Prapañcasāratantra, ascribed to Ś. dilates upon a mantra called Trailokyamohana for accomplishing six cruel acts 1070; Saundaryalaharī, ascribed to S. 1049n; says that Manusmṛti and Devala-dharmasūtra accept some doctrines of Sāṅkhya system 1352; verses quoted by Ś on V. S. I. 3. 30 as Smṛtis, set out, identified in Śāntiparva and Purāṇas 1568n; view that Śūdras like Vidura and Dharmavyādha had brahmajñāna and a śūdra may secure mokṣa by reading the Itihāsa and Purāṇas, and Vācaknavi Gārgī, though a woman, possessed brahmajñāna 921n, 1642.

Śaṅkaradigvijaya of Mādhavācārya, 1010n; contains an absurd story about king Sudhanvan's order for persecuting Buddhists 1010n; throws all history and chronology to winds to glorify Śaṅkarācārya 1010n.

Śaṅkaragītā 79n.

Śaṅkaravijaya of Ānandagiri, 1136n.

Saṅkarṣa-kāṇḍa, exercised hardly any influence on Dharmaśāstra 1159; for discussion about devatās 1159; held to be a pariśiṣṭa (supplement) of Pūrvamīmāṁsāsūtra by Appayadīkṣita 1159; much neglected in later times 1159; views differ about its authorship 1158-59.

Śaṅkha-likhita-sūtra 52, 527, 1590.

Saṅkhasmṛti 27, 1016n, 1440 (same verse as Manu VI. 72), 1441 (same in Manu), 1448n (eight verses quoted).

Sāṅkhāyana-brāhmaṇa 24, 26, 241, 659n, 726-7, 1153, 1234 (on the observances of a sacrificer).

Śāṅkhāyana-gṛhyasūtra 27, 730, 761 (on Mahāśānti), 1042.

Śāṅkhāyanaśrautasūtra 26, 671n, 672, 816, 1032 (meaning of Tantra).

Sāṅkhya system: (vide Devala, elements, guṇas, Kapila, Pañcaśikha, Upaniṣad, Vindhyavāsa): and Dharmaśāstra 1352-1384; and Yoga in Śv. Up. 1352; S. and Yoga are one acc. to Śāntiparva 1367; contradictions in S. pointed out by Śaṅkarācārya 1357n; does not include time among 25 Tattvas but includes it under Karaṇas 468; derived from the word saṅkhyā that has two senses 1378; dispassionate appraisal of Sāṅkhya by Dr. Behanan 1384; described in Purāṇas such as Kūrma and Viṣṇu 825n; eighteen schools of, acc. to Chinese sources 1353; enumeration of 25 tattvas of, 694n; evolution of world, acc. to S. described in Yāj. Smṛti 825-26; expounded by Kapilamuni to Āsuri 1356; followers of S. system explained Vedānta passages as favourable to them and V. S. I. 1. 5-18 refute it, 1218; high praise of, in Śānti-parva 1363–65; is called Sāṅkhyatantra by Śaṅkarācārya 1032; is near to Vedānta because of the theory of non-difference between cause and effect that it propounds 1352; is within Vedic orthodoxy as to those views not in conflict with Veda 1362; kaivalya is the goal of S. 1361n; Kapila Muni, originator of S. acc. to Sāṅkhyakārikā 1356; S. Kṛtānta expressly m. in Gītā (18. 13) 1378; Mahābhārata (Śāntiparva) and Āśvamedhika and S. 1363–1371; means 'tattvajñāna' or 'a person knowing ultimate reality' in the Gītā 1378; most fundamental conceptions of S. are two distinct essences viz. Prakṛti or Pradhāna and Puruṣas (that are many), three guṇas, twenty-five tattvas 1357–1359; numerous teachers about puruṣa, mentioned in Śāntiparva 1367, 1374; one of the six well-known darśanas 1352; poets like Kālidāsa and Bāṇa utilize S. doctrines 1384; propounds a theory of cosmic evolution based on reason alone without postulating God as creator 1358; S. propounded in the Śāntiparva is a good deal different from the standard S. 1370-3; Purāṇas dwell at some length on S. doctrines 1382–84; puruṣa is bhoktṛ (and not kartṛ) 1358; origin and development of S. is a difficult problem, 1353; Pañcaśikha (vide under that word) 1371; relation of S. to Upaniṣads, discussed 1362–3; relied on Upaniṣad passages (such as 'ajām-ekām' in Śv. Up. IV. 5) in support of their views about Prakṛti and guṇas; some philosophers combined S, Yoga and Parameśvara and some Mahābhārata references to S are made with reference to them 1365, 1371; striking passages where S. doctrines and terms appear in Bhagavad-gītā 1375–6; teachers of, mentioned by Yuktidīpikā 1354–55; teachers such as Pañcādhikaraṇa and Paurika not known before 1384; views of Garbe, Jacobi and Oldenberg on S. and Upaniṣads 1363; went through several phases 1353; why so called 1377–78; works like Buddhacarita, Carakasaṃhitā, Suśruta, Manusmṛti, Yāj. smṛti, Devaladharmasūtra mention S. tenets 1378–1381; works and papers on S. system mentioned in one place 1353n.

Sāṅkhya kārikā of Īśvarakṛṣṇa: 468, 694n, 900n, 1033n, (calls S. system 'Tantra'), 1353, 1359n, 1364n, 1374n, 1376n–77n, 1379n, 1383n, 1402–3, 1410; commentaries on viz. Māṭharavṛtti, Yuktidīpikā, that of Gauḍapāda, Sāṅkhyatattvakaumudi of Vācaspati 1354–55; commentary called Jayamaṅgalā ascribed to Śaṅkarācārya, 1355; date of, between 250–325 A. D., 1354-5, 1357; foremost exponent of Sāṅkhya from at least 5th Century A. D. 1353, 1356; known as Sāṅkhya-saptati and in Chinese as Suvarṇasaptati 1356n; quoted by Śaṅkarācārya 1353, 1358n; translated into Chinese by Paramārtha in 546 A. D. 1353.

Sāṅkhya-pravacanasūtra 1353, 1358n; ed. by Garbe, a late work of about 1400 A. D., 1353; bhāṣya on, of Vijñānabhikṣu (about 1550 A. D.) 1355; states that no śāstra that admits a soul is unauthoritative, that there is no contradiction among śāstras, each being of full force and true in its own sphere, that Sāṅkhya is not in irreconcilable conflict with the doctrine of a personal God or with advaita Vedānta 976, 1355; com. of Bhāvā Gaṇeśa on 1373.

Sāṅkhya-tattvakaumudī of Vācaspati 468n, 1214 (quotes verse defining what svarga means), 1359n, quotes Rājavārtika on topics of Ṣaṣṭitantra).

Saṅkrānti (vide under 'sesame') 211-221; acts forbidden on 221; bath in Ganges on, highly commended 220; baths to be taken and gifts to be made during puṇyakāla (holy time) 217-218; bhoga, meaning of, 216n; came to be deified and identified with Durgā 213; each of twelve S. in a year has seven names depending on the week days or certain classes of Nakṣatras on which it occurs 215; each of seven S. is beneficial to different varṇas and classes of people 216; gifts of special kinds recommended on twelve S. 218; grant (ancient) made on Jupiter's entrance into Vṛṣabha (bull) rāśi 212n; japa and gifts on, yield inexhaustible results 214; means only Ravisaṅkrānti acc. to late works 213; merit of gifts on several S. 220; Puṇyakāla, differing views on, 216-7; puṇyakālas for the passage of the Sun and planets entering into a rāśi 212-13; śrāddha on S. prescribed by some works 221; thirty ghaṭikās before and after the moment of Sun's entrance into a rāśi are said to be time of S. but the holiest times differ 215-216; Vratas, fifteen, on S. 221.

Saṅkṣepa-śārīraka 1603.

Sannipatyopakāraka (actions or rites); are also called Sāmavāyika or āśrayi-karmāṇi 1254; are acts such as the pounding of grains, prokṣaṇa (sprinkling water over substances etc.) i. e. they are Saṃskāraka (make something fit or embellish) 1150.

Sannyāsin: being a S. before discharging the three debts severely condemned by Manu and Yāj. 1511; duties of, in Manusmṛti and Yāj., many of which are applicable to Yogins 1457; Jābālopaniṣad makes becoming disgusted (with worldly life) the condition precedent for becoming a parivrājaka or S. 1514; Upaniṣads inculcate that S. was to give up all actions, even good ones, except living by begging till the body lasted 1514; 1644 (rules for S. and for forest hermit identical to some extent; 1645 (most honoured at śrāddha dinner and competent to decide doubtful points of dharma).

Sanskrit Literature: about 4500 works from S. were translated into Tibetan 1041; hardly any evidence exists of the translation of Chinese or Tibetan works into Sanskrit, 1039–1040; much of it has perished beyond recovery 481; much that survives is religious and not intended to be a full treatment of any topic 481; is vast and varied, continued for at least three thousand years, penetrated countries in S. E Asia and gave rise to several sciences such as comparative philology: 1650; Histories of S. L. by various scholars 1650; for variety and vastness of, vide under H. Gowen.

Śantama 722; Ś occurs about two dozen times in Ṛg. and means ' beneficent ' 722.

Śāntarakṣita (705–762 A. D.); a. of Tattvasaṅgraha 1037, 1212n; frequently criticizes Kumārila without naming him but does not name or quote Prabhākara 1191; pupil Kamalaśīla wrote com. on Tattvasaṅgraha 1037n, 1191 (names Kumārila many times).

Śantālīya hymn (Ṛg. VII. 35. 1–15) 720n–91.

Śānti 719–814: (vide under adbhuta, Āśleṣā, birds, bees, Hoens, Kauśikasūtra, Gomukhaprasavaśānti, nimitta, Rāhu, nakṣatras, navagrahas, prasavaśānti, Udakaśānti, utpāta, Vināyakaśānti, Vāstuśānti, Vasantarāja): Aśvaśānti, for removal of dangers to and diseases of horses 804; auspicious tithis for adbhutaśānti 790; by owner of a cow that had delivery in Bhādrapada or a she-buffalo that had it in Pauṣa or Māgha or on a Wednesday or a mare by day, which are sometimes performed even now 789–90; connected with Śakunas 804; cult of Śāntis extensive in medieval times as in Madanaratna 736–738; definitions of, 756–757; derivation of, from root ' Śam ' 719; efficacy of śāntis against āntarikṣa and divya utpātas 746; elaborate treatment of S. in post-vedic literature, 734–35; extensive literature on Śāntis indicated 734–735; for bad dreams by reciting Ṛg. X. 164. 1–5, 728–729; for birth of twins to a woman or mare or cow 738; for eclipses described 765–766; for ten dreams m. in Ait. Ār. 731; for dreams in Atharvaveda verses and in Gṛhya works 732–34; for earthquakes, eclipses (solar and lunar) 739n; for fall of meteors 766–7»; for forest dog barking, vulture shrieking or owl hooting 728; for images laughing and weeping 734, 770; for one possessed by an evil spirit 734; for one coming to life after his body is taken to cemetery 889; for showers of falling stars and meteors, earthquakes 734; for unusual appearances (adbhuta) 733–734; for utpātas (unusual occurrences or portents) 734; for utpātas not given in other works is given by Kauśika-sūtra 739n; Gajaśānti for removal of diseases of elephants differs in different works 801–4; if Mantra not known Gāyatrī is to be repeated 108 or 1028 times 789; individual Śāntis 748–804; list of Śānti hymns in the Ṛgveda 813; many of the ancient śāntis and many described in medieval works are no longer performed and the few that are performed now may be stopped in the near future 735, 814; mantras in S. refer to the rite performed, the deity of the rite and benefit prayed for 788n; meaning of, is propitiatory rite for averting a deity's wrath, appeasement of deity or planet or a calamity or unholy event 719, 720; means of ś. were various but simple in the Brāhmaṇa period, such as the recitation of a Vedic verse or hymn or a Sāman or water 726–27; number of Ś. very large 757; numerous śāntis m. by Varāhamihira 747; occasions on which Ś. was performed 757; on child's birth on an unlucky nakṣatra prescribed by Kauśikasūtra 524n, 735; on child's birth on certain nakṣatras such as Āśleṣā, Mūla, Jyeṣṭhā, on certain tithis such as amāvāsyā and 14th of dark half, on yogas like Vaidhṛti and Vyatīpāta, on birth of twins 771–773; Ś. on son's birth after three successive births of daughters and vice versa performed even now which is called, Trikaprasava-śānti, 771–3; Ś. when a great-grandfather sees a newly born great-grandson 782–783; on completion of 70 years or on 7th night of 7th month of 77th year 760; rites of Ś., pauṣṭika and mahādānas to be performed in ordinary fire 757; subjects treated of in Madanaratna on Śānti exhibit an extensive cult of śāntis 736–738; three meanings of word Ś. in early Vedic texts 728; three important words in connection with Ś. are adbhuta, nimitta and utpāta 740n; time for 760–761; no definite rule as to time, tithis and nakṣatras for, if there is no hurry 761; Udakaśānti 783–787; Vājasaneya Saṃhitā, Chap. 36, employed as Śānti in Pravargya rite 724; when a person suffers from fever śāntis from the tithis from the one on which fever started or from the week day 788; Ś. when a person's nakṣatra of birth is affected by a malefic planet or aspect or his rāśi has eclipse in it 787-88; word Ś. does not occur in Ṛgveda, but occurs in Tai. S., Atharvaveda, Vāj. S. and Brāhmaṇas 719, 720, 723.

Śāntikādhyāya, is Ṛg. VII. 35. 1-11, 813.

Śāntimayūkha 650n, 730, 735, 752-53n, 755-6, 761, 771n, 773n.

Śāntiparva, 27, 42, 54, 81n, 100n, 118n, 129, 142, 202, 466n, 467, 620n, 687, 692n-93, 696n, 744 (auspicious nimittas), 821, 854 (the verse 'Guror-apyava-liptasya etc.), 939n (on tṛṣṇā), 945 on ahiṃsā), 952-4, 970, 1027, 1161 (pupils of Vyāsa); 1165 (Pāñcarātra-śāstra expounded), 1166 and n., 1256 (mentions Dharmaśāstras), 1266n, 1377n, 1384 (high praise of Sāṅkhya), 1385, 1390, 1395-6, 1399 (quoted by Yoga-bhāṣya) 1400-01 (Yoga matters), 1416n. 1431, 1444 (on pratyāhāra), 1446, 1448, 1461, 1470n, 1503, 1508 (immortality of soul), 1516n, 1557-8 (Devayāna and Pitṛ-yāṇa paths), 1561n, 1565 (life is far more miserable than happy), 1567 (theory of Kalpas etc.), 1573 (souls of six colours), 1574-75, 1582, 1595-6, 1597n, 1598, 1629-30, 1636 (qualities necessary for being treated as brāhmaṇa), 1645, 1648 (aprotheosis of satya).

Śāntiratna or Śāntikamalākara of Kamalākārabhaṭṭa 587n, 633n, 735, 749n, 761n, 772, 788n, 792, 813n.

Śāntiratnākara 771n, 773.

Saptārcis, a Paurāṇika mantra to be recited in Śrāddha 920.

Saptarṣis (Ursa Major) 479, 498; Kṛttikās as wives of, 498n.

Saptaśalākā cakra, in marriage 814.

Saptaśatī (vide under 'Śūdra'), 780n; a person should himself recite Ś. in Navarātra or engage a person (either pāṭhaka or vācaka) to read it to him 172; method of reading a portion of Ś one day and continuing reading next day 173; person engaged to read S. was to be handsomely requited for his labour by gifts of gold, silver, cows etc. 173.

Saradakanta Ganguly, 699n.

Śāradātilaka (about 11th century A. D.): (vide under Kuṇḍalinī, Cakras); a Tāntrik work of over 4500 verses 534, 1101 and n, 1103, 1106, 1108, 1109n-10n, 1060, 1099, 1100; Chapters VII to XXIII are devoted to mantras of Sarasvatī, Lakṣmī, Bhuvaneśvarī, Durgā, Tripurā, Gaṇeśa, Candramas 1103; elaborate treatment of Dīkṣa in, 1107; elaborate treatment of nyāsa, 1120; examples of mantras of five or more syllables in, 1096n; influenced by Sāṅkhya 1384; names 'Janma, Sampad, Vipad' etc. as astrological terms 534; names and defines only nine Mudrās 1125; profusely quoted by Dharmaśāstra works 1063; on Prāṇapratiṣṭhā 162n; qualifications required in a disciple by Ś. 1071; speaks of Śakti as proceeding from Saguṇa Śiva, as Śabda-brahma and as flashing like lightning in Mūlādhāracakra and as Kuṇḍalinī in the human body 1060–61; summary of contents of, 1060–1063: though generally a sober Tantra, mentions the six cruel magic rites, defines them, provides that six devatās are the presiding deities of these and must be worshipped at commencement of those rites for bringing women under control or for paralysing or killing an enemy, 1070, 1103; though generally sober prescribes drawing yantras for cruel purposes 1138–39; treats of mantras and mudrās but hardly ever of the other makāras (of wine, fish, coitus etc.) 1063; commentary of Rāghavabhaṭṭa on, is learned and was composed at Benaras in 1494 A. D., 1060n.

Sārasvata, a. on Astrology 593.

Sarasvatīsthāpana; establishment of books on 9th of Āśvina bright half 442.

Sārāvalī (of Kalyāṇavarman on astrology): 546–47n, 548, 561, 563n, 571–2, 574, 577, 585, 588–90, 805n; states that it borrowed essential matters from the extensive work of Yavanendra 563n.

'Sarasvatībhavana studies' 1062n.

Śarayū, river in Kosala 531n.

Śārīrakasūtra: composed by Jaimini had, acc. to Naiṣkarmyasiddhi, first two sūtras identical with those of V. S. 1175.

Sarkar, Prof. B. K.: on 'Folk element in Hindu culture' 60.

Sarkar, Prof. Jadunath, a. of 'History of Aurangzeb' 1019.

Sarkar, Mr. Kishorilal, a. of 'Mīmāṁsā rules of Interpretation' 1284; obsession of, that he has to show that Jaimini's rules were not inferior to Maxwell's 1284; some examples where Mr. Sarkar failed to grasp correctly what Jaimini and Śabara meant 1284n.

Sarpabali: performed on Full Moon day of Śrāvaṇa, acc. to Gṛhyasūtras 126.

Sarton, Prof. G., a. of 'A History of Science' (1953), 482, 513–14n, 516n, 566, 570n, 596, 678, 689n, 1502n; charges Western writers with unpardonable omissions 513; on supposed influence of the Moon on lunacy, menstruation etc. 552.

Sarūpa-Bhāratī 1359.

Sarvadarśana-kaumudī of Mādhava Bhāratī 1182n, 1188n, 1307, 1318n.

Sarvadarśana-saṅgraha of Mādhavācārya: 978n, 1139; does not mention Tāntrik system 874, 1139, 1652; quotes verses from Bṛhaspati very similar to those in Viṣṇupurāṇa 974n; some hold that it was composed by a nephew of Mādhavācārya 1182n.

Ṣarvagandha (all fragrant substances) 443.

Sarvānukramaṇī of Ṛgveda 997.

Sarvasiddhānta-saṅgraha 874.

Sarvatobhadra, a Maṇḍala described by Śāradā-tilaka 1133; meaning of, 1132-33, 1134 (a verse in that form).

Śarvavarmāgaṇa (mantras) 796n.

Sarvauṣadhi 183n, 444, 759.

Sarvodaya ideal 1683.

Ṣaṣṭitantra, of Pañcaśikha : so called because it deals with 60 topics and contained sixty thousand gāthās, 1373; topics (sixty) dealt with in, enumerated by Yuktidīpikā and Rājavārtika 1358-59n; topics of, in Sāṅkhyakārikā 1359n.

Śāstradīpikā of Pārthasārathi 86, 1179n, 1180, 1189, 1208, 1212n; 1225n, 1260, 1288n, 1290n, 1294n, 1309n, 1317n 1328n; com. Mayūkhamālikā on 86n; com. called .Yuktisnehaprapūraṇī on, 1194n.

Śāstra (or Śāstras, acc. to context); anubandhas of each, are four, named and illustrated 1179-80; false Bauddha and Jaina, Kāpāla, Vāma Ś. were composed, acc. to such Purāṇas as Kūrma, Padma, Viṣṇu by Śiva and Viṣṇu for deluding ungodly people and the asuras, 974-75, 977-8; such as Nyāya, Vaiśeṣika, Pāśupata, Sāṅkhya, declared to be tāmasa by Padmapurāṇa, 976-78; regulates activities and abstentions for men by Veda or works composed by men 1182, 1262; that are not directly opposed to Veda and Smṛti may be accepted by Vaidika followers to that extent 974n; works on Ś. try to reduce options to the minimum and try to assign to apparently conflicting passages separate and definite provinces 1252-53.

Sastri, Pandit Aiyanath, 1354, 1380n, 1382n,

Sastri Pandit K. S. Ramaswami, a. of 'Introduction to Tantrarahasya' 1201.

Sastri Pandit V. A. Ramaswami, paper of, on Saṅkarṣa-kāṇḍa 1159n, 1188 (paper on 'Kumārila and Bṛhaṭ-ṭikā), 1190 (Introduction to Tattvabindu), 1192 (opinion of, that Prabhākara based his views on Bādari's has no tangible evidence in support).

Sastri Prof. K. A. Nilakanta, paper of, on Jaimini and Bādarāyaṇa, propounds that there were three Jaiminis and two Bādarāyaṇas and criticism of these views 1161-64, 1167; a. of 'Śrī Vijaya' 1618n.

Ṣaṣṭyabdapūrti śānti or Ugraratha śānti 757-760; performed even now on completion of 60 years in the month and on Nakṣatra of birth, 757-8; procedure of 758-60.

Sasyotsava (festival on ready crops) 445.

Śatacaṇḍī-pāṭha and Sahasracaṇḍīpāṭha, method of, in Navarātra 173.

Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa : 17, 18n, 23n, 25, 35, 63–4, 72n, 166n, 223, 464, 489, 491–2, 495n, 496–7n, 498, 506–7, 510, 523, 537, 546, 571n, 648n (mentions Aśvamedha by Janamejaya), 675, 689, 691, 700 (knows Vedāṅgas), 725, 731n, 738n (śānti on cow yielding milk tinged with blood), 740n, 784n, 816 (mentions Itihāsa-Purāṇa), 817, 992 (traces of avatāras), 1078 (on great difference between Surā and Soma), 1096n, 1116 (on importance of dīkṣā in sacrifices), 1131 (maṇḍaleṣṭakā), 1153, 1190n ('svādhyāyoऽdhyetavyaḥ'), 1213 (on heaven), 1227n (verb in present tense construed as a vidhi by Sm. C.), 1270n (about offering the flesh of a bull or goat to a king or a learned brāhmaṇa as a guest), 1301, 1304n, 1416, 1490n (on Ṛg. X. 129), 1498, 1526n, 1533–36, 1554 (explains Ṛg. X. 88. 15), 1589n; com. of Dvivedagaṅga on, 1554n.

Śātātapa, Smṛti of, 31, 215n, 216n, 220n, 222n, 245–6.

Śātavāhana kings, 842n.

Ṣaṭcakranirūpaṇa (a Tāntrik work, 1577 A. D.), 1050, 1060n.

Satīshcandra, M. M. Dr., a. of 'Introduction of the alphabet in Tibet' 1040.

Ṣaṭpañcāśikā of Pṛthuyaśas, son of Varāhamihira 602n.

Sattā, vide under 'Reality'.

Sattras (srcrifices of long duration to be performed by brāhmaṇas alone) : Jaimini deals with them in PMS VI. 6. 16–32 and elsewhere and neither Śabara nor Kumārila says anything about their being forbidden in Kali 1268.

Ṣaṭ-tilī–one who performs six actions with sesame 434.

Ṣaṭ-triṁśanmata 243n, 246.

Sātvata, identified with Pañcarātra and statements about its transmission from Bṛhaspati to Uparicara Vasu and then by degrees to sages called Citrasikhaṇḍins 953.

Saturn : special śānti when S. occupies the 12th, 1st and 2nd rāśi from rāśi of birth 756; statements in Mahābhārata about positions of S. 532; ten names of S. 756n.

Satya (truthfulness), one of the five yamas in Yoga, one of the ten yamas of Yāj. III. 312 and one of the five duties enjoined by Manu (X. 63) on men of all varṇas 1419–20; five occasions on which a falsehood was allowed to ordinary men by Smṛtis and Mahābhārata, but for a Yogin Satya was absolute, unless speaking the truth would result in the ruin of creatures 1420–21; Ṛgveda and Muṇḍakopaniṣad highly eulogise S. 1024; equated with Dharma in Bṛ. Up. 1627.

Satya–gradually took the place of ṛta 1627–28; satya and dharma occupy the most prominent place in the final exhortation to a pupil by teacher in Tai.

Up. 1627 ; said to be ancient dharma of 13 aspects including ahiṁsā, dayā etc. 1648.
Satya, a. on Astrology q. frequently by Varāhamihira 593.
Satyanārāyaṇavrata 437.
Satyāṣāḍha-śrautasūtra 53.
Satyavrata, an author 49.
Saubhāgyāṣṭaka, eight things are so called 457.
Śauca (cleanliness or purity), one of the Y. S. niyamas, 1421n ; of two kinds, bāhya (of the body), ābhyantara (mental) 1422, 1648 ; highest s. is the one that relates to wealth or money, acc. to Manu 1422.
Śaunaka, a. of Smṛti 758 ; allows a śūdra to adopt a son and so it was held by V. M. that he may get the homa performed through a brāhmana 1296.
Saundarananda of Aśvaghoṣa : on Nirvāṇa 940n, 941.
Saundaryalaharī 1136n, 1137–38 ; ascribed to first Śaṅkarācārya 629, 1049 ; commentary Sudhāvidyotinī 629 ; com. on, by Lakṣmīdhara 1139n ; discussion as to authorship of, 1049n ; on identifying cakras with five elements and mind 1062n.
Sauptikaparva 130n.
Saurapurāṇa 104n, 830 (names 18 Purāṇas, Vāyu being 4th and Brahmāṇḍa last), 911.
Sautrāmaṇī : described by Jaimini, Śabara, and Kumārila and they say nothing against cups of wine 1269 ; occasions of 1079 ; wine was not drunk therein by sacrificer or priests, but some one had to be hired or it was poured on an ant-hill, 1079.
Sauvy, Alfred, a. of 'Fertility and survival' 1688.
Savanas (lit. pressings of Soma), three, morning, midday, and evening 537n.
Śavasādhanavidhi : described by Kaulāvalīnirṇaya, Kulacūḍāmaṇitantra and others 1109.
Sāvitrī : story of, in Mahābhārata and Purāṇas 91–92.
Sāvitrī-caturdaśi : in Bengal, on 14th of dark half of Jyeṣṭha 93.
Sāvitrī-vrata : vide Vaṭasāvitrīvrata ; B A. Gupte on, 94.
Sāyana, meaning of 712.
Sāyaṇa, a. of commentaries on the Ṛgveda, other Vedas and Brāhmaṇas : 26n (on Ait. Br.), 494n, 511n (explains Ait. Br.), 538n, 671n, 720, 723n, 724, 729n, 735n (Intro. to Atharvaveda), 859n, 980–81n, 984–5, 1031n, 1385–6, 1433n (on Tai. S. I. 6. 3. 3 assigns to five prāṇas locations and operations in the body), 1488n, 1538, 1543, 1600n, 1646n.
Sayce, A. H ; 598 (on Aryan problem) ; points out that Hittite numerals are Sanskrit 599n ; rebukes German scholars for fondness for treating negative evidence as of great value 598n.
Sāyujya, a kind of mukti 1631 (different meanings at different times).
Schopenhauer, on Upaniṣads

1627, 1647n. ,
Sciaparelli, G.: a. of 'Astronomy in the Old Testament' 576n; on Babylonian stones placed in fields with zodiacal signs 595.
Schrader, Otto: a. of 'Intro. to Pañcarātra and Ahirbudhnya Saṃhitā' 996.
Schweitzer, Dr. A., a. of 'Indian thought and its development,' 1646–47n (criticized).
Science, modern, has not been more successful in probing the mystery of creation than the Hebrew expounders of cosmology 1502n; S. at any given stage of time is only provisional 1503n.
Seal, Dr. B. N. a. of 'The positive Sciences of the ancient Hindus' 1436n (explanation of functions of ten prāṇas).
Seasons: five named in Ṛgveda by putting together Hemanta and Śiśira 492; for gods are Vasanta, Grīṣma and Varṣā 491; for pitṛs are Śarad, Hemanta and Śiśira 493; in which establishment of sacred fires was made for the three varṇas 493; number of, variously given as three, five, six or seven 492; Prof. Renou's view that 'ṛtu' simply means 'Time' or 'suitable time' or 'rule' or usage 493n; seventh S. means probably the intercalary month 492; six S. with two months for each in Tai. S. 492; Vasanta as the first season in Tai. Br. 492.
Secrecy, about spiritual and even scholastic knowledge (vide under 'Upaniṣads' and 'Nirukta', 'Bible', 1460–61, 1649.
Seddon C. N. translated 'Mirat-i-Ahmadi' 555n.
Sekoddeśaṭīkā, a Buddhist Tāntrik work edited by Mario E. Carelli, 1119, 1123.
Sen, Dr. Sukumar, edited Vipradāsa's Manasāvijaya 125.
Sen Gupta, Prof.: 563 (criticized), 644 (on 'ancient Indian Chronology'), 648, 651n.
Sentence: vide 'Vākya'.
Sermon on the Mount–Christ's discourse in Gospel of Matthew, Chap. V–VII, 1481.
Serpents: vide under 'ahi' and 'Nāgapañcamī'; are saluted in Mantras of Tai. S. and Vāj. S. 126; came to be associated with both Viṣṇu and Śiva 127; included under 'Pañcajana' in Kāṭhakasaṃhitā and Ait. Br. 126; names of, in Atharvaveda 126; stone images of, under sacred trees in Draviḍa country 127; take a heavy toll of life in modern India 127; temples dedicated to nāgas 127.
Śeṣa (serpent), in the Mahābhārata 126.
Śeṣa: (vide Ārādupakāraka and Sannipatyopakāraka): Kumārila discards four out of five definitions of Śeṣa and accepts one viz. Ś. is that which serves the purpose of another, which latter is called Śeṣin, 1253, 1308; dravya (rice grains and the like), guṇa, saṃskāra are always Ś. with reference to yāga, though they may be śeṣin with reference to their own constituent elements, while as regards phala (reward), yāga and the performer, they can be both Śeṣa and Śeṣin with reference to each other 1253, 1308; sacrificial auxiliaries are of two kinds, viz. those that are already accomplished (such as substances) and those that are of the nature of acts, these latter being two-fold, Sannipatyopakāraka and ārād-upakāraka 1253-54; word Ś. often employed in Dharmaśāstra works, 1308-9.

Sesame (tila) importance of, 222; six ways of using s. 222.

Setubandha: com. of Bhāskararāya on Vāmakeśvara-tantra 1045n, 1058n, 1091, 1108, 1136n (on Śrīcakra), 1137-38; emphasizes that worship of Tripurasundarī is upāsanā and not bhakti, the former being of two kinds, one consisting in reciting the mantra of the Devi and the other consisting of the worship of a yantra (or cakra) 1138.

Seven sages: called 'citraśikhaṇḍins' that proclaimed Pañcarātraśāstra 953.

Seven sages (Ursa Major): constellation of, was in Maghā nakṣatra when Yudhiṣṭhira ruled and stayed in one nakṣatra for a hundred years, acc. to Vāyu and Br. S. 520; enumerated in Br. S. 150n; invoked with Ṛgveda mantras 150-151; Pulaha and Pulastya are two of them 517n; worshipped in Ṛṣipañcamīvrata 150n.

Sewell, papers of, on Indian Astronomy 644

Shah, Dr. Priyabālā, a. of paper on two Jaina works on Mudrās 1130.

Shakespeare, in 'Othello' refers to the itching of the eyes as an evil omen 644.

Sham Shastri: on origin of week-days 685.

Sharma, D. S., a. of 'Renaissance of Hinduism' 1647n.

Shastri, Dr. Daksinaranjan, a. of 'Short History of Indian Materialism' 1472n.

Shaving: allowed on certain occasions without consulting astrology 606; proper or inauspicious times and astrological rules about S. in case of grown-up men 606.

Shaw, G. B.: did not believe in immortality of soul nor in the Resurrection of Christ 1550n.

Sheean, Vincent, a. of 'Lead, kindly light', 1463 (on darśana)

Shembavnekar, Prof, explanation by, of 'Mālava-gaṇa-sthiti' in Inscriptions, not acceptable 652n.

Sherring, a. of 'Hindu tribes and castes', 1633 (held that the caste system was invented by Brāhmaṇas).

Shivaji, founder of Maratha Empire, had no factory for the manufacture of cannon 1623

Siddhabhārati (Part II) on some sūtras of Saṅkarṣakāṇḍa 1158n.

Siddhānta (system of philosophy): five acc to Śāntiparva and Viṣṇudharmottara 954.
Siddhānta-vide under Karaṇas; distinguished from Karaṇa 515n; five S. on ancient Indian astronomy 515; Greek influence presumed by some from two siddhāntas being named Pauliśa and Romaka, 515; Karaṇas are based on S. 643; Siddhānta works do not admit Yavana knowledge as basis, nor do they contain any large number of astronomical terms of Greek origin, as in astrology 515; three siddhāntas in use in different parts of India viz. Sūrya S., Ārya-S., and Brāhma-S. 642; two points in which the Siddhāntas differ are length of the year and the revolutions of the moon and planets in a Yuga, Mahāyuga etc. 643.
Siddhāntabindu of Madhusūdana-sarasvatī, 118n.
Siddhānta-kaumudī 5n, 105n, 1169n, 1389n.
Siddhānta-śiromaṇi of Bhāskara 67n, 68n, 643 (specifies matters with which a Siddhānta must deal), 656n, 664-5, 704n.
Siddharāja, king of Gujarat, 1018.
Siddha (or Siddhas acc. to context): persons possessed of miraculous powers, 1075, 1113; Gītā says Kapila is the greatest among S. 1113.
Siddhapuruṣas: 84, acc. to Vajrayāna cult of Buddhism, flourished between 7th and 9th cen. A. D., 1075n, 1115; list of 84 siddhas given by Dr. Bagchi (vide under Bagchi); names of S. still honoured in Nepal and Tibet 1115; tradition about Siddhas continued down to modern times e. g. in the case of Śiva-yogin from Ratnagiri District, 1115n.
Siddhasena, a. on astrology m. by Varāha 593.
Siddhis (miraculous powers); vide under Guhyasamājatantra, levitation; Āp. Dh. S. refers to some of them 1112; arise in five ways (Y. S. IV. 1), 1113, 1452-53; Buddha rebuked his disciple Puṇḍola Bhāradvāja for his exhibition of S. 1037, 1070; eight mentioned in Yogasūtrabhāṣya, Devaladharmasūtra and Prapañcasāra and different from those in Buddhist Tantras of Vajrayāna school like Sādhanamālā 1112n, 1115, 1453n; explained in Yogasūtrabhāṣya 1113; S. are an integral part of Yoga, 1451-52; some of the S. are obstacles in the way of Samādhi, acc. to Yogasūtra 1113; some S. are called 'Madhupratīka' by Vyāsabhāṣya 1402n; Yāj. on signs of Yogasiddhi 1453.
Śikṣā (a Vedāṅga on Phonetics.) 478, 1274.
Śilparatna 1654.
Silver Jubilee Volume of B. O. R. I. 954n.
Simhastha Guru (Jupiter in Lion sign) 447, 613; inauspicious in what undertakings and countries 613.

Simollaṅghana 190.
Sindhu, river, frequently mentioned in Ṛgveda 1613-14.
Sinīvālī (amāvāsyā mixed with 14th tithi) 62; divinity in Ṛgveda, sister of gods and bestower of progeny 62; S. and Rākā defy attempts at a rational etymology 63.
Sinha, Dr. Jadunath, a. of 'History of Indian Philosophy' 845.
Sins: (vide under Prāyaścittas, rebirth, repentance, japa, remembrance of name of Kṛṣṇa or Nārāyaṇa): ancient Indian belief that diseases and bodily defects in this life were caused by S. of past lives 756n; Biblical position for removal of consequences of, 1593; Manu on 91, 1593; methods for removal of consequences of sins, such as confessions, repentance, japa 1592-93; ten 90-91, 448.
Śiras: of Gāyatrī verse, 1099n.
Sircar, Dr D. C., 1395n (on date of Mahābhāṣya), 1408n, 1527n (on text of the Purāṇic list of peoples); edited, 'Select Inscriptions' Vol. I, 850n, 1613n.
Sirius, star, referred to in Ṛgveda and Atharvaveda 498.
Śirovrata, explained 918n.
Sister, house of, to be visited by brother on Bhrātṛdvitīyā, 209-210.
Śiśupāla, Lord of Cedi: story of, in Sabhāparva, Viṣṇu and Brahma Purāṇas 971n; though always enemical to Kṛṣṇa, reached the Lord 971n.
Śiśupālavadha of Māgha (725-775 A. D.), 997.
Śiva, Ardhanārīśvara form of, 18, 1046 (known to Kālidāsa); created sesame on Makara-saṅkrānti 219; thousand names of, in Anuśāsana (31. 153) and Śānti (285. 74ff) and in Śiva-purāṇa 234n, 911; twelve names of, when offering flowers 234; twelve Jyotir-liṅgas of, 911.
Śivadharma, 104n, 911.
Śivapurāṇa 910-11; a Mahā-purāṇa acc. to some Purāṇas 910; close parallels between S. and Kumārasambhava 910n; divided into seven Saṃhitās 910; oldest datable reference to it is Alberuni's, 910.
Śivarahasya, held to be a mere compilation by Ballālasena 869.
Sivaramamurti, C., a. of 'Royal conquests and cultural migrations' 997n, 1130.
Śivarātri, (vide under Mahā-śivarātri, Śiva and Udyāpana): 225-236; description of the procedure of Ś. vrata 230-31; details added by Tithitattva 231; eight names of Śiva 233; Mantras to be repeated 232; Mūlamantra is 'oṃ, namaḥ Śivāya' or 'Śivāya namaḥ' 233; one observing fast on, Jāgara for whole night on Ś. and performing worship is not born again 227; one observing this vrata has to observe certain rules of conduct such as ahiṃsā, truthfulness, sexual purity 229; pāraṇā of a single Ś. 234–235; proper time for Ś. vrata is night, 229; vrata of, is both nitya and kāmya 228; vrata of, may be performed by all human beings 228–229; vrata of, very elaborately described in Tithitattva, Dharmasindhu and other late digests 232; word Ś. is Yogarūdha like 'paṅkaja' 228; worshipper to make a saṅkalpa, apply Tripuṇḍra mark on forehead with ashes and to hold a rosary of rudrākṣa, should go to Śiva temple at night 232; worship includes Nyāsa, Pūjā and Japa 233; Śivaliṅga to be bathed with milk, curds, ghee and honey respectively in the four watches of the night and the mantras also differ in the watches 231; Śiva form to be contemplated upon described 233n; Worship requires offering of 1008 or 108 bilva leaves with the thousand names of Śiva or with mūla-mantra 234; worship in modern times is brief 235; worshippers in some parts drink a beverage called bhāṅg prepared from crushed hemp leaves, which is supposed to be dear to Śaṅkara 235.

Śivasaṃhitā on Haṭhayoga 1127, 1426, 1427n; describes Khecarīmudrā 1454; mentions ten mudrās as best 1127; states that āsanas are 84, 1426.

Skambha (Lit. 'Support or pillar'): (vide under 'creation'): as creator in Atharvaveda 1493–4; in Ṛg. the word occurs but not in the sense of creator.

Skanda, as God of war and commander of Deva armies in classical Sanskrit and in Gītā 1581–82.

Skandapurāṇa 911; found in two forms 911; has 81,000 verses acc. to most authorities but the extant one has several thousands more 833, 911; Kāśikhaṇḍa of S is full of Śleṣa and pariṣaṅkhyā 911–12; most extensive among purāṇas and poses perplexing problems, 911; not earlier than 7th cen. A. D. nor later than 9th, 912; quoted in early Dharmaśāstra digests like Mit, Kalpataru, Aparārka, though sparingly 912; Skanda (God) has no prominent part in the Purāṇa 911; Tāṇtrik influence on 912n; 45, 49n, 69, 72n, 90–92, 100n, 102, 107, 112–3, 117, 132, 146n, 158, 170, 188, 195–6, 203n, 207n, 219, 225, 227, 228n, 232n, 234, 755, 830, 833, 835n, 862 (about sūta), 869 (Ballālasena discards parts of it), 916 (runs down animal sacrifices or sacrifices even with kuśas and flowers), 927n, 932, 948–9 (no dharma higher than doing good to others), 1419 (six aṅgas of Yoga), 1431n, 1445n, 1447n–8n, 1450n, 1455.

Sleep: man in deep s. becomes united for a time with the Real, acc. to Chān. Up. VI. 8. 1., 1506.

Ślokavārtika of Kumārila, 1159n (on Bhavadāsa), 1182n-84n, 1188 (states that very first sentence of Śabara's bhāṣya interpreted in six different ways by commentators) and contains an exposition in about 4000 verses on PMS I. 1), 1202, 1205 (elaborate treatment of word and sense), 1207, 1210 (creation of world by God not proved), 1211-12, 1216n, 1225, 1246 (on meanings of 'na'), 1286n (defines 'uddeśya'), 1376n, 1600n; com. Tātparyatīkā of Umbeka on, criticizes Vārtikakāra who appears to be his guru 1194n,-95n.

Smart, Dr. W. M, a. of 'Origin of earth' 1502n.

Smārtas, observe fast on Ekādaśi and also on Śivarātri 118.

Smith and Carspinki on 'Hindu Arabic numerals' 699n.

Smith D. E, a. of 'History of Mathematics' 516.

Smith R. Martin, a of papers 'on the ancient chronology of India' 845.

Smith, Vincent, a. of 'Early History of India' 1018; a. of 'History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon' 1331n (Buddha seated in Abhayamudrā from Java), 1655.

Smṛti (or Smṛtis, acc. to context); attitude of PMS and Śabara towards S. is that, in case of direct conflict with Veda, S. is to be discarded, but if there be no conflict it may be inferred that S. is based on some Vedic text 1277; is stronger than usages of śiṣṭas 1058; lay down many vidhis by employing optative verbal forms or participles in 'ya', 'tavya' etc. as in Manu IV. 25 and XI. 53, 1228; S. like Gaut. and Manu (II. 7) do claim that they are based on Veda 1277; Maxim of 'sarvaśākhāpratyayanyāya' was extended to S. by Viśvarūpa, Medhātithi and others 1173; often referred to as authoritative by Śabara for several reasons and as equal to Veda, 1257-58; out of about 1000 adhikaraṇas of P. M. sūtra barely a dozen are in any way concerned with S. 1277; principal subject of most S. is dharmas of varṇas and āśramas 1637; since vikalpa was liable to eight faults the tendency developed that all S. passages on a topic were to be so interpreted as to give rise to no conflict nor option by various devices 1273-74; six Vedāṅgas and the Dharmaśāstras are comprehended under Smṛti, acc. to Kumārila 1277; some S. provide that a brāhmaṇa could take food at the house of certain śūdras, 1608; the objection that smṛtis being composed by men are not authoritative is met in Tantravārtika by several answers 1259-60; those parts of smṛti (including Mahābhārata and Purāṇas) that are concerned with Dharma and Mokṣa have the Veda as their source, while Smṛti parts concerned with artha and kāma are based on worldly practices, acc. to Tantravārtika, while episodes and tales in the epic and Purāṇas are arthavādas 1261–63; Yāj. (II. 21) and Nārada propose that when two smṛtis are in conflict, reasoning based on the practices of elders was of greater force, 1266; what those who advocate the historical method or approach towards S. mean 1271–72; when Smṛtis were in conflict with each other, various devices were employed instead of allowing an option, viz. different smṛtis prevailed in the different yugas or that Manu should be followed, or the opinion of the majority be followed 1265–67.

Smṛticandrikā 33, 37, 42n, 52n–53n, 66n, 71n, 75n, 218n, 525n, 659, 661n, 663n, 706n, 898, 905, 1096n, 1121n (quotes Yogiyājñavalkya on nyāsa), 1122, 1130 (names and defines 24 mudrās that are same as in Devībhāgavata), 1192, 1227n (holds that a Śatapatha text, though in the present tense, is to be construed as a vidhi), 1233, 1262, 1270n, 1273n, 1302–3, 1314, 1315–6n, 1372n, 1407, 1439n, 1442n, 1649n

Smṛtikaustubha 81n, 89–90, 101, 119, 150n, 157n, 205, 213, 240–1, 245n, 247n, 248–250n, 606–608n, 663n, 672, 674, 758n, 785n, 811, 1109n, 1134.

Smṛtimañjarī (of Govindarāja), a digest on dharmaśāstra, of which a ms. on prāyaścitta is available 884.

Smṛtimuktāphala 33, 95n, 113, 247n, 1130 (on nyāsa of letters of Gāyatrī on parts of the body), 1121n.

Smṛtisamuccaya 249n.

Smṛtitattva of Raghunandana (1520–1570 A. D.), 836, 1042n.

Smṛtiviveka, a work of Medhātithi q. by him on Manu II. 6, 1258n.

Smṛtyarthasāra 30n.

Snānasūtra of Kātyāyana 1372.

Snātaka: observances of 27.

Snellgrove, Dr. D. L., editor of 'Hevajra-tantra' 1147.

Social Reform–vide a book published by Planning Commission called 'Social Legislation and its role in Social Welfare' and another work' a century of Social Reform' by S. Natarajan 1636n.

Social Service, what it often comes to, acc. to L. P. Jacks 1675n; vide under 'Pūrta' 947–949, 1647n.

Socialistic pattern of Society 1679–80! vague meaning of, as admitted by P. M. Nehru, 1680–81 (who wants a democratic socialism). Socialism, democratic type of, 1681, 1695, Social welfare and welfare State distinguished 1697n.

Solar eclipse at unusual times m. in Mahābhārata 744.

Soloveytchik, G., a. of 'Switzerland in perspective' 1664n.

Soma: in a Soma sacrifice, if soma plant be not available use Pūtīkas as substitute and nothing else, though it be more similar to Soma 1231; is called 'Vṛṣavrata' in Ṛgveda, 19; is called Lord of plants and king of brāhmaṇas in Śat. Br. 740n; S. sacrifice, person resolving to perform, need not consider the season or nakṣatra 507, 523.

Sorokin, Prof. P. A. on 'Yoga' 1456; a. of 'Social and cultural dynamics' 1615, 1617; a of 'Social philosophies in an age of crisis' 1615n Sortes Sanctorum or Sortes Vergilianae, 811.

South: is direction of pitṛs 731n.

Soul: (vide under brahman, māyā): Christians believe in post existence of S. after physical death and not pre-existence 1608; two kinds of Upaniṣad texts, one class saying that souls spring from the Highest Ātman, as sparks from a fire, while many Upaniṣad passages say that individual soul is unborn, immortal, that it is non-different from Supreme Self 1507-8; Vedāntasūtra (II. 3 17) affirms two propositions viz. soul is unproduced and is eternal 1508; when some passages seem to mention creation or dissolution of Jīva, the reference is to the Upādhis (body and mind) 1508.

Soul or Souls: (vide under 'Nāstika', 'Upaniṣads'): 1205-7; are many, eternal, all-pervading, different from the body, are agents (kartṛ) and also bhoktṛ (enjoyers), are of the nature of pure conciousness 1206; it appears (from Chān-Up.) that Asura Virocana believed that the body alone was the soul, 1205n: S. in Sāṅkhya and Yoga 1403; Kumārila complains that the Mīmāṃsā, though not atheistic, was put forward by some as Lokāyata 1205; popular belief in Vedic Saṃhitās and Brāhmaṇas about individual S. was that by good deeds S. reaches heaven, becomes immortal and enjoys various pleasures 1498; P. M. S. does not expressly affirm the existence of the soul in any sūtra but Śabara propounds it in an elaborate argument 1205-6; question whether individual S. is also a creation like trees and shrubs, discussed in Up. 1507; reward of many rites being Svarga, it is implied that P. M. S. accepts continous existenc of the soul 1206; Ślokavārtika devotes 148 verses to this subject and the Tantravārtika also briefly deals with it 1206.

South Indian Architecture and sculpture, works on, 1656.

Spells or Charms: against poison in Ṛg. I. 191, 1036; found in plenty in Atharvaveda 1035; Kṛtyādūṣaṇa and Śatrunāśana hymns of Atharvaveda, 1036; Sp. similar to those in Hindu or Buddhist works exist in Old English, Old High German, Keltic 1107; sleep-inducing S.

(Ṛg. VII. 53. 5-8) interpreted by western scholars as a lover's charm for a clandestine meeting, which is not acceptable 1035; woman's S. against her co-wife in Ṛg. X. 145., 1035.

Spengler: held view that civilizations have brith, growth, decline and death and when dead do not revive 1616-17; view of, dissented from by De Beus and Prof. Sorokin 1617.

Śrāddha: (vide under Brāhmaṇas, Hārīta, Saṅkrānti) Baud. Dh. S., Manu, Vasiṣṭha prescribe that a large company of Brāhmaṇas should not be invited at S. and that the learning and character of those to be invited should be carefully examined, but purāṇas went against both these 930-931; brāhmaṇas invited to dinner on S. should recite Vedas, Itihāsa-Purāṇa 820; times for Kāmya S. on saṅkrānti, and other occasions 221; not to be performed at night except on eclipses 244; Paurāṇika mantras in, 920; Pāśupata and other heretical men not to be fed in 978; some smṛtis prescribe only āmaśrāddha or hemaśrāddha in eclipses 246; though recommended highly on eclipses, S. is difficult or well-nigh impossible owing to time being short 246; three kinds of ś. viz. navaśrāddha, miśra and purāṇa 864-5n.

Śrāddhakriyākaumudī 924n, 926n, 931n-32n.

Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana, prescribes recitation of Rākṣoghna verses and Apratiratha hymn at śrāddha dinner 786n.

Śrautasūtras: two secondary meanings of vrata in, 26; writers of S. were called by Viśvarūpa merely Yājñikas 1155n.

Śravana, nakṣatra, called Śroṇā in Tai. S. and Br. 500.

Śrāvaṇa month: important vratas in, are four 124 ff; on Full Moon day of, practice on West coast of India to offer to the sea flowers and cocoanuts among Hindus and among others also 128.

Śreyas, has two meanings, 'better' and 'niḥśreyasa' 1415.

Śrībhāṣya of Rāmānuja on Vedāntasūtra 1159n.

Śrīcakra (see under Yantra); promiscuous intercourse in, m. by Kaulāvalītantra 1083n.

Śrīdatta, 29 (a. of Samayapradīpa), 640n (a. of Ācārādarśa); 925 view about śūdra's eligibility for Paurāṇika mantras.

Śrīharṣa (about end of 12th century A. D.): a. of 'Khaṇḍanakhaṇḍakhādya'; is alleged to have been vanquished in argument by Śaṅkarācārya 1010n.

Śrīparvata, as a shrine for devotees of Śiva and Pārvatī and a place for securing miraculous powers 1047.

Śrīṣeṇa: a. of a Romakasiddhānta, different from the Romaka in Pañcasiddhāntikā 515n.

Śrīsūkta: 759, 919-20 (of 29 verses, beginning with 'Hiraṇyavarṇāṁ hariṇīm'.

Śrīvidyāmantra (of 16 syllables): extravagant praise of, in tantra works, as superior to thousands of Aśvamedhas 1101.
Śrutārthāpatti, explained in Tantravārtika and is said to prove Apūrva, 1211 and n.
Śrutasāgarasūri, a. of com. on 'Tattvārthasūtra' of Umāsvāti 472n.
Śruti, technical meaning of, in PMS III. 3. 14, 1309.
Stars (vide under 'Aristotle').
Star-gazer, condemned in ancient times 527, 543.
Stecherbatsky Th., a. of 'central conception of Buddhism','The conception of 'Nirvāṇa' and 'Buddhist Logic' 942n.
Stein, M. A. editor and translator of Rājatarangiṇī 655.
Stein, Otto, paper of, on 'Number 18', 842n.
Stevenson Mrs., a. of 'Rites of the Twice born' 60, 641n.
Sthāpaka, qualifications of, 890, 1013.
Stobha, meaning of, 1222n.
Stocks, J. L., a. of 'Time, cause and eternity' 546n.
Strabo, asserts that Chaldeans were skilled in horoscopes 550; mentions embassy from a king Pandion to the West and to Augustus 599n.
Streeter, B. H. and others, writers of essays on 'Immortality' 1604.
Strīparva, 466n, 467, 821.
Stutterheim, W. F., a of 'Indian influences in Balinese Art' 1657.
Subhadrā, though a maternal uncle's daughter, was married by Arjuna and mīmāmsakas like Kumārila deny that she was the daughter of Vasudeva, even when Ādiparva expressly says so 1280.
Subrahmaṇyā-nigada 1325.
Succession Act, for Hindus 1706.
Sudarśana, city of gods 1529.
Sudarśana Yantra, worship of, by a king or person desiring wealth and prosperity 1136.
Sudās, king in Ṛgveda who battled with ten kings 1664.
Sudhanvan, a king, is said to have issued order that he would sentence to death his servants that would not kill Buddhists 1009, 1010n.
Sudharmā, assembly hall of gods, 1529.
Su di meaning of 670.
Śūdra: Buddha's teaching very attractive to Ś. whose position was low in times of Vedas and smṛtis 940; distinction made between dvijas and Ś. in the matter of Vedic mantras and sacrifices 922, 1642; duty of Ś. to serve the three higher varṇas acc. to Manu, 1257; Gautama prescribed for him 'namaḥ' in place of Vedic mantras 925; Mahābhārata and Purāṇas were composed by Vyāsa through compassion for Ś. and women 921-22; high spiritual life and mokṣa were not denied to Ś. 164; Mahābhārata, Rāmāyaṇa and Purāṇas were meant for the education of Ś. and for securing mokṣa to Ś. 925, 1642; Ś. not to perform Prāṇāyāma, but only dhyāna and repeat word Śiva for om, 922 and to repeat in five daily sacrifices the mantra called saptārcis, acc. to Mit. while some others said that he is to repeat 'namaḥ' only 159n; 920n, 925; three views about śūdra and purāṇas among medieval writers, 32, 172, 925; special facilities to and advantages of Ś. over other varṇas 928-29; Vedānta-sūtra denies to the Ś. the right to study the Veda and does not discuss how Ś. and women are to secure higher spiritual life and final beatitude but the Purāṇas do this 929-30; Vidura and Dharmavyādha, though śūdras, possessed brahmavidyā and must have secured mokṣa, even acc. to Śaṅkarācārya 1642; Yāj., Devala and Parāśara permitted even brāhmaṇas to take food in the house of certain śūdras such as the brāhmaṇa's slave, barber etc. 1608.

Śuka, son and disciple of Vyāsa 1161, 1169; styled Bādarāyaṇi in Bhāgavatapurāṇa 1169.

Sukthankar, Dr. V. S. 838 (on Rāma episode).

Sukumar Ranjan Das 714n.

Sulabhā, a nun, encounter of, with Janaka 1368-70.

Śūlapāṇi (1375-1440 A. D.) 30, 46, 48, 239, 1404 (a. of com. Dīpakalikā on Yāj.).

Śulbasūtras of Āpastamba and Kātyāyana (reference to the squaring of a circle) 1132, 1132n ('science of the Śulba' by Vibhūtibhushan Datta).

Sumantu, a. of a smṛti 527.

Śumbha and Niśumbha, demons, killed by Devī 156.

Sumerians: speak of a golden age of man and of huge numbers of years 789n.

Sun-(vide Bhāskarapūjā) 362; as a malefic graha 573; called 'Shamash' in Babylon and 'Helin' in some Sanskrit works probably from Greek 'Helios' 572n; is one and never sets, acc. to Ait Br. 510-11; mūla-mantra of, 1105; temples of, in ancient and medieval India 684, 898n; three important places of the worship of the Sun viz. Muṇḍīra (modern Modhera), Kālapriya and Mitravana 898n; northward passage for six months had been noticed in the Brāhmaṇa period 223, 491.

Śunaḥśepa, story of, in Ait. Br. 969n, 1704-5.

Sunaphā, astrological Yoga; meaning of 584,

Sundarakāṇḍa (of Rāmāyaṇa) 775.

Surā (see under 'wine').

Sureśvara (most famous of Śaṅkarācārya's disciples); a. of Naiṣkarmyasiddhi 1174, 1195; a. of Vārtikas on Śaṅkarācārya's bhāṣyas on Bṛ. Up. and Tai. Up. 1195, 1216n; and Maṇḍana are not identical 1195; S. is the same as Viśvarūpa 1194; flourished between 800-840 A. D., 1198.

Śūrpāraka and Paraśurāma 90n.

Sūryaprajñapti, a Jain work, proponnded the theory of two suns and two moons 511.
Sūryapūjā-praśaṁsā 452.
Sūryasiddhānta 68, 592 (mentions Maya, king of Yavanas, to whom the Sun imparted Jyotiṣa), 644 (tr. into English by Whitney) 656n, 657n, 676n, 679n, 711; most accurate acc. to Varāhamihira 514n; on Kāla and units of time 474, 477; Prof. Neugebauer's view that S. did not copy Ptolemy, but received impetus from him 601-2.
Sūryā, daughter of Savitṛ, married Soma 497n; is said to be wife of Asvins 1044n Suśruta-saṁhitā 474 (on Kāla), 1032 (on 'tantrayukti'), 1379 (mentions Sāṅkhya doctrines).
Suṣumnā, nādī; Kundalinī, when awakened, enters the road to liberation which is Suṣumnā 1085.
Sūta (vide Māgadha) 862–864; business of, was to record and preserve historic traditions and genealogies 856; Gautama Dh. S. on the origin of S. 862n; is a somewhat enigmatic personality 862-3; Kautilya says that the S. and Māgadha mentioned in Purāṇas are different from pratiloma castes 862; one meaning of the word S. is charioteer and another is person of a mixed (pratiloma) caste born of the union of a brāhmaṇa woman with kṣatriya male 862; some Purāṇas like Brahmāṇḍa, Padma, Skanda, Vāyu make the Sūta of semi-divine origin in the Yajña of Pitāmaha to get over any awkward situation 862–4; story of king Pṛthu Vainya having bestowed the country of Anūpa on Sūta and Magadha on Māgadha 863; two explanations why he was called Roma- (or Loma-) harṣaṇa 862.
Sūtasaṁhitā: 830, 930, 962, 1631n (on four stages of Mokṣa).
Sūtra (aphorism): characteristics of, 1182n.
Suttanipāta 1005, 1636n (verse from, quoted by Tilak).
Śutudrī (modern Sutlaj river) 537.
Svacchanda-tantra, a Tantra work of high authority in Kashmir Śaivism 1086.
Svādhyāva, means memorization of Veda, acc. to Śat. Br. 1416, acc. to Yogabhāṣya means japa of om and holy texts or study of śāstras on mokṣa 1416.
Śvapaca, a cāṇḍāla 554n, 969n.
Śvapāka, lowest among untouchables, followed the same avocation as Cāṇḍāla and was governed by same rules 1043.
Svapnādhyāya 774.
Svapneśvara: vide under 'Śāṇḍilya'.
Svarbhānu: son of an Asura, said in the Ṛg. to have struck the sun 569.
Svarga, meaning of 824; is the reward of all sacrifices for which no reward is expressly provided by the Veda 1312.
Svargārohaṇaparva 821, 840n,

1627n.
Svarodaya 533n.
Svastivācana 780n.
Śvetadvīpa, a mythical land described in Śāntiparva and some Purāṇas like Vāmana and Kūrma, where everything was white and where Viṣṇu and his devotees dwelt 142-43.
Śvetāśvataropaniṣad, 465, 921, 952, 961, 963, 1033n (Guru's position), 1044 (Śakti as non-different from God), 1045, 1055n, 1086n (Kulārṇava quotes a verse), 1111n (signs of effectiveness of Yoga practices), 1352, 1360-61 is full of words of Sāṅkhya system), 1377, 1385, 1387, 1395n, 1424n, 1431n. 1448 (dhyāna-yoga), 1451n. 1456, 1460, 1478, 1500, 1502 (five elements), 1504, 1538 (verse 'dvā suparṇā'), 1564, 1573; referred to as śruti in V. S. acc. to Śaṅkara 136; states God as cause or source of creation 465; bhāṣya on, attributed to Śaṅkarācārya, of doubtful authenticity 1407 and n, 1707 (fundamental questions of whence, whither and why raised).
Sviṣṭakṛt, homa, 773 and n.
Syamantaka jewel, story of 147, 459.
Śyenayāga, an ancient magic rite 1114n, 1183, 1245; mantra in, used by Matsya-purāṇa for black magic 1114n.
Syrian Christians were given special privileges by Hindu kings of South India 1018.
Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, 24-5, 35, 185, 194, 727-28n, 785, 787n, 796n, 798n, 853, 920, 1180, 1190n, 1627n.
Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, 18n, 65, 185n, 194, 487, 492, 494n, 498-9, 500, 505-7, 510, 511n, 523-4, 527, 538, 546, 561, 656n, 659n, 670n, 701, 720, 721n, 723-4 (adhriguprakṣa), 726, 739n, 758, 786-7, 803-4, 814, 934 (food is life), 1032, 1114n, 1153, 1224, 1239-41, 1285n, 1290, 1298, 1301, 1307n, 1314, 1316, 1320n, 1321, 1328n, 1489n (has all verses of Ṛg. X. 129 except one), 1528n, 1535, 1548n, 1633, 1646; Tai. Br. I. 5 differs from Tai. Br. III. 1 as to the names of nakṣatras and presiding deities 505.
Taittirīya Saṁhitā, 18, 22-3, 25-6n, 63, 65-6, 73, 121n, 126, 146, 183n, 185, 487, 489, 492, 495n, 498, 500, 505, 507-8, 596n, 659n, 667, 671-2, 691n, 697-8, 719-20n, 721, 724n, 726, 737n, 756, 758, 773, 785-90, 796, 802-3, 814, 919, 927n, 1024, 1044, 1096n, 1114n, 1131, 1152-53, 1203, 1207, 1214, 1217n, 1221, 1224, 1226, 1232, 1238-39, 1244, 1246 (prohibits speaking untruth), 1257n, 1268, 1288, 1291-2, 1294, 1295n, 1297, 1301, 1305n, 1308n, 1315n, 1316, 1318n (on śūdra and theory of debts), 1320n, 1325n, 1331n, 1385n, 1386n, 1416n, 1433, 1493, 1511, 1544, 1589n, 1631n (word Sāyujyatā).

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 24, 466, 914 (on creation), 921, 1055n, 1086, 1153 (word mīmāṁsā occurs), 1180, 1257, 1387, 1416, 1484, 1486, 1488n, 1501-2, 1507, 1528n, 1562, 1582, 1649 (where Up. means secret doctrine).
Takakusu, Dr. J. 942n, 1375-6.
Takṣaśilā (modern Taxila), had a university where even princes came to learn 542.
Tāmbūla-not to be eaten in Ekādaśīvrata 107, 116.
Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa : 511n, 659n, 670n, 1227n, 1231, 1244, 1313n, 1471, 1516n (explains words of Ṛg. IX. 62. 1).
Taṇhā (tṛṣṇā, hankering) giving up of, emphasized by Upaniṣads, Mahābhārata, Buddha and Purāṇas 939 and n.
Tantra (in P. M. S.) 1331 ; eleventh chap. of. P. M. S. deals with T. which means a case where one act serves the purpose of several other rites or acts, and examples 1331.
Tantra (or tantras, acc. to context): 1031-1151 ; (vide under Cakrapūjā, China, guhya, guru, Kauladharma, magic, magicians, Mahānirvāṇatantra, makāras, months, nāḍīs, puraścaraṇa, śakti, śāktas, Śāradātilaka, siddhis, Śrīvidyāmantra, spells, tāntrika, tattva, Tibet, Vajrayāna vāmācāra, yantra); aims of T. were mokṣa and attainment of siddhis, 1112-13 ; are Hindu, Buddhist and Jaina and are alike in some respects but differ in some others 1031, 1048 ; are upaveda of Atharvaveda, acc. to Śukranītisāra 1036 ; Bhairavī-cakra, and tattva cakra worship 1059 and n ; Buddhist T. deified important personages of Buddhism and took over other deities, Gaṇeśa, Sarasvatī and others 1049 ; Buddhist T. also claimed to show the path to the attainment of all objects from success in love affairs to liberation 1115 ; Cakrapūjā, a revolting rite 1089 ; derivation of word Tantra 1048 ; differences and similarities between Buddhist and Hindu tantras 1041 ; difficulty of defining a T. 1048 ; Durgā, acc. to Mahānirvāṇa T., is highest prakṛti of Paramātman, has various names 1057 ; end and aim of a few higher minds among some tantras and Tāntrikas was attainment of high spiritual powers by Yoga practices and realization of supreme Tattva, variously called Brahma, Śiva, Devī and mokṣa 1091 ; evidence of any Buddhist works on Tantras before 650 A. D. practically none, 1040n ; evidence in Bāṇa's works of the prevalence of Tāntrik and Śākta worship in India before 7th century A. D. 1040 ; famous Chinese travellers Fa Hien, Yuan Chwang and I-tsing do not refer to study of Buddhist T. in India

1038, 1040; five āmnāyas spoken of as paths to mokṣa by some T. 1049; five paths named in some T. and four in Sādhanamālā 1038n-1039; four named Tantras introduced in Kambuja (Cambodia) about 800 A. D. 1048n; Gāyatrī mantra of Kālī set out 1058, 1101; great importance of guru and mantra in all Tantras 1071, 1101; groups of 10, 18 and 64 Śaiva T. in Tantrāloka 1049n; guru, after initiating a disciple into T. rites, was to hand over to the neophyte a bowl for drinking wine, mudrā and courtezan 1055–56; Haraprasad Sastri's view that T. practices originally came from outside India and view of A. Avalon that they came to India from Chaldea or Śakadvīpa, examined 1033–34, 1040; Hindu T. try to show that they are based on the Vedas. quote Vedic mantras and claim to describe an easier and quicker path to mokṣa 1051–52; Hindu T. present two sides, one philosophical, the other popular and magical, relying on mantras, mudrās, cakras and yantras, 1057; ignore the great moral danger, involved in the persistent teaching of worship with five makāras and also ignore the advice of Gītā (III. 21), 1087; in Kaula system siddhi results from those very substances (wine, flesh etc.) by (resorting to) which men (ordinarily) incur sin 1064, 1074; influenced by Sāṅkhya 1384; important Kashmir Tāntrik works 1050; Kṣetras of Devī over one hundred acc. to Devībhāgavata, 1039; Kulārṇava and other T. praise the vedas; employ vedic mantras and quote Upaniṣads and Bhagavadgītā 1086–87; list of Sanskrit works on T. with authors, dates and editions, 1140–1147; list of works and papers on T. in English 1148–1151; literature on T. was vast 1048; Makāras five, emphasis on, in almost all Tantra works as leading to miraculous powers and liberation, 1034, 1049, 1052, 1058, 1664, 1082; Makāras explained by later writers on T. as used not in the ordinary senses but in special esoteric senses on which the writers themselves differ 1081n; Mantras called bīja like hrīm and śrīm and a list of them called Bījanighaṇṭu 1058n; Mantra of ten syllables 'hrīm śrīm krīm parameśvari svāhā. by merely listening to which a man becomes jīvanmukta but Mahānirvāṇa adds that mantras do not confer siddhi unless five makāras are offered 1058; Maṇḍalas, an item in T. worship, 1131ff; Mantras are the very core of T. and T. is often called Mantraśāstra 1098; Mantras of Śakti do not confer perfection unless one follows kula practices

1052; mantras that the followers of Vāmamārga may employ about three makāras (wine, mudrā and coitus) 1056–57; Mantra 'saccidekam brahma' is best 1057; mantra 'brahmārpaṇam brahma' (Bhagavadgītā IV. 24) to be recited when offering wine and other tattvas to the highest Self 1059n; medieval works on Kaula cult speak of drinking wine, flesh eating, maithuna in the vulgar sense as means of Devī worship and assert that by doing so liberation would be secured 1087; T. mention the six magic and terrible rites, śānti, vaśīkaraṇa, stambhana, vidveṣaṇa, māraṇa, uccāṭana 1070, 1105, 1113–14; method of referring to bīja mantras like 'hrīm' in a round about or mystical way 1058n; merely drinking wine or eating meat, indulging in sexual intercourse would never confer siddhi but it must be the result of strictly following the kaula path, says Kulārṇava 1064; meaning of word T. in Ṛgveda, Atharvaveda and Tai. Br. is 'loom' 1031; meaning of word T. acc. to Yāj, Amarakośa, Bṛhaspati, Kātyāyana and Bhāgavata 1031–32; Modern apologists for Tāntricism emphasize that the instructions in the Guhyasamājatantra are meant only for yogis who have attained some yogic perfection 1077n; most Hindu T. are dialogues between Śiva and Pārvatī or Skanda or Bhairava, similarly later Buddhist writers on T. profess that they quote Buddha 1038, 1051; most important and early Buddhist works on Tāntrik cults, Prajñopāyaviniścaya and Jñānasiddhi, are not earlier than the 8th century A. D. 1041; names of some published Hindu and Buddhist T. 1050; names of sixty-four T. 1049n; names of some Vaiṣṇava T. 1051; names of works in which the philosophical aspects of Hindu T. may be studied 1051; no trace of direct connection between Atharvaveda and Tantras 1037; oldest among Buddhist Tantras are Āryamañjuśrīmūlakalpa and Guhyasamājatantra acc. to Dr. Bhattacarya, 1050; path of T. cult in its higher level was one of Upāsanā or bhakti, but it often degenerated into magic and moral and depravity 1090; Pārānandasūtra and some other T. works provide that drinking wine before the stage where eyeballs begin to roll or mind remains steady and having intercourse with Śakti according to the rules of the śāstra is not blamable and to drink beyond that stage is bestial and sinful 1056; paths in T. are three, Dakṣiṇa (declared in Veda, smṛtis and Purāṇas), Vāma (declared by Veda and āgamas), uttara (declared by Veda and Guru), latter one being superior to preceding one 1054; peak period of Tāntrik works and cults, both Hindu and Buddhist, was from 7th to 12th century A. D, 1073; philosophical or spiritual side of T. not much studied except by Arthur Avalon, B. Bhattacarya and a few others 1031; pīṭhas (of Kālikā) m. in Rudrayāmala 1034; points that distinguish T. works from other religious literature in Sanskrit 1092-93; points of difference between T. and Śākta works, though both have much in common 1042; possible motives of founders of Tāntrik cult for discarding conventional morality 1077; poular mind associates T. with worship of Śakti (i. e. Kālī) and with mudrās, maṇḍalas, five makāras, vāma and dakṣiṇa mārga and magic practices 1031; possible reason for non-mention of Tantra doctrines in Sarvadarśanasaṅgraha 1139; prescribe Vaidikī sandhyā to be followed by Tāntrikī sandhyā 1101; provisions of, about the materials and capacity of wine cups 1059; provide, in contrast to Vedānta, methods which assist men of ordinary intellect in developing psychical forces and attaining liberation 1072; put forward the theory that to the pure-hearted everything is pure, only the sinful vāsanā is reprehensible 1085n; purpose of most Buddhist T. is to indicate a short path to Buddhahood by yogic practices, introducing the element of Śakti for yogic practices and for securing miraculous powers 1051; question whether Hindu T. were prior to Buddhist T. or vice versa is difficult but present author holds Hindu T. were not borrowed from Buddhist T. 1038-40; references to 64 T. in Saundaryalaharī 1049; resemble Purāṇas in several respects 1049; rivalry between Hindu and Buddhist T. 1064-5; Rudrayāmala statement that Buddha taught Vāsiṣṭha the Kaula path, examined 1034; Sādhakas in T. are of three kinds, paśu, vīra and divya 1052n; Sādhaka in T. should feel that guru, mantra devatā and his own soul are all one 1101; Sāṅkhya tattvas, Prakṛti, mahat, Ahaṅkāra are welded on to the worship of Śakti 1058; secrecy enjoined by most T. about knowledge conveyed by the guru to the disciple and worship with makāras, 1054; some great scholars and poets had a sneaking admiration for T. worship 1076; some modern writers have been somewhat unjust to whole T. literature by labelling it all as black magic or obscene 1091; some Tantras like Mahānirvāṇa try to stem the tide of sexual immorality 1077; some T. practically inculcate what appears as unbridled licence 1073; some Hindu T. contain sublime philosophic views derived from the Upaniṣads, the Gītā, from Sāṅkhya and Yoga and the final goal is Mukti to be secured by the path of T. 1050–51; so much of T. that is not opposed to Veda is authoritative acc. to Devī-bhāgavata 1064; Tattvacakra worship described 1059, 1087; T. says śuddhi means the offering of flesh, wine and mudrā to the devatā with the recital of three bījas 1058n, 1088; T. teach the repetition of mantras that have no meaning or that contain the letters of a mantra in a reversed form 1107: T. teachers' names often end in the word Ānanda 1073n; T. topics like mantras, nyāsa, maṇḍala taken over into some Purāṇas, and dharmaśāstra works 1095–96; teaching of tāntrik texts about worship with five makāras created a debased state in society, which is reflected in some parts of Sanskrit literature 1073–76; T. texts fall into five classes, Śaiva, Śākta, Vaiṣṇava, Saura and Gāṇapatya 1092; theory of such T. works as Śāradā-tilaka about mantras set out 1098–99; theory of sublimation put forward for explaining the insistence on five makāras 1085; theory of T. works that wine, meat and sexual unions are the only and the best means of Devī worship invite strong condemnation 1092–3; thought is recognised in some T. works as having creative power and may do good if kind and may cause suffering if evil 1100; three aspects of the deity worshipped by Tāntrikas are sthūla (an image), sūkṣma (worship by mantras) and parā (highest, to be apprehended by the mind of the sādhaka) 1091; three groups of T. viz. Viṣṇukrānta, Rathakrānta and Aśvakrānta and 64 are assigned to each group 1049; time when the word Tantra assumed its peculiar meaning, the people who first introduced tantra practices or the country where they first arose cannot be determined with certainty 1033; to drink wine without performing Śuddhi was condemned even by T. writers 1089; translations of Sanskrit works on Tantra in Tibetan are available, but the originals are not yet found 1048; Vajrayāna T. arose in Uḍḍiyāna, acc. to one view 1039; Vaiṣṇavatantras, twentyfive, named by Agni-purāṇa 1051; vast literature on Tantras 1031; Vedas, Śāstras and Purāṇas are of hardly any use, when Mahā-nirvāṇatantra is understood 1057; Vedic mantras for sanctifying flesh, fish, and mudrā are respectively Ṛg. I. 22. 20, VIII. 59. 12, I. 22. 20–21; T. Vidyā divided into three groups viz. Kādi, Hādi and Sādi 1045; view of Dr. Bagchi about foreign elements in Tāntrik doctrines 1034; Vīra type of T. worshipper required to possess high moral and spiritual level, but Rudrayāmala allows a vīra to honour the charming wife of another flushed with wine 1088–89; women were made gurus in Tāntrik cult 1075; woman associated with a male for tāntrik worship or for maithuna was called śakti, prakṛti or latā and she could be one's wife or another's wife or a veśyā 1081, 1090n; word 'phaṭ' occurs in Vāj. S. and is employed in abhicāra 1037; works on T. like Śāradātilaka enumerate thirty-six tattvas (including those of the sāṅkhya system) 1063; works on T. introduced into Tibet, Mongolia, China, Japan and South East Asia 1048; works on T. placed women on a footing of equality with men, and endeavoured to provide a common platform 1092; works on T. employ Vedic mantras, and also their own, 1100–1; works on T. say that mantras possess wonderful powers and that a Tāntrika secures all powers by following the practices of his guru's school 1101; worship of Śakti with wine, flesh and edibles of various kinds, 1046n, 1047 (in Viṣṇu-purāṇa), 1052–53 (worship of Śakti with five Tattvas, which are sometimes identified with five elements) 1052–53; worship of Keśava laid down in Tantras referred to by Bhāgavata 1093; writers on T. clothe their practices in bombastic words 1081; writers, medieval and modern, were largely justified in their condemnation of Tāntrik practices 1094; yantra (sometimes called cakra) also is a characteristic item in Tāntrik worship 1135–1139.

Tantrāloka of Abhinavagupta 1049n.

Tantrarahasya of Rāmānujācārya, last noted work of Prābhākara school composed about 1750 A. D., 1185n, 1189, 1283n.

Tantrarājatantra 1088, 1106n, 1119 (on abhiṣeka), 1136 (on Yantra), 1138n–39.

Tantraratna, of Pārthasārathimiśra 1189.

Tantravārtika of Kumārilabhaṭṭa (a voluminous com. on Śabara's bhāṣya on P. M. S. I. 2 to end of Chap. III); 96n, 926n, 985n, 1009n, 1162n, 1174, 1179 (papers on 'Gleanings from Śabara and Tantravārtika' and 'Tantravārtika and Dharmaśāstra'), 1181 (on adhikāra for Agnihotra and Darśa-pūrṇamāsa), 1186n, 1188, 1191n, 1206n (propositions about soul specified), 1211 (on Apūrva), 1212n, 1216n, 1220n–24n, 1228n, 1229 (defines vidhi, niyama and parisaṅkhyā), 1236n (bhāvanā is the pratyayārtha), 1237n, 1241n, 1244, 1247n, 1249n (on 'Vikalpa'), 1253n, 1254, 1258–59 (is most exhaustive on Smṛtis), 1261-62n, 1264 (on sadācāra), 1273n-74n (on Kalpa and Kalpa-sūtras), 1277n, 1290n, 1293n, 1295n, 1297n, 1302, 1307n, 1309n, 1329 (collects about three dozen cases of bādha in general), 1333 (on change in meaning of 'rājan'), 1544n, 1545; examines all the well-known classes of Sanskrit works with regard to their usefulness and relation to Veda and other-worldly experience 1260-1262.

Tantrayukti : means 'main canons or principles of exposition of a śāstra' acc. to Kautilya, Caraka and Suśruta 1032.

Tāntrik Texts (Vol. I-XXII), edited by Arthur Avalon; Vol. I, 1049, 1058n, 1097, 1124n, 1127; Vol. II 1060n; Vol. IV. 1038n; Vol. VII 1035n; Vol. VIII. 1054; Vol. X. 1140; Vol. XIV 1050n.

Tāntrik-'cult in Epigraphs,' paper by Mr. B. P. Desai 1046n; T. practices prevailed in N. India long before 11th century A. D., 869n; T. literature is classified into Srotas (that are three), Pīṭha and Āmnāya 1049.

Tāntrik : gurus (some) in Kashmir in 11th century A. D. practised incest 1075-6; T. Sculpture at Puri and other temples in Orissa 1088; works emphasize that mantra must be received from a qualified guru and the sādhanā must be done under his guidance 1110.

Tapas 304-305, 1415n, 1416; grand eulogy of T. in Manu, Yāj, 1415n; in Ṛgveda means 'heat' in some cases and 'austerities' in some (as in X. 109. 4, X. 154. 2 and 5, X. 190. 1) 1415n; in Śat. Br. and Ait. Br. it is indicated that tapas like yajña would bestow everything 1415, 1489; in Upaniṣads T. is one of the means leading to realization of brahman 1415n; Mahābhārata has frequent eulogies of T. 1416n; Manu provides that only three prāṇāyāmas performed acc. to prescribed rules are highest T. 1415n; means acc to Āp. Dh. S. the strict observances laid down for a vedic student, 1415n; Śāntiparva says that T. consists in ahiṁsā, truthfulness, kindliness and restraint of senses and not in mortification of the body 1416n; Vyāsa-bhāṣya explains Tapas as bearing the pairs of opposites (cold and heat, hunger and thirst) and observances like Kṛcchra, Cāndrāyaṇa 1416.

Tapta-mudrā-dhāraṇa-making marks of conch, discus etc., (weapons of God Viṣṇu) on limbs or parts of the body with heated copper or the like by Mādhvas 305.

Tārābhaktitaraṅgiṇī, 977n, 1072n, 1109 (on Śavasādhana), 1142.

Taranath (born 1573 or 1575 A. D.), a. of a 'History of Buddhism' (written in 1608

A. D.), 1010n, 1033n, 1148; gives a confused account about persecution of Buddhists by Kumārila and Śaṅkarācārya 1010n.

Tārātantra 1142.

Tarka (ratiocination) and Dharmaśāstra 1468-1482: (vide 'Nyāya', 'people', 'tolerance', 'Upaniṣads'); as an aṅga of Yoga 1419, 1469; Buddhists and Jains were declared to be heterodox, not because they resorted to T. but because they did not at all acknowledge the authority of the Veda and the sacred tradition 1471; Manu provides that none but he who considers the dicta of (vedic) sages, the rules of dharma (in smṛtis) and takes the help of tarka not in direct conflict with Veda and śāstras knows what Dharma is and this is the position of most orthodox Sanskrit writers about Tarka, 1469; Śaṅkarācārya's position about T. 1470-71; Smṛtis lay down that blindly following the words of śāstra would lead to loss of Dharma and that in case of conflict between two Smṛtis reasoning should be resorted to, 1470; smṛtis and ancient Sanskrit writers have been very tolerant of differing views even on fundamental matters and brought about great changes in rituals, philosophical views, social customs, without persecution 1475; T. alone cannot give final answers or answers acceptable to most people on such questions as the existence of God or of the individual soul, or on what happens after death 1470; T. favoured by or not opposed to Śruti is acceptable to Bṛ. Up. acc. to Śaṅkarācārya 1469n; within the limits laid down by Śaṅkarācārya and other orthodox Sanskrit writers there was room enough for an enormous and bewildering variety of convictions, rites and practices to claim orthodoxy and examples of these 1471; wise man who is pure should, in deciding upon dharma and adharma, act after relying on his own intelligence (reason) 1470; word 'tarka' occurs in Kaṭhopaniṣad 1468; Yāj. Smṛti mentions Nyāya (v. l. tarka) as one of the fourteen vidyās and one of the means of knowing dharma 1468.

Tarkadīpikā 1486n.

Tarn, W. W., author or 'Greeks in Bactria and India' 516, 655 (criticized).

Tarpaṇa (offering water), of seven sons of Brahmā, acc. to Kātyāyana's Snānasūtra, Matsya and other Purāṇas 1372.

Tātparyadarśana, com. on Āp. Gṛ. 802n.

Tattva: meaning of, differs in Tāntrik works acc. as the worshipper concerned is Tāmasika (Paśu), Rājasika (vīra) and Sāttvika (divya), 1082.

Tattvabindu of Vācaspati, Introduction to, 1158n-1159n.

Tattvaniṣṭha - parivartanavādi - pariṣad, later termed Dharmanirṇayamaṇḍala, its members and work for reform and reorganization of Hindu Society 1705–1707.

Tattvas, twenty-five, in Sāṅkhya and in Śāntiparva 1358, 1365.

Tattvārthasūtra of Umāsvāti 472n.

Tattvasamāsa, a late work on Sāṅkhya in 23 sūtras 1354; com. on, called Kramadīpikā 1354.

Tattvasaṅgraha of Śāntarakṣita (705–762 A. D.), connects Buddha with magic practices 1037.

Tattvavaiśāradī of Vācaspati, com. on Yogasūtra, 907.

Tattvopaplava-siṁha of Jayarāśibhatta 1472n.

Tawney C. H. a. of 'Acquisitive society' 1481n.

Taxes, recent Indian taxes, defects of 1695n.

Tejobindu-Upaniṣad (on proper āsana) 1431.

Temple: of Rāhu 684; of Sun m. in 'Gupta Inscriptions' 683n; of Sun in ancient and medieval India 683–84; of 64 Yoginīs, 174; three temples of the sun established in three different places acc. to Varāhapurāṇa 898n.

Testament, Old and New, both emphasize sacredness of vows 28.

Tevijjasutta, condemns Buddhist monks maintaining themselves by such arts as predicting 627.

Thibaut, a. of a work on Indian Astronomy, mathematics and astrology in the German Grundriss, 484, 487, 490–92, 508–10, 512, 579 (criticized); observes that what Indians knew before Greek influence is not much and is primitive 512; observes that Greek astrology entered India between Firmicus (middle of 4th century A. D.) and Varāhamihira, 579–80; observes that Mr. Dixit's work on 'Hindu Astronomy' is the richest source of material on it, 484; on Romaka Siddhānta 515.

Third Five Year Plan: total investment programme of, 1084ff; total American aid from 1951 to end of Third F. P. 1691ff.

Thomas E. J., a. of 'History of Buddhist Thought' 1107.

Thomas, Prof. F. W. 1104n; presentation volume 757n.

Thompson C., 'Reports of the Magicians' etc. 565n, 572n.

Thorndike, a of 'History of magic and experimental science' 550n.

Throbbing (spandana or sphuraṇa); of arms and eyes regarded in India from ancient times as harbinger of coming events 800–801; of right or left side of body is auspicious respectively for men and women 800; prognostications from 799–801; removal of the effects of inauspicious T. brought about by gifts of gold to brāhmaṇas 800; results of the T. of limbs from head to soles set out 800.

Tibet (vide Sanskrit literature); Padmasambhava, a Tāntrik Buddhist was called from Uḍḍiyāna by a Tibetan king (749–786 A. D.) and settled in T., 1040-41; script based on an Indian alphabet was introduced in T. about 640 A.D., 1040.

Ṭikkanikā: a small work of Varāhamihira on Yātrā 617.

Tiladhenu, gift of, on Karkasaṅkrānti 218.

Tilak, Lokamānya, a. of Gītārahasya (in Marathi) 1171–72n; his explanation of Bhagavadgītā (XIII. 4) not accepted 1171–72; a of 'Orion' and 'Arctic Home in the Vedas' 3, 485, 498, 499n, 510, 513; on 'Vedic Chronology' 644, 645n; held several conferences of Indian astronomers for improving pañcāṅgas 712; views of, on caste and urgency of independence and not mere social reform 1635n–1636n.

Timaeus, a dialogue of Plato, 781, 1502, 1505n.

Time (see under Kāla); amānta reckoning 659; Buddhist Sanskrit writers like Prajñākaragupta hold that T. is not a separate entity 472; conception of, 463–475; divisions of T. from nimeṣa to Kalpa given by Manu 688; first among great problems of philosophy 463; fundamental periods of time are day, month, year, 644–45; human reckoning of T. is fourfold viz. Saura, Cāndra, Sāvana, Nākṣatra (or Ārkṣa) 656n–59; identified with Nārāyaṇa in Mahānārāyaṇa Up. 466; indications of the existence of T. acc. to Vaiśeṣikasūtra and Praśastapāda's bhāṣya 469; is a dravya, acc. to Vaiśeṣikasūtra and Caraka 474; Jaina writers hold that T. is one of six padārthas 472; lengthy disquisition on T. in Maitrī Up. 465–66; long disquisition on T. in Nyāyamañjarī 469; Manusmṛti on, 468; measures of T. such as Yuga, Mahāyuga, Manvantara, Kalpa, 686ff; minute divisions of T. such as nimeṣa mentioned from even Vedic times, 475; nine reckonings of, out of which only five are ordinarily employed 656–57; Nyāyasūtra holds that time is past, present or future 469; pūrṇimānta reckoning 659; questions as to, 463; some western philosophic works on T. 475; some philosophers hold that time is either past or future, but that there is no present T. 469; space, T. and God are one and the same acc. to Raghunātha, follower of Navyanyāya 470; spoken of, in the same terms as brahman in Maitrī and Tai. Up. 466; sublime conception of, in Atharvaveda as ageless, as the creator of everything, including Prajāpati, 463–4; truṭa (or truṭi) as the smallest unit of T. in Kauṭilya and Sūryasiddhānta 214, 476–77; units of T. from nimeṣa to year mentioned in Bṛ. Up. 475–76; units of time, same verse on, in Śāntiparva and Vāyu, Matsya, Viṣṇu and Brahmāṇḍa purāṇas 476n ; units of T. such as Prāṇa, Pala, Ghaṭi or Nāḍī or Daṇḍa 684; Vākyapadīya of Bhartṛhari on T. 475 ; views differ as to the number of units of T. and their relation to each other among Manu, Kauṭilya, Purāṇas, Amarakośa, Sūrya-siddhānta 476–477.

Tithi (or tithis. acc. to context): (vide under Amāvāsyā, Aṣṭakā, day, God, nakṣatra, Kāla, Paurṇamāsī, Vedha, week days) ; all religious acts to be begun in the morning, even if t. is viddhā 72 ; all rites, Vedic and smārta, vrata, dāna do not yield proper reward as long as the proper t. for it is not determined 73 ; aṅga (subsidiary matter) to Vedic and smṛti prescriptions and prohibitions, 71 ; a tithi touching three days was held to be inauspicious for marriage, invasion and auspicious religious acts 68–69 ; certain t. dear to certain gods, 70 ; decision of a proper t. for religious rite is by recourse to Yugmavākya, when a tithi extends over two days, 74 ; derivation of word t. from root 'tan' to spread 67n ; different views before Ait. Br. on which a tithi rite was to be performed 66 ; divided by Dharmasindhu into Pūrṇā and Sakhaṇḍā 71–72 ; divided by Nirṇayasindhu into Śuddhā and Viddhā 71n; division of, into five groups, 70 ; division of tithis into kharva, darpa, hiṁsra or hiṁsā 78 ; even if t. begins in the afternoon, a saṅkalpa had to be made in the morning, provided the vrata has to be performed on that t. though viddhā 82 ; T. is time or period required by the moon to gain twelve degrees on the sun to the east 68 ; long lists of acts and things forbidden on certain tithis 79–80 ; lords of tithis acc. to Bṛhat-saṁhitā and others 69, 111 ; loss caused by eating certain things on certain tithis, 70 ; most important topic in relation to vrata is t. 56 ; motion of moon being irregular the number of ghaṭikās of a t. may be any figure from about 54 to 65, 68 ; Pāṇini mentions affix 'tithae (probably due to word 'tithi') and Patañjali mentions Paurṇamāśi tithi 67 ; Pūrṇā, Sakhaṇḍā, Śuddhā and Viddhā defined 72, 113 ; purvaviddhā and paraviddhā, explained 74 ; theory that shortening and lengthening of tithis is due to piety and sinfulness of men, 78 ; t., though khaṇḍā, is to be regarded as sakalā for dharmaśāstra purposes in some cases 73 ; unit day (from sunrise to sunrise) may have two tithis or even three tithis touching it or one tithi may spread to or touch three civil days 68 ; unit day touching three tithis was regarded as holy, 68; vedha defined 72-73; week days, nakṣatras and tithis are means of securing merit or sin, 71; what articles should specially be eaten or not eaten on certain tithis 70-71, 79-80; what combinations of viddhā tithis are generally excluded as improper 74-75; what should be undertaken on each of the five groups of T., 70; word tithi does not occur in the Vedic saṁhitās, though the idea must have been there in the Ṛgveda but occurs in Ait. Br. and the gṛhya and dharma sūtras and hence was in use at least from about 800 B. C., 62, 67-68; word 'mahā' is prefixed to certain tithis when the Full Moon is in the nakṣatra which gives the name to the month and is in conjunction with Jupiter 79.

Tithicintāmaṇi, contains tables based on the Grahalāghava 643.

Tithitattva 53, 68n, 70-72n, 75n, 77n, 79n, 81, 84-86, 88, 91n, 93, 110n, 117n, 124n, 125, 129n, 134-5, 136n-8, 142n, 148, 152n, 154, 156-58n, 161n, 162, 165n-167n, 169n, 170-2, 173n, 175n, 177n, 179n, 182n, 191n, 193, 198n, 201n, 203n, 207n, 217, 227, 228n, 230, 241, 246n, 247n. 249n, 1182n.

Tithiviveka, 73n, 76n.

Tithyarka 71n.

Tolerance (vide Aśoka, Madhvācārya); a more radical tolerance than what Indian people showed throughout the ages is unthinkable 1076; Bhagavadgītā, Bhāgavata, Śāntiparva exhibit wonderful spirit of T. when they say that worship of other deities also reaches ultimately the Highest 970; germs of doctrine of T. in Ṛg.I. 164. 46, 970-71; great tolerance in Emperor Harṣa's family 1006; in India it was at the most necessary to show that doctrines put forth were not opposed directly to the dicta of the Veda 1481-82; Inscriptions and coins evidence exceptionally generous T. on the part of the civil powers, says Barth 1011; Madhvācārya could explain away the Upaniṣad passages about advaita by reasoning and openly denounce the advaita doctrine as Buddhism in disguise without persecution 1482; of Hindu kings towards Moslems, even though moslem invaders desecrated temples 1018; T. is one of the striking characteristics of Hindu culture 1623; persisted in India for different cults and tenets with very rare exceptions from before Aśoka to 1200 A. D. when Moslem invaders began to overrun India 1012; striking instances (early and late) of T. of kings and people donating gifts to persons, shrines and institutions of different faiths 1012-14; undesirable consequences of great T. 1482; Yāj. Smṛti prescribes that when an Indian king conquered a country, the conqueror's duty was to honour the usages, transactions and family traditions of the conquered country 1011, 1482.

Toleration Act (of England in 1689) excluded Catholics and Unitarians from its benefits 1476n.

Toynbee, Prof. Arnold, in 'East and West' definition of civilization and culture 1615–16; points out that Christianity and Islam have been responsible for some of the cruellest atrocities that have disgraced history 1012n; revises and corrects his own statement about Indian culture 1617n; urges that Christianity must be purged of the beliefs that Christianty is unique and that Christians are God's chosen people 1595.

Traditions, though they often arise without much evidence, should not be summarily rejected, but should be tested by other available evidence 1192; the endeavour of leaders of thought in each generation should be to find out what is essential in tradition without believing in the unfallibility of all T. and to present dogmas that will meet the demands of modern thought and conditions 1475.

Trailokyamohana mantra, dilated upon in Prapañcasāra-tantra for accomplishing six cruel acts, 1070, 1105.

Trailokyavijayavidyā, in Agnipurāṇa 1102.

Trees, barks of five, viz. Aśvattha, udumbara, plakṣa, āmra and vaṭa, to be boiled in water for bath on Amāvāsyā of Divāḷī 199; festival called Vṛkṣotsava 415–16.

Tridaṇḍin, as applied to Sannyāsins, meaning of, 1645.

Tridhātu, meaning of, doubtful in Ṛg. 1492n.

Trijatā, dreams of, in the Rāmāyaṇa 775.

Trikāṇḍamaṇḍana 53.

Trikaprasavaśānti, on birth of a son after three successive births of daughters or vice versa 773.

Trikoṇa, meaning of, 567n.

Trimadhura (honey, ghee and sugar are so called) 309.

Triśikhi-brāhmaṇopaniṣad 1426n.

Tripuṇḍra, sect mark of Śāktas and Śaivas, explained 1076n.

Trispṛśā (one of 8 kinds of dvādasīs) 309.

Trisama 310.

Tristhalīsetu 91n.

Trisugandha (tvak i.e. cinnamon, cardamom and patraka 309.

Trita āptya, all bad dreams delivered to, in Ṛgveda 729.

Trivṛt (milk, curds and ghee are so called) 309.

Tryahaḥspṛk (tithi) 310.

Tucci, Prof. G, paper of, on Maṇḍalas in 'Indo-Tibetica' 1133.

Tukaram, saint 969; asserts that life is very miserable 969.

Tulāpuruṣa, one of the Mahādanas 87.

Tulasī leaves and plants, now sacred to Vaiṣṇavas, but they do not figure in early Purāṇika literature, 881; story of, occurs in Padma IV and VI, 882.

Tulsidas (born in 1532-33 A.D.): Hindi poet and saint, was abandoned by parents because of astrological considerations 633n; works of, used for divination 812.
Tulasīvivāha 307.
Ṭup-ṭīkā of Kumārilabhaṭṭa, 1163n, 1188 (not a regular com. but notes on chapters IV-XII of P. M. sūtras), 1209n, 1214n-16n, 1226n-27n, 1250n, 1286n, 1302n, 1318n; explanations of Ṭup, 1189n; has some commentaries but none is published 1189.
Turāyaṇa 306-7.
Turberville, Prof. A. S. on 'Spanish Inquisition' 933n.
Tuxen, Paul, a. of 'Religions of India' 1393-94; 1577 (does not accept Deussen's theory about Kṣatriyas being the original cherishers of Vedānta thoughts).
Tycho Brahe, prepared every year an astrological forecast for the king 551.
Tyler, a. of 'Primitive culture 1614.
Udakaśānti, 783-787; is an elaborate affair in these days and takes up about three hours 784; many mantras employed in 784; oldest available description is in Baudhāyana gṛhyaśeṣasūtra 784; performed even now for securing good health, removal of diseases, mitigating unfavourable aspects for removal of impurity on birth or death in one's house or family etc. 784; procedure of 784-787; Saṅkalpa in 784n.
Udayana, a. of Lakṣaṇāvali and Nyāyakusumāñjali 1624.
Uddālaka, Āruṇi, shown to be ignorant of Vaiśvānaravidyā in Chān. V. 11, but in Chān. VI. 8.7 ff, is shown as teaching the sublime doctrine of 'tat tvamasi' 1578.
Uddeśya of Uddiśyamāna-means 'subject of which something is to be predicated (vidheya) 1286; defined by Ślokavārtika 1286n, 1341.
Uddhāravibhāga (assignment of a larger share to the eldest son on partition between brothers) 1268; Tai. S. has two contradictory passages on this, but Āp. Dh. S. after quoting both Tai. S. passages holds that unequal division is prohibited by śāstras and provides that equal division among sons is the proper rule 1268.
Uḍḍiyāna (a pīṭha of Tāntrik cult): situation of, discussed 1039.
Udhhāta (a term in Yoga) differently explained by different writers 1439n.
Udgītha, means 'om' 1582.
Udgīthavidyā, only one of many Upāsanās, 1583; Pravāhaṇa Jaivali taught it to two brāhmaṇas in Chān. Up. I. 8, 1582.
Udvāhatattva 545, 610n, 611n, 919.
Udyāpana: last rite in a vrata 120-21; if no rite of udyāpana for a vrata is expressly prescribed what should be done 121; Ud. is concluding rite in a vrata undertaken only once, while the concluding rite is called pāraṇa when a vrata is to be continued for life (such as Ekādaśī or Janmāṣṭamī) 139; of Śivarātrivrata when undertaking was to observe it for 24, 14, or 12 years 234.

Udyogaparva 27, 49, 90n, 126, 129n, 532n, 539, 743-4 803n, 821, 840, 854 (quotes the famous verse 'gurorapyavaliptasya etc.' from a Purāṇa), 1080, 1281 (Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna described as drunk), 1627n, 1636, 1642.

Ugrarathaśānti, vide Ṣaṣṭyabdapūrti) 757; Procedure in Sanskrit of, 760n.

Ūha 1158, 1324 26; certain alterations and adaptations are necessary in the matter of mantras, sāmans and saṃskāras; this is called ūha in PMS, though the word ordinarily means tarka (reasoning) 1324; mantra when adapted is not to be called a mantra acc. to PMS. 1325; Viṣṇudharmasūtra prescribes that in the śrāddha for the maternal grandfather and his two male ancestors the mantra should be changed into 'Sundhantam Mātāmahāḥ' 1326.

Ujjvala-nīla-maṇi, of Rūpagosvāmin 980.

Ulfi, story narrated by, about Siddharāja, king of Gujarat, punishing Hindus for pulling down a mosque and rebuilding it at his own expense, 1018.

Umbeka (about 700-750 A. D.); a. of com. on Ślokavārtika 1359; a. of com. on Bhāvanāviveka 1194; is probably identical with Bhavabhūti 1194; is later than Maṇḍanamiśra 1194; name written in various ways 1194n; Uveyaka, q. by Kamalaśīla, is probably Umbeka, 1194n; was a pupil of Kumārilabhaṭṭa 1194n, 1198.

Underhill, a. of a work 'Hindu religious year' 60.

Unemployment, increasing 1698, should be first point of attack in all plans 1698; United States of America, total aid to India, 1691-92.

Untouchables, 51 millions in Bharata, acc. to census of 1951, 1622n.

Untouchability, abolished by Indian Constitution (Art. 17) and an Act passed to make treating a man as untouchable in public an offence 1636n.

Untruth, speaking of, forbidden in Tai. S. for a sacrificer 1246.

Upacāras: folding the hands (namaskāra) was one of the U. before the Nirukta, 36; U. in pūjā were either 36, 16, 10 or 5, 94; nine out of 16 U. are mentioned in Āśv. Gr. sūtra 36; not absent in Vedic age 35; quoted from Prapañcasāratantra in Dharmaśāstra works 1096; several of 16 Up. were well known long before the gṛhyasūtras 35; sixteen Up. enumerated, 35; to be offered with the 16 verses of Puruṣasūkta 35.

Upadeśa, meaning of, in P. M. S. 1163n, 1184n.

Upadeśa: Dharma-sindhu says that in Kaliyuga there is no dīkṣā but only U. 1117n; difference between dīkṣā and U. 1118.

Upanayana: (see under muhūrta); great importance attached to astrological positions of Bṛhaspati (Jupiter) in U. 609; is only an aṅga of the vidhi about teaching Veda inferred from Manu, 1109n: Muhūrtas for Upanayana are few and far between acc. to late medieval writers, 607; not to be performed when Venus is set or on certain tithis and on gala-graha 608; no rules in sūtras, Manu and Yāj. about position of planets, rāśis or week days for, U. 607; principal time for U. is 8th year from conception or from birth 609; proper ages for depended on the Varṇa of the boy 608; proper months and nakṣatras for U. 607, 609; rule laid down by Āśv. Gṛ. S. for U. and three other saṃskāras 605; seasons for the U. of boys of the three higher varṇas 607; Tuesday and Saturday inauspicious for 604.

Upaniṣads: (vide under 'brahman', mokṣa, Royce, Vedānta): accept as preparation for brahmavidyā study of Veda, sacrifices, tapas, fasting 918; are full of theories of creation 1500-01; atmosphere of Up. entirely different from Vedas and Brāhmaṇa texts 1498n; attitude of, to Veda as aparā-vidyā and to sacrifices 917, 1004, 1471; central Up. doctrine of immanence of brahman not attacked by Buddha or early propagators of Buddhism 1004; describe brahman in two ways, firstly as qualified by various adjuncts (such as name and form, created objects) and secondly as devoid of all adjuncts, there being no universe outside brahman, 1504-5; do sometimes say that he who knows brahman becomes brahman, but the same Up. require great moral and spiritual attainments (as in Muṇḍaka) 1514; emphasize the giving up of tṛṣṇā or Kāma 939n; fundamental doctrine of Up. is that there is only one Principle or Essence, that it creates the world out of itself and enters into it and that all plurality is only apparent and a name, that even inanimate world is non-different from Supreme Spirit 1487, 1625; geographical details in Up. are few 1522-23; germ of fundamental doctrine of Up. is found in the Ṛgveda 1487; give no name to the First Principle but speak of it as 'tad-ekam' (that one) 1490; glowing tribute of Deussen to philosophers of the Up. 1500; hold that esoteric knowledge has to be imparted by a guru to a disciple or by father to son, but not to all and sundry nor in an assembly 1071-72; illustrations (two) to bring home to the inquiring spirit non-difference are rivers flowing into the sea and losing their names and forms and pure water poured in other pure water, 1625; most important doctrines of Up. are two (1) non-difference of individual self from supreme Self and (2) transmigration of self depends on his deeds and conduct as taught by brāhmaṇa Yāj. to Janaka or by Uddālaka Āruṇi to son Śvetaketu, 1577-78; offer very little to the common man and did not solve his problems while the Bhagavadgītā took that matter in hand, 968; old Up. like Bṛ. and Chān. are admitted to be earlier than Buddha 1004; passages of Up. fore-shadowing Sāṅkhya doctrines or employing technical Sāṅkhya words 1360-61; put the knowledge of the Highest Self as superior to the Vedas (called aparā vidyā) yet quote Vedic verses in support of their statements 918, 1471; real thought of Up. centres round the non-difference between brahman and the individual soul and the physical world, 1500-1502; renunciation of all actions and their rewards was inculcated by Up. for a Sannyāsin who was to beg for alms till the body lasted, as even good deeds would lead to good births and put off mokṣa, 1513; several vidyās or upāsanās are described in Up. particularly in Chān. and Bṛ. for men that are not yet far advanced on the path of brahmavidyā 1584; some apparent discrepancies in Up. as to what was first created and as to the order of the creation of elements, as explained by Śaṅkarācārya 1506-7; some late Up. mentioned as the basis of Śākta doctrines by late medieval works, 1045n; speak of brahman, as creator, sustainer and as ultimate absorber of bhūtas (elements or beings) 1484; teach that sound moral preparation necessary before a true Vedāntic view is attained 1478n; verse enumerating ten ancient and principal Up. 1436n; Yoga in Up. 1387.

Upapurāṇas (vide under Hazra, Narasiṁhapurāṇa, Sāmba, Viṣṇudharma and Viṣṇudharmottara); all chapters and even single verses of U. are suspect 872; Alberuni's work shows that some U. such as Ādi, Āditya, Nanda (Nandi?), Narasiṁha and Sāmba had been composed at least some time before 1000 A. D. 831; are summaries made by sages after listening to 18 P, 835; began to be compiled from the 7th century and their numbers went on increasing till 13th century A. D. or even later 855; dates assigned by Prof. Hazra to Upapurāṇas not at all acceptable 882; early commentaries and digests on Dharmaśāstra like the Mit. and Kalpataru very rarely mention U. and even the latter refers to six Up. 837; Hazra (Prof.) says there are over 100 Upapurāṇas 834; Hazra admits that adherents of various sects such as Śāktas, Pāñcarātras, Sauras, interpolated chapters in Purāṇas and sometimes wrote new and independent works styled Purāṇas 837; Kūrma Purāṇa mentions Brahmāṇḍa, Nāradīya Skanda, Vāmana as Up. 870; Matsya names Narasiṁha, Nandi, Āditya and Sāmba as Up. and there is nothing to show that more than four were regarded by the Matsya as of any authority 834–5; names of 18 U. are set out by Devībhāgavata, Garuḍa, Kūrma, Padma, Hemādrī 834 and n; none of the U except Devī, Narasiṁha, the Viṣṇu dharmottara, and one or two more can be held to be as old as 7th or 8th century A. D. 835–36, 838; only a few Upapurāṇas are published and those published belie definition of Purāṇa as Pañcalakṣaṇa 834; only eight U. m. by Ballālasena 871; some U. bear the same names as those of principal Purāṇas, such as Skanda, Vāmana, Brahmāṇḍa and Nāradīya 834; total of 4 lakhs of verses of Purāṇas excludes the verses of U. 834.

Uparava, meaning of 18.

Uparicara Vasu, a king and devotee of Nārāyaṇa, dedicated his kingdom and wealth to God and worshipped acc. to Sāttvata rules 95n.

Upasad, days of 25.

Upasarga (preposition) changes the meaning of the root, 2.

Upaśruti (listening to words of children, or eaves-dropping near houses of washermen or cāṇḍālas and using words heard by chance as prognostications for coming events 809–810; methods similar to U. in the ancient near East 810n; method of casting dūrvā grass in a book at random 811.

Upavāka, a kind of seed 732n.

Upavarṣa, commentator of Jaimini 735n, 1186n, 1187n, 1197; expressly mentioned by Śabara 1186n; flourished between 100 B. C. to 100 A. D. 1197; held to be identical with Bodhāyana by Prof. Kuppuswami Sastri 1187n; m. by Śaṅkarācārya twice on V. S. with great respect 1187n, 1205.

Upavāsa: (vide under 'fast'); another meaning, in Brāhmaṇa texts 26.

Upavedas, four 820n, 1263n.

Upāyas, four, in politics 617.

Usages (vide under 'Sadācāra'): Baud. gr. enumerates five peculiar u. of the North and five others peculiar to the South and provides that if one belonging to South follows any usages peculiar to north or vice versa he would be guilty of sin, 1258; Manu, Yāj. Viṣṇudharmasūtra, Viṣṇupurāṇa say that one should not observe but discard what was once deemed to be dharma if it has become hateful to the people and would end in unhappiness 1270; illustrations where later Dharmaśāstra works like Mit. and Smṛticandrikā rely upon the above rule of discarding ancient practices, if common people had come to hate them 1270-71; Kumārila holds that in case of conflict between smṛtis and usages the former is more authoritative but usages opposed to Smṛtis have been in vogue from ancient times 1278-79; U. of countries, castes, families declared by Gautama and Manu to be authoritative if not directly opposed to the Veda 1278; modern legislation sometimes allows customs and usages overriding authority as under Hindu Marriage Act (25 of 1955) sec. 5 about marriages of sapiṇḍas, 1278-9, but also abrogates them in some cases, 1671; Privy Council held that clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law 1278; requisites of a valid custom, according to P. M. S. 1279-80.

Uśanas, a. on astrology m. by Varāhamihira 593.

Uśanas, Dharmaśāstra of, 1152n.

Uśanas (on Rājanīti) m. by Kālikāpurāṇa 1001, 1032-33.

Uśanas (on tithi) 78n, 79.

Uṣas: is called Apasaras and Vena is described as her lover in Ṛg., 495n.

Uṣaḥ-kāla, defined 278.

U. S. S. R.: vide under Russia.

Utilitarianism (vide under 'Rationalism'): criticism of this doctrine 1479-80: holds that actions are right where they tend to make for the greatest good or happiness of the greatest number etc. 1479; is not a moral theory at all 1479.

Utpala, commentator of Bṛ. S. of Varāhamihira 477, 479n, 520n, 521, 530n, 533n (on Yogayātrā), 545n, 547n, 554n, 561n, 564, 568, 658, 680 (quotes 18 verses from Garga on week days), 712n, 742n, 745n; commentator of Bṛhajjātaka 573n-75n, 577, 580n, 581, 584n, 587n, 591, 594, 657n, 765n, 796n, 1645n.

Utpāta: (vide under Atri), Nimitta, portent, Puṣyasnāna): 591, 743; description of 18 Śāntis bearing names of different gods prescribed by Matsya 746-747; descriptions of, abound in Mahābhārata 743; king's duty to arrange Śāntis for counteracting portents 745; list of chief U. and nimittas 743-44; list of three kinds of U. 745-46; means 'reverse of usual natural order' 741-42; no gradation or order in setting out utpātas which are given pellmell in both epics 744; of divya kind produce evil effects in eight ways 746; one adept in knowledge of U. becomes famous and king's favourite without mathematics 769; seasonal appearances in certain seasons are not inauspicious and require no śāntis 747, 767: three classes of u. in Atharvaveda, Garga, Parāśara, Sabhāparva, Bṛ. S. and Matsya viz. divya (from heaven), āntarikṣa (from atmosphere) and bhauma (terrestrial), and their illustrations 745–46; varying opinions about the effect of Śāntis 746.

Utsava, often difficult to distinguish from vrata 57.

Uttarādhyayanasūtra, a Jain work: 1367, 1375 (mentions ṣaṣṭitantra).

Uttarāyaṇa, vasanta and grīṣma are important parts of, 491–92.

Utthānadvādaśī, 12th tithi of Kārtika bright half 112.

Vācaknavī, a woman that had secured Brahmajñāna 921n.

Vācaspati 52.

Vācaspati, a of Sāṅkhyatattvakaumudī 468n, 1355, 1394n; a of Nyāyakaṇikā on Maṇḍana's 'Vidhiviveka'; a. of com. on Yogabhāṣya, called Tattvavaiśāradī 909, 1373, 1399n, 1409n–11, 1420n–22n, 1424n, 1438n, 1445 (quotes two verses of Viṣṇupurāṇa), 1446n, 1448, 1450n; a. of 'Bhāmatī', com. on Śāṅkarabhāṣya on V. S. 1166, 1510n: date of (820–900 A. D.) 1199, 1356.

Vadhūvaramelakavicāra, explained 614.

Va di, meaning of 670.

Vahnipurāṇa 138.

Vaidhṛti, 27th Yoga, is just like Vyatīpāta in all respects 707.

Vaidya, Mr. M. V. 893.

Vaidya, P. L. 998, 1005.

Vaijayanta, palace of Gods, 1529.

Vaikhānasa-smārtasūtra 528, 579, 681 (mentions Wednesday), 749 (on Śānti of nine planets), 750–752, 946n (ten yamas), 1096n, 1418n, 1452; date of, between 200 B.C. to 200 A. D. 528n; refers to nakṣatras called janma, karma, sāṅghātika, sāmudāyika and vaināśika and these terms are explained in the Yogayātrā and Viṣṇudharmottara 528–29n.

Vaiśākha: Akṣayyatṛtīyā, on 3rd of bright half of, 88–89; Paraśurāmajayantī on 3rd of bright half of, 89–90.

Vaiśeṣikasūtra 468, 472, 476, 1037n (defines dharma), 1468 and n; goal of, is niḥśreyasa (q. v.) 1468.

Vaiṣṇava or Vaiṣṇavas (acc. to context); defined in several Purāṇas 112–13; difficulties of, in choosing tithi for fast when it is viddhā 114; is really one who has taken dīkṣā acc. to Vaikhānasa or Pāñcarātra Āgama, but now people are called V. because they are so traditionally, 113; not to bow to or worship another God or to enter the temple of another God acc. to Vṛddha

Hārīta 976n; rank and file of V. generally exclusive and bigoted and treat with disdain everything pertaining to Śiva and take sumptuous food on Śivarātri 118; inconvenient results of insistence by V. on observing fast on Ekādaśi mixed with dvādaśi and pāraṇā on dvādaśī 117; wrangles of V. with śaivas and vice-versa 118, 973n.

Vaiṣṇavākūṭa-candrikā of Ratnagarbha on Viṣṇupurāṇa 832.

Vaiṣṇavism: Erotic mysticism of the love of Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā established by Caitanya and Vallabhācārya 980; in V. established by Vallabhācārya greatest honour is paid to guru who is a descendant of the founder 980.

Vaiśvānara: discussion on this word that occurs in Ṛg. I 59. 6 and I. 98. 1 in the Nirukta mentioning the opposite views of Yājñikas, of ācāryas and of Śākapūṇi 1156n.

Vaiśvānara, meaning of, in Ṛg. and Chān. Up. V. 15. 2, 1578–79.

Vaiśvānaravidyā, in Chān. Up. IV. 11, 23, 227n; is only an upāsanā and not thoroughgoing brahmavidyā, 1578–79.

Vaiśya, was good birth, acc. to Chān. Up., 1578-79, 1607.

Vaitaraṇī, 11th tithi of dark half of Mārgaśīrṣa 418.

Vājapeya 1029.

Vajapyāyana, an a. m. by Kātyāyana Vārtikakāra 1157.

Vājasaneyā Saṃhitā, 12n, 17–18, 22-3, 62n, 63, 126, 166, 168, 183n, 196n, 475, 485n, 527, 596n, 667, 672, 698, 721 (on Śānti), 722n, 724, 726n–7n, 750, 759, 762, 773, 776n, 777, 787, 796n, 814, 919–20, 969n, 1024, 1037, 1055n, 1079, 1181, 1217n. 1221, 1241, 1244, 1265n, 1288n, 1291, 1385n. 1489 (has all Puruṣasūkta verses), 1533, 1633.

Vājina, an offering different from 'āmikṣā' 1307.

Vajra, a. on astrology 593.

Vajrayāna (or Vajramārga); is the ulterior development of Mahāyāna 942n; other innovations of, were the introduction of the Upāsanā of Śakti and theory of Dhyānibuddhas, 1069; permitted killing of all animals speaking untruth, sexual intercourse (including what common people call incest), 1066; several meanings of Vajra, 1065–66; texts aim at the attainment of Bodhi 1092n.

Vajrolīmudrā, in Haṭhayogapradīpikā, cannot be set out, for its obscenity 1127; supposed to confer long life on yogin even after indulgence in sexual orgies 1127.

Vāk (speech); sublime hymn about power of, in Ṛg. X. 125, 1043–44.

Vākya (sentence): (vide 'Anuṣaṅga'); definition of V. 1297; example is the mantra 'devasya tva...nirvapāmi' (Tai. S. I. 1. 4. 2) 1297; in Ṛgveda and Sāmaveda, both being metrical, there is generally no difficulty in finding what constitutes a V. and Śabara confines himself to Yajus texts 1297; it is not absolutely necessary that in order to form a v. the words must be in close proximity (sannidhi), though generally proximity is required 1298; mantra text may constitute two sentences if it has two parts that serve different purposes as in 'Syonam te...manasyamānaḥ' (Tai. Br. III. 7.5), 'iṣe tvorje tvā' (first words of Tai. S.) 1298-99; three elements are required for constituting words into a sentence, viz. expectancy (akāṅkṣā), compatibility (yogyatā) and proximity, particularly the first 1297.

Vākyabheda (Lit. split of sentence); examples of 1295, 1300-1304; illustrations how to avoid V. in Manu IX. 142 about the result of adoption and in Bṛhaspati on the question of reunion after partition 1301-1303; not applicable to a sūtra, acc. to some 1182n; one aspect of the import of the word V. is the case where there are two (or more) sentences and one sentence does not require a word or words from another sentence, then the sentences should be treated as separate 1299; one and the same text cannot be construed as laying down two separate vidhis or when a certain matter has already been prescribed by vidhi and several auxiliary matters are to be prescribed in relation to the same, all auxiliaries cannot be prescribed in one sentence 1299-1300; one text of Tai. Br prescribes as to agnyādhāna that one having a son and having his hair yet dark should perform it; this has to be construed as indicating by lakṣaṇā that the man must not be very young nor very old, otherwise there would be two vidhis and the fault of V. 1301.

Vākyapadīya of Bhartṛhari 475 (on Kāla), 1396; com. of Helārāja on, 1396n.

Vālakhilya hymns 692.

Vallabhācārya (1479-1531 A. D.); a. of Tattvadīpanibandha 957n; holds Bhāgavata of supreme authority 957, 1176; holds that Jaimini, a. of P. M. S., is the pupil of Vyāsa a. of V. S. 1177; propounds an erotico-mystical brand of bhakti 971; thinks V. S. refers to Bhāgavata-purāṇa 1176n.

Vallabhotsava: festival in honour of Vallabhācārya (held as born in 1497 A. D) 403.

Values; are often moulded by environment 1701; certain values of Indian culture that have endured for three thousand years 1707.

Vāmācāra (vide under Tantra); of two kinds, acc. to Pārānandasūtra (a Tāntrik work), Madhyama (wherein all five Makāras are employed) and Uttama (in which wine, coitus and mudrā alone are employed) 1054.

Vāmadevya Sāman, 726 ; is a means of śānti and is sung on Ṛg. IV. 31. 1 (kayā naścitra) 726.

Vāmakeśvara Tantra 1045.

Vāmanapurāṇa : 71, 110-11, 119, 143, 203, 564, 682n, 779n, 833-34 (says Matsya is chief among Purāṇas), 921 (adapts Ṛg. I. 10. 1), 922n, 945 (on ahiṁsā), 971, 1372, 1526n, 1582 ; date between 600-900 A. D., 905 ; note on, 904-905 ; short Purāṇa with 5451 verses in Venk. ed. and prose in chap. 26, 44, 93).

Vaṁśas (lists of teachers and pupils) in Bṛ. Up. II. 6 3 and VI. 5. 2-3 do not completely agree, 1373.

Vanaparva, 27, 90n, 92n, 110, 118, 127, 129, 185, 202, 267, 497n, 539, 651n (time of starting of Kṛtayuga), 659, 686, 691-93, 743, 812n (on Kalisvarūpa), 821 (names Matsyapurāṇa and a purāṇa proclaimed by Vāyu), 827 (close agreement with Yugapurāṇa), 853n, 939n (giving up of tṛṣṇā), 994, 1006n, 1048, 1219, 1271n, 1357n, 1362n, 1372, 1385, 1416n, 1435n, 1436n (on functions of ten prāṇas), 1450, 1469, 1582, 1627n, 1634, 1636-7, 1642.

Vaṅkālakācārya, a. of work in Prakrit on astrology, 1645n.

Varadachari K. C., paper of, on Aḷwar's contributions to bhakti 954n.

Varadamudrā, defined and illustrated, 1131h.

Varāhamihira : (a. of Bṛhatsaṁhitā, Bṛhaj-jātaka, Yogayātrā, Bṛhadyogayātrā, Pañcasiddhāntikā, Laghujātaka, Ṭīkkanikā, and a few other works not yet published) ; 61n, 70, 150n, 465n, 479, 484, 519-20 (follows Gārgya on motion of Saptarṣis), 521, 530, 540, 545-7, 552, 558, 562, 591 (names many predecessors on astrology), 627, 634 (theory that a horoscope was like a plan), 638, 701, 711, 746-7, 765-773, 794, 1024, 1132, 1270n (importance of usages of common people), 1477 (on Āryabhaṭa's view about earth revolving round itself) ; date of (about 500-550 A. D.) 484, 1645 ; 1653n (mentions authors of Vāstuśāstra and image making ; did not follow Firmicus or Manilius on Dreṣkāṇas 580, 582n ; differences of, with Ptolemy, 575 and n, 589 (with Yavaneśvara), 574, 580 (on lords of the horās of the day), 586 ; frequently refers to the views of Yavanas and in some matters differs from them 563 ; probably identical with Buzurmihr, a minister of Nowshirwan of Persia 782.

Varāhapurāṇa : 31n, 44, 48, 54n, 56n, 77, 81, 98, 105n, 109n, 112, 118n, 119, 133, 145, 149, 155n, 178, 205, 238, 818n, 824n, 898 (mentions Bhaviṣya), 915-18, 920, 932, 949 (on pūrta), 973-974, 993, 1096n, 1132, 1384, 1596n ;

date of, earlier than 10th century A. D. 904; has some chapters in prose and some in prose and verse 903; note on 903-904; refers to a Śaka king called Nandavardhana 901; supposed to have been narrated to the Earth by Viṣṇu in Boar incarnation, 903-904; Vyāsa does not appear in this P., though Sūta figures in the beginning of several chapters 904.

Vārāhītantra 172.

Vararuci, as expert in Nāṭyaveda 990n.

Vardhamāna 50n.

Vardhamāna–Nirvāṇa Era 656.

Vardhāpanavidhi (procedure of anniversary of birth of a child or king) 403.

vargottama, meaning of 584.

Varivasyārahasya, 1063 (on 36 tattvas).

Varṇa system and caste system: (vide under brāhmaṇas, Cāṇḍālas, caste, jātis, moral qualities, social legislation, śūdra): origin and development of 1632-1643; Bhagavadgītā (IV. 13 and XVIII. 42-44) asserts that the Varṇa system was based on qualities and actions and specifies the qualities and actions of the four varṇas, most of which for brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas are moral and spiritual 1635; how and why several thousands of castes and sub-castes arose only in India is an insoluble problem 1633; if Varṇa and caste system has broken down and become harmful and unpopular among people it may be discarded, but that cannot be done by force or mere legislation, but by strenuous work and education of all from childhood 1641; intermarriages between the first three varṇas were allowed even in the times of Yāj. and a few other Smṛtis 1265, 1632; is distinguished from jāti, but the two are confounded in Manu, 1633; it may be conceded that some centuries before the Puruṣasūkta, Aryan community was divided into four groups, a similar division not being unnatural and being found in other countries 1632; no evidence to show that intermarriages and interdining among the four varṇas was prohibited in the Vedic age 1633; numerous artisans and craftsmen are mentioned in Vāj. S., Kāṭhaka S. and Taj. Br., but there is nothing to show that they had become petrified castes, 1633; Varṇas were only four and there was no fifth v. 1633; word varṇa was applied to āryas and dāsas in Ṛgveda, they being hostile camps, 1632; words brāhmaṇa and kṣatriya frequently occur in Ṛg. but the word varṇa is not expressly connected with them in it 1632.

Varṇasaṅkara (mixture or confusion of castes): 1634ff (had gone far in Mahābhārata times); criticism of caste system had arisen and people had begun to contend that it is qualities that make a man a brāhmaṇa and not mere birth 1633.

Vārṣagaṇa, a Sāṅkhya teacher m. by Yuktidīpikā, 1355.

Vārṣagaṇya of Parāśaragotra, m. as teacher of Sāṅkhya in Śāntiparva and Yogasūtrabhāṣya and Bhāmatī 1374 and n.

Varṣakṛityadīpikā 241n.

Varṣakriyākaumudī: 31n, 34, 37, 42n, 52n, 54n–5n, 57n, 66n, 68n, 72n–81n. 83n-5n, 90n, 93n, 97n, 99n, 103n, 100n, 110n, 111n, 115–6n, 118n, 120, 132n, 136n, 137n, 142n, 152–3, 161, 163n, 195n, 167n, 169n, 170n, 174n, 176n–178n, 180n–182n, 193, 126n. 198, 200–1n, 207n–8n, 212n–215n, 216 218n, 220n–22n, 226, 230n, 232, 241, 243n, 249n, 660, 1096, 1109n, 1122, 1124, 1125n.

Varṣas, nine named by Viṣṇu, Vāmana and Vāyū (with variations) and they state that the Varṣas were given to the nine sons of Āgnīdhra, grandson of Svāyambhuva Manu, there being confusion about names of kings and varṣas, 1524–25.

Vārtika, defined, 1182–83.

Vārtikas (on Pāṇini) 68n, 130, 203n, 467, 667n, 720n, 735n, 820, 1032, 1156–57, 1169.

Vārtikālaṅkāra, of Prajñākaragupta 472.

Varuṇa, praised in 12 hymns of Ṛgveda is called Samrāj oftener than even Indra praised in about 200 hymns, 8.

Varuṇapraghāsa, a Cāturmāsya rite, in which the sacrificer's wife had to confess or indicate if she ever had a lover 1592n.

Vāruṇī, 13th tithi of Caitra dark half with Śatabhiṣak nakṣatra and is very holy 405.

Vasantarāja Śākuna (vide Upaśruti): 792, 799, 801, 805, 869; account of the author 805n; authors mentioned by, 805n; based mainly on the Bṛ. S. and Bṛhadyogayātrā 809; brief account of its contents 806-7; claims that it requires no expounder, no mathematics and if well studied the reader acquires great rewards 801; date of, between 700–1100 A. D. 805n; extends the meaning of Śakuna to include actions of men and beasts 808; five excellent animals for Śakunas are the podakī bird, dog, crow, piṅgalā bird and female jackal, that are presided over by certain deities 809; mentions fifty objects as auspicious signs when starting on a journey or entering a home and thirty objects that are inauspicious, 778; more than half of it (viz. 781 verses) are devoted to sounds made by three birds and 372 are devoted to barking and movements of dogs and female jackals 808; most comprehensive work on Śakunas and contains 1525 verses, 806; prognostications based on the sound produced by house lizard (pallī or pallikā) or its movements and its fall on the several limbs of a person 792; prognosticications from throbbing of limbs, 800–801; silent about fall of pallī 792n; states that 'Upaśruti' (unpromoted oracular voices of a child etc.) is most reliable and easily understood Śakuna 809–810.

Vasantotsava 403–404.
Vāsavadattā of Subandhu 1009n, 1048.
Vasiṣṭha, sage, thought of committing suicide 1280; two births of, referred to in Ṛg. VII. 33, 1536-37.
Vasiṣṭha, a writer on Astrology, 61n, 134, 213n, 216, 593, 607, 621.
Vasiṣṭha Dharmasūtra 24n, 527n, 733n, 782n, 876n, 914n, 930. 937, 944–45, 1027, 1239n (on giving an only son in adoption), 1248n, 1335 (one sūtra on adoption interpreted in four ways), 1413n, 1416n, 1441–1442n, 1589n, 1596, 1638n (sale of milk by brāhmaṇa condemned).
Vasiṣṭha Siddhānta, one of the five Siddhāntas and far from accurate, 514n, 663n.
Vasordhārā: a Śānti m. by Tai S. and early and late Dharmaśāstra works 737n.
Vāstoṣpati, is either Indra or Rudra 790n.
Vāstu (house): see under 'house'.
Vāstu-śānti, also called Gṛhaśānti or Vāstu-śamana, 790–91; saṅkalpa in, 790n; very elaborate in late digests 791.
Vāstuśāstra, eighteen teachers of, m. by Matsyapurāṇa 623, 1653.
Vāstuyāgatattva, 1133.
Vāsudeva: antiquity of the worship of 962; in some Purāṇas like Brahma and Viṣṇu the word is not derived from Vasudeva, but from root 'Vas' to dwell 962.
Vāsudevaka, means one whose object of worship is Vāsudeva, acc. to Pāṇini 962.
Vasundharā, (vide under Vikrama): 56.
Vaṭakaṇikā, a work of Varāhamihira, quoted in Adbhutasāgara. 742n, 743.
Vaṭasāvitrīvrata, 91–94; on Jyeṣṭha Full Moon, 91; fast for three days or some alternatives of nakta etc 94; called Mahāsāvitrīvrata by V. K. V. 92; must have been in vogue long before 10th century A. D. 92; decision in case Full Moon tithi is viddhā 93: possible reason why worship of Vaṭa tree comes in, 93; procedure of 93.
Vāyavīyasaṃhitā 1108.
Vāyupurāṇa, 29n, 90n. 99, 129, 133n, 147, 209–10, 473n, (on Kāla), 476 (units of time), 520n (about motion of Saptarṣis), 540 (names of Muhūrtas), 649n (on beginning of Kaliyuga), 651n (beginning of Kṛtayuga), 657n, 667n, 678, 692–3, 696n, 698, 735, 774, 817n, 821n–2, 824n–5, 830n, (chap. 104 of doubtful authenticity), 843, 845n, 846–48, 850–52, 853n, 854–5, 857–58n, 861–3, 915–16, 921 (adopts Upaniṣad passages), 931n, 932, 939n, 947, 974, 993n, 995-6, 1052n (q. by Kulārṇava), 1061n (on defects due to ignorant men practising yoga), 1152, 1182n, 1320n, 1399n, 1419n (only five aṅgas of yoga), 1438n, 1440n, 1456-7, 1526n, 1528, 1581, 1611, 1645n 1653n; divided like Brahmāṇḍa into four pādas, 905; first verse (Nārāyaṇam namaskṛtya etc.) and 2nd eulogising Vyāsa not found in some mss. 905; Gayāmahātmya chapters deemed to be later 905; has 112 chapters and 10991 verses in Ānan. ed. 905; makes a passing reference to Gupta Dynasty and mentions rāśis 905-7; note on 906-7; one of the oldest and authoritative Purānas and contains much Dharmaśāstra material 905; Śaiva bias in several chapters but chap. 98 and Gayāmāhātmya are full of praise of Viṣṇu 905; some verses quoted by Śaṅkarācārya as from a Purāṇa or Smṛti are found in V. 906 and n.

Veda: (vide Mantras, Mahābhāṣya, nāmadheya, Ṛgveda, Pūrvamīmāṃsā); all Veda texts do not contain vidhis, numerous V. passages are commendatory, or condemn an act that is prohibited or refer to instances of persons performing the vidhi in the past or put forward to be a reason for the vidhi; these are not to be treated as unnecessary, but are to be taken along with vidhi passages to complete their full import 1243; arrangement into Maṇḍalas or Aṣṭakas or Kāṇḍas is not claimed to be eternal, though the V. is eternal 839, 861; different interpretations of some mantras by Śabara, Kumārila, Nirukta, Mahābhāṣya, Sāyana exemplified in the case of Ṛg. IV.58.3, 1255-56; divided into five categories viz. vidhi (hortatory), mantras, nāmadheya (names like Udbhid), pratṣedha or niṣedha (prohibition) and arthavāda (laudatory or explanatory passages) and examples of these 1098, 1225; divided into three parts, vidhi, arthavāda, mantra, (nāmadheya being placed under vidhi) 1225; the epic and Purāṇas say that the one eternal Veda was arranged into four parts by Vyāsa, but do not say that they were distributed into maṇḍalas or kāṇḍas by Vyāsa 859; eternal, self-existent, not composed by any human or divine author and infallible, acc. to P. M S. 1202-1204; is constituted by Mantras and Brāhmaṇa 1222; Mantras of the three Vedas are said by Manu to have been drawn from Agni, Vāyu and Sūrya 1181; Manu lays down Japa (muttering) of Vedic mantras of adhiyajña, adhidaiva and adhyātma types 1181; many vedic texts are apparently in conflict with each other and with ordinary experience 1124; many verses of Veda had threefold applications viz. with reference to sacrifices (adhiyajña), adhidaiva or adhidaivata (with reference to deities) and adhyātma (with reference to metaphysical meaning) and illustrations 1181; Naiyāyikas hold that God is the author of the Veda and the Vedāntasūtra holds same view 1202; necessity of knowing four matters about every mantra viz the ṛṣi, the metre, the deity and application, emphasized by Ait Br., Chān. Up. and Smṛtis and evil consequences of not knowing these 859–860; passages in Smṛtis and Purāṇas stating that Brahmā or Prajāpati created the Veda are laudatory and not to be taken literally 1202; promulgated for Yajña 1184; proposition of some smṛtis that wealth is for Yajña, which is strenuously opposed by the Mitākṣarā 1184; Śabara lays down that one that wants to perform a vedic sacrifice must have memorized the portion of Veda relating to the sacrifice and must also understand its meaning 1181; Schools of Veda interpretation, such as Aitihāsikas refer to Devāpi and his brother Śantanu (Ṛg. X. 98 5, and 7), Yama and Yamī (in Ṛg.X.10) and Viśvāmitra and the rivers, Ṛg. X.33) as historical personages, but the Nairuktas explained them differently 1203; six aṅgas (auxiliary lores) of, enumerated in Muṇḍakopaniṣad and Āp.Dh.S., 478; Smṛtis sometimes say that there is no author of Veda, that Brahmā remembers it 1203; some Mantras like 'catvāri śṛṅgā' are laudatory of Yāga 1255–56; smṛtis like those of Gautama, Manu, Yāj., lay down the periods for which one should study (i.e. memorize) V.1180; study of V. has five aspects viz. memorizing it, reflection over it, constant repetition of it, japa of it and imparting to pupils 1181–82; substantial contribution to exegesis of Veda by P. M. S., Śabara and Kumārila, 1218; Svādhyāya and pravacana of V. constitute Tapas, 1180; teaching Veda, demanding fee for, was and is condemned even now but teacher could accept fees paid at end of studenthood by pupil or somebody else for him, 1638; that many Veda texts are lost or are unavailable is stated so early as Āp. Dh. S. 1259; theory that Veda is eternal and of absolute authority has led to some undesirable tendencies, viz. propounders of new-fangled doctrines claim they have Vedic authority, examples cited 1218–19; that words of the Veda have the same meanings that words in popular Sanskrit have is the view of

P. M. S., Śabara and other mīmāṁsā writers 1276; words like Babara Prāvāhaṇi, Pramaganda which the opponents of eternality of the Veda put forward as showing that they refer to ancient human beings are explained away as having other meanings 1203, 1224n, 1256; words like 'jarbharī turpharītu' (Ṛg. X. 106. 6), Kāṇukā (Ṛg. VIII. 77. 4), that are argued by some as having no sense are explicable with the help of Nirukta and grammar 1256.

Vedāṅgas (six) are declared by Kumārila to be useful as Kratvartha and Puruṣārtha 1261, 1274-76.

Vedāṅga Jyotiṣa 498, 499n, 505n, 519, 538, 559 (Yājuṣa), 591, 646, 657, 659, 662 (Yājuṣa), 663, 681 (Ātharvaṇa), 1181, 1184; date of 505n.

Vedānta: (vide under 'Brahman, Deussen, Mokṣa, soul, Upaniṣads); Deussen's theory that kṣatriyas were the original cheirshers of V. thought, not brāhmaṇas, stated and criticized 577-86; doctrine of the non-difference of the individual soul and even of the inanimate world from the First Principle or Essence is one of the most characteristic features of Hinduism and India's greatest contribution to the spiritual development of man 1625, 1631; expresses advaita in such sentences as 'aham brahmāsmi'; 'tat-tvam-asi' 1482; first and foremost aspect of V. was that Ātman is the only reality and that Ātman can be only described in the words 'neti, neti', but it clashed with the popular idea that a real world existed apart from the creator 1498; in its highest form V. is the best support for pure morality for all individuals, the greatest consolation in the sufferings of life and death 1479, 1625; in medieval and later times by the side of sublime metaphysical tenets, there was lack of solidarity of all common people, lack of efforts to reduce poverty and dominance of brutal and alien invaders 1479; persons imbued with the true spirit of advaita Vedānta like Ramaṇamaharshi are found in India even in these days 1479n; tendency to appeal to the past, to believe that what has been is the best has been very strong in India throughout several centuries, 1479, 1707n (Advaita V. has influenced great modern minds in the West).

Vedāntasāra 1450.

Vedāntasūtra, 24n, 731n, 732n, 775, 779n, 780, 824-5, 860n, 866, 906, 921n, 944n, 953-56, 959, 1032-33n, 1045, 1063n, 1155n, 1158-9, 1167-8, 1202, 1211, 1218, 1255, 1273n, 1352, 1357n, 1359n, 1362-63, 1365, 1388, 1309, 1400n, 1403n, 1434n, 1446(n), 1466, 1468, 1469n, 1471, 1484–5, 1488n, 1499n, 1500, 1503, 1505, 1507–10, 1516n, 1541, 1542n, 1550, 1554, 1558–60, 1562–4, 1566–67, 1579 (on Vaiśvānara), 1580n, 1583, 1588, 1600n, 1602n, 1625 (refers to Atharvaveda Brahmasūkta), 1642; authors mentioned by V. S. alone and not by PMS are Audulomi, and Kāśakṛtsna 1173; author of, knew Yoga doctrines, same as some sāṅkhya doctrine, Samādhi but did not know the present Yogasūtra 1390–91; Bhāskara, Pañcapādikā, Śaṅkarācārya and Yāmunācārya hold that Bādarāyṇaa is the a. of V. S., while Rāmānuja appears to mention both Vyāsa Pārāśarya and Bādarāyaṇa as authors 1165–66; declares that saṁsāra is anādi 1567; mentions Jaimini's views eleven times, in six of which there is no corresponding sūtra or view in P. M. S. and Jaimini probably wrote a work on Vedānta also, 1167; mentions Bādarāyaṇa nine times, most of the views of B. being opposed to Jaimini's or at least slightly different 1167–68; problem of the authorship of V. S. is complicated but there were two Bādarāyaṇas, 1165–1169; problem of the eight sūtras in which the words 'taduktam' occur, discussed, 1176; Śāntiparva verses quoted as Smṛti by Śaṅkarācārya for supporting the views of V. S 1166n; Smṛti mentioned in many sūtras of V. S. is the Gītā acc. to Śaṅkarācārya and almost all ācāryas 1172; some sūtras of, differentiate between Jīva and Paramātman, while some others speak of non-difference between the two 1567; V.S. very much presupposes the P. M. S., which does not appear to have been influenced by V. S. 1176.

Vedārtha-saṅgraha of Rāmānuja, 880.

Vedha : of tithis, explained 72–73; V. in eclipses 250.

Vedic Age, chronology of, uncertain 513.

Vedic Interpretation : (vide under 'Aurobindo', 'Kapali sastry'); by Sri Aurobindo of 230 verses in all from Maṇḍalas I, II and VI and of 60 hymns in another work briefly examined, criticized and mistaken notions pointed out, 985–991; Nirukta mentions seventeen individual predecessors on V. I, who differ from it and also among themselves 984; several schools of, such as Aitihāsikas, Naidānas, Nairuktas, Parivrājakas existed even before the Nirukta 984, 1203–4; some examples on which Aitihāsika school would rely are Nāsatyau, Vṛtra, Purūravas and Urvaśī, Saramā and Paṇis, which would show that the Aitihāsikas did not believe in the self-existence and eternality of the Veda 1204; the most sublime and fundamental thought of the Ṛgveda (I. 164. 46 and X. 129.2, VIII. 58. 2) that there is only one Spirit behind the various gods, that originally there was only that one which became all this, is embodied in words, about which there is no secrecy and which can be understood by any one who knows a little Sanskrit 987; about word 'Saṃvatsara' in regard to the Sattra called 'Viśvasṛjāmayana' said to last for a thousand years Jaimini (P. M. S. VI. 7. 31-40) boldly asserts that here it means a day, relying on Ṛg. I. 89. 9 and Tai. Br. I.7.6.2 (śatāyuḥ puruṣaḥ), 1321.

Vedic Texts, the repetition of which or homa offered with which was deemed to purify a person are set out in Vasiṣṭha Dh. S. (28. 10-15), 733n, Velankar Prof. H. D. : explanation of Ṛg. X. 72 (aditer dakṣo ajāyata) by, demurred to 1488n.

Vena, called Gandharva in Ṛgveda and may be Venus 494n.

Vendidad : Parsi scripture mentions 'Hapta Hindu' (Sapta-Sindhu) 1613n.

Veṇīsaṃhāra 775n, 779n.

Veṅkaṭanātha or Veṅkaṭadeśika (1269-1369 A. D.) a. of Seśvaramīmāṃsā 1209; vide under Devatā.

Venkatasubbiah, Shri, avers that thirty works cited by Madhva occur nowhere else 1219.

Verbal forms : two kinds of, the first of which only conveys that the agent only exists (as in 'asti'), the second of which conveys not only the existence of the agent but also some activity of the agent (as in yajati), that is, in these latter the sense of 'karoti' (he does) is also understood, 1237.

Vernal Equinox: deemed to have occurred on Aśvinī-nakṣatra about Śaka 444 but now it has receded to Uttarābhādrapadā 712; was in Kṛttikās about 2300 B. C, 497n, 508; was in divisional sign Aries about 200 B. C, 601.

Verses : identical in several Purāṇas 853, 945n; identical in Brahma and Viṣṇu Purāṇas, 929, 1046n; identical in Matsya and Brahmāṇḍa 945n; identical in Viṣṇu and Padma 966n, identical in Viṣṇu and Varaha Purāṇas 931n.

Veśī : rāśi, when so called 584.

Vidhi (or Vidhis); (vide under Bhāvanā, Niyama and Parisaṅkhyā): V. apply to all Āryas 1281; (Vidhi) is an exhortation that is meaningful on account of enjoining a matter that has a useful purpose and that prescribes something which does not follow (is not established by) from any other authority 1225-26; is laid down by a verbal form or potential passive participle in 'ya' or 'tavya' 1225n; is ordinarily couched in the optative form (vidhiliṅ) and a verb in the present tense cannot ordinarily be taken as laying down a V. 1226; only vidhis so called have absolute authority, while Arthavādas have authority in so far as they praise Vidhis 1283; one classification of vidhis is into four, 1228; sometimes a vidhi may be inferred even from a verb in the present tense (illustrated) 1226–7; the central element in v. is the verb or verbal form expressed as 'one shall do', 'it shall be be done', 'it ought to be done' 1226; the employment of words like 'hi' or 'vai' is not generally allowed in a V. 1227n; the text about rātrisattra, though in the present tense is, construed as a v. 1227; threefold classification of v. into apūrvavidhi (as in svargakāmo yajeta), niyamavidhi (as in 'he pounds rice') and Parisaṅkhyā 1229; two-fold classification of vidhis into Puruṣārtha and Kratvartha 1232–1234; where a rite has already been laid down all that can be said as laid down about it later is to enjoin an accessary (guṇa, a detail), 1226; where a vidhi is already established a separate vidhi is required for each of the auxiliary matters relating to it 1295n.

Vidhyādi, such texts as 'Darśapūrṇamāsābhyām yajeta' are called V. 1323.

Vidhyanta, is the whole procedure of Darśapūrṇamāsa except the originative injunction (Darśayajeta) detailed in the Brāhmaṇa texts about the offering of puroḍāśa (cake) 1323n.

Vidura, though a śūdra, possessed brahmajñāna 921; and secured mokṣa 1642.

Vidyāmādhavīya, (also called Muhūrtadarśana) 539.

Vidyāpati, a great writer of Mithilā; composed devotional songs of Viṣṇu, Śaivasarvasvasāra, Durgābhaktitaraṅgiṇī and also a tāntrik work 1076; the first verse of the Puruṣaparīkṣā of V. invokes Ādi-Śakti 1076.

Vidyās: fourteen V. set out in Yāj. and others 820, 926, 1152, 1263; fourteen known to Kālidāsa 1152n; eighteen acc. to some (including Upavedas) 820, 926n; Ghurye, Dr. G. S. work of, on 1152n; sources of, are 14 but Bauddha works are not included as sources of dharma or vidyās 1152, 1263.

Vidyāsthāna, (branch of knowledge): the word occurs in Nirukta 1276n; vide under 'Vidyās'.

Vidyāsūkta 1033n, 1461.

Vihavya-anuvāka, 786.

Vijaya, time and Muhūrta so called, 189, 406.

Vijayādaśamī (vide under 'Dasarā'): chief observances of 190; in place of Śamī, another tree called 'Apṭā' is worshipped in Mahārāṣṭra 192; on 10th of Āśvina bright half, 188; one of the three most auspicious days in the year, 189; Rāma is said to have marched against Laṅkā on this day, 192; time for, when 10th tithi is mixed with 9th or 11th tithi 188; time for celebrating it is afternoon or pradoṣa 188; time for new undertakings even though the moon or some other planets be not favourable 189.

Vijñānabhikṣu (about 1550 A. D.): a. of Sāṅkhyapravacanabhāṣya 976, 1355.

Vijñānadīpikā, of Padmapāda, (in 71 verses): 1574n (on three kinds of Karma), 1588, 1599.

Vikalpa (option) or Vikalpas: 1249–1252: (vide under śāstra, smṛtis); defined by Gautama, Jai., Śabara and Manu 1154; eight faults of V. apply only to V. based on reasoning, 1252: is liable to eight faults and should be avoided and resort should be had to paryudāsa or arthavāda 1250, 1252; may be a vyavasthita (i. e. restricted to a certain state of circumstances) or 'avyavasthita (not so restricted) and examples 1251–52; V. are grouped under three heads with examples, 1250–51; where two texts are irreconcilable there is V. as in the two sentences about Atirātra 1249–50.

Vikrama: became lord of the world in Kaliyuga by vratas 55; whose daughter Vasundharā of Daśārṇa country attained mokṣa by vratas 56.

Vikramāditya VI, of Cālukya dynasty; Inscription in 1098 A D. about school for teaching Prabhākara's Mīmāṃsā doctrines 1192.

Vikramāditya: doubts about the existence of a king called V. about 57 B. C. 650–51; Emperor Chandragupta II was styled V. on his coins 901; era of 650–53; papers on 650n, 651.

Vikramāditya commemoration volume 650n.

Vikramorvaśiya, a drama by Kālidāsa 46, 900–901 (close agreement between Matsyapurāṇa and V. on the incidents in the story).

Vinaya Texts 1070.

Vināyakaśānti, also called Gaṇapatipūjā 748; performed at the beginning of all Saṃskāras, such as Upanayana and marriage and for averting or mitigating effects of portents or on a Sapiṇḍa's death 748–749; performed also on Thursday or on certain auspicious nakṣatras 748; Saṅkalpa for, 748n; to be performed in ordinary fire 757.

Vindhyavāsa or -vāsin; identified with Īśvarakṛṣṇa by Takakusu and Keith but Abhinavagupta distinguished between the two 1376–77; also called Rudrila 1376.

Viniyogavidhi: conveys the relation between the principal act (aṅgin or śeṣin) and its subsidiaries (aṅgas or śeṣa) 1307; is the concern of 3rd chap. of P. M. S. 1307, 1309; six means of determining what is principal and what are subsidiaries and the relative strength of the latter when there is a doubt or a conflict, each succeeding one being weaker than each preceding one, and there being 15 probable cases of conflict among these six and a few illustrations 1309–1311.

Vinoba Bhave and Bhūmidāna targets 1683.

Vipāś (river in Punjab, modern Beas), 537n.

Vīramitrodaya of Mitramiśra, 835n, 1192 (on Vyavahāra); on āhnika 42n.

Vīrāsana, a posture in Kṛcchra and Aghamarṣaṇa vratas 415 ; a yogic āsana 1425–26n.

Virāṭaparva 179, 185n, 192n, 506n, 663, 743, 821, 1570n, 1636.

Viṣa-ghaṭī or Viṣanāḍī, 736n ; birth of a child on V. is portent of death of father or mother or loss of wealth or of the child 736n ; a particular ghaṭi of each nakṣatra is so called acc. to Madanaratna 736n.

Viṣṇu : (vide under Avatāras, Śāstras) : appears to be a name of the Sun in the Ṛgveda and came to be regarded as Highest God in Brāhmaṇa times 957 ; Bhaviṣyapurāṇa says that V. begins to sleep in the first quarter of Anurādhā nakṣatra, turns on another side in the middle of Śravaṇa and wakes up in the last quarter of Revatī 110n ; day of, is equal to whole life of Brahmā 691 ; different tithis (11th, 12th, 15th) for Viṣṇu's going to sleep in different authorities 110–1 ; deluded people and asuras by producing Māyāmoha from his body that led them away from the Vedic path 974–975 ; how śayana (sleeping) and prabodha (awakening) of V. are to be celebrated, 112 ; identified with sacrifice (yajña) 957; Meghadūta and Vanaparva mention the sleeping of Viṣṇu on the snake Śesa and waking up 110, 127 ; one thousand eight names of V. set out in Anuśāsanaparva, chap. 149 and Garuḍapūrāṇa I. 15. 1–160, 977n, 780n ; possible explanations of sleep of Viṣṇu for four months 109 ; steps called V. in sacrifices 191 ; was supposed to go to sleep on night of 11th of Āṣāḍha bright half and to awake in the day on 11th of Kārtika bright half 109–10, 414 ; was supposed to turn from one side to the other in his sleep on Bhādrapada bright half 11th tithi (which was therefore called Parivartinī 109; worship of V. in three different ways, Vaidika, Tāntrika or Miśra 924 ; worship of, in six mediums 1131n, 1649 ; worship of, may be performed on Śālagrāma stone, on a jewel, yantra, maṇḍala, image, or in a temple, acc. to Padmapurāṇa I136.

Viṣṇucandra, writer on Astrology q. by Utpala 587n.

Viṣṇucittī, com. on Viṣṇupurāṇa,

832, 907.
Viṣṇudharma, an Upapurāṇa; 873-876, 909-10; Hazra relies chiefly upon a single ms. in Bengal 873; Hazra dates it between 200-300 A. D. 872; Hazra's interpretation of two verses from Viṣṇudharmottara is wrong, 874 and n.
Viṣṇudharmasūtra: 48, 51, 58, 89, 116, 218, 221, 249, 527, 681, 687, 691, 757, 782n, 817n, 825, 863, 931n, 934, 1024, 1027, 1243, 1248n, 1270n (similar to Yāj. I. 156), 1326, 1413n, 1416n, 1422n, 1441, 1448, 1533-34, 1590, 1596, 1648 (same as Manu), 1709n.
Viṣṇudharmottara, an Upapurāṇa: 57, 68n, 69n, 73, 90n, 91, 104n, 112n, 115n, 120, 129n, 135n, 137n, 169, 201n, 204n, 219-20, 250, 473 (on Kāla), 476, 477n, 529-31, 534, 541, 544, 624, 657, 659-60, 663, 682, 734 (chapters on Śāntis), 748, 751-52, 754, 768n (has verses common to Matsya and Br. S.), 774, 776n, 778 (same verse as in Matsya), 779n, 793, 798-99, 801, 803-5, 857n, 874n, 920, 923 (king's coronation with Vedic and Paurāṇika mantras), 973n, 1033, 1099n, (Gāyatrī verse used in black magic), 1128 (in chap. 32 it speaks of mudrāhastas and in chap. 33 of over 100 Sāmānyamudrās called nṛttaśāstramudrās), 1129, 1243, 1422, 1438, 1439n-1443n, 1455, 1649, 1653; Aparārka quotes only 7 times and about 25 verses only, 881; borrows from works of Varāhamihira 878; date of, acc. to Hazra, is 400-500 A. D. 876; date of, after 600 A.D. and before 1000 A.D. 910; has Tāntrik elements 876n, Kālikāpurāṇa refers to it 910, 1033; note on 876-78, 910; questions whether the Mudrās in religious worship were derived from the postures (karaṇas), recakas (gestures) and 32 aṅgahāras (movements of limbs) in Bharata's Nāṭyaśāstra (chap. 4, 8, 9) cannot at present be finally decided 1128-29.
Viṣṇugupta, a. on astrology 593-4.
Viṣṇupadī-Saṅkrāntis 213, 413; puṇyakāla is 32 ghaṭis 215.
Viṣṇupañcaka, last five days of Kārtika are so called, 412-13.
Viṣṇupurāṇa: 79n, 112, 118n, 129, 147, 150n, 197, 205n, 221, 473n, 474n, 511n, 520n, 571n, 649, 651n, 678, 687, 689-92, 694, 698, 735n, 743n, (mentions Garga), 817n, 820, 824n, 825 (a verse of V. quoted as Smṛti by Śāṅkarbhāṣya), 845n (period of time between Parīkṣit and coronation of Nanda), 852, 853n, 857, 861, 907-909, 915 (story of Purūravas and Urvaśī), 916, 921 (adopts Upaniṣad passages), 926n (18 vidyāsthānas), 928-29, 949, 957n-59, 961 (on Prahlāda), 962-63, 969n, 974, 996, 1046-47, 1152n, 1222n, (confused account of the śākhās of Sāmaveda), 1270n (on discarding even Vedic practices), 1312n (defines 'svarga' as manaḥprīti), 1362n, 1382, 1391 (quotes two verses of Hiraṇyagarbha), 1399, 1404 (on propounders of Yogaśāstra), 1417n, 1421, 1440, 1444 on pratyāhāra), 1446, 1448 (agrees with Y. Bhāṣya closely), 1450, 1455, 1457 (on Yogi-caryā), 1522, 1526n, 1528, 1596n ; closely agrees with definition as Pañcalakṣaṇa, 907 ; com. called Vaiṣṇavākūṭacandrikā of Ratnagarbha and another called Viṣṇucittī deal with a V. of 6000 verses only 832–33, 868n ; Dānasāgara knew a V. of 23000 verses which it discards 868n–69, 909 ; extant Viṣṇu P. composed between 300 to 500 A.D. 909 ; is full of characteristic qualities of Vaiṣṇavas 874n ; narrates how and why Vyāsa declared how Kaliyuga, Śūdra and women were blessed 928–929 ; on Sāṅkhya 1382 ; present text divided into six aṁśas, 126 chapters and has about 6000 verses 907 ; Rāmānuja in his Vedārthasaṅgraha quotes more than 100 verses from V, regards V. as of supreme authority over other Purāṇas 880, 957n ; Śākya, Śuddhodana (as 23rd in descent from Bṛhadbala and Rāhula mentioned by V.) 909 ; several works state the number of ślokas in V. to be different from 6000 to 24000, 832–33 ; some verses identical with Brahmāṇḍa and Brahma and other Purāṇas 908, 963n, 1516n ; teaches doctrine of complete advaita and of niṣkāma-karma 908 ; translated by H. H. Wilson 883, 909 ; Vācaspati names it in com. on Yoga-bhāṣya 909 ; Vyāsa does not play a prominent part in V. and Sūta does not appear as narrator at all 909.

Viṣṇurahasya 49n, 115n, 869 (a mere compilation, acc. to Dānasāgara).

Viṣṇusaṁhitā, elaborate treatment of dīkṣā in, 1117, 1123, 1125 and n (on Mudrās appropriate to several gods and names about 30).

Viṣṇuśṛṅkhalā-yoga 414–15.

Viṣṭi, 7th mobile Karaṇa, 411–12, 709–710 ; appears to have inspired great terror among medieval Dharmaśāstra writers 709-10 ; astrologers raised it to the status of an ill-omened Demoness. 411 ; euphemistically called Bhadrā or Kalyāṇī 412, 700 ; diagram showing how Viṣṭi occurs eight times in a month 709 ; fast on it, 411 ; inauspicious, except in its tail, last three ghaṭikās 710; supposed to have the form of a snake divided into mouth, neck, chest, navel, waist and tail, all being inauspicious except tail and each being assigned differing ghaṭikās 710.

Viṣuva Saṅkrāntis 713.

Viṣuvat day (when day and night were of equal length, known in the Brāhmaṇa period and was in the middle of the sacrificial year, 511; Divākīrtya-sāma, to be sung on 511n.

Viśvabhāratī, quarterly, Vol. II paper on 'China's debt to India' 1618n.

Viśvādarśa 102.

Viśvāmitra: and the rivers 537, 1203; and Śunaḥśepa 968n; famished V. wanted to eat dog's tail 1470; priest of Triśaṅku who had become a cāṇḍāla 1280.

Viśvāmitrasmṛti 218.

Viśvajit (sacrifice) 1312–13; in V. the sacrificer had to donate everything he owned at the time of giving dakṣiṇā in, 1312–1313; Jaimini devotes fourteen adhikaraṇas to, 1313; some of the important propositions are that the sacrificer cannot donate his relatives, that even the emperor cannot donate the whole kingdom, 1313; śūdra who serves a man of the three higher castes because it is his duty to do so acc. to Dharmaśāstra, cannot be donated 1257; Svarga is the reward of V. though the Veda does not expressly mention any reward 1312.

Viśvakarman: fashioned the two worlds (Ṛg. X. 81 and 82) 1488.

Viśvarūpa: com. Bālakrīḍā on Yāj. by 224, 825–26, 1155n, 1181 (explains Yāj. I. 51), 1259n (quotes Tantravārtika verse without name), 1270n, 1273n, 1281n, 1294 (śrāddha primarily means 'piṇḍadāna' and not feeding brāhmaṇas, 1309, 1425n; not identical with Maṇḍana 1194; quotes a half verse from Yogi-Yājñavalkya 1407; same as Sureśvara, the latter being his name on resorting to Sannyāsa 1194.

Viṭhobā of Pandharpur; Dāmāji, his devotee 951.

Vivāda-cintāmaṇi 1303.

Vivādaratnākara 1303, 1320.

Vivāhapaṭala of Varāhamihira 479n.

Vivekānanda, Swami; criticized by Shri Kuvalayānanda about his lectures on rājayoga, 1444; criticism of later Buddhism by 1030; on Rājayoga 1393–94; warns that Yoga can be practised with safety by direct contact with teacher 1441–42; 1709 (angrily says modern Hinduism is 'don't touchism.'); works of, 1622n.

Voḍhu, a Sāṅkhya philosopher 1372 and n.

Vogel J. Ph, author of 'Indian serpent lore' 127, 275.

Vogt, V. O. a. of 'cult and culture'; condemns the unbending arrogance of Moslems and Christian missionaries 1012n.

Vows: five great, among Jainas 28; found in all religions 28.

Vrata: (see under Dīkṣita, homa, fast, morning, snātaka, tithi, pāraṇā, udyāpana); actions to be given up during vrata such as chewing tāmbūla, anointing with oil 49; adhikārin for V. 51–55; another vrata should not be begun till the first is finished 121; V. called Kṣurapavi 25; circumstances that do not break a vrata 48–49; classification of, into three (bodily, mental, vocal) or based on the period taken 56; comprehends many items such as bath, sandhyā, saṅkalpa, homa, pūjā, fast, feeding of brāhmaṇas, maidens and the poor, gifts and observances of rules of conduct 31; death in the midst of performing V. does not deprive performer of merit 48; derivation and meaning of, according to St. Petersburg dictionary from root Vṛ. 'to choose' 1; derivation of and meaning of acc. to Max-Muller from Vṛ. to protect, 1 acc. to Whitney from 'vṛt' to proceed, 1; v. acc. to Prof. Apte from 'vṛt' 2, 4; v. acc. to author from vṛ (to choose) 2, 4; described in Purāṇas but did not occupy a high place in ancient smṛtis 43; difference between Vedic sacrifices and V. 45; difficult to demarcate v. and utsava 57; different definitions of, in Sanskrit works, such as Śābarabhāṣya, Medhātithi, Mitākṣarā, Raghunandaṇa 28–31; employed with verbs of motion like 'i' to and 'car' 6–7; exact determination as to the day on which a tithivrata is to be performed when tithi extends over two days occupies much space in Dharmaśāstra works 62; extravagant praise of the efficacy of v. for weaning away common people from Buddhism 46; flesh to be excluded in 41; flowers, fragrant substances, incense, the food to be offered to deities in, 37–38; food to be given not only to brāhmaṇas but also to the blind, the poor and helpless 39–40; food proper or improper for subsistence in 41–42; for completion of vrata, performer should donate gold and cows, but if one has nothing, the words of a brāhmaṇa that vrata is completed are enough 121; general rule that Saṅkalpa of a vrata to be made in the morning 32; giving up vrata through carelessness or other cause except death, entails dire consequences 47–48; gods, sages, siddhas attained highest perfection by V. 56; how to set about a vrata 81; if no saṅkalpa made about v. performer loses half the merit 82; immense literature on 57–58; in all vratas the pāraṇā is in the morning 121; in the medieval sense existed from before Āp. Dh. S. and the dramas of Kālidāsa 46; V. In the Ṛgveda pp. 1–21; in Vedic literature, sūtras and Smṛtis 22–29; is the one supreme observance for man and other observances do not come up even to one-sixteenth part of what vrata yields, 56; largest number of,

are tithivratas 56; lavish expenditure recommended by Purāṇas in, 40; matters that do not affect a vrata, particularly where performer is a woman, child or one in extreme pain, 49; mlecchas authorised to perform 54; meaning in which it is used in this section of H. of Dh, 28; meaning of, in Yājñavalkya Smṛti 123; meanings of, in all passages of Ṛgveda are command or ordinance, religious or moral practices or worship or vows 8, 11; meaning of 'command' or law' quite appropriate in more than half the Ṛgveda passages where the word occurs, 11; meaning of 'mode of worship or ethical practices' in words like 'avrata, apavrata', 'anyavrata', 11-12, 22; meaning of 'sacred vow or observance' 18; meaning of, came to be restricted to 'sacred vows' and 'rules of conduct,' 116; meaning of, as compared with ṛta and dharma 20-2; meanings of, two, generally in Saṁhitās other than Ṛgveda, in Brāhmaṇas and Upaniṣads 23; meanings of, two, secondary in Brāhmaṇa times viz. 'a proper pattern of conduct' and 'Upavāsa' 25; meaning of in Mahābhārata 27; meaning of, from first centuries of Christian era is 'a religious undertaking or vow observed on a certain tithi or day for securing some object by the worship of a deity accompanied by restrictions as to food and behaviour' 28; not to be undertaken in the midst of aśauca 48; number of vratas was small in the first centuries A. D. 46; V. word occurs about 220 times in Ṛgveda, 4; objects to be secured by vrata are numerous such as puṇya, progeny, wealth, health, pleasures, heaven and even mokṣa 55; observances for one undergoing a vrata acc. to Tai. S. 23 and acc. to Tai. Ā. 25n; observances for a king who has performed 'Brahmaṇaḥ Parimarah' 25; observances for newly married pair 27; of brahmacārin 45; offering in, to be clarified butter in the absence of specific provision, 49-50; persons of all castes (including śūdras) entitled to perform V. 51; preliminaries before undertaking vrata acc. to some, such as Vṛddhi-śrāddha 31-32; Pratinidhi (representative) such as son or wife may perform V. for one unable personally to perform owing to disease, accident etc. 53, 54; Rājamārtaṇḍa, the earliest extant nibandha so far known, is work on V. 58; rite that concludes a vrata is called Udyāpana, pāraṇa or pāraṇā 120; rule of Hārīta, that in every v. in which worship enters midday is the proper time 151; Saṅkalpa in V. to be made in the morning 81; Saṅkalpa of v., formula of 81; some rules about times when to begin v 61–62; some vratas not to be begun when Jupiter and Venus are invisible or during some days before and after their setting 61, this volume speaks only of such Vratas as are mentioned in works on Dharmaśāstra and does not attempt to include all vratas performed by usage 59–60; to be performed in the evening or night have to be performed on the tithi existing in the evening or night even though it may be mixed with another tithi 72; Udyāpana, absence of, renders vrata fruitless 121; verbal forms of root 'mi' or 'mī' often used in Ṛgveda in relation to, 10; virtues to be cultivated by one undergoing V. 41; what acts to be avoided by one observing V. 42–43; women are entitled to perform V. but women performing vrata without consent of husband, father or son, reap no benefits 51; woman or maiden who is impure (in monthly illness or the like) should get her vrata performed or finished through another, but may perform bodily acts (like fast) herself 49, 53; words 'dhṛtavrata' (18 times), mahivrata (5 times), sucivrata (five times), vivrata (7 times) occur in Ṛg. and help in settling meaning of 'vrata' 12–17; word 'vṛṣavrata' explained 18–19; word 'vratānī' explained 17–18; word 'vratapā', meaning of 18, 22; w rks on, relied on in this volume arranged chronologically as far as possible 59.

Vratas: exhaustive list of 255–462; kinds of, viz. expiatory or voluntary 28; most of, are Kāmya (for securing some object in this life or next life or both 55; most v. are for both men and women 51; V. of gods, violated by human beings that are punished by gods for this 9; passages where the words 'tava vrate' occur 12–15; regarded as tapas or niyama also 28; several V. prescribed for women alone 51; spoken of, not only in relation to Agni, Indra, Mitra, Soma, Savitṛ, Uṣas and Ādityas, but also in relation to Varuṇa, Ṛrahmaṇaspati, Aditi, Aśvins, Parjanya, 7–8; some V. performed at fixed times or tithis 60; some seasonal v. and some festivals like Rāmanavamī and some like Sāvitrivrata and Yamadvitīyā should be kept up even in these days 54–55; spoken of as dhruva (immutably fixed) and adabdha (unassailable) in Ṛgveda, 8; spoken of as not violated by other gods 8–9; supposed to have been declared by divinities like Śiva, Kṛṣṇa or by great sages 254; topic of, inextricably mixed up with Kāla and tithi; two meanings of, in Brāhmaṇas, Upaniṣads, Nirukta, viz. religious observances or vows and special food prescribed for one engaged in a religious rite, 23; vratas of the type described in Purāṇas had attained no prominence in times of Yājñavalkya-smṛti 123; V. which Vedic students had to undergo 27.

Vratakālaviveka 30n–33n, 47n–49n, 51n, 66n, 75–77n, 85n, 92, 126, 214n.

Vratakośa, edited by M. M. Gopinath Kaviraja, lists1 622 entries but lists unduly swollen as pointed out 47.

Vrataprakāśa 30, 55n, 92, 106n, 111, 112n, 122.

Vratarāja 34, 38n; 53n, 61n, 62, 82, 86, 89, 91, 95, 135, 144–6, 150, 179, 183n, 188, 195n, 208, 234–5.

Vratatattva 31n, 32n, 47n–49n.

Vratārka 30n, 34, 43, 51, 54, 61n, 86, 88, 93, 122, 127, 144, 150, 153.

Vrātyas in Atharvaveda 1387.

Vṛddha-Atri 914.

Vṛddha-Gārgya 77n, 607n.

Vṛddha-Gautama 250n.

Vṛddha-Garga, 520; different from Garga 592 (25 verses quoted by Utpala), 741n, 742n, 765 (on comets and eclipses), 793 (on Puṣyasnāna).

Vṛddha-Hārīta 817n, 855n, 924n, 963n, 965n, 976n, 1046, 1096n.

Vṛddha-Manu 196n, 706n.

Vṛddha-Śātātapa 79n, 116n.

Vṛddha-Vasiṣṭha 213n, 215n, 220n.

Vṛddha-Vasiṣṭha Siddhānta 478–79n.

Vṛddha-Yājñavalkya 73n.

Vṛddha-Yavanajātaka of Mīnarāja 563, 576 (why two svagṛhas for each of five planets), 584, 589n (countries of birth of planets).

Vries, paper of, on 'Purāṇa studies' in Pavry Commemoration Vol. 843.

Vṛṣotsarga (letting loose a bull); on 11th day after a person's death or on Full Moon of Kārtika or Caitra once in three years on Revati 416.

Vṛt, root, meaning of, without Upasargas or with 2–3.

Vṛtta, meaning of, 19.

Vṛttikāra, commentator of PMS, often mentioned by Śabara and styled 'bhagavān', from whom S. sometimes differs 1186–87, 1221; enumeration of characteristics of Mantras by V. 1222; enumeration of the characteristics of Brāhmaṇa texts 1334; held to be identical with Upavarṣa by Prof. Kuppuswami and Pandit V. A. Ramswami and not so by Dr. S. K. Iyengar and the present author 1186n, 1187n, 1197.

Vyāḍi, m. by Kātyāyana Vārtikakāra 1157.

Vyāghra, Smṛti of 78n.

Vyāhṛtis (three or seven mystic syllables such as bhūḥ, bhuvaḥ etc.) 787, 1099n; denote Lokas acc. to Tai. Br. and Tai. Up. 1528n.

Vyāhṛti-homa, described 33n.

Vyās, K. B. 651.

Vyāsa 116–117, 126n, 243, 606, 1421n.

Vyāsa, son of Parāśara and called Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana also 857, as he was born on an island and was dark in complexion 1161; compiled and arranged the one Veda into four parts and imparted them to four disciples acc. to Ādiparva and Purāṇas 857; 1161; composed Purāṇasaṁhitā from tales, episodes, gāthās etc. 858; composed Mahābhārata for education of women and śūdras 1642; deemed to be incarnation of Viṣṇu by Manu, Purāṇas, but of Brahmā in Vāyu and of Śiva in Kūrma 857 and n; fifth disciple of V. was Sūta Romaharṣaṇa to whom V. imparted Itihāsa-Purāṇa, whose son Sauti narrated Mahābhārata to Śaunaka and others in Naimiṣa forest 857; legends about 857; names of 27 Vyāsas in Kūrma and Vāyu, while Viṣṇu and Brahmāṇḍa cite 28 names of 28 Vyāsas of Dvāpara in Vaivasvata Manvantara 857–58; not a gotra name, while Jaimini, Bādari and Bādarāyaṇa are gotra names 1174; Pārāśarya is only one of the three pravaras of the group of Parāśaras 1174; son of V. was called Vaiyāsaki, acc. to Vārtika and means Śuka, acc. to Mahābhāṣya 1169; Sumantu, Jaimini, Vaiśampāyana and Paila are mentioned in Āśv. Gr. along with 'Bhāratamahābhāratadharmācāryas', 1161n; Vedic literature is silent about Vyāsa Pārāśarya except in Sāmavidhāna Br. and Tai. Ār. 859; Vyāsa or Vyāsa Pārāśarya is not mentioned by name either in P. M. S. or V. S. 1173; Vyāsas were born whenever Dharma and Veda declined 857.

Vyatīpāta, a Yoga, variously defined 419, 706; name occurs in Yāj. and Harṣacarita 705; thirteen V. in a year on which Śrāddha may be performed 705.

Vyavahāramayūkha 51n, 52, 162n, 1002, 1192, 1224 (on 'nāntarikṣe na divi'), 1242 (Devala explained), 1286–87, 1293 (brother in Yāj. III. 135 should mean only full brother), 1301–3, 1313n (on Viśvajit sacrifice), 1317n, 1323 (example of atideśa in Pitāmahasmṛti); on killing an ātatāyin brāhmaṇa, another practice prevailed in a former yuga 1272n; on Prāṇapratiṣṭhāmantra 1106; on Nārada saying that father can give less or more to sons at partition declares that that was the case in a former yuga 1272n; says that in Purāṇas one often finds usages opposed to smṛti 1278; text with notes ed. by the present author 1305; translation of V. by the present author 1301n–3n.

Vyavahāraprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya), 1303, 1316n, 1320 (Māṣamudganyāya), 1331 (rule of equal division), 1333 (holds rājan, a king, may be even a vaiśya).

Vyuṣṭa meaning of, in Arthaśās-tra 647n.

Vyutthāna, meaning of 1414n.
Waddell L. H., a. of 'Buddhism of Tibet or Lamaism' 1129 (describes nine mudrās practised by Lamas).
Wadia, Ardesar Sorabji N., a. of 'Fate and Free will' 1604.
W. Waerden Prof. B. L. Van Der 543, 582n (on Babylonian Astronomy), 595n.
Wales H. G. Quaritch, a. of 'Towards Angkor' and 'Making of Greater India' 1618n, 1657.
Walker, E. D., a. of 're-incarnation' 1530n, 1604.
Walker Kenneth, a. of 'the Circle of Life' (on metempsychosis) 1531, 1605.
Wallis, H. W. a. of 'Cosmology of the Ṛgveda' 1485n.
Warren, a. of 'Kālasaṅkalita' 642n, 644, 661.
Water Clocks used in India as early as the Vedāṅga Jyotiṣa 542.
Watkins, Harold, a. of 'Time counts: the story of the calendar' 718n.
Watson, Prof. J. B. a. of 'Behaviourism' 1414n.
Watters, on 'Yuan Chwang's Travels in India' 1006n, 1040.
Wealth: Gautama and Manu lay down that the three higher varṇas should respectively acquire w. by gifts, conquest and agriculture, which became niyamas and must be held to be puruṣārtha and not kratvartha, 1192, 1233.
Webb E. J., a. of 'The names of the stars'. 550, 565n, 566, 582n, 595n.
Weber. A. a. of 'Der Vedischen Nachrichten von Der Nakṣatras'; regarded Pauliṣa-siddhānta as borrowed from Paulus Alexandrinus, but was rebuked by Kern for this 515n; thought the religion of bhakti for Kṛṣṇa was due to Christian influence but Barth disagrees 952n.
Week: (vide under 'day'): number of days in w. differed among different ancient people 676; w. of seven days practised among Jews, Babylonians and Incas 676.
Week Days: (vide under 'horā, sabbath, calendar): actions proper to be done on different w. according to Bṛhatsaṃhitā, Garga and Ātharvaṇa Jyotiṣa 680-81; arrangement of Hindu W. not based on Greek division of day into horās, but on ghaṭikās 571n; auspicious for all undertakings are Monday, Wednesday; Thursday and Friday 62, 604, 682; combinations of certain tithis and W. yield all rewards 70; combinations of certain W. tithis and nakṣatras bad for certain matters, 71; derived by Indians from Chaldeans acc. to S. B. Dixit 679n; derived in Europe ultimately from Babylonian gods, 683; Dio (200-220 A. D.) says W. originated in Egypt and were of recent introduction in his day 677; for Upanayana Tuesday and Saturday inauspicious 604; have no force at night in marriages 611; known in Italy before 79 A.D.; literary evidence in Sanskrit on W. 680–82; no evidence that the Indian names of W. and the method of arriving at the order of the days is not indigenous 685; not named in Bible 677; not mentioned in Mahābhārata 682; not borrowed en bloc by India from outside 685; oldest reference to W. in Indian Inscriptions is of the Gupta year 165 (484 A.D.) 680; one of the five aṅgas of a pañcāṅga 675; order of W. takes no account of the distances of planets 678; origin and development of, 677–685; probable that W. were known to Indians between 100 B.C. to 100 A.D. 681; probably suggested to Indians from worship in Babylonian temples of planets on different week days 683; Ptolemy makes no astrological use of W. 678; Sanskrit literature concerning W. 681–2; Sarton's view that Greeks had nothing to do with W. but Egyptians and Babylonians developed W. 678; section on, in Ātharvaṇa Jyotiṣa 681.

Welfare State implied by Art. 38 in Constitution 1679: (vide under socialistic pattern of society); theoretical aims of 1695.

Wells, H. G., a. of 'You can't be too careful' 1483n.

Westcott G. H., a. of 'Kabir and Kabir panth' 969n.

Westermarck, a. of 'Origin and development of moral ideas' 1647n (on slavery).

Western Writers: (vide under 'conjecture'): on Sanskrit Literature and Indology draw positive conclusions from mere silence 858; prejudices about matters Indian 542; request to, to follow Mallinātha's rule 1531; severe strictures of W. against privileges and feeding of brāhmaṇas laid down more than a thousand years ago should not rely on 19th and 20th century notions but should compare the position of brāhmaṇas with what was done by Popes, Inquisitions, monastic orders in centuries from 10th to 15th century A.D. 932; similarities in institutions, usages and other matters are often attributed to Indians borrowing by W. W, without hardly any cogent or positive evidence, but merely by conjecture and prejudice, 481–82.

Westaway F. W.: a. of 'Obsessions and convictions of the human intellect' (1938), 1483n; holds that argument from design for God's existence carries a high degree of probability 1483n.

Whitney; 1, 5, 6, 12, 510, 512, 1491; W's derivation of vrata, from 'vṛt' to proceed 1-5; had doubts about his theory of the derivation and meaning of 'vrata' owing to the verb

'mī' used with it 10; holds that the praises bestowed on Nāsadīya hymn were nauseating 1491; makes very disparaging remarks about Indian achievements in astronomy and generally 512; suggested without any positive evidence that it was pre-Ptolemaic astronomy that was transmitted to India 517.

Widow: (see Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act.): could adopt in Bengal provided husband's permission was proved 1336; could not adopt a son at all acc. to Dattakamīmāṁsā and Vācaspati 1335-36; in Madras she could adopt with husband's permission given before his death or with the consent of the husband's agnates 1336; remarriage of, allowed by Parāśarasmṛti but Parāśaramādhavīya adds that that practice belonged to another yuga 1266n; widow requires no consent of husband nor of anyone else, provided the husband has not prohibited adoption by her, acc. to Nirṇayasindhu, Vyavahāramayūkha 1336.

Wife: (vide under 'sacrifices'): exaggerated praise of chaste wife's power is a mere arthavāda 1598; Jaimini provides that W. not being equal to the husband in the knowledge of mantras and ignorant, is restricted to the performance of those acts only that are expressly enjoined on her such as looking at the clarified butter, observing brahmacarya and repeat a few mantras which she should learn from her father or her husband 1287-88; W. gradually lost all importance in Vedic sacrifices and came to be a mere silent spectator of weary details 1288; many Smṛti rules apply to W. also although the texts may employ a word in the masculine gender e. g. Manu XI. 93 prohibiting men of three varṇas from drinking surā was held to apply to wives also 1288.

Wilson, Prof., translator of Viṣṇupurāṇa 830n, 834n (gives differing lists of Upapurāṇas), 895n; a. of 'Religion of the Hindus' 1532.

Wilson J. A., author of 'Burden of Egypt' 490n.

Wine: drinker of, was regarded as one of five grave sinners in Chān. Up. 1079; high praise of W. as Tārā, as Saviour of souls in Tantras 1082; not offered to gods in Vedic age, was differentiated from Soma and was deemed to lead to sin 1078.

Winlock, H. E. 490n.

Winter Solstice: occurred on Māgha amāvāsyā in the time of the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa, 491n.

Winternitz, author of 'History of Indian Literature' (English tr. 1927), 155n, 513, 1039 (Hindu Tantras not borrowed), 1606; Vol. I. 599n, 838 (on authenticity of sections and verses of Mahābhārata), 844; a. of 'Some problems of Indian Literature' 1650.

Wolfe, Bertram De. a. of 'Krushchev and Stalin's Ghost' (1957), 1474n.

Women: advantages enjoyed by w. in contrast to men 929: could secure brahmajñāna and mokṣa by listening to the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas, acc. to Śaṅkarācārya 921n: different views as to whether homa could be performed by W. 52; extravagant praise of women in several Tāntrik works, 1056; in Gujarat and other places tie silken amulets round the wrists of their brothers 128; no capacity to recite Vedic mantras 52; women had no votes in England till the first World War and in Switzerland even now they have none, 1664 and n.; 1674 (drastic changes in the legal status of Hindu women by Acts of 1954 to 1956).

Wood, Ernest, a of 'Yoga'; states that he once saw 'levitation' (laghimā) of an old Yogin 1452-3n.

Woodroffe (Sir John): (vide under 'Arthur Avalon'): a of 'Śakti and Śākta': 1048n, 1080n, 1089, 1136n; a. of 'Principles of Tantra' 1137; criticized 1078–1080, 1084–85; explains in an esoteric way the meaning of verse 'pītvā etc.' by referring it to the awakening of Kuṇḍalinī) 1088n, 1092 and n, 1123; wrote a foreword to Dr. Rele's work in which he dissented from Dr. Rele about Kuṇḍalinī being the Vagus Nerve 1443.

Woods, Prof. James H.: translator of Yogasūtra, bhāṣya etc. 1394.

Woolf, Leonard. a. of 'Barbarians at the gate' 1619; a. of 'Quack, quack' 1617.

Woolley, Sir Leonard, a. of 'Sumerians' 482.

World, various views about origin of, from Upaniṣad times 1573–74.

World Calendar Association 714n; in New York founded by Miss Elisabeth Achelis 714n; recommendations of 714n.

Word, has creative power and is one with God (acc. to Ṛg. X. 121. 8), 1490.

Words: are divided by P. M. S. into Nāmāni and Karmaśabdas, also called ākhyāta 1237; connection between words and senses is eternal 1203–4; import of, whether Jāti (class) or Vyakti (individual) discussed in Vārtikas on Pāṇini 1157; import of, is ākṛti, acc. to Jaimini 1158; mīmāṁsakas hold that the word, denotation and the relation of these two are eternal 1205; Pāṇini made use of both Jāti and Vyakti as import of words in different sūtras acc. to Mahābhāṣya 1157–8; three senses of W. viz. primary (abhidhā), secondary, and suggested, owing to the three vṛttis of abhidhā, lakṣaṇā and vyañjanā, 1293 ; Upavarṣa held that it is the letters that constitute the word, 1205n.

Writers medieval; weakest points of, were lack of exact knowledge of history and chronology and obsession to glorify to the skies their favourite author or work 1177.

Xerxes (486 B. C.–465 B. C.), 1613.

Yajeta : analysis of the notions underlying the word y. occurring in sentences like 'Svargakāmo yajeta ' (one desiring svarga should offer a sacrifice) 1235–38.

Yajña : (vide under Devatā) : sacrifice is called leaky vessel by Muṇḍaka Up. 1471); gṛhyasūtras prescribe rites to be offered in gṛhya fire, seven of which are called pākayajñas 1323n; Jaimini's position is that in a y. the havis (offering) is the principal matter and devatā is a subordinate detail (guṇa) 1207; Kratu and Yajña, difference between 1646 ; both words occur hundreds of times in Ṛg. 1646 ; Y. means (acc. to Śabara) ' giving up of a substance (dravya) intending it for a deity in words' 1208n ; notion grew that nothing great can be accomplished except by tapas or Y. 1489 (texts cited); Ṛgveda in a few places asserts that offerings of ghee and fuel sticks in Y. would yield great rewards 916 ; Śabara speaks of four Mahāyajñās viz. Agnihotra, Darśapūrṇamāsa, Jyotiṣṭoma Piṇḍapitṛyajña 1323 n; Skandapurāṇa runs down not only animal sacrifices but even offerings of fuel sticks and flowers 916 ; Soma sacrifices are seven, acc. to Gaut. Dh. S. 1323n ; Vedic Y. usually divided into three varieties viz. Iṣṭi, Paśu and Soma, this last being divided into Ekāha, Ahīna, Sattra 1323n.

Yājñavalkya : three works (apart from the Smṛti and Bṛ. Up.) connected with the name of Yāj. viz. Vṛddha-Yāj., Yoga-Yājñavalkya and Bṛhad-yoga (or-gi)-Yājñavalkya and it is shown that none of these can be the Yogaśāstra mentioned in Yāj. Smṛti (III. 110), 1404–1408.

Yājñavalkyasmṛti 27, 29–30, 33, 36, 48, 50, 52, 102n, 103, 123, 159n, 193, 210, 224, 246–7, 528, 536n, 538, 544, 678, 705, 748–49, 756n, 757, 789n, 817n, 825, 862, 865, 936–38, 945, 946n, 1023–24, 1032, 1063n, 1113, 1152, 1156n, 1181 (I. 51 explained by Viśvarūpa), 1230 (various views on Yāj. 1. 79 and 81), 1234, 1248 (several examples of paryudāsa in I. 129–166), 1251, 1256n, 1268n (conditions of niyoga), 1270, 1274, 1284, 1286, 1292, 1303 (conflict among medieval digests), 1305, 1308, 1315n, 1317, 1388, 1403, 1416n, 1420, 1438, 1441, 1446–47 (aṅgas of Yoga), 1457–9, 1482, 1507, 1555n (follows Bṛ. Up.), 1557–58, 1565 (uses word Saṁsāra), 1573 (five views m. as to what causes desirable or undesirable results), 1590–91, 1608, 1611, 1628, 1632 (allows intermarriages between three varṇas), 1645 (on sannyāsin), 1669, 1672, 1697 (truth and non-violence basic), 1704; declares that rise and fall of kings depends on planets 544: employs word 'vrata' in three senses 123; hardly ever refers to vratas in the sense in which Purāṇas use the word 123; mentions some Sāṅkhya tenets such as guṇas 1379; Viśvarūpa's com. on, is called Bālakrīḍā 825n, 826n, 1155n.

Yakṣa, word occurs in Ṛg. and Atharvaveda 1360n.

Yakṣakardama (unguent with five fragrant substances) 384.

Yale, John, edited 'What Vedānta means to me'—a symposium 1707–8n.

Yama: smṛti of, 112n, 8 0n, 949n, 1257 (gāthās from Yama's Dharmaśāstra quoted by Anuśāsanaparva), 1381–82 (verses on Sāṅkhya quoted from), y., while mentioning 25 tattvas adds Puruṣottama as 26th tattva, 1382n.

Yama and Yamī 209, 915, 1203 (dialogue)

Yama and Pitṛs 1554,

Yama, god of death, called Vaivasvata 692; seven or 14 names of, in tarpaṇa on 14th in Divāḷi 196 and n; ten names of, in Bhrātṛdvitīyā 208n; wrong conclusions, of western scholars from Yama and Yamī hymn 209.

Yamadvitīyā, see Bhrātṛdvitīyā.

Yamas: (vide 'niyama'): are obligatory or paramount duties for all, acc. to Manu 29; are in the nature of prohibitions 1422; five m. by Yogasūtra, Kūrma, Liṅga 29n, 946n, 1419, 1420n; ten mentioned by Yāj. and Vaikhānasa 29, 946n; the observance of Yamas by all men may be called Vrata but there are exceptions for them, but in the case of Yogins rigorous observance without exceptions is called Mahāvrata 1420–21.

Yamas are based upon passages like Chān. Up. III. 17. 4 and Bṛ. Up. V. 2. 3, which asks all men to cultivate dama, dāna and dayā 1422.

Yāmalas, works of Tantra class, 736 and n; number of, varied but often given as eight 736n.

Yāmunācārya: preceptor of Rāmānuja's teacher 1165; ascribes Brahmasūtra to Bādarāyaṇa 1166.

Yantra (geometrical diagram) or yantras (vide under cakra) 1135–1139; a characteristic in Tantra worship, sometimes called cakra 1135; bindu in the diagram of Śrīcakra represents Śakti or mūlaprakṛti solidified 1137; derivation of the word 'Yantra' 1135; described in many tantra works and some Purāṇas 1135n; difference between Maṇḍala and Y. 1136; differently enumerated in different works 1137; distinction between Y. and devatā is like that between body and soul, 1136; is engraved, drawn or painted on metal, stone, cloth, paper, birch leaf or other material with paste of sandalwood, camphor, musk, saffron and should be worn on head 1135, 1139; Kulārṇavatantra and others say that the devatā is not pleased if it be worshipped without Y. 1135; most noted Y., is Śrīcakra 1136; Prapañcasāra tantra states that by the worship of a certain Y. a sādhaka can make a woman smitten with passion for him and draw her to him 1105, 1139; prescribed by even Śāradātilaka for destruction of one's enemies 1138-39; Śrīcakra, described 1137; special 'Yantragāyatrī' evolved by some works 1135; used for making holy the bed of a woman in labour 1047; was supposed to restrain restlessness of mind due to anger, love etc. and to induce concentration 1136; worship of Yantra is bahiraṅga-pūjā (external worship of Śakti), while antaryāga consists in taking awakened Kuṇḍalinī from Mūlādhāra through all Cakras 1137-38; Zimmer on Y. in 'Myths and symbols in Indian Art' 1135.

Yaśaskara, king of Kashmir (939-948 A. D.) in whose reign Tāntricism declined 1075.

Yaśastilaka Campū (composed in 959 A.D.); 897n (on several ancient Sanskrit grammars), 1074 (refers to Dakṣiṇa and Vāma mārgas of Tantra).

Yāska: (see under Nirukta) 23, 720, 855, 1102, 1203 (Aitihāsika school of Vedic interpretation), 1256n; derives nakṣatra from root 'nakṣ' 510; flourished several centuries before Christ 984; holds that Ṛgveda mantras have a meaning as they employ the same words as in ordinary Sanskrit 961-992.

Yati: (vide Sannyāsa and Sannyāsin): in the Ṛgveda and relation to Indra 1386; y. in the Upaniṣads 1387; was highly honoured and hence many persons quite unfit to lead life as Y. entered the order 1644-45.

Yatīndramata-dīpikā 960n, 961n.

Yātudhāna (one who employs black magic) 1035-36.

Yavanajātaka of Spthujidhvaja 563, 573n, 576, 577n, 580n, 581, 588n; (vide vṛddhayavanajātaka and Varāhamihira): had traditions about dreṣkāṇas different from Bṛhaj-jātaka and Sārāvali 583n; styled as Yavaneśvara by Utpala 577n, 584n, 586n.

Yātrā: (vide under 'Prasthāna', 'Yoga'); auspicious lagna (at question time) and auspicious position of planets 619; commended on nine nakṣatras 619; if lagna at birth not known, lagna at question time to be taken as basis 618-619; inauspicious objects and persons on starting 622; starting on Yātrā facing Venus inauspicious 620; subjects included under 616-7; tithis commended for Y. 619; three works of Varāhamihira on Y. 617; two meanings of word 'Yātrā,' viz. (1) starting on a pilgrimage or for earning wealth, (2) march of king for victory, 616; week days not astrologically important in Y. 619; works on Yātrā 616-617; Yātrās of Gods 385-86.

Yavananarendra or Yavanendra, work of, mentioned by Bādarāyaṇa, predecessor of Varāha, Varāha and Sārāvali) 563n, 591.

Yavanas, composed in Sanskrit works on astrology 563, 600; described in Karṇaparva as all-knowing, valiant and different from mlecchas 829n; generously praised by Varāhamihira for proficiency in astrology but he says hardly anything about their astronomy 516-517, 600; generally quoted in the plural by Varāhamihira who calls them mlecchas 594, 600; y. in the Yugapurāṇa 828; provided auspicious times for caula of a child in their astrological work 606; two large works in Sanskrit composed by Sphujidhvaja and Mīnarāja, who describe themselves as lords of Yavanas 516, 563; views of, on astrology, differed from Varāhamihira's on substantial matters, 516, 563, 601n; word Yavana is the Sanskrit reproduction of the word Ionia, 516n.

Yavanāni, meaning of word Y. changed 516n.

Yavaneśvara q. by Utpala, 574, 588 (on moon's bala), 591 (on daśās); differences of, with Varāhamihira (vide under Varāhamihira).

Year: (vide Bārhaspatya cycle, Saṁvatsara): beginning of Indian Y. now in either Caitra or Kārtika but in different months in ancient times 659-60; Bārhaspatya year 658; Bārhaspatya year names adopted at the beginning of a year in N. India and Deccan 661; Cāndra year (pure) of 354 days 657; Egyptian year, 646; extent of, in Vedic times 488-491; four beginnings of Indian year, m. by Alberuni 659; is said in the Brāhmaṇa texts to have 360 days and 720 days and nights together 489; length of Bārhaspatya year 661; length of y. acc. to Sūryasiddhānta and modern sidereal year 711; lunar y. is less than solar year by a little over 11 days 646; most ancient peoples including Indians followed Luni-solar Y. 646; one human year supposed to be equal to a day of gods in Tai. Br. 656n ; origin and information of cycle of Bārhaspatya year 661 ; saṁvatsara and varṣa used in same sense by Aśoka 493 ; Saura year defined 657 ; Sāvana y. of 360 days 491, 658 ; several synonyms for, in the Veda 656 ; sidereal year, length of 645 ; thirteenth month recognized in the Ṛgveda, other Vedas and Brāhmaṇa texts 489 ; tropical year, length of 645.

Yeats W. B. 1393.

Yeats Brown F , a. of ' Bengal Lancer ' 1088, 1111n, 1427.

Yeṣṭihas, names of certain muhūrtas 538.

Yevtic, Paul, a. of ' Karma and Re-incarnation ' 1605.

Yoga (astrological conjunction) 619 ; for successful march against an enemy 919.

Yoga : (vide Amṛtasiddhi, Mṛtyu-yoga, Dagdha-yoga) ; 4th aṅga in a pañcāṅga 704-7 ; yogas are 27 in number and make together 360 degree S, i. e. each yoga corresponds to 13 degrees and 20 minutes-being the sum of the longitudes of the Sun and Moon, 704 and n ; in all auspicious rites the first few ghaṭikās as specified should be avoided in the case of Viṣkambha, Vajra, Vyāghāta and Atigaṇḍa 105 ; names of 27 Yogas beginning with Viṣkambha that are ever recurring 704; no direct astronomical phenomena correspond to it, 704; names of nine of the 27 yogas that are condemned astrologically 705 ; other yogas than 27 are m. in pañcāṅgas 707 ; rules as to observance of fasts, vratas and religious gifts and śrāddhas when a yoga extends over two days 705 ; special yogas when there is conjunction of certain tithis, nakṣatras and week days and of planets with rāśis and nakṣatras 706 ; system of Y. ancient 705 ; Vyatīpāta 705 ; Y. called Vyatipata and Vaidhṛti and the first half of Parigha and the first quarter of those the names of which are odious are inauspicious 705.

Yoga and Dharmaśāstra 1385-1467 : (vide under āsanas, avidyā, Buddhist, Īśvara, Jaigīṣavya, Levitation, prāṇāyāma, Yoga-sūtras, Yogin) : Y. and Sāṅkhya often mentioned together in Śv. Up , Mahābhārata, Gītā, Padmapurāṇa 1385; aṅgas of Y, are eight, first five called bahiraṅga and last three antaraṅga to Yoga 1418n, 1419n, 1445 ; āsanas of two types one helpful in prāṇāyāma and meditation, the other helpful for physical culture and eradication of diseases 1430 ; āsanas, references to figures of, 1393 ; concentration of mind effected by Trāṭaka 1428n ; definition of ' Yoga ' in ' Yogasūtra,' Devala, Dakṣa and Viṣṇupurāṇa 1409n ; derivation of the word Y. and of Yogin, 1385, 1389n; difference of views about the number of the aṅgas of yoga, 1419 and n ; discipline of the mind known to Āp. Dh. S. 1390; doctrine of Y. dilated upon in Śānti and Āśvamedhika parvans 1399–1405; eightfold Y. acc. to Śāntiparva 1400; first signs of the effectiveness of Y. practice acc. to Śv. Up. 1111; five bhūmis (conditions or stages) of citta (mind) 1409; five vṛttis of citta and the means for their suppression, viz. Abhyāsa and Vairāgya 1409–10; fourfold axioms of, described as resembling Buddha's four Noble Truths 939n; fully developed at time of Kaṭhopaniṣad 1387n; fundamental and peculiar characteristic of India and no other country has had a similar system of psychical and moral discipline 1651; fundamental idea of Y. is that individual soul is real, eternal and pure, but is immersed in the objective world and pursues transient ends and prescribes a rigorous discipline to secure the soul's isolation from avidyā 1414; germs of Y. can be traced back to Ṛgveda 1385; goal of, is Kaivalya, that is, in that state the individual soul abides isolated in its own form and is free from prakṛti and birth and death, the functions of the mind being mastered 1462; Hiraṇyagarbha said to be the ancient propounder of Yoga in Śāntiparva 1390–91; ideal of Y., is to be Jīvanmukta 1455 (to reject life and Personality and to die to this world); Kleśas (hindrances) are five, avidyā, asmitā, rāga dveṣa and abhiniveśa; they are minimised by tapas and the other two, 1415n, 1416; Kleśas are also called tamas, moha, mahāmoha, tāmisra and andhatāmisra 1409, 1415–17, 1572; meanings of the word Y. in Ṛgveda 1385–86; mentioned in some Upaniṣads 1387–88; Muni and Yati mean the same thing in Upaniṣads 1388; niyamas in Y. S. are five 1421; no spiritual power equal to Y. acc. to Śāntiparva 1400; obstacles (antarāya)* that cause distraction of the mind when a person is practising yoga, their companions and the means of preventing them, 1411–12; path of, difficult for even wise brāhmaṇas but a person of low varṇa or a woman can practise it 1400, 1461–62; proper places for practice of yoga acc. to Śāntiparva 1400; practices that are preliminaries to attainment of Yoga are tapas, svādhyāya and devotion to Īśvara 1415; Purāṇas like Kūrma and Viṣṇu give varying accounts about the propounding of Yogaśāstra by Yāj. 1404; refuted in Y. S. only as to its Sāṅkhya tenets acc. to Śaṅkarācārya, but part of it is acceptable, 1352, 1361, 1388; results of continuous practice of yamas and niyamas are set out in Y. S. II. 35–45 as e. g. when the aspirant is established in ahiṃsā, all men and animals give up enmity in his presence 1423–24; Samādhi, samprajñāta (or sālambana or sabīja) and asamprajñāta (or nirālambana and nirbīja) and their subdivisions) 1411 and n; Sanatkumāra connected with Yoga by Anuśāsanaparva 1391; several Purāṇas deal with the eight aṅgas of, 1455; signs that a person engaged in Yoga is succeeding in reaching higher and higher spiritual levels mentioned in Śv. Up., Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya 1456–57; system enjoyed and enjoys greater esteem in India than Sāṅkhya 1385; system inculcates the doctrine that by control of prāṇa in the body it is possible to obtain control over deep-seated forces in human consciousness as well as in the world 1435; y. system, like medicine, has four aspects, viz. saṃsāra, cause of it, release from it and means of release (samyag-darśana, insight into Reality) 1418; systems of yoga are only two, viz. Pātañjala-yoga and the other dealt with in Haṭhayogapradīpikā, the former concentrating on mind discipline and the latter on health of body and freedom from diseases 1427–28; Vāyupurāṇa provides remedies for curing such rasults as deafness, blindness, dumbness, due to ignorant men indulging in prāṇāyāma and yogic practices without proper guidance 1061n; warning by Aldous Huxley against plethora of books on Yoga 1651; word Yoga is used in an extended sense in the Gītā, in Yogatattvopaniṣad and by some modern writers 1426–27; works and papers on Yoga in general 1393–94; Yāj. Smṛti states that realisation of the self by means of Y. is the highest dharma 1459; Yāj. Smṛti says that for attaining Yoga one must learn the Āranyaka (that is Bṛ. Up.) and the Yogaśāstra, both proclaimed by him, but, it is a very debatable point which was the yogaśāstra composed by him, 1403–8; Yamas and Niyamas constitute a preliminary ethical code to be observed by an aspirant for yoga 1423.

Yogabhāṣya of Vyāsa who is different from Vyāsa, a. of Mahābhārata 1397–1399; date of, discussed, not later than 4th century A.D., 1398–99; mentioned on pp. 471 (on Kāla), 939n, 1068n, 1111n, 1113, 1356, 1373, 1374n, 1392 (prefers Jaigīṣavya's view), 1398, 1402n, 1408–9, 1416–1418n, 1421, 1424n, 1437, 1439, 1443, 1449n, 1450n, 1452n, 1528-9, 1572 (four questions raised about Karma).

Yogacūḍāmaṇi, a Yoga Upaniṣad 1389n

Yogakṣema, meaning of, 543; used in Ṛgveda as one word or as separate words 1385–86.

Yogamīmāṃsā, Journal, ed. by Shri Kuvalayānanda 1407, 1409, 1428n, 1439n.

Yogaśastra, m. by Śaṅkarācārya on V. S. II. 1. 3, 1388.

Yogaśāstra of Jaina ācārya Hemacandra, 1441n.

Yogasūtra (vide āsanas, food, God, Patañjali, place, siddhis, Yoga, Yogabhāṣya, Yogin, 471, 907, 939n, 946n, 1068n, 1111n, 1113n, 1364n, (kleśas), 1392, 1395 and n, 1401–3, 1409 (and on most pages up to 1455), 1572, 1601n, 1611; abhyāsa and Vairāgya defined and explained 1410–11; accepts and presupposes some of the sāṅkhya doctrines, such as Pradhāna, guṇas, individual souls, Kaivalya 1401–2; are difficult and do not give complete explanations but are in the nature of brief notes or hints that rouse curiosity, examples 1459–60; (Dr.) Behanan's appraisal of Y. practices based on experiments 1456; commentary Rājamārtaṇḍa of Bhoja on 1377, 1394, 1395n, 1420n, 1424n; commentary Tattvavaiśāradī of Vācaspati on Sūtra and bhāṣya (vide Vācaspati also), 1394; commentary Yogasudhākara 1420n, 1449n; commits breach of grammar 1397; date of, discussed by various scholars with varying conclusions, but it is not later than 3rd century A. D. 1395–1399; definition of Y. does not require the japa of om or any mantra like Gāyatrī, though Yāj. smṛti, Atri, Vasiṣṭha prescribe it, 1408–9n, 1442; Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna and Samādhi are direct auxiliaries of Y. and are three successive stages (vide those words) 1446; Dharmameghasamādhi in Y. S. IV. 29, 1411; Dhyāna (vide under that word) 1447–1449; editions of Yogasūtra, Bhāṣya etc. 1394; emphasis in Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna and Samādhi is mental, external conditions like cleanliness, tapas, sexual purity, āsanas, restrictions as to quality and quantity of food do help but are subsidiary in Y. 1451; fourth Pāda deals with Kaivalya which means isolation of the soul from the guṇas or as mere consciousness abiding by itself 1454–55; mentions by name no āsana, thereby indicating that no particular āsana is necessary for practice of Pātañjala-Yoga, though Yogabhāṣya mention ten āsanas by name 1425; outline of the teachings of the Y. S. 408–455; Prāṇāyāma–vide under that word pp. 1432–1444; Pratyāhāra–the fifth aṅga of Yoga (vide that word) pp. 1444–5; Samādhi (vide under that word) 1449–1451; Saṁyama is a technical term and stands for the three aṅgas dhāraṇā, dhyāna and samādhi 1445; second pāda of Y. S. most important for Dharmaśāstra and modern students 1414, some results of the Saṁyamas such as knowledge of seven worlds from Saṁyama on the sun specified 1452; statement of Geraldine Coster about Y. S. that it contains information that some present day psychotherapists are seeking 1455; striking similarities between Y S. and Gītā 1401; third pāda is called vibhūtipāda and deals with supernormal powers (vibhūti) and with Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna and Samādhi 1445; three means of proof (pramāṇa) 1409-10; view of Prof. P. A. Sorokin that the methods and techniques of Rājayoga contain nearly all the sound techniques of modern psychoanalysis, psychotherapy, education of character etc. 1456; tradition that the Patañjali of the Mahābhāsya and author of Y. S. are the same, discussed 1395ff; translations of Y. S., Yogabhāṣya and of com. of Vācaspati etc. 1392-93; two sūtras of Y. S. quoted by Śaṅkarācārya 1390; with six commentaries, published in Kashi S. series 1394.

Yogatattvopaniṣad 1427n, 1438n.

Yoga Upaniṣads: are late works 1389n; twenty of them are published at Adyar 1389.

Yogavārtika of Vijñanabhikṣu 1396n.

Yogavāsiṣtha: a late eclectic work composed between 11th and 13 centuries A. D., though there are several views on its age, 1408 and n.

Yogavidhi, as leading to correct knowledge of Reality occurs in Kaṭhopaniṣad VI. 18 and in Raghuvaṁśa VIII. 22, 1461.

Yoga-Yājñavalkya: vide under Yamas; edited in T. S. S. and by Mr. P. C. Divanji 1404; is not the Yogaśāstra m. in Yāj. Smṛti III. 110, 1404-1408; no evidence to hold that it was composed before 8th or 9th century A. D. 1406.

Yogatārā, meaning of 712n.

Yogayātrā of Varāhamihira: 526 (deals with Śakunas in Chap. 14), 529 (explains nakṣatras called ādya, karma, sānghātika, samudaya, vaināśika and mānasa) 530n, 531 (Śānti rite when nakṣatra affected), 533n; 545, 574 (on the gods and planets that are lords of the eight directions), 588, 593, 617-9, 621, 622 (inauspicious objects), 627n, 753 (on grahayajña), 769n, 778, 792, 797n, 801, 804n; why so called 618n.

Yoga-Yājñavalkya 18n, 954n, 1122 (q. by Smṛticandrikā on Nyāsa), 1421n, 1426n, 1436n.

Yogin: (vide under aparigraha, brahmacarya): belief in Śāntiparva and of Śaṅkarācārya that Y. could transfer himself to other bodies 1400; belief that Y. can vanish from people, see distant objects and hear in spite of great distance 1452; duties of Sannyāsin in Manu are applicable to Y. 1457; greatest emphasis laid on chastity in thought, word and deed for the Y. or the seeker after brahman 1423; has to master sleep (nidrā) also, 1410 and n; has to stick to aparigraha

1420; honour and disrespect should be treated by Y. as poison or nectar respectively 1457; if individual Yogin possesses a tolerably sound body he need not devote time to āsanas but may proceed with prāṇāyāma 1431; is said to repeat the Ajapā-japa by breathing in and out 1416n; places to be resorted to for practice of Yoga by Y. and to be avoided 1431–32; proper behaviour for Y. (yogi-caryā) acc. to Mārkaṇḍeya and Viṣṇu-purāṇas 1457; practitioner of Yoga is asked by Gītā (VI. 13) to gaze steadily at the tip of his nose 1431; purity of mind follows on purity of food acc. to Chān. Up. (VII. 26. 2) and Hārīta 1432; rules about food to be taken or avoided by one aspiring to be yogin in Gītā, Devala etc. 1431 and n, 1432; Śāntiparva on who is a real yogin 1457–58; state of Y. in Samādhi described 1451; three classes of, acc. to Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra and their subdivisions 1418n; while practising dhāraṇā, dhyāna, samādhi, Y. may develop certain supernormal powers, but Y. is advised to ignore them as they are hindrances in the way of his goal (Y. S. III. 36), 1451; Y. and Sannyāsin have been paid highest honours in India through centuries 1458; Yogin, acc. to Gītā (VI. 46), is superior to Tapasvin, Jñānin and Karmin 1458–59; Y. residing in a country makes it holy if he has profound knowledge of Yoga, acc. to Dakṣa 1459.

Yoginīhṛdaya (last three chapters of Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava are so called) 1144.

Yoginīs, temple of, 1046n.

Yoginītantra 1080n, 1117 (condemns lunar eclipse for dīkṣā), 1124n.

Yoḥ: (vide under Śam); occurs by itself three times in Ṛgveda and is often joined to Śam, 719–20.

Yuan Chwang (often written as Hiouen Thsang or Hsuan Thsang): Chinese traveller, 262, 1006n is silent about Rājyavardhana, 1009 (about Puṣyamitra and Śaśāṅka), 1017 (about Harṣa having prohibited taking of life by threat of heavy penalties), 1018, 1040 (story how the pilgrim was to be sacrificed to Durgā but was saved by a storm).

Yudhiṣṭhira, prevaricated and caused the death of his brāhmaṇa guru Droṇa 1281.

Yuga: (see Kalpa, Manvantara); different goals and motives in different Yugas, 696; duration of four yugas acc. to Manu 688–89; extent of each of four Y. was same acc. to Āryabhaṭa, 696; four y. named 687; four y. are not watertight specific periods of time but the ruler can create conditions of Kṛta age in what is popularly held to be Kali 696; four years named in Brāhmaṇas are brought in close relation to the four Cāturmāsyas 487; Kauṭilya mention yuga of five years 487; length of human life and duties differed in each of four yugas 788n; length of Y. acc. to Sūryasiddhānta, the correct sideral year (nākṣatra Y.) and equinoctial year 711; Mahābhārata knows y. of five years 488; yuga, means 'a period of five years' in Vedāṅgajyotiṣa 486; names of five years in a cycle of five years 487; y. often denotes 12000 years, 692 and n; Pitāmahasiddhānta stated that yuga means five years and an intercalary month was added after thirty months 488; some divergences in the theory of yugas, manvantaras etc. 696–697; superiority of Kaliyuga over others in certain respects 928; theory of yugas, manvantaras, kalpas elaborated in Mahābhārata, Manusmṛti and Purāṇas and concerns only Bhāratavarṣa 687–688; two senses of 'yuga' prominent in the Ṛgveda, a short period and a very long one 486, 686; underlying idea of theory of Yugas and Kalpas 695–696.

Yugādititthis 386; Akṣayyatṛtīyā is one of them 89; śrāddha performed on Y. yields inexhaustible gratification to pitṛs 89.

Yugāntyatithis 386.

Yugmavākya 480; ascribed to different sources by different writers 75n; cited and explained 74–75; express texts will govern where Y. not applicable or other considerations may apply 75; 77; many exceptions recognised to, 75–77; rites for pitṛs are not governed by Y., 76; various views about its application, 75; rules forbidding the partaking of oil, meat or the like on the fixed tithi govern whole tithi, whether spread over two days or more, 77.

Yugapurāṇa (part of Gārgī-saṃhitā); characteristics of Kaliyuga in Y. closely resemble Vanaparva description, one half verse being same 827; description of the contents of, 826-8; date of, acc. to Jayaswal 628; Kern brought Y. to notice of scholars 826; K. H. Dhruva on Y. 826; monograph of Prof. D. K. Mankad on Y. 826-7; purely historical portion of, in 115 lines published by K. P. Jayaswal 826.

Yuktidīpikā, Com. on Sāṅkhyakārikā; 1182n, 1354, 1355 (between 500 A. D. and 700 A. D.), 1359n, 1377, 1421 (puts ākalkatā) 'absence of crookedness' in place of aparigraha among yamas).

Yuktikalpataru of Bhoja, 1654.

Yuktisnehaprapāraṇī 1283n; com. on Śāstradīpikā 1194n; severely criticises Vārtikakāra (i. e. Kumārila) 1194n.

Z. D. M. G. 647, 1132n, 1434n.

Zero : (vide under Piṅgala); escaped even the greatest Greeks, Pythagoras, Euclid and Archimedes 700; Egyptians had no sign for Zero and therefore no positional notation 700; it is difficult to say when a symbol for zero was first discovered in India but the word Śūnya for Z. occurs in Piṅgala's work 700; Prof. Neugebauer asserts that a peculiar sign was used for Z. in Mesopotamian cuneiform texts but answers are required to certain questions 700n; several Sanskrit words suggestive of zero, such as śūnya, pūrṇa, kha, gagana etc. 702.

Zimmer, Heinrich; 1150 (on 'Philosophies of India'); a. of 'Art of Indian Asia'; allegation of, that the epithet 'vāmācāra' was applied by the orthodox partisans of Yoga is shown to be wrong, 1054, 1088; criticised as making a wrong generalization on very slender evidence when he avers that throughout the first millenium A. D. Tāntric rites were a basic element of normal Indian experience 1088; on Yantra (diagram for worship) in 'Myths and symbols in Indian art) etc. 1135n, 1696.

Zinner : Prof. E., a. of 'Stars above us' 551, 561n; 579, 636, 690.

Zodiac : (see under 'rāśis', horoscope) : Babylonian origin of, taken for granted by most scholars 566; Egyptians knew nothing about Z. before Alexandrian age 549, 581-82; is belt in the sky about 16 degrees broad divided into two by the ecliptic in which the Sun, Moon, Planets move 594; signs of, all twelve, known in Babylonia at least from about 6th century B. C. 536; signs of, origin unknown 565-6, 595; signs of, appear in Hittite texts of 13th century B. C. and are found on boundary stones 595; signs of have names in China and Japan different from those in Greece and India 565; signs of, Greek, Latin, French names of, and bhāvas (houses in horoscope) 585; signs of, two meanings of 594-95; some signs of Z. are found drawn on railing pillars of Buddha-Gayā dated about 1st century B. C. closely resembling Babylonian signs, on monuments etc. 598; Webb holds that Zodiac as known to us is a Greek invention 566; the wheel of ṛta spoken of in Ṛg. is construed as referring to Z. but it is most difficult to keep in view twelve divisions of it correctly 488-489, 596; word derived from a Greek word 'Zodion' meaning little animals 594.